La raison pour laquelle je vous ai demandé si la personne en question était ou non un correspondant étranger, monsieur Osler, est la suivante. Il se trouve que nous avons, outre-mer et aux États-Unis, un certain nombre de personnes que nous appelons correspondants à l'étranger, comme Knowlton Nash, qui fut notre correspondant à Washington, Michael McLearn et d'autres que vous connaissez. Ils sont en poste à l'étranger pour recueillir et présenter des nouvelles pouvant intéresser les Canadiens, comme le font les autres correspondants étrangers pour d'autres pays.

Ils se plaignent, avec quelque raison semble-t-il, de ce que lorsqu'ils rentrent au pays, que ce soit leur tour ou pour toute autre raison, et que surgisse un sujet d'actualité dont ils sont particulièrement bien informés seas at the scene of the action, they are in a better position to offer comment than is anybody we could pick up in Canada, who has not been there, because of the preoccupation of the Corporation with making these distinctions they are not regarded as persons eligible to offer editorial comment on the situation, which may exist in France, or in Italy, or in whatever part of the world they may have been posted. This is the other side of the problem.

I do not know what the answer is, but I do feel that we are reaching the point in broadcasting that we have already reached in journalism, where the lines of demarcation between these different kinds of journalism are becoming almost indistinguishable. For that reason the problem presented in an area such as the one we are discussing, namely, separatism, becomes much more difficult to control if you allow an individual who is a news reporter to begin to offer political commentary as a commentator, or to take part in some program as a panel participant.

Mr. Osler: I have one further question, Mr. Chairman. When you are considering a subject such as separatism—this was raised, I think, by Mr. Dinsdale previously; he comes from the same part of the world as I—I suggest that in his subtle way a man such as René Lévesque will do more good for separatism on the English network than he will if you allow him to appear on the French one, because inevitably there is a backlash to these things.

There is perhaps a small but incipient amount of separatism in the west, for instance, and when a man such as Lévesque gets up with authority and, with a great deal of persuasion, says that we are playing a futile stupid game there are those who think that this is a message from the horse's mouth and that he really knows what the situation is in Quebec. This is playing right down their alley. It is just exactly what they want to hear.

In my opinion, our fears about separatism should apply equally to the input on the English network from a backlash, or reverse point of view, as they do on the French network from a positive point of view.

Dr. Davidson: You would not suggest, however, Mr. Osler...

Mr. Osler: No, I would not.

[Interprétation]

du fait de leur séjour sur place, mieux que tout un chacun demeuré au Canada, les différenciations pratiquées par la Société font qu'ils ne peuvent présenter des éditoriaux sur une situation existant par exemple en France ou en Italie, ou dans toute autre partie du monde où ils auraient pu se trouver. Voilà l'autre côté du problème.

Je ne sais pas quelle peut en être la solution, mais j'ai nettement l'impression que nous en arrivons à la radiodiffusion à un point déjà atteint dans la presse, et où les lignes de démarcation entre ces diverses formes de journalisme deviennent presque indiscernables.

Pour cette raison, un problème comme celui que nous discutons dans cette enceinte, à savoir le séparatisme, devient beaucoup plus difficile à contrôler, si vous permettez à quelqu'un qui est chargé des nouvelles de commencer à présenter des commentaires politiques, ou de participer à des programmes de discussion.

M. Osler: Encore une question, monsieur le président. Lorsque vous considérez un sujet comme le séparatisme, je crois que M. Dinsdale en a fait récemment état—il vient de la même partie du monde que moi—je suppose qu'à sa façon très subtile, un homme comme René Lévesque fera plus de bien pour le séparatisme sur le réseau anglais que si vous lui permettez de paraître au réseau français, parce qu'il y a toujours un effet de retour dans ce genre de chose. Dans l'Ouest, par exemple, il existe une amorce de séparatisme, et quand un homme comme Lévesque, avec beaucoup de persuasion et d'autorité, se lève pour dire que nous jouons un jeu futile et stupide, il y a ceux qui pensent recevoir un renseignement de première main, et être maintenant bien au courant de la situation au Québec, cela fait parfaitement leur jeu; c'est exactement ce qu'ils veulent entendre.

A mon avis, nos craintes à propos du séparatisme devraient s'appliquer tout aussi bien à l'effet de contrecoup sur le réseau anglais ou d'inversion d'habitude, à partir de ce qu'ils font sur le réseau français d'un point de vue positif.

M. Davidson: Vous ne voulez cependant pas insinuer M. Osler...

M. Osler: Pas du tout.

[Text]

Dr. Davidson: You would not suggest however, that because René Lévesque is effective in expounding his point of view he should be kept off the airwaves.

Mr. Osler: I would not. I would just say that due proportion should apply in that area as well as in others.

Dr. Davidson: I would venture, Mr. Chairman—perhaps an indiscreet remark here—that if we could locate somewhere in this country two or three people who are as fervent in their advocacy of federalism and in putting it across as is René Lévesque in his advocacy of separatism and in presenting his case we would very much like to have them made available for purpose of ensuring that equal time is given to the effective expression of that point of view on our French and English networks.

One of the real problems—and I have been very close to, and familiar with, it in previous capacities in the public service of Canada—has been to locate, to find, and to induce to speak out on the subject, effective exponents of the federalist point of view in the French language in the Province of Quebec, who are not already labelled with the tag that they are "Ottawa." This is badly needed to enable the CBC to do the job that you expect it to do that is, to present, for the other point of view, effective spokesmen who are able and willing to present it effectively, and who are recognized in the Province of Quebec as authentically representative of Quebec and of all of its aspirations and attitudes.

The Chairman: Mr. Givens, on the same subject of separatism.

Mr. Givens: Perhaps Dr. Davidson would try to explain to me two terms that have been utilized throughout this whole discussion this morning—the terms "balance" and "proportion". How do you achieve these? What are your criteria for achieving balance, for instance, on TV à propos what you were just discussing—people who are effective, who are colourful or charismatic?

You can have a political leader at any level, federal, provincial, or municipal, who is colourful. You give him those clips of 30 seconds each during the course of a week, doing something "way out". He can be walking down the street, or doing a double-gainer off a diving board. That is a minute-and-a-half during that week. You can have another man, a good man, who is not as colourful or as charismatic. You give him a minute-and-a-half, making a speech. The cumulative effect

[Interpretation]

M. Davidson: Vous ne voudriez cependant pas insinuer que M. Lévesque exposant éloquentement son point de vue, il faut donc le bannir des ondes.

M. Osler: Non, je voudrais simplement qu'on ait ici le sens des proportions.

M. Davidson: J'ai peut-être tort de le dire, Monsieur le président, mais je me demande s'il serait possible de trouver quelque part dans ce pays deux ou trois personnes faisant preuve de la même ferveur dans la défense et la diffusion du fédéralisme que René Lévesque dans la défense de sa cause.

Nous serions très heureux de les avoir pour leur donner la même occasion de s'exprimer sur les réseaux français et anglais.

Un des vrais problèmes, et je l'ai vu de près, lors de mes précédentes activités à la Fonction publique du Canada—a été de référer, de trouver, et d'amener à s'exprimer sur ce thème des représentants efficaces du point de vue fédéraliste, en français et dans la province de Québec, qui n'aient pas été déjà marqués comme étant «pour Ottawa»... Il en est grandement besoin, pour permettre à Radio-Canada d'assumer sa tâche, de présenter, de l'autre côté, des porte-parole efficaces, capables et désireux de présenter efficacement leur point de vue, et qui seraient reconnus dans la Province de Québec comme étant d'authentiques représentants du Québec et de toutes ses dispositions et aspirations.

Le président: Monsieur Givens vous avez une question sur le même sujet?

M. Givens: Le Dr. Davidson pourrait-il essayer de m'expliquer deux des termes qui ont été utilisés tout au long de la discussion de ce matin, les mots «équilibre» et «proportion». Comment le mènerez-vous à bien? Quels sont vos critères pour réaliser l'équilibre, par exemple à la télévision, par exemple au sujet de ce dont on vient de parler, à propos de gens efficaces, brillants ou charismatiques?

Certains dirigeants politiques fédéraux, provinciaux ou municipaux peuvent être très captivants. Filmez-le trois fois 30 secondes, pendant la semaine, faisant n'importe quoi: marchant dans la rue ou faisant un double saut périlleux dans une piscine; vous lui accordez donc une minute et demie pendant la semaine. Prenez un autre homme qui n'est pas aussi captivant ni aussi charismatique et donnez-lui une minute et demie pour faire un discours. En définitive, on aura l'impression of all this will be that over a period of time than man who has had the three spots will look completely out of proportion and completely out of balance.

It is the same with political parties. How do you determine it. Is it just a matter of time-exposure? Is it based on how many votes the party got at the last election? Or is it related to causes which stir deep emotions, such as Viet Nam or the Middle East?

• 1205

There was a program a couple of weeks ago that I did not like. In the Broadcasting Act you are not charged with the responsibility of pleasing everybody. I did not like that one. You cannot blame me for not liking it. How do you achieve balance?

Again, there is always the accusation made against the CBC, which says it is striving for fairness, that you are allowing it to be a platform for "nuts" and provocative characters.

It seems to me that somebody at the CBC becomes bored about once a year.

Dr. Davidson: Bored?

Mr. Givens: Somebody becomes bored...

An hon. Member: Just once a year?

Mr. Givens: Let us say once a year. They decide to present a man such as Rockwell, or a played-out fascist such as Mosley, or von Thadden, or several of the more provocative separatists. This stirs up an awful storm, and the fortress of democracy is falling, and so on. It creates a big stir. These are obviously divisive demagogues, by anybody's definition.

Therefore, my question—and I am trying to spell out its terms of reference and the context within which I would like to have it answered or explained to me—is how do you achieve this balance and proportion or how do you try to achieve it? What are your criteria? Is it just time exposure or some of these other things that I have mentioned in passing?

Dr. Davidson: I think I should begin by saying to you, Mr. Givens—and this is not all that I will say—that I really do not know the answer to your question. Having said that, I will try to give you some of the considerations that enter into our concept of how to approach this.

Obviously in the general context, quite apart from what we call free time political broadcasting—and that is a separate issue that I will touch upon—you cannot simply après un certain temps qu'on a nettement favorisé celui qu'on a montré trois fois.

C'est la même chose pour les partis politiques. Sur quoi se fier? Est-ce seulement une question de temps? Doit-on tenir compte du nombre de voix que le parti a recueillies aux dernières élections? Ou n'y aurait-il pas des facteurs passionnels, tels que la guerre du Viet-Nam ou la crise du Moyen-Orient?

On a diffusé il y a quinze jours une émission qui ne m'a pas plu. Mais la Loi sur la radiodiffusion ne prétend pas plaire à tout le monde. Je n'ai pas aimé cette émission-là. On ne saurait me le reprocher. Comment faire la part des choses? On a parlé des accusations contre Radio-Canada, qui s'efforce d'être honnête, parce qu'elle permettrait à des hurluberlus ou des provocateurs de proclamer leurs idées. Il me semble qu'à peu près une fois par an quelqu'un est indisposé à Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson: Indisposé?

M. Givens: Quelqu'un est indisposé?

Une voix: Rien qu'une fois par an?

M. Givens: Disons une fois par an. On décide de présenter un personnage comme Rockwell, un fasciste reconnu comme Mosley ou Von Thadden ou l'un ou l'autre des séparatistes les plus agressifs et l'on suscite du même coup de violentes controverses: et, la démocratie, s'effondre, etc. Cela cause des remous. Certes, tout le monde reconnaît que ce sont des démagogues.

Voici donc ma question, que j'essaie de replacer dans son contexte. Comment arrivez-vous à cet équilibre? Quels sont les critères que vous utilisez? Est-ce la période de temps accordée ou un autre que je viens d'indiquer en passant?

M. Davidson: Je vous remercie, monsieur Givens, de cette question. Disons tout de suite que je ne connais vraiment pas la réponse à votre question. Néanmoins, ceci dit, je vais essayer de vous faire part de certaines des considérations qui, pour nous, entrent en ligne de compte à cet égard.

Il est clair qu'en général, abstraction faite de ce que nous appelons les périodes gratuites accordées aux émissions politiques, et c'est une question sur laquelle je reviendrai, il talk about equal time at a minute and a half in one context being equal to a minute and a half in the other.

You are perfectly right in saying that what the political personality may do in the minute and a half that is accorded to him may be so much more effective than what another political personality may be able to do in the minute and a half, or even in the half hour, accorded to him that the public gets a much more vivid impression of the stamp of a personality or what the first individual was able to accomplish in that minute and a half, and the result is that people think that greater prominence has been given to that first individual than to the second individual, even though the second individual may have been given more time on the air.

Therefore, while we cannot accept responsibility for what a public figure does in the time that is afforded him to, we cannot simply be completely mechanical in saying that because we have given a minute or five minutes to a member of one political party we must therefore give exactly the same amount of time to his counterpart in another political party. We must take into account other considerations as well as actual time.

When it comes to free time political broadcasting, as you know during the pre-election period we endeavour to work out jointly with the representatives of the political parties a time allocation and on the basis of what the BBG—formerly the Board of Broadcast Governors—laid down as guidelines we have taken into account, in working out the time allocations, the relative political strengths of the political parties as indicated by representation in the House of Commons and a number of other factors. This has endeavoured to introduce something a bit more than the concept of equal time and that is pro rata, or a sense of proportionate fairness, in the determination of what we still call balance and fairness in program presentation.

I think we also find that in some situations it is possible within an individual program to present what we regard as being balance.

I think immediately of the confrontation on the English network in the fall of 1967, which was before my time, between Rene Levesque and Eric Kierans. Here was a balanced program in the sense that you had two men representing different points of view, and, perhaps I should be forgiven for saying, n'est pas possible de réaliser une péréquation exacte du temps. Nous ne pouvons pas dire qu'une minute et demie dans tel contexte soit rigoureusement égale à une minute et demie dans un autre.

Vous avez parfaitement raison de dire que ce que peut faire une personnalité politique en cause dans la minute et demie qui lui est accordée, peut avoir une influence autrement plus considérable que ce que pourrait faire une autre personnalité politique, dans la minute et demie ou même la demi-heure qu'on lui accorde. Il est exact que le public peut subir une impression beaucoup plus vive de telle ou telle personnalité. La première personnalité en cause peut être beaucoup plus impressionnante que l'autre, ce qui fait que le public a l'impression qu'on a accordé plus de prééminence au premier, alors que c'est précisément souvent le contraire qui s'est produit.

Bien que nous ne pouvons pas accepter la responsabilité de ce qu'une personnalité peut réaliser dans le temps qui est à sa disposition, nous ne pouvons pas plus nous montrer absolument mécaniques et dire que, par exemple, parce que nous donnons cinq ou une minute à tel ou tel membre d'un parti politique, nous devons donner une ou cinq minutes à son homologue d'un autre parti politique. Nous devons tenir compte d'autres considérations, en plus du temps accordé.

Lorsqu'il s'agit de périodes de temps mises gratuitement à la disposition des partis avant les élections, nous essayons de mettre au point de concert avec les représentants des partis politiques, une répartition du temps selon les principes généraux établis par l'ancien Bureau des gouverneurs de la radio-diffusion. Nous avons essayé de tenir compte, dans le contingentement du temps, de la force relative des partis politiques telle qu'elle s'exprime par le nombre de leurs représentants à la Chambre des communes ou par certains autres facteurs. Ainsi donc nous avons essayé de dépasser la simple répartition égale du temps et d'arriver à une répartition pro rata, en tenant compte des proportions, pour déterminer ce que nous appelons l'équilibre et la justice dans la programmation.

Nous avons aussi constaté que dans certains cas, il est possible à l'intérieur d'une émission en particulier, de respecter ce que nous appelons l'équilibre.

Je songe ici à la confrontation au réseau anglais, à l'automne de 1967, c'était avant mon temps, entre René Lévesque et Eric Kierans. C'était là une émission équilibrée en ce sens qu'il y avait deux hommes défendant deux points de vue opposés, qu'on me pardonne de dire que l'un et l'autre étaient éga-equally effective in putting their case across to the viewing public. You had within one program a confrontation that enabled you to say, I think truly, that this was as balanced a presentation of the issues...

Mr. Givens: One of the best I have ever seen.

Dr. Davidson: I say with you that this was one of the finest examples of internal balancing of programs that you could possibly have.

It is not always possible to get internal balance in a program, particularly in the short programs, and we therefore begin to think in terms of balance over a period of time or over a series of programs and we may find ourselves in the position of devoting one program entirely to an ex parte presentation of a point of view, and then hastening to assure those who present their objections to us about that program that it is part of our plan to present the other side on a subsequent program where an equal opportunity will be given to the other point of view to express itself.

These are indications of the different ways by which we try to approach the subject of balance, the concept of balance, and I have to agree also that there are occasions when we achieve balance in a way that I will describe as being compensatory balance. We put on a program, and perhaps it is only honest to say that we put on a program thinking we are putting on the program in the way it should be put on, but the public reaction against that program persuades us that in a subsequent program we must put on something to correct the impression that was given in the program we presented initially.

I use as an example of that what I think is a clear illustration of the point. We presented a program about logging activities in Algonquin Park on the English network, "The Way It Is", which I think in terms of its initial presentation was probably less than fair to all parties concerned, and we heard the news loud and clear and eloquently from the people who were affected in that area. The next week we did present what I call a compensatory balance by inviting a number of the people who were residents of this area and who had a stake in the issue to come on to "The Way It Is" program and present their points of view which they did, I think, exceedingly effectively. I suspect—I do not know—that we did not intend to do that second part of the program until the public reaction persuaded us that we had been less than fair in the initial instance and that we therefore should do something about it.

lement éloquentes à présenter leurs vues au public. Ainsi donc, à l'intérieur d'un seul et unique programme, vous aviez une confrontation qui vous permettait de dire que c'était une présentation équilibrée...

M. Givens: Une des meilleures que j'aie vues.

M. Davidson: En effet, je pense qu'on ne pouvait pas faire beaucoup mieux pour réaliser ce que j'appelle cet équilibre interne.

Ce n'est pas toujours possible, surtout en ce qui concerne les émissions courtes. Nous devons donc envisager la question d'équilibre dans le temps, dans le contexte d'une série d'émissions et nous nous trouvons dans une situation où nous pouvons consacrer une seule émission à l'exposé unilatéral d'un point de vue, après quoi nous nous hâtons d'assurer l'auditeur qui formule des objections que nous avons bien l'intention de donner aux adversaires l'occasion de faire également connaître leurs points de vue lors d'une émission subséquente.

Voilà quelques indications des diverses façons dont nous abordons cette difficile question d'équilibre, et je dois reconnaître aussi avec vous qu'en certaines circonstances, il arrive que nous réalisons l'équilibre au moyen de ce qu'on pourrait appeler une compensation. Nous mettons une émission sur les ondes, et il faut dire honnêtement que parfois nous avons réalisé une émission de la façon dont nous croyions qu'il fallait la réaliser, mais les réactions hostiles du public ont vite fait de nous convaincre que, lors d'une émission subséquente, il faudra corriger l'impression laissée par cette émission.

Voici un bon exemple. Nous avons présenté une émission au sujet de l'exploitation forestière dans le parc Algonquin au réseau anglais, à l'émission «The Way It Is» qui sous sa forme initiale ne traitait avec justice tous les intérêts en cause. La réaction des intéressés dans ce secteur a été parfaitement manifeste. La semaine suivante, nous avons réalisé ce que j'appelle l'équilibre compensatoire en invitant un certain nombre de résidents de la région et qui avaient des intérêts en cause à participer à une émission de «The Way It Is», pour présenter leurs points de vue, ce qu'ils ont d'ailleurs fait d'une façon parfaitement efficace. Mais je soupçonne que nous n'avions pas l'intention de réaliser cette deuxième émission, jusqu'à ce que la violence de la réaction publique nous convainque que nous n'avions pas été juste et qu'il fallait réparer le tort causé.

[Text]

These are some indications, Mr. Givens, of the kind of considerations that we try to keep in mind and to apply as criteria to the concept of balance, but I must say to you frankly as I did at the beginning that I do not think there is any packaged answer as to how you achieve balance in programming. It is an objective. It is one that we must seek to achieve by a variety of subjective judgments, and the only way you know is when you get the reaction from your television or radio audience and then you know whether, in their opinion, you have achieved balance or not.

Mr. Givens: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain and then Mr. Schreyer.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je voudrais d'abord faire remarquer que vous avez donné l'impression, pendant tout l'avant-midi, que vous vouliez restreindre le débat au séparatisme. A la suite de M. Comeau, j'ai aussi parlé des anarchistes, des révolutionnaires, que j'assimile aux séparatistes, pour ce qui est de Radio-Canada.

Je voudrais aussi dire bien clairement que personne, dans ce Comité ou dans ce Parlement, voudrait demander à Radio-Canada de faire de la censure dans la nouvelle. Car, la nouvelle est froide et catégorique comme les mathématiques. Tout événement doit être rapporté aux programmes de nouvelles.

On s'attaque surtout aux à-côtés des nouvelles, c'est-à-dire les commentaires, les forums, les discussions, les programmes où vous invitez des gens à venir donner leurs points de vue. Pour plus de précisions, je dois dire que je ne parle que du réseau français. Je ne connais pas assez le réseau anglais pour en parler. D'ailleurs, les commentaires que je reçois par correspondance, par appel téléphonique ou dans les conversations privées, viennent surtout des auditeurs du réseau français.

Il y a un sentiment, qui me semble très général, qu'il y aurait, au sein de Radio-Canada, une tendance systématique à inviter plutôt des tenants de ces philosophies marginales aux à-côtés des nouvelles. On ne peut pas toucher à la nouvelle; vous êtes obligés de la rapporter.

A tort ou à raison, on prétend qu'au sein de Radio-Canada, il y aurait des tenants de ces philosophies marginales, qui cherchent à inviter surtout des amis qui sont sympathiques à leurs idées. Ceci s'applique dans le cas du séparatisme, et aussi dans le cas des révolutionnaires, des anarchistes, des gens qui se vantent de vouloir détruire l'ordre établi.

[Interpretation]

Ainsi donc, monsieur Givens, voilà les considérations que nous tâchons d'avoir en tête et d'appliquer à la réalisation de cet équilibre, mais, comme je le disais tout à l'heure, je dois avouer que je ne pense pas qu'il y ait des réponses toutes faites à ces problèmes. Nous visons à atteindre cet équilibre dans nos émissions, et le seul moyen d'y arriver c'est d'appliquer des jugements subjectifs, mais il faut attendre la réaction du téléspectateur ou de l'auditeur pour voir si on a réussi.

M. Givens: Merci.

Le président: Monsieur Mongrain et monsieur Schreyer.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out at the outset that you have given the impression, throughout the afternoon that you wanted to restrict the discussion to separatism. After Mr. Comeau, I also referred to anarchists and revolutionaries who, as far as the CBC is concerned, I think are on a par with separatists.

I would also like to state very clearly that I hardly think that anybody within this Committee or this Parliament wishes to ask the CBC to censor news. News is something cold like mathematics. Such and such a thing has happened and it must be reported factually on the news broadcasts.

What we are especially interested in here is the peripheral events regarding the news, i.e. commentaries, panel discussions, discussion forums, programs where you have guests who are invited to express their particular point of view. I am only speaking here, by the way, of the French network. I do not know the English network enough to talk about it. Moreover, the comments I receive over the telephone, by mail, or through private conversations come basically from French network listeners.

There is a feeling abroad that seems very general to me, that there is, within the French network of the CBC a systematic tendency to invite the defenders of these rather marginal philosophies to programs dealing with peripheral events regarding the news. The news as such must not be tampered with you; you are obliged to report it.

It is alleged, rightly or wrongly, that within the CBC we do have defenders of these marginal philosophies who try to invite especially friends who share their own views. This is true of separatism, but it also applies in the case of revolutionaries, anarchists, people who boast that they want to destroy the established order.

[Texte]

Pour expliciter davantage mon affaire, prenons le cas de Sir George Williams University. Je n'ai pas vu l'émission, mais on m'a dit qu'on avait invité un professeur de Sir George Williams à Radio-Canada, qui a dit: «Je suis professeur ici depuis trois ans et je suis un révolutionnaire. Je suis en faveur de détruire l'ordre établi.»

Le public auditeur français semble avoir la conviction que Radio-Canada leur fait trop de place, et pas assez à ceux qui défendent des «philosophies normales.» On n'a pas d'objection à ce que vous donniez aux conservateurs l'occasion de dire que les libéraux ne sont pas bons ou au socialiste celle d'expliquer pourquoi sa doctrine est bonne, à condition que ce socialiste ne préconise pas l'application du socialisme par la violence. Au Québec des socialistes viennent nous dire: «Nous n'obtiendrons notre affaire qu'avec de la violence, préparez vos fusils les gars parce qu'éventuellement il va falloir les utiliser.» Ces gens-là, on pense les entendre trop souvent.

Je suis heureux que vous parliez de balance que vous essayiez de trouver l'équilibre, le juste milieu si vous voulez. On a l'impression que Radio-Canada n'a pas encore atteint le juste milieu dans ce domaine-là. Et là, je résume toute ma pensée, et, je crois, la pensée de mes collègues aussi.

M. Stanbury a dit tantôt qu'il ne fallait tout de même pas tomber dans une chasse aux sorcières. Je partage bien son point de vue mais disons que je ne suis pas d'accord avec lui quant il a dit qu'inviter M. Thibault ici, ce serait faire une chasse aux sorcières. Parce que je crois comprendre, et si je me trompe vous me corrigerez, monsieur le président, que M. Thibault est le responsable du service des nouvelles au réseau français. Est-ce exact?

M. Stanbury: Responsable aux responsables.

M. Mongrain: Oui, enfin si nous voulons voir des détails, il faut tout de même entendre les... Je n'ai pas d'objection à ce que M. Davidson soit là quand nous le questionnons.

Mais, au sujet de M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh, je ne vois pas pourquoi l'inviter ici. J'ai lu son livre et compris ce qu'elle avait à dire; c'est bien clair, c'est écrit. Nous pourrions peut-être élire ce chapitre ici et en discuter entre nous. Mais l'inviter, je pense que ça n'ajouterait rien. Par contre, M. Thibault pourrait peut-être répondre à certaines questions précises comme, par exemple: Un tel travail dans votre service et se vante d'être séparatiste. Est-ce vrai, ou n'est-ce pas vrai? Est-ce une simple boutade de sa part, ou est-ce vraiment séparatiste? On a dit que telle

[Interprétation]

To explain my point further, let us take the case of Sir George Williams university. I did not see the program, but I was told that a professor from Sir George Williams who was invited to appear on the CBC, said: I have been a professor here for three years and I am a revolutionary. I am for the destruction of the established order.

The public on the French network seems to feel the CBC gives them too much exposure and too little to those people who defend normal ideas. There are no objections regarding your providing the Conservatives with an opportunity of saying that the Liberals are no good, or providing the Socialists and opportunity to explain why their ideas are good, providing those Socialists do not advocate the bringing about of Socialism through violence. We have Socialists in Quebec who say: "The only way we can achieve our goal is through violence. Get your guns ready, lads, because we shall have to use them sooner or later." We feel that we hear these people too often.

I am happy to hear you spoke of balance, that you were attempting to find an equilibrium, or the happy mean, if you wish. We feel that the CBC has not yet found the happy mean in that field. This sums up my own thoughts and also, I believe, those of my own colleagues.

Mr. Stanbury said a while ago that we should not engage in a witch hunt. Of course, I share his point of view, but I do not agree with him when he says that inviting Mr. Thibault here would be engaging in a witch hunt. Because, as I understand it—and if I am wrong, you might set me right, Mr. Chairman,—Mr. Thibault is responsible for the French network news broadcasts. Is that correct?

Mr. Stanbury: Responsible to other responsible officials.

Mr. Mongrain: If we want details, we should at least hear... I have no objection to Mr. Davidson being there when we question him.

With regard to Miss LaMarsh, I cannot see why we should invite her. I have read her book and understood what she has to say; it is very clear, it is in black and white. We could perhaps read this chapter here and discuss it between ourselves. I do not think it would be very useful to invite her here. On the other hand, Mr. Thibault might perhaps answer such specific questions as, for instance: You have such and such a person working in your service who says he is a separatist. Is he just speaking through his hat or is he actually a separatist? We were told émission était systématiquement à tendance révolutionnaire. Qu'est-ce que vous en pensez vous?

Maintenant, si le Comité a objection à ce qu'on l'invite, je m'incline. J'ai fini, monsieur le président, je vous remercie.

Mr. Schreyer: Dr. Davidson, since our entire discussion this morning has been quite candid, I should be candid in turn and tell you that a couple of statements you have made in the past half hour or so disturb me quite a bit. For one thing, as I recall your words, you said that since René Lévesque had put forward the anti-federalist case, such as it was, with such considerable effectiveness—I do not dispute that—you for one wished that there were spokesmen to put the federalist case equally effectively and that the CBC would like to get their hands on them and get them on the air.

I suggest that this disturbs me because it seems to me that we have spokesmen who can put forward the federalist case effectively in all political parties and that it is hardly up to the CBC to decide unilaterally who should be espoused as the champion of federalism and have the use of the airwaves. It seems to me that the CBC management would want to work with the political parties, leave it to the political instrument that we have to decide who shall be put forward to take on this challenge and that the CBC should simply co-operate and make the airwaves available. Is this basically what you meant to say?

Dr. Davidson: Yes. I do not disagree with that at all, Mr. Schreyer, and perhaps the words which I used were not as felicitous as they might have been. I am surprised, in fact, that I have been here for three hours and have not said more things that cause anxiety to the members of the Committee. I am sure when I read my testimony that I will be more concerned about the things I have said than some of you will be.

Mr. Schreyer: You will excuse me but this is the way it came across.

Dr. Davidson: I quite recognize that and agree that it is not for the CBC to decide who is going to be a spokesman as such for federalism. I was merely trying to make the observation, which I think is a valid one, that there is a need for effective spokesmen. There is a need for effective spokesmen who go over effectively when they appear on television, that such and such a program systematically showed a revolutionary tendency.

Now, should the Committee object to his being invited, I shall bow to its decision. What do you feel about it? I am through, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

M. Schreyer: Docteur Davidson, étant donné que toute la discussion de ce matin a été de nature assez candide, semble-t-il, je ferai de même et je vous dirai que les déclarations que vous venez de faire depuis à peu près une demi-heure, m'ont quelque peu ébranlé. Par exemple, si je me rappelle bien les mots que vous avez employés, vous dites que René Lévesque présentait la cause anti-fédéraliste, et, je ne le conteste pas, avait le nécessaire de compétence.

Et vous avez dit que vous-mêmes, vous espériez qu'il y aurait des porte-parole qui présenteraient aussi bien l'opinion fédéraliste et que Radio-Canada aimerait bien pouvoir entrer en contact avec eux et leur permettre de s'exprimer sur les ondes. Mais, je vous dirai que ceci m'inquiète parce qu'il me semble que nous avons des porte-parole qui ont représenté la cause fédéraliste de façon très efficace au sein de tous les partis politiques et ce n'est pas à Radio-Canada de décider unilatéralement, qui doit se faire le champion du fédéralisme et pourra utiliser les ondes. Il me semble que l'administration de Radio-Canada devrait vouloir travailler de pair avec les partis politiques, qu'on laisse ceci entre les mains de nos fédéralistes et que Radio-Canada ne s'occupe que de coopérer et mettre les ondes à la disposition des personnes en cause. C'est ce que vous vouliez dire, n'est-ce pas?

M. Davidson: Oui, je ne suis pas du tout en désaccord avec vous, monsieur Schreyer, et je n'ai peut-être pas employé les meilleurs termes. De fait, je suis surpris de voir que depuis trois heures que je suis ici et que je n'ai pas dit plus de choses qui puissent inquiéter les membres du Comité. Si j'ai bien lu mes déclarations, il me semble que vous pourriez m'attaquer un peu plus.

M. Schreyer: Mais ce sont les faits saillants que j'ai soulignés tout simplement.

M. Davidson: Non, je reconnais que ce n'est pas à Radio-Canada de décider qui sera le porte-parole du fédéralisme comme tel. J'essaie simplement de faire une observation qui me paraît valable, qu'on a besoin d'avoir des porte-parole efficaces, on a besoin de gens qui sont capables de montrer leur compétence à la télévision et pas tous des porte-parole pour and not all spokesmen for political parties, with all due respect to the political parties represented here, do go over effectively in the presentation of their views.

Mr. Schreyer: But even if this be the case, I suggest it is not up to the CBC to decide whom they shall champion as the champion of federalism.

Dr. Davidson: I quite agree but I would like to go back to Mr. Givens' point. Mr. Givens made the point that if you have somebody doing a double gain off a diving board, that can make more of an impact on the viewers than somebody reading a statement for perhaps a minute and a half or even five minutes or half an hour.

When we have shown two people representing two different points of view, the public gets the impression that we have favoured one over the other if that person has gone over more effectively. And I suggest to you that the problem in terms of the presentation of the separatist point of view versus the federalist point of view is, in part at least, related to the television effectiveness of one particular performer as against, I do not say the relative ineffectiveness of the performances of representatives of the federalist point of view.

I am not talking about people who are recognized as public figures in Ottawa, but people who are seen in the Province of Quebec as being something other than spokesmen from Ottawa. I hope you understand the distinction I am trying to make. Whether or not they are political figures is beside the point as far as I am concerned. If the federalist point of view is to be presented effectively over television, there is need to have effective performers who are able to present the logical arguments in favour of federalism and who also have, let us say, an effective television personality that projects itself as effectively as does that of the exponents of other points of view.

Mr. Schreyer: I accept that although I have often heard it said that television is a more neutral medium because the reporter's subjectivity does not enter, but the cameraman has some influence there. It seems to me that a cameraman by deft manipulation can show me up as doing some heroic thing and can show someone else up as picking his nose, as my friend here suggested.

The Chairman: And the editors, too.

Mr. Schreyer: The second point which intrigued me quite a bit is a matter of detail.

les partis politiques, en toute déférence à l'égard de tous les partis politiques. Tous les politiciens ne sont pas aussi efficaces les uns que les autres lorsqu'ils présentent leur point de vue.

M. Schreyer: Oui, mais malgré tout, et ceci est important même si c'est le cas. Je dois dire qu'il n'incombe pas à Radio-Canada de décider qui sera choisi comme champion du fédéralisme.

M. Davidson: Oui, mais je reviens au point de vue de M. Givens. Il a dit que quelqu'un, par exemple, peut faire un double plongeon d'un tremplin, et que ça peut mieux influencer la population que quelqu'un qui vous donne un texte lu pendant une demi-heure, ou une demi-minute, ou une heure.

Lorsqu'on a présenté deux personnes qui représentent différents points de vue, le public a l'impression que nous avons favorisé l'un des deux parce que celui-là est plus vivant, par exemple, à la télévision. Alors, je vous dirai que c'est une question de présentation du point de vue séparatiste par rapport au point de vue fédéraliste. L'un des deux peut avoir une meilleure image à la télévision. L'autre peut être plus efficace.

Je ne parle pas des gens qui sont reconnus comme des personnages éminents à Ottawa, mais comme des gens que l'on voit dans la province de Québec, comme étant autre chose que des porte-parole d'Ottawa. Est-ce que vous comprenez la différence? Que ce soit des personnages politiques ou non, ça n'a pas d'importance pour moi. Ce qui est important c'est de présenter efficacement le point de vue fédéraliste à la télévision. Il faut avoir des gens qui sont capables de présenter efficacement des arguments en défense de fédéralisme, des gens qui puissent projeter aussi bien que ceux qui exposent un autre point de vue.

M. Schreyer: Je comprends, mais j'ai souvent entendu dire que la télévision était un organe plus neutre parce que la subjectivité des journalistes n'entre pas en cause, mais il y a aussi l'art du caméraman. Le caméraman peut facilement montrer quelqu'un en train de faire un geste héroïque, tandis que quelqu'un d'autre se gratte le nez; comme le disait mon ami.

Le président: Parmi les éditeurs aussi.

M. Schreyer: Le deuxième point qui m'intrigue un peu, c'est une question de détail.

You said that the Board took the decision that a particular song that was sung over the English network. . .

The Chairman: It was not the Board.

Mr. Schreyer: The decision was taken by whom, then?

Dr. Davidson: By the English network management.

Mr. Schreyer: The English network management considered that this particular song and the way it was produced—the way this program was produced—was inappropriate; then you added: particularly because it came on the eve of the constitutional conference. That intrigues me because what should that have to do with it? A program is either inappropriate or it is not. As to the time factor, this escapes me.

Dr. Davidson: With respect, I do not agree with your statement at all, Mr. Schreyer. You cannot be as black and white as this. You said just now that a program is either appropriate or it is not, and I must say that I do not agree with that statement. I do not agree that certain programs appearing at 11 o'clock in the morning which is the . . .

Mr. Schreyer: I did not mean it in that sense. The point I am trying to establish is that I fail to see how the convening of some political event in the nation's life such as a constitutional conference can make a particular program inappropriate in itself.

Dr. Davidson: With great respect I think I have to express an opposing point of view here, and at the risk of stirring up Mr. McCleave I am going to give you another illustration of the point I am making.

I think the program "Listen, America" broadcast on Sunday night before the United States election was not only a bad program in itself but its badness was heightened by the fact that it was, in my judgment, an inappropriate point in time at which to present that kind of program about certain aspects of United States society. You may disagree with that as well, Mr. Schreyer, but it at least illustrates my point that there are certain programs which, because of their relationship to important political events it is not appropriate to broadcast at a particular point in time, where it might very well be unexcep-

[Interpretation]

Vous avez dit que le Conseil avait pris une décision au sujet d'une chanson particulière qui avait été présentée au réseau anglais . . .

Le président: Ce n'était pas une décision du Conseil.

M. Schreyer: Non? De qui?

M. Davidson: De l'administration du réseau anglais.

M. Schreyer: Bon, alors l'administration du réseau anglais a jugé que cette chanson, la façon dont elle a été présentée dans le cadre d'un programme, n'était pas appropriée et vous avez ajouté «en particulier, parce que c'était la veille de la conférence constitutionnelle». Ceci m'intrigue. Quel est le rapport? Quelque chose dans un programme est approprié ou ne l'est pas. Quant au facteur temps, vraiment l'argument m'échappe.

M. Davidson: Je ne suis pas d'accord du tout avec votre déclaration, monsieur Schreyer. Vous ne pouvez pas trancher les choses aussi nettement que ça. Vous dites qu'une émission peut être appropriée ou ne pas l'être. Je dois dire que je ne suis pas d'accord avec ce point de vue. Je ne suis pas d'accord que certaines émissions qui sont sur les ondes à 11 heures en matinée qui . . .

M. Schreyer: Mais, ce n'est pas ce que je veux dire. Voici ce que je veux préciser: je ne comprends pas comment la tenue d'un événement politique dans la vie de la nation la conférence constitutionnelle par exemple je ne vois pas comment un tel événement peut rendre un programme donné inapproprié.

M. Davidson: Je crois que je dois vraiment exprimer une opinion assez sévère ici, et à risque de soulever M. McCleave, je vais donner un autre exemple.

Vous avez le programme «Listen, America» qui est radiodiffusé le dimanche soir, qui a été radiodiffusé avant les élections américaines. Non seulement c'était un mauvais programme en soi, mais ceci était souligné du fait que d'après moi, c'était vraiment le mauvais moment pour présenter ce genre d'émissions au sujet de certains aspects de la société américaine. Maintenant, vous pouvez ne pas être d'accord avec moi là-dessus non plus, M. Schreyer, mais ça illustre ma conviction qu'il y a certains programmes à cause de leur relation avec certains événements politiques, ne doivent pas être diffusés à un moment donné, tional to broadcast them at another point in time.

You yourselves as Parliamentarians have laid this principle down in terms of political broadcasting, because you have said that political broadcasting for 48 hours...

Mr. McCleave: Twenty-four.

Dr. Davidson: I will come to that too. Parliamentarians under the Canada Elections Act have said 48 hours and Parliamentarians under the Broadcasting Act have said 24 hours and you have presented us with an impossible dilemma in that regard.

Mr. McCleave: We are the enlightened Parliamentarians here—the 24-hour group.

The Chairman: I would point out that there are only three of us left, Mr. McCleave.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the enlightened point of view of those who advocate 24 hours, but I wish they would not only be enlightened but consistent in their legislative enactments which they have not been to date. But for better or for worse, Mr. Schreyer, I have given you two illustrations, which you may not agree with, of the relevance of timing through appropriateness in the presentation of subject matter. I say with respect, that a third illustration is provided by your own establishment of a principle that there are certain periods on the eve of an election when political broadcasting is not regarded by you as appropriate, and therefore you have legislated a blackout on that period of time.

Mr. Schreyer: I shall not pursue it, Mr. Chairman. I understand the explanation but I continue to be, if not puzzled, somewhat opposed to the rationale because, as I say, I understand full well that oftentimes it is impossible to look at these problems in terms of black and white. Nevertheless, if it is inappropriate, it seems to me it will be inappropriate even if it is three months after a constitutional conference or whatever.

The Chairman: Are there further questions on this particular subject? Mr. Broadbent?

Mr. Broadbent: I am curious, Mr. Chairman, to know how this decision was made in un certain temps parce que ça pourrait être exceptionnel alors que ça ne le serait pas à un autre moment.

Vous, comme parlementaire, vous avez énoncé le principe en termes de radiodiffusion politique. Vous avez dit que pour 48 heures...

M. McCleave: 24 heures.

M. Davidson: Je reviendrai à cela tout à l'heure. Les parlementaires, aux termes de la Loi électorale du Canada, ont dit quarante-huit heures et, aux termes de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion, on a dit vingt-quatre heures. Vous nous avez posé là un dilemme insoluble.

M. McCleave: Nous, ici, sommes les parlementaires éclairés—le groupe qui est en faveur des vingt-quatre heures.

Le président: Je vous ferais remarquer, monsieur McCleave, qu'il ne reste que trois d'entre nous.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, je suis d'accord avec le point de vue éclairé de ceux qui préconisent vingt-quatre heures, mais j'aimerais que non seulement ils soient éclairés, mais aussi ils aient de la suite dans les idées lorsqu'ils prennent des mesures législatives—ce qui leur a fait défaut jusqu'à présent. Pour le meilleur ou pour le pire, monsieur Schreyer, je vous ai donné deux exemples, avec lesquels vous n'êtes peut-être pas d'accord, de l'importance de l'époque pour l'à-propos d'une émission. Je dirais, avec tout le respect voulu, qu'un troisième exemple est fourni par le principe que vous avez vous-même établi, et qui veut qu'il y ait certaines périodes, à la veille d'une élection, où vous ne considérez pas les émissions politiques comme appropriées; par conséquent, vous avez établi par une loi que pendant cette période de temps on ne diffuserait pas d'émissions politiques.

M. Schreyer: Je n'en dirai pas davantage, monsieur le président. Je comprends l'explication, mais je continue à être, sinon étonné, du moins un peu opposé à ce raisonnement, car, je l'ai dit, je comprends très bien qu'il est souvent impossible de trancher la question noir sur blanc. Néanmoins, il me semble qu'une chose qui est inappropriée le sera toujours, même trois mois après une conférence constitutionnelle.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions à ce sujet? Monsieur Broadbent?

M. Broadbent: J'aimerais savoir, monsieur le président, comment cette décision a été terms of the CBC structure. It was not, I take it, made by the producer himself who decided at this time, on the eve of the Constitutional Conference, he should cut the song but that he got instructions from someone else who would not normally be concerned with programming directly on a day-to-day basis? Is that correct?

Dr. Davidson: No, it is not correct, Mr. Broadbent, as I understand it. Perhaps Mr. Hallman would correct me if I am wrong, but my understanding is that the program was viewed in advance, as it traditionally is, by the officer responsible for exercising supervision over the producer who is responsible for producing the program, and it was the view of this supervisor that the inclusion of this song in the program was at least questionable.

He consulted with his immediate superior who concurred in this view, and it was reported to the Vice-President of English Networks that this was the point of view and the decision which they proposed to take. He concurred in it and the decision was taken in conformity with the line of responsibility which exists for taking decisions at the supervisory level. Could I just check with Mr. Hallman to confirm this?

Mr. Broadbent: Because this raises the whole question of a kind of artistic and editorial integrity of producers, it might be more useful to pursue this line of questioning later tonight.

The Chairman: Are there no further questions on this particular aspect of CBC programming? Then, we will go on to a new subject and Mr. Stewart is next.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Chairman, there are many allegations that are aimed at the CBC. We hear about them as Parliamentarians from people writing to us from all over the country. One of these allegations has to do with separatism but there are several others. The President has indicated that perhaps it is up to the Parliamentarians to deal with whether or not separatists should be allowed to be present in the CBC, and perhaps that is a good point. I am wondering, however, about some of the other allegations which may not be at all true. I am sure they should be cleared up and I wonder how the President plans to clear them up, whether he intends to have investigations or what.

One of those would be the allegation of kickbacks—payola. Another one would per-prise dans le cadre de la structure de Radio-Canada. Ce n'est pas, je suppose, le producteur lui-même qui a décidé qu'à ce moment-là, la veille d'une conférence constitutionnelle, il fallait couper la chanson; il a sans doute reçu des instructions d'une autre personne qui, normalement, ne s'occuperait pas directement de la programmation quotidienne. Est-ce bien cela?

M. Davidson: Non, ce pas cela, monsieur Broadbent, d'après ce que j'ai compris. Peut-être que M. Hallman pourra me corriger, si je me trompe; mais, si j'ai bien compris, l'émission a été examinée à l'avance, comme d'habitude, par la personne chargée de la surveillance du producteur chargé de l'émission, et c'est le surveillant qui a estimé que l'inclusion de cette chanson dans l'émission était pour le moins contestable.

Il a consulté son supérieur immédiat, qui était d'accord avec lui, et l'on a fait rapport au vice-président du réseau anglais de cette opinion, et de la décision que l'on comptait prendre. Le vice-président s'est montré du même avis, et la décision a été prise conformément à la hiérarchie qui existe pour la prise de décisions au niveau de la surveillance. Pourrais-je m'assurer auprès de M. Hallman qu'il en est bien ainsi?

M. Broadbent: Cela soulève toute la question de l'intégrité artistique des producteurs, et nous ferions donc peut-être mieux de réserver ce sujet pour plus tard.

Le président: Plus de questions sur cet aspect de la programmation? Alors, nous allons aborder un nouveau sujet. M. Stewart a la parole.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Monsieur le président, bien des allégations sont faites contre Radio-Canada. Nous en sommes informés par les lettres que nous recevons, en tant que parlementaires, de tous les coins du pays. L'une de ces allégations a trait au séparatisme, mais il y en a plusieurs autres. Le président a indiqué que c'est peut-être aux parlementaires de décider si oui ou non on doit accepter les séparatistes à Radio-Canada, et il a peut-être raison. Mais je me pose des questions quant aux autres allégations, qui ne sont peut-être pas toutes vraies. Je pense qu'on devrait essayer de clarifier la situation et je voudrais savoir comment le président compte procéder; est-ce qu'il va ordonner des enquêtes, ou quoi?

L'une de ces allégations est celle des pots-de-vin. Une autre chose que l'on m'a dit

Mr. Schreyer: You are talking of Hollywood.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): ...should not exist, of course, and perhaps does not exist to the extent that it has been reported. However I am certain that we would want to get into that.

Mr. Osler: That shows red-blooded Canadianism.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Another allegation is the fact that there is too great a supply of non-Canadians on the CBC in that it would appear that although Canadians want to act and so on, a number of non-Canadians seem to receive preference. I must say that I hold this view because it has been particularly interesting to me to notice the number of foreigners on the CBC and who act in various productions. It was particularly noteworthy the other night in Montreal when we saw a rehearsal, that of the first four English-speaking men three were non-Canadians—at least, their accent told me they were non-Canadians. Three out of four, I think, is rather odd. They may be Canadian citizens. I do not know.

The Chairman: At best, Mr. Stewart, it would have to be three out of five.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Another of the allegations is on the question of programming. It seems that the CBC wants only to produce things that are sensational in nature or that have something to do with sex, dope, violence of something in this area. It has been suggested that if the CBC were going to do a story about Jack and Jill that it would not be interesting enough for them to be going up the hill to get a pail of water but, rather, that they should slip into the bushes for some other purpose and that Jack would fall down the hill because he was dizzy from marijuana or something of that nature.

Dr. Davidson: You have got some good ideas, Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I sometimes wonder if there are not programmes about good, normal family life that cannot be reproduced on the CBC once in a while. We had "La c'est que certains producteurs conduisent leurs affaires de telle sorte que si des jeunes femmes veulent avoir d'autres contrats, elles doivent accorder leurs faveurs sexuelles. Une situation qui...

M. Schreyer: Vous voulez parler d'Hollywood.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): ...ne devrait pas exister, bien sûr, et n'existe peut-être pas autant qu'on le dit. Toutefois, je suis certain que nous voudrions aller y regarder de plus près.

M. Osler: Cela dénote un canadianisme robuste.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Une autre allégation, c'est qu'il y a trop de non-Canadiens à Radio-Canada, car il semble que, bien que les Canadiens désirent tenir des rôles, on donne la préférence à un grand nombre de non-Canadiens. Je suis de cet avis, car j'ai remarqué avec beaucoup d'intérêt le nombre d'étrangers qui sont à Radio-Canada et ont un rôle dans diverses productions. Cela était particulièrement frappant dans la répétition que nous avons vue l'autre soir à Montréal: des quatre premiers anglophones, trois n'étaient pas canadiens, du moins d'après leur accent. Trois sur quatre, cela me paraît beaucoup. C'étaient peut-être des citoyens canadiens, je n'en sais rien.

Le président: C'était au moins trois sur cinq, monsieur Stewart.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Il y a aussi une allégation relative aux émissions, et selon laquelle Radio-Canada ne veut produire que des émissions de caractère spectaculaire ou qui aient trait à la sexualité, à la drogue, à la violence ou autres choses du même ordre. On a dit que si Radio-Canada devait raconter l'histoire de Jack et Jill, elle ne trouverait pas cela assez intéressant, qu'ils grimpent sur la colline pour aller puiser de l'eau et elle raconterait plus volontiers qu'ils se sont esquivés dans les buissons avec d'autres idées en tête, et que Jack a roulé au bas de la colline parce qu'il avait des vertiges dus à la marijuana, ou quelque chose de ce genre.

M. Davidson: Vous avez des idées géniales, monsieur Stewart.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Je me demande si l'on ne pourrait pas produire de nouveau à Radio-Canada, de temps à autre, des émissions sur une vie familiale normale et paisi-Famille Plouffe". There are a few happy families around where the wife does not run around with the fellow next door and where they have normal problems which they solve. I remember "La Famille Plouffe" of a few years ago which was a very popular program and was a family type of program. We seem to have lost that type of thing.

Mr. McCleave: May I raise a point of order? Are we dealing with topics or are we dealing with what Mr. Stewart calls "allegations", which presumably could be listed here ad infinitum?

The Chairman: Perhaps we might ask Mr. Stewart to say whether he wants to deal with the allegations of kickbacks and seeking of favours by producers or the general area of programming.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I was initially wanting to outline general allegations to see how the CBC plans to handle this. My past experience in this Committee is that if I do not say what I want to say I will never get a chance to say it again.

The Chairman: What we are trying to do in the Committee is to approach it topic by topic, so I think it would be fair to all of us if you were to zero in on that which is most important. I am sure the other matters will come up in due course and you will get your licks in then.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes. Actually what I wanted to do is to find out what the CBC has in mind in general to attack these problems. Are they going to go into an investigation or do they like separatism? Do they want the parliamentarians to attack this problem? You see, this is why I wanted to...

The Chairman: All right. Suppose we asked Dr. Davidson to make a statement on the allegations of kickbacks and the improper use of a position that a producer is alleged to make with respect to young ladies.

Dr. Davidson: I am a little bit puzzled, Mr. Chairman, about whether you want me to deal with these two subject separately or whether you regard sexual favours as a sort of form of kickback.

The Chairman: I think this would be the way in which we would approach it. We must also remember that there might be willingness on the part of the lady, too.

ble. Il y avait autrefois «La Famille Plouffe». Il existe tout de même quelques familles heureuses où la femme ne flirte pas avec le voisin et où les gens ont des problèmes normaux à résoudre. Je me souviens de «La Famille Plouffe», il y a quelques années, une émission familiale qui avait beaucoup de succès. Il semble que nous n'ayons plus d'émissions de ce genre.

M. McCleave: Un rappel au Règlement. Est-ce que nous traitons du sujet des émissions, ou de ce que M. Stewart appelle des «allegations», et dont la liste pourrait se poursuivre indéfiniment?

Le président: Monsieur Stewart, est-ce que vous voulez traiter de la question des pots-de-vin et faveurs sexuelles accordées aux producteurs, ou de la question générale des programmes?

M. Stewart (Cochrane): A l'origine, je voulais simplement mentionner les allégations générales pour voir comment Radio-Canada compte s'occuper de ces questions. Mon expérience passée dans ce Comité m'a appris que si je ne disais pas tout de suite ce que j'avais à dire, je n'aurais pas l'occasion de le dire plus tard.

Le président: Ce que nous essayons de faire au Comité, c'est de traiter les questions une à une. Il me semble donc qu'en toute justice, vous deviez vous concentrer sur ce qui est le plus important. Je suis certain que l'on abordera les autres sujets plus tard, et que vous pourrez alors passer à l'attaque.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Je voudrais savoir ce que Radio-Canada entend faire pour résoudre ces problèmes. Est-ce qu'on envisage une enquête ou est-ce qu'ils aiment le séparatisme. Veulent-ils que ce soit les parlementaires qui s'attaquent à ce problème?

Le président: Alors, je voudrais que M. Davidson nous parle de ces questions de pots-de-vin ou du mauvais usage qu'un réalisateur peut faire de ses fonctions à l'égard des jeunes femmes.

M. Davidson: Je ne sais pas si vous voulez que je traite de ces questions séparément ou si vous considérez les faveurs sexuelles comme une forme de pots-de-vin.

Le président: Je crois qu'on pourrait le considérer ainsi. Il y a aussi le fait que la femme en question est peut-être consentante.

[Texte]

Dr. Davidson: I will start by stating the obvious. The Corporation does not have a policy which accepts either kickbacks or favours of the kind referred to by Mr. Stewart as a basic feature of our working arrangements with the people in the programming field. We do not tolerate kickbacks; we have never tolerated kickbacks.

If any charge is made in an individual instance that some particular individual is demanding kickbacks, we will take every possible step to investigate the truth of that allegation and to pursue it to the bitter end, including court action where there is any conceivable ground for taking court action.

However, I have to say, having said that, that the Corporation cannot deal with situations which are left up in the air with vague and airy charges that nobody is willing to put their name behind or to support. It has already been explained to Miss LaMarsh, to quote a most recent example where kickbacks have been referred to; it has already been explained to her many times in interviews and on television that all she was doing was relaying things that she had been told by some other people and that she has no basis whatever, apart from the conversation she had with other people, to support the charges.

She has already said that she has nothing more than what she said in her book to give as evidence on the subject of kickbacks, and that therefore there is no point in her being called before this Committee to be questioned on the subject. She referred to Mr. Lorne Greene of "Bonanza" fame, who is one of the great Canadians appearing on our network regularly and commended to you at 8 o'clock every Sunday night as one of the better cultural programs which, so far as I know, has no sexual overtones. I have never seen a bedroom scene in "Bonanza" yet, and therefore I think this may be regarded as an exception to the general rule that the CBC purveys nothing but this illicit kind of activity.

Reference was made to Mr. Lorne Greene, who promptly replied from Hollywood that yes, he had talked to Miss LaMarsh at a cocktail party or reception in Hollywood, and that he had said to her that kickbacks were a normal feature of the scene in the United States of America so far as the broadcasting and film world were concerned, and he had heard from many sources that obviously this was a malaise existing in the Canadian broadcasting Corporation as well. These are statements that are based upon nothing more

M. Davidson: Je commence par ce qui est l'évidence même. La Société n'a pas une politique qui accepte des pots-de-vin ou des faveurs du genre mentionné par M. Stewart en tant que partie intégrante de ces contrats de travail dans le domaine de la programmation. Nous ne tolérons pas les pots-de-vin et nous ne les avons jamais tolérés.

S'il y a des accusations dans un cas particulier comme quoi une personne demande de tels pots-de-vin, nous prendrons tous les moyens possibles pour enquêter, établir la vérité et aller jusqu'au bout, y compris les poursuites devant un tribunal si les preuves le justifient.

Toutefois, ceci dit, j'ajoute que la Société ne peut pas s'occuper d'accusations lancées en l'air et extrêmement vagues que personne ne veut appuyer. Nous l'avons déjà expliqué à mademoiselle LaMarsh, pour citer un exemple plus récent de ce genre d'accusation, on lui a déjà expliqué plusieurs fois, lors d'entrevues et à la télévision, que tout ce qu'elle faisait c'était de répéter des choses qui lui avaient été dites par d'autres personnes, que ses accusations n'étaient fondées sur rien de plus que ces conversations.

Elle a déjà dit qu'elle n'avait rien à ajouter à ce qu'elle a dit dans son livre à ce sujet et par conséquent, il n'est pas nécessaire qu'elle soit convoquée à ce Comité pour témoigner à ce sujet. Elle a fait allusion à M. Lorne Greene de Bonanza, un des grands acteurs canadiens qui paraît régulièrement sur notre réseau le dimanche soir à 20 h. qui, à ce que je sache, ne fait pas appel à l'instinct sexuel. Je n'ai jamais vu de scènes d'amour dans Bonanza, c'est donc une exception à la règle qui veut que Radio-Canada ne montre que ce genre de chose. Elle a donc fait allusion à M. Lorne Greene, qui a répondu qu'il avait parlé à M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh lors d'un cocktail ou d'une réception à Hollywood et qu'il lui avait dit que les pots-de-vin sont quelque chose de normal aux États-Unis, dans le domaine de la radiodiffusion et des films, et qu'il avait entendu dire que ce malaise existait probablement aussi au sein de Radio-Canada. Ce sont des déclarations qui ne sont fondées sur rien de plus substantiel que ce quelqu'un m'a dit au cours d'un cocktail.

substantial that what I heard from somebody when I was talking to him at a cocktail party.

I received from Miss LaMarsh on Valentine's Day a year ago a letter in which she, while still Minister, passed on to me an anonymous letter that she had received alleging kickbacks in a certain segment of the CBC.

Eight months later I received through the courtesy of Mr. Stanfield's office another anonymous letter which was allegedly directed to the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the original of which to the best of my knowledge I have never received, which also made certain allegations directed to individuals, not under the responsible signature of a person who was prepared to support those allegations, but simply the kind of letter that I am sure members of Parliament receive from time to time with nobody prepared to sign it or take responsibility for backing up the charges.

Every time we get a letter of this kind we make the most intensive and detailed investigation that we possibly can, and while I would ask you not to press me for further details we do not confine these investigative procedures to our own resources within the Corporation. We resort to all of the means that are at our disposal to have these allegations, these anonymous charges, investigated by the proper authorities. It is an exercise in futility to a large degree, because to the best of my knowledge we have not been able to get, in respect of these two pieces of anonymous literature, the slightest tittle of evidence to support the anonymous charges that are made, naming names of individuals and accusing them—to this point I must say wrongfully—of having indulged in the practices that these letters alleged they had indulged in.

We can only maintain the posture that we do not tolerate this under any circumstances in the Corporation. When we find it we root it out, I can assure you, ruthlessly. I will not tolerate kickbacks in the Corporation when I can establish the fact that kickbacks exist, but if there are charges to be made we have to have some people who are willing to sign their names, to make allegations, and to back them up with evidence if we are going to be expected to do our job in controlling the situation.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Does the President want to continue to the other topic?

[Interpretation]

J'ai reçu de M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh à la Saint-Valentin, l'année dernière, alors qu'elle était ministre, une lettre dans laquelle elle m'a envoyé une lettre anonyme qu'elle avait reçue prétendant qu'il y avait des pots-de-vin dans un certain secteur de Radio-Canada.

Huit mois plus tard, j'ai reçu par l'entremise du bureau de M. Stanfield une autre lettre anonyme supposément adressée au président de Radio-Canada mais dont je n'ai jamais reçu l'original à ce que je sache, où l'on portait des accusations contre certains individus mais il n'y avait pas de signature d'une personne prête à appuyer ces accusations, simplement le genre de lettre que vous recevez de temps à autre et que personne n'est prêt à signer, ou à prendre la responsabilité de leurs accusations.

Chaque fois que nous recevons une lettre de ce genre, nous faisons une enquête la plus approfondie possible et bien que, je vous demanderais de ne pas me demander plus de détails, je dirais que nous ne limitons pas ces enquêtes aux seules ressources de Radio-Canada. Nous nous servons de tous les moyens à notre disposition pour que ces accusations anonymes soient étudiées par les autorités compétentes. C'est en grande partie un exercice futile parce qu'au mieux de mes connaissances, en ce qui concerne ces deux lettres anonymes, nous n'avons pas eu la moindre preuve pour appuyer les accusations anonymes qui donnaient les noms de personnes et qui les accusaient, à tort, je dois le dire, d'avoir agi de la façon indiquée dans ces lettres.

Nous ne pouvons que réitérer que nous ne tolérerions pas ce genre de chose. Si nous découvrons quoi que ce soit, nous sévissons très durement, je vous l'assure. Je ne tolérerai pas que les pots-de-vin constituent une pratique courante si je puis établir qu'ils existent. Mais pour que nous puissions porter des accusations, il faut que nous ayons des personnes qui soient prêtes à signer leur nom à partir des accusations et à témoigner si nous voulons contrôler cette situation.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions?

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Est-ce que le président voudrait passer à l'autre sujet?

[Texte]

Dr. Davidson: Could I just say one thing further. One of the letters that we received, the letter directed to Mr. Stanfield's office, alleged that we had favoured one particular company over another in the awarding of a contract and that we had not given the contract to the lowest bidder. The simple fact of the matter was we produced the figures and we reported them to Mr. Stanfield—not the precise figures—but we reported to him the true facts which are that the contract was, in fact, awarded in this instance to the lowest bidder. It is this kind of charge that is being directed to us and to other quarters by persons who are not willing to back up their charges by identifying themselves and following through the charges with the kind of evidence that would enable us to deal with the situation.

The Chairman: I have Mr. Osler, Mr. Stanbury, Mr. McCleave and Mr. Mongrain on the same point. Mr. Osler?

Mr. Osler: This is a point of allegations. I do not think it is going to broaden it out terrifically but I would like to bring it in here. There was an allegation made which I considered a very, very serious matter because I think it reflects on the life work of a man who worked for the CBC for 33 years, and worked very ably. It was alleged in this book that Miss LaMarsh wrote that somehow or other J. Alphonse Ouimet was hanging on, and hanging on, and hanging on and in some miraculous way he was finally kicked out and that this was a great thing.

I do not know whether it is appropriate or not but I have a copy of a letter from the President of the CBC dated November 23, 1967, which can prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that Mr. Ouimet had, for the past 14 months, been trying to get out of the CBC, and as a personal favour to the Prime Minister was remaining on until the White Paper to the Broadcasting Act and other things were decided upon and therefore a rational decision could be made as to who his successor should be and what type of man he should be.

I think it is the dimmest type of irresponsibility—I think it is fair game to talk about politicians—to take a civil servant with 33 years of excellent service to Canada and bury his name about in that manner. If it were appropriate I would table this letter. I do not know whether or not the Chair considers it appropriate.

It is a letter from Mr. Ouimet to the Prime Minister. It is not marked "confidential" and

M. Davidson: Je voudrais ajouter qu'une des lettres que nous avons reçues, par l'intermédiaire du bureau de M. Stanfield, prétendait que nous avions favorisé une société au dépend d'une autre pour accorder un contrat et que nous n'avions pas donné le contrat au moins offrant. Nous avons trouvé les chiffres et nous avons envoyé à M. Stanfield, non pas les chiffres exacts, mais les faits véritables tels que le contrat avait été accordé en fait au moins offrant. Ce sont des accusations de ce genre qui sont formulées par des personnes qui ne sont pas prêtes à appuyer leurs accusations en s'identifiant et d'appuyer leurs accusations par des preuves qui nous permettraient de régler le problème.

Le président: M. Osler, puis M. Stanbury, M. McCleave et M. Mongrain sur cette question.

Monsieur Osler.

M. Osler: En ce qui concerne les accusations portées, je ne crois pas apporter grand chose, mais il y a eu un cas très grave à mon avis parce qu'il reflète sur le travail d'un homme qui a travaillé à Radio-Canada pendant 33 ans et d'une façon très compétente. M<sup>116</sup> LaMarsh a prétendu dans son livre que d'une façon ou d'une autre M. Ouimet s'accrochait désespérément à son poste et que finalement, par une sorte de miracle, on l'avait renvoyé.

Je ne sais pas si c'est le moment d'en parler, mais j'ai une copie de la lettre du président de Radio-Canada du 23 novembre 1967 qui prouve sans l'ombre d'un doute que M. Ouimet essayait depuis 14 mois de quitter Radio-Canada et qu'il restait à son poste pour rendre service au premier ministre jusqu'à ce que le Livre blanc sur la Loi sur la radiodiffusion ait été adopté et qu'on puisse prendre une décision rationnelle quant à son successeur.

Je pense que c'est vraiment faire preuve d'irresponsabilité, la guerre ouverte contre les hommes politiques, de prendre un fonctionnaire ayant 33 ans d'excellent service à la fonction publique et de brandir son nom de cette façon. Et, si cela était opportun, j'aimerais déposer cette lettre. Je ne sais pas si la présidence considérera que cela serait approprié. C'est une lettre de M. Ouimet au premier ministre. On ne mentionne pas all Board members received a copy of it. I happened to be a Board member at the time. It was just to announce that he had finally forced the issue and put in his resignation in such terms that it could not be postponed any longer.

The Chairman: The Chair would be willing to consider that, providing you could get permission both from Mr. Ouimet and the former Prime Minister.

Mr. Osler: Thank you.

Mr. Stafford: It was in all the newspapers, too. It was common knowledge that he wanted to resign. I do not think there is any doubt about it, anyway.

Mr. Osler: There are many people who read books but do not read newspapers.

The Chairman: Mr. Davidson wishes to add a comment.

Dr. Davidson: I would enlarge the word "kickbacks" to "irregularities," and it might be useful if I were to put on the record what facts we have on the extent to which we have been able to discover this to be a problem in the CBC.

As you are aware, gentlemen, the Auditor General is, of course, the officer responsible to Parliament for auditing the financial affairs of the Corporation. In addition to that, we have an internal audit service which is endeavouring to be alert to the possibility of irregularities at any point in time.

There have been six instances over the past seven years of irregularities being disclosed by the internal audit, and immediate action was taken by the Corporation to correct the irregularity. A quick review of the internal audit records shows that over the past seven years there have been six dismissals for cause, two convictions in criminal court and, I believe, one case before the courts at the present time, which has been before the courts since 1965 and has not yet been disposed of.

I distinctly recall hearing Miss LaMarsh on television on January 26 in an interview on the Montreal television station CFCF stating that the matters to which she referred in her book on this topic went back to the period 1963, 1964, 1965, and that for all she knew the situation might, or might not, be the same at the present time.

qu'elle soit confidentielle et tous les membres de conseil d'administration en ont reçu copie. Je siégeais alors au Conseil. C'était pour annoncer qu'il avait donné sa démission en des termes qui ne permettaient pas de remettre la date de cette démission.

Le président: Je crois qu'il faudrait avoir la permission de l'ancien premier ministre et de M. Ouimet pour qu'on puisse déposer cette lettre.

M. Osler: Merci.

M. Stafford: C'était dans tous les journaux. Tout le monde savait qu'il voulait démissionner. Il n'y a aucun doute à cela.

M. Osler: Il y a beaucoup de gens qui lisent des livres mais ne lisent pas les journaux.

Le président: M. Davidson voudrait ajouter quelque chose à ce que M. Osler a dit, je crois.

M. Davidson: Au lieu d'utiliser le mot «ristournes» j'emploierai «irrégularités». Et, je pense que ce serait peut-être intéressant et utile de consigner au procès-verbal exactement quels sont les faits que nous avons découverts à l'égard du problème au sein de Radio-Canada.

Comme vous le savez, messieurs, l'auditeur général est responsable devant le Parlement pour la vérification des transactions financières de Radio-Canada. Nous avons aussi notre propre service interne qui essaie d'être au courant de toutes les possibilités d'irrégularités, en tout temps.

Il y a eu six cas au cours des sept dernières années où des irrégularités ont été découvertes par la vérification interne et des mesures immédiates ont été prises par la Société Radio-Canada pour remédier à la situation.

Si on jette un coup d'œil rapide sur nos livres, on verra que six personnes ont été renvoyées, deux ont été condamnées en cour et, dans le moment, il y a une cause dont le Tribunal est saisi depuis 1965 et dont la question n'a pas encore été réglée.

Je me rappelle clairement avoir entendu M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh, à la télévision, le 26 janvier, au cours d'une entrevue, au poste de télévision de Montréal CFCF, déclarer que les questions qu'elle avait mentionnées dans son livre sur cette question remontaient aux années 1963, 1964 et 1965, et que pour autant qu'elle puisse l'affirmer que la situation pouvait être encore la même ou avoir changé.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury?

Mr. Stanbury: There is an intangible, amorphous kind of kickback that has been alleged by certain artists and independent suppliers, I suppose, of broadcasting. It is not something that one can make specific charges about.

• 1250

But I think perhaps the attention of the management should be directed to it. There is the feeling that many elaborate productions—what many people might consider to be over-elaborate productions—and many importations of American stars arise not from any expectation of a kickback in a direct monetary sense, but from the desire of the producers to pave their own way to Hollywood; to attract the attention of the American money bags in such a way as, in effect, to produce, at the cost of the Canadian taxpayer, samples for display in the United States and to gain friends among those who are instrumental in hiring producers, particularly, and directors in the United States.

I am sure this kind of allegation has come to your attention. If it has not, it is an allegation common in the artistic and film community of Canada, and seems to me to be something that could well escape the notice of the executive of the CBC.

It never occurred to me, and it may be a tinge of the imagination of people who are not getting as much work, or as many contracts, as they would like, but perhaps it might be worth looking at, because it is a common feeling that this is the real form of kickback existing in the CBC—a using of the CBC, if you like, to pave the way of ambitious people to Hollywood.

Dr. Davidson: Would it be fair to ask Mr. Stanbury, Mr. Chairman, if he has any further information on this subject apart from the conversations he must have had with certain individuals?

Mr. Stanbury: As I say, it is not the sort of thing that one can find in bookkeeping records, not the sort of thing that one can put your finger on in specific cases, perhaps, but it might be the kind of suspicion that people in your position should have in mind when they look at the level of importation of

Le président: Monsieur Stanbury.

M. Stanbury: Il y a des accusations qui ont été portées par certains artistes et par les fournisseurs indépendants de la société. Ce n'est pas une chose au sujet de laquelle on peut lancer des accusations directes ou précises.

Mais, il faudrait peut-être que l'administration s'en occupe. Je parle d'une impression, que bien des réalisations assez élaborées, que plusieurs peuvent considérer comme trop élaborées, que bien des importations d'artistes américains ne proviennent pas d'un espoir de ristourne au sens monétaire du terme ou direct, mais proviennent d'un désir de la part des réalisateurs de paver eux-mêmes leur propre route jusqu'à Hollywood.

Ces derniers voudraient attirer l'attention des américains dont les poches sont bien remplies, d'une façon qui leur permet d'aller exposer des bouts d'essai aux États-Unis, aux frais des contribuables canadiens, ce qui leur permettrait ainsi de se faire des amis chez ceux qui ont quelque chose à dire dans l'engagement des réalisateurs et des producteurs aux États-Unis.

Et, je suis certain que des allégations comme celles-là vous ont été signalées. Je vous dirai que c'est le genre d'allégations qui sont extrêmement courantes dans la communauté artistique du Canada. Et, je crois que c'est une chose qui pourrait fort bien échapper au Conseil d'administration de Radio-Canada.

Je n'avais jamais pensé à cette chose-là et c'est peut-être aussi le fruit de l'imagination des gens qui n'ont pas autant de travail, autant de contrats, qu'ils aimeraient en avoir. Mais je pense qu'il serait peut-être intéressant d'étudier ces faits ou de penser à cette question, car l'impression générale est que c'est vraiment sous cette forme qu'on obtient des ristournes à Radio-Canada. On se sert, si vous voulez, de Radio-Canada pour ouvrir le chemin d'Hollywood à des gens ambitieux.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, voulez-vous demander à M. Stanbury s'il a d'autres renseignements sur ce sujet, à part des conversations qu'il aurait pu avoir avec certains particuliers.

M. Stanbury: Comme je l'ai dit, ce n'est pas le genre de choses que l'on peut trouver dans les dossiers de la comptabilité, on ne peut pas mettre le doigt sur des cas particuliers, mais, c'est peut-être là le genre de soupçons que des gens qui seraient à votre place devraient avoir lorsqu'ils considèrent le American stars and the level of expenditures on extravaganzas which lead to the exodus of certain producers to the United States.

I bring it to your attention because I think there is a more common feeling that this is more the kind of kickback that exists in the CBC than those that one can put one's finger on in a bankbook or a cheque book.

Dr. Davidson: I have to say to Mr. Stanbury, Mr. Chairman, that this is the first time I have heard these suggestions formulated in this particular way.

I have heard it said that we pay too much for American programs, and a variety of other things; I have heard criticism, as criticism, of the fact that some of our programs are too elaborately mounted; but I have never heard it suggested that producers import American talent for the purpose of using that talent to get a ticket to Hollywood. Nor have I heard that producers mount Canadian content programs with elaborate sets and elaborate development really to use CBC money to attract the attention of Hollywood film executives.

If there is anything in this it really has to reflect very creditably on the kinds of judgments made by the money bags in Hollywood to which these people are trying to get access.

Mr. Hallman may have heard of these suggestions. If there is anything to them we will certainly try to follow them through. I must say that this kind of vague expression of discontent is even more of a will-o'-the-wisp to pursue than is the equally difficult to pursue allegation about kickbacks, as such.

Mr. Mongrain: It might, however, be good public relations for Radio-Canada.

Dr. Davidson: To do what?

Mr. Mongrain: To have that kind of reputation in Hollywood.

Mr. Stanbury: I mention it because I think that in this area, unlike the area of cash kickbacks, which may or may not exist, there is required a consciousness and an exercise of judgment and awareness on the part of you and your executives, rather than any police investigation or hunt for financial records. It nombre d'importations de vedettes américaines et le chiffre des dépenses extravagantes qui mènent ensuite à l'exode de certains réalisateurs aux États-Unis.

Je porte cela à votre attention parce que je pense que c'est là une impression partagée par beaucoup, quant à la nature des ristournes ou des profits que l'on essaie de faire à Radio-Canada et qu'on ne peut pas facilement déceler simplement dans un carnet de banque ou un chéquier.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, je dois dire à M. Stanbury que c'est la première fois que j'entends formuler ce genre de suggestion de cette façon bien particulière.

J'ai déjà entendu dire qu'on payait trop cher pour des programmes américains et différentes autres choses. J'ai déjà entendu des critiques disant qu'il n'y avait des programmes trop tarabiscotés. Mais, je n'ai jamais entendu dire qu'il y avait des réalisateurs qui importaient des vedettes américaines pour s'en servir afin d'obtenir leur billet pour Hollywood. Je n'ai jamais entendu dire, non plus, que des réalisateurs avaient mis en scène des programmes canadiens avec des scènes élaborées, afin de se servir des fonds de Radio-Canada pour attirer l'attention des producteurs de films de Hollywood.

S'il y a la moindre véracité là-dedans, je dois dire que cela peut nous faire porter un jugement sur les gens de Hollywood. M. Hallman a peut-être déjà entendu ce genre d'allégations. Si jamais il y a le moindre fondement, nous ferons enquête. Avec ce genre de vague expression d'insatisfaction, il est difficile de faire enquête sur des allégations visant des ristournes comme telles.

M. Mongrain: Mais cela pourrait être des relations publiques excellentes pour Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson: Pour en faire quoi?

M. Mongrain: D'avoir ce genre de réputation à Hollywood.

M. Stanbury: Je demande cela parce que je pense que dans ce domaine, contrairement à la question des pots-de-vin, qui peuvent exister ou ne pas exister, il faut une prise de conscience et un exercice de jugement de la part de vous-même et de vos collègues, plutôt qu'une enquête de police ou une chasse aux is an exercise of executive and administrative judgment, and awareness that there may be certain personal ambitions that enter into the nature of your programming, and these may be the motivation for some of the things to which people object.

Dr. Davidson: I would hope that we do not altogether lack people in the Corporation who have ambitions. At the same time I would express publicly the hope that someone who is prepared to sign his name to a letter, and voice these concerns directly, would be prepared to write to me on the subject.

The Chairman: Mr. McCleave.

Mr. McCleave: First could I correct Dr. Davidson. There have been bedroom scenes in "Bonanza" showing the boys recovering from their shotgun wounds. The miracle is that they never show scars.

Dr. Davidson, has there been any re-examination of the purchasing policies in the light of these kickback allegations? Let us put it specifically in the case of the purchase of American shows, because I suppose this would be the most profitable field if anybody were engaged in that sort of endeavour. Has there been any examination of the purchasing policies that the CBC has used?

Dr. Davidson: One of the first questions that I looked into when I went to the CBC last February was the question of film purchase policy, based again upon some verbal statements that were made to me suggesting that we were paying unnecessarily high prices for U.S. films. We have endeavoured to compare what our practices are with the practices in the trade generally.

My officials who know most about this have assured me that, while it is a very complicated matter to get at the bottom of, because as you know film purchases are made on the basis of package deals and artificial price tags can be assigned to individual films for particular reasons, nonetheless they are satisfied. And I have not been able myself to conclude that in terms of the prices we pay before me that in terms of the prices we pay for the film packages that we acquire, having regard to the audience for whom we are purchasing programs, we are not paying prices that are out of line with the prices paid by our competition.

dossiers financiers. Il faut un exercice de jugement de la part du personnel exécutif et administratif, et il faut que vous vous rendiez compte qu'il peut y avoir certaines ambitions personnelles qui entrent en cause dans la nature de vos émissions, et qui sont peut-être justement la cause de certaines des choses auxquelles les gens s'opposent.

M. Davidson: J'espère bien que nous avons tout de même des gens dans la Société qui ont des ambitions. En même temps, j'exprime publiquement l'espoir que quelqu'un qui soit prêt à signer sa lettre, et à manifester directement cette inquiétude, m'écrive à ce sujet.

Le président: M. McCleave.

M. McCleave: Tout d'abord, je voudrais corriger M. Davidson. Il y avait des scènes d'alcôve dans «Bonanza», lorsque les garçons se remettaient des blessures qu'ils avaient reçues. Le prodige, c'est qu'ils n'ont jamais de cicatrices.

Monsieur Davidson, a-t-on procédé à un nouvel examen des politiques d'achat à la lueur de ces allégations relatives aux pots-de-vin? Prenons le cas précis de l'achat de spectacles américains, car je suppose que ce serait le domaine le plus rentable pour quelqu'un qui voudrait essayer ce genre de combine. A-t-on procédé à un examen des politiques d'achat qu'a suivies Radio-Canada?

M. Davidson: L'une des premières questions que j'aie examinées lorsque je suis entré à Radio-Canada en février dernier a été celle de la politique suivie relativement à l'achat de films, en raison de certaines déclarations verbales que l'on m'avait faites, laissant entendre que nous payions des prix exorbitants pour les films américains. Nous avons essayé de comparer nos méthodes à celles du reste de notre industrie.

Ceux de mes collègues qui connaissent le mieux la question m'ont assuré qu'ils étaient satisfaits des résultats, encore qu'il soit très difficile d'examiner la question en profondeur, car, vous le savez, les achats de films se font par accord global, et l'on peut assigner un prix artificiel à certains films, pour des raisons particulières. Moi-même je n'ai pu arriver à des conclusions différentes, d'après les preuves que l'on m'a soumises: pour les films que nous achetons par accord global, et étant donné le genre de public pour lequel nous les achetons, nous ne payons pas des prix disproportionnés par rapport à ceux que paient nos concurrents.

I have made an examination of certain individual items that have been brought to my attention. These items, I can add, are frequently brought to our attention by our rivals in the trade. I have on a number of occasions had our competitors come to me and ask, "Why are you paying this particular price for this particular program?" It is usually a program that we are on the verge of taking from them because we have been successful in outbidding them for a program we both wanted.

The Chairman: Such as "Laugh-In".

Dr. Davidson: I did not mention any particular program, Mr. Chairman. I have not been able, Mr. McCleave, to find any support, any substantiation for the allegation that we are paying, in comparison to what our audience is, prices that are noticeably out of line with the competition that we are dealing with.

Mr. McCleave: As a result of the action that has been taken in the past against these employees that you mentioned in answer to Mr. Stewart, has there been an examination of the purchasing policies to see that whatever these people were guilty of could have been obviated or avoided?

Dr. Davidson: This is a constant procedure, Mr. McCleave, in terms of the internal audit that we have had in existence all along. There is no guarantee, no matter what system you have, that you are not going to encounter individual cases where there has been an irregularity on the part of individuals. I can give an example as recently as last December. We had one producer who engaged the services of a writer and a singer for a certain program for which he was responsible.

He offered them a certain fee for each weekly performance and came back to them afterwards and said, "I am going to increase your fee by $50, but you are going to pay that $50 to me." This was reported by the individuals affected, and that person is no longer working for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

This does not mean to say that there is not somewhere in the Corporation somebody who is also committing some kind of an irregularity. The real test of this is what we are doing about it. Are we pursuing these aggressively? Are we alert to these possibilities? Does our internal audit show up irregularities, as I have instanced in the letter that was written by our Vice-President of Finance to

[Interpretation]

J'ai examiné certains cas particuliers qui m'avaient été signalés. Je pourrais ajouter que ces cas sont souvent portés à notre attention par nos rivaux dans l'industrie. A plusieurs reprises, nos concurrents sont venus me demander: «Pourquoi payez-vous tel prix pour tel programme?» En général, il s'agit d'un programme que nous sommes sur le point de leur enlever parce que nous avons réussi à faire une offre supérieure à la leur pour un programme que nous voulions tous deux obtenir.

Le président: «Laugh-In», par exemple.

M. Davidson: Je n'ai pas mentionné de programme particulier, monsieur le président. Voyez-vous, monsieur McCleave, je n'ai jamais pu trouver aucune preuve ou quoi que ce soit qui pût étayer l'allégation que nous payons nettement plus cher que nos concurrents, étant donné la nature de notre public.

M. McCleave: Par suite des mesures qui ont été prises par le passé contre les employés que vous avez mentionnés, en réponse à M. Stewart, a-t-on examiné la politique d'achat pour s'assurer qu'il y aurait un moyen de contourner ou d'éviter la chose dont ces personnes s'étaient rendues coupables?

M. Davidson: C'est là un procédé constant, monsieur McCleave, étant donné la vérification interne à laquelle nous nous sommes toujours livrés. On n'a jamais aucune garantie, quel que soit le système que l'on emploie, que l'on ne vas pas se heurter à des cas où certaines personnes ont commis une irrégularité. Je vais vous citer un exemple qui date de décembre dernier seulement. L'un de nos réalisateurs avait engagé un écrivain et un chanteur pour un programme dont il était chargé.

Il leur a offert certains cachets pour chaque émission hebdomadaire, puis il leur a dit plus tard qu'il allait leur donner à chacun une augmentation de $50, mais qu'ils devraient ensuite lui payer à lui ces $50. Les personnes en cause nous ont fait rapport de la chose, et ce réalisateur ne travaille maintenant plus à Radio-Canada.

Cela ne veut pas dire que, quelque part dans la Société, quelqu'un d'autre ne fait pas la même chose. Ce qui compte, c'est ce que nous faisons pour combattre ces irrégularités. Les recherchons-nous activement? Sommes-nous sur le qui-vive pour découvrir ces combines possibles? Notre vérification interne permet-elle de déceler les irrégularités, comme j'en ai donné l'exemple dans la lettre the Auditor General? Or are we sitting back, letting these things happen to the Corporation and indirectly to the Canadian taxpayer without doing anything about it?

If there are any charges that anybody is prepared to put his name to, about a kick-back in the CBC, let me have that charge in writing signed by somebody who is responsible and I will do something about it. But let us not go on forever batting back and forth gossip and unsupported allegations that somebody has relayed about a situation five or six years ago, which is recorded in a book and for which the people making the charges take no responsibility.

I do not mean this in reference to anything you have said, Mr. McCleave. But I do appeal to the members of the Committee that this sort of talk, unless it is supported by somebody who is prepared to put his name to it, is I think one of the vilest means of undermining the integrity and the reputation of people who for the most part are Canadians just as honest and honourable as any of us sitting around this table.

Every time an unsupported charge is made by an anonymous source and relayed by other parties alleging vaguely that there is a system of kickbacks in the Corporation, this casts dispersions on everybody from the President of the Corporation down to the lowest employees. And I must say that it is no way to run a national broadcasting organization, to have to cope with these unfounded allegations unless there is some real evidence to back them up.

Mr. McCleave: I always throw away anonymous letters that reach me, and I am very surprised—I thought you had indicated earlier that you had investigated things that were set forth in anonymous letters. Are you telling me now that you do not?

Dr. Davidson: No, we certainly do.

Mr. McCleave: You do investigate them?

Dr. Davidson: Absolutely. We have had the letter that Miss LaMarsh furnished me on January 14, 1968, under investigation ever since that time. We have had periodic reports on it. And I could give you quotations from the letter that we got as recently as this week from the appropriate authorities saying that so far as their investigations have enabled écrite par notre vice-président aux finances et adressée à l'auditeur général? Ou est-ce que nous restons simplement les bras croisés, laissant ces choses se produire et nuire à la Société et, indirectement, au contribuable, sans rien faire pour y remédier?

S'il y a des gens qui veulent porter des accusations au sujet d'un pot-de-vin donné à un employé de Radio-Canada, et qu'ils soient prêts à signer leur nom, qu'ils m'envoient cette accusation par écrit, signée par une personne de confiance, et je m'en occuperai. Mais que l'on cesse donc de répéter des commérages et des allégations sans preuves à l'appui, faites par quelqu'un au sujet d'une irrégularité commise il y a cinq ou six ans, qui sont publiées dans un livre, et pour lesquelles les accusateurs n'assument aucune responsabilité.

Je ne fais pas allusion à ce que vous avez dit M. McCleave, mais je prie les membres du comité de comprendre qu'à moins que ce genre de commérages soit appuyé par des gens qui sont prêts à signer, c'est un des moyens les plus vils de saper l'intégrité et la réputation de Canadiens qui sont aussi honnêtes et aussi justes que ceux qui sont ici autour de cette table.

Chaque fois que des accusations transmises par d'autres partis à l'effet qu'il existe des ristournes dans la Société, on entache la réputation de tout le monde, depuis le président de Radio-Canada jusqu'au plus humble manœuvre. Je vous assure que ce n'est pas une façon de gérer un organisme national de radiodiffusion d'avoir à résoudre ses accusations sans fondements, à moins qu'il y ait des preuves pour les appuyer.

M. McCleave: Je jette toujours à la poubelle les lettres anonymes qui me parviennent et je suis très surpris... Je pensais que vous aviez dit, il y a un instant, que vous avez fait enquête au sujet de ce qui avait été avancé dans ces lettres anonymes. Maintenant, vous dites que vous ne le faites pas?

M. Davidson: Non, nous le faisons certainement.

M. McCleave: Vous faites enquête?

M. Davidson: Mais oui, absolument; M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh m'a donné une lettre le 14 janvier 1968, et nous faisons enquête depuis lors. Nous avons des rapports périodiques à ce sujet et je pourrais vous citer la lettre que nous avons reçue cette semaine même de la part des autorités en charge, qui nous ont dit qu'en autant que les résultats de l'enquête them to pursue this matter, there is no jot or tittle of substance to the allegations contained in this particular anonymous letter which was very much like the anonymous letter I mentioned before as having been sent to Mr. Stanfield in October of last year.

Mr. McCleave: Dr. Davidson, if you threw away anonymous letters, there would be nobody who would complain.

Dr. Davidson: If we threw away anonymous letters, Mr. McCleave, and later some discovery was made that there was in these anonymous letters an allegation that had substance to it, we would be attacked because we had failed to pay attention to the storm signals that had been flown under our very noses.

Mr. McCleave: Who would attack you?

An hon. Member: Members of Parliament.

The Chairman: I think that on that rhetorical question we can adjourn the meeting. We will meet again at eight o'clock this evening in this room to continue the questioning of Dr. Davidson.

EVENING SITTING

• 2011

The Chairman: I think we can continue with our hearing. We were dealing with the subject of kickbacks, alleged corruption and whatnot in the CBC. Mr. Mongrain was the next speaker on my list, followed by Mr. Dinsdale on this specific subject. If there are no further questioners on that, then I had Mr. Osler who is not here, Mr. Broadbent who is not here and Mr. McCleave who is not here, in that order.

Mr. Givens: Before you go on, whatever happened to Jack and Jill? I have forgotten.

An hon. Member: They never got up the hill.

Mr. Givens: He did not answer that question?

The Chairman: I thought we had agreed that if the CBC were to film it, it would become a sex spectacular, in living colour.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would rather pass my turn now and be on your list for a new subject when I will have a few questions to ask the President of CBC about finance.

sont concernés, il n'y aurait pas le moindre fondement aux accusations formulées dans cette lettre anonyme qui, soit dit en passant, ressemblait beaucoup à la lettre anonyme susmentionnée qui avait été adressée à M. Stanfield en octobre dernier.

M. McCleave: Si vous jetez les lettres anonymes à la poubelle, docteur Davidson, personne ne pourrait se plaindre.

M. Davidson: Si nous jetions les lettres anonymes à la poubelle, monsieur McCleave, et qu'on découvrirait plus tard que ces lettres anonymes contenaient des allégations qui étaient fondées, on nous attaquerait parce que nous n'aurions pas porté attention aux signaux de danger qui nous auraient été mis sous le nez.

M. McCleave: Qui vous attaquerait?

Une voix: Les députés.

Le président: Je pense que sur cette communication, nous pouvons lever la séance. Nous nous réunirons de nouveau ce soir à 20 h. dans cette salle pour continuer l'interrogatoire de M. Davidson.

SEANCE DU SOIR

Le président: Je pense que nous pouvons reprendre la séance. Nous traitons de la question des pots-de-vin, de la prétendue corruption, et ainsi de suite, au sein de la Société Radio-Canada. C'était au tour de M. Mongrain d'avoir la parole, et il devait être suivi de M. Dinsdale, sur le même sujet. Si personne d'autre ne veut poser de questions sur le même sujet, j'avais sur ma liste M. Osler, M. Broadbent et M. McCleave, mais aucun d'eux n'est présent.

M. Givens: Avant tout, qu'est-il arrivé à Jack et Jill? J'ai oublié.

Une voix: Ils ne se sont jamais rendus en haut de la côte.

M. Givens: Il n'a pas répondu à cette question.

Le président: Je pensais que nous étions convenus que, si Radio-Canada devait faire un film à ce sujet, cela deviendrait une spectaculaire histoire de sexe, haute en couleur.

M. Mongrain: Je préfère passer maintenant, monsieur le président, et être inscrit sur la liste pour un autre sujet; j'aurai alors quelques questions à poser au président de Radio-Canada relativement aux finances.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale?Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, are we ready to move into the general field of programming?The Chairman: No, this is specifically on the question of kickbacks, corruption and what not and then we will move on to the new subjects later.Mr. Dinsdale: Earlier today Dr. Davidson was talking about kickbacks and payola and all the other spectacular accusations that are made with reference to the activities of the CBC. He referred to the comments of Miss LaMarsh in this respect and indicated that she had repudiated some of the statements that she made in her book on a later television program, to the effect that she had nothing specific.

I am not going to labour this particular point. I have already indicated that perhaps it would be useful and helpful to look into this, not in any way connected with a witch hunt, but for the purpose of shooting down once and for all these accusations that have given rise to some of the comments about payola and the problem of separatism and so forth that have been raised in Miss LaMarsh's book.

If she has not repudiated the statements, as I thought Dr. Davidson indicated, in a television program it might be helpful if the steering committee and this Committee decided to leave the lady before us so that she can be specific. In other words, put up or shut up, because she is working in a medium that is somewhat different from mass media. The problems of radio and television communication are vastly different from those of the printed word. As Omar Khayyam said in his immortal lines;

The Moving Finger writes; and, having writ, Moves on: nor all your Piety nor Wit shall lure it back to cancel half a Line,
Nor all your Tears wash out a Word of it.

These things have been said and it might be helpful, not from the standpoint of a witch hunt, but from the standpoint of getting to the root of some of these accusations that obviously are of great concern to many members of this Committee.

Le président: Monsieur Dinsdale?M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, sommes-nous prêts à passer à la question de la programmation en général?Le président: Non, pour le moment, nous traitons spécifiquement des pots-de-vin, de la corruption, etc. Nous passerons aux autres sujets plus tard.M. Dinsdale: M. Davidson parlait plus tôt des pots-de-vin et de toutes ces accusations spectaculaires que l'on porte contre Radio-Canada. Il a fait allusion aux réflexions de M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh à ce sujet, et il a indiqué qu'elle avait lors d'une émission télévisée, retiré certaines des déclarations qu'elle avait faites dans son livre, disant qu'elle n'avait rien de particulier à déclarer.

Je ne vais pas insister là-dessus. J'ai déjà indiqué qu'il serait peut-être utile et commode d'examiner ce problème, non pas pour se lancer dans une chasse aux sorcières, mais pour mettre fin une fois pour toutes aux accusations qui ont donné lieu à certaines des réflexions relatives aux pots-de-vin, au problème du séparatisme, etc., faites dans son livre par M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh.

Si elle n'a pas retiré ses déclarations, comme je croyais que l'avait dit M. Davidson, lors d'une émission télévisée, il serait peut-être utile que le comité de direction et que notre Comité décident de faire comparaître ici M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh, pour qu'elle puisse préciser où vous voulez en venir ou taisez-vous, car elle se sert d'un moyen d'expression qui est un peu différent des grands organes d'information.

Les problèmes de communication à la radio et à la télévision sont bien différents de ceux de l'expression imprimée. Comme l'a dit Omar Khayyam dans ses lignes immortelles, le doigt écrit et, ayant écrit, poursuit son chemin: ni toute votre piété ni votre esprit ne le feront revenir pour effacer une demi-ligne, et toutes vos larmes n'effaceront pas non plus un seul mot.

Ces choses ont été dites, et il serait peut-être bon de faire ce que j'ai proposé, non pour partir à la chasse aux sorcières, mais pour découvrir la source même de ces accusations qui, c'est évident, importent énormément aux membres du Comité.

Mr. Stanbury: A loaf of bread, a jug of wine and Miss LaMarsh.

Mr. Dinsdale: My question was this, Mr. Chairman: Did Dr. Davidson say that Miss LaMarsh has indicated on a television program that there was really no substance to her comments in this regard?

Dr. Davidson: I did not use the word "repudiate", Mr. Chairman. I said that Miss LaMarsh herself on the television had said that she had really nothing to add in the way of information to what she had already said in her book; that what she said in her book was based entirely on conversations she had had with a number of people and from letters she had received while she was Minister, and that there was really no point in her being called before the Committee because she had nothing that she could tell them that was not already on record in the book she has written.

She went on beyond that to add that in any event the matters that she had reference to—presumably in her book—had occurred back in 1963, 1964 and 1965, in that period, and that so far as she was concerned she was not informed what changes, if any, had taken place since that time.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, it might be that she has changed her mind now with reference to her desire to attend before this Committee. It might enhance her political career.

The Chairman: I doubt it very much.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, if we were to do that I think we should find some way of getting a fee from McClelland & Stewart. Pierre Berton is on the CBC now. Judy has had her time on the CBC and they are both interested in McClelland & Stewart and it is a hell of a good way to sell books. I think it would waste a lot of our time, though.

The Chairman: I take it you have no desire to become a flack for Miss LaMarsh.

Mr. Osler: I would love to. If you want to waste two weeks at it, that is fine.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on this particular subject? Then perhaps, Mr. Osler, you would like to begin questioning on your major subject.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, this is a subject that I think we could approach with a great deal of solemnity, if we might, because it is a

M. Stanbury: Une miche de pain, une cruche de vin, et M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, ma question était la suivante: M. Davidson a-t-il dit que M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh avait, au cours d'une émission télévisée, indiqué qu'en fait il n'y avait pas de fondement dans les réflexions qu'elle avait faites à cet égard?

M. Davidson: Je n'ai pas utilisé le terme «retirer», monsieur le président. J'ai dit que M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh elle-même, à la télévision, avait déclaré qu'en fait, elle n'avait rien à ajouter sous forme d'information à ce qu'elle avait déjà dit dans son livre. Et ce qu'elle a dit dans son livre était basé sur des conversations, des entretiens qu'elle a eus avec différentes personnes, et découlait des lettres qu'elle avait reçues pendant qu'elle était ministre. Elle a déclaré qu'il n'y avait vraiment pas de raison pour qu'elle soit invitée à témoigner devant le Comité parce qu'elle n'avait rien à ajouter à ce qu'elle avait écrit.

Ensuite, elle a ajouté que, de toute façon les questions qu'elle avait mentionnées remontaient à 1963, 1964, 1965. Et qu'elle ignorait quels changements avaient pu se produire depuis.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, peut-être qu'elle aurait changé d'idée maintenant quant à son désir de comparaître devant le Comité. Ce pourrait être profitable à sa carrière politique.

Le président: J'en doute beaucoup.

M. Osler: Je pense que, si nous en arrivons là, nous devrions obtenir certains droits de McClelland et Stewart. Parce qu'après tout Pierre Berton a passé quelque temps à Radio-Canada, et M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh aussi. Tous les deux sont intéressés à publier des livres, c'est une bonne façon de faire de l'argent.

Le président: Est-ce que vous voulez faire de la publicité pour elle?

M. Osler: J'aimerais beaucoup cela. Si vous êtes prêt à gaspiller deux semaines.

Le président: Avez-vous d'autres questions sur ce sujet-là? Alors, monsieur Osler, si vous voulez commencer vos questions sur votre sujet principal.

M. Osler: C'est un sujet qu'il faut aborder avec le plus grand sérieux, parce que c'est un sujet qui touche la société Radio-Canada.

[Texte]

subject that I think touches the CBC and certainly touches the cinematographers. It is really the whole bit, I think, that worries a lot of us about broadcasting in Canada. I would like to kick it off by asking how badly does your revenue requirement inhibit the fulfilment of your mandate, and go on from there to questions of dumping, both in advertising and in ordinary shows, and this sort of thing.

Dr. Davidson: I think it is quite clear, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Osler, that we are not as free to program the CBC on television particularly, and particularly in the prime time periods, because of our requirements to raise a certain amount of money by way of commercial revenue as we would be free to program if we were not obliged to earn the money that we do earn from commercial revenue. As I think members of the Committee are aware, something like $1 in $5 of our gross expenditure budget is obtained from commercial advertising on the networks. This is a not insignificant portion of our total budget.

The bulk of this has to be earned in the prime time period, that is to say between the hours of 6 and 11 o'clock in the evening, and it is this requirement that gives to our evening programming the particular colour that the evening program has, because we have found from experience that commercial advertisers will go for a certain type of program and are not so anxious to go for other types of programs.

We have also, as a matter of CBC policy, withheld from commercial sponsorship a number of types of programs in the news and public affairs, religious, educational and related fields, and this therefore restricts very considerably our freedom of action in making changes which we would otherwise consider to be desirable in the program content on our networks, particularly in the prime time hours.

There is no way of measuring this, Mr. Osler, but when I tell you that something like 5 per cent at least—if I recall the figure correctly—of our gross revenues from commercial advertising are earned in the prime time hours you will see what an impact our policy of raising 20 per cent of our budget from commercial revenues has on our programming flexibility in that particular period of time.

Mr. Osler: Could you give us some idea of the costs of some of your prime time pro-les cinématographes. Il s'agit de cette question qui nous inquiète tous et qui a trait à la radiodiffusion au Canada. Donc je commence par vous demander jusqu'à quel point est-ce que le manque de revenus vous empêche de remplir votre mandat. Et ensuite je veux parler du dumping dans la publicité, dans les spectacles ordinaires et ce genre de questions.

M. Davidson: Eh bien, monsieur le président et monsieur Osler, je pense que c'est tout à fait clair. Nous ne sommes pas aussi libres de programmer des émissions, à la télévision en particulier, à Radio-Canada, et surtout pendant les périodes de forte écoute, à cause du besoin que nous avons de recueillir certaines sommes d'argent, que nous le serions si nous n'étions pas obligés de percevoir ce montant que nous touchons grâce à la publicité. Je pense que les députés doivent se rendre compte que un dollar sur cinq de notre budget de dépenses brutes provient de revenus commerciaux, c'est-à-dire de la publicité. Ce n'est pas une proportion insignifiante dans un budget.

Cet argent est gagné, en grande partie, pendant les meilleures heures d'écoute, c'est-à-dire entre 6 heures et 11 heures le soir. Et c'est cette exigence qui donne à nos programmes du soir la couleur particulière, l'intérêt particulier que possèdent les programmes du soir, parce que nous avons réalisé que les gens qui font de la publicité commerciale aiment certaines émissions mais ne tiennent pas tellement à certains autres genres d'émissions.

De plus, Radio-Canada a décidé de ne pas permettre que soient commanditées les émissions d'information, et les émissions religieuses et éducatives, ce qui restreint énormément notre liberté d'action en face des changements que nous aimerions apporter à notre programmation principalement durant les meilleures heures d'écoute.

Il est impossible de le mesurer avec précision, mais si je vous dis qu'environ 85 pour cent, si je me souviens bien, des revenus bruts que nous apporte la publicité provient de ces meilleures heures d'écoute, vous comprendrez quelle importance revêt cette obligation que nous avons d'obtenir 20 pour cent de nos revenus, par la publicité, par rapport à la flexibilité de la programmation durant cette période.

M. Osler: Pourriez-vous nous donner une idée du coût de ces émissions produites aux gramming that is brought from the United States, relative to what they would cost originally to the American advertiser?

Dr. Davidson: I am afraid that I have not got detailed information on this point, Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: What would an hour of "Bonanza" cost the advertiser in Canada compared with an hour of originally-produced Canadian programming, presuming that it could be as good and that it would be acceptable from a standard point of view?

Dr. Davidson: Do you mean comparing a purchased program like "Bonanza" with an original production?

Mr. Osler: Our evening programs are mostly purchased. I am appalled to find that most of our advertising is also imported, much of which is dubbed in. I caught one last night as an example. I forget at what hour it was.

Dr. Davidson: Are you sure of that last statement?

Mr. Osler: I am sure of it but I am not sure that I was listening to CBC when I did catch it, but it was definitely and clearly an American advertisement that had been dubbed in with American actors and actresses. My point is that I think the effect of it is that it is making the CBC almost—in loose terms—a subsidiser of American programming and a dumping ground for it, and it is becoming the same with their advertising.

The programs are dumped in Canada at a much less cost than they have been produced for. If the same trend occurs in advertising we have a community of interests between the CBC's fulfilment of its mandate and actors' frustrations about being able to get employment here, for instance.

Dr. Davidson: You say, Mr. Osler, that the American programs are dumped in Canada at a cost far less than the cost of production. I think that it has to be kept in mind that the American programs are produced on a basis which enables them to spread their costs over a much wider area of users than our programs can be spread over here, and if you were to make your calculation in terms of the unit cost of production, I would question whether it can be established that the American programs are being dumped in Canada at costs that are lower than their unit cost of production.

[Interpretation]

États-Unis et diffusées aux meilleures heures d'écoute par rapport à ce qu'il en coûterait aux commanditaires américains?

M. Davidson: Malheureusement, je crains de ne pas avoir de détails précis, à ce sujet, monsieur Osler.

M. Osler: Combien pourrait-il en coûter pour une émission de Bonanza à un commanditaire canadien par rapport à une autre émission d'une heure qui aurait été réalisée au Canada et qui serait d'aussi bonne qualité?

M. Davidson: Voulez-vous dire, comparer Bonanza à une production originale?

M. Osler: La plupart des émissions du soir sont achetées. Je suis renversé de voir que la plupart de notre commandite est également importée, et que la plupart des commerciaux sont doublés. J'en ai eu un autre exemple, hier, soir, mais j'oublie à quelle heure.

M. Davidson: Vous êtes certain de cette dernière déclaration que vous venez de faire?

M. Osler: J'en suis certain mais je ne sais pas si j'écoutais Radio-Canada quand je m'en suis aperçu. Mais de toute façon, c'était clairement une annonce américaine qui avait été doublée avec des acteurs et des actrices américaines. Donc voici mon argument: je pense que Radio-Canada en vient presque à subventionner la programmation américaine, qu'elle devient un endroit où ces émissions peuvent être déversées, et qu'une situation analogue se développe dans le domaine de la publicité.

Il s'agit, de fait, de dumping d'émissions, à un coût beaucoup moindre que leur coût de production. Si cette même tendance se poursuit dans la publicité, nous élargirons le fossé entre le désir de Radio-Canada de remplir son mandat et les plaintes des acteurs au sujet du manque de travail pour eux.

M. Davidson: Vous parlez de biens que l'on vend ici à un coût bien inférieur à celui de leur production. Il faudrait peut-être se rappeler que les programmes américains sont produits sur une base qui permet un étalement des coûts sur un secteur beaucoup plus vaste; tandis qu'ici, l'étalement de nos dépenses est moins considérable. Si vous établissez vos chiffres par coût unitaire de production, je doute qu'on puisse prouver qu'il y a du dumping au Canada, à des coûts inférieurs à celui de leur production.

[Texte]

The simple fact, of course, is that the U.S. market is so large the American producer is making his program product essentially for the American market. He can recover his costs. He can, first of all, reduce his unit costs because of the large number of potential. . .

Mr. Osler: Could you make it clear what you mean by "unit costs"?

• 2025

Dr. Davidson: If you are producing a program and are producing a number of copies for sale to a number of different stations. . .

Mr. Osler: For an audience of 200 million.

Dr. Davidson: . . . for an audience of 200 million, which is not necessarily a network audience but a program that is sold individually to individual stations or to individual groups of stations, you have a much greater number of potential purchasers and actual purchasers. Therefore, your unit costs per print or per right to use a program are reduced because you can spread your costs over a large number of purchasers. This makes it possible for you to bring your unit costs down to something, let us say, of the order of $5,000 to $15,000. I think this would cover the range of most purchases that we make of American programs, and Mr. Gilmore confirms that is the case.

Now, this is way below the cost at which we could produce a program to take that same amount of time, but in fairness it cannot be said that that is a cost for that unit of production that is below the cost to the American producer, because he has been able to spread his total production costs over a large number of sales. Do you follow me thus far, Mr. Osler?

Mr. Osler: I do.

Dr. Davidson: Therefore, if you can take the $5,000 to $15,000 range as the range within which we would normally purchase an American program, I think it would be fair to say that the cost of producing a Canadian program that would be its counterpart would normally be not less than twice as much as the cost of the American program and, depending on how elaborate the program was in Canada, it could be four times or even six times as expensive as the cost of the American program purchased by us.

Mr. Osler: The horrible thought I have, Mr. Chairman, is this that while the costs to the CBC are large and members of Parliament shy away from these costs, I have a sneaky

[Interprétation]

Il ne faut pas oublier que le marché américain est si vaste que le producteur américain produit essentiellement pour le marché américain. Il peut rencontrer ses frais. Tout d'abord, il peut réduire le coût unitaire en raison du grand nombre. . .

M. Osler: Qu'est-ce que vous voulez dire par «coût unitaire»?

M. Davidson: Si vous produisez une émission et que vous en imprimez plusieurs copies pour les vendre à différentes stations. . .

M. Osler: Pour un auditoire de 200 millions de personnes.

M. Davidson: . . . pour un auditoire de 200 millions de personnes qui n'est pas nécessairement un auditoire de réseau, mais une émission vendue à des stations individuelles ou à des groupes individuels de stations, le nombre d'acheteurs éventuels et d'acheteurs est beaucoup plus grand. Le coût unitaire d'impression ou de droit d'utilisation du programme est réduit parce que vous étendez le coût sur un plus grand nombre d'acheteurs. Ceci vous permet de réduire le coût entre $5,000 et $15,000. C'est à peu près ce que nous payons pour la plupart des émissions américaines que nous achetons.

Ce montant est beaucoup moins élevé que celui nécessaire à la production d'une émission de même longueur, mais en toute justice, nous ne pouvons dire que le coût unitaire est inférieur à ce qu'il en a coûté au producteur américain parce que lui, il a pu répartir son coût de production sur plusieurs ventes. Est-ce que vous suivez mon raisonnement?

M. Osler: Oui.

M. Davidson: Donc, en comparaison de ce prix de $5,000 à $15,000 que nous payons pour une émission américaine, je crois que nous pouvons dire que le coût de production d'une émission canadienne comparable serait au moins deux fois plus élevé et, selon son importance, il pourrait être 4 fois et même 6 fois plus élevé que le coût d'achat de l'émission américaine.

M. Osler: Les dépenses de Radio-Canada sont considérables et les députés en ont peur. J'ai l'impression que cette partie de son budget que Radio-Canada doit trouver dans des feeling that this requirement of 20 or 25 per cent—or whatever it is—of commercial time, is actually putting about $140 million a year or whatever it is—at least part of that amount—as a sort of subsidy for these programs, and if we did not have that requirement or if we were to spend a little more money we might get what we were looking for.

Dr. Davidson: I wish I could follow your argument on that, Mr. Osler, but quite frankly I cannot. I am willing to try if you will give me some more money.

Mr. Osler: I will use this as an example and my figures are not necessarily right, if Bonanza costs Canada about $8,000 or $10,000 a night and it has been produced in the United States for $100,000 or $120,000 per night, it is only because the taxpayers of Canada are putting up $140 million or $150 million a year to provide the facilities and General Motors are then able to use this piece of property of theirs in Canada at that cheap rate. If we were to be a little more courageous and dump an extra $20 million on top of our budget now...

Dr. Davidson: Now you are talking!

Mr. Osler: ...which would be about $1 per person—instead of $7 per person it becomes $8 per person; I will probably not get re-elected after this—then it might be that the CBC would not have to carry Bonanza. Now, Bonanza may be a good program. I am just using it as an example. It might be that they could then produce something that was Canadian which is really what we are looking for and which would give ACTRA people work, and so on. Do you follow me now?

Dr. Davidson: Yes, I follow you. If you be able to replace some of the American production of good Canadian programs you should be able to replace some of the American programming that we are now putting into prime time periods, and which we are putting into prime time periods at costs to us very considerably less than the amount of money that it would cost us to produce Canadian programs for those same periods.

I have to add that one would have to be very sure that the Canadian programs that you did produce were capable of attracting audiences and holding them, at least to a reasonable degree; otherwise you would be producing more Canadian programming at Canadian taxpayers' expense. You annonces commerciales force la Société à faire de ce $140 millions, ou quel que soit le chiffre, une sorte de subventions pour ces émissions. Si cette exigence n'y était pas ou si nous dépensions un peu plus d'argent peut-être que nous obtiendrions ce que nous désirons.

M. Davidson: J'aimerais bien pouvoir suivre votre raisonnement, mais je ne le puis. Mais je suis prêt à essayer si vous voulez me donner plus d'argent.

M. Osler: Permettez-moi un exemple même si mes chiffres ne sont peut-être pas exacts. Si Bonanza coûte au Canada environ $8,000 à $10,000 par soir et qu'on produit l'émission pour $100,000 ou $120,000 par soir c'est seulement parce que les contribuables canadiens fournissent 140 ou 150 millions par année pour fournir des installations que General Motors peut en jouir à si bon compte. Si nous étions un peu plus courageux, et si nous ajoutions environ $20 millions au budget actuel...

M. Davidson: Voilà ce que j'aime entendre.

M. Osler: ...au lieu de $7.00 il en coûterait $8.00 par personne pour faire vivre Radio Canada; je suppose que je ne serai jamais réélu après ce que je viens de dire mais à ce moment-là, c'est possible que Radio-Canada ne soit pas forcé de présenter Bonanza. Bonanza est peut-être une bonne émission. J'm'en sers simplement comme exemple. Radio Canada pourrait peut-être produire quelque chose de canadien et c'est ce que nous cherchons. Et cela donnerait du travail aux membres d'ACTRA. Me suivez-vous?

M. Davidson: Mais oui. Si vous pouvez investir plus d'argent dans la production de bonnes émissions canadiennes vous devriez être capable de remplacer certaines des émissions américaines actuellement présentées aux meilleures heures d'écoute, et que nous présentons à ce moment-là à un coût bien inférieur à ce qu'il nous en coûterait pour produire des émissions canadiennes que nous diffuserions à la place.

Mais je dois ajouter que nous devons nous assurer que les émissions canadiennes que nous produirons soient capables d'attirer les téléspectateurs et de les conserver; autrement, vous ne ferez que produire plus d'émissions canadiennes qui coûteront plus cher aux contribuables. Vous vous débarrasserez de vo would be getting rid of your American programming in prime time but you would also be losing audience to other networks and to private broadcasters who would continue to buy those same American programs which have a light entertainment value and which have very significant pulling power so far as their ability to attract an audience is concerned.

Mr. Osler: Perhaps your argument and my argument could be taken ad absurdum to either end. If your argument were valid all the way through, with the exception of news and public affairs, there should not be a CBC and if my argument were valid all the way through it might end up that we could export so much of the programming we produced that we would not have to do any subsidizing.

Dr. Davidson: I think, if I may say so, that the problem here is a problem of how far you can go in expecting the 21 million Canadians—all of whom contribute to the support of the CBC—to support a kind of programming which may be a very good kind of programming—which may be desirable from the point of view of all of us sitting around this table—but which, in competition with the programming put on by our competitors in the private broadcasting field will hold only a relatively small audience compared to what the private broadcasters will attract. Now if we are taking money from 21 million Canadians and are producing a kind of programming, however good it may be, that attracts and holds 2 million Canadians while 19 million Canadians are watching the private network, then we have some explaining to do to the Canadian taxpayers.

Frankly, this is why I would say, quite apart from commercial consideration, that we would have to consider ways and means—perhaps in a more limited way than we do at the present time—of utilizing certain non-Canadian programming which will attract and hold audiences at least long enough so that we can get them to watch the next program which will be a good Canadian program.

The Chairman: Is there a slipover effect from American programs? In other words, if I am watching "Bonanza" is there a good chance that I will stick and watch "The Way it Is"?

Dr. Davidson: That is definitely the case according to the advice that I have received from my officials. And that is why American programs which, on the basis of their record, have an assured pulling power so far as a émissions américaines mais vous perdrez votre auditoire parce que les autres réseaux et les radiodiffuseurs privés continueront d'acheter ces émissions qui ont le don d'attirer les téléspectateurs.

Mr. Osler: Poursuivons votre argument et le mien et procédons par l'absurde. Si nous poursuivons le vôtre à l'extrême, sauf pour ce qui est des émissions de nouvelles et d'affaires publiques, nous pourrions affirmer que Radio-Canada est inutile. Et en poursuivant le mien, nous pourrions affirmer qu'il serait possible d'exporter un si grand nombre d'émissions que nous n'aurions plus à subventionner les émissions américaines.

M. Davidson: Je vous dirai que je me demande jusqu'à quel point nous pouvons demander aux 21 millions de Canadiens (qui paient tous pour Radio-Canada) de subventionner une programmation qui serait excellente, qui serait souhaitable aux yeux de tous ceux qui sont autour de cette table, mais qui, en comparaison des émissions présentées par nos compétiteurs dans le secteur de la radiodiffusion privée ne retiendrait qu'un auditoire assez restreint comparativement à celui que les radiodiffuseurs privés attireront. Par exemple, si nous prenons de l'argent de 21,000,000 Canadiens et que nous faisons de la programmation, si bonne qu'elle soit, si elle retient 2,000,000 de Canadiens pendant que 19,000,000 autres regardent les réseaux privés, il va falloir donner des explications aux contribuables canadiens.

Franchement, c'est pour cette raison que nous devons, à part les considérations commerciales, d'après moi, considérer les voies et moyens, d'une façon un peu plus limitée que maintenant peut-être, d'utiliser une certaine programmation non-canadienne qui va attirer et retenir les auditeurs assez longtemps pour qu'ils regardent le programme suivant qui sera un bon programme canadien.

Le président: Les programmes américains ont-ils cet effet? En d'autres mots, si je regarde Bonanza, est-ce que cela veut dire que je resterai et que je regarderai The Way it is?

M. Davidson: D'après ce que me disent mes fonctionnaires, c'est exactement ce qui se produit. Et c'est pourquoi les émissions américaines, qui d'après leur fiche, assurent un gros auditoire, sont placés dans nos programmes à large audience is concerned, are put into our network programming at strategic points in time where, having built the audience, there is a reasonable chance that they will be able to carry over the audience to watch the Canadian program which follows immediately afterwards. This is why you put a "Red Skelton" on and you follow it with a "Wojeck" or a "Quentin Durgens". As a result of this you are successful in holding a substantial part of the audience, not only because you have put on a good Canadian program, but you have given them a large sized audience to hold, in the first place.

The Chairman: In other words, you have to sugarcoat the pill in order to get Canadians to watch Canadian programming?

Dr. Davidson: I would not use that language, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCleave: He does not swallow his own theory. You watch one but not the first one, so you do not swallow your own theory.

Mr. Davidson: Sometimes I watch them both.

Mr. Osler: You do not feel that it would be a good thing for the legislators to work towards trying in some way to inhibit or hold to a certain level American or foreign productions brought into Canada by charging a fee, putting on an extra tax or something of that nature?

• 2035

Mr. Davidson: I do not think that I could justify a position that said that we should contrive in an artificial way, such as would be involved in a restricted policy of imports of other visual aid materials, to create a vacuum for the purpose of ensuring that it is filled by Canadian programming. I think that Canadian programming, hopefully, under the best of circumstances should be produced on a basis that will ensure that it can stand on its own feet in competition with the best programming that can be found elsewhere. What this may require is a larger amount of money to make it possible to produce programs that are going to be capable of competing with whatever is available on other networks.

The Chairman: Well with the growth of cable and the speed at which the country is being wired, it seems to me that this argument to some extent falls down, because almost every country is going to be able to pick up these American programs at any rate and your use of the American programs, in un moment stratégique pour que l'on puisse garder l'auditoire et qu'il voit le programme canadien qui suit. C'est pour ça que nous mettons sur les ondes un programme de Red Skelton et le faisons suivre par Quentin Durgens ou Wojeck. Grâce à cela on peut retenir une grande partie de l'auditoire pour le programme canadien, non seulement parce que c'est une bonne émission canadienne, mais vous leur avez donné, en premier lieu, un vaste auditoire qu'il peuvent retenir.

Le président: En d'autres mots, vous devez dorer la pilule pour que les Canadiens regardent les émissions canadiennes?

M. Davidson: Je ne me servais pas de cette expression, monsieur le président.

M. McCleave: Il ne croit pas à sa propre théorie. Vous regardez une émission, mais non la première, alors vous ne croyez pas à votre propre théorie.

M. Davidson: Parfois je regarde les deux.

M. Osler: Vous ne pensez pas que ce serait une bonne chose que les législateurs s'efforcent d'empêcher ou de retenir à un niveau donné les productions américaines ou étrangères en chargeant un cachet, en demandant une taxe supplémentaire ou quelque chose de la sorte?

M. Davidson: Je ne pense pas que je pourrais justifier une position qui essaierait d'une façon artificielle, par exemple une politique de restriction des importations d'autres aides visuels, de créer un vide, afin que nous puissions le remplir avec des émissions canadiennes. Dans les meilleures des circonstances, les programmes canadiens devraient être réalisés de sorte à se trouver dans la meilleure posture possible. Cela demande plus d'argent pour arriver à réaliser des émissions qui pourront concurrencer les autres programmes sur d'autres réseaux.

Le président: Eh bien, avec le développement de la rediffusion par câble et la vitesse avec laquelle ces services s'étendent à travers le pays, il me semble que cet argument n'a aucune valeur jusqu'à un certain point, parce que presque tous les pays pourront capter ces émissions américaines et votre emploi de ces the ways you have described, is not going to last more than about a five year period.

Mr. Davidson: That may very well be the case.

Mr. Givens: There is an additional fact there. How far are we from production with the use of satellites?

The Chairman: Mr. Kierans will be coming here within two weeks to explain this to us.

Mr. Givens: I do not think that is the kind of satellite that he will be involved with.

Mr. Davidson: Are you talking about direct home?

Mr. Givens: Yes, and what it will do, as far as the CBC is concerned, with the kind of input you are going to have from the American stations? In other words, within the beck and call of every Canadian receiver there will be these American programs and they will be able to tune in and tune out the CBC.

The Chairman: They are now.

Mr. Givens: I am asking your opinion as to how this will affect us.

Mr. Davidson: As you are aware, Mr. Givens, we are talking about two kinds of satellite communications. One is communication by satellite to earth stations which receive but which are not themselves capable of transmitting to the individual home and require a transmitting station to be established alongside the earth station to pass the message or the signal into the individual receiving set in the home. It is this kind of communication satellite that the government has announced it is planning to put up and, according to announcements, the effective date for this is sometime around the year 1971 or 1972.

The direct satellite to home broadcast is a good number of years further off. I think the most optimistic estimate that we have heard suggests that it will be probably 10 years from now before you get satellite communication capable of directing a signal into the home. Now as long as you have the first kind of satellite communication, where the earth station is the intermediate link between what the satellite is broadcasting and the individual home receiving set, you can, if it is public policy to do so, control what signals are received by the earth station and passed on to the individual home. Once you get to the second stage, where satellite communication is capable of penetrating the individual home, I am not by any means so sure that it is émissions américaines, de la façon que vous avez décrite, ne durera pas plus qu'une période d'environ cinq ans.

M. Davidson: C'est probablement vrai.

M. Givens: Il y a ici un autre fait à considérer. Où en sommes-nous avec la production des satellites?

Le président: M. Kierans viendra ici nous en parler dans deux semaines.

M. Givens: Je ne crois pas qu'il s'agisse du même genre de satellites.

M. Davidson: Parlez-vous de la diffusion directe dans les foyers?

M. Givens: Oui. Qu'est-ce que cela fera en ce qui concerne Radio-Canada, en ce qui concerne l'invasion par les postes américains? En d'autres termes, ces émissions américaines seront à la disposition de tous les récepteurs canadiens, de n'importe quelle famille canadienne?

Le président: Ils le sont maintenant.

M. Givens: D'après vous, comment est-ce que cela va nous affecter?

M. Davidson: Comme vous le savez, monsieur Givens, nous parlons de deux genres de satellites. Il y a les communications par satellites sur stations terriennes qui ne sont pas capables d'émettre eux-mêmes aux foyers individuels. Il faut des émetteurs pour transmettre directement aux foyers. C'est le genre de satellites envisagés par le gouvernement. Et je crois que ceci est prévu pour l'année 1971.

Maintenant, le satellite direct, qui va directement aux foyers, ne viendra que dans quelques années. Les prévisions les plus optimistes sont de dix ans, avant que nous puissions avoir ces communications directement du satellite aux foyers. Mais lorsque vous avez la station terrienne, qui est le maillon intermédiaire entre le satellite et le foyer, alors, là, vous pouvez contrôler, si c'est la politique du gouvernement, les signaux qui sont reçus par la station terrienne et ensuite passés aux différents foyers. Maintenant, quand on arrivera au deuxième stade, à savoir, que le satellite pourra pénétrer les foyers directement, je ne suis pas sûr que nous puissions contrôler des choses telles que le contenu canadien des programmes qui fait partie de

Mr. Givens: So then it will really become dog eat dog at that stage.

The Chairman: Mr. Givens, if you are interested, there was a paper tabled in the House of Commons either yesterday or today on the Canada-Sweden position on satellites before the United Nations. You might consult that for the up-to-date information on it.

Are there further questions on this aspect?

Mr. Barrett: What Mr. Osler was suggesting actually was a licence on TV or radio which—

The Chairman: No, no. He was talking about a general tax increase to provide an extra dollar per head.

Mr. Osler: If you think this is still on the same tack, and it seems to me to be, would it be right to sum up by saying that we have a problem with the great preponderance of American things that can be produced, both films and advertising, and put into Canada at a cost that we cannot meet on the basis of quality?

Could you also tell us what percentage of the unions in the CBC are American dominated and how close to American parity are wage rates?

Dr. Davidson: I would have to get information for you on that. Mr. Picard could perhaps answer your question.

Mr. Laurent Picard (executive Vice-President Canadian Broadcasting Corporation): I do not have very much detail either. ARTEC and so on is somewhat different in Canada than in the United States. In respect of NABET it is much higher, perhaps in the range of 50 to 60 per cent.

Mr. Davidson: That is the comparability?

Mr. Picard: Yes.

Mr. Osler: I am sorry, but I did not hear you.

Mr. Picard: In terms of the technical union I think it is more than 50 per cent for NABET.

Mr. Osler: Of the unions that are American dominated?

notre politique, tel qu'établi présentement par les différents règlements de la CRTC.

M. Givens: Alors, cela deviendra réellement une concurrence à outrance.

Le président: Monsieur Givens, si ça vous intéresse, il y a un document qui a été déposé à la Chambre des communes hier ou aujourd'hui, concernant la position canadienne et suédoise au sein des Nations Unies, et vous pourriez consulter ce document pour avoir des renseignements à jour en la matière.

Y a-t-il d'autres questions à ce sujet?

M. Barrett: Ce que M. Osler suggérait réellement, c'était une licence pour la télévision ou la radio qui...

Le président: Non, et non. Il parlait d'une augmentation générale de la taxe pour fournir des revenus additionnels par tête.

M. Osler: Toujours sur la même question, nous avons un problème à cause de la prépondérance des émissions américaines, non seulement les films, mais il y a aussi la publicité, qui fait que nous ne pouvons pas fournir l'équivalent de ces programmes pour des raisons de coût. En ce qui concerne les problèmes de gestion, est-ce que vous pourriez nous dire quel pourcentage des syndicats au sein de Radio-Canada sont dominés par les États-Unis, et quel est notre niveau au point de vue de la parité?

M. Davidson: Il nous faudra obtenir des renseignements à ce sujet. Peut-être que M. Picard peut répondre à votre question.

M. Laurent Picard (vice-président exécutif, Société Radio-Canada): Je n'ai pas beaucoup de détails non plus. ARTEC et ainsi de suite n'est pas la même au Canada qu'aux États-Unis. En ce qui concerne NABET, le niveau est plus élevé, soit aux alentours de 50 à 60 p. 100.

M. Davidson: C'est la comparabilité?

M. Picard: Oui.

M. Osler: Je m'excuse, mais je n'ai pas compris.

M. Picard: Si vous parlez des syndicats techniques, c'est plus de 50 p. 100 quant à NABET.

M. Osler: Des syndicats qui sont dominés par les États-Unis?

[Texte]

Mr. Picard: If you are talking about salary range, yes.

Mr. Osler: I see, all right.

Mr. Picard: In the office workers union you have the same difference that you have for any other office workers union in Canada. In the technical field Mr. Gilmore says it is around 60 to 70 per cent, and this is the figure I had in mind. It is more than 50 per cent.

Mr. Osler: Of American parity?

Mr. Picard: Yes.

Mr. Osler: So that is not really a parallel problem. In other words, it is not parity in the same sense as the auto workers have been trying to achieve it in Canada or anything like that?

Mr. Picard: Oh, no.

Mr. Osler: Thank you. That covers that particular subject.

The Chairman: Well we are dealing generally with the financing of the CBC at the present time. Mr. Stanbury had his hand up at one point.

Mr. Stanbury: I will pass.

The Chairman: Then Mr. De Bané, Mr. Mongrain and Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Dinsdale: Finance?

The Chairman: Yes, this is the topic that Mr. Osler introduced. Mr. De Bané.

M. De Bané: Monsieur Picard, est-ce que je me trompe en disant que votre principale responsabilité est de vous occuper de l'administration de Radio-Canada? Est-ce que je pourrais vous demander quelles sont les principales rectifications que vous avez eu le temps d'entreprendre du côté de l'administration, depuis que vous occupez vos fonctions?

M. Picard: Quand vous dites que je suis responsable de l'administration, parlez-vous de l'administration des opérations de Radio-Canada?

M. De Bané: Oui.

M. Picard: Premièrement, je voudrais savoir exactement ce que vous voulez dire par le plan administratif, parce qu'il y a une réorganisation assez importante à Radio-Canada, en particulier la décentralisation au niveau des réseaux. Considérez-vous cela comme faisant partie du domaine administratif?

[Interprétation]

M. Picard: Si vous parlez des salaires, oui.

M. Osler: Je vois, très bien.

M. Picard: Dans les syndicats d'employés de bureau, vous avez la même différence que dans les autres syndicats d'employés de bureau au Canada. Dans le domaine technique, M. Gillmore, dit environ 60 à 70 p. 100 et c'est le chiffre que j'avais en vue. C'est plus de 50 p. 100.

M. Osler: De la parité américaine?

M. Picard: Oui.

M. Osler: Donc, ce n'est pas un problème parallèle, ce n'est pas la parité dans le sens des travailleurs dans le domaine de l'automobile.

M. Picard: Non.

M. Osler: Bon, très bien, ceci règle ce sujet.

Le président: Nous traitons des questions financières de Radio-Canada. M. Stanbury avait quelque chose à dire.

M. Stanbury: Je vais passer.

Le président: Alors MM. De Bané, Mongrain et Stewart.

M. Dinsdale: Finances?

Le président: Toujours sur cette question introduite par M. Osler. Monsieur De Bané?

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Picard, am I mistaken in saying that your main responsibility has to do with the administration of the CBC? May I put to you the following question: What are the main rectifications that you have had the time to undertake, from the administrative point of view, since you have taken up this job?

Mr. Picard: When you say that I am responsible for the administration, are you talking of the administration of operations at the CBC?

Mr. De Bané: Yes.

Mr. Picard: In the first place, I would like to know exactly what you mean by the administrative view point because the CBC has undergone a fairly important reorganization, particularly decentralization at the network level. Do you consider that as part of the field of administration?

[Text]

M. De Bané: Oui. L'esprit de ma question et les prémisses sont les suivants: je prends pour acquis, à tort ou à raison, qu'il était temps d'apporter certaines rectifications à l'administration financière et à la gestion de Radio-Canada. Une des prémisses sous-jacentes à ma question, c'est que vous avez entrepris d'assainir, selon des méthodes plus appropriées de management, l'administration financière et la gestion de cette entreprise de la Couronne. Je prends également pour acquis, à tort ou à raison, que vous avez déjà entrepris des réformes importantes pour assainir l'administration de Radio-Canada.

M. Picard: Oui...

M. De Bané: Évidemment, je serais très satisfait si vous brossez un tableau des rectifications que vous avez entreprises, de leurs résultats et de leurs buts.

M. Picard: Je ne sais pas si vous allez considérer ce que je vais dire comme des rectifications au sens strict, parce que le premier problème qui se pose est celui de savoir quel était vraiment le problème que Radio-Canada avait sur le plan de la gestion financière et sur le plan de l'administration, quelles sont les différences entre les deux et quel est aussi l'impact sur chacune de ces choses.

Avant de parler de gestion financière, j'aimerais dire un mot de la réorganisation générale, parce qu'elle a des implications générales et parce qu'elle définit, jusqu'à un certain point, les préoccupations actuelles de la gestion financière.

Dans l'administration générale, vous savez qu'on a décentralisé considérablement les opérations. Cette décentralisation s'est faite sur deux points. Premièrement, il y a la nomination de vice-présidents des réseaux, qui sont maintenant localisés à la tête des réseaux, c'est-à-dire à Montréal et à Toronto. Cette transformation pourrait être interprétée comme étant symbolique, en un sens, mais elle est beaucoup plus profonde que ça.

Simplement le fait d'envoyer des vice-présidents aux têtes des réseaux n'aurait rien changé fondamentalement dans l'administration de la Société. En réalité, c'est beaucoup plus qu'un symbole. Cela veut dire que l'organisation devient fondamentalement décentralisée et que les réseaux, comme tels, sont les points fondamentaux d'opération. Les autres départements du bureau chef deviennent des services vis-à-vis ces réseaux.

On a eu l'impression, et peut-être M. Davidson voudrait commenter là-dessus, que la Société était jusqu'ici trop fortement centralisée et que les décisions se prenaient, peut-

[Interpretation]

Mr. De Bané: Yes. The main point of my question and its premises are as follows: I take it for granted, rightly or wrongly, that it was time to make some rectifications to the financial administration and the management of the CBC. One of the underlying premises of my question is that you have undertaken to reorganize, according to the most appropriate methods of management, the financial administration and management of this Crown Corporation, I also take it for granted, rightly or wrongly, that you have already undertaken important reforms to make the CBC's administration more sound.

Mr. Picard: Yes...

Mr. De Bané: I should appreciate it very much if you could give us a general idea of the rectifications that you have undertaken, along with their goals and results.

Mr. Picard: I do not know whether you consider what I am going to say as, strictly speaking, rectifications, because the main problem at issue is to know what exactly was the problem that the CBC had to face from the financial management and administrative points of view, what the differences are between the two and also what the impact is on each of these.

Before talking about financial management, I would like to say a few words concerning the general reorganization because this has general implications and because this defines, up to a certain point, the present concern in the field of financial management. In the general administration, you know that we have greatly decentralized operations. This decentralization has to do with two different aspects. In the first place, there is the appointment of the vice-presidents for the two networks who are now at headquarters of both networks, that is to say in Montreal and Toronto. This transformation could be interpreted as being symbolical, in a way, but really goes much deeper than that.

Simply the fact of having a vice-president at the head of each network would not have changed anything fundamentally in the administration of the Corporation. Actually, it is far more than a symbol. This means that the organization is fundamentally decentralized and that the networks, as such, are the main operating centres. The other departments of the headquarters become services with respect to these networks. We have had the impression—and perhaps Mr. Davidson would like to comment on this matter—that the Corporation was hitherto too centralized, and that decisions were taken, perhaps, too être, beaucoup trop loin des lieux d'opération. Donc, cette décentralisation a, premièrement, en premier stage: nomination des vice-présidents qui sont aux têtes de réseaux, définition de l'autorité aux têtes de réseaux. Nous espérons que cette décentralisation va aussi se continuer à l'intérieur même des réseaux.

La raison pour laquelle je veux indiquer ceci avant de parler de gestion financière, c'est que, fondamentalement, s'il existe un problème en gestion financière, ceci est peut-être dû à une certaine confusion vis-à-vis des responsabilités et aussi entre l'autorité vis-à-vis les décisions administratives et la relation financière à cette autorité-là.

Alors la question concernant l'autorité, je ne pense pas qu'on puisse dire que Radio-Canada avait une mauvaise gestion financière comme telle, mais je crois qu'on peut dire qu'il y avait certaine confusion entre les décisions administratives et les décisions financières. De telle sorte que maintenant on essaie de définir des centres de responsabilités, centres de responsabilités non seulement quant aux décisions mais aussi quant à l'utilisation du budget. Nous avons fait une étude à ce sujet, qui n'est pas complètement terminée, mais qui doit l'être incessamment, j'attends le rapport, au cours de ce mois-ci. En fait, je devais l'avoir hier, mais il n'est pas encore rentré.

M. De Bané: Puis-je vous interrompre une seconde pour expliciter votre pensée? Lorsque vous parlez de centralisation de responsabilités cela veut-il dire, par exemple, que le directeur de la station de Radio-Canada, radiotélévision à Ottawa ou Québec, va avoir comme responsabilité l'administration de son budget ou si c'est une autre autorité qui va lui dire: «écoute ton budget cette année est tel et il faudra dans telle et telle mesure équilibrer ou marcher suivant telle ligne»? Je voudrais qu'on précise cela.

M. Picard: A long terme, l'orientation vers laquelle on se dirige et jusqu'à quel point on a au point de vue de centralisation, c'est quelque chose qu'il reste encore à définir au fur et à mesure que le processus se développe. Il serait souhaitable que vous discutiez d'un budget avec un centre d'opération, que ce soit par exemple, dans une région comme celle que vous mentionnez, que ce soit même une filiale de production, un niveau de production ou un service et, passé ce stade de la discussion, on établit des critères d'utilisation des guides d'évaluation et la personne est responsable de tout cela.

Alors, à ce moment-là, pour que cette responsabilité soit vraiment réelle, il faut que la far away from the scene of operations. So, this first stage in decentralization consisted in the appointment of two Vice-Presidents at the head of the two networks. We hope that this decentralization will also take place within the networks themselves.

The reason why I want to point this out before talking about financial management, is because, if there is a fundamental problem in the field of financial management it may be because there is a certain amount of confusion as far as responsibilities are concerned, and also with respect to administrative decisions and the financial relation to that authority.

Now, regarding the question dealing with authority, I do not think that we can say that the CBC had bad financial management as such, but I think there was some confusion between the administrative and financial decisions. So that now we are trying to define what are the centres where the responsibilities are to be taken not only with regard to decisions but also regarding the utilization of the budget. We have carried out a study on this matter which has not been fully completed but will be completed shortly. I expect to receive the report during this month. In fact, I was expecting it yesterday, but we have not received it yet.

Mr. De Bané: May I interrupt one moment to obtain some clarifications? When you talk about centralization of responsibilities, does that mean, for instance, that the director of the CBC radio and TV station in Quebec city or Ottawa will be responsible for administering his own budget or will another authority be telling him: "Well, your budget will be so and so this year, and you will have to balance your budget under such and such terms or operate according to such and such guidelines"? I would like to have this clarified.

Mr. Picard: In the long run, the orientation we shall take and how far we shall go with respect to decentralization is something we shall have to define as we go along. It would be preferable if you discussed a budget with an operations centre in, for instance, a region like the one you mentioned, or perhaps a production unit, a production level or a service and, once beyond this stage of the discussion, you establish the criteria and evaluation guides and then the person is made responsible for carrying all this out.

Now, for this responsibility to be truly real, the control over the budget and the surveillance du budget des dépenses soit du ressort de celui qui le fait, ce qui n'est pas exactement le cas ou du moins, ce n'est pas clairement défini présentement. Voilà un des problèmes à résoudre. Alors, avant même de pouvoir déterminer ces centres-là, il fallait tout d'abord commencer par développer un concept de décentralisation, parce que la gestion financière va suivre la décentralisation administrative. C'est pour cela que j'en ai parlé en premier.

Mais à la limite, non seulement sur le plan d'une région mais aussi sur le plan d'inactivité dans un réseau, par exemple, on essaierait de définir les objectifs, discuter d'un budget évidemment qui se discute avec les supérieurs qui veulent l'intégrer dans un budget général de la Société, et alors, définir des critères de succès et juger de l'administration de ce secteur à partir des relations entre le résultat et les critères de succès et les objectifs qui ont été définis. C'est ce vers quoi on s'en va. Je ne veux pas dire que cela n'existait pas dans la Société jusqu'à maintenant, mais pas d'une façon absolument explicite, je crois, et il y avait une certaine confusion, tout au moins dans la compréhension des responsabilités dans ce sens-là.

Deuxièmement, il y a des coûts qui sont fixes et indépendants de la décision d'un secteur particulier, mais qui sont des coûts de ce secteur en particulier. Un des problèmes présentement à l'étude est la façon dont ils doivent être traités et jusqu'à quel point ils doivent être traités comme si ce secteur particulier était un secteur indépendant, responsable de ces coûts fixes. Encore là, je ne veux pas dire que le concept actuel est mauvais, mais il y a certainement une confusion dans sa compréhension.

Ce qu'on veut faire, c'est clarifier à la fois le concept administratif et la gestion financière, comme je le disais au début, de façon à ce que l'administration puisse être évaluée en relation avec la gestion financière. De plus, on a créé, (cela avait déjà été élaboré au départ, des recherches avaient été faites), on a mis sur pied un système d'information qui a commencé à opérer au point de vue de la définition ou même de ses objectifs et de la réorganisation, et qui sera complété, qui sera en service, si on veut, dans deux ans, et qui donnera une information beaucoup plus précise, beaucoup plus détaillée et surtout beaucoup plus rapide.

M. De Bané: Avez-vous déjà une idée approximative du coût de ce nouveau service d'informatique?

expenditures must be in the hands of the person carrying it out, which is not exactly the case at the present time or, at least, it is not clearly defined at the present time. This is one of the problems that has to be solved.

So, before establishing these various centres we had to, first of all, start by developing a concept of decentralization because financial management will follow administrative decentralization. This is why I referred to it first.

But in the final analysis, not only from a regional point of view but also from the viewpoint of inactivity in a network, for instance, we would try to define objectives, discuss the budget with higher officials who want to integrate it within the general budget of the Corporation, and then establish criteria for achieving success and assess the administration of that sector on the basis of the relations between the results and the criteria for success and the objectives that have been defined. This is what we are moving towards. I am not saying that this did not exist in the Corporation before, but not in an absolutely clearly defined way, I believe, and there was a certain amount of confusion, at least in understanding responsibilities in that manner.

Secondly, there are costs which are fixed and independent from the decision of a particular sector, but which are costs of this sector in particular. One of the problems that we are dealing with at present is how to deal with them and to what extent these costs must be dealt with as though that particular sector were an independent sector responsible for these fixed costs. Here again, I am not saying that the present concept is a bad one but there is certainly some confusion in the way it is understood.

What we want to do is to clarify the administrative concept as well as the financial management, as I said at the outset, so that the administration might be assessed in relation to the financial management. Moreover, an information system has been set up—that had been developed at the outset, some research has been carried out—that began operating from the viewpoint of the definition or even its objectives and of reorganization and which will be operational two years from now, and which will be able to provide much more exact and far more detailed information, and especially which will be available far more rapidly.

Mr. De Bané: Do you have an approximate idea of the cost of this new data processing service?

[Texte]

M. Picard: Oui, ce n'est pas un coût fixe, il a été ajouté cette année, je pense qu'on a à peu près $150,000 c'est un nouveau coût, parce qu'il y avait quand même un service de l'informatique à la Société. L'an prochain, il sera un peu plus élevé que cela et il va grimper jusqu'à 1½ million, à un moment donné, pour après cela redescendre, le maximum devant être atteint dans trois ans, je pense. C'est à peu près tout. Lorsqu'on parle du système d'informatique, il y a une relation en général entre le coût de ce système et les opérations globales de la Société, c'est à peu près de cet ordre-là. Alors, en résumé, c'est ce que l'on a fait.

M. De Bané: Maintenant, je voudrais vous demander si vous avez eu un problème relativement à la vente des émissions. D'après vous, la Société Radio-Canada fait-elle tout ce qu'elle peut pour vendre les émissions qui peuvent être vendues?

M. Picard: Vous voulez dire vendre dans quel sens?

M. De Bané: A des commanditaires.

M. Picard: C'est-à-dire des émissions de Radio-Canada, télédiffusées par Radio-Canada.

M. De Bané: Et commanditées.

M. Picard: Et commanditées à Radio-Canada. A mesure que les informations arrivent, on essaie d'améliorer la position, pas simplement pour des raisons d'amélioration du système de vente, mais en partie pour des raisons du succès du réseau français cette année. Les ventes au réseau français ont augmenté considérablement.

M. De Bané: De radio ou de télévision?

M. Picard: De télévision.

M. De Bané: Celles de la radio ont baissé?

M. Picard: Mais la proportion radio et télévision, c'est cette dernière qui est le gros du morceau.

M. De Bané: Cela n'empêche pas que dans les recettes de la radio...

M. Picard: Vous parlez de 1967-1968, là?

M. De Bané: Oui.

M. Picard: Quand je vous dis qu'elles ont augmenté considérablement, il s'agit de 1968-1969.

M. De Bané: Ah bon.

[Interprétation]

Mr. Picard: Yes, it is not a fixed cost. It has been added this year. I think we have about $150,000, it is a new cost of course, because the Corporation already had a data processing service. Next year it will be somewhat higher than that and will climb to $1.5 million and then it will come down. The maximum should be reached three years from now, I think. That is about all.

When talking about the data processing system there is a general relation between the cost of this system and the overall operations of the Corporation. To sum it up, this is what we have done.

Mr. De Bané: Now, I would like to ask you if you have had a problem regarding the selling of programs? According to you, is the CBC doing everything possible to sell the programs which can be sold?

Mr. Picard: You mean to sponsors?

Mr. De Bané: Yes, to sponsors.

Mr. Picard: That is CBC programs that are broadcasted and televised by the CBC.

Mr. De Bané: And sponsored.

Mr. Picard: And sponsored at the CBC. As we get more information we try to improve the situation, not only to improve our selling system, but partly in view of the success obtained in the French network this year. The sales of the French network have greatly increased.

Mr. De Bané: For radio or television?

Mr. Picard: Television.

Mr. De Bané: Sales for radio have decreased?

Mr. Picard: As regards the proportion of radio vs. television, it is the latter which is the most important.

Mr. De Bané: Notwithstanding this, receipts from radio sales...

Mr. Picard: Are you talking about 1967-68?

Mr. De Bané: Yes.

Mr. Picard: When I say that they have increased considerably, I am referring to 1968-1969.

Mr. De Bané: I see.

[Text]

M. Picard: Peut-être que quelqu'un, mieux renseigné que moi, pourrait répondre. Du moment que vous avez vendu un certain nombre d'émissions de base et ainsi de suite, la vente devient une fonction très précise des ratings.

M. De Bané: Oui. Ce qui me préoccupe, moi, un profane, c'est de voir que Radio-Canada, n'a pas fait l'effort nécessaire pour vendre les émissions vendables. Si, malheureusement, je regarde le rapport de 1967-1968, à la page 54, nous voyons qu'au réseau français on a vendu moins de la moitié des émissions qui pouvaient se vendre, 47 p. 100, colonne 2 quatrième ligne, alors que dans l'entreprise privée, la vente des émissions est la force motrice. Ensuite je regarde à la page 80, par exemple, je vois, la troisième ligne en bas de la page, deuxième colonne, que les recettes publicitaires brutes de la radio, ont été à peu près de $945,000, soit à peine 10 p. 100 des frais de production et de distribution, et je me demande, monsieur Picard, s'il ne s'agit pas là du problème primordial auquel il faudra vous attaquer.

M. Picard: Oui, j'aimerais, sans trop entrer dans les détails, peut-être que quelqu'un qui s'occupe des ventes pourrait en parler, mais j'aimerais quand même faire certains commentaires là-dessus. Il existe un certain nombre d'émissions à Radio-Canada qui ne sont pas vendues, il en existe qui peuvent l'être mais qui sont difficilement vendables. Il y a justement dans la colonne trois, sur le programme anglais ici, ce qu'on appelle Programs available for sale and considered to be saleable per se. La vente de ces émissions est une fonction très directe du «rating». Vous parlez du réseau français ici, peut-être que M. David pourra faire un commentaire, à ce sujet. Le réseau français donc, a été, au cours des dernières années, surtout après l'arrivée sur les ondes du canal 10, dans une situation assez mauvaise sur le plan du «rating», mais pendant un certain temps, il a remonté la côte.

Ce que je disais tantôt en parlant de 1968-1969 par comparaison ici, c'est que, et vous en avez probablement entendu parler, le réseau français a eu un succès considérable avec ses programmes cette année, sans du tout changer la qualité, mais après avoir fait des rajustements et ainsi de suite, et ceci a changé de façon substantielle la situation des ventes au réseau français. Qu'un effort plus considérable soit nécessaire sur le plan des ventes, c'est fort possible, mais le critère, la variante déterminante, c'est le «rating» dans ce cas-là.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Picard: Perhaps somebody else who is better informed than I, could answer. Once you have sold a number of basic programs and so forth, selling becomes a very specific function of the ratings.

Mr. De Bané: Yes. What concerns me really, as a layman, is to see that CBC has not made enough efforts to sell the saleable programs. On page 54 of the 1967-1968 Report we see that the French network sold less than half of the programs which could be sold, 47 per cent, second column, fourth line. Whereas in the private sector, the sale of programs is the main element. Then on page 80, for instance, third line, bottom of the page, second column, I notice that the gross advertising revenue for radio was about $945,000, which is barely 10 per cent of production and distribution costs. And I was wondering, Mr. Picard, if this is not the most important problem that you will have to tackle.

Mr. Picard: Without going into the details I should like to make some comments on this—perhaps someone in charge of sales could discuss this further. There are a certain number of programs at the CBC which have not been sold and some which are very difficult to sell. In the third column of the English program here, there is what is called: "Programs available for sale and considered to be saleable per se". The sale of these programs is a very direct function of the ratings. Perhaps, in so far as the French network is concerned, Mr. Davidson could make some comments on this subject. The French network has been in a bad situation over the past few years from the viewpoint of ratings especially since Channel 10 has come on the air, although it has regained some ground since.

What I said earlier while referring to 1968-1969 by comparison, is that the French network, as you may have heard, had quite a lot of success with its programs this year, without having had to change the quality at all, but after having made adjustments and so forth, and this has changed the picture altogether as far as sales of programs are concerned at the French network. It is quite possible that we need greater efforts as far as sales are concerned, by the criterion, the determining variant is the ratings in this case.

[Texte]

M. De Bané: Je comprends que c'est le rating, mais si je me reporte à ce que M. Davidson a dit tantôt à M. Osler, à savoir: «Si nous prenons Bonanza à $15,000 et que nous ne produisons pas quelque chose à $150,000 c'est parce que Bonanza est populaire,» donc Radio-Canada s'intéresse au rating. Alors je me dis, peut-être que je comprends mal, nous sommes dans un cercle vicieux, c'est dire qu'on n'accorde pas au goût du public l'importance qu'il faudrait lui accorder.

M. Picard: Oui, je m'excuse, je me suis peut-être mal exprimé. Cette année, par exemple, on a parlé du problème du réseau anglais; ce qui me semble un élément important d'un problème comme celui-ci, c'est que vous ne transformez pas, dans un an, une situation. Ce qui est arrivé avec le réseau français, c'est que la position vis-à-vis l'auditoire du réseau français a augmenté depuis trois, quatre ans, elle est partie d'assez loin, et pense, elle a augmenté. Là vous avez la réflexion d'une année qui n'était pas celle où le succès est devenu apparent. Cette année, et en particulier avec les analyses d'auditoires le novembre et de janvier, le succès de Radio-Canada vis-à-vis son auditoire est devenu très apparent et à ce moment-là, la demande de la part des annonceurs pour l'achat d'émissions de Radio-Canada est devenue beaucoup plus forte, la situation a changé d'une façon importante.

Je ne sais pas, monsieur David, si vous pouvez donner des pourcentages, mais au point de vue des ventes d'émissions, quelle a été l'augmentation des ventes? Mais encore en janvier, il y a eu une dernière analyse d'auditoire et il y a eu encore un saut dans la vente des émissions. Alors c'est vraiment la situation qui existait au moment où la cote d'écoute se bâtissait, si on veut; les résultats se font sentir cette année, en 1968-1969, où la situation est différente.

M. Raymond David (vice-président et directeur général du réseau français de la Société Radio-Canada): Pour l'instant, nous vendons à peu près pour un demi million de plus que l'an passé et, évidemment, c'est pour l'année fiscale actuelle. Présentement, il y a des engagements des commanditaires qui nous conduisent à peu près à un surplus de $700,000 par rapport à l'an dernier dans l'année fiscale actuelle, à cause de la remontée de l'écoute bien sûr.

Dr. Davidson: Could I just add one other comment on Mr. De Bané's observations. He referred quite correctly, I think, to the point at for private broadcasters the "force motrice" is the sale of a program. That is not

[Interprétation]

Mr. De Bané: I understand that it is the ratings, but Mr. Davidson said a while ago to Mr. Osler as follows: "If we take "Bonanza" at $15,000 and we do not produce something that costs $150,000 it is because "Bonanza" is popular", therefore, the CBC is interested in the ratings. Then I say to myself, perhaps I do not understand, we are in a vicious circle, meaning that we do not give the public's taste the importance to which it is entitled.

Mr. Picard: Excuse me, maybe I did not express myself well. This year, for instance, we discussed the problems of the English network. What is important in a problem such as this one is that in one year, you cannot change a situation. What happened with the French network is that the position with respect to the French audience ratings has increased since three, four years. It had a good way to go, I believe, but has gained ground. That was the reflection of a year, wherein success was not apparent. But this year, and particularly, with the various ratings analyses of November and January that have been taken, the success of the CBC with respect to its audience became quite apparent, and thereafter demand by sponsors for the purchase of CBC French programs increased greatly, thus causing an important change in the situation.

Mr. David, I do not know whether you are in a position to give me some figures. Can you tell me what has been the increase in the sale of programs? In January, another ratings analysis was held and there has been another great increase in the sale of programs. So this really represents the situation that existed when the ratings were being built up. The results are being felt this year, 1968-1969, in which the situation is different.

Mr. Raymond David (Vice-President and General Manager, French Network, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation): At present, we are selling about half a million more than last year and, obviously, this refers to the present fiscal year. At the present time, we have commitments from sponsors which lead us to a surplus of about $700,000 in relation to last year, for the present fiscal year, thanks of course to increased ratings.

M. Davidson: Puis-je ajouter un commentaire aux observations de M. De Bané. Il se référerait très justement au point que pour les stations privées, la vente est la force motrice. Mais cette question des ventes n'est the "force motrice" so far as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is concerned, either on English or French networks. We are committed much more heavily than are the private broadcasters to public service broadcasting. If the "force motrice" as far as our programs was concerned were to be the selling of programs we would have quiz programs, we would be giving away monetary prizes, we would have hot-line programs, we would have disc jockey programs on radio.

As a matter of policy we do not program in that way and, unfortunately, because we program in the way that we do program, commercial advertisers are not as interested in buying spot announcements or sponsorship of the kinds of better quality program that we think we are producing, particularly on the radio. I happen to believe, and I say this publicly, that our radio programming is exceptionally good on the CBC in Canada. I may say, even if I make enemies for myself in the CBC, the radio programming is more consistently good than our television programs.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Dr. Davidson: Unfortunately, people do not listen to our excellent radio programming in the numbers that they should. Our listening audience on radio programming, with the quality as good as it is, is disappointingly small. And this is the dilemma that we face, Mr. De Bané. The more we endeavour to produce quality programming, the more we face the difficulty that, good as the programming may be, for the kinds of audiences that appreciate this kind of programming, it is not, despite what we say here, a salable commodity in practical terms.

It may theoretically be salable, and the breakdown that is shown on page 54, if I may just come back to that for a moment, the breakdown on page 54 is a three-fold breakdown that shows, first, those programs which we are not willing to sell because they are public service broadcasting. They are new; they are controversial. We exclude them from sale. Then we have the programs that we are willing to sell and we are successful in selling. And finally we have a category of program that is theoretically salable, and on the sale of which we do not put any ban. But in practice it is not practical to think of selling that particular program because there is really no commercial market for it.

Mr. De Bané: As you have admitted, the number that I quoted was the one related to the programs that you consider can be sold.

pas la force motrice en ce qui concerne Radio-Canada, ni au réseau français, ni au réseau anglais. Nous sommes engagés d'une façon bien plus poussée à la diffusion d'un service public, si la force motrice, en ce qui nous concerne était la vente des programmes, nous aurions des programmes de quiz, on donnerait des prix, il y aurait des tribunes libres, nous aurions des disques-jockeys.

Notre politique est de ne pas concevoir des tels programmes et malheureusement à cause de la façon d'établir nos programmes, les commanditaires ne sont pas aussi nombreux. Ils ne sont pas intéressés à ces programmes de meilleure qualité que nous voulons produire, ainsi notre programmation radiophonique est particulièrement de qualité, il me semble. Je me ferais peut-être des ennemis mais je dirais que la programmation de la radio est souvent meilleure qu'à la télévision.

Une voix: Bravo.

M. Davidson: Malheureusement, les gens n'écourent pas nos excellents programmes à la radio dans la mesure où ils le devraient. Nos programmes à la radio sont fort peu écoutés et voilà le dilemme auquel nous avons à faire face. Plus nous essayons de produire des programmes de qualité, plus nous avons à faire face à des difficultés; aussi intéressants que soient ces programmes, pour le genre d'auditeurs qui les apprécie, il n'en reste pas moins qu'ils ne sont pas vendables.

Ils le sont uniquement du point de vue théorique. La répartition à la page 54 démontre la classification en trois catégories des programmes. Premièrement, les émissions que nous ne voulons pas vendre. Ce sont les nouvelles, les émissions d'affaires publiques, nous les excluons de la vente. Ensuite, nous avons les émissions que nous avons mises en vente et pour lesquelles nous avons obtenu un succès commercial. Troisièmement nous avons des émissions qui sont théoriquement vendables et dont nous ne décourageons pas la vente, mais qui, en pratique, ne sont pas vendables parce qu'il n'y a pas vraiment de marché commercial pour ces dernières.

M. De Bané: Le chiffre que j'ai cité était celui qui a trait aux programmes que vous considérez comme vendables. Permettez-moi

[Texte]

May I continue in French, because I am more at ease in French.

Je reprends exactement ce que vous avez dit à M. Osler. Il est inutile de faire une émission belle en soi, mais que personne ne regarderait. Vous constatez vous-même que les émissions de radio ont beau être exceptionnelles, j'ai vu certains postes de radio de Radio-Canada, qui ont un auditoire d'à peine 4 p. 100. S'il est vrai que votre but doit être différent de celui des postes privés, il n'en reste pas moins que, malheureusement, d'après les chiffres de l'année passée, ne récolter que 10 p. 100 des frais de production et de distribution, signifie, pour moi, soit un manque d'effort pour vendre des émissions, soit une production d'émissions qui ne correspondent pas au public. Vous avez raison de dire que Radio-Canada ne devra jamais avoir les mêmes buts que l'entreprise privée, mais je trouve que 10 p. 100 seulement est absolument insuffisant.

M. Picard: Je voudrais simplement faire une remarque qui ne contredit pas ce que vous venez de dire, monsieur DeBané. Vous regardez le coût et le revenu du service de radio et vous parlez de 10 p. 100.

Que ferait une station privée? Pour devenir rentable, une station privée ferait deux choses: premièrement, elle baisserait ses coûts considérablement en n'utilisant pas, par exemple, les orchestres symphoniques ou des choses semblables. Ceci revient au problème soulevé tantôt par M. Osler et au mandat que nous avons vis-à-vis la vie artistique. Elles pourraient donc baisser leurs prix considérablement et, deuxièmement, elles augmenteraient en même temps leur revenu de la publicité de deux façons.

La première, c'est d'avoir une politique de vente plus agressive et une production plus directement liée à quelque chose qui puisse être vendu. La deuxième, si on prend justement l'exemple d'un orchestre, c'est de créer des disponibilités de vente plus grandes.

Par exemple, si vous avez un orchestre qui joue à la radio, premièrement, vous devez payer l'orchestre pour son concert, et, deuxièmement, le temps pendant lequel un orchestre symphonique joue, vous ne faites pas de publicité. Si vous faites jouer un orchestre symphonique pendant une heure, il n'y a pas un sou de publicité qui se fait, de telle sorte que, si vous regardez ces deux mécanismes, il est évident qu'il y a un moyen de rendre rentable une opération en ne faisant aucune dépense inutile. Alors, la relation de 10 à 1 de continuer en français parce que j'y suis plus à l'aise.

I am repeating exactly what you said to Mr. Osler. It is useless to produce a good program in itself that nobody will watch and you, yourself, are finding out that radio broadcasts may be excellent, still CBC radio stations have an audience of less than 4 per cent. If it is true that your goal must be different from that of the private stations, the fact remains that, unfortunately, according to last year's figures, to collect only 10 per cent of the cost of production and distribution means, for me, a lack of effort to sell programs, or else you did not produce programs that satisfied the public. You are right when you say that the CBC can never have the same goals as private enterprise, but still I find that only 10 per cent is really not enough.

Mr. Picard: Let me just point out something that does not contradict what you said, Mr. De Bané. You consider the cost and the revenues of the radio services and you talk about 10 per cent.

What do you expect a private station would do? To become profitable, a private station would do two things. First of all, it would decrease its costs considerably by not using symphonic orchestras, for instance, or such things. Which brings us back to the problem brought up by Mr. Osler and the mandate we hold with respect to the artistic field. They could thus decrease their rates considerably and, secondly, they would increase at the same time their income from advertising in two manners.

The first manner is to have a more aggressive sales policy and a production which is more directly linked with something that is saleable. The second one is, take the case of an orchestra, for instance, to create greater opportunities of sale.

For instance, say you have an orchestra playing on the radio. First of all, you have to pay this orchestra to play. Secondly, while the symphonic orchestra is playing you are not doing any advertising. If you have one hour of symphonic orchestra, you do not take one cent's worth of advertising. So, if you consider these two factors, you see that you can make an operation profitable by making no unnecessary expenditures. Then the ratio of 10 to 1 may go down to 4 to 1, by reducing cost, by not hiring orchestras and things like baissera peut-être à 4 à 1, en réduisant les coûts, en n'engageant plus d'orchestres, etc. Ce sera donc plus rentable par les disponibilités de temps et par les types de programmes dont vous nous parliez.

M. DeBané: Je veux vous donner mon impression.

M. Picard: Pourrais-je dire une autre chose?

M. DeBané: Oui, excusez-moi.

M. Picard: Lorsque vous parlez du 4 p. 100, je suis d'accord avec vous pour dire que dans certaines stations de Radio-Canada, on a un auditoire beaucoup trop faible pour ce qui est de la radio. Dans une grande ville où il y a quinze, vingt ou vingt-cinq postes de radio, on ne peut pas penser à des parts de marché de l'ordre de 35 à 40 p. 100.

M. De Bané: Je vais vous donner mon impression et j'espère me tromper. Je pense, à tort ou à raison, que la qualité pourrait être sensiblement la même si l'on administrait, si l'on gérât d'une façon beaucoup plus stricte.

Je vais vous donner un exemple. Moi, je viens de la ville de Québec. Je ne m'y connais pas dans votre métier, mais je remarque une chose à titre de profane. Radio-Canada a construit il y a un an ou deux à peine un édifice pour se loger. Or, que voit-on lorsque l'édifice est terminé? On y loge le service de télévision et le service de radio reste locataire de l'endroit où il était. Et pourtant, cet édifice a été construit à beaucoup plus grands frais que celui du poste privé de télévision, lequel produit infiniment plus d'heures de télévision.

Je vous donne un deuxième exemple. Le poste privé de télévision a infiniment moins de personnes qui travaillent au micro que le poste de Radio-Canada qui commence à produire, mais qui, jusqu'à dernièrement, était un poste de relais et qui avait un personnel beaucoup plus nombreux au micro. Que voyait-on à l'émission Aujourd'hui? Lorsqu'une personnalité de la ville de Québec devrait être interviewée, on envoyait l'interviewer de Montréal à Québec, alors qu'on aurait dû prendre quelqu'un de l'équipe de Québec.

Je suis d'accord que vous ne pourrez jamais atteindre la rentabilité des postes privés, parce que là n'est pas votre but. Mais, pour un profane, j'ai l'impression qu'on est loin d'administrer d'une façon très stricte.

M. Picard: Oui...

that. It will thus be more profitable thanks to the availability of time and the types of programs you mentioned.

Mr. De Bané: Let me give you my impression.

Mr. Picard: May I add something else?

Mr. De Bané: Yes, excuse me.

Mr. Picard: When you talk about this 4 per cent, I agree with you that for certain stations at the CBC, the audience is much too small with regard to radio. In a big city where there are 15, 20 or 25 radio stations, you cannot expect to have a share of the market to the order of 35 to 40 per cent.

Mr. De Bané: I will give you my own impression, and I hope I am wrong. I believe, rightly or wrongly, that the quality could be pretty well the same if you were much stricter in your management.

I will quote an example. I come from Quebec City. I do not know much about your field, but I note one thing from an outsider's point of view. The CBC, only one or two years ago, built a building to house its own services. Once the building is completed, what do we see? You have the whole television service there while the radio service is still renting the former building which it used to occupy. And yet, this building was constructed at a much greater cost than that of the private television station which produces far more hours of television.

A second example. The private television station has far fewer people working at the microphones than the CBC station which is just beginning to produce, but which until recently, was just a relay station that had far more people at the microphones. What did we see now on the "Aujourd'hui" program? When someone from Quebec City had to be interviewed, an interviewer was sent from Montreal to Quebec City while you could perfectly well have used the services of someone from the team in Quebec City.

I agree that you will never be able to become as profitable as private stations because this is not your goal. But, as an outsider it seems to me that your management is far from being carried out as strictly as it should.

Mr. Picard: Yes...

[Texte]

M. De Bané: Je vais vous donner un exemple enfantin. J'ai demandé dernièrement à quelqu'un de Radio-Canada, qui voyageait beaucoup à l'étranger si on lui a déjà recommandé, lorsque cela était convenable de prendre Air Canada. Il m'a répondu: «On ne me l'a jamais dit et d'ailleurs, je ne l'ai jamais pris.» Ce sont de petits exemples qui frappent un profane qui n'a pas accès à l'administration quotidienne.

M. Picard: Je ne suis pas dans une position pour répondre aux détails de chacune de ces questions. Il y a un certain nombre de variables autres que celles dont j'ai parlé jusqu'ici, et en particulier, nos contrats avec les syndicats, qui amènent aussi une certaine situation dans l'administration, qui n'est pas la même que dans un poste privé où il n'y pas de syndicat.

M. De Bané: Est-ce que j'ai raison de dire que les contrats que vous avez signés avec les syndicats ceux-ci n'ont pas réussi à les signer avec des postes privés?

M. Picard: Il y a très peu de postes privés qui sont syndiqués. Ceci étant dit, monsieur De Bané, je serais prêt à admettre qu'il y a un grand nombre de ces détails-là qu'il va falloir corriger avec le temps. Il y en a beaucoup d'autres que vous pourriez indiquer. Quelle est l'ampleur exactement? Je pense que le premier pas est une clarification générale des responsabilités et des coûts. Ensuite, une partie de ces choses pourront se régler d'elles-mêmes. Je ne pense pas pouvoir nier un certain nombre d'inefficacités comme celles dont vous avez parlé.

M. De Bané: May I ask a last question?

The Chairman: A last question.

M. De Bané: Au point de vue de l'appropriation du budget, certaines choses me frappent. Je vais vous donner un exemple. Aux États-Unis, l'équipe de CBC est beaucoup plus nombreuse que celle de Radio-Canada. Et pourtant, il est beaucoup plus facile pour CBC de couvrir les États-Unis, qui peuvent facilement se brancher, que pour Radio-Canada qui, évidemment, ne peut pas se brancher sur le poste américain.

Je vous donne un exemple. Le soir des élections américaines, CBC, avec raison d'ailleurs, s'est alimenté beaucoup sur les réseaux américains, tandis que Radio-Canada a dû couvrir seule la soirée en question. Les gens de Radio-Canada à New York, que je connais, m'ont dit que CBC avait quinze fois plus

[Interprétation]

Mr. De Bané: I am going to give you a childish example. The other day I asked somebody from the CBC who travels widely abroad, if it was ever recommended to him to use, where it was feasible, the services of Air Canada. He replied: "No, this was never mentioned to me and I never did it". These are minor examples which strike an outsider who has no access to the daily operations of management.

Mr. Picard: I am not in a position to answer in detail to each one of those questions. There are a number of other variables beside those about which I have spoken thus far, and in particular, our contracts with unions which creates a different situation inside the administration which is not the case in private stations that have no unions.

Mr. De Bané: Do you mean that those unions did not succeed in signing the same agreements with private stations that they signed with you?

Mr. Picard: There are very few private stations that are unionized. Having said this, Mr. De Bané, I would be ready to admit that many of these details will have to be corrected with time. There are many others that you could point out. What is the extent of this? I think the first thing to do is to clarify generally the various responsibilities and the costs. Then part of these matters can iron themselves out. I do not think I can deny a certain amount of inefficiency such as the examples you have brought up.

M. De Bané: Puis-je poser une dernière question?

Le président: Une dernière question.

Mr. De Bané: Regarding the allocation of your budget, a few things strike me. I will give you an example. In the United States, the CBC English network team is much bigger than that of the French network of the CBC. Yet, it is much more easy for the CBC English network to cover the United States, since they can link up easily with these networks than for the CBC French network which, obviously, cannot link up with an American station.

For instance, on the evening of the American elections, the CBC, with good reason, fed to a considerable extent on American networks, while the CBC French network had to cover that evening by its own means. I was told by the CBC French network people in New York that the CBC English network had d'effectifs que Radio-Canada pour cette soirée-là.

Parce que Radio-Canada, service français, est un centre de production plus important encore que CBC, je me demande si on ne devrait pas partager le budget d'une façon différente.

Dr. Davidson: On your last comment, Mr. De Bané, I am not prepared to say that we should endeavour to establish any mathematical balance between the amount of appropriations within our budget that are to be allocated to the French network or the English network, because we have, in fact, a vastly different situation existing in the territory that is presently covered by our French network and the territory that is presently covered by our English network.

At this morning's session, Mr. De Bané—I think you were not able to be present—I made the distinction between the genuinely nation-wide character of our English network where there is, in fact, a coast-to-coast network, and the mythical character, if I may say so, of our French nation-wide network where we have a French network centred essentially on Quebec with tentacles moving out into Ontario and New Brunswick and a few outposts beyond that.

This has a very direct impact on the allocation of funds because we have, in fact, to consider on the English language side of our operations, the fact that we have a network in Toronto corresponding to the French network in Montreal, and here the allocation of funds as between these two networks, as such, is very much on a par. But we have, in addition to that, the problem of production centres in the English language in places like Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Halifax, St. John's, and Corner Brook, and the transmission costs that are involved in transmitting our network programs produced in Toronto into these centres.

It is inevitable, as a result of this, that the costs of the regional broadcasting which are essentially English, the cost of our regional production centres should be larger, when added to the Toronto network cost, than the cost of the French network alone which does not have these regional centres of production.

Among our priorities, to rectify this situation, we are planning this year to add a regional production centre for the French language in Moncton, New Brunswick. We are already in the process of acquiring the property and we expect that before the end of this calendar year we will be in business, produc-15 times more personnel than we had for that particular evening.

Since the French network of the CBC is a more important production centre even than the CBC English network, I wonder if the budget should be divided differently.

M. Davidson: Au sujet de votre dernier commentaire, M. De Bané, je ne suis pas du tout prêt à admettre que nous devrions essayer d'établir un équilibre mathématique entre les affectations à l'intérieur de notre budget, entre la part du réseau français et celle du réseau anglais. Parce que, nous avons, en fait, une situation qui est extrêmement différente dans le cas du territoire couvert actuellement par notre réseau français et le territoire couvert présentement par notre réseau anglais. A la séance de ce matin, à laquelle vous n'avez pu assister, j'ai établi la distinction entre la nature vraiment nationale de notre réseau anglais. J'ai dit que notre réseau allait vraiment d'un océan à l'autre, alors le caractère de notre réseau français national est plutôt mythique. En effet, nous concentrons nos services de langue française surtout dans le Québec et nous avons des tentacules qui s'étendent en Ontario et au Nouveau-Brunswick et quelques postes d'avant-garde dans des endroits plus éloignés.

Ceci dit, cette situation a une répercussion directe sur la répartition des fonds parce que nous avons effectivement, nous devons tenir compte du fait que nous avons un réseau à Toronto qui correspond au réseau français de Montréal. A cet échelon la répartition est faite quasiment à part égale, mais nous devons aussi tenir compte des centres de production du réseau anglais à des endroits comme Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Halifax, St. John's et Corner Brook. Il y a aussi nos frais de transmission engagés dans la transmission de nos programmes produits à Toronto jusqu'à ces centres qui entrent en ligne de compte.

Il est alors inévitable que le coût de la production régionale, essentiellement anglophone, est plus élevé lorsqu'on y ajoute les coûts du réseau de Toronto, tandis qu'au réseau français, vous n'avez pas à tenir compte des centres régionaux de production.

Parmi nos priorités, nous avons l'intention cette année d'ajouter un centre de production pour le réseau français à Moncton au Nouveau-Brunswick. Nous sommes déjà en train d'acheter le bâtiment et nous avons l'intention, avant la fin de l'année en cours, d'être à même d'entreprendre la préparation de cering some programing for the first time at that regional production centre in Moncton. This is an indication of the things that we will have to do, if we are going to convert the nucleus, the heart of our French network, into a truly nationwide French language network. As the regional centres of production and transmission of French language broadcasting are added and find a place in the budget, you will see the total balance being rectified as between total French language broadcasting expenditures and total English language broadcasting expenditures.

May I just give you one interesting figure to indicate the point that I have made. I have a table before me which shows our television program costs for 1967-68. This is broken down into network English and network French, and the network English costs amount to some $33.3 million. The French network costs amount to $30.6 million. If you were to stop there, you would say that there is something like a reasonable equality, mathematically, between the French and the English network broadcasting.

But one has to go beyond that and when one looks at the local English station production costs, that is to say, all of the regional production centres I have mentioned across the country, the costs here amount to almost $18 million, whereas the production costs for local French stations amount to less than $2 million because, frankly, we do not have any costs and therefore you cannot have costs in respect to local stations that do not exist. It is here that the imbalance arises in the relative allocation of funds as between...

Mr. De Bané: That, of course, cannot be corrected?

Dr. Davidson: That can only be corrected as and when we extend our French language production services and our French language broadcasting services to those parts of the country which lack them at the present time.

Mr. De Bané: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, could Mr. Davidson go further and...

The Chairman: Mr. Picard?

M. Picard: Je veux juste ajouter un deuxième élément général à propos de la question particulière des correspondants dont vous parliez. Tout d'abord, ces correspondants ne sont pas attachés aux réseaux, ce qui s'appelle chez nous, le réseau régional. Mais il y a des choix faits par les réseaux quant au type de programmation qu'ils considèrent le plus tains programmes en utilisant pour la première fois les installations de Moncton. Ceci vous montre concrètement les choses que nous avons à faire. Si nous devons convertir le cœur même de notre réseau français et finalement l'étendre pour en faire un réseau vraiment national, les centres régionaux de production et de diffusion des émissions en langue française seront ajoutés au budget, on verra alors s'équilibrer et finalement se corriger les dépenses totales du réseau français et celles du réseau anglais.

Puis-je vous citer maintenant un chiffre intéressant qui illustrera mon argument. J'ai devant moi un tableau qui montre quels sont les coûts de nos programmes de télévision pour la période de 1967-1968. On répartit les coûts en deux catégories: «Réseau français» et «Réseau anglais». Réseau anglais: le coût s'élève à quelque 33.3 millions de dollars. Réseau français: le coût s'élève à 30.6 millions de dollars. Si vous vous arrêtez là, naturellement, vous verrez qu'il y a apparemment, une certaine égalité mathématique entre les réseaux français et anglais.

Mais, il faut aller plus loin. Et lorsqu'on considère les coûts de productions locales anglophones, c'est-à-dire, les centres régionaux que j'ai mentionnés, à travers le pays, ici les coûts s'élèvent à presque 18 millions de dollars, tandis que les coûts de production pour les postes francophones locaux représentent moins de 2 millions de dollars, parce qu'en fait on n'en a presque pas. Vous ajoutez des coûts qui n'existent pas, en fait, et c'est ici que vous réalisez le déséquilibre de la répartition des fonds.

M. De Bané: Vous ne pouvez redresser la situation?

M. Davidson: Oui, au fur et à mesure qu'on va étendre nos services de langue française à travers le pays.

M. De Bané: Merci, monsieur le président.

M. Osler: Est-ce que M. Davidson peut aller plus loin et...

Le président: Monsieur Picard?

Mr. Picard: I just wish to add a second general factor with regard to the specific question of the correspondents about whom you spoke. First of all, these correspondents are not attached to the networks, to what we call the regional networks. But choices are made by the networks with respect to the type of programming which they consider important pour eux, en fonction de leurs besoins, de leurs demandes, et de leurs auditoires. Les choix du réseau français ne sont pas les mêmes que ceux du réseau anglais. Je pense en particulier, que le réseau français, du fait qu'il doit produire son propre matériel, met l'accent sur les programmes d'enfants beaucoup plus que ne le fait le réseau anglais avec, comme résultat, que celui-ci est beaucoup plus self-sufficient que le réseau français.

Dans le cas des correspondants, surtout aux États-Unis, il est évident qu'au moins jusqu'à il y a un certain temps, l'intérêt de ce qui se passe aux États-Unis pour les gens de langue française n'a pas du tout été le même que ce qu'il a été pour les gens de langue anglaise.

Alors, il y a à l'intérieur de cela, même si ce n'est pas le budget du réseau français, il y a à l'intérieur de ce budget-là, des choix qui ne sont pas nécessairement les mêmes quant au poids qui est mis à tel type de programmation au réseau français et au réseau anglais.

Dr. Davidson: May I just add one further comment. I do not want to bore you with figures but if, in addition to the figures I gave you, you were to set opposite those figures of expenditure the revenues earned by the English network and the French network, you would see that there is a much larger revenue accruing from commercial advertising earnings to the English network. If you net those against the gross expenditures on English language and French language broadcasting you come, I would have to say, Mr. De Bané, to a pretty reasonable balance as between the allocation of funds so far as the net funds provided by the Government of Canada are concerned.

Mr. De Bané: The only point I was concerned about was that I think the French network produced more hours than the English network. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, the President has been giving us some interesting figures. One is always hearing that the CBC is so inefficient and this, that and the other thing. I wonder if you could carry those figures through a little further and show us the distribution costs. The CBC networks are not, by the wildest imagination, built to be commercial networks and no private operator in his greatest nightmare would try to run a thing like this.

more important for them, in terms of their needs, their requests, and their audiences. The choices of the French network are not the same as those of the English network. I think, in particular, that as the French network must produce its own material, it puts far more emphasis on children's program than the English network, with the result that the latter is far more self-sufficient than the French network.

In the case of the correspondents especially in the United States, it is obvious that at least up until some time ago, interest for what goes on in the United States was not the same at all for French-speaking people as for English-speaking people.

So, within this budget—even though it is not the budget of the French network—there are choices which are not necessarily the same with respect to the weight which is ascribed to such a type of programming in the French network and in the English network.

M. Davidson: Est-ce que je peux ajouter un autre commentaire?

Je ne veux pas vous encombrer par des chiffres, mais si après ce que je viens de vous dire vous vouliez établir les dépenses brutes, les revenus gagnés par le réseau anglais, si vous les comparez aux revenus du réseau français, vous prouveront qu'on a beaucoup plus de revenus qui proviennent des gains commerciaux du réseau anglais. Et si vous comparez les réseaux français et anglais, vous arriverez, je dois dire, monsieur De Bané, à un équilibre assez raisonnable de la répartition des fonds nets fournis par le gouvernement du Canada.

M. De Bané: Le point qui m'inquiétait, c'était que le réseau français, je pense, a produit plus d'heures que le réseau anglais. Merci beaucoup.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, le président de Radio-Canada nous a donné des chiffres intéressants. Radio-Canada n'est donc pas aussi inefficace qu'on le dit. Je me demande s'il pourrait aller un peu plus loin avec ses chiffres, et nous dire exactement ce que nous coûte la production. Apparemment les réseaux de Radio-Canada ne sont pas conçus pour être commerciaux. Ce n'est pas difficile à comprendre. Et c'est probablement un des plus grands cauchemars que d'essayer de mener une barque pareille.

[Texte]

Dr. Davidson: Do you mean we could not sell it like...

Mr. Osler: You could sell bits of it, I guess, but you go to Aklavik and you go up and down the country and all over the place. What proportion of this is to carry out your mandate in a geographical way? Is there any way of getting at that figure?

Dr. Davidson: I was going to refer you, Mr. Osler, to page 81 but I am not sure that this really meets your requirement. This shows the program costs of radio, the network distribution costs and the station transmission costs for both radio and television. If you look at page 80 you will see that it is broken down by headings as between French language and English language.

This shows you, for example, that on radio we have network distribution costs of $2.8 million. This is to maintain the network service coast to coast and includes, of course, our network distribution costs to our more remote stations that are hooked up to the network.

Then we have our local station transmission costs, many of which, from the point of view of any commercial operation, are not viable commercially. They cost us something of the order of $2.6 million. So, out of a total radio budget of $33.8 million at least $5.5 million of that is for network distribution and station transmission.

Mr. Osler: Which a commercial operator would not have because he would not bother with most of it.

Dr. Davidson: It depends on whether the commercial operator is operating a network or he is operating individual stations.

Mr. Osler: What other network is operated in the world? Are there any other radio networks in the world?

Dr. Davidson: In the world?

Mr. Osler: Or in North America?

Dr. Davidson: I do not think so.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, on this matter of the costs of the CBC operation, I take it from the discussion and from the information we have just been examining in the official

[Interprétation]

M. Davidson: Voulez-vous dire que nous ne pouvons pas vendre, comme...

M. Osler: Vous pouvez avoir des petits bouts, j'imagine. Mais, vous comprenez, vous faites le tour du pays par monts et par vaux et je voudrais savoir exactement ce que vous faites pour réaliser votre mandat sur le plan géographique. Pouvez-vous nous éclairer?

M. Davidson: Monsieur Osler, j'allais vous dire de vous reporter à la page 81, mais je ne suis pas certain que ça réponde à votre question.

Vous y voyez le coût de la réalisation des émissions de radio, de distribution sur les réseaux et de diffusion par les stations, pour la radio et la télévision. Et si vous prenez la page 80, vous avez le détail de la répartition entre le français et l'anglais. Ça vous montre, par exemple, qu'à la radio, nous avons un coût de distribution, sur les réseaux, de 2.8 millions. Cela pour maintenir un service d'un océan à l'autre et répartir les coûts de distribution jusqu'aux stations les plus éloignées qui sont branchées sur le réseau.

Ensuite, nous avons les frais de transmission des stations locales dont plusieurs ne peuvent pas vivre sur le plan commercial, qui nous coûtent 2.6 millions. Au total, vous avez en budget, pour la radio, de 33.8 millions de dollars, dont 5.5 millions représentent la distribution sur les réseaux et la diffusion par les stations.

M. Osler: Ce qu'un exploitant n'aurait pas, car il n'en tiendrait pas compte.

M. Davidson: Ça dépend de si l'exploitant s'occupe d'un réseau ou de stations privées.

M. Osler: Est-ce qu'il y a d'autres réseaux radiophoniques dans le monde?

M. Davidson: Dans le monde?

M. Osler: Ou en Amérique du Nord.

M. Davidson: Je ne crois pas.

Le président: Monsieur Dinsdale?

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, sur cette question de coût d'exploitation de Radio-Canada, je crois comprendre, à la suite de la discussion et des renseignements du report of the CBC that programming is the major cost, particularly in television. The figures here, for example, indicate that the programming costs for television in 1968 were some $96.5 million, which is a good slice of your total budget.

Dr. Davidson: It is more than half the gross budget.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. This leads me to ask if there are any reciprocal arrangements between other similar broadcasting facilities with reference to exchange programs. I know in the CBC you carry some BBC material, you carry some Australian broadcasting material, as well as American material, of course. Is there any reciprocal arrangement for exchange of programs particularly between the BBC and the Australian broadcasting facility, whatever it calls itself?

Dr. Davidson: We have associations, Mr. Dinsdale, with a variety of broadcasting organizations in other parts of the world. For example, we are members of the Commonwealth Broadcasting Conference and we are members of La Communauté radiophonique de langue française, which comprises the French language broadcasting agencies of Switzerland, Belgium, France and ourselves. We have relationships through Intertel and we are associate members of the European Broadcasting Union.

I only mention these four to illustrate the fact that through a variety of associations and connections we maintain contact with broadcasting organizations in other parts of the world, and in many of these contacts we either have group or reciprocal arrangements which provide for program exchanges. I think Mr. Hallman is as well acquainted with this as perhaps any of...

Mr. Dinsdale: Is this on a non-commercial direct exchange or is it on a commercial basis?

Dr. Davidson: This is on a non-commercial basis. In some instances, if I understand correctly, it is either on a direct exchange basis or it is on a basis that involves sharing costs of joint programs in other circumstances.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Hallman?

rapport de Radio-Canada, que la programmation constitue la majorité des coûts de production, surtout la télévision.

En 1968, je vois ici que la production a coûté, pour la télévision, quelque 96.5 millions de dollars, ce qui est une bonne tranche de votre budget total.

M. Davidson: C'est plus de la moitié du budget brut.

M. Dinsdale: Alors, permettez-moi de demander s'il y a des accords réciproques entre d'autres installations de diffusion analogues à l'égard de programmes d'échange. Par exemple, je sais qu'à Radio-Canada vous avez des documents qui vous viennent de la BBC, vous avez aussi des documents qui vous viennent de l'Australie, ainsi que des programmes émanant des États-Unis. J'aimerais savoir s'il y a un accord réciproque ou un échange de programmes surtout, par exemple, entre vous et la BBC ou les installations de l'Australie?

M. Davidson: Nous avons des associations à cet effet. Nous avons des associations où nous sommes en contact avec d'autres organisations de diffusion ailleurs dans le monde.

Par exemple, nous sommes membre de la Conférence de radiodiffusion du Commonwealth. Nous faisons aussi partie de la Communauté radiophonique de langue française qui comprend les organisations de diffusion en français de la Suisse, de la France, de la Belgique et nous-même. Nous entretenons des relations avec INTERTEL. Nous sommes membre associé de l'Union européenne de radiodiffusion.

Je le mentionne simplement pour signaler qu'il y a diverses associations; et les contacts que nous avons nous permettent de nous tenir en rapport constamment avec des organisations radiophoniques ailleurs dans le monde. Et grâce à ces différents contacts, nous avons des ententes de groupe, des ententes réciproques d'échange. M. Hallman connaît fort bien la question.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que c'est un échange, commercial, non-commercial, direct?

M. Davidson: Non commercial. C'est soit un échange direct, soit une entente sur une base qui implique un partage des frais des programmes conjoints.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur Hallman?

Mr. Eugene Hallman (Vice-President and General Manager, English Networks, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation): So far as television is concerned, there is not much exchange. Most countries are in the buying and selling operation. I would think that the one exception to that is Intertel, which is a consortium of NET in the United States, the BBC, Australia and the CBC, which produces programs for showing in each of these countries, and if there are profits they are shared among the participating members according to the number of productions they have put in in a 12-month period.

Mr. Dinsdale: I notice the operating cost for the CBC is higher than either the BBC or the Australian Broadcasting Commission. For example, in 1967-68 the BBC was $154 million as compared with the CBC's $185 million and the Australian Broadcasting Commission's $51.8 million. What accounts for the higher operating expenses of the CBC? I realize that the U.K. is a much smaller geographic area but it covers twice or perhaps three times the population, and the Australian system is wrestling with a problem of geography similar to ours. Is there any reason for the difference?

Dr. Davidson: There are many reasons, Mr. Dinsdale. Let us talk about a few of them. There is colour broadcasting; there is the number of hours of broadcasting in the broadcasting day or week; there is the cost level in the different countries—wages and the cost of goods and services generally—and certainly, so far as Canada vis-à-vis the U.K. is concerned, there is quite clearly the cost of covering half a continent versus covering the cost of broadcasting to a tight little island.

As I have already mentioned, we also have a problem which is worth remembering; we have responsibility for providing a network service in the French language as well as in the English language. These are some of the factors which enter into the cost comparison and they would certainly not operate to our advantage in any of those contexts in comparison with, for example, the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Some of those, but not all of them, apply to a comparison with Australia but certainly the language problem, the additional cost of providing a broadcasting service in both languages, does add to our cost of operation.

[Interprétation]

M. Eugene Hallman (vice-président et directeur général du réseau anglais de Radio-Canada): Il n'y a pas tellement d'échanges en matière de télévision. Là, la plupart des pays s'occupent d'achats et de ventes. Je pense que la seule exception serait INTERTEL, qui est un consortium de NET aux États-Unis, de BBC, Australie, et de Radio-Canada, qui fournit des programmes qui devront être diffusés dans chacun de ces pays. Et on partage les profits sur une base de revenu de douze mois.

M. Dinsdale: Je crois comprendre que le coût d'exploitation de Radio-Canada est plus élevé que celui de la BBC ou de l'organisme de radiodiffusion de l'Australie.

Par exemple, en 1967-1968, la BBC dépensait 154 millions de dollars alors que Radio-Canada dépensait 185 millions et que le système de radiodiffusion australien dépensait 51.8 millions. Comment expliquez-vous les frais d'exploitation beaucoup plus élevés de Radio-Canada? Je sais bien que le Royaume-Uni est beaucoup moins étendu, mais la population est deux ou trois fois plus grande que la nôtre et le système australien fait face au même problème de géographie. Est-ce qu'il y a une raison pour expliquer cette différence?

M. Davidson: Il y a beaucoup de raisons, monsieur Dinsdale. Je vais vous parler de certaines de ces raisons. D'abord, la télévision en couleur. Ensuite, la quantité d'heures de diffusion et la quantité de jours de diffusion pendant la semaine. Un autre facteur, est le niveau des coûts, les salaires, etc. Et un autre facteur, du moins pour ce qui est de la comparaison entre le Canada et le Royaume-Uni, c'est le coût d'un service fourni à la moitié d'un continent par opposition à un service fourni à une petite île.

Comme je l'ai déjà mentionné, cela implique un problème qu'on ne doit pas oublier: nous sommes chargés de fournir des services en français aussi bien qu'en anglais. Ce sont là certains des facteurs qui expliquent la différence de coût. Évidemment, ce n'est pas avantageux pour nous dans aucun de ces contextes par rapport aux autres sociétés de diffusion.

Tous ces facteurs n'entrent pas en jeu lorsque l'on se compare avec l'Australie, mais du moins le problème de langue, le coût supplémentaire de services dans les deux langues ajoute aux frais d'exploitation de Radio-Canada.

[Text]

Mr. Dinsdale: With reference to our French programming, I suppose Canada produces more high quality French programs than most other countries—even France itself. Do we have a market for these programs in other French-speaking countries, in France or in some of the newly-emerging French-speaking nations of Africa? Are there any potential commercial market areas available there?

Dr. Davidson: We receive a very modest revenue from sales of our programs outside of Canada, from export sales.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is the French programming.

Dr. Davidson: This covers both English and French, and I think I would be correct in saying that our revenue from export sales of French language programs is even more modest than our revenue from the English network sales. As I recall it, the total is something of the order of $400,000 net in a year. This will give you some indication of how modest the sales really are.

Mr. Osler: When the French are supposed to be so interested in Eastern Canada, why do they not buy more of their programs? Is there no way of working up that angle?

Dr. Davidson: I will be glad to pass on to the appropriate French authorities your desire to sell more programs if you think I should, Mr. Osler.

• 2130

Mr. Osler: Thank you.

Dr. Davidson: I am not quite sure what the results of my representations on your behalf would be, but I think Mr. Dinsdale's question had reference to the underdeveloped countries—

Mr. Dinsdale: This would be part of it, as a sort of Canadian cultural contribution.

Dr. Davidson: I think a good many of the former French colonies which are now independent French-speaking nations in Africa, for example, members of francophonie, would no doubt be hungry to receive program materials from countries such as Canada, which is in a position to supply them with perhaps some balancing programming to offset the influence of those other countries which are providing most of their programming at the present time.

[Interpretation]

M. Dinsdale: A part la question de la programmation en français, je suppose que le Canada fournit des programmes de langue française de meilleure qualité que la plupart des autres pays, même la France?

Est-ce que nous avons des débouchés pour nos programmes dans d'autres pays francophones? La France, ou d'autres nouveaux pays francophones en Afrique? Est-ce que sur le plan commercial nous avons un marché éventuel là-bas?

M. Davidson: Nous retirons un revenu très modeste de la vente de nos programmes à l'extérieur du Canada, des ventes à l'étranger.

M. Dinsdale: Des émissions françaises?

M. Davidson: Françaises et anglaises. Et je pense que j'aurais raison de dire que nos revenus découlant de la vente à l'étranger des programmes français sont plus faibles que les revenus que nous retirons de la vente de programmes anglais. Par exemple, ce revenu est de l'ordre de 400 mille dollars nets par année, ce qui vous donne quand même une idée de la modestie de nos ventes.

M. Osler: Les Français sont censés être tellement intéressés par l'Est du Canada! Pourquoi est-ce qu'ils n'achètent pas plus de programmes? Est-ce qu'il n'y a pas moyen de faire quelque chose?

M. Davidson: Je serais très heureux de transmettre vos idées aux autorités intéressées, monsieur Osler.

M. Osler: Merci.

M. Davidson: Je ne sais pas très bien quel sera le résultat de mes instances en votre nom, mais je pense que la question de M. Dinsdale avait trait aux pays en voie de développement.

M. Dinsdale: Oui, cela ferait partie d'une contribution canadienne sur le plan culturel.

M. Davidson: Il n'y a pas de doute que beaucoup des anciennes colonies françaises qui sont maintenant indépendantes aimeraient beaucoup recevoir des programmes des pays comme le Canada, qui pourrait fournir un certain équilibre de programmation qui contrebalancerait l'influence d'autres pays qui fournissent la plupart des programmes dans le moment.

[Texte]

Mr. Dinsdale: Such as the Soviet or the U.S.A., perhaps?

The Chairman: Or France.

Mr. Dinsdale: Or France?

Dr. Davidson: I do not know that I can add to all the suggestions that the members of the Committee have made on that list of nations that might come under it.

Mr. Givens: They prefer "Bonanza", as our people do.

Mr. Davidson: I think there is reason to believe that there is a desire to have programming materials that will enable them to be less dependent—let me put it that way—on any one major country as a supplier of their programs from outside, but it is a question of money. These small countries, which are not in a good financial position, are not able to meet the costs that we would have to offer our programs at if we were not subsidizing these programs, and this is a problem that we have not yet been able to resolve.

I have some ideas on the subject which I have discussed with my colleagues but we have not yet been able to solve the problem of supplying out of CBC funds the necessary funds to provide subsidized program material to some of these developing countries that I am sure would be glad to have Canadian program materials.

Mr. Mongrain: Is there an audience with TV sets in those countries? Would it be worthwhile?

Dr. Davidson: There certainly is. There is a very substantial radio listening audience.

Mr. Mongrain: Radio.

Dr. Davidson: And a number of the African countries have now established television facilities.

Mr. Mongrain: This is a beginning.

Dr. Davidson: It is a beginning and certainly it is an audience that is building steadily.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps External Aid, Mr. Chairman, could be interested in this activity.

Dr. Davidson: One of the areas in which I have indicated my intentions of exploring is this very area. If we could interest—and I am now speaking of a Crown corporation which has something to sell to an agency of the Government of Canada—if we could influence—

[Interprétation]

M. Dinsdale: Comme par exemple les Russes ou les Américains?

Le président: Ou la France.

M. Dinsdale: Ou la France?

M. Davidson: Je ne sais pas si je peux ajouter les suggestions des députés à la liste des nations.

M. Givens: Ils préfèrent «Bonanza», comme nos gens.

M. Davidson: Je pense qu'il y a lieu de croire qu'il y a un désir d'obtenir des programmes, mais est-ce qu'ils veulent dépendre seulement d'un pays? C'est une question d'argent. Et ces petits pays, s'ils ne sont pas en bonne position financière, ne peuvent pas payer les frais que nous serions prêts à payer pour nos programmes, si nous ne les subventionnions pas. On n'a pas encore pu résoudre le problème.

J'ai certaines idées à cet égard et j'en ai discuté avec mes collègues, mais nous n'avons pas encore réussi à résoudre le problème de fournir à même les fonds de Radio-Canada, les fonds nécessaires pour subventionner des émissions destinées à certains pays qui seraient très heureux de recevoir l'aide du Canada.

M. Mongrain: Y a-t-il des gens qui possèdent des appareils de télévision dans ces pays? Est-ce que cela voudrait la peine?

M. Davidson: Certainement, il y a un auditoire radio important.

M. Mongrain: Radio.

M. Davidson: Certains pays africains ont maintenant une installation de télévision.

M. Mongrain: C'est un commencement.

M. Davidson: Ce n'est qu'un début. Il y a certainement un auditoire qui s'accroît graduellement.

M. Dinsdale: Peut-être que l'aide extérieure pourrait s'occuper ou s'intéresser à cette activité.

M. Davidson: J'ai justement l'intention d'explorer ce domaine-là. Et je pense maintenant à la position d'une société de la Couronne qui a quelque chose à vendre à une agence du gouvernement canadien. C'est justement ce domaine-là.

[Text]

The Chairman: At a high price.

Dr. Davidson: At a very low—at a bargain price, but at a price higher than we can get anybody else to pay for it. But there are possibilities here which I am most anxious to explore because if it were possible to work out an arrangement of this kind, I think it would be appreciated by the countries concerned; it would certainly be helpful from the point of view of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and personally I believe that it would be something well worthy of the consideration of the Government of Canada through some program such as External Aid.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, on the costs of CBC programming, what would be the explanation for a situation where the cost of bringing the activities of the Canadian contingent of the Olympic Games from Mexico is three times the actual cost of sending the delegation to the Olympic Games? Is this one of the problems of the high cost of CBC programming?

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Gilmore can supplement what I have to say but there are one or two things I would like to mention to indicate some of the elements that go into the cost. In the first place, the American Broadcasting Corporation—am I right, Mr. Gilmore?—had the exclusive rights for broadcasting the Olympic Games.

Mr. Gilmore: For which they paid $4,500,000.

Dr. Davidson: We had to buy from the ABC the right to broadcast into Canada the Olympic Games. That cost us $100,000 to begin with.

• 2130

Secondly, authorities such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which went with their facilities to Mexico to carry out a broadcasting undertaking for their home audiences, had to incur more expenses in Mexico City and had less in the way of facilities provided for them by the host authorities than in any previous experience that we had gone through at any previous Olympic site.

Whereas, for example, Canada at Expo or Canada at the Pan-American Games in Winnipeg provided a generous array of facilities for non-Canadian broadcast organizations coming to our country, this was not the case in Mexico and therefore we had to incur all of the expenses ourselves for setting our operation up in Mexico City in order to enable us to broadcast.

[Interpretation]

Le président: A un prix élevé.

M. Davidson: A un très bas prix—à un prix de solde, mais à un prix qui sera plus élevé que celui que quiconque pourrait payer. Il y a des possibilités que j'aimerais beaucoup explorer et je crois que si on pouvait établir des arrangements de ce genre, ce geste serait apprécié par les pays dont on parle. Du point de vue de la Société Radio-Canada, cela serait une aide certaine, et je crois personnellement.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, en ce qui concerne le coût des émissions de la Société Radio-Canada. Comment peut-on expliquer le fait que d'envoyer une équipe de Radio-Canada aux jeux olympiques de Mexico a coûté trois fois plus cher que le coût de l'envoi de la délégation d'athlètes du Canada aux mêmes Jeux? Est-ce là un des problèmes qui touche le coût très élevé des émissions de la Société Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson: M. Gilmore sera à même de compléter ce que j'ai à dire, mais il y a une ou deux choses que je veux mentionner et qui visent certains éléments du coût de production. Tout d'abord, l'American Broadcasting Corporation, n'est-ce pas M. Gilmore, a obtenu les droits d'exclusivité mondiale pour la diffusion des Jeux Olympiques.

M. Gilmore: Ils ont déboursé $4,500,000 à cet effet.

M. Davidson: Nous étions obligés d'acheter à l'American Broadcasting Corporation le droit de diffusion des Jeux au Canada et cela nous a coûté $100,000. Deuxièmement les sociétés telles que Radio-Canada, qui sont allées à Mexico avec leur matériel pour diffuser leurs propres émissions, ont dû faire des dépenses plus considérables car les installations mises à leur disposition par les autorités locales étaient en quantité infimes comparé à n'importe que autre endroit où se sont tenus des Jeux Olympiques.

Le Canada à l'Expo, ou aux Jeux Panaméricains a fourni des installations très complètes aux organisations de télévision étrangères venant dans notre pays ce qui n'a pas été le cas au Mexique. Ainsi nous avons dû assumer toutes les dépenses pour nous installer afin de produire des émissions à partir de Mexico.

[Texte]

No. 3, we were not fortunate enough to be able to house our people who packed cameras and so on around through the various sites of the games in Mexico City and in Mexico. We were not fortunate enough to be able to get housing for them including, I am told, full board and lodging for $6 a day, which was the rate at which the host country of Mexico provided accommodation at their Olympic village for the athletes from foreign countries.

These are at least three of the factors that have gone into the costs, the comparison of costs between the Olympic Team as such and our own team who went down to broadcast the Olympic Games back to Canada. This is not a complete explanation but these are among the elements; and there are other factors which could be taken into account in explaining the difference.

Mr. Schumacher: As a supplementary, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask Dr. Davidson what the thinking was behind sending our contingent down there?

The Chairman: The CBC, or the athletic...

Mr. Schumacher: Yes, the CBC. What did we gain by having our own people down there rather than using the facilities of the American Broadcasting Companies who were photographing and broadcasting the Olympic Games?

Dr. Davidson: I think this raises a fundamental question about the existence of the CBC, Mr. Schumacher, if I may say so. We could extend this argument and say, what do we gain by having a Canadian broadcasting agency of any kind to broadcast anything? We could pipe in American programs and get the total array of American programming with emphasis on sport, on public events, on every form of broadcast program as seen through American eyes.

I submit to you with respect that there is something of value in having the "reportage" of events of international importance, whether they be in the sports field, or at the United Nations or anywhere else, interpreted to Canadians through the eyes of Canadians who are participating actively and who are reporting as Canadians on the events which are taking place. I believe that this was done; that this interpretation was provided by Canadians through the facilities that we were able to station in Mexico City.

Mr. Schumacher: My only comment on that is that I think probably a lot of Canadians

[Interprétation]

Troisièmement, nous n'avons pas eu la possibilité de loger nos techniciens qui s'occupaient du transport de l'équipement, des caméras, près des emplacements où se tenaient les Jeux. Nous n'avons pu les loger aux endroits où le gouvernement du Mexique fournissait aux athlètes des pays participants le logement et les repas au coût de $6. par jour. Ce sont au moins là trois des facteurs qui ont causé une différence entre le coût pour envoyer notre équipe à Mexico et celui de l'équipe canadienne des jeux olympiques proprement dite. Ce n'est pas là l'explication complète de la différence entre les coûts de l'envoi des deux équipes, mais ce sont quelques-uns des facteurs; il y a cependant d'autres facteurs dont il faudrait tenir compte.

M. Schumacher: Quelle était l'idée d'envoyer nos gens là-bas?

Le président: Les athlètes ou les gens de Radio-Canada?

M. Schumacher: Ceux de Radio-Canada. Qu'avons-nous gagné d'avoir nos gens là-bas, plutôt que de reprendre les émissions de l'American Broadcasting Corporation?

M. Davidson: Je pense que ceci soulève la question fondamentale quant à l'existence même de la Société Radio-Canada, monsieur Schumacher. Nous pourrions étendre cet argument et dire tout simplement, pourquoi avons-nous la Société Radio-Canada ou tout autre organisme de ce genre? Nous pourrions fort bien nous brancher sur les programmes américains, en mettant l'accent sur les sports ou les affaires publiques ou tout autre genre d'émissions, telles que les américains les voient.

Respectueusement, je vous dirais qu'il y a une certaine valeur d'avoir un reportage d'événements importants, qu'il s'agisse du domaine sportif ou des Nations Unies ou autres, interprétés aux Canadiens à travers l'esprit des Canadiens qui font le reportage. Et je pense que cette interprétation a été donnée aux Canadiens par les installations que nous avons été à même d'établir à Mexico.

M. Schumacher: Mon seul commentaire à ce sujet est que beaucoup de Canadiens pen-would feel that perhaps if the $699,000 had been spent on the team and $160,000 on the reporting we might have got a few more gold medals and we might have been happy to watch the results through the American broadcasting agency.

Dr. Davidson: I might agree with you on that, as a matter of fact. I might agree with you on that. I just ask you to consider what would be the viewpoint of the Canadian public if we were to announce that it is not the intention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to send any representatives to the next Olympic Games to broadcast back to Canada the events that Canadian athletes would be taking part in.

Mr. Schumacher: To carry this a little further, I wonder if there is any merit in the idea of using the same system for this type of broadcasting as is used, for example, to cover the American presidential nomination conventions and the American elections, where you do use the facilities of the National Broadcasting Company but you put your own men in to report and to give the Canadian slant on the proceedings.

• 2140

Dr. Davidson: I would hate to tell you how many criticisms we got for doing exactly that.

Mr. Schumacher: Well, I know I have heard those criticisms . . .

Dr. Davidson: You cannot win.

Mr. Schumacher: ...because I criticized it myself to some extent because I do believe that perhaps Huntley and Brinkley are a little better informed on the goings-on of their own system than our people were who were attempting to report. But you do not necessarily have to have the whole system to get the Canadian viewpoint on the Olympic Games. Has there ever been any consideration given to using this method of having Canadian commentators commenting on American coverage?

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Gilmore tells me that that was in fact the way in which we proceeded at Rome when the Olympic Games were held there. I am not familiar with that situation. Perhaps you could add a word, Mr. Gilmore?

Mr. Gilmore: Yes, sir. We received an onslaught of criticism by parliamentarians, amateur athletic associations and the public at large because on that occasion the American sent que si on avait dépensé $699,000 pour l'équipe sportive, et $160,000 pour les reportages, que nos athlètes auraient peut-être remporté plus de médailles d'or et que nous aurions été satisfaits de voir les résultats sur les chaînes américaines.

M. Davidson: Je serais éventuellement d'accord à cet effet. Je vous demanderais simplement d'imaginer ce que serait la réaction du public canadien si on annonçait que la Société Radio-Canada n'a pas l'intention d'envoyer une équipe de production aux prochains Jeux Olympiques, et qu'il n'y aura pas d'émissions où l'on pourra voir la participation des athlètes canadiens.

M. Schumacher: Est-ce que l'on ne pourrait pas agir de la même façon que lorsqu'il y a eu les élections et les conventions américaines? Vous vous servez des installations américaines, mais vous avez des reporters canadiens qui donnent le point de vue canadien lors du déroulement des événements.

M. Davidson: Ah! J'aimerais vous dire le nombre des critiques qui ont été formulées à notre égard parce que nous avons fait cela justement.

M. Schumacher: Je sais que j'ai entendu des critiques.

M. Davidson: On ne peut rien y faire.

M. Schumacher: Je l'ai critiqué moi-même parce que je pense que Huntley et Brinkley sont plus au courant de ce qui se passe dans leur propre système que nos gens. Ce n'est pas nécessaire d'avoir tout un système pour avoir le point de vue canadien des jeux olympiques. Est-ce que l'on a déjà envisagé de se servir de cette méthode, à savoir, des commentateurs canadiens faisant la couverture d'un événement, en se servant d'une couverture américaine?

M. Davidson: Je crois qu'il en a été ainsi aux Jeux Olympiques de Rome. Je ne suis pas très au courant. M. Gilmore va peut-être nous le dire.

M. Gilmore: Nous avons été très critiqués par le Parlement, par les associations sportives amateurs et par le public, parce que le réseau américain, ils font un très bon travail.

[Texte]

networks—and this is no criticism of them; they do an excellent professional job—neglected to cover any Canadian athletes and the result was that the coverage we brought to Canada on that occasion, and indeed in Helsinki on radio to a lesser degree, was not by any stretch of the imagination adequate in the opinion of parliamentarians.

In Tokyo we took one step: we made a co-operative agreement with NHK, the Japanese broadcasting organization, and we paid for special coverage of our athletes there and brought it back to Canada. That coverage on television by satellite was much better than anything that had gone before it, and at Mexico we tried to do a pretty complete job.

I must say one aspect of cost that we must remember in relation to Mexico—and it is a big cost to Canada, $270,000 to $300,000—was physically bringing the programming back to Canada by microwave. We unfortunately encountered a tragedy early in the year before the Olympics, a tragedy in the form of the loss of a satellite. There was a satellite to be launched to supplement the facilities over the Atlantic and we had been pretty well guaranteed a channel to bring back Canadian programming direct. It would have cut the cost way down.

As it was we had to rent microwaves all the way from Mexico, coupled with the fact that the equipment pool was not adequate to give a Canadian coverage; a coverage which, by the way, when you net out the commercial revenue which we made from this operation, was within our budget. I am glad to tell you that. Incidentally, the viewing public was way beyond what we expected for that program. It was a smash success from the viewers' standpoint.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain.

M. Mongrain: Merci, monsieur le président, je serai très bref. Monsieur Davidson, combien d'années avez-vous été attaché au Conseil du Trésor?

M. Davidson: Quatre longues années.

M. Mongrain: Vous pouvez donc me comprendre. Je lis ici, que Radio-Canada, depuis 1964, a demandé au Parlement: quelque 78 millions en 1964, 85 millions en 1965, 95 millions en 1966, 112 millions en 1967, 139 millions en 1968, 151 millions en 1968 à 1969, et pour 1969 à 1970, vous nous demandez 166 millions.

Cette somme de 166 millions représente une augmentation de $14,900,000, seulement pour du point de vue professionnel, avait négligé de faire des reportages sur les athlètes canadiens. Le résultat était que le reportage que nous avons fait au Canada, il s'est passé la même chose à Helsinki, à la radio, n'était pas, avec la meilleure volonté, adéquat de l'avis des parlementaires.

A Tokyo, nous sommes allés un peu plus loin, nous avons pris un accord, un certain accord avec l'organisation NHK de radio et télévision du Japon et nous avons payé un supplément pour qu'il y ait un reportage sur les athlètes canadiens et nous avons pu transmettre cela par satellite. C'était que ce que nous avions pu faire de mieux jusqu'à présent. Et au Mexique, nous avons essayé de faire un travail plus complet.

Il ne faut pas oublier que, en ce qui concerne Mexico, un montant de $270,000 ou $300,000 a été dépensé pour acheminer les émissions vers le Canada par micro-ondes. Nous avons été victimes d'une tragédie avant les Jeux, soit la perte d'un satellite, satellite qui devait être lancé pour aider à la transmission des émissions au-dessus de l'Atlantique. On nous avait promis un canal pour acheminer les émissions vers le Canada. Cela aurait baissé grandement les frais si tel en avait été le cas.

Mais là, nous avons été obligés de louer des relais micro-ondes jusqu'au Mexique, et ceci, additionné avec le fait que l'équipement n'était pas suffisant pour permettre une couverture canadienne qui, si vous tenez compte du revenu commercial que nous avons tiré de ces émissions, était dans les limites de notre budget. Et nous avons eu un très grand succès du point de vue de l'auditoire qui a regardé les émissions. Ce fut un très très grand succès.

Le président: Monsieur Mongrain.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief. Mr. Davidson, how long were you with the Treasury Board?

Dr. Davidson: Four long years.

Mr. Mongrain: Thus, you will understand me. I note here that the CBC, since 1964, has asked Parliament for some $78 million in 1964, $85 million in 1965, $95 million in 1966, $112 million in 1967, $139 million in 1968, $151 million in 1968-1969, and for 1969 through 1970, you have asked us for $166 million.

This sum of $166 million represents an increase of $14,900,000 in relation to this year l'année en cours. Je crois que la plus grande partie de cette augmentation ira à la production et à la mise en ondes d'émissions. Je vois, par exemple, à la rubrique programmes réguliers, une augmentation de 10 millions de dollars. Monsieur Davidson, en tenant compte de la période d'austérité que nous traversons, en tenant compte du fait que le ministre des Finances a demandé à tous les ministères de couper leur budget à l'extrême limite, en tenant compte qu'il y a des priorités encore plus importantes que la radio, par exemple, l'élimination des disparités régionales, je me propose de demander au Comité de suggérer à la Chambre de couper votre augmentation de 10 millions cette année afin que vous aussi participiez à ce régime d'austérité. Pouvez-vous prouver au Comité pourquoi nous ne devrions pas?

Dr. Davidson: Well, anything is possible, Mr. Chairman. I have had experience before previous Parliamentary committees of motions such as this. This is no longer in the budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as it is presented to Parliament. This is no longer a decision of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. This is a decision of the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada through the Treasury Board, a committee of ministers of the Cabinet, having examined the Corporation's budget and having cut the Corporation's budget has agreed that $166.2 million is required for the operations of the Corporation during the fiscal year 1969-70. That is a decision of the Government of Canada and that is a decision that Parliament will have to deal with.

Mr. Mongrain: Mais, vous savez que le Comité a le droit de faire une recommandation au Parlement.

Dr. Davidson: The Committee has the right to make a recommendation, but, having argued strenuously with the Cabinet Ministers and the officers of the Treasury Board that the requirements of the Corporation were of the order of $178 million cut back to $166.2 million, I am certainly not going to come before this Committee and tell you that I can reasonably and responsibly manage the affairs of the Corporation on less than the amount that the Government of Canada has accepted as being a reasonable request to place before Parliament, taking full account, Mr. Mongrain, of the question of priorities that the Government of Canada has considered in the total context of its financial requirements.

If the Parliament of Canada decides that it is going to reduce this amount, the Corporation, like any other body, is going to have to only. I believe that this increase will be mostly for production and the broadcasting of programs. I notice, for instance, under the heading of regular programs, an increase of $10 million. Taking into account the austerity period in which we find ourselves, and that the Minister of Finance has asked all Departments to cut down their budget to the maximum and taking into account that there are even greater priorities than radio, for instance the elimination of regional disparities, I would like to ask the Committee to suggest to the House of Commons that your increase be reduced by $10 million this year, so that you might also participate in this austerity drive. Could you tell the Committee why this should not be done?

M. Davidson: Tout est possible, monsieur le président. J'ai entendu des motions de ce genre-ci dans d'autres comités. Il ne s'agit plus d'une décision de Radio-Canada, c'est une décision qui doit être prise par le gouvernement du Canada, par l'intermédiaire du Conseil du Trésor et du Cabinet. Après avoir examiné le budget de Radio-Canada, ces derniers sont d'accord sur le fait que 166.2 millions de dollars sont nécessaires à l'exploitation de Radio-Canada en 1969-1970. C'est une décision du gouvernement du Canada, et c'est cette décision que le Parlement doit assumer.

Mr. Mongrain: But you know that the Committee is entitled to make a recommendation to Parliament.

M. Davidson: Le comité peut faire une recommandation, mais après avoir discuté longuement avec les ministres du cabinet et les fonctionnaires du Conseil du Trésor du fait qu'on ait réduit la somme de 178 millions dont nous avions besoin, à 166.2 millions, je ne pourrais pas venir ici et vous dire que je peux faire fonctionner efficacement Radio Canada avec un budget inférieur à celui que le gouvernement canadien a accepté comme une demande raisonnable pouvant être présentée au Parlement, compte tenu, monsieur Mongrain, de la question des priorités que le gouvernement canadien a étudiée dans le cadre de ses besoins financiers.

Si le Parlement canadien décide de réduire cette somme, la Société, comme tout autre organisme, devra décider ce qu'elle doit faire.

[Texte]

decide what it is going to do to live on a lesser amount. Because I said this morning it is the policy of the Corporation to live within the funds that are allocated by the Parliament of Canada.

pour vivre avec un montant inférieur. Car j'ai dit ce matin que la Société a pour principe de fonctionner avec les fonds que lui affecte le Parlement canadien.

M. Mongrain: Je fais cette suggestion parce que nous sommes véritablement en période d'austérité. Nous avons dû couper des montants assez importants, par exemple, au chapitre du bien-être dans lequel nous avons besoin d'investir des montants très considérables, dans le secteur des disparités régionales, enfin, tous les ministères ont coupé. Le gens se plaignent, par exemple, des augmentations de tarif au ministère des Postes et de la diminution du service postal.

Mr. Mongrain: I make the suggestion because we are truly in an austerity period. We have had to cut fairly considerable amounts, for instance in the field of welfare in which we have to invest great amounts, also in the field of regional disparities. Briefly, all the various Departments have had cuts. People are complaining, for instance, about increasing Post Office rates and the reduction of postal service.

En comparaison avec tout ce que je viens d'énumérer, il reste quand même que Radio-Canada devient une espèce de luxe; les loisirs, en somme, la culture, c'est bien, c'est enrichissant pour tous les Canadiens. Mais quand il faut se serrer la ceinture au point de se priver, par exemple de son gagne-pain quotidien ou abandonner les questions sociales, je pense qu'on devrait penser aussi à couper du côté de la culture, des loisirs, du côté de l'amusement, qui à ce moment peuvent être considérés comme un luxe.

Compared with everything I have just listed, the CBC appears as a sort of luxury. Of course, entertainment, culture, are enriching for all Canadians. But when we have to tighten our belts to the point of depriving oneself, for instance, of one's daily bread or of abandoning social question, I think we should also be thinking about applying cuts in the field of culture, entertainment, and recreation which can then be considered as a luxury.

Et je pense que le grand public canadien s'attend à cette réduction. Vous nous dites que vos demandes ont déjà été coupées. C'est possible, mais il y a quand même une augmentation de $14,900,000. Et puis, même en coupant nous restons généreux, nous vous en laissons $4,900,000.

And I think that the public at large expects these cuts. You tell us that your requests have already been reduced. This may be so, but nevertheless there is an increase of $14,900,000. And even though we suggest cuts, we are nevertheless generous since we leave you $4,900,000.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, is this question really appropriate for these officials to discuss. Is not a question of government spending priorities a matter for Parliament? I really do not see how these gentlemen are in a position to answer that question.

M. Broadbent: Monsieur le président, est-ce que des fonctionnaires peuvent discuter cette question? N'est-ce pas au Parlement de discuter la question des dépenses prioritaires? Je ne vois pas du tout comment ces messieurs peuvent être en mesure de répondre à cette question.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je soutiens que ma question est pertinente parce que je demande au président de Radio-Canada si, dans l'hypothèse où je ferais cette suggestion il aurait des raisons sérieuses de me dire que l'administration de Radio-Canada serait compromise.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I maintain that my question is pertinent because I am asking the President of the CBC whether—assuming I were making this suggestion—he would have any serious reasons for telling me that the administration of the CBC is endangered.

• 2150

The Chairman: Yes; but he has also told you that he made a request for $178 million which he regarded as his necessary funds to carry on and that the government, in its wisdom, had cut him back to $166 million.

Le président: Oui, mais il vous a dit aussi qu'il a demandé 178 millions de dollars, somme qu'il estimait nécessaire pour pouvoir continuer le travail, et que le gouvernement, dans sa sagesse, a réduite à 166 millions.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, cette précision m'impressionne un peu moins parce

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, that statement impresses me somewhat less because que les comités ont été formés pour examiner les budgets, non pas pour les voter. Les comités sont constitués pour étudier l'administration, les budgets, non pas pour les approuver les yeux fermés. Je veux savoir pourquoi. Peut-être le ministère est-il au courant, moi je ne le suis pas, et je ne pense pas que mes collègues le soient. Je pense que c'est leur privilège comme le mien de savoir pourquoi.

The Chairman: No; that is a point you should raise in the Committee's business meeting. If you wish to question a Minister on it, then you would have to question...

Mr. Mongrain: No, I am not questioning a Minister; I am questioning the President of CBC.

The Chairman: He cannot give you that answer.

Mr. Mongrain: Why is he here then? He is the one who asked for that money.

The Chairman: He is the one who has to justify to us where that money is going. If you were to question him on the basis of what he was going to do with the extra $35 million that would be a legitimate form of questioning.

M. Mongrain: Alors pourquoi ces budgets-là sont-ils transmis au Comité? Que faisons-nous ici? A quoi ça rime tout ça? Nous allons passer la journée...

The Chairman: The annual report is before the Committee. But in point of fact the agreement was that we would have the annual report in lieu of the estimates so as to have more time to spend with the CBC. This was a means of getting around that difficulty. With that understanding I am prepared to admit this.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je soutiens que le comité n'a pas sa raison d'être si ses membres ne peuvent pas poser des questions sur le budget et faire des propositions en rapport avec le budget. Pourquoi passons-nous la journée à questionner ces messieurs? Que faisons-nous ici? A quoi ça rime tout ça?

The Chairman: They are here to provide a justification of the moneys which we, as the Parliament of Canada, have given them to spend. We are not here to question them on how they were able to get the government to increase the amount of money they are spending. There is a distinction.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, would it not be more appropriate to question one section the Committees have been set up to examine the estimates and not to pass them. The Committees have been set up to study the administration and estimates, and not be a rubber stamp. I want to know why. Perhaps the Department is aware of the fact, I am not, and neither do I think that my colleagues are. I think it is our privilege to know why.

Le président: Non. Il faut soulever cette question aux réunions de travail du Comité. Si vous voulez interroger un ministre là-dessus, vous devrez alors interroger...

M. Mongrain: Je ne suis pas en train d'interroger un ministre, mais le président de Radio-Canada.

Le président: Il ne peut vous répondre.

M. Mongrain: Pourquoi est-il ici, alors? C'est lui qui a demandé cet argent.

Le président: Il doit nous justifier où va cet argent. Si vous lui demandez ce qu'il va faire avec 35 millions de dollars supplémentaires, ça c'est une question recevable.

Mr. Mongrain: Then why are these estimates sent to Committee? What are we doing here? What is the use of it all? We are going to spend the day...

Le président: Le rapport annuel est soumis au Comité. Mais l'accord a été que nous aurions le rapport annuel au lieu des prévisions budgétaires, pour que nous puissions consacrer plus de temps à Radio-Canada. C'était un moyen de surmonter la difficulté. Dans cette condition, je suis disposé à accepter cela.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I maintain that the Committee has no reason for being here if its members are not allowed to put questions on the estimates and to make proposals relating to that. Why are we spending the day questioning these gentlemen? What are we doing here? What is the point of all this?

Le président: Ils sont ici pour justifier les fonds que nous, en tant que Parlement du Canada, leur avons alloués. Mais nous ne sommes pas ici pour les interroger sur la façon dont ils ont obtenu du gouvernement une augmentation de leur budget. Il faut distinguer.

M. Broadbent: Monsieur le président, ne vaudrait-il pas mieux étudier une partie du of the budget and ask why they want to spend such-and-such on "x", or "y", or "z"? It seems to me that that might be more appropriate than just to say to the head of the CBC, "Why do you not lop off the 10 per cent, or $10 million?"

Mr. Mongrain: Non, ce n'est pas cela que j'ai demandé. J'ai dit au président de Radio-Canada: je me propose de faire une demande pour couper votre budget de 10 millions. Pouvez-vous nous démontrer que cette mesure pourrait mettre en danger la bonne administration de Radio-Canada? Si M. Davidson me prouve que cette mesure peut compromettre la bonne administration de Radio-Canada, je serai peut-être prêt à accepter son point de vue. Mais on a coupé dans tous les ministères, monsieur le président, on a même coupé dans des ministères où ça fait mal.

The Chairman: Yes; that is a legitimate form of questioning.

Mr. Mongrain: On a en tous cas coupé les travaux d'hiver et bien d'autres choses. Nous autres, les députés, entendons le contribuable canadien nous dire ce qu'il en pense de tout cela: «on dépense des centaines de millions de dollars, notre argent, à Radio-Canada, pour des émissions folichonnes, ou pour encourager des gens qui prêchent le séparatisme, l'athéisme ou la révolution». Or ces gens là ne coupent eux, leur budget augmente de 14 millions de dollars, cette année.

The Chairman: No; that is a legitimate form of questioning, too.

Mr. Broadbent: Cut out programs on atheism.

The Chairman: You cannot put them into a position where they have to play the Cabinet role as well as their own.

Mr. Mongrain: No, no; we will be the ones who will discuss with Cabinet. I am asking questions of the one who is responsible for the CBC.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask Mr. Mongrain to put the question to me?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Mongrain: Je le répète, monsieur le président. J'ai l'intention de proposer au Comité qu'on recommande à la Chambre, en tenant compte du contexte d'austérité, de couper votre budget de 10 millions de dollars. Pouvez-vous me donner des raisons sérieuses pour me convaincre que cette diminution budget et leur demander pourquoi ils veulent dépenser tant ou tant pour «x», «y» ou «z»? Il me semble que cela vaudrait mieux que de tout simplement demander au président de Radio-Canada pourquoi il ne coupe pas 10 p. 100, ou 10 millions de dollars de son budget?

Mr. Mongrain: No, that is not what I asked. I told the president of the CBC as follows: I am going to ask for a reduction of about $10 million in your budget. Can you show us that this will endanger the sound administration of the CBC? If Mr. Davidson can prove that this will endanger the sound administration of the CBC, perhaps I would accept his point of view. But, Mr. Chairman, there have been reductions in all Departments, even in Departments where it hurts.

Le président: Oui, votre question est recevable.

Mr. Mongrain: In any case, winter works and a good many other items have been reduced.

We, the Members of Parliament, hear what the Canadian taxpayer thinks of all this. For instance: Hundreds of millions of dollars—our money—are spent by the CBC on silly programs to encourage people who preach separatism, atheism, or revolution. Moreover, these people do not make any cuts, on the contrary, their budget has this year been increased by $14 million.

Le président: Cette question est aussi recevable.

M. Broadbent: Il n'y a qu'à éliminer les programmes sur l'athéisme.

Le président: Vous ne pouvez leur demander de jouer le rôle du cabinet, et le leur.

Mr. Mongrain: C'est nous qui allons discuter avec le cabinet. Je pose des questions à celui qui est responsable de Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, puis-je demander à M. Mongrain de me poser la question à moi?

Le président: Oui.

Mr. Mongrain: I shall repeat it, Mr. Chairman. I have the intention to submit to the Committee that a recommendation be made to the House, taking into account the austerity context, to reduce your budget by $10 million. Could you give me serious reasons to convince me that this reduction could endanger, pourrait mettre en danger la bonne administration de Radio-Canada pour l'année qui vient?

[Interpretation]

in the coming year, the sound administration of the CBC?

Dr. Davidson: I think I would have to say, Mr. Mongrain and gentlemen, that this would pose very serious consequences for the Corporation's budget. It would mean, for example, that, by one means or another, we would have to cut services which are presently being provided to the Canadian people.

M. Davidson: Je dois vous dire, monsieur Mongrain et messieurs, que cela poserait de graves conséquences pour le budget de la Société. Nous serions obligés, par exemple, de couper les services, d'une façon ou de l'autre, que l'on fournit à la population canadienne. L'augmentation du budget de la Société pour

Almost the entire amount of the increase in the Corporation's budget for next year is required for the increases in wages resulting from collective bargaining that has been carried on with the Corporation's unions.

They are part of the built-in costs of carrying forward into next year operations such as the Frontier Coverage Packages, the new stations which have been opened up this year and which impose consequences on the 1969 budget.

For example: the taking over of a station in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, which is now an owned-and-operated CBC station; we have hopes of acquiring a television station in Moose Jaw for the purpose of providing for the first time a CBC-owned-and-operated station located in the province of Saskatchewan, to provide CBC programming to the people of Saskatchewan on the same basis as that on which the majority of other provinces are receiving it at the present time; and we have plans for opening up a Moncton French-language regional production centre.

These things cannot be done on the basis of the funds that have been provided us for the previous year. We cannot meet the increases in wages that have been negotiated with the unions for 1969-70 on the basis of the budget that we have geared to existing wage levels.

We cannot open and operate facilities such as the Charlottetown television station or the Regina centre or the Moncton production centre for the year 1969-70 unless we have additional funds for this purpose.

These are illustrative of the problem that is presented for us if we are required to operate the Corporation on less than the funds we have established with the Treasury Board and with the government as being necessary for next year's operation.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur Davidson vous me donnez plusieurs raisons. Mais je vois qu'au seul poste production, et distribution, il y a une augmentation de 10 millions de dollars.

l'année prochaine est due presque entièrement aux augmentations de salaire qui découlent de la négociation collective qui a eu lieu avec les syndicats de la Société, et aussi des coûts pour des opérations telles que les émissions pour les Territoires du Nord, les nouvelles stations qui sont mises en service, etc.

Par exemple, la reprise d'une station à Charlottetown, Île-du-Prince-Édouard, qui est maintenant une station de Radio-Canada; nous espérons acquérir une station de télévision à Moose Jaw pour fournir, pour la première fois, une station de Radio-Canada en Saskatchewan afin de leur fournir des programmes sur la même base que les autres provinces. Nous envisageons aussi d'ouvrir un centre régional de production française à Moncton.

Ces choses ne peuvent pas être faites avec les fonds qui nous ont été alloués pour l'année antérieure. Nous ne pourrions pas faire face aux augmentations de salaire qui ont été négociées avec les syndicats pour 1969-1970 avec le budget que nous avons et qui est établi en fonction des salaires actuels.

On ne peut pas avoir de nouvelles installations à Charlottetown, à Regina, ou à Moncton, pour 1969-1970, si nous n'avons pas ces fonds supplémentaires.

Cela explique le problème auquel nous avons à faire face si nous devons faire fonctionner la Société avec des fonds inférieurs à ceux que nous croyons nécessaires, avec le Conseil du Trésor, et le gouvernement, pour l'année prochaine.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Davidson, you have given me various reasons. But I see that the sole item covering production and distribution shows an increase of $10 million. On the

[Texte]

Par contre, vous nous avez dit aussi plus tôt que votre cote d'écoute s'améliorait considérablement. Il est donc raisonnable de penser que pour l'année prochaine, au lieu de récolter 40 millions de dollars de revenus, vous pourriez peut-être avec un peu d'effort récolter 42 millions; et vous pourriez peut-être dans certains secteurs faire des économies et survivre quand même. De la sorte, vous pourriez dire au public: «nous aussi avons subi le programme d'austérité.»

Je crois que cette mesure s'impose, parce que l'opinion publique est que à Radio-Canada, il y a un gaspillage effréné. Les gens se disent: on coupe dans tous les autres ministères, mais à Radio-Canada, non seulement on ne coupera pas, mais il y aura une augmentation de 14 millions. Nous autres, députés, qui recevons les plaintes, des gens qui paient les taxes avec lesquelles vit Radio-Canada, devons répondre à ces plaintes.

Dr. Davidson: I might mention, Mr. Mongrain, that our estimates on the revenue side, if I recall correctly, already contemplate an increase in the gross amount of revenue we are expecting from commercial advertising, and I think it is of the order of $2 million.

Mr. Mongrain: Two million dollars?

Dr. Davidson: Yes; we have taken account of that.

With great respect, I am not all that convinced that the people of Canada, who are relying upon the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for broadcasting services, regard the cost of the CBC, which amounts to two cents per day per person in Canada, as being an exorbitant cost for maintaining a national broadcasting service.

There are those who look at it differently, who say that there is waste and extravagance in the Corporation and that it is living at an extravagant rate. But we do reach out to cover potentially 20 million of the 21 million Canadians and when you reduce this cost of providing a typically Canadian broadcasting service, in both languages through the nine services that I have referred to, for something very close to two cents per person per day, I am not convinced, with great respect, that this is a cause of concern to the Canadian people generally, relative to cost.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur Davidson, je vais vous conseiller d'améliorer votre service de relations extérieures, parce que les gens, à travers toute la province de Québec, considèrent other hand, you told us, a while ago that your rating was improving considerably. Therefore, it is reasonable to expect that next year, instead of collecting $40 million in revenue, with a bit of effort you could perhaps collect $42 million. You might perhaps make some savings in some sectors and survive all the same. Thus, you could tell the public: We also have done our share in the austerity drive.

I believe that this measure is imperative because according to public opinion there is a great deal of waste at the CBC. People are saying that cuts are made in all other Departments, but nothing will be cut at the CBC. On the contrary, there will be an increase of $14 million. We, the Members of Parliament, who receive the complaints from the taxpayers whose money keeps the CBC going, must answer these complaints.

M. Davidson: Nous prévoyons déjà une augmentation des recettes publicitaires brutes de l'ordre de deux millions de dollars.

M. Mongrain: Deux millions de dollars?

M. Davidson: Oui. Nous avons déjà tenu compte de ça. Je ne suis pas du tout convaincu que le peuple canadien, qui compte sur Radio-Canada pour les services de télévision et de radio, considère le coût de Radio-Canada, deux cents par personne par jour, comme un coût extrêmement élevé pour maintenir un service national de radiodiffusion.

Il y en a d'autres qui disent qu'il y a du gaspillage, des extravagances, au sein de la Société. Mais nous cherchons à atteindre 20 des 21 millions de Canadiens et quand nous réduisons le coût des services dans les deux langues, alors que nous fonctionnons sur une base de deux cents par jour par personne, je ne pense pas que cela soit quelque chose qui préoccupe beaucoup les Canadiens en général.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Davidson, I would advise you to improve your public relations service, because people throughout the province of Quebec, are of the opinion, rightly or rent, à tort ou à raison, que Radio Canada... Vos relations extérieures sont déficientes, et à bien des points de vue.

M. Picard: Il faudrait dépenser plus d'argent sur les relations extérieures.

M. Mongrain: Peut-être pas dépenser plus d'argent, mais peut-être changer les méthodes de ces gens-là.

M. Picard: Puis-je faire une remarque, Monsieur Mongrain, qui ne répond peut-être pas directement à votre question, mais qui semble mettre l'accent sur certains aspects.

L'augmentation du budget cette année, 1967-1968, a été d'un peu moins de 4 p. 100. Il y a eu une augmentation importante des services, M. Davidson vous en a parlé, donc il y a eu une augmentation importante des services; il y a eu une augmentation du budget, 4 p. 100, et pourtant, l'augmentation des coûts est de l'ordre de 7 à 8 ou même 9 p. 100 selon les secteurs, en particulier, dans celui le la main-d'œuvre qui est un domaine où les coûts sont certainement les plus importants chez nous. L'augmentation accordée aux syndicats, et vous savez qu'à cet égard il n'y a quand même pas une liberté totale, l'augmentation qui leur a été accordée en termes de coûts totaux, c'est-à-dire d'augmentation de salaires et de bénéfices, est de l'ordre de 8 p. 100.

De telle sorte que si on analyse le budget de l'année 1967-1968, on peut calculer en gros une augmentation des coûts de 8 p. 100. Une augmentation des opérations, on en a parlé: The Frontier Package Charlottetown, ainsi de suite, et tout ça s'est fait avec budget accru de 4 p. 100. Cela répond un peu à la question, d'ailleurs.

M. De Bané: A quelle page, monsieur Picard?

Une voix: Moi, je vois au-delà de 10 p. 100.

M. De Bané: Alors, voulez-vous me dire où vous prenez le 4 p. 100 monsieur Picard?

M. Picard: Je suis à la page 81. L'augmentation du budget de 1967-1968 eu égard à ce qui a été accordé en 1967-1968 est passée de $144 à $151 millions, je pense.

M. De Bané: Regardons, si vous voulez, page 81, monsieur Mongrain, si vous le permettez...

M. Mongrain: Oui, oui.

M. De Bané: A la page 81 nous avons «Deniers Publics» en 1966, $95 millions, «Deniers Publics», en 1967, $112 millions, en 1968, $139 millions.

[Interpretation]

wrongly, that the CBC... Your public relations are deficient from many points of view.

Mr. Picard: We should spend more money on public relations.

Mr. Mongrain: Perhaps not spend more money, but change the method.

Mr. Picard: Allow me to make one comment, Mr. Mongrain, which perhaps does not answer your question directly but seems to put certain things in a better perspective.

The increase in the budget this year, 1967-68, was a little less than 4%. There was an important increase in services, Mr. Davidson talked to you about it, so there was a serious increase in the services; there was an increase of 4% in the budget, and yet, the increase in cost in the order of 7 to 8 or even 9% according to the various sectors, especially in the field of manpower which shows certainly the most important costs in our organization. The increase in salaries which was granted to the unions—and you know that with regard to this there is no absolute freedom—the increase that was granted to them in terms of total cost, i.e. the increase in salaries and benefits, is in the order of 8%.

So, if you analyse the 1967-1968 budget, you can calculate roughly an increase in costs of about 8%. An increase in operations, as mentioned earlier; the Frontier Package Charlottetown, and so forth, all this was carried out on a budget that was increased by 4%. Actually, this is part of the answer.

Mr. de Bané: On what page, Mr. Picard?

An hon. Member: I see over than 10%.

Mr. de Bané: Then where did you take your 4%, Mr. Picard?

Mr. Picard: Well, I am at page 81. The increase of the 1967-1968 budget, having regard to what was granted in 1967-1968, went from $144 million to, I believe, $151 million.

Mr. de Bané: Let's look at page 81, if you will allow, Mr. Mongrain...

Mr. Mongrain: Of course.

Mr. de Bané: On page 81, under Public Funds, we have in 1966, $95 million, and under Public Funds, we have $112 million in 1967, and $139 million in 1968.

[Texte]

M. Picard: Oui.M. De Bané: Alors, ce n'est pas une augmentation de 4 p. 100, monsieur Picard.Mr. Davidson: This is the year 1967-68 Mr. Picard is talking about.Mr. Picard: You see we moved about $140 million to $151 million but the international service, which is about $4 million, is not included in that $140 million. So, the total increase of the grant this year was $7 million which is slightly lower than 4 per cent in the total spending of the Corporation.

What I am saying is that with an increase in costs of 8 per cent, manpower and the increase in costs in buying services was even higher than that in some cases. With an increase in cost of 8 to 10 per cent—let us put it at 8 per cent; basically the union, wages and all that—with an increase in services we have financed all that with a 4 per cent increase in budget.

M. Mongrain: Bien, écoutez bien, monsieur Picard. Vous considérez cela dans le contexte, que je qualifierai de restreint, même si ça ne l'est pas, de Radio-Canada. Pour notre part, nous devons l'examiner dans un contexte plus large, dans le contexte dans lequel le voit de contribuable canadien qui a vu son impôt augmenter de 2 p. 100, qui a vu diminuer les services des Postes en même temps que le coût des Postes grimpait et qui a vu des coupures faites à différents paliers et qui l'affectent. Alors, il se dit: «Pour Radio-Canada, une augmentation de 14 millions.» A son point de vue, c'est encore tout de même du luxe, ou enfin ce qu'il faut pour occuper des loisirs, disons que cela aide à la culture aussi, mais le pain quotidien passe avant.

M. Picard: Monsieur Mongrain, dans la visite que vous ferez faire à M. Davidson, je vous demanderais de demander aux gens comment ils seraient prêts à payer simplement pour avoir le hockey le samedi soir. Je suis sûr qu'ils paieraient pour cela, seulement pour cette émission.

M. Mongrain: Oui, si on ne pose la question que de cette façon, mais si on leur dit: «Voici, il y a un budget de tant et à la fin de l'année, vous serez imposés pour tant.» Ils vont vous dire: «C'est correct, donnez-nous le hockey mais supprimez telle symphonie ou tel spectacle de ballet.» C'est ce qu'ils vont dire. Vous présentez un ballet, dimanche soir, je suis sûr que les ouvriers du comté de Trois-Rivières auraient préféré avoir une joute de hockey.

[Interprétation]

Mr. Picard: Yes.Mr. de Bané: So, it is not an increase of 4%, Mr. Picard.M. Davidson: M. Picard parle de l'année 1966-1967.

M. Picard: Nous sommes passés d'environ 140 millions à 151 millions, mais dans ces 140 millions ne figurent pas les services internationaux qui représentent environ 4 millions; de sorte que l'augmentation totale de l'octroi cette année a été de 7 millions, ce qui est légèrement inférieur à 4 p. 100 des dépenses totales de la Société.

Ce que je dis, c'est qu'avec une augmentation de 8 p. 100 du coût de la main-d'œuvre et une augmentation encore plus forte des services; avec une augmentation de coût de 8 à 10 p. 100, mettons 8 p. 100, essentiellement en traitements, etc., et une augmentation des services, nous avons réussi à tout financer avec une augmentation de 4 p. 100 du budget.

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, but look, here, Mr. Picard, listen carefully. You put all this in the context—which I will call limited, even though it may not be so—of the CBC. In so far as we are concerned, we must analyse it in a broader context, in that of the Canadian taxpayer whose income tax was increased by 2 per cent, who saw postal services being decreased while the cost of the postal services was increased, and who saw that cuts were made at various levels which affect him. So he says: "Well the CBC has another increase of $14 million". From his viewpoint, it is still a luxury. This is after all for entertainment, it also helps culture, but one's daily bread is more important.

Mr. Picard: Mr. Mongrain, while visiting Mr. Davidson, I would ask you to ask people how they would be willing to pay to get their hockey program on Saturday evenings. I am sure that they would pay for that, for that program only.

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, if you only ask the question that way, but if you say: "Look, this is our budget and you will be taxed so much at the end of the year". They will say: "All right, do away with this symphony or this ballet and leave hockey". This is what they will say. For instance, when on Sunday nights you present a program on ballet, I am sure that the working people in Trois-Rivières would prefer to watch a hockey game.

[Text]

M. Picard: Oui, mais les membres de l'ACTRA et de la FAC aiment beaucoup mieux avoir un ballet.

M. Mongrain: C'est possible, mais enfin, cela ne répond pas à ma question. Alors, je m'arrête là, monsieur le président, je ne suis pas satisfait de la réponse, mais je veux laisser le temps à d'autres d'intervenir.

• 2205

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, can we have the witnesses back tomorrow at 3.30?

The Chairman: No, it will not be possible. We have made tentative arrangements for them to come back on the 11th March.

Mr. Broadbent: Can we stay an extra half hour?

M. Mongrain: J'invoque le Règlement, et pour appuyer la demande de mon collègue, j'avais demandé, et j'insiste, que M. Thibault comparaisse ici, j'aurais des questions à lui poser. Je n'ai pas eu de réponse. Ce n'est pas nécessaire que se soit aujourd'hui, ça peut être dans deux semaines ça peut être dans trois semaines.

The Chairman: I said that we would discuss this in the Steering Committee before we did anything. I think we would want to be very careful about the questioning of any individuals.

Mr. Mongrain: I thought it was understood, Mr. Chairman. You will remember we discussed it together.

The Chairman: Yes, and I apologize, I thought he would be here...

Mr. Mongrain: You told me he would be here.

The Chairman: ...as part of the delegation. Perhaps the next time they come back they could arrange that he be here.

Mr. Mongrain: May I ask a question of Mr. Davidson: have you any objection to Mr. Thibault appearing before this Committee?

The Chairman: I would be inclined to object to his appearing as a witness himself, but if he is part of a delegation here to answer questions on what he is doing, then I would have no objection.

Mr. Mongrain: I do not object to any delegation; let them be a dozen or two, if they wish.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Picard: Yes, but the members of ACTRA and FAC much prefer to have ballet.

Mr. Mongrain: This may be so, but anyway this does not answer my question. So, I shall stop here, Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied with the answer, but I will give an opportunity to others to speak.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): J'invoque le Règlement, monsieur le président.

Est-ce que nous pouvons demander aux témoins de revenir demain à 3 h. 30?

Le président: Je regrette, ce ne sera pas possible. Nous avons tenté de convenir avec eux qu'ils reviennent le 11 mars.

M. Broadbent: Pouvons-nous rester une demi-heure de plus?

Mr. Mongrain: Point of order. And to support my colleague's request, I had asked, and I insist, that Mr. Thibault should appear here; I would have some questions to put to him. I received no answer. It does not have to be today, it could be in two or three weeks.

Le président: J'ai dit que nous en parlerions au sein du comité directeur avant de faire quoi que ce soit.

Nous voulons être très prudent en ce qui concerne les questions aux témoins.

M. Mongrain: Je pensais que c'était entendu, monsieur le président, rappelez-vous que nous en avons discuté ensemble.

Le président: Oui, je m'excuse. Je pensais qu'il serait ici...

M. Mongrain: Vous m'aviez dit qu'il serait ici.

Le président: Oui avec la délégation. Peut-être que la prochaine fois la délégation pourra s'arranger pour qu'il vienne.

M. Mongrain: Puis-je poser une question à M. Davidson? Avez-vous des objections à ce que M. Thibault vienne témoigner devant le comité?

Le président: Comme témoin lui-même. Je tendrais à m'opposer à ce qu'il vienne lui-même comme témoin mais s'il fait partie d'une délégation venant ici pour répondre à des questions, alors, je n'ai pas d'objection.

M. Mongrain: Je n'ai aucune objection à une délégation même s'ils sont une ou deux douzaines.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Are there any further points of order?

Mr. Osler: On a point of order, I would be violently opposed to it.

The Chairman: It being past ten o'clock perhaps we had best adjourn. We will confirm with you later that Mr. Davidson and his colleagues will be able to come back on March 11.

Our next meeting will be held on Thursday at 9.30 when the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists will be appearing; and on February 25 we will have Bill S-5, an Act to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act.

Mr. Osler: May I ask one question which will fit into this? I do not really mean to open a can of worms. What is your present employment figure?

Dr. Davidson: It is 8900 and some, the same as it was two years ago.

The Chairman: Meeting adjourned.

[Interprétation]

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres personnes qui veulent invoquer le Règlement?

M. Osler: Si c'était un point de Règlement je m'y opposerais violemment.

Le président: Comme il est passé 10 heures, je pense que le mieux serait d'ajourner. Nous confirmerons plus tard que M. Davidson et ses collègues reviendront le 11 mars.

La prochaine réunion du comité sera jeudi à 9 h 30. L'Association des artistes de la radio et de la télévision témoignera devant nous, et le 25 février nous aurons le bill visant à amender la loi sur la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines, le Bill S-5.

M. Osler: Une autre question qui peut s'insérer dans ces délibérations, je ne voudrais pas avoir l'air inquisiteur mais quel est votre nombre d'employés?

M. Davidson: Environ 8,900 comme il y a deux ans.

Le président: Réunion ajournée.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, February 20, 1969.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I think we can begin. We have the number of people we agreed to have on this end of testimony.

We have with us representatives of the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists: Mr. Victor Knight, the national president and Mr. Paul Siren, the general secretary.

As you know, we are continuing to hold hearings on the CBC Annual Report. I will turn the floor over to Mr. Knight who has a 15 minute statement to make, then we will proceed in the usual way with questions.

For the benefit of new members on this Committee, we operate on the basis of questions by topic, and we exhaust a topic before going on to the next one. Generally speaking, we do not run a clock on you but you do become a little too long then we cut you off.

I will now ask Mr. Knight to make his presentation.

Mr. Victor Knight (National President, Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists): Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Canadian T.V. Broadcasting has tended to follow quite naturally a North American pattern established first in the United States of America, where local stations have been responsible for creating programs of local news and programs of Community Affairs. The national or regional networks generally speaking have supplied national news and the larger public affairs programs, while the independent producers, essentially Hollywood, have supplied that section of programming that can loosely be described as entertainment. All of this has been financed by American industry and commerce who have found it profitable to use TV as a means of advertising.

This has been possible because of the large number of stations, and although the unit cost of manufacturing a program is extremely high, the share of the cost to each station or network is such that it can be sold to advertisers within bearable limits and at the same time return a profit to the producer.

This form of organization of Broadcasting—it is an ad hoc form of organization which has grown up with the industry—seems to serve the United States public

TÉMOIGNAGES

Le jeudi, 20 février 1969.

Le président: Messieurs, nous sommes en nombre. Nous avons avec nous des représentants de l'Association des artistes de la radio et de la télévision; M. Victor Knight, le président national, et M. Paul Siren, le secrétaire général. Nous entendrons des témoignages sur le rapport annuel de la Société Radio-Canada. Je remettrai la parole à M. Knight, qui a une déclaration d'environ 15 minutes à vous faire, et nous allons ensuite passer aux questions. Je dirai, pour le bénéfice des nouveaux membres, que nous posons les questions sur chaque sujet, à tour de rôle, et nous épuisons un sujet avant de passer à un autre. Nous ne voulons pas vous limiter à une certaine période de temps mais, si vous parlez trop longtemps, nous allons vous prier de céder la parole à quelqu'un d'autre. Monsieur Knight, vous avez la parole.

M. Victor Knight (président national, Association canadienne des artistes de la radio et de la télévision): Je vous remercie, monsieur le président. La télévision, au Canada, tend à suivre les politiques établies aux États-Unis, où les postes locaux préparent les émissions de nouvelles locales et d'intérêt général dans le domaine des affaires locales. Les réseaux s'occupent des émissions de nouvelles nationales et d'affaires publiques alors que les producteurs indépendants, je songe à Hollywood, fournissent les programmes de divertissement. Tout ceci a été financé par l'industrie américaine qui a trouvé profitable de se servir de la télévision comme véhicule publicitaire.

Ceci a été rendu possible en raison du grand nombre de stations et, même si le coût original est très élevé la part que doit verser chaque station est telle que l'émission peut être vendue aux annonceurs et rapporter un profit au producteur.

Cette forme d'organisation de la radiodiffusion a bien servi la population américaine mais lorsqu'on s'en sert au Canada, elle a toutefois certaines faiblesses. Les extremely well, but when it is used in Canada is has certain weaknesses. The local stations in Canada, for instance, have indeed been able to provide local news and community affairs programs in a very satisfactory manner in most cases. The two networks have in the main provided good coverage of national and international news. Public affairs programs from both networks have in the main been provocative and thought-provoking, although sometimes lacking in depth. That is an opinion, if you will excuse it. They tend too frequently to treat public affairs shows as journalism, rather than the study of the social problems, but as we said, in the main their work has been worthwhile and laudatory.

It is in the realm of the loosely classified entertainment section that the greater difficulties have arisen. The U.S. system depends very largely on independent producers, mainly Hollywood, for this section of their programming. But Hollywood is in California and its Canadian equivalent does not to all intents and purposes exist. The U.S. system can maintain Hollywood because the U.S. stations collectively form a huge market. The Canadian imitation of the U.S. system with its much smaller number of stations has been unable to support any large independent producing industry in Canada, and in consequence has had to supply its needs from the same source as its U.S. counterparts, namely Hollywood.

The result has been that entertainment in Canadian TV has been spoken with an American accent, that Canadian TV has been unnaturally divided, that public affairs have been written and presented by Canadians for Canadians, and that entertainment has been written and presented by Americans for Americans, and Canadians, as it were, have simply plugged in. This may seem like an ideal arrangement if considerations were limited to economic ones, and if entertainment was mere titillation, but neither of these is true. I will deal if I may with entertainment first.

A closer examination of the economics of the entertainment industry reveals two things, first: that in spite of the size of the U.S. market, it is not sufficient to support its own productions centres entirely alone, and needs a world market to be economically viable, and secondly: that Canada is considered by the Americans to be part of the North American or the domestic market and not a foreign market as in Britain, for instance. Therefore in theory at least any Canadian Producer should be in the same relationship to the North American market as is a U.S. producer.

Through an accident of history and geography, however, the U.S. producer is in a position of privilege over any potential Canadian counterpart. The series of accidents that created Hollywood in the early days of cinema history, the need for reliable natural light being the most important, has given the U.S. in general and California in particular, a place of primacy in postes locaux au Canada ont pu présenter les nouvelles locales et des émissions d'affaires publiques locales d'une façon très satisfaisante dans la plupart des cas. Les deux réseaux ont assez bien couvert les nouvelles nationales et internationales. Les émissions d'affaires publiques des deux réseaux ont forcé, en général, le public à penser, même si parfois elles étaient un peu superficielles. Trop souvent, on tente de faire du journalisme au lieu d'une étude des problèmes sociaux en profondeur, mais nous le répétons, en général, ces émissions en valaient la peine.

C'est dans le domaine des divertissements que les problèmes se sont posés. Le système américain dépend beaucoup des producteurs indépendants, ceux de Hollywood, pour ces émissions. Mais Hollywood est en Californie et sa contrepartie canadienne n'existe pas, toutes fins pratiques. Le système américain peut conserver Hollywood parce que les postes des États-Unis constituent un marché énorme. Le nombre de stations étant plus limité, le Canada n'a pu aider au maintien d'une grande industrie indépendante au pays, et il dû s'approvisionner à la même source que les États-Unis.

Le résultat, c'est que les programmes du divertissement au Canada ont un accent américain. Le résultat est que les émissions d'affaires publiques sont de nature canadienne, alors que les émissions de variété ont été écrites par des Américains pour des Américains. Cela semblerait peut-être idéal si les seules considérations étaient d'ordre économique et si variété voulait uniquement dire rire. Mais tel n'est pas le cas. Permettez-moi de traiter d'abord du deuxième point.

Un examen minutieux de l'aspect économique de l'industrie du divertissement révèle deux choses. D'abord, en dépit du marché américain, elle ne peut pas se suffire et a besoin d'un marché mondial; deuxièmement, le Canada fait partie, d'après les intentions des Américains, du marché local. En théorie, un producteur canadien devrait avoir le même rapport avec le marché nord-américain que les producteurs américains.

Toutefois, le producteur américain se trouve dans une situation privilégiée par rapport aux réalisateurs canadiens.

Cette série d'accidents qui a amené la création de Hollywood au début du siècle, dont le besoin d'un bon éclairage naturel est le plus important, a accordé aux États-Unis, et à la Californie en particulier, une place de première importance en Amérique du Nord, et à un certain moment, dans le monde. L'action gouvernementale en Grande-Bretagne, en France, en Italie

North America—primacy that was at one time world wide, but is so no longer. Due very largely to government action in Britain, Italy, France and the Scandinavian countries, those places now have achieved an equitable share of the total world-market and are able to speak with indigenous voices on their own cinema and TV screens. The governments of European countries that have taken action to assist the TV and film production industries have concentrated in the main in two areas:

They have required foreign film and TV producers to leave a portion of their earnings in the country, to be used in the development of an indigenous production industry.

Secondly, they have attempted to develop a quota system requiring an exchange of some kind between the native productions and foreign productions entering the country.

These two actions have had the effect of creating a pool of capital for the creation of production companies and ensuring a world wide market for the products. No such action has yet been taken by a Canadian government and yet the new Broadcasting Act has pointed to the need for such action.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The witness is reading from a long statement. I presume there will be copies for all members?

Mr. Knight: No, there are not, Mr. Stanbury. I did not consider this to be a brief. Perhaps I should explain. The instructions I got were that if we were to present a brief 50 copies in English and 20 copies in French would be required. It was not my intention at that time to present a brief basically because I have not been able to do the statistical research work which would support this in such a manner that I could call a brief as such. I am of a particularly nervous nature, Mr. Stanbury and, frankly, I did not feel secure enough in myself to make this presentation orally without reference to a written script.

Mr. Stanbury: I am sure you must have a carbon copy. Perhaps we could send it out and have copies made while you continue to read.

Mr. Knight: I brought a few extra copies with me. One is now with the translators and one is with the porters. So I am left with the one only.

Mr. Stanbury: Well I am sure one of them could be picked up so that members of the Committee could get one out of this brief than they could by just listening to you read it.

The Chairman: Yes. I think as a result of this experience, Mr. Stanbury, that we will have to rewrite the dans les pays scandinaves a permis à ces pays de s'emparer d'une part du marché mondial et de faire entendre leur propre voix sur leurs propres écrans de cinéma et de télévision. Les gouvernements de ces pays européens qui ont décidé d'aider les industries nationales de cinéma et de télévision ont concentré leurs efforts sur deux points:

1. On a obligé les producteurs étrangers à laisser une partie de leurs recettes au pays, pour servir à l'épanouissement de l'industrie locale.

2. On a également établi un système de quotas, nécessitant un échange entre les productions indigènes et les productions étrangères.

Ces deux décisions ont eu pour effet l'accumulation de capitaux en vue de la création de sociétés de production et la distribution des produits à l'échelle mondiale.

Rien de semblable n'a été fait par le gouvernement canadien même si la nouvelle Loi sur la radiodiffusion souligne la nécessité d'une mesure en ce sens.

M. Stanbury: Je crois que le témoin va lire une longue déclaration. Je pense qu'il doit y avoir un exemplaire à l'intention de chaque député?

M. Knight: Non, il n'y en a pas, monsieur, car je ne considérerais pas la présente comme un mémoire. Permettez-moi d'expliquer. On m'a dit que si nous devons présenter un mémoire, j'aurais à remettre 50 copies en anglais et 20 copies en français. Je n'avais pas à ce moment-là l'intention de présenter un mémoire, car je n'ai pas pu faire le travail de recherches statistiques nécessaires pour appuyer ce document et le qualifier de mémoire. Je suis un peu nerveux, monsieur Stanbury, et je n'ai pas assez confiance en moi pour vous présenter un exposé sans avoir un texte écrit.

M. Stanbury: Vous en avez certainement au moins une copie. Nous pourrions en faire tirer plusieurs photocopies pendant que vous continuez votre lecture.

M. Knight: J'en avais quelques-unes. Les interprètes ont un de ces exemplaires, et l'autre est aux mains des sténographes. Il ne me reste que la mienne.

M. Stanbury: Quelqu'un pourrait peut-être se passer de la sienne, temporairement, pour que les membres du Comité n'aient pas à se contenter d'en écouter la lecture.

Le président: Je crois qu'à la suite de cette expérience, monsieur Stanbury, il faudra rédiger, à basic instructions which we send out to people. Perhaps we will put an arbitrary limit of five minutes on oral statements and insist on copies of anything longer than that.

Mr. Stanbury: Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid, people will be choosing to call their briefs statements so as to avoid providing members of the Committee with something that we can follow.

The Chairman: That is correct. Will you proceed, Mr. Knight.

Mr. Knight: If I may remind you, the new Broadcasting Act provides a policy which requires anyone using radio frequencies to "safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada." In addition to requiring Canadian ownership and control of the broadcasting system. Section 2(d) of the Broadcasting Act demands: "The programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system* should be varied and comprehensive and should provide reasonable, balanced opportunity for the expression of differing views on matters of public concern, and the programming provided by each broadcaster should be of high standard, using predominantly Canadian creative and other resources."

*"Canadian Broadcasting System" as used in the Act refers to both public and private elements in broadcasting.

Foreign-made variety and dramatic programs, dominating the television screen are not "using predominantly Canadian creative and other resources." Foreign-produced commercials and the engagement of foreign talent for television and radio commercials do not "safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada".

It is not only the performers and writers who have cause for disappointment. They are being denied the opportunity to live and work in Canada, but Canada is being denied a recording industry, a film industry, and any significant Canadian television or radio production.

The lack of a feature film industry in Canada has become a matter of concern to Parliament. The Canadian Film Development Corporation has been created "to foster and promote the development of a feature film industry in Canada." In defining a Canadian feature film. Section 10 (2) of the CFDC Act requires:

(a) that the completed film will, in the judgment of the Corporation, have a significant Canadian creative, artistic and technical content, and that nouveau, les directives que nous faisons parvenir aux témoins. Il faudrait limiter les déclarations orales à 5 minutes et exiger des copies de la déclaration si elle est plus longue.

M. Stanbury: Autrement, les gens préféreraient appeler leurs mémoires des exposés, afin de ne pas avoir à en remettre des exemplaires aux députés.

Le président: Exactement. Veuillez continuer monsieur Knight.

M. Knight: Si vous me permettez de vous le rappeler «La nouvelle Loi sur la radiodiffusion comporte une politique qui veut que toute personne qui se sert de fréquences doit le faire de façon à sauvegarder, enrichir et raffermir la structure culturelle, politique sociale et économique du Canada.» En plus d'exiger la propriété et le contrôle du réseau de radiodiffusion par des Canadiens, l'article 2 (d) de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion exige «que la programmation offerte par le système de radiodiffusion canadienne* devrait être variée et compréhensive et qu'elle devrait fournir la possibilité raisonnable et équilibrée d'exprimer des vues différentes sur des sujets qui préoccupent le public et que la programmation de chaque radiodiffuseur devrait être de haute qualité et utiliser principalement des ressources canadiennes créatrices et autres.

Les émissions de variété et dramatiques réalisées à l'étranger, qui dominent l'écran de télévision «n'utilisent pas principalement des ressources canadiennes créatrices et autres». Des messages publicitaires réalisés à l'étranger et l'engagement d'artistes étrangers pour la réalisation de messages commerciaux pour la télévision et la radio ne servent pas «à sauvegarder, enrichir et raffermir la structure culturelle, politique, sociale et économique du Canada».

Ce ne sont pas seulement les artistes et les auteurs qui sont déçus. On leur refuse l'occasion de travailler au Canada, mais on refuse en même temps au Canada l'occasion d'avoir une industrie d'enregistrement, une industrie de film et une proportion considérable de réalisations canadiennes pour la radio et la télévision.

Le manque d'une industrie de longs métrages au Canada devient une inquiétude pour le Parlement. La Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne a été créée précisément à cette fin. Lorsqu'on a pensé de définir l'expression «long métrage canadien», l'article 10 (2) de la Loi sur la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne prévoit que:

a) que, une fois achevé, le film, de l'avis de la Société, possédera, par sa création, son caractère artistique ou son aspect technique, un caractère arrangements have been made to ensure that the copyright in the completed film will be beneficially owned by an individual resident in Canada, by a corporation incorporated under the laws of Canada, or a province or by any combination of such persons; or

(b) that provision has been made for the production of the film under a co-production agreement entered into between Canada and another country.

These are the requirements that the Canadian people through the Canadian parliament see as essential if the cultural, political social and economic fabric of Canada is to be enriched, strengthened and safeguarded.

Unfortunately an Act of Parliament is not sufficient. Canadians with the acquiescence of past Canadian parliaments have invested in the private sector of the Canadian broadcasting system without such requirements having been imposed on them in the past. So they now have the resources to change their programming in order to comply with the new act? Without further help from those American producers who are using Canada most profitably as a market, their ability to do so remains in doubt.

Up until now we have been discussing the dilemma of the Canadian broadcasting industry in its search for ways and means to provide a form of indigenous programming that will achieve the safeguarding and strengthening of the Canadian fabric, that everyone, 0955

the Canadian people, the Canadian parliament, the Canadian broadcasters and the Canadian writers and performers see as desirable. If Canadian programming and films are to be provided then this last group, the writers and the performers, will have an essential part in its creation. They are a group of Canadians who have a very special stake in the future of Canadian broadcasting and who have been among the victims of the present system of organization, especially the victims of the system of organization that has caused an unnatural division between a discussion of public affairs and entertainment. Or, to put it another way, a division between the pamphleteer and the poet.

If the journalist together with the social and political scientist is to discuss public affairs, the poet and the actor must be able to demonstrate the effect of social, political and economic realities on the lives of the people. If this is to be done at all it must be done by the poet and the actor who are native and to the manner born as it were. So that we see that the dilemma of the Canadian broadcast industry and the dilemma of the Canadian writer and performer are essentially the same dilemma.

We are going to suggest, therefore, that a close examination of the problems of the Canadian writer and performer, together with a search for ways and means to solve their particular problems, might point the way to a method of providing the broadcasting industry with the necessary resources to provide the canadien appréciable et que des ententes ont été conclues afin d'assurer que le droit d'auteur relatif au film achevé sera détenu par un particulier résidant au Canada ou par une corporation constituée en vertu des lois du Canada ou d'une province, ou par une combinaison quelconque de ces personnes; ou

b) que des mesures ont été prises pour que le film soit produit aux termes d'un accord de coproduction intervenu entre le Canada et un pays étranger.

Voilà donc des questions qui sont jugées nécessaires par la population canadienne si on veut enrichir la structure culturelle, politique, sociale et économique du Canada et la sauvegarder. Malheureusement, une Loi du Parlement ne suffit pas. Les Canadiens avec le consentement de parlements précédents, ont investi dans le secteur privé sans imposer de rigides conditions par le passé. On sait maintenant que les ressources nécessaires pour modifier les représentations afin de se conformer à la nouvelle Loi sans recevoir d'aide des producteurs américains qui se servent du Canada comme un marché profitable et ils se trouvent dans une situation assez délicate.

Jusqu'ici nous avons parlé du dilemme de l'industrie de la radiodiffusion au Canada dans sa recherche de moyens pour fournir une forme de programmation indigène qui apportera la sauvegarde et le renforcement de la structure canadienne, un fait qui est le désir de tout le monde, la population canadienne, le Parlement canadien, les radiodiffuseurs canadiens, les acteurs et les écrivains canadiens. Toutefois, si des émissions et des films canadiens doivent être réalisés, ce groupe aura un rôle essentiel à jouer. Les écrivains et les acteurs ont un intérêt bien particulier à cette question. Ils ont été les victimes de ce système qui a établi une division anormale entre les programmes d'intérêt public et les programmes de divertissement. Ou, en d'autres termes, une division entre le pamphlétaire et le poète.

Si le journaliste et le politicien vont discuter de questions publiques, le poète et l'acteur doivent pouvoir exposer les effets de réalités sociales, politiques et économiques sur la vie des gens. Si cela doit être fait du tout, il doit l'être par le poète ou l'acteur né au pays ou pour ainsi dire né dans le milieu. Le dilemme de l'écrivain et de l'acteur canadien est essentiellement le même que celui de la Société Radio-Canada. Alors, à ce moment-là, nous croyons qu'un examen intensif du problème de l'écrivain et de l'acteur pourrait permettre de fournir les programmes requis en conformité de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion. Je vais vous donner certains exemples fournis par l'introduction de la télévision par câble.

[Text]

kind of programming required by the Broadcasting Act. For the purposes of this examination we will use the examples provided by the introduction of Community Antenna Services, or cable television.

The Canadian Copyright Act attempts to define the rights due to the creator of an intellectual work. Among others, those rights include the absolute right of the creator of an intellectual work to determine the distribution of that work and the exclusive right to reap the profit from that work. The Act defines those rights, but provides no means of redress against a violation of those rights, except through an action in the courts.

Since there is no machinery for redress, composers of musical works, for instance, have long since realized that while the principle of the Act gives them the right to compensation for the performance of their works the Act does not provide them with the real means of getting the money. Forced by necessity they have formed world embracing performing rights societies that collect on their behalf. No such organization exists for dramatic, comedy or other writers of semi-dramatic works for television, or public affairs writers for television.

Community Antenna services take a programme created in one locality and deliver it to another, and by providing this service are able to make a profit. However, the original broadcaster, the writer, and the performer of the programme are not consulted, and very frequently the programme is being distributed against the will of the owner of the copyright. I would give as an instance there, perhaps, the Canadian Football League's attitude towards Community Antenna Television services. Also, it is done without any compensation to the owner of the copyright. In other words, the Community Antenna operator is taking an intellectual work of another person and using it for his own profit, without any obligation to the owner of that work. This action is most certainly contrary to the spirit of the Copyright Act and, we believe, a legal breach of the Act. In the case of writer he has the possibility of legal action through the courts; the performer has no such recourse.

The writers ability to act in this case is more apparent than real. He is an individual with only an individual's resources. The CATV operators are in the main fairly large corporations with far greater resources than the writer. The writer has to be able to establish in law that a breach of copyright has taken place, and has to do so against each and every CATV operator, if he is able to establish such a breach at all. Even if he were able to establish a breach, there is no clear definition in law as to the monetary equivalent of his rights, neither does he know what he could expect to recover. In other words, he does not have the resources to protect himself in spite of the apparent protection that the law provides.

The writer normally contracts with a broadcaster in order that the original programme may be created and that he may be rewarded for his work. The CATV

[Interpretation]

La Loi sur les droits d'auteur du Canada définit les droits qui reviennent aux créateurs d'une œuvre intellectuelle en ce qui concerne la distribution de cette œuvre et les profits qui en découlent. La Loi définit ces droits mais ne permet pas d'obtenir une indemnité à la suite de la violation de ces droits, sauf devant le tribunal. Étant donné qu'il n'y a pas de mécanisme de réparation, les compositeurs de musique ont depuis lors compris que même si, en principe, la Loi leur donne le droit de recevoir une indemnité, ils ne peuvent pas vraiment obtenir leur argent. Ils ont formé une association qui perçoit ces droits en leur nom. Aucune organisation semblable n'existe dans le domaine dramatique ou de la comédie.

Le service de rediffusion sur câble prend une émission créée dans une région et la transmet dans une autre, et, en fournissant ce service, réalise un bénéfice. Mais le radiodiffuseur, celui qui écrit l'émission, d'autres, ne sont pas consultés. Et l'émission est distribuée sans la permission du propriétaire du droit d'auteur. Par exemple, songez à l'Association canadienne de football. Il fera effet sans verser de compensation à l'auteur. En d'autres termes, l'opérateur de l'antenne communautaire prend le travail intellectuel de quelqu'un d'autre et l'utilise à ses propres fins, sans aucune obligation. Cette mesure est contraire à l'esprit de la Loi sur les droits d'auteur. Nous pensons qu'il s'agit d'une violation de cette loi. Celui qui rédige l'émission devrait avoir un recours légal, tandis que l'acte n'a aucun recours.

Mais les auteurs ont des droits plus apparents que réels. Il s'agit d'une personne qui a des ressources individuelles et les antennes communautaires représentent de grandes sociétés qui ont beaucoup plus de ressources que les auteurs. L'auteur peut établir le fait qu'il y a eu violation de droits d'auteur, et il doit faire et poursuivre tous les opérateurs d'antennes communautaires s'ils veulent obtenir un résultat. Même s'il pouvait établir qu'il y a violation de la loi, il n'y a pas de définition précise dans la Loi sur l'équivalent monétaire de ces droits et il ne sait pas non plus ce qu'il peut s'attendre de recevoir. En somme, il n'a pas les ressources nécessaires pour se protéger, malgré la protection apparente de la Loi.

L'auteur traite ordinairement avec le radiodiffuseur pour que l'émission soit diffusée et qu'il reçoive une compensation. La distribution et la présentation distribution of his work amounts to a separate showing of his work, but the writer cannot hold the contracting broadcaster responsible for this other broadcast since it is taking place outside of the control of the broadcaster.

The performer is even worse off, since he does not have even the apparent protection of the Copyright Act. In 1961 at a convention in Rome, the International Community that is concerned with copyright created an international convention which had the effect of extending to performers similar protection to that which the Bern Convention had granted to the writer. Canada has not yet signed or ratified the Rome Convention of Neighbouring Rights, as that convention is called.

Mr. Osler: Has the United States ratified it?

Mr. Knight: No, sir. We do not know the reasons for Canada's reluctance to protect its performers in the same way that it protects its writers, but perhaps the remarks used by the Minister of Consumer Affairs, when he introduced Bill S-20 into the Canadian Senate, might provide some clue as to those reasons. Bill S-20, which is an act to amend the Copyright Act was introduced into the Senate as a direct result of the actions of a newly formed performing rights society, whose function was to collect royalties on behalf of a number of record manufacturing companies.

The amount of the royalties was estimated as being between $3 million and $5 million per annum and a direct cost to the Canadian broadcasting industry.

The Minister argued in part that the cost was excessive and an undue burden for the broadcasters, and since the records referred to were in the main in origin of foreign manufacture, the moneys paid would be leaving the country and could not therefore be used to develop better programming for Canadian broadcasting. To quote him directly the Minister said:

"It is only fair to say that Sound Recording Licences (SRL) Ltd.

which is the performing rights society referred to,

... has inferred that part of the fees collected would be expended on Canadian artists and performers in an attempt to develop Canadian talent and truly Canadian recordings. But this, of course could only come about as the result of private agreement, as the Copyright Appeal Board has no jurisdiction to set terms and conditions. "Honourable senators should also be reminded that if this legislation is not enacted and the copyright Appeal Board sets a tariff for Sound Recording Licences (SRL) Ltd. for the year 1969, much of the fees collected would eventually go abroad as the major record manufacturers in Canada are subsidiaries or foreign corporations.

son œuvre par câble est un fait distinct, mais l'auteur ne peut tenir le radiodiffuseur responsable de cette émission, puisque cela échappe au contrôle du radiodiffuseur.

Et l'acteur est dans une situation encore plus difficile: il n'a même pas la protection apparente de la Loi sur les droits d'auteur. En 1961, à un congrès à Rome, on s'est intéressé aux droits d'auteur à l'échelle internationale et on a créé une convention internationale qui s'adresse aux acteurs, une protection semblable à celle que la convention de Berne accorde aux écrivains. Le Canada n'a pas encore signé ou ratifié la Convention de Rome sur les droits voisins, comme on l'appelle.

M. Osler: Les États-Unis l'ont-ils ratifiée?

M. Knight: Nous ne savons pas pourquoi le Canada hésite tant à protéger ses acteurs comme elle protège ses écrivains. Mais comme le ministre des Affaires des consommateurs l'a dit en présentant le bill S-20 au Sénat, cela peut nous donner quelques indications.

Le Bill S-20 est une Loi pour modifier la Loi sur les droits d'auteur qui a été présentée au Sénat à la demande de la Société des droits d'auteurs nouvellement formée pour recueillir les droits d'auteur pour un certain nombre de compagnies de disques.

Les droits d'auteur étaient évalués entre 3 et 5 millions par année et étaient payés directement par la radiodiffusion canadienne.

Le ministre a dit que le coût était excessif pour les radiodiffuseurs, et comme les disques étaient en majorité d'origine étrangère, l'argent quitterait le pays et cela ne servirait pas à l'amélioration de nos émissions.

Le ministre a dit et je cite:

Il faut mentionner que la Sound Recording Licences Limited

qui est la Société des droits d'auteurs en question, a dit qu'une partie des frais perçus reviendraient aux artistes canadiens afin d'essayer de développer les talents canadiens et les enregistrements canadiens. Mais ceci se produira seulement à la suite d'ententes personnelles, car la Commission d'appel sur les droits d'auteur n'a pas juridiction pour fixer les termes et les conditions. Les honorables sénateurs devraient aussi se rappeler que si cette loi n'est pas mise en vigueur et si la Commission d'appel sur les droits d'auteur fixe un tarif pour Sound Recording Licences Limited pour 1969, une grande partie des sommes recueillies ira à l'étranger car les fabricants de disques au Canada sont des filiales de compagnies étrangères.

The Rome Convention for Neighbouring Rights provides protection for writers and performers and record manufacturers, both domestic and foreign, and would have the same effect as that feared by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with the record manufacturing performing rights society.

Yet to refuse to sign and ratify the Rome Convention and to amend the Copyright Act by the introduction of Bill S-20, although it does prevent the flow of money from Canada, does nothing to create better Canadian programming, nor does it do anything to assist the Canadian writer and performer. If the government's reasons for not signing the Convention of Rome, and for the introduction Bill S-20 are indeed to prevent the siphoning off of Canadian broadcasting resources into foreign hands, then we can only applaud the intentions, whilst deploring the method.

May we suggest a method that in our opinion will ensure that the interest of the Canadian writer and performer are protected, and at the same time may provide the means to finance in part, at least, the establishment of a Canadian production industry.

The American television and radio broadcasting industry is able to finance itself for the reasons that I have already given. We have already suggested that a form of program exchange might enable the Canadian producers to use the North American markets more fully than they are now able to do. There seems to me to be no reason that this exchange arrangement could not be achieved when one considers the amount of money spent by Canadian television stations and cinemas for the purchase of programs and films. Surely this large amount of money, and I cannot quote it specifically, is good bargaining material.

However, the financing of the programs to be exchanged would remain a problem and it is here perhaps, that a solution to the writers and performers problems might point to a possible source of capital for investment into a production industry. Authors and performers rights could be regarded as falling into two categories, which we shall refer to as primary rights and secondary rights.

Primary rights might be defined as those rights which accrue to the author or performer as a result of a broadcaster or producer engaging his services and guaranteeing payment for them by contract. These would include the original recording and the subsequent exploitation of that recording by the contractor or by other companies or persons working under an agreement with the original contractor.

Secondary rights might be defined as unauthorized re-recording and unauthorized uses of these re-recording by persons or companies not under the control, or without the agreement, of the original contractor and without the permission of the writer or the performer.

[Interpretation]

La convention de Rome sur les droits connexes protège les écrivains, les acteurs et les fabricants de disques, nationaux et étrangers, et aurait le même effet que craint le ministre de la Consommation et des Corporations pour la Société des droits d'auteurs en ce qui concerne la fabrication des disques.

Et pourtant, si on refuse de signer et de ratifier la convention de Rome et si on refuse de modifier la Loi sur les droits d'auteur comme le Bill S-20 le propose cela ne donnera pas de meilleures émissions au Canada et cela ne donnera rien non plus pour aider l'écrivain et l'acteur canadiens. Si le gouvernement ne signe pas la convention de Rome et si la présentation du Bill S-20 vise à empêcher que les ressources ne tombent en de mains étrangères, alors nous ne pouvons qu'applaudir leurs intentions et déplorer leur méthode.

Permettez-nous de suggérer une méthode qui, à notre avis, protégerait les auteurs et les acteurs canadiens et, en même temps, permettrait peut-être de financer, en partie du moins, la création d'une industrie de production canadienne. L'industrie de radio-diffusion et de télévision américaine peut assurer son propre financement pour des raisons que j'ai déjà données. Nous avons déjà suggéré qu'un échange d'émissions pourrait permettre aux producteurs canadiens d'utiliser les marchés nord-américains beaucoup plus qu'ils ne peuvent le faire maintenant. Il n'y a pas de raison pour que cet échange n'existe pas, lorsqu'on songe à la quantité d'argent dépensé par les postes de télévision canadiens et les cinémas pour l'achat de émissions et des films étrangers. Ces sommes importantes, je ne peux donner de chiffres, mais ce sont de fortes sommes, sont un excellent atout pour discuter.

Toutefois, le financement des émissions à échange resterait un problème et c'est là peut-être qu'une solution aux problèmes des écrivains et des acteurs pourrait être une source de capital qui pourrait être investie dans une industrie de production. Les droits des auteurs et des acteurs tombent dans deux catégories que nous appellerons, les droits premiers et les droits secondaires.

Les droits premiers sont des droits qui s'appliquent à l'auteur ou à l'acteur, lorsqu'un réalisateur engage ses services, et lui garantit le paiement des droits par contrat. Cela comprend l'enregistrement original et l'exploitation ultérieure de cet enregistrement par le contractant ou d'autres compagnies ou personnes travaillant sous contrat avec le premier contractant. Les droits secondaires s'appliquent aux réenregistrements non autorisés et aux usages non autorisés de ces enregistrements par des compagnies ou des personnes qui ne sont pas contrôlées ou qui n'ont pas d'accord avec le contractant original et qui n'ont pas la permission de l'auteur ou de l'acteur.

[Texte]

It must be remembered that these uses of both types of recordings, authorized and unauthorized, might occur within Canada or abroad. The writer and the performer through their own efforts and through collective efforts have in the main controlled disposition of primary rights, in Canada at least.

Secondary rights remain uncollected and it seems most at the moment uncollectable both at home and abroad. The only way these rights could be collected abroad is through international copyright or the Rome Convention of Neighbouring Rights, but this implies a reciprocity in the collection of rights for foreign writers and performers and the distribution of those moneys abroad.

Considering the domination of foreign produced programs on Canadian television and radio stations, the collection of residual rights on behalf of foreign performers and writers might prove too costly for Canada and for the Canadian broadcaster, but it might not prove too costly, however, if both Canada and the Canadian broadcasters get a return for their money—namely, an independent Canadian production industry and Canadian programs of international quality.

As we have said, the Canadian writer and performer have controlled the problems of primary rights. In the case of secondary rights he might consider a collective rather than a personal method of distribution, if the collective can be of benefit to the industry, including himself.

The experience of another country may help us to discover how this is to be done. The Norwegian Government has signed and ratified the Rome Convention for Neighbouring Rights to collect on behalf of the Norwegian writers and performers all accruing secondary rights, and on behalf of foreign writers and performers all primary and secondary rights where they apply.

The moneys collected on behalf of foreign performers and writers are not, however, distributed abroad, but are pooled within Norway together with the funds collected through secondary rights for the indigenous writers and performers and the whole amount is then used as a fund to encourage the production of Norwegian programs.

The effect of that pool has been that this capital has been available to finance Norwegian production and the number of foreign productions is being gradually reduced and the fabric of Norwegian life is being strengthened and preserved. The international copyright community have accepted the Norwegian method, and it has become known, as being a legitimate disposition of performing rights as defined by the Convention of Rome.

We said that the Canadian performer and writer might agree to a collective form of distribution of his secondary rights, if he can see a benefit from so doing. The benefit that would accrue would be increased work opportunities through increased Canadian pro-

[Interprétation]

On doit se rappeler que l'utilisation de ces deux types d'enregistrements autorisés et non autorisés peut se produire au Canada ou à l'étranger. L'auteur et l'acteur, par leurs efforts personnels et collectifs, ont dans l'ensemble le contrôle des droits premiers, au Canada du moins.

Les droits secondaires ne sont pas perçus et ils semblent pour le moment impossibles à percevoir, ici ou à l'étranger. La seule façon de collecter ces droits à l'étranger, serait par l'intermédiaire des droits d'auteur internationaux ou de la convention de Rome sur les droits connexes, mais cela implique une réciprocité, c'est-à-dire qu'il nous faudra collecter les droits d'auteur des écrivains et des acteurs étrangers et distribuer cet argent à l'étranger.

Considérant que la majorité de programmes à la télévision et à la radio canadiennes sont étrangers peut-être que cela coûterait trop cher au Canada et aux radiodiffuseurs canadiens. Mais peut-être aussi que cela ne coûterait pas trop cher, si le Canada et les radiodiffuseurs canadiens y trouvaient un avantage. A savoir une industrie de production canadienne indépendante et des programmes canadiens de qualité internationale.

Comme nous l'avons dit, les écrivains et les acteurs ont contrôlé le problème des droits primaires. Dans le domaine des droits secondaires, ils considéreront plutôt une méthode collective que personnelle pour la distribution, si cela peut servir à l'industrie, dont ils font partie.

L'expérience d'un autre pays peut nous permettre de voir comment cela peut se faire. Le gouvernement norvégien a signé et ratifié la convention de Rome pour les droits d'auteur connexes et a accepté de recueillir, au nom des écrivains et des acteurs norvégiens, tous les droits secondaires et au nom des acteurs et écrivains étrangers de recueillir tous les droits primaires et secondaires, lorsque cela s'applique.

Les sommes recueillies pour les étrangers ne sont pas distribuées à l'étranger, mais sont gardées en Norvège avec les fonds recueillis pour les auteurs et acteurs norvégiens au titre des droits secondaires et le tout est utilisé comme un fonds pour encourager la production d'émissions norvégiennes.

Ces capitaux sont disponibles pour les productions norvégiennes et le nombre de productions étrangères est graduellement diminué et cela protège le mode de vie norvégien. Le groupe des droits d'auteurs internationaux a accepté cela comme étant une disposition légitime sur les droits tels que définis par la convention de Rome.

Nous avons dit que l'écrivain ou l'interprète canadien pourrait accepter une formule de distribution collective pour les droits secondaires s'il peut y trouver un bénéfice. Un bénéfice qui augmenterait les possibilités de travail pour l'augmentation de la production duction. In any case, the Canadian writer and performer would probably be reluctant to contribute to such a fund if he were to be the only contributor. Other sources of income to the fund would be needed and could probably come from two other sources.

• 1010

The first of those might be a payment in the form of a tax by the CATV operators of part, at least, of the cost of both the foreign and domestic programs that they are exploiting, and second, the imposition of an excise duty on the importation of all recorded programs and commercials based upon a percentage of the total production costs.

Mr. Osler: May I ask a question?

Mr. Knight: Yes, by all means. I have got one paragraph left and then I am finished.

The Chairman: You may finish.

Mr. Knight: In this way, all parties who are exploiting the Canadian airways for their own profit—that is to say the writer, the performer, the station owner, the CATV operator and the foreign program producer—will all be contributing to a fund that would enable Canada to produce a kind of programming that will strengthen and protect the fabric of Canadian life as required by the Canadian Parliament.

The Chairman: Perhaps what I could do, Mr. Osler, is just turn the floor over to you. You are the first on my list.

Mr. Osler: Thank you. This is not on a general subject, but I would like to ask a specific question to clarify that statement on advertising duty. Now, my understanding, Mr. Chairman, is that advertising imported into Canada to be shown on television or radio or anything else has a duty imposed on it of something like 9 cents a foot, so you are talking about advertising that comes over the airwaves and strays into Canada and is picked up on television or radio sets, are you?

Mr. Knight: No, I am talking about the importation of the recording itself which is, generally speaking, on either film or tape and at the moment I understand duty is charged at 9 cents per linear foot of the raw stock of either tape or film, which really does not represent by any means the true value of either the film or the tape that is being imported.

Mr. Osler: That is what I wanted to clarify because it seems to me that this 9 cents duty—it is very nice to hear all these things, but we are looking for specific ways in which we can help people—was set years ago. I forget the date.

Mr. Siren: It was 1952, if I may add that.

canadienne. Dans tous les cas, l'auteur ou l'interprète canadien hésitera peut-être à contribuer à ce fonds s'il est le seul à y contribuer. Il faut d'autres sources et cela pourrait venir de deux endroits. Le premier moyen pourrait être par le paiement d'une taxe imposée aux opérateurs de télévision par câble, sur les émissions canadiennes et étrangères qu'ils présentent; le second une taxe d'accise imposée sur tous les programmes et commerciaux enregistrés, basée sur un pourcentage du coût total de production.

M. Osler: Puis-je poser une question?

M. Knight: Oui, certainement. Je n'ai plus qu'un paragraphe à lire et j'aurai fini.

Le président: Vous pouvez finir.

M. Knight: De cette façon, tous ceux qui exploitent les ondes canadiennes, pour leur bénéfice, c'est-à-dire l'auteur, l'interprète, le propriétaire de station, l'opérateur de télévision par câble et les réalisateurs d'émissions étrangères contribueraient tous à un fonds qui permettrait au Canada d'avoir des émissions qui protégeraient le mode de vie canadien, tel que le Parlement du Canada le demande.

Le président: Maintenant, je pense que je pourrais vous donner la parole, monsieur Osler vous êtes premier sur la liste.

M. Osler: Merci. J'ai une question précise à propos des droits perçus sur les annonces publicitaires. Si je comprends bien, monsieur le président, la publicité importée au Canada et présentée à la radio ou à la télévision est frappée de droits de douane de l'ordre de 9 cents le pied: mais parlez-vous de la publicité transmise au Canada par les ondes et captée par nos récepteurs?

M. Knight: Non, je parle de l'importation des enregistrements eux-mêmes, qu'il s'agisse de films ou de bandes magnétiques; les droits de douane sont de neuf cents le pied linéaire de film ou de bande magnétique, ce qui est loin de représenter la valeur réelle du film ou de la bande sonore importée.

M. Osler: C'est ce que je voulais savoir, car il me semble que ce droit de douane de neuf cents—même si leur publicité est très intéressante, nous cherchons tout de même des moyens d'aider les gens—existe depuis longtemps.

M. Siren: Depuis 1952.

[texte]

Mr. Osler: In 1952; well, it would be more realistic to increase that to about 25 cents or 30 cents. If there were any legitimate reason for setting 9 cents in 1952, it should be one heck of a lot higher now because all production costs have gone up astronomically, and I would suggest that this is a specific sort of thing that you could easily recommend to us for consideration.

Mr. Knight: It is the disposition of the moneys collected that we are concerned with rather than the collection of the moneys, in this particular instance. We are concerned with creating a fund of money which can be used to finance Canadian production in this particular presentation. The other concern, of course, is to prevent the dumping of foreign programs and commercials into Canada at a price which is far below the possibilities of production within Canada.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, to clarify this point it seems to me that it is one thing for the Government of Canada to put a duty on something to protect an industry, and it is another thing entirely for it to collect royalties for the benefit of somebody else and I am trying to clarify, which is what you are trying to do at.

The Chairman: They would like the royalties.

Mr. Osler: They would like the royalties. I do not know; I am new here but it seems to me that it would be rather outside the scope of the Government of Canada, would it not, to collect royalties for people?

The Chairman: Well . . .

Mr. Osler: If they collected a tax and handed it over . . .

The Chairman: What you are really asking for is a royalty collected in the form of a tax set up in a special fund.

Mr. Osler: All right, we have clarified what they are asking for. Now, on this question of dumping which I think is very interesting, the CBC has this problem, as you are well aware. To take "Bonanza" as an example, it costs about $190,000 a week to produce. It is dumped in Canada—I will not say dumped—it is sold in Canada for about $8,500. This is apart from any contribution costs, airwave costs or anything like that.

Now, it would be just lovely for the whole industry if you could prove that there was a case of dumping here. "Bonanza" is just an example. It happens all the time, but unfortunately the CBC tell me that it would be very difficult to prove dumping. If you could prove dumping you already have laws that could apply. If you take the total number of people who see "Bonanza" the Hollywood people can build a pretty

[Interprétation]

M. Osler: 1952. Il serait plus réaliste de porter ce taux à 25 ou 30 cents. Si l'on avait une raison valable de demander neuf cents en 1952, il devrait y en avoir une aujourd'hui pour qu'on exige beaucoup plus car tous les frais ont augmenté de façon astronomique. Il me semble que vous pourriez recommander au comité d'envisager une augmentation.

M. Knight: C'est l'usage qu'on fait des fonds recueillis qui nous intéresse, plutôt que leur perception, dans le cas présent du moins. Nous voulons créer un fonds qui pourra servir à financer les productions canadiennes en ce domaine. Nous voulons également empêcher que les émissions et la publicité étrangères envahissent le marché canadien à un prix qui est beaucoup moins élevé que ce que nous pourrions produire ici.

M. Osler: Il me semble, monsieur le président, que le gouvernement du Canada peut soit imposer des droits de douanes pour protéger une industrie, soit percevoir des droits d'auteur au profit des autres, et j'aimerais savoir laquelle de ces politiques vous poursuivez.

Le président: Elles aimeraient qu'on perçoive des droits d'auteur.

M. Osler: Vous croyez? A vrai dire je n'en sais rien. Je suis nouveau ici mais il me semble que le gouvernement du Canada n'a pas à percevoir des droits d'auteur pour les autres.

Le président: Oui, mais . . .

M. Osler: S'il imposait une taxe et la versait . . .

Le président: Il s'agirait donc de droits d'auteur recueillis sous forme de taxe et constituant un fonds spécial.

M. Osler: D'accord, nous y sommes. Quant au dumping, c'est un problème intéressant qui préoccupe fort la Société. Le coût de réalisation de "Bonanza", par exemple, est de $190,000 par semaine. On le vend au Canada pour $8,500 environ, sans compter les frais de distribution ou de diffusion.

Les industries aimeraient évidemment que l'on puisse prouver qu'il s'agit d'un cas de dumping. "Bonanza" n'est qu'un exemple parmi tant d'autres. Malheureusement, la Société Radio-Canada pense qu'il serait très difficile de prouver qu'il y a dumping. Si on pouvait le prouver, il suffirait d'appliquer les lois qui existent déjà. Si l'on considère le nombre total de personnes qui regardent Bonanza, Hollywood peut good case that $8,500 is a legitimate price to charge for Canadian viewing—English-speaking Canada—13 million people, or whatever it is. Therefore, there does not appear to be a solid case for dumping.

There is, for instance, a case for dumping when it turns up in some African state for $60,000, because you cannot deliver the damn thing to Africa for that price. I am sorry, not $60,000—$60. is what they charge in one African state where "Bonanza" is distributed. This is obviously subsidized by the American Foreign Office or somebody. That would be a case of dumping, but unfortunately the African state wants the film and it is quite happy to take it at the price it is given it for; it is not trying to protect anything. However this does not happen in Canada, evidently, and it appears the price that these things come in at are legitimate based on the viewing public and the total audience and what is charged in the United States relatively for it.

The Chairman: You are saying that the unit costs for a program like "Bonanza" in Canada is equivalent to that in the United States.

Mr. Osler: Right, and yet we could not produce the thing for $25,000 or $30,000, so on a commercial basis anybody would be mad to buy anything but "Bonanza". What we would like, I think, would be firm guidelines as to how you are going to get around a situation like that. You want a quota, or you want something equivalent to a quota?

Mr. Knight: Using the old regulations that the Board of Broadcast Governors created, for instance, where they made a requirement on broadcasters to program 55 per cent Canadian 45 per cent other than Canadian, if this type of regulation could be expanded so that it was spread across the program day, and throughout the program mix—that is to say that the regulations would apply through both sections of the day; prime time and non-prime time, as they are known in the industry—and second, that the type of regulation could be enacted throughout the program mix—that is to say, if a television station is using 10 hours of drama in the course of a week, then 5.5 of those hours should be Canadian and 4.5 can come from any other sources—this is the type of regulation that we would like to see.

However, I do believe that first and foremost we have to overcome the difficulties of the organization of Canadian broadcasting, because it has grown up in an ad hoc fashion following a pattern created by the United States and there are certain build-in difficulties of finance. Some form of collectivity has to be created because I do not believe an individual station, for instance, in Vancouver can program for itself. The way this is done in the United States is through an independent production industry which, in Canada, does not exist to any large extent.

[Interpretation]

facilement prétendre qu'il est raisonnable d'exiger $8,500 des téléspectateurs canadiens—13 millions de Canadiens anglais ou à peu près. Il ne me semble donc pas que l'on puisse vraiment parler de dumping.

L'on pourrait parler de dumping si l'on vendait l'émission à certains États africains pour $60,000, car on ne vendrait rien en Afrique à ce prix-là. Excusez-moi, non pas $60,000 mais $60. C'est ce que paient les États africains qui reçoivent «Bonanza»; il y a certainement là des subventions du ministère des Affaires étrangères américain ou de quelque autre organisme. Nous pourrions parler de dumping, si les États africains en question ne tenaient à avoir le film, surtout à ce prix, si l'on considère qu'ils n'ont rien à protéger. Ce n'est pas le cas au Canada, où le prix de l'émission paraît raisonnable si l'on tient compte du nombre de téléspectateurs et du prix de revient aux États-Unis.

Le président: Vous dites que le coût d'une émission comme Bonanza au Canada est le même qu'aux États-Unis.

M. Osler: Oui, et cependant nous n'avons pu la réaliser pour $25,000 ou $30,000, et du point de vue publicitaire, il serait insensé de miser sur autre chose que Bonanza. Nous aimerions des directives précises pour savoir comment vous allez régler un problème comme celui-là. Voulez-vous des contingents équivalents ou voulez-vous quelque chose d'équivalent?

M. Knight: Si l'on se rapporte à l'ancien règlement du Bureau des gouverneurs, l'on trouve une disposition obligeant les radiodiffuseurs à diffuser un minimum de 55 p. 100 d'émissions canadiennes et un maximum de 45 p. 100 d'émissions étrangères. Si ce genre de règlement pouvait s'appliquer aux émissions du jour et du soir, c'est-à-dire aux deux périodes du jour période de pointe et période morte dans le jargon de la radio, ce règlement pourrait s'appliquer à l'ensemble des émissions. Par conséquent, si une station télévision dix heures de films par semaine, cinq heures et demie devraient être consacrées à des réalisations canadiennes et quatre heures et demie à d'autres réalisations. C'est le genre de règlement que nous aimerions avoir.

Mais je pense que d'abord et avant tout, il nous faudra surmonter les difficultés d'organisation de la radiodiffusion canadienne, puisqu'on suit des modèles créés aux États-Unis, et également certaines difficultés financières. Il faudra une certaine coopération, car je ne crois pas qu'un poste isolé, comme celui de Vancouver, puisse faire toutes ses émissions lui-même. Or on le fait aux États-Unis, par l'entremise d'une entreprise indépendante de production, dont on ne peut pas vraiment l'équivalent ici.

Now, what we are searching for is ways and means to finance such an independent industry so that it could provide first and foremost Canadian television with the programs that it needs in order to comply with the Broadcasting Act, and second, the productive capacity of such a high quality that they can enter first, in the North American market and second, the world market.

We do not believe the industry itself can do this without assistance. This has been realized and recognized by most European governments and the British government, for instance, has given assistance to the British film industry in the form of a quota system on the importation of foreign films and an exchange quota with those companies exporting to Britain, in addition to which a requirement that some money, which is representative of the revenue earned by foreign film makers in Britain be left in Britain and used to produce films in Britain.

To a large extent this kind of encouragement has uncovered a great deal of talent for the industry in Great Britain and has, in fact, established an industry in Britain. This is the kind of solution that I believe we must search for here in Canada in order that we can, first, provide our own programming and second, enter into the North American and world markets on a competitive basis.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, from an outsider's point of view, straying along that path for a moment, it appears, loosely speaking, as though there were far too many very small, very proud and very independent operators in the film industry in Canada—or who attempt to be in the film industry in Canada, if you could call it an industry.

It would appear to me that in the type of climate that this country operates in, where that happens in any other business there has to be some form of consolidation within the industry before government can do much about it. The industry itself has to be rationalized, and I am suggesting—and I would like comment on this—that if this is the case the question is: Which came first, the chicken or the egg? Whatever the government does it would appear to me to be futile unless the industry makes attempts to rationalize itself. If that were to happen, then the government might be able to do some things that would help the industry, but—

Mr. Knight: May I draw your attention to something which I consider, at least, to be a fundamental problem with the Canadian film industry and this is in the realm of distribution which is almost entirely foreign-owned.

The Canadian Film Development Corporation, which is a child of this Parliament, has been set up to develop assistance to the film industry and has made Quant à nous, nous aimerions trouver un moyen de financer une industrie indépendante pour offrir d'abord des émissions canadiennes, et des émissions conformes à l'esprit de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion; et deuxièmement nos réalisations devraient être d'une qualité telle que nous puissions les distribuer sur le marché nord-américain d'abord et sur le marché international ensuite.

Nous ne pensons pas que l'industrie y parvienne sans aide. La plupart des gouvernements d'Europe l'ont reconnu, et le gouvernement britannique subventionne l'industrie du film, après avoir fixé un contingentement sur l'importation de films et conclu des ententes avec les compagnies qui exportent en Grande-Bretagne. On exige également qu'une partie des revenus que les producteurs ont réalisés en Grande-Bretagne soient réinvestis au pays dans la production de films en Grande-Bretagne.

Ce règlement a stimulé l'industrie et révélé des talents inconnus, permettant même la création d'une industrie cinématographique. Je pense qu'il faut songer à une solution semblable au Canada; d'abord pour réaliser nous-mêmes nos émissions et ensuite pour nous lancer sur le marché nord-américain et international tout en résistant à la concurrence.

M. Osler: Il semble de façon générale qu'il y ait beaucoup trop de producteurs indépendants et pas très importants dans l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, si toutefois l'on peut parler d'une industrie.

Il me semble que dans le climat qui règne au pays, il faut, dans ce domaine comme dans bien d'autres, une certaine consolidation de l'industrie en question avant-même que le gouvernement puisse faire quelque chose. Il faut rationaliser cette industrie. J'aimerais que vous me disiez lequel, de l'oeuf ou du poussin, est antérieur à l'autre. Je pense que le gouvernement perdrait son temps à moins que cette industrie s'organise davantage. Si l'industrie s'organise un peu, le gouvernement pourra peut-être lui venir en aide.

M. Knight: Puis-je attirer votre attention sur ce qui me semble un problème fondamental de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, à savoir le domaine de la distribution qui est presque entièrement entre les mains d'étrangers.

La Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne que le Parlement a mis sur pied est destinée à fournir de l'aide à l'industrie ciné-as one of its conditions, before investing or lending money to a film company, that that film company shall have a distribution contract. The net effect of this is quite clear and frightening, because the only film distributors live somewhere other than Canada and quite clearly they know of this condition that is imposed upon the Canadian film maker, that he must have a distribution contract. Therefore, when the film maker goes to the distributor the distributor looks at him and thinks to himself: "Well, you need me brother, you cannot operate without me because you cannot get any money for your film without my distribution contract. Therefore, I can swing any deal I want with you because you need me badly." The net effect of this is going to be, I am quite sure, that the ownership of those films will fall into the hands of those distributors eventually, as a result of the conditions made by the Canadian Film Development Corporation.

Mr. Osler: I am glad you mentioned that because, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is another "chicken and egg" proposition.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler, I think on about March 13 we will be hearing from the Montreal branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers, which will be the first in a series of hearings which we hope to hold over about the next year into the condition of the film industry. I would expect that we would probably want to call the distributors who operate in Canada to appear before us and to explain their business, and also what assistance they have been, including how they are prepared to help in the future, to producers of Canadian feature films.

Mr. Stanbury: A supplementary question, Mr. Chairman. Would Mr. Knight have any knowledge of the sort of requirement that a bank has for putting up money for a feature film?

Mr. Knight: No.

Mr. Stanbury: One would think that they would be interested too in the film being distributed and seen and paid for.

Mr. Knight: Yes There are all kinds of sources of money in the United States for investment into films where the industry is an established industry. I think the reluctance of banks and other interested parties to invest in Canadian industry lies in the fact that the industry itself has no firm foundation at this moment. Again, the chicken and the egg.

Mr. Stanbury: It is a high risk business too.

Mr. Knight: Yes, it is.

[Interpretation]

matographique. Une des conditions exigées avant d'investir ou de prêter à une société cinématographique, c'est qu'elle ait un contrat de distribution. Les conséquences en sont claires et nettes car les seuls distributeurs de films habitent ailleurs qu'au Canada. Ils sont très bien au courant de la condition imposée aux réalisateurs canadiens, qu'ils doivent avoir un contrat de distribution. Par conséquent, lorsque les réalisateurs de films vont aux distributeurs, les distributeurs les voient venir et se disent: «Vous avez besoin de moi car vous ne pouvez pas obtenir d'argent pour votre film sans un contrat de distribution. Je peux donc vous offrir le contrat qui me plaît». Il s'ensuit certainement que la propriété de ces films passera aux distributeurs étrangers à cause des conditions imposées par la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne.

M. Osler: Je suis heureux que vous l'ayez mentionné car je pense que c'est encore le même problème: l'oeuf et de la poule.

Le président: Je pense que vers le 13 mars nous entendrons la section de Montréal de l'Association canadienne des cinématographes, ce qui sera la première d'une série de témoignages sur les conditions de l'industrie cinématographique. Je pense aussi que nous devrions inviter les distributeurs qui exploitent au Canada à témoigner devant le Comité, pour expliquer leur travail et le genre d'aide qu'ils accordent, et qu'ils sont prêts à faire à l'avenir pour les réalisateurs canadiens de longs métrages.

M. Stanbury: Question supplémentaire, s'il vous plaît.

Monsieur Knight aurait-il une idée des conditions exigées par les banques avant d'accorder des prêts pour la production de films?

M. Knight: Non.

M. Stanbury: Ne croyez-vous pas qu'ils seraient également intéressés au film qui est distribué et payé?

M. Knight: Oui. Il y a toutes sortes de sources d'argent pour la production de films aux États-Unis lorsqu'il s'agit d'une industrie bien établie. Je pense que l'hésitation de la part des banques et d'autres à investir dans l'industrie canadienne vient du fait que l'industrie n'est pas encore bien fondée. C'est toujours le problème de l'oeuf et de la poule.

M. Stanbury: Les risques de cette industrie sont élevés aussi.

M. Knight: Oui.

[texte]

Mr. Stanbury: You referred to investment: it implies that the investor is going to get his money back so he can invest it again.

1025

Mr. Knight: I do not know, in any depth, the statistics of the film industry investment but I do know a good deal about the theatre as such, which is a related industry. I understand in New York City, where the theatre is very highly and professionally organized, that one production out of 10 that goes into rehearsal turns the investor his money.

Mr. Osler: It is a chancy type investment.

The Chairman: A supplementary, Mr. Schreyer:

Mr. Schreyer: You say that the operating practice of the Canadian Film Development Corporation is such as to make the film developers captives of the distributors. In general terms, what way do you see out of this kind of impasse? What change should there be in policy?

Mr. Knight: I think the type of change that has been created in Great Britain through parliamentary action, where they have required the film industry, which distributes throughout Great Britain, to leave some of the profits there for the production of films, and have also created an exchange quota system which tends to guarantee distribution of British films without putting the film producer into the individual clutches of the film distributor.

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you.

Mr. Osler: Following up Mr. Schreyer, it seems to me, and I may be wrong, that shortly after the war when the film industry in Britain became seriously interested in getting going, one of the first things that happened was that Mr. Rank came over here and bought a chain of theatres. So, he had a distribution in Canada. I am not sure whether you are suggesting that the Canadian government should persuade somebody to buy a chain of theatres in our country or whether they should not. It is very difficult to criticize the Canadian Film Development Corporation for not finding money if the film is not going to be distributed and not shown; and yet, the distributor problem, I think we all agree, is the big problem. How does one persuade somebody to make a chain of theatres available to the Canadian distributors?

The Chairman: The other problem which is related to that is, how do you make sure that you have some form of quality control if you insist that the distributor must take any film on a feature length basis produced in Canada? There has to be some discretionary power over this feature too. They are all related.

[Interprétation]

M. Stanbury: Vous parlez d'investissements. Les investisseurs vont donc recouvrer leur argent afin de l'investir de nouveau.

M. Knight: Je ne connais pas les statistiques des investissements dans ce domaine, mais je connais mieux le théâtre, qui est une industrie connexe, et à New York, par exemple, où le théâtre est très bien organisé, il y a une production sur dix où les investisseurs entrent dans leur argent.

M. Osler: C'est un investissement risqué.

Le président: Question supplémentaire, monsieur Schreyer.

M. Schreyer: Vous dites que les conditions exigées par la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne sont telles qu'elles rendent les réalisateurs esclaves des distributeurs. Selon vous, comment peut-on s'en sortir? Quels changements faut-il apporter à cette politique?

M. Knight: Les changements qui ont été apportés en Grande-Bretagne, grâce à des mesures parlementaires, ont exigé que l'industrie qui distribue les films dans tous le pays, y laisse une part de ses bénéfices pour la réalisation d'autres films, et mis sur pied un système de contingentement des échanges pour assurer la distribution de films britanniques sans que les producteurs soient à la merci des distributeurs de films.

M. Schreyer: Merci.

M. Osler: Il me semble, et j'ai peut-être tort, que peu de temps après la guerre lorsque l'industrie cinématographique du Grande-Bretagne a pris de l'ampleur, M. Rank est venu ici et a acheté une série de salles de cinémas. Il avait donc un moyen de distribution au Canada. Je ne sais pas si vous allez proposer que le gouvernement canadien encourage quelqu'un à acheter une série de salles de cinéma dans notre pays. Il est très difficile de critiquer la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne de ne pas prêter d'argent si le film ne sera pas distribué ou projeté. Mais la distribution constitue toujours le problème majeur. Mais comment peut-on convaincre quelqu'un de mettre une série de salles de cinéma à la disposition des distributeurs canadiens?

Le président: Comment peut-on également assurer un certain contrôle de la qualité si on exige que le distributeur accepte tous les longs métrages réalisés au Canada? Il doit y avoir des pouvoirs discrétionnaires à cet égard. Tout ceci se tient.

[Text]

Mr. Knight: May I deal with the first one first? I believe that the problem is that we are discussing both the specific and the general at the same time, which tends to be confusing.

The former results from the Canadian Film Development Corporation's requirement that there be a film distribution contract before they will lend or invest money in that particular film. That is specific to that one film producer. It puts him in a position where he must get that contract before he can get his money and the film distributor knows that and is able to take advantage of that fact.

The Chairman: Has this in fact been happening?

Mr. Knight: It is yet to be tested really, and yet it is clearly indicated in the terms of reference. Knowing the film distributing industry, they will obviously, as anyone would under the circumstances, take full advantage of their bargaining position.

Mr. Stanbury: Every film needs distribution, Mr. Knight.

Mr. Knight: Absolutely.

Mr. Stanbury: Nobody wants to make films that are going to sit in a container.

Mr. Knight: I agree with you. But now we come to the other part of the question which is the general one rather than the specific. Perhaps I point to a possible way out of this. If, however, rather than saying to a particular film producer that he must have a film distribution contract, we have instead a series of contractual arrangements with film distributors created by the Canadian government whereby they undertake to distribute Canadian films in return for being allowed to exploit their films in Canada and to gain the large profits that they now gain in Canada, the individual film producer would be in an entirely position.

• 1030

He then would be able to bargain with a number of film distributors who have an obligation of some kind to the Canadian film producer. Although he still has to get distribution and sell his individual film on the basis of its quality, it removes this obligation on him before he can get finance for his film and, therefore, frees him from this rather sad bargaining situation caused by the present conditions of the Canadian Film Development Corporation. Now, on the question of quality, did we understand that?

Mr. Osler: I think we better elaborate.

Mr. Stanbury: Maybe we should leave it to Mr. Osler.

[Interpretation]

M. Knight: Je crois que nous sommes à discuter en même temps de questions précises et générales.

La première résulte des exigences de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, soit qu'un film fasse l'objet d'un contrat de distribution avant qu'elle lui accorde un prêt. Cette exigence s'applique au réalisateur en particulier, qui doit obtenir un contrat avant de recevoir l'argent, et comme distributeur le sait, il peut en tirer avantage.

Le président: Est-ce que cela s'est produit en fait?

M. Knight: Cela reste à voir, mais, d'autre part, c'est indiqué de façon précise dans les termes de renvoi. Toutefois, connaissant l'industrie cinématographique, il est évident qu'ils vont profiter de la situation avantageuse dont ils jouissent.

M. Stanbury: Chaque film a besoin de distribution, monsieur Knight.

M. Knight: C'est évident.

M. Stanbury: Personne veut réaliser des films qui ne seront pas distribués.

M. Knight: Je suis tout à fait d'accord, mais il y a l'aspect général de ce problème. Je crois que je peux indiquer une façon de contourner le problème. Si au lieu de dire à un réalisateur qu'il lui faut d'abord un contrat de distribution, nous avons conclu toute une série d'ententes contractuelles avec des distributeurs de films mis sur pied par l'État en vertu desquelles ils s'engagent à distribuer les films canadiens en retour de quoi on leur permet d'exploiter leurs films au Canada et d'en tirer des bénéfices considérables, le producteur serait alors dans une situation bien différente.

Il pourrait alors s'adresser à plusieurs distributeurs qui ont des obligations en quelque sorte à son égard. Bien qu'il doit quand même trouver un distributeur et vendre son film selon sa qualité, il n'est plus sujet à cette exigence s'il veut obtenir des finances pour son film et ceci lui permet d'échapper à la situation actuelle. Pour ce qui est de cette question de qualité, avons-nous bien compris?

M. Osler: Je crois qu'il faudrait insister davantage là-dessus.

M. Stanbury: Nous devrions peut-être laisser cela à M. Osler.

Texte]

Mr. Osler: I do not understand that proposition. Maybe the others do.

Mr. Stanbury: You are suggesting that the government should in some way direct distributors to distribute certain films that a government agency decides would be of good quality.

Mr. Knight: No, I am not at all.

Mr. Stanbury: Then how. . .

Mr. Knight: I was just going to get to the question of quality.

Mr. Stanbury: How are you going to ensure that a film which has been subject to investment by the Film Development Corporation gets distributed unless the government or an agency of government is able to direct the distributors as to the specific film, the showing of the specific film.

Mr. Knight: There is only one way to determine and ensure quality in anything, and that is to try and sell it. That is the only way.

Mr. Schumacher: I think in order to clarify this distribution question raised by Mr. Stanbury, is it not our suggestion, Mr. Knight, that there should be some sort of government agency set-up, something like the old Board of Broadcast Governors, that would say there must be a certain amount of Canadian content in the films shown in the exhibition houses in this country? Therefore, if there is going to be 55% American production coming in or some percentage of American production or foreign production, they have to show a certain percentage of Canadian production, and that is how you are going to get around the distribution problem.

The Chairman: I think that is a new interpretation.

Mr. Knight: No, that is not a new interpretation. This is really what I have in mind. I did not have a new kind of BBG in mind, particularly, but the result could be the same. A distributor in Canada, who is making his living in Canada, or a portion of his profits in Canada, would be required to show a certain number or a quota of Canadian films.

Mr. Stanbury: But not necessarily the ones, in which the Film Development Corporation has invested.

Mr. Knight: By no means.

Mr. Stanbury: And, therefore, that suggestion could be of no help in getting around the problem at Mr. Osler tried to zone in on, the problem of getting distribution for films in which the Corporation is invested.

[Interprétation]

M. Osler: Je n'arrive pas à comprendre cette proposition. Peut-être les autres comprennent-ils.

M. Stanbury: Vous dites que le gouvernement devrait, d'une façon ou d'une autre, demander aux distributeurs de distribuer certains films qui, d'après l'agence gouvernementale, seraient des films de bonne qualité.

M. Knight: Non, pas du tout. Je n'ai pas dit cela.

M. Stanbury: Alors, . . .

M. Knight: J'allais en venir à la question de la qualité.

M. Stanbury: Comment va-t-on s'assurer qu'un film qui fait l'objet d'un investissement de la part de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique va être distribué, à moins que le gouvernement, ou une agence du gouvernement, puisse exiger que les distributeurs présentent tel ou tel film?

M. Knight: Il n'y a qu'une façon d'assurer la qualité de tous les films, c'est de tenter de les vendre. C'est la seule façon de procéder.

M. Schumacher: Afin de donner plus de détails au sujet de cette question de la distribution, croyez-vous qu'on devrait organiser une société de distribution, comme l'ancien Bureau des gouverneurs de la radiodiffusion, qui déterminerait le pourcentage obligatoire des productions canadiennes? Si on doit avoir 55 p. 100 de productions américaines, ou un certain pourcentage de productions américaines ou étrangères, on devra aussi avoir un certain pourcentage de productions canadiennes, et c'est le meilleur moyen de résoudre le problème de la distribution.

Le président: Voilà une nouvelle interprétation.

M. Knight: Ce n'est pas une nouvelle interprétation. C'est précisément ce à quoi je songeais. Il ne s'agit pas toutefois de créer un nouveau Bureau des gouverneurs. Les résultats seraient essentiellement les mêmes. Toutefois, une agence de distribution, au Canada, qui est établie au Canada et qui tire une partie de ses profits du Canada, devra présenter un certain nombre ou un certain contingentement de films canadiens.

M. Stanbury: Mais pas nécessairement ceux dans lesquels la Société aura investi.

M. Knight: Pas du tout.

M. Stanbury: Cette proposition ne serait donc pas utile pour permettre de contourner le problème mentionné par M. Osler. La question est de trouver moyen de distribuer les films au sujet desquels la Société a fait un investissement.

[Text]

Mr. Osler: Well, no, I do not really worry about whether it is the corporation or not. If the Corporation has not backed a particular film, or has not backed any film, and conditions are such that the private investor or another investor was able to get his film distributed, I guess the purpose of the Corporation would have been achieved.

Mr. Knight: Indeed.

Mr. Stanbury: Would it be getting its money back though so that it could invest in other Canadian feature films?

The Chairman: In other words, what you are saying is that distributors should have the obligation to produce or to distribute one Canadian film, say, for every ten outside ones they show, or some ratio of that nature. Or are you suggesting that they should have an obligation to distribute any Canadian film of an acceptable quality that comes along?

Mr. Knight: No, no.

The Chairman: I think in your suggestion there is the implication of coercion.

Mr. Knight: Oh, very definitely.

The Chairman: Therefore, when you have a form of coercion, you must have fairly strict guide lines.

Mr. Schumacher: As I understood Mr. Knight's proposal, it would still be on the basis of competition. The coercion would be that they must show a certain percentage of Canadian films and, therefore, we depend on quality or competition to decide which ones are going to be distributed.

The Chairman: Well, no. If you set a quota you say you must show one Canadian film for every ten foreign ones you show. That means you are going to end up showing Canadian films, not because they are worth while showing but because they are being ground out to make up this section of a quota.

Mr. Schumacher: But there are several distributors involved. And I think that is what Mr. Knight is depending on. The distributors will naturally want to pick the best Canadian ones, if they must show so many Canadian ones.

The Chairman: Yes, but the problem is that your quality is not—you just cannot dictate quality. That is a very chancy business.

Mr. Knight: I have not been given an opportunity to answer this question on quality, Mr. Chairman. But I think it needs an answer.

Mr. Osler: Yes, I think so.

[Interpretation]

M. Osler: Je ne sais pas si c'est la Société ou non q doit le faire. Si la Société n'a pas jugé bon de donner son appui à tel ou tel film, et si un investisseur privé pouvait assurer la distribution du film, le but recherché par la Société ne serait pas atteint.

M. Knight: En effet.

M. Stanbury: Pourrait-on toujours récupérer l'argent et l'investir dans la production d'autres films canadiens?

Le président: Autrement dit, le distributeur serait alors obligé de distribuer un film canadien pour dix films étrangers. Croyez-vous plutôt qu'il devrait distribuer tous les films canadiens d'une qualité acceptable?

M. Knight: Non.

Le président: Vous semblez dire qu'il faudrait un certain élément d'obligation.

M. Knight: C'est évident.

Le président: Lorsqu'il y a coercion, il faut des directives bien précises, n'est-ce pas?

M. Schumacher: Si je comprends bien la proposition de M. Knight, il y aurait toujours une certaine concurrence qui s'exercerait. Il faudrait toutefois que le distributeur présente une certaine proportion de films canadiens. Et c'est la concurrence qui va déterminer lesquels seront distribués.

Le président: Si vous dites qu'il faut distribuer un film canadien pour dix films étrangers, cela veut dire qu'on va présenter des films canadiens non pas à cause de leur qualité mais parce qu'on est obligé d'en présenter un certain nombre.

M. Schumacher: Toutefois, il y a plusieurs distributeurs, et cela revient à l'argument de M. Knight: ils vont certainement choisir les meilleurs films canadiens.

Le président: La qualité, on ne peut pas l'imposer.

M. Knight: On ne m'a jamais permis de répondre à cette question sur la qualité, monsieur le président. Je crois que c'est une question qui mérite une réponse.

M. Osler: En effet.

[texte]

The Chairman: Perhaps we can let Mr. Knight explain what he means by quality.

Mr. Knight: I suppose in the end what we all really mean by quality is acceptability. Is it acceptable to the people who are going to pay their money to go in to see the thing? This is really what we mean by quality, is it not? Quality is what people will buy.

An hon. Member: That is a very dangerous definition.

Mr. Knight: This whole problem came up in Britain, and in the same way it will no doubt come up here. People will see an opportunity to make a fast buck out of this situation. They will find low-budget films that they can produce cheaply which will not be very good, and they will attempt to sell them as a result of these regulations, if they ever come into being. This happened in Britain and it happened every place where such regulations have been introduced.

But it no longer happens. It no longer happens, because the market place will determine what film is going to be acceptable in the end and, and it must, because I do not go and see a film which I am not going to enjoy. And I use the same criteria that everybody else does, namely: I have seen one of his films before; I liked it, and I will go and see this one, to see if he has kept up the standard. I have seen his films before: they were junk, therefore, I will not go to see this one.

These are the standards that people use when discriminating between which cinema they are going to pay their dollar to. And these will continue to be the standards that they will use.

Quality will allow a man to be able to sell his film, and therefore reap a profit on his film, and therefore get a return on his money and be able to stay in business.

Mr. Osler: But, Mr. Chairman, the sort of thing I am worried of, and I am trying to be a devil's advocate rather than a pessimist, is this: that if you had such a law or such a set-up that required mandatory 40%, 50%, or 55% Canadian content in theatre chain, you have roughly 12 or 13 million English-speaking people, which is the audience you are speaking about, presumably, as against 200 million in the United States. You would really have the same problem with the desirable effects, I think, because if you produced a film that could break even or make money for 13 million people but was so lousy that it was not going to have international distribution, but it still met Canadian requirements, you would have the Canadian theatres filled for 40% of the time with the kind of junk you have just been talking about. And the excuse then would be that you cannot make a "Ben Hur" or something like that because you have not got the distribution.

[Interprétation]

Le président: M. Knight pourrait peut-être nous dire ce qu'il entend par «qualité».

M. Knight: Par qualité, je crois que nous entendons tous acceptabilité. Le film est-il acceptable par ceux qui vont dépenser de l'argent pour le voir? La qualité, c'est ce que les gens vont acheter.

Une voix: C'est une définition très dangereuse.

M. Knight: Tout ce problème s'est posé en Grande-Bretagne, comme ici. Les gens vont vouloir gagner de l'argent rapidement, de cette façon-là. Ils vont produire et réaliser à peu de frais des films d'une qualité douteuse, et ils vont tenter de faire distribuer ces films.

Mais cela ne se produit plus en Grande-Bretagne, parce que le marché va déterminer quels sont les films qui sont acceptables à la fin. Et il faudra que cela se produise, car il est certain que je n'irai pas voir un film que je ne m'attends pas à apprécier. Et je sais, par exemple, que dans le cas d'un réalisateur, on va se rappeler qu'on a vu tel ou tel de ses films auparavant. Le film était bon ou mauvais et c'est là-dessus que les gens se fonderont pour discuter où ils vont aller. Et cela continue à être la norme. La qualité c'est ce qui permet à une personne de vendre son film et de demeurer en affaires.

M. Osler: Je vais me faire l'avocat du diable. Ce qui m'inquiète, c'est que si on adopte une loi comme celle-là, exigeant telle ou telle proportion de contenu canadien, il y a environ douze ou treize millions de Canadiens anglophones par opposition à 200 millions d'anglophones aux États-Unis. Il y a toujours le même problème qui se posera avec des effets moins désirables. Je pense que, si on réalise un film qui peut rapporter du profit avec 13 millions de personnes et qui n'est pas assez bon pour se mériter une place sur le marché mondial, à ce moment-là, les cinémas canadiens diffuseront des films qui sont d'une qualité inférieure. On donnerait alors comme excuse qu'on ne peut réaliser «Ben Hur» sans un bon réseau de distribution.

[Text]

Mr. Knight: I do not believe it, frankly. I do not think you can make a film that will break even with a Canadian market only. You have got to enter into the world market in the film business today. You have got to compete with every other film maker, the Antoninis and all the others in Italy, France, Great Britain and the United States.

The Chairman: Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Knight: And Czechoslovakia. And you must compete on this basis. You are not going to make any money on a film that is distributed in Canada only, and you will go broke very quickly.

Mr. Osler: All right, can we approach this from a slightly different angle, and it may be a naive question. But the film distribution chains are owned by whom? The same people who own the films?

Mr. Knight: There is a kissing cousin sort of relationship between them. Very frequently the distributing houses invest in films. They are, generally speaking, separate corporate bodies, but not always. Generally speaking the distributor is investing in the film anyway.

Mr. Osler: He wants a piece of it if he can get it.

Mr. Knight: He is in a position to demand it, and he gets it.

The Chairman: Even in the United States?

Mr. Knight: Even in the United States.

Mr. Osler: Yes, all right. Then what is there to prevent a Canadian from making the same deal today? If there is no lock-in between the producer and the distributor—if there is a lock-in, perhaps this is anti-monopoly or there may be some other way it can be attacked from a different point of view—if there is no lock-in, what is there to prevent a Canadian film industry from putting things into the pipe-line just the same way an American industry does?

Mr. Knight: The Canadian Film Development Corporation could add to its regulations and specify the type of contract that they would consider to be acceptable. At the moment, you see, the only regulation they really have, although the act says something quite different, their regulation seems to be that they will not invest in a film until the potential film producer has a distribution contract.

Mr. Osler: The same as any other bank. This is what happened in the United States, too.

Mr. Knight: Yes but the investor in the film has a voice in the nature of that contract, and at the moment the Canadian film Development Corporation

[Interpretation]

M. Knight: Je ne crois pas qu'un film puisse réaliser des recettes seulement sur le marché canadien. Il faut un marché mondial. Il faut faire concurrence aux films de l'Italie, de la France de la Grande-Bretagne et de États-Unis, etc.

Le président: De la Tchécoslovaquie.

M. Knight: Oui. C'est à ces films qu'il faut faire concurrence. Il est certain qu'on ne réalisera pas de profits simplement sur un marché canadien.

M. Osler: Vous trouverez peut-être ma question naïve, mais les réseaux de distribution appartiennent à qui? Aux propriétaires de films?

M. Knight: Je crois qu'il y a un rapport plus ou moins étroit entre l'investisseur et les producteurs. D'une façon générale, le distributeur va fournir un investissement pour la réalisation du film.

M. Osler: Il veut sa part et peut l'obtenir.

M. Knight: Il est en mesure de l'exiger et c'est ce qu'il obtient.

Le président: Même aux États-Unis?

M. Knight: Oui.

M. Osler: Je me demande alors ce qui pourrait empêcher un Canadien de conclure un marché semblable aujourd'hui, s'il n'y a pas de limite ou de barrière entre le réalisateur et le distributeur—s'il y a un monopole, on peut envisager le problème sous un autre aspect—mais je ne vois vraiment pas ce qui empêcherait un réalisateur canadien de procéder de la même façon qu'un réalisateur américain.

M. Knight: Je crois que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique pourrait ajouter à ses règlements et préciser le genre de contrat qui serait considéré comme étant acceptable. A l'heure actuelle les seuls règlements qui existent sont quelque peu différents. Ces règlements semblent prévoir qu'on n'investira pas dans la réalisation d'un film, à moins que le réalisateur n'ait déjà conclu un contrat de distribution.

M. Osler: Comme n'importe quelle banque. C'est ce qui est arrivé aussi aux États-Unis.

M. Knight: Toutefois, celui qui investit dans un film a quelque chose à dire au sujet de la nature de ce contrat. Et, actuellement, la Société de développement de does not seem to be interested in having a voice in the nature of that film distribution contract, whereas I think, since he is going to be a major investor in the film, he has the perfect right to have a voice in the nature of that contract. He has equal bargaining rights o any other party to that contract.

It is the leaving of the film director or producer himself to achieve that distribution contract alone, within his own resources, without any capital until he gets it from the Canadian Film Development Corporation, that puts him in a very bad bargaining position. Whereas, if the Canadian Film Development Corporation were to examine the nature of film distribution contracts that have been signed with American corporations in the past and can choose a type of contract which is acceptable to them, because it is their money which is being invested, it will ensure the requirements of the Act—that the copyright remain in Canadian hands. Then of course this would be putting the horse and the cart in the right order instead of in the wrong order, as they now are. This is what I mean by government negotiation with the film distributors rather than leaving it to the individual Canadian Film producer who is not in a position to bargain with them.

Mr. Stanbury: Government negotiation or imposition of a quota?

Mr. Knight: It is both really, is it not? It amounts to one and the same thing.

Now suppose the Canadian Film Development Corporation meets with an individual distributor and says, "We are willing to invest in films if you are willing to distribute them, and negotiates a contract with that distributor for films that the film corporation will invest in. Here you have a voluntary acceptance of a form of quota as a result of negotiations. That is one way of achieving a quota system. Now assuming that this can be done at all, then it can be done with more than one film distributor.

Mr. Stanbury: The difference between that and the present situation being that the negotiation is done by government agency or a Crown corporation instead of a film maker.

Mr. Knight: To put it in other words, Mr. Stanbury, a major investor in the films, which happens to be a Crown corporation, yes.

Mr. Stanbury: But that is the only difference between your suggestion and the present situation that the Canadian Film Development Corporation enters into the negotiations with the distributor.

Mr. Knight: That is essentially it. The effective difference would be that the people who go to the l'industrie cinématographique ne semble guère s'intéresser à la nature de ce contrat. Toutefois, comme il s'agit d'un investisseur important, il a le droit de déterminer ce qui se passe dans le cas de ce contrat. Il a les mêmes droits de négociation que n'importe quelle autre partie au contrat.

C'est le fait de laisser le metteur en scène ou le réalisateur assurer seul la distribution de son film, par ses propres moyens et sans aucun capital en attendant qu'il obtienne des fonds de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, qui le place dans une situation très défavorable pour négocier. Alors que si la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne devait examiner la nature des contrats de distribution de films signés par le passé avec des sociétés américaines, et pouvait choisir un type de contrat qu'elle trouve acceptable, puisque c'est son argent que l'on place, cela satisferait aux exigences de la Loi, à savoir, que le droit d'auteur reste entre des mains canadiennes. Cela replacerait les boeufs avant la charrue, contrairement à ce qui se fait à l'heure actuelle. C'est cela que j'entends par avoir des négociations des gouvernements avec les distributeurs de films, au lieu d'en laisser le soin au réalisateur canadien lui-même, qui n'est pas en mesure de négocier avec les distributeurs.

M. Stanbury: Parlez-vous des négociations gouvernementales ou de l'imposition d'un contingentement?

M. Knight: Les deux, en fait, non? Cela revient exactement au même.

Supposons que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne rencontre un distributeur et lui dise qu'elle est prête à investir dans des films si lui accepte de les distribuer, et négocie un contrat avec ce distributeur pour des films dans lesquels elle va faire un placement. Il y a là acceptation volontaire d'une forme de contingentement par suite des négociations. C'est une façon d'en arriver à un système de contingentement. Si cela est faisable, on peut le faire avec plusieurs distributeurs.

M. Stanbury: La différence entre la situation actuelle et ce que vous proposez, c'est que la négociation sera faite par un organisme gouvernemental ou par une société de la Couronne, et non par le réalisateur.

M. Knight: Autrement dit, monsieur Stanbury, cela se fait par un important acheteur de films, qui se trouve être une société de la Couronne, en effet.

M. Stanbury: Mais, c'est la seule différence entre la solution que vous proposez et la situation actuelle—à savoir, que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne entreprenne des négociations avec les distributeurs.

M. Knight: C'est surtout cela, en effet. La différence réelle, c'est que les gens qui s'adressent aux distribufilm distributors already have the available finances and they are not searching for finances at this point. Therefore they are in a much stronger bargaining position than if they go to a film distributor and say "Look, I am entirely dependent upon you signing this contract with me in order to get my finances" which is the present position.

Mr. Osler: In reality, is this not the present position always? If I were in Hollywood and the same sort of thing were going on the conversation would be something like this, I am sure, "I have bank backing if you distribute". It has to be always this way, does it not? A banker is not going to say to Mr. X: "I will back you on a film" unless he happens to be one of the world's greats whom the banker is absolutely sure of because they have had success with him before or something of this nature.

● 1045

Mr. Knight: I can assure you that the major investors in the film industry in the United States take part in the negotiations for distribution. They do not vacate it for somebody else. They watch their own interests. They ensure that the distribution contract is advantageous to themselves before they put their money into it.

Mr. Stanbury: That is just what you have criticized, that the CFDC should not satisfy itself that the distribution has been arranged adequately. The only difference you are suggesting is that they themselves become involved in the negotiations to exert whatever pressures they can.

Mr. Knight: Precisely. That is exactly what I am suggesting.

The Chairman: I understand that they do that now in that, generally speaking, because of the way the CFDC operates, there is usually some financial consultations, and even loans, in the preparation of a script. After the script has been prepared the producer takes it to the distributors to try and arrange for distribution. Having got a contract for distribution he then takes that contract along with his completed script to the CFDC and after these documents are scrutinized and accepted by the CFDC then the final loan comes through. So, in point of fact, if my description is correct, the CFDC already does that.

Mr. Knight: Your description is absolutely correct but it is not what I am suggesting. What I am suggesting is that the Canadian Film Development Corporation having decided that a script is worthwhile—they do invest in the development of the script teurs de films disposent alors déjà des fonds nécessaires et n'ont pas à rechercher des fonds à ce moment-là. Ils peuvent donc négocier avec beaucoup plus de liberté que s'ils allaient dire au distributeur: «Il faut absolument que vous signiez ce contrat avec moi pour que j'obtienne les fonds dont j'ai besoin.»

M. Osler: N'est-ce-pas, en fait, ce qui se produit toujours à l'heure actuelle? Si j'étais à Hollywood et si la même chose se produisait, la conversation serait à peu près comme ceci: «Je bénéficierai du prêt d'une banque si vous acceptez de distribuer mes films». Il en est toujours ainsi, n'est-ce-pas? Un banquier ne va pas accepter de prêter de l'argent à M. Untel pour un film à moins que cette personne ne soit une grande célébrité internationale dont le banquier est absolument sûr car ses expériences passées avec elle ont été très réussies, ou quelque chose de ce genre.

M. Knight: Je peux vous assurer que les grands acheteurs de l'industrie cinématographique des États-Unis prennent part aux négociations en vue de la distribution des films. Ils n'en laissent pas le soin à quelqu'un d'autre. Ils surveillent leurs propres intérêts. Ils s'assurent que le contrat de distribution est avantageux pour eux, avant de placer leur argent dans cette affaire.

M. Stanbury: C'est justement ce que vous avez critiqué—le fait que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne ne s'assure pas que l'accord en vue de la distribution s'est fait comme il le fallait. La seule modification que vous proposez, c'est que la Société elle-même prenne part aux négociations pour exercer la pression dont elle dispose.

M. Knight: Oui, c'est exactement ce que je propose.

Le président: Je pense que cela se fait déjà, étant donné que généralement, la manière dont fonctionne la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, il y a des consultations financières, et même des prêts, au stade de la préparation d'un scénario. Lorsque le scénario a été préparé, le réalisateur le remet aux distributeurs pour essayer d'obtenir un contrat de distribution. Lorsqu'il a obtenu le contrat, il l'apporte en même temps que le scénario achevé à la Société, et lorsque la Société a examiné avec soin et a accepté ces documents, le prêt final est accordé. Donc, en fait, si ma description est exacte, la Société fait déjà ce dont vous avez parlé.

M. Knight: Votre description est tout à fait exacte mais ce n'est pas ce que je propose. Je propose plutôt que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, lorsqu'elle a décidé qu'un scénario en vaut la peine, et qu'elle est prête à fournir metimes—and having decided to make an investment in the development of a script, should not let the producer of the film, where they have invested in the script, be thrown to the wolves to find his own distribution. They should, with the weight of the investment that they are going to make in the film, then approach the distributors themselves and with bargaining power that their money represents negotiate jointly with the producer of the film a distribution contract.

Mr. Stanbury: This is the sort of thing that is done at the Bank of America, for instance.

Mr. Knight: Of course it is.

The Chairman: I do not see why the CFDC, if it so far, could not be doing that at the present time, and I would rather suspect that they do.

Mr. Knight: It has not happened so far.

The Chairman: The CFDC is in the position where they would like to not only make a loan but to get a piece of the action too. As Mr. Lapalme and Mr. Spencer explained to us, they would like a piece of the action so they could invest those profits in avant-garde or a far-out type of film so as to stimulate that aspect of the film industry as well.

Mr. Knight: Which is the way the British council operates.

The Chairman: This may well be the pattern that they have accepted. Have you completed that subject, Mr. Osler?

Mr. Osler: Would you allow us to slide into this royalties matter, which is the next thing to be brought up?

The Chairman: I think perhaps we should hold that. Mr. Stewart has another committee at 11 so perhaps it might give him an opportunity.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is very considerate of you.

First of all, since we did not have the background of Mr. Knight I would like to ask a couple of basic questions. Are you yourself an actor, Mr. Knight?

Mr. Knight: Yes, I am.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): And are you located in Toronto?

des fonds pour sa réalisation, ne laisse pas le réalisateur du film—dans les cas où elle a accepté de fournir des fonds pour le scénario—se battre tout seul pour obtenir un contrat de distribution. Elle devrait, avec le poids de l'investissement qu'elle va faire dans le film, se mettre elle-même en rapport avec les distributeurs, le réalisateur, elle devrait négocier conjointement avec et, avec le pouvoir de négociation que lui donne son argent, négocier, conjointement avec le réalisateur du film, en vue d'un contrat de distribution.

M. Stanbury: C'est ce que fait, par exemple, la Banque des États-Unis?

M. Knight: Bien sûr.

Le président: Je ne vois vraiment pas pourquoi la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne ne pourrait pas faire cela dès maintenant, si elle le voulait; et j'imagine qu'elle le fait, d'ailleurs.

M. Knight: Cela ne s'est jamais produit, jusqu'à présent.

Le président: La Société voudrait bien ne pas seulement accorder un prêt, mais retirer aussi une part des profits. Comme nous l'ont expliqué M. Lapalme et M. Spencer, elle aimerait bien pouvoir réaliser des profits, afin de les placer dans la réalisation de films d'avant-garde, par exemple, pour encourager aussi cet aspect-là de l'industrie cinématographique.

M. Knight: C'est ce que fait le British Council.

Le président: C'est sans doute la façon de procéder qui a été acceptée. Avez-vous épuisé vos questions, à ce sujet, monsieur Osler?

M. Osler: Nous permettriez-vous d'aborder la question des droits d'auteur, qui est le sujet suivant?

Le président: Nous devrions garder cela pour plus tard. M. Stewart a un autre comité à 11 heures, et nous pourrions donc peut-être lui donner l'occasion de s'exprimer.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Je vous remercie, monsieur le président. C'est très aimable à vous.

Tout d'abord, étant donné que l'on ne nous a rien dit de la carrière de M. Knight, j'aimerais poser deux questions fondamentales. Êtes-vous vous-même acteur, monsieur Knight?

M. Knight: Oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Et vivez-vous à Toronto?

[Text]

Mr. Knight: No, in Montreal.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Do you take part in television shows from Montreal?

Mr. Knight: Yes, I do.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): On the English network?

Mr. Knight: Yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): There is one thing that I have been concerned about, have brought up before, and would like to ask you about. It seems to me that there are a number of actors in Canada, on the CBC particularly, who are not Canadian and I am wondering if it is because there are so many non-Canadians who are actors in Canada or if it is considered that people from other countries are better actors?

• 1050

Mr. Knight: That is a difficult question. There are many, many motives which sit behind this particular problem. There are many people involved in the production—a producer, a director, a musical arranger, an actor—and very frequently these people have ambitions above and beyond those of simply the production that they are working on at any given moment. Very frequently, for instance, a director might have an eye on becoming a director in another region or in another area. Therefore he might wish to sell his services. He might wish to have somebody of international reputation working on his film with him in order that he could sell his services by taking a video-tape down to Hollywood and saying: "Look, this is what I did in Canada".

This kind of thing can happen. There are many people in Canada particularly who fall under the same general mistake of people.

By and large the acting community is an international community. It is a community which works with the language that it uses. Quite obviously the best actor for a Canadian play is the indigenous actor. It is the actor who knows the background to the part that he is playing. For instance, it is very difficult for a New York actor to come up here and play the part of a person from eastern Ontario. The whole background of eastern Ontario is foreign to him. Therefore if he is going to create that part he must do all kinds of research that the indigenous actor would not have to do and, frankly, it is a waste of time and money, to employ him.

We have an attitude about this. We have always taken the attitude—and when I say "we" I mean we people at ACTRA, the actors and performers of Canada—that the stage really falls into two categories, the international stage and the indigenous stage. It is almost a separation between tragedy and comedy. Tragedy is said to be the representation of all men at

M. Knight: Non, à Montréal.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Participez-vous à des émissions télévisées de Montréal.

M. Knight: Oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Au réseau anglais?

M. Knight: Oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Il y a une question qui m'intéresse, que j'ai déjà mentionnée, et que je veux vous poser. Il me semble qu'il y a beaucoup d'acteurs au Canada, en particulier à Radio-Canada, qui ne sont pas canadiens, et je me demande si c'est parce qu'il y a tant de non-Canadiens qui travaillent dans ce domaine au Canada ou parce que l'on considère que les étrangers sont de meilleurs acteurs?

M. Knight: C'est une question très délicate. Il y a un nombre infini de raisons à la base de cette situation. Il y a beaucoup de personnes qui travaillent à la réalisation—réalisateurs, metteurs en scène, arrangeurs musicaux, acteurs—et beaucoup d'entre eux ont des ambitions qui dépassent largement le cadre de la réalisation à laquelle ils sont en train de participer à tel ou tel moment. Très souvent, par exemple, un metteur en scène a l'ambition de devenir metteur en scène dans une autre région ou dans une autre zone. Il voudrait donc peut-être vendre ses services. Il peut vouloir faire participer un acteur de renommée mondiale à son film, pour pouvoir vendre ses services en emportant une bande vidéomagnétique à Hollywood en disant: «Voyez ce que j'ai fait au Canada».

Ce genre de choses peut se produire. Il y a beaucoup de gens, en particulier, au Canada, qui font la même erreur générale que les gens partout qui ont tendance à croire que la personne qui habite un autre quartier ou qui vient de l'étranger est plus compétente que le voisin. C'est un trait humain qui fait partie intégrale de la vie. Il y a tellement d'implications à cette question time and comedy is said to be a representation of individuals everywhere, who assume that the man down the street, around the block, across the ocean, is better than the man who is living next door. I think this is a common, human trait which is part and parcel of life. There are so many intricate, involved answers to this particular question. I think as matter of policy—

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I think it is rather unfortunate but I believe that assessment is quite correct, that we seem to have the attitude that because somebody is from somewhere else they must be better. In that particular respect I am wondering if people from the United Kingdom, for example, come here with the intention of becoming Canadian citizens—are they here for just a short while, intending to go back or to go to American television, or what have you.

Mr. Knight: That is an individual question and I think it must be answered by the individuals. For instance, I was born in the United Kingdom. I have been in this country since 1950, which seems to dictate that I intend to stay here. Man in an individual situation within the framework of his own environment and his own life.

Basically the acting community is an international community—it moves—because the film industry is international, it moves. The Americans are making films in Great Britain, Sicily, the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia—all over the world—and they take their actors with them and they recruit actors in the locality where they go. British film companies are making films in Canada. There was one made in Vancouver last year or the year before by a British company, where they brought two British actors with them and recruited the rest of the cast in the locality.

We would like to encourage this movement but unfortunately in some sense we are being prevented in large part from moving ourselves unless we want to become Americans. We can go if we want to become citizens but we cannot go just to work. This is our problem.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Je crois que c'est dommage, mais que vous avez assez raison de dire que parfois notre attitude est que si une personne vient d'ailleurs, elle doit nécessairement être plus compétente. À cet égard, je me demande si les gens du Royaume-Uni, par exemple, qui viennent ici veulent devenir citoyens canadiens ou s'ils viennent seulement pour une brève période, avant d'aller à la télévision américaine?

M. Knight: Je crois que c'est une question que seule la personne en cause peut répondre. Pour ma part, je suis né au Royaume-Uni et je suis ici depuis 1950, ce qui permet de conclure que j'ai l'intention de rester.

Je sais que, en général, le groupe des acteurs est essentiellement un groupe international. Évidemment, dans le cas d'une réalisation canadienne, le meilleur acteur c'est l'acteur canadien, car il connaît tout le contexte de son rôle. Il est très difficile pour un acteur de New York de venir ici et d'adopter le rôle d'une personne de l'est de l'Ontario. Il ne connaît aucunement le contexte. Il devra faire des recherches qu'un acteur canadien n'aurait pas à faire. Il y aura donc une perte d'argent et de temps.

Nous croyons, à ce sujet, et lorsque je dis nous, je parle des acteurs du Canada, les membres de l'ACTRA, nous croyons qu'il faut distinguer entre le théâtre international et le théâtre national. C'est presque la même distinction qu'entre la tragédie et la comédie. La tragédie, c'est la présentation de situations universelles, alors que la comédie présente une personne dans une situation particulière dans son milieu.

Au fond, le groupe des acteurs est une communauté internationale qui se déplace puisque l'industrie cinématographique est une industrie internationale. Les Américains tournent des films en Grande-Bretagne, en Sicile, en Tchécoslovaquie, en Union soviétique, ils amènent leurs acteurs avec eux et ils emploient également des acteurs locaux. Les sociétés cinématographiques britanniques réalisent également des films au Canada. Ils en ont tourné un à Vancouver l'an dernier ou l'année précédente. La Société a amené avec elle deux acteurs britanniques et elle a recruté les autres acteurs dans la région.

Nous voulons encourager ce genre de chose, mais malheureusement, nous avons de la difficulté nous-mêmes à nous déplacer, à moins évidemment de devenir américains. Nous pouvons y aller à titre d'émigrants, mais pas s'il s'agit seulement de travailler. Voilà le problème.

[Text]

Mr. Osler: The Equity Actors Association is a sister union to yours, and I have had some experience with summer theatre and the Manitoba Theatre Centre in Winnipeg. There have been instances—and I do not say this is a trend—where local actors, who have decided that their following is pretty good, have held the organizations up for fees that were well in excess of those for which you could get relatively well-known and certainly very competent American actors. If they had a month off with nothing to do and you paid their air fare to Winnipeg they might work for you. I know in one instance we got a very competent New York person to do a lead in The King and I for exactly half what the local Winnipeg person would do it for, because the local person had had a hit in The King and I five years before, or some darn fool thing. This kind of thing does happen, but that is an aside. My point is that it does not seem difficult to bring in American actors if you want to bring them in. Can Canadian actors not go across the border?

Mr. Knight: No. A different set of criteria is used by the Immigration Department and the Department of Labour in the United States than the criteria that is used by the Canadian immigration service. The Canadian immigration service, to paraphrase it—and I can only do that because I do not have the Act with me—simply suggests that groups of actors, athletes, people involved in entertainment in a very broad sense of the word, may enter the country to follow their profession. That is basically what it says, and the Department of Manpower and Immigration accepts this without any control over the situation at all.

If a person has a contract to come and work in Canada, they allow him in. They allow him to come in without a contract and look for work. They allow him, when he has one job in Canada, to look for others while he is here, without any restraining action on the part of the Department of Manpower and Immigration whatsoever.

Mr. Osler: What about a Kate Reid or a Christopher Plummer who goes to New York?

Mr. Knight: Take Kate Reid as a particular example. She got permission to go and do a show on Broadway. While she was there she was asked to take part in some television activity, and she was refused permission to do that. The criteria that the American act sets down tends to ask someone, without specifying who, to make a judgment on the ability of the person applying and it also requires that there be no indigenous performer of the same type and kind who is available to do the work.

[Interpretation]

M. Osler: L'Equity Actors Association est une association soeur et j'ai eu une certaine expérience de théâtre d'été à Winnipeg. Dans certains cas, les acteurs locaux ont décidé qu'ils attireraient un assez bon auditoire et ont exigé des honoraires bien supérieurs à ce qu'auraient exigés des acteurs américains bien connus et aussi compétents. S'ils ont un mois de relâche et que vous payez leurs voyages, il se rendront à Winnipeg. Je me souviens, il y a quelques années, nous avons pu obtenir un très bon acteur américain pour jouer le rôle principal de The King and I, pour exactement la moitié du prix que nous aurions dû verser à l'acteur de Winnipeg, simplement parce que celui-ci avait connu un grand succès dans le même rôle cinq ans plus tôt. Mais, je crois qu'il n'est pas difficile de faire venir les acteurs américains au Canada. Les Canadiens peuvent-ils eux traverser la frontière?

M. Knight: Non. Le ministère de l'Immigration et le ministère du Travail des États-Unis ont des critères différents. Les services d'immigration du Canada disent tout simplement que les troupes d'acteurs ou les groupes d'athlètes et les gens du monde des spectacles et du divertissement peuvent venir au Canada pour exercer leur profession. Le ministère de l'Immigration l'accepte sans restrictions.

Si une personne a un contrat pour travailler au Canada, on lui permet d'entrer. On lui permet même de venir au Canada sans contrat et de chercher du travail. Lorsqu'il a un contrat au Canada, il peut chercher un autre emploi ici, sans restrictions de la part du ministère de l'Immigration.

M. Osler: Qu'en est-il de Kate Reid ou de Christopher Plummer, lorsqu'ils vont à New York?

M. Knight: Kate Reid en particulier a eu la permission d'aller donner un spectacle à Broadway. On lui a demandé de travailler à la télévision mais elle n'a pas eu la permission de le faire. Les critères établis par la loi américaine exigent que quelqu'un porte un jugement sur la compétence de la personne qui présente la demande et qu'il n'y ait pas d'artiste américain qui soit disponible pour exécuter le même travail.

jection because there may not be an American actor who can speak Welsh. But if I am asked to play a part in English of a very general type, then the American unions would be consulted by the Department of Labour and they would be asked this question, "Do you have performers of this type and kind who are available, ready and willing to play this part?", and if the answer is "Yes, we do have", then the answer to the question is "No, you may not come in and take this part". The whole sets of criteria are quite different.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): All of these people, whether they come in from outside on a short-term basis or not, must belong to ACTRA, is that so?

Mr. Knight: No, no, no.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): In other words, it does not work like the musicians union?

Mr. Knight: No.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): In order to perform in Canada you must belong to the union.

Mr. Knight: Yes. The Musicians Union is an international union and the probability is that a person coming from New York is a member of the Musicians Union as such when he comes here. In ACTRA's jurisdiction there is a requirement by most of the engagers that we have negotiated agreements with that they will not require a person who is member of ACTRA to work with a non-member, or a person who has not been qualified by ACTRA, and therefore, following Canadian practice, tend to ask the performers working in our jurisdiction to pay a proportionate amount equivalent to some form of dues to the union. They do not have to become members. We charge them for a work permit, which varies in price from $5.00 a day on films, and from $10 up to $50 for working on a commercial.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): And does this apply to singers as well?

Mr. Knight: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): What about a choir?

Mr. Knight: Yes, although I forget the precise amount. It is a very small amount for members of the choir.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): And this is a negotiation you have with the CBC, for example.

Mr. Knight: Oh yes, the cost of work permit is written into the agreement with the CBC.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I see. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

américain parle le gaulois. Mais s'il s'agissait d'un rôle assez ordinaire, en anglais, le ministère du Travail américain consulterait l'Union des acteurs pour savoir s'il y a un acteur qui pourrait prendre ce rôle à ma place. Si c'est le cas alors je ne pourrais pas y aller. Les critères sont bien différents.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Mais est-ce que tous les acteurs qui viennent de l'extérieur, que ce soit pour un contrat à court terme ou non, doivent faire partie de l'ACTRA?

M. Knight: Non.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Ce n'est pas comme l'Union des musiciens?

M. Knight: Non.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Pour paraître en spectacle au Canada, il faut faire partie de l'Union.

M. Knight: Oui. L'Union des musiciens est une union internationale et il est probable qu'une personne qui vient de New York est déjà membre de l'Union des musiciens. Mais l'ACTRA a une entente avec la plupart des personnes avec qui nous avons négocié que les membres de l'ACTRA ne soient pas obligés de travailler avec une personne qui n'est pas membre de l'ACTRA. Par conséquent, au Canada, nous demandons d'habitude aux acteurs qui travaillent sous notre égide de verser des droits à l'Union, sans nécessairement devenir membres. Nous leur faisons payer un permis de travail qui varie de $5 par jour pour les films à $50 pour de la publicité.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Est-ce que cela s'applique aussi aux chanteurs?

M. Knight: Oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Et les chœurs?

M. Knight: Oui, je ne me souviens pas de la somme exacte, c'est une somme peu élevée.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): C'est l'entente que vous avez négociée avec Radio-Canada?

M. Knight: Oui, c'est dans l'entente que nous avons négociée avec Radio-Canada.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Merci beaucoup, monsieur le président.

The Chairman: Mr. Schumacher?

Mr. Schumacher: Because so many of the members of the Committee are new, I wonder if Mr. Knight would explain to us exactly what actors in Canada as well as other people his organization represents, how many people belong to it, whether they are primarily employed by private industry or by government organizations, and some background of that nature which may assist us.

Mr. Knight: All right. The full title of ACTRA is the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists. It is an association of both performers and writers who are working in any of the recorded media, that is to say, radio, television and films.

• 1100

We operate from coast to coast. We have an office in Vancouver and we have an office in St. John's, Newfoundland, and we have offices in all the major cities in between. We are entirely a Canadian organization; we have no parent body in the United States. We are not an international union in any sense of the word, although we do have affiliation agreements with some of the international associations of actors and international associations of writers. Our membership is usually around 3,000. I say "usually" because it varies from day to day. People who have not found work recently can withdraw from membership, which has the effect that they are sort of members in status, as it were. They no longer pay dues to the Association although they can become members again immediately upon finding new work. So, the active membership, that is to say, those members who are paying dues, is approximately 3,000.

The majority of them are actors—I suppose 2,500 of them are actors—and approximately 500, and these are very approximate figures, are writers. Sometimes writing and performing both the functions of are done by the same individual.

It is difficult to say except in terms of gross figures where they are all working. The majority of the income for both writers and performers derives from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. However, a very large portion of our income derives from the production of commercial announcements. A very minor proportion—I read the figures yesterday but I hesitate to attempt to record them—of our income derives from either the private television or radio stations or the CTV Network and private film production.

Mr. Alexander: Could you pursue that a little further, sir?

Mr. Knight: My problem is that I am going to have to guess. I read the figures yesterday but I did not bring them with me. I would suggest that less than 10 per cent of all the money earned by all of our mem-

Le président: Monsieur Schumacher.

M. Schumacher: Monsieur le président, comme il y beaucoup de nouveaux membres sur le comité j voulais demander à M. Knight de nous expliquer exactement combien d'acteurs au Canada et d'autres personnes sont représentées par son association, s'il sont employés par l'industrie privée ou des organismes publics, ainsi que les faits généraux qui nous seraient utiles.

M. Knight: L'ACTRA est l'association des artistes de la radio et de la télévision du Canada. C'est une association d'écrivains et d'artistes qui travaillent pour tous les moyens de communication enregistrés, c'est-à-dire, radio, télévision et films.

Nous opérons d'un océan à l'autre, nous avons un bureau à Vancouver et un à Saint-Jean, Terre-Neuve ainsi que dans toutes les grandes villes entre les deux. C'est une organisation entièrement canadienne, il n'y pas de filiales aux États-Unis. Ce n'est pas une union internationale bien que nous soyons affiliés avec certaines associations internationales d'acteurs et d'écrivains. Nous avons normalement environ trois mille membres. Je dis «normalement» car cela varie d'un jour à l'autre, des gens qui n'ont pas trouvé de travail depuis quelque temps, peuvent se retirer. Ils ne paient plus leur cotisation à l'Association mais peuvent redevenir membres immédiatement lorsqu'ils trouvent du travail. Donc, le nombre de membres actifs, c'est-à-dire ceux qui paient leur cotisation, est d'environ 3,000.

La majorité sont des acteurs, peut-être 2,500, ce sont des chiffres très approximatifs, et environ 500 sont des écrivains. Parfois, une personne fait les deux: acteur et auteur.

Sauf en termes généraux, il est difficile de dire où ils travaillent tous. La majorité des revenus des écrivains et des acteurs provient de la Société Radio-Canada. Toutefois, une grande proportion de notre revenu vient de la production de films publicitaires. Une très petite partie de notre revenu, et j'hésite à les citer n'ayant lu les chiffres qu'hier, mais une très petite fraction de notre revenu vient des postes privés de radio et de télévision ou du réseau CTV et de la production privée de films.

M. Alexander: Pourriez-vous continuer un peu dans ce sens, monsieur?

M. Knight: Le problème, c'est que je dois essayer de me souvenir. J'ai lu les chiffres hier, je ne les ai pas apportés. Je pense que moins de 10 p. 100 du revenu de nos membres vient des postes privés, CTV et de ers derives from the CTV Network, the private television and radio stations and from private film makers. could go further and say considerably less than 10 per cent.

[Texte]

Mr. Schumacher: Is that because the CTV imports most of their commercial announcements whereas the CBC does not?

Mr. Knight: No. Generally speaking the commercial announcements are not paid for by the television companies, they are paid for by advertising agencies. That revenue derives from the advertiser directly through his advertising agency and that money is not paid for by the networks or the stations. The money earned from a network or a station is directly related to programming, not to commercial announcements at all, and it amounts to the fact that in the major areas other than public affairs and sports they are importing the vast majority of their programming.

Mr. Schumacher: Is it a policy of your organization to have wage parity between your members and their counterparts in the United States?

Mr. Knight: By no means, no. We have recently negotiated a film agreement with the motion picture producers in this country which gives them a number of advantages over the American counterpart. For instance, the American agreement envisages one level actor only and he is paid something like—and again I am speaking from memory—$120 a day. He is a “lay” player. Beyond that he is a “contract” player at a far greater sum of money. Our highest minimum rate for what we call a “principal” performer and he is in feature films or entertainment films to be paid at $100 a day, if he is lucky enough to ever get a day’s work. Then we have two other categories of performers. One is a “supporting” performer, who is paid a smaller amount of money, $83 a day, and then there is an even smaller category of performer known as a “bit” performer who is paid at a rate below that, which I believe is $60 a day.

This gives the Canadian producer a considerable advantage over his American counterpart. In addition to this, there is another built-in advantage in that we allow the producer of films to completely buy out world rights to the film for a sum of money. The American contract does not allow this, which means that any run on television in any part of the world requires a residual payment to the performers in the United States. We allow the producer in this country the option of either paying it that way or buying out the rights.

There has been considerable activity fairly recently through interested producers from the United States inquiring about the possibilities of making films in this country. We believe there are two reasons for this. One, of course, is the possibility of establishing a films de l'industrie privée. Je pourrais peut-être même dire moins de 10 p. 100.

M. Schumacher: Est-ce parce que la CTV importe presque toute sa publicité, contrairement à Radio-Canada?

M. Knight: Non. La publicité n'est pas payée, d'habitude, par les compagnies de télévision mais plutôt par les agences de publicité. Ce revenu vient de la publicité faite par une agence et cet argent n'est pas payé par les réseaux ou les stations. L'argent venant des postes et des stations, se rapporte aux émissions et non à la publicité, et il est dû au fait que dans les domaines autres que les affaires publiques et les sports, une grande partie des émissions est importée.

M. Schumacher: La politique de votre organisation est-elle d'avoir la parité de salaire de vos membres avec leurs homologues aux États-Unis?

M. Knight: Non, pas du tout. Récemment, nous avons négocié un contrat de films avec les réalisateurs de films de ce pays et ce contrat a nombre d'avantages par rapport aux contrats aux États-Unis. Par exemple, le contrat aux États-Unis ne considère qu'un seul niveau d'acteur payé, disons, à peu près $120 par jour. C'est un acteur «journalier». Au delà, il y a l'acteur sous «contrat» pour une somme beaucoup plus élevée. Notre minimum le plus élevé est pour l'artiste principal dans un long métrage, par exemple, qui est payé $100 par jour s'il a la chance d'avoir une journée de travail.

Ensuite, il y a deux autres catégories: les acteurs secondaires payés un peu moins, $83 par jour, et une troisième catégorie qui joue des petits rôles, et qui reçoit, je pense, $60 par jour.

Le réalisateur canadien a donc un grand avantage sur son homologue américain. En plus, il y a un autre avantage en ce que nous permettons aux producteurs de films, d'acheter les droits exclusifs du film pour une somme donnée. Les contrats américains ne l'autorisent pas; cela veut dire que, si le film est présenté à la télévision, quelque part au monde il faut verser un paiement résiduaire aux artistes aux États-Unis. Ici, le producteur est libre de choisir entre les deux méthodes de paiement des droits.

Bien des réalisateurs intéressés sont venus des États-Unis récemment pour se renseigner sur les possibilités de faire des films ici. Nous pensons qu'il y a deux raisons pour cela. L'une est la possibilité d'établir une société canadienne ici pour profiter de la Société Canadian corporation in order to take advantage of the Canadian Film Development Corporation and, second, we believe our rates and conditions of work for the performers are attractive to them. In addition, of course, the discount on the money is another attraction.

Mr. Schumacher: From a percentage standpoint how much lower would you say our actors' rates are than the Americans?

Mr. Knight: It is difficult to say because of the mixture of fees that we have. Their minimum rate is $120 and our highest rate is $100, but then we have two lower rates below that which they do not recognize at all. In any film you will probably find four or five "principal" performers, five or six "supporting" performers and any number of "bit" performers who just do odd lines here and there. All of those people would be paid at least $120 a day in the United States, whereas they can be paid as little as $60 a day here.

Mr. Schumacher: I see.

Mr. Knight: But it is difficult to estimate. It would depend on the individual film, the number of the cast and so forth.

Mr. Paul Siren (General Secretary, Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists): If I may add, Mr. Chairman, there is an incentive for documentary rates,

Mr. Knight: Yes. In addition to that we have another set of rates for documentary films, which are below the entertainment film rates.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): Mr. Schumacher, for clarification may I ask Mr. Knight if he is speaking only of English-speaking actors?

Mr. Knight: No.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): I would like to know the relationship between English and French and whether the rates vary.

• 1110

Mr. Knight: Yes, they do vary. The Union des Artistes, which serves the same function that we serve in the English-speaking part of Canada, serve throughout French Canada and they work on basically the same rates as we are in television. As a matter of fact, we meet frequently and last year, as far as television is concerned, they achieved parity with our rates. However, as to their film rates, they are working on an agreement that we had negotiated some five or six years ago. They are even cheaper for French Canada than ours are.

[Interpretation]

canadienne de développement du film et l'autre, pensons-nous, c'est que nos taux et nos conditions de travail pour les acteurs sont intéressants. Évidemment, l'escompte sur la monnaie est un autre attrait.

M. Schumacher: Est-ce que nos acteurs sont payés beaucoup moins que les Américains?

M. Knight: C'est difficile à dire, à cause de la variété des tarifs. Leur minimum est $120 et notre minimum plus élevé est $100 et nous avons deux autres taux qu'ils n'ont pas du tout. Dans chaque film, il y a peut-être cinq ou six acteurs principaux, cinq ou six acteurs secondaires, et un nombre indéfini de petits rôles. Tout ce monde aux États-Unis, recevrait au moins $120 par jour, tandis qu'ici, certains recevraient seulement $60.

M. Schumacher: Je vois.

M. Knight: Mais c'est difficile à estimer. Cela dépend du film, du nombre d'acteurs, etc. . .

M. Paul Siren (Secrétaire général, Association des artistes de la radio et de la télévision canadienne): J'ajouterai, monsieur le président, que les taux des documentaires sont également avantageux.

M. Knight: Oui, nous avons d'autres taux pour les documentaires, qui sont moins élevés.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Monsieur Knight, je voudrais savoir si vous parlez uniquement des acteurs de langue anglaise?

M. Knight: Non.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Je voudrais savoir quel est le rapport entre les Français et les Anglais, ce qui concerne les tarifs.

M. Knight: L'Union des artistes, qui est notre homologue pour les acteurs de langue française a essentiellement les mêmes taux que nous pour la télévision. En fait, nous nous rencontrons fréquemment et, l'autre jour, ils ont obtenu l'égalité pour la télévision. Pour les films toutefois, ils travaillent avec un contrat que nous avons négocié il y a cinq ou six ans. Ils ont au Canada français des taux inférieurs aux nôtres.

[texte]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): Hypothetically, if a French-speaking actress or actor—a member of the Union des Artistes does an English-speaking job in Toronto or Montreal you could employ them at their rates and your union would recognize that?

Mr. Knight: No. The definition of jurisdiction between us is the definition of the audience at which it is aimed. In other words, if one of their members works in an English film he is working under our jurisdiction at that moment of time. It is simply an exchange of cards. He comes in, shows his UDA card and he works under our jurisdiction and gets paid our rates. And vice versa, if I go to work in a French film in Montreal I get paid their rates.

Mr. Schumacher: Does the National Film Board have any connection with your organization or do you do any work with the National Film Board?

Mr. Knight: Oh yes indeed. The National Film Board is a member of the motion picture producers' association and in negotiating agreements with the motion pictures producers' association, the National Film Board are members; therefore, we automatically have an agreement with them. In fact, it was their personnel who formed the major negotiating body with whom we negotiated.

Their film production, however—and I am talking about English films only at this point—apart from the feature films that they made last year, is mainly in the area of documentary films, either made for a government department as an instructional film, or a film on safety. For instance, I have taken part in two series of films very recently with the National Film Board, one concerned with the education of prison officers and the other one concerned with a series of films on industrial relations. This is the type of film they make, generally speaking.

Mr. Alexander: Is the percentage of Canadian actors who work with the National Film Board high?

Mr. Knight: The National Film Board does tend to use Canadians rather than anybody else in their productions. I do not know if that answers your question?

Mr. Alexander: Yes, it does.

Mr. Schumacher: In view of the fact that so many of our members find employment in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—and I understand it is the largest single employer of your membership—I suppose these are free lance contracts in a great deal of cases?

Mr. Knight: All our members are working on balance contracts; none of them are employees.

Mr. Schumacher: You would not have any members who worked full-time for the corporation?

[Interprétation]

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Alors si un acteur ou une actrice canadien-français, membre de l'Union des artistes, fait un travail en anglais à Toronto ou même à Montréal vous pourriez l'employer au tarif de son syndicat avec l'assentiment de votre association.

M. Knight: Non. Cela dépend de l'auditoire. Si c'est un film anglais, cela dépend de nous, c'est un échange de cartes. L'acteur vient, montre sa carte de l'UDA et il travaille sous notre juridiction et est payé à nos tarifs. Réciproquement si je vais travailler à Montréal en français, je serai payé à leur tarif.

M. Schumacher: Est-ce que l'Office national du film a des rapports avec vous? Est-ce que vous travaillez ensemble?

M. Knight: Oui. L'office national du film est membre de l'Association des réalisateurs de cinéma et en négociant des ententes avec cette association de producteurs, l'Office national du film conclut automatiquement une entente avec nous. C'est le principal organisme avec lequel nous avons négocié.

Je parle seulement des films de langue anglaise, à part les deux longs métrages faits l'an dernier, leur production est composée principalement de documentaires réalisés pour un ministère du gouvernement comme film d'instruction ou un film sur la sécurité. Par exemple, j'ai joué récemment dans deux séries de films de l'Office national du film, une sur l'éducation des gardes de prison et l'autre sur les relations industrielles. C'est le genre de films qu'ils font, en général.

M. Alexander: Est-ce qu'il y a beaucoup d'acteurs canadiens qui travaillent pour l'O.N.F.?

M. Knight: L'Office national du film fait, de préférence, appel aux Canadiens. Est-ce que cela répond à votre question?

M. Alexander: Oui.

M. Schumacher: Puisqu'un si grand nombre de vos membres viennent de Radio-Canada, qui emploie le plus grand nombre de vos membres, je suppose qu'il s'agit surtout de contrats d'agents libres.

M. Knight: Tous nos membres travaillent à titre d'agents libres et indépendants. Ce ne sont pas des employés.

M. Schumacher: Y en a-t-il qui travaillent à plein temps pour Radio-Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Knight: Not in the function that they serve under ACTRA's jurisdiction. There are a number of the announcers on the Corporation's staff who, by virtue of the fact that they work outside of the Corporation on such things as the recording of commercial announcements, are members of ACTRA. But the membership in ACTRA has nothing to do with their employment as announcers with the Corporation.

Mr. Schumacher: Has the fact that certain producers have become dependent on CBC work and then suddenly been cut off had any effect on your operations? Is there justification for the criticism sometimes heard that the CBC tends to be a little inconsistent in its employment practices with these freelance producers? Does this have any effect on the development of a film industry in this country?

Mr. Knight: I do not have any direct knowledge of the practice to which you are referring. I would not like to comment on that without doing some research into it. I do not know of the relationships that the CBC has with independent producers, really.

They have a number of arrangements. Take, for instance, the television series that was produced two years ago called Seaway Productions. The CBC invested in that a certain extent and in return got the distribution of it in Canada both in English and in French. But they had no control over what film directors were hired or fired by that particular film company. They had no direct control over that situation whatsoever. I really do not have any direct knowledge of this situation at all.

Mr. Schumacher: Those are all the questions I have.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Knight, I notice on page 14 of your statement that you make reference to the practice that has been established in Norway whereby the Norwegian government collects secondary rights on behalf of its local performers and writers, and also collects both primary and secondary rights on behalf of foreign performers and writers. I notice that the moneys which it collects on behalf of foreign performers is not passed on to them.

Mr. Knight: That is correct.

Mr. Schreyer: I am wondering if this is a tenable position?

Mr. Knight: Apparently this is a situation that has been accepted by the International copyright community as being a legitimate disposition of the moneys collected under the aegis of the Rome Convention for Neighbouring Rights. Apparently this has been accepted by that international body.

[Interpretation]

M. Knight: Non, pas au titre de leur inscription à l'ACTRA. Il y a un certain nombre d'annonceurs de Radio-Canada qui, parce qu'ils travaillent à l'extérieur de Radio-Canada, pour l'enregistrement de bandes publicitaires, par exemple, sont membres de l'ACTRA mais le fait qu'ils sont membres n'a rien à voir avec leur qualité d'annonceur à Radio-Canada.

M. Schumacher: Est-ce que le fait que certains producteurs dépendent de Radio-Canada et perdent tout à coup ces contrats a des conséquences sur vos opérations? Peut-on justifier les critiques souvent exprimées à l'égard de Radio-Canada, accusant la Société d'être moins juste lorsqu'il s'agit d'employer des réalisateurs indépendants. Est-ce que cela a des conséquences sur le développement de l'industrie cinématographique?

M. Knight: Je ne connais pas personnellement l'usage dont vous parlez, et je ne voudrais pas commenter sans faire des recherches à ce sujet. Je ne sais pas quel est le rapport entre la Société Radio-Canada et les réalisateurs indépendants.

Il y a un certain nombre d'ententes. Prenez, par exemple, la série télévisée produite par Seaway Productions il y a deux ans. La Société Radio-Canada a fait quelques investissements et, en retour, elle a obtenu les droits de distribution au Canada en anglais et en français. Mais, il n'exerçait pas de contrôle sur les réalisateurs employés ou congédiés par la société cinématographique.

M. Schumacher: Voilà toutes les questions que je désirais poser.

M. Schreyer: Monsieur Knight, je remarque à la page 14 de votre déclaration, que vous parlez d'une pratique qui existe en Norvège selon laquelle le gouvernement norvégien obtient les droits secondaires au nom des acteurs et écrivains locaux et les droits primaires et secondaires au nom des acteurs et auteurs étrangers.

Je remarque que les sommes prélevées au nom des étrangers ne leur sont pas remises.

M. Knight: C'est exact.

M. Schreyer: Est-ce une situation tenable?

M. Knight: Elle est acceptée par les droits d'auteur internationaux. Il semble que ce soit une façon légitime de disposer des droits retenus en vertu de la Convention de Rome sur les droits connexes. Il semble que cet organisme international l'ait acceptée.

[texte]

It is going to get even more complicated. With the introduction of satellite broadcasting, these rights that have come through international copyright conventions are going to be very difficult to control. At the moment there is a physical transaction that takes place: a person buys a film, buys a television show and it is physically transferred from one place to another. Very shortly that direct involvement will disappear with the introduction of satellite broadcasting and I think the community is anticipating this situation.

The world community is attempting basically to encourage the writers within a given country to provide that country's own needs in large part. This is another attitude that is beginning to show in these affairs. Their reasons for accepting this might very well be related to that although I cannot speak for them, of course.

Mr. Schreyer: Well, "treaty" implies reciprocation and I take it therefore that by doing so the Norwegian government is putting its own Norwegian performers in a position where they could not hope to recover some—

Mr. Knight: Precisely; this would have to be reciprocated obviously around the international community, and one can only assume, when the international community accepts this as being a precedent for the distribution of those funds, that they have taken the attitude it will balance out in the long run.

Mr. Schreyer: Do you believe that essentially the same arrangement can be applied here in Canada? Would you recommend an arrangement essentially the same in every major respect?

Mr. Knight: I would be very careful about that in my statement. I have said that the writers and performers of Canada "might" agree to such a step if the disposition of those funds was for the encouragement of local production, because the benefit to them becomes obvious then; not as individuals, but to the collective of writers and performers it becomes obvious.

I have been very careful to say they "might" rather than they "will" because they have not completed their discussions of this and they have not really completed their own thinking on it. This is why I put it in such tentative terms in the Statement.

Mr. Schreyer: Your organization has no policy position as yet?

Mr. Knight: As yet, no.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): Mr. Schreyer, would the chair follow your line a little bit further, with your indulgence, gentlemen? Is either the United States or the U.S.S.R. a member of the Treaty of Rome?

[Interprétation]

La situation se compliquera davantage avec l'introduction de la diffusion par satellites. Les droits énumérés dans les conventions internationales sur les droits d'auteurs seront difficiles à contrôler. Il s'agit présentement de transactions matérielles; quelqu'un achète un film, une émission de télévision, et on le transporte d'un endroit à un autre. Mais, avant longtemps, cette transaction directe disparaîtra avec la télévision par satellite et on prévoit cette éventualité.

Au plan international, on veut encourager les auteurs d'un pays donné à pourvoir à ses propres besoins. C'est une attitude qui commence à transparaître. Leurs raisons pour l'accepter en découlent peut-être mais je ne peux pas parler en leur nom évidemment.

M. Schreyer: Un traité comporte la réciprocité, et, en agissant ainsi, le gouvernement norvégien place ses acteurs dans une position sans espoir.

M. Knight: Précisément. Il doit donc y avoir des droits réciproques d'un pays à l'autre, et il faut supposer que lorsqu'on acceptera ce précédent, pour la distribution de fonds, tout s'équilibrera à la longue.

M. Schreyer: Pensez-vous que des dispositions semblables pourraient s'appliquer ici? Recommanderiez-vous des ententes essentiellement identiques relatives à tous les aspects importants?

M. Knight: Je serais très prudent. J'ai dit que les auteurs et les acteurs canadiens accepteraient «peut-être» une telle mesure si les fonds servaient à encourager les productions locales car les avantages qu'ils en tirent deviennent alors évidents, non pas à titre individuel, mais pour l'ensemble des auteurs et des acteurs.

J'ai pris soin de dire que cela «pourrait se faire» et non pas «se fera» car les discussions à ce sujet ne sont pas terminées et leur pensée n'est pas définitive. C'est pour cela que je me suis exprimé en termes provisoires.

M. Schreyer: vous n'avez pas encore pris position à ce sujet?

M. Knight: Non, pas encore.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Me permettez-vous d'aller un peu plus loin dans ce sens? Est-ce que les États-Unis et la Russie font partie de cette convention?

[Text]

Mr. Knight: No, neither. The United States has never been a signatory to the Berne treaty which is the treaty to which we are signatories and is the basis for our own copyright law. There has recently been a change of mind in the United States and they are seeking now to become signatories to Berne, but there is a hold up to that because of the Stockholm amendment which they do not want to accept.

There are negotiations going on at this moment between the United States and the international community with a view to the United States seeking to become signatories to Berne. I do not think there has been any discussion about their becoming signatories to the Rome convention as yet.

The U.S.S.R., of course, has never been signatories to any international copyright convention.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): They do not believe in it.

Mr. Knight: They do not believe in it; that is right.

Mr. Schreyer: I just have one more question. Mr. Knight, would you care to hazard a personal opinion as to whether or not, if Canada were to adopt essentially the same policy, it would be beneficial to Canadian programming? Perhaps that is not a fair question.

Mr. Knight: Let us put it this way. I think some form of collective organization is essential to enable the Canadian industry to provide programming for itself. However, I do not think our studies are complete enough yet for us to voice a final opinion on what form that should take. This is one line of investigation that we are following at the moment.

Mr. Schreyer: Right. Could you suggest an alternative?

Mr. Knight: I suggested some alternatives at the end of what I said to you. I think some way has to be found where all people who benefit directly—and on a personal basis from the Canadian broadcasting industry, that is to say the broadcasters, the actors, the writers, the film producers who sell their films, both foreign and domestic, somehow or another have to be formed into a form of collective which will provide the necessary investment funds for an independent production industry in Canada.

I think the ways and means of doing this remain very largely to be studied. We ourselves are attempting an investigation at the moment but we, as you understand, have very limited resources. You gentlemen have far greater resources.

An hon. Member: You do not know about austerity.

[Interpretation]

M. Knight: Ni l'un ni l'autre. Les États-Unis n'ont jamais signé la convention de Berne que nous avons signée et qui est à la base de notre Loi sur le droit d'auteur. Toutefois, les États-Unis ont récemment changé d'avis et ils désirent maintenant signer la convention de Berne, mais, ils ne veulent pas accepter l'amendement de Stockholm.

Des négociations sont présentement en cours entre les États-Unis et l'organisation internationale, relative à la convention de Berne. Mais, je ne pense pas qu'il ait eu de discussions au sujet de la signature de la convention de Rome.

L'Union soviétique n'a jamais signé de convention internationale sur les droits d'auteurs.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): C'est qu'ils ne croient pas.

M. Knight: Oui, c'est exact.

M. Schreyer: J'ai une autre question à poser, Mr. Knight, vous risqueriez-vous à donner votre point de vue personnel. Si le Canada adoptait la même politique, cela bénéficierait-il aux émissions canadiennes? Peut-être est-ce une question que je ne devrais pas poser?

M. Knight: Voyons, mettons cela d'une autre façon. Je pense que certaine forme d'organisation collective est essentielle pour permettre à l'industrie canadienne de préparer ses propres émissions. Cependant, je ne pense pas que nos études soient assez complètes pour que nous puissions émettre un avis définitif sur la forme qu'elle doit prendre. C'est une étude que nous poursuivons actuellement.

M. Schreyer: Avez-vous une autre possibilité d'offrir?

M. Knight: J'ai déjà suggéré d'autres possibilités à la fin de mon exposé. Je pense qu'il faut que ceux qui profitent directement et individuellement de l'industrie de télévision canadienne, c'est-à-dire les auteurs, les réalisateurs de films qui vendent leurs films ici ou à l'étranger, se groupent d'une façon ou d'une autre pour avoir un fonds d'investissement permettant à une industrie de production indépendante au Canada.

Quant aux moyens de le réaliser, eh bien, cela reste en grande partie à étudier. Nous essayons présentement de faire une enquête, mais, comme vous le comprenez, nous avons des ressources très limitées. Vous, messieurs, avez beaucoup plus de moyens que nous pour le faire.

Une voix: Vous n'êtes pas au courant de l'austérité.

[Texte]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): May I have the indulgence of the Committee, because I was next in line with one or two further questions. According to the sheet I have inherited, Mr. Danson comes after me.

I would like to follow up on this copyright matter. It happens that I have written a few books and therefore I know something about copyrights from the point of view of books.

As I understand it, essentially the onus is on the third party to prove that he has a right to do anything with my property. If I write a book it is not, as it is in the United States, I do not have to go through any rigmarole to establish copyright. The onus is on the other side to establish the fact that they have a right to use my property.

Mr. Knight: Correct.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): I am absolutely protected. I sell first rights to Longman's, I get paperback rights, and if they want to do film rights they have to come to me and negotiate, and so on all the way down the line. Now what is there that is different about a man that has written something for a television show or a film, or an actor who has signed a contract to perform?

Mr. Knight: Fundamentally, there is no basic difference except that we are not dealing with the same people. When you write a book you are dealing with publishers who have been in the publishing business for a long time, and the publishing business has always been controlled by the copyright acts in the various countries. They know the law, they understand the law and they deal within the law.

In the main, our relationship with broadcaster, has been basically very similar to that. Each of us understand each other's rights and we work within those rights. But in this new thing that has happened, the community antennas situation, the community antenna operator sends us through a cable of some kind an electronic impulse carrying a signal—but because people within the community want to receive that signal they are willing to pay him money for the delivery of it.

That signal happens to contain my work, for instance. That community antenna operator is not consulting me in the delivery of my work to this person who is willing to pay for it. The community antenna operator is making a profit because that person who is paying him wants to see my work—not because they want an electronic impulse but because they want to see my work.

Now the community antenna operator has never had to deal with the copyright law in the past and nobody, I suppose, had drawn it to his attention. Of course

[Interprétation]

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Puis-je avec votre permission poser une ou deux questions, puisque d'après la liste, c'est maintenant mon tour. Selon ma liste, ce sera ensuite le tour de M. Danson.

Je voudrais continuer à parler des droits d'auteur. Il se trouve que j'ai déjà écrit quelques livres, je suis donc au courant des droits d'auteurs pour les livres.

Si je comprends bien, c'est la troisième partie qui doit prouver son droit de faire quelque chose avec mon livre. Si j'écris un livre, ce n'est pas comme aux États-Unis, je n'ai pas besoins de faire un tas de chichis pour établir mes droits d'auteurs. C'est au tiers parti de prouver qu'il a le droit d'utiliser ma propriété.

M. Knight: Exact.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Je suis tout à fait protégé, je vends mes premiers droits à Longman pour un livre de poche et s'ils veulent en tirer un film, ils doivent venir me voir pour négocier et ainsi de suite. Maintenant, quelle différence y a-t-il avec quelqu'un qui écrit pour la télévision ou pour un film, ou un acteur qui signe un contrat d'interprétation?

M. Knight: Fondamentalement, il n'y a pas de différence si ce n'est que nous ne traitons pas avec les mêmes gens. Lorsque vous écrivez un livre, vous traitez avec des éditeurs qui sont dans la profession depuis longtemps et dans tous les pays l'édition a toujours été contrôlée par la Loi sur les droits d'auteurs. Ils connaissent la Loi, la comprennent et s'y conforment.

Dans l'ensemble, nos rapports avec les radiodiffuseurs ont été très semblables à cela. Chacun d'entre nous comprend les droits des autres et les respecte. Mais il y a un fait nouveau, les antennes communautaires. Les opérateurs d'antennes communautaires nous envoient par l'intermédiaire d'un câble quelconque des impulsions électroniques portant des signaux. Pour recevoir ces signaux la population est prête à payer une certaine somme.

Ces signaux, par exemple, contiennent mon travail. L'opérateur d'antennes communautaires ne me consulte pas pour livrer mon travail à des gens qui sont prêts à payer. Les opérateurs d'antennes communautaires font des affaires parce que les gens sont prêts à payer pour voir mon travail et non pas parce qu'ils veulent recevoir des signaux électroniques.

L'opérateur d'antennes communautaires, lui, n'a jamais eu à s'occuper des droits d'auteurs, personne n'a attiré son attention sur le sujet. Évidemment, ce that is not true; there have been elaborate discussions of it in the United States where the copyright law is somewhat different. However the only recourse that the writer has now is in the courts—he must go to court. This means that he has to find an instance where his work is being used, he has to collect evidence related to that work, he has to employ a lawyer, he has to go to court and he has to involve himself in costs.

Those costs have not yet been calculated. Neither has the result of the court action been anticipated—and it cannot be anticipated—and even if the court were to rule in his favour there is no indication what the monetary redress of the use of his rights would be. In other words he has no idea at the moment whether or not it is worth the candle in going to court. I think it is simply the fact that we are dealing with a group of people who are not used to working within the Copyright Act. In large part they are exploiting the work of intellectual workers of one kind or another, whether they be broadcasters or whether they be writers for their own profit, and it has not yet been tested anywhere in the courts.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): What you are saying then is that it is obvious that CATV is not simply a deliverer of a message, as is the Bell Telephone Company which charges land line fees and that is all, they are the deliverer of a work of art and as such they have somehow or other been excluded in the development so far?

Mr. Knight: Correct.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): Have you any solid recommendations?

Mr. Knight: The only recourse we have at law at the moment is to fight in the courts on a test case basis or, alternatively, to make a presentation of this dilemma to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, which will be our next step, to explain the difficulties that the writer finds himself in with the operator of community antennas, because that body is enabled by the new Broadcasting Act to regulate the issuance of licences to CATV operators. Whether or not they can in any way give the writer any assistance is yet to be discovered—I do not know.

But our next step will be to present to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission detail in respect of the position that the writer finds himself in in this relationship. If nothing can be forthcoming from that action then we will have to consider whether or not it is feasible for us to take some form of court action. But it is a very difficult decision to make because of the unknown quantities and because of the limited resources that we have.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): What is the relevance of this Act that is before the Senate? I imagine other members received the same thing that I n'est pas vrai; il y a eu de longues discussions là-dessus aux États-Unis où la loi sur les droits d'auteurs est quelque peu différente. Le seul recours qu'ait l'auteur actuellement est devant les tribunaux, il doit aller en cour. Cela veut dire qu'il doit trouver un cas où son travail a été utilisé, qu'il doit réunir des preuves sur son travail, qu'il doit prendre un avocat, qu'il doit aller en cour et s'exposer à des frais.

Ces frais n'ont pas encore été calculés. Les résultats d'une telle action n'ont pas non plus été envisagés et ils ne peuvent pas l'être. Et même si le jugement était favorable, rien ne permet de savoir à combien s'élèveraient les droits. On ne sait pas encore si le jeu en vaut la chandelle. Je pense en fait que c'est simplement parce que nous travaillons avec un groupe de personnes qui ne sont pas habituées à travailler dans le cadre de la Loi sur les droits d'auteurs. En bref, ils exploitent l'oeuvre des travailleurs intellectuels de toutes catégories, qu'ils soient auteurs ou radiodiffuseurs et rien n'a encore été tenté devant les tribunaux.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Ce que vous voulez dire c'est que les antennes communautaires ne sont pas simplement des moyens de transmission d'un message comme la Bell Téléphone qui demande des paiements pour l'utilisation des lignes, mais qu'il s'agit de la transmission d'oeuvres d'art, et que les auteurs de celles-ci n'en ont à ce jour pas profité.

M. Knight: Exact.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Avez-vous des recommandations à faire?

M. Knight: Le seul recours que nous ayons actuellement est de nous battre devant les tribunaux sur un cas d'essai, ou de présenter ce dilemme à la Commission canadienne de la radio et de la télévision, ce qui sera notre prochaine mesure, pour expliquer les difficultés dans lesquelles se trouve l'auteur face aux antennes communautaires, car cet organisme peut, conformément à la nouvelle Loi sur la radio et la télévision, réglementer les opérateurs d'antennes communautaires. Y a-t-il moyen d'aider de cette façon cela reste à découvrir.

Notre prochaine initiative sera de présenter à la Commission de la radiodiffusion et de la télédiffusion un exposé détaillé de la situation dans laquelle se trouve l'écrivain à ce sujet. Si rien ne découle de cette action, il faudra établir si oui ou non, il est possible d'entreprendre des poursuites devant les tribunaux. Mais c'est une décision très difficile à prendre à cause des inconnus et à cause des ressources limitées dont nous disposons.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Quelle est la portée de cette Loi qui est à l'heure actuelle devant le Sénat? J'imagine que d'autres membres ont reçu the other day from London, Ontario—legal criticism of this amendment now before the Senate, and not being a lawyer I did not understand it too well.

Mr. Knight: I understand it is being withdrawn—I am not sure. You are referring to Bill S-20, an Act to amend the Copyright Act. I understand the Economic Council of Canada are presently examining all of the applications of the Copyright Act. There has been a part of an agreement—although I must say when the minister mentioned it in the House the other day it was the first time I had heard of it—that the Copyright Act will be left as is until the Economic Council of Canada has completed its findings and can make recommendations as to the amendment of the Act.

Into this situation came a group of phonogram manufacturers—Canadian Companies but all of them subsidiaries of either British or American companies—making a claim under the terms of the Copyright Act for manufacturers performance rights.

The bill was estimated to be between $3 million and $5 million per year and a direct charge to the broadcasting companies—the private radio stations especially, although television does get into it to a certain extent.

The Minister when faced with this demand from the performing rights society suggested to them that this was beyond the terms set down by the Economic Council of Canada, was a new claim and one that had not been made under the Act before and, therefore, he was not prepared to accept it until the Economic Council had made their recommendations. He asked them to withdraw and make their presentation to the Economic Council for consideration with the new Act.

The effect would be, not as far as the writer of the work or composer is concerned, but as far as the manufacturer and the performer of the work is concerned, that there would be no performing rights under the present Copyright Act accruing to either the manufacturer or the performer, that the performing rights would be limited to the writer and the composer. That is the way I understand it, but I too am not a lawyer and I have had some difficulty with it. I have the notes on the act here before me, and even after reading the explanatory note it is difficult to come to grips with it.

The explanatory note says:

The purpose of this amendment is to confine copyright in records, perforated rolls or other contrivances by means of which sounds are mechanically reproduced, to the reproduction of such contrivances.

[Interprétation]

comme moi, de London (Ontario), une critique légale de cet amendement actuellement à l'étude au Sénat. N'étant pas homme de loi, je n'ai pas très bien compris.

M. Knight: Je crois qu'il a été retiré, mais je n'en suis pas sûr. Vous vous référez au Bill S-20, une loi visant à amender la loi sur les droits d'auteur. Le Conseil économique du Canada étudie actuellement toutes les répercussions de la Loi sur les droits d'auteur. Il y a eu une sorte d'entente à ce sujet, mais je dois dire que lorsque le ministre en a parlé à la chambre, c'était la première fois que j'entendais que la Loi sur les droits d'auteur demeurerait inchangée jusqu'à ce que le Conseil économique du Canada termine son enquête et formule des recommandations quant à la modification de cette Loi.

C'est dans cette situation qu'un groupe de fabricants de disques, des compagnies canadiennes filiales britanniques ou américaines, ont prétendu en vertu de la Loi sur les droits d'auteur, qu'ils devaient recevoir des droits de reproduction. Le bill a estimé qu'il en coûterait de $3 à $5 millions par an aux compagnies de diffusion, principalement aux postes de radio privés bien que cela touche aussi la télévision dans une certaine mesure.

Le ministre, lorsqu'il a dû répondre aux demandes de cette Société, a dit que ceci dépassait le cadre des règlements établis par le Conseil économique du Canada; que c'était une nouvelle demande, qui n'avait pas été prévue par la Loi antérieurement, et que de cette façon, il ne l'accepterait pas avant que le Conseil économique du Canada fasse ses recommandations. Le ministre leur a demandé de retirer ces demandes et d'en faire représentation au Conseil économique pour fins d'études dans le cadre de la nouvelle Loi.

L'effet produit ne touchera pas le compositeur ou le parolier, mais au contraire, le producteur et l'exécutant de l'œuvre; il n'y aurait donc pas de droits d'exécution en vertu de la présente loi sur les droits d'auteurs, qui iraient au producteur ou à l'exécutant. Les droits d'exécution seront limités au compositeur et au parolier. C'est ainsi que je comprends la loi, mais n'étant pas avocat moi-même, j'ai les explications des articles de loi devant moi, et même après les avoir lus, j'ai certaines difficultés à en comprendre le sens.

Cette modification vise à restreindre le droit d'auteur, pour les empreintes, les rouleaux perforés ou autres organes qui reproduisent mécaniquement des sons, à la reproduction de tels organes.

In other words, performing rights will only be inherent in the number of copies of the recording sold.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): And not the number of times they are recorded?

Mr. Knight: Not the number of times they are performed over radio, but only in the number of copies sold. I think that is the intention.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, to sum up the purpose of that bill, as Mr. Knight has explained it, it was to head off a very expensive change in past practice?

Mr. Knight: I think that was the purpose, yes.

Mr. Stanbury: Before the Economic Council of Canada had had an opportunity to advise the government on the whole field of copyrights.

Mr. Knight: Yes, I believe that was the motive.

Mr. Stanbury: The record manufacturers were trying to start imposing a new charge before the Economic Council of Canada had advised the government on the field of copyright, and this bill was an effort to make sure that such a substantial change affecting the users of recordings would not take place before that advice was available, and then the whole field could be looked at. Now I understand that that bill is not immediately being proceeded with as the record manufacturers are not proceeding with their claim at the moment.

Mr. Knight: That is the position, as I have said.

Mr. Stanbury: And everyone is waiting hopefully for the recommendation of the Economic Council to come forward.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): Thank you. Mr. Danson, you are the next on the list.

Mr. Danson: Thank you Mr. Chairman. I am not a member of this Committee and I hope.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): You are perfectly free to do everything but vote.

Mr. Danson: Thank you very much; that is a pretty broad licence, I must say, and I appreciate it.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): As long as you stay within the law.

Mr. Danson: I have some concerns and Mr. Knight has touched on the prime purpose of the concern

[Interpretation]

En d'autres mots, les droits d'exécution seront en fonction du nombre d'exemplaires vendus.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Et non du nombre d'enregistrements?

M. Knight: Non pas du nombre de fois que les disques seront joués à la radio, mais seulement du nombre d'exemplaires vendus. Je pense que c'est l'objet de l'article.

M. Stanbury: Monsieur le président, pour résumer, but de ce Bill est donc, comme M. Knight l'a expliqué d'empêcher une pratique très dispendieuse dans le passé.

M. Knight: Je pense que tel est le cas.

M. Stanbury: Avant que le Conseil économique du Canada n'ait eu l'occasion de faire connaître au gouvernement sa position sur le sujet des droits d'auteurs?

M. Knight: Oui.

M. Stanbury: Les producteurs de disques essaient d'imposer de nouveaux frais, avant que le Conseil économique du Canada puisse faire part de ses conseils au gouvernement au sujet de cette question des droits d'auteur. Ce projet de loi constitue donc un effort afin de s'assurer qu'un changement aussi important touchant les usagers des disques, n'ait pas lieu avant que toute cette question ne soit examinée en détails.

Je crois comprendre maintenant qu'on n'a pas l'intention de poursuivre l'étude de ce bill, car les fabricants de disques ont retiré leurs revendications.

M. Knight: C'est ce que j'ai avancé.

M. Stanbury: J'espère que le Conseil économique aura une recommandation à ce sujet.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Monsieur Danson?

M. Danson: Je ne fais pas partie du Comité. J'espère avoir la permission de participer à la séance.

Le vice-président (M. Osler): Vous pouvez poser toutes les questions que vous voulez, la seule chose que vous ne pouvez pas faire c'est de voter.

M. Danson: Merci: je crois que c'est une grande latitude que vous m'accordez.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Tant que vous respectez le Règlement...

M. Danson: J'éprouve certaines inquiétudes. Monsieur Knight a parlé des raisons pour lesquelles on which is the health and the development of the independent film industry in Canada. I am delighted that he too is an actor, as are we, but we have a four year contract this time, although the rate per day is not quite as good.

On the matter of concern for the health and the development of the industry, we seem, in Canada, to have developed a great deal of talent through the National Film Board and through CBC and then lost it to Great Britain and the United States. It is quite incredible to me to see the number of expatriate Canadians who have done very well in other countries largely because of the lack of opportunity here. The fact that there is this interchange and the international community of actors is perhaps healthy, but I think we could do much more for ourselves.

The other concern is the economics of actually running the CBC and National Film Board where we are now building a $60 million CBC centre, as I understand it, at Montreal and a $50 million centre to come in Toronto, which will develop their own bureaucracies. It seems to me that in the creative fields, particularly in the arts and I believe in the sciences too, that they do not function or flourish best in a bureaucratic atmosphere. It seems that there is a tendency to hire people and if they get stale they push them in a corner and keep them on unending jobs and then bring in fresh people, hopefully—it is worse if they do not bring in fresh people. This develops a tremendous sort of plant that has to be kept going as well as an awful lot of people.

The thought occurred to me that a great deal more of the subcontracting of films could be done to what is a very talented group of independent producers, actors, writers and musicians in Canada today. This could help them flourish and then you have the interplay of people being hired and fired, with people offering more money for better talent, that you do not tend to get in the government service. I was wondering if this is a healthy thing for the industry? It seems to me that we have physical facilities, some of which I understand are being used as warehouses, for the production of films. It could get into things such as commercials, and a specific show or a whole series could be subcontracted to a company that has proven its ability.

It is just my feeling that the talent is there, the industry is there, and we should nurture it in a non-governmental set-up with the encouragement of government, but not as government services. I had hoped really that this could be brought up in my committee, which is Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, because I think it is an industry we should be concerned about it in that light. I would appreciate our viewpoints on this approach.

Mr. Knight: One or two things are fairly self-evident when you examine them; that is, a person who is soucie de cette question. Il s'agit de la vigueur et de l'expansion de l'industrie cinématographique privée au Canada. J'ai le plaisir d'apprendre qu'il est comédien, comme nous du reste; mais cette fois nous avons un contrat de quatre ans. Malgré que la rémunération journalière ne soit pas aussi bonne.

En ce qui concerne la vigueur et l'expansion de l'industrie cinématographique privée, il me semble qu'au Canada, nous avons développé de nombreux talents, tant à l'ONF qu'à la Société Radio-Canada, et qui ont été perdus ensuite, parce qu'ils se sont rendus en Grande-Bretagne ou aux États-Unis. Il est presque incroyable de voir combien de Canadiens se sont expatriés et qui ont réussi dans d'autres pays parce qu'il n'y avait pas assez de possibilités au Canada.

Peut-être que ces échanges au sein de la communauté internationale des acteurs est une bonne chose, mais nous devrions faire plus pour notre propre pays.

L'autre question est celle de la bureaucratie régnant dans l'administration de l'Office national du film et de la Société Radio-Canada; on construit en ce moment un centre de soixante millions de dollars pour la Société Radio-Canada à Montréal, et l'on projette un centre semblable à Toronto qui coûtera 50 millions, ce qui entraînera la création de toute une bureaucratie. Je crois que le domaine des arts et des sciences ne peut vraiment s'épanouir dans une atmosphère bureaucratique; on a tendance à engager des gens et à les garder indéfiniment, même s'ils commencent à dater, dans des émissions sans fin. On embauche alors de nouveaux talents. La situation empire si l'on n'embauche pas de jeunes. On crée ainsi une organisation monstrueuse que l'on doit continuer à entretenir.

Il me semble que beaucoup plus de sous-contrats devraient être confiés à des groupes de producteurs indépendants, de musiciens, de réalisateurs pleins de talents au Canada, aujourd'hui. Ceci pourrait les aider à s'améliorer, à se concurrencer, et à offrir ainsi des meilleurs cachets aux plus talentueux, ce que vous ne voyez pas dans un organisme gouvernemental. Serait-ce une bonne chose pour l'industrie? Il me semble que nous possédons les installations suffisantes pour la réalisation de films, on pourrait y tourner des annonces publicitaires, on pourrait même tourner toute une série d'émissions par le truchement de sous-contrats.

Je crois que nous avons les talents, nous avons une industrie qui est bien sur pied, et il faudrait l'aider à prendre pied avec l'encouragement du gouvernement mais non pas sous la forme d'un organisme gouvernemental. Je crois qu'on pourrait en parler dans mon Comité, le Comité des Finances, du Commerce et des Affaires Économiques. Je crois qu'il s'agit là d'une industrie, et c'est à ce titre que nous devons nous y intéresser. J'aimerais connaître votre point de vue.

M. Knight: Il y a d'abord certaines questions assez évidentes. La personne qui travaille à contrat pour la independent at the CBC can work both for the CBC and for the private sector of the broadcasting world. In other words, his services can be contributed to both sectors of broadcasting, and therefore we must encourage the development somehow or other of the independent producer film industry in this country.

I think there are certain things, especially the video tape aspect of the CBC's operation, which they probably do better than anybody else in Canada, but even there they have become, on one occasion anyway, an independent producer because they produced the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde show last year for an American producer. So, they themselves have become an independent producer.

There are some things that they do better than anybody else and it would seem to be as waste to destroy that very fine thing that they have built, but I do think in the area of film they should be encouraged to find independent producers where they can, and enrich the independent producer, thereby enabling him to become an instrument that can be used by both the private and the public sector of the broadcasting industry.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): When I was on the CBC board one of the difficulties that appeared to be evident, if you follow that line of thought very far, was that because CTV and the private broadcasters did so little, that whoever did an independent production became a sort of a thing of the CBC anyway, and if he laid a few eggs, or got into some kind of an argument with the CBC management he might quite easily go broke. He put himself right away in the same position as a man who is stupid enough to specialize for 10 years producing something for Eatons and neglects the rest of his market, and then Eatons decides to change the brand and the fellow goes broke. Could you comment on that?

Mr. Knight: I think I must agree with you entirely on that at the moment. The way the economics of the industry are at the moment, any independent producer can become so dependent upon the CBC, because they are the only large buyer of Canadian productions, that once they are cut off from the CBC through an artistic or management decision of some kind or another, they very frequently flounder and do not survive it. This is unfortunately true.

Mr. Danson: Well, of course, the answer to that would be to continue the present arrangement, which is not wholly satisfactory, or try for something better. But there is a great deal of business simply in commercials and in industrial films which has to be done too, so they develop their expertise in certain other areas as well. If we could do joint projects with Société Radio-Canada peut travailler pour la Société Radio-Canada et pour le secteur privé. Ses services peuvent être offerts aux deux secteurs de l'industrie de la radiodiffusion. C'est la raison pour laquelle, d'une façon ou d'une autre, il faut encourager l'établissement d'une industrie cinématographique privée au Canada.

Mais pour ce qui est des personnes travaillant aux bandes «video» de la Société Radio-Canada, qui je crois, réussissent à produire mieux que n'importe qui au Canada, ces dernières sont devenues parfois des producteurs indépendants. On a réalisé par exemple, la série du «Dr Jekyll et M. Hyde», l'an passé pour un producteur américain.

Il y a certaines choses que la Société peut faire mieux que quiconque et je crois que ce serait bien dommage de détruire ce que la Société a fait de mieux jusqu'ici. Mais je crois que, en ce qui concerne les films, on devrait encourager ou inciter la Société à trouver des producteurs indépendants lorsque c'est possible, et les producteurs pourront, à ce moment-là, servir le secteur privé et le secteur public de l'industrie.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Puis-je poser une question supplémentaire? Lorsque je faisais partie du Conseil d'administration de la Société Radio-Canada, un des problèmes qui semblait assez évident, c'est que, parce que CTV et les radiodiffuseurs privés faisaient si peu, que toute personne, qui entreprenait une réalisation indépendante, tombait inévitablement sous la coupe de la Société Radio-Canada. Si ce producteur indépendant faisait une erreur, on avait des divergences de vue avec la direction de la Société Radio-Canada, il pouvait facilement se ruiner. Il se mettait dans la même position, par exemple, d'un homme qui pendant 10 ans fabrique certains produits pour la Compagnie Eaton et qui, après 10 ans, Eaton ayant changé de marque, se retrouve ruiné. Pouvez-vous commenter?

M. Knight: Je dois dire que je suis pleinement d'accord avec vous à ce sujet pour l'instant. Le réalisateur devient parfois très dépendant de la Société Radio-Canada et lorsqu'il ne peut plus compter sur la Société pour des raisons artistiques ou administratives, il n'arrive pas à survivre et c'est bien dommage.

M. Danson: La meilleure façon serait donc de conserver les dispositions actuelles, même si elles ne sont pas tout à fait satisfaisantes, ou de chercher quelque chose de mieux. Mais il y a beaucoup à faire dans les domaines commercial et industriel du cinéma pour acquérir une expérience dans d'autres secteurs; nous pouvons travailler en collaboration avec d'autre ther countries, particularly the francophone countries where perhaps there is a particular shortage of facilities and talent, we could benefit greatly in this country and there would be a greater degree of independence.

Mr. Knight: I hope that what I have been saying about the lack of an independent industry in Canada does not indicate in any way that there is a lack of talent. There is by no means a lack of talent. There are great many very talented men in all fields of endeavour in the film industry in Canada—good directors, good cameramen, good lighting men, good sound men, good special effects men.

For instance, the man who designed the special effects camera mountings for the film "2001: A Space Odyssey" is a Canadian who lives in Montreal and works in Canada. There are some very well known and very capable men in the industry. What is lacking, of course, is the incentive to invest in the industry. This is the problem. It is a question of investment, a question of money in the industry. It is a question of the ability to mount a major production that is exciting, and certainly the Canadian Film Development Corporation is beginning to fill that need to an extent, but then what we are discussing really is distribution of their work. Again, the broadcasting companies can be a major vehicle for the distribution of their work; they are not a complete answer but a major vehicle for the distribution of their work.

Mr. Danson: That was just the point I was trying to make. We seem to have some really first-rate talent. I have never seen a group of such talent so completely frustrated by the milieu in which they must operate in this country. I was speaking to a film distributor the other day who is at present backing a film which is being produced in British Columbia, I believe—unfortunately I think they had a winter out there they did not expect—and who came to some government agency. They are tied in with two other nations to help produce this and they got very little encouragement from the CBC, I believe it was in this case, but I am not certain, of their ever buying or using this film which was evidently good enough to warrant a fairly substantial investment and to interest people in other countries. This seems to be the frustrating thing that the industry is going through and these people just pick up and go. This man said he will not invest another nickel in another Canadian film.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): Could you follow your line of reasoning by asking what his thoughts are about this balloon that Mr. Pelletier has floated recently? A co-operation between—does this get anywhere?

Mr. Danson: Well, I would be very much grateful to Mr. Knight if he could comment on it.

Mr. Knight: I have not studied very fully Mr. Pelletier's statements. I have only read newspaper pays, en particulier avec les francophones où on ne trouve pas suffisamment de talents, et d'installations, nous pourrions en profiter beaucoup et il y aurait une grande indépendance dans ce secteur.

M. Knight: Ce que j'ai dit au sujet de l'absence d'une industrie indépendante au Canada, ne veut pas dire qu'il y a un manque de talents. Au contraire, il y a des gens très compétents dans l'industrie du film au Canada. Il y a d'excellents directeurs, d'excellents cameramen, d'excellents éclairagistes, d'excellents ingénieurs du son, d'excellents truqueurs.

Par exemple, la personne qui a été chargée de faire les effets spéciaux pour le film: «A Space Odyssey» est un Canadien qui vit et travaille à Montréal. Il y a d'excellents spécialistes dans l'industrie du cinéma, mais le problème, c'est qu'on ne peut pas obtenir assez d'argent, assez d'investissement. Nous n'avons pas l'argent nécessaire pour monter une entreprise majeure. La Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique commence à combler cette lacune, jusqu'à un certain point, mais il y a toujours la question de la distribution. Les sociétés de radiodiffusion peuvent construire un véhicule majeur pour la distribution de leurs oeuvres.

M. Danson: Il semble que nous ayons un excellent personnel, mais qui se trouve bien limité à cause des conditions qui existent dans notre pays. Et je songe par exemple à la compagnie de distribution qui donne son appui à un film tourné en Colombie-Britannique et qui s'est adressée à une agence gouvernementale. Ils ont reçu très peu d'aide de la part de la Société Radio-Canada qui ne semble guère intéressée à acheter ce film qui justifie par sa qualité des investissements considérables et qui a attiré l'intérêt d'autres pays. C'est assez frustrant, n'est-ce pas? C'est pourquoi beaucoup de personnes abandonnent cette industrie. Et ce distributeur a déclaré qu'il n'investirait plus un cent dans un film canadien.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Pouvez-vous lui demander ce qu'il pense du ballon d'essai lancé par M. Pelletier au sujet de la collaboration entre l'industrie du film et la Société Radio-Canada?

M. Danson: Je serais très heureux que M. Knight puisse répondre à cela.

M. Knight: Je n'ai pas étudié très attentivement la déclaration de M. Pelletier. Je n'ai lu que des comptes reports on what he has said. I do not have a copy of his speech as yet, but what he seems to be saying is that all of the government agencies involved in the production of programs and films, such as the CBC, such as the National Film Board, such as the Canadian Film Development Corporation, should find modus vivendi for co-operation within themselves in order that they can become the beginnings of an independent production company; that the CBC, as you have suggested, should use more widely the independent producers and the National Film Board in film; that the Canadian Film Development Corporation should perhaps be used to develop capital for these projects in order to encourage the production of programming and films in Canada. This seems to be what he is saying.

My problem in looking at that would be that the private sector of the industry does not seem, on the face of the newspaper reports—and I must say again I have not read Mr. Pelletier's speech itself—to get involved in it very well. Again the private sector of the industry is not seen or contemplated as being a customer or a creator in this aspect, and my thoughts are concerned with the very minimal amount of production by the private sector of broadcasting at the moment. If Mr. Pelletier's thought can be enlarged to incorporate within that scheme of things the private sector of the industry, then by all means this is the kind of thing that is needed. Some centralization—collectivization is really what I am talking about rather than centralization—some form of collectivization of effort, because I do not think any one broadcaster can go this road alone. I do not think he can manage this alone. I think it needs some form of collective effort in order to make it.

Mr. Danson: By the private sector, Mr. Knight, do you mean the non-CBC, non-National Film Board people rather than the private sector of the film industry per se?

Mr. Knight: Yes, I mean people who are not directly related in one way or another to the Government of Canada, either through a Crown corporation or as part of a government department, as is the National Film Board; where there is private investment and private ownership of facilities, etc.

Mr. Danson: Do you think sufficient physical facilities exist in Canada today to develop a private industry or a more co-operative approach?

Mr. Knight: Facilities, yes. Oh, yes, we have the facilities all right, if you mean by facilities the plant and equipment.

Mr. Danson: Yes.

Mr. Knight: Yes, we have the facilities. I do not think the problem lies in that direction. The problem rendus de journaux. Je n'ai pas reçu un exemplaire de son discours. Toutefois, il semble dire que les agences gouvernementales qui réalisent des films, des émissions, comme par exemple la Société Radio-Canada, l'Office national du film, la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique, devraient trouver moyen de collaborer afin d'établir un début de société de production indépendante. La Société Radio-Canada devrait faire appel plus souvent aux réalisateurs indépendants, de même que l'Office national du film et la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique, qui devrait peut-être fournir le capital nécessaire à la réalisation de ces projets afin d'encourager la production de films et d'émissions au Canada.

Mon problème, c'est que le secteur privé de l'industrie ne semble pas, d'après les journaux,—et je dois répéter que je n'ai pas lu le discours de M. Pelletier,—participer beaucoup à l'expansion de l'industrie. Le secteur privé ne songe pas à devenir client ou créateur. Je songe surtout à la très faible production du secteur privé et si M. Pelletier veut faire entrer dans tout ce ensemble le secteur privé, je crois que ce sera excellent, ce serait précisément ce qu'il faut. Il faudrait un travail plus collectif, une concentration d'efforts. Je ne crois pas qu'un radiodiffuseur privé puisse y arriver seul. Il faut un effort collectif, afin de mettre sur pied une industrie viable.

M. Danson: Lorsque vous parlez du secteur privé monsieur Knight, vous voulez parler des gens qui n'appartiennent pas à la Société Radio-Canada ou l'Office national du film?

M. Knight: Oui, Je veux parler des gens qui n'ont rien à voir avec le gouvernement canadien, d'une façon ou de l'autre, soit par l'intermédiaire d'une société de la Couronne ou d'un ministère; comme l'Office national du film, où on fait des investissements privés, etc.

M. Danson: Croyez-vous qu'on possède, au Canada les installations voulues pour développer une industrie privée, ou encore une certaine forme de collaboration?

M. Knight: Nous avons les installations matérielles vous parlez du matériel et des bureaux.

M. Danson: Oui.

M. Knight: Je crois toutefois que ce n'est pas le cœur du problème. Le problème, c'est le marché et l' es in the market and the size of the market. The costs of production are such that I do not think they can be recouped in Canada alone or entirely in Canada. To put it another way, the cost to the individual exhibitor could be such that he might find himself in difficulties with his portion of the costs. Certainly if you compare them to his ability to purchase from the United States at the moment, his costs would, I think, go up. But if this industry can be created in such a fashion that it can enter, as the Americans do, a total North American market—

Mr. Danson: An English-speaking market.

Mr. Knight: Yes, the English-speaking American market. That does not matter because the techniques of dubbing and changing from one language to another are pretty easily available these days and films can be made in more than one language fairly frequently. There are quite a number of our members who make a fair proportion of their earnings out of the dubbing business. They are simply voicing films from one language into another at the moment.

Mr. Danson: Is there anything to indicate that our quality is any less adequate to compete in the international market?

Mr. Knight: Not at all. No such indications at all, I do not think. I do not mean by that that we are not going to make mistakes, that we are not going to make bad films and bad programs amongst the good ones, but over all I believe Canada and Canadians are just as capable of making films of high quality and high standards as any other country in the world. There is no reason why not. We have the talent, we have the know-how. What we lack is the capital, the money.

Mr. Danson: Thank you very much.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): If I may, I will ask one question to follow up your line, and then Mr. Alexander can proceed. It is a poor way for a chairman to behave, but I was—

Mr. Alexander: You are a good Chairman.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): Thank you, Mr. Alexander. That may be because I have recognized you. This matter of the market, which is really not the Canadian market—it is the world market in whatever language we happen to be speaking about—it seems to be coming up again and again, relative to problems in the CBC, to your problems and, I expect, to the movie world's problems when they arise; ultimately, therefore, what you are saying is that the parliamentarians could find some way of creating an atmosphere that will allow us to allow you so to negotiate with other people that you can force your way into other markets?

débouchés. Je ne crois pas que les frais de production puissent être récupérés au Canada seulement. Les frais seraient tellement élevés que les réalisateurs auraient de la difficulté à récupérer une certaine partie des frais. Je songe par exemple à ce qui se passe aux États-Unis. Les productions américaines peuvent coûter beaucoup moins cher. D'un autre côté, si une industrie peut être créée pour desservir tout le marché nord-américain. . .

M. Danson: Un marché anglophone.

M. Knight: Oui, le marché anglophone nord-américain. Cela n'a pas tellement d'importance, car on peut facilement assurer la postsynchronisation des films. Beaucoup d'acteurs peuvent réaliser des profits intéressants en participant à la postsynchronisation des films.

M. Danson: La qualité de nos films nous permet-elle de faire concurrence sur le marché mondial?

M. Knight: Certainement. Je ne veux pas dire que nous ne ferons pas d'erreurs, ou que nous ne produirons pas quelques navets, mais dans l'ensemble, je crois que le Canada et les Canadiens sont certainement aussi capables de faire des films d'une excellente qualité que tous les autres pays du monde. Il n'y a aucune raison pour laquelle nous ne serions pas capables de le faire. Nous avons les talents, la compétence nécessaires. Tout ce qui nous manque, c'est l'argent, les capitaux.

M. Danson: Je vous remercie beaucoup.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Permettez-moi de poser une question à ce sujet, puis M. Alexander pourra poursuivre. Je ne devrais peut-être pas le faire, en ma qualité de président, mais . . .

M. Alexander: Vous faites un bon président.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Merci, monsieur Alexander. Vous dites peut-être cela parce que je vous avais accordé la parole.

Cette question du marché, qui n'est pas, en réalité, le marché canadien—c'est plutôt le marché mondial dans la langue où il se trouve que nous en parlons—semble revenir constamment, relativement aux problèmes de la Société Radio-Canada, à vos problèmes, et, je suppose, à ceux de l'industrie cinématographique lorsqu'ils se posent. En fin de compte, donc, ce que vous dites, c'est que les parlementaires devraient trouver moyen de créer une atmosphère au sein de laquelle nous pourrions vous permettre de négocier

[Text]

Mr. Knight: Yes.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): It would be most useful to us if you could produce some firm recommendations which we could then compare with those that we hope others would make.

Mr. Knight: The Canadian Film Development Corporation has already negotiated a co-production treaty with France, I understand; they are currently negotiating a co-production treaty with Great Britain; and they are contemplating several others. I think this points in the right direction because where there is a co-production treaty there are then two parties interested in finding distribution for the film; and other countries have other accesses to production. I think this is one way.

However, I still think that, finally and eventually, we are going to have to come to a point—and that we will reach when we are capable of producing films that are of a sufficient standard—where there has got to be some kind of quota exchange with other countries, so that there is a guarantee of some kind of entry into a market, assuming that the quality is of sufficient standard that it can be sold in that market. Eventually we must come to the position where there will be an exchange treaty between Canada and other countries for distribution of programs of this kind.

Mr. Stanbury: Do you know of such treaties between other countries?

Mr. Knight: Not treaties, but there are agreements between American film producers and British film producers, for instance, that there will be an exchange of some kind. This is not a treaty at any kind of governmental level.

An hon. Member: The Americans and the Russians do it.

Mr. Knight: There are a variety of ways; but I must say that these, in their formative stages, were assisted by the governments of the countries in the negotiation of these agreements. The governments took a hand in the negotiations.

Mr. Alexander: As a matter of fact, that was my point. As I understand it, a brief has been presented, or will be, to the effect that the only thing that will save the Canadian film industry is the immediate imposition of a quota system organized and financed through the offices of the CFDC.

We touched on that earlier, and we were a little concerned about the quality of Canadian films, but this brief seems to indicate that some chain would avec d'autres personnes de façon à pouvoir vous imposer sur les autres marchés?

M. Knight: Oui.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Il nous serait très utile que vous produisiez des recommandations fermes que nous pourrions alors comparer aux recommandations que nous espérons recevoir d'autres organismes.

M. Knight: Je crois comprendre que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne a déjà conclu un traité de co-production avec la France, négocie à l'heure actuelle, un traité de co-production avec la Grande-Bretagne, et envisage d'en conclure avec plusieurs autres pays. Je crois que c'est un bon début, car lorsqu'il y a un traité de co-production, il y a alors deux parties intéressées à trouver moyen de distribuer le film; et les autres pays ont d'autres accès à la réalisation. Je crois que c'est une façon de procéder.

Mais j'estime malgré tout que finalement, il faudra en venir au point—et nous y parviendrons lorsque nous serons capables de produire des films d'une qualité suffisante—où il faudra entreprendre une forme d'échange soumis à un contingentement avec les autres pays, afin que nous soyons assurés de quelque entrée sur un marché, à condition, bien sûr, que le film soit d'assez bonne qualité pour pouvoir être vendu sur ce marché. Il faudra en arriver finalement à une situation où il y aura des traités d'échange entre le Canada et d'autres pays en vue de la distribution de programmes de ce genre.

M. Stanbury: Y a-t-il, à votre connaissance, des traités de ce genre entre d'autres pays?

M. Knight: Il n'y a pas de traités, mais il y a des ententes entre des réalisateurs américains et des réalisateurs britanniques, par exemple, qui prévoient quelque forme d'échange. Il n'y a pas de traité à niveau gouvernemental.

Une voix: Les Américains et les Russes le font.

M. Knight: Il y a divers moyens; mais je dois dire que dans ces cas-là, il y avait eu, au stade initial, l'aide de la part des gouvernements des pays en cause qui avaient participé aux négociations en vue de ces ententes.

M. Alexander: En fait, c'est ce que je voulais dire. Je crois comprendre, qu'un mémoire a été ou va être présenté, pour dire que la seule chose qui puisse sauver l'industrie cinématographique canadienne serait d'imposer immédiatement un système de contingentement organisé et financé par l'intermédiaire des bureaux de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne. Nous avons déjà parlé de cette question, et nous nous inquiétons de la qualité des films canadiens. Mais ce mémoire semble indiquer qu'il ive federal licence to import and show a number y would guarantee to exhibit on an equal basis.

but what seems to be extremely important at this e is the claim that the only thing that will save the Canadian film industry is the imposition of the quota system on the basis I have just described. Is this true?
his your feeling?

Mr. Knight: I believe we eventually must come to it,
y. The problem is distribution; the problem is getting into the market; the problem is getting a person or a corporation that owns a large chain of cinemas to accept the film for distribution. This is essentially the problem. They are very reluctant at this moment, except in very few instances, to accept films other than those for which they are directly investing, no way or another, where they are able to achieve a profit at both ends—both through the production itself and its distribution.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): We do not mind them investing in Canadian films.

Mr. Knight: No, of course we do not mind them investing in Canadian films, but the danger is that with the present attitudes towards Canadian films they are in the driving seat, so that they not only invest in film but eventually become the owners of those films, and they reap all of the profit and none of it will get back into Canada. This is the problem. It is not that they invest; it is the terms of that investment.

Mr. Stanbury: Do you have examples that would illustrate that statement?

Mr. Knight: Yes; but they are not very good examples, unfortunately. The producer of a film made in Montreal a couple of years ago came to me with a distribution contract. He was seeking from me the right to allow our members to work without direct payment, but to receive, in lieu of payment, a share of the value of the film.

The terms of that contract were such that there would be no return to the producer of the film until all of the expenses of the distributor had been met.
There was no clause within the terms of that agreement providing the machinery for showing, first of all, what the distributor's expenses were, or that they had been met. In other words, he would make a return to the producer of the film if and when he had met all of his expenses, but there was no indication what those expenses were to be, or how much they were to be. Therefore, it seemed to me extremely doubtful that he would ever get any money back.

quelque chaîne recevrait une licence du gouvernement fédéral pour importer et présenter un certain nombre de films étrangers pour chaque film canadien qu'elle garantirait de présenter dans les mêmes conditions.

Mais ce qui semble être extrêmement important à l'heure actuelle, c'est cette affirmation selon laquelle la seule chose qui puisse sauver l'industrie cinématographique canadienne est l'imposition d'un régime de contingentement tel que celui que je viens de décrire.
Est-ce vrai? Partagez-vous cet avis?

M. Knight: Je pense que nous devons en arriver là un jour ou l'autre, en effet. Le problème, c'est la distribution; c'est de trouver des débouchés; c'est de trouver une personne ou une société qui soit propriétaire d'une importante chaîne de cinémas et qui accepte de distribuer le film. C'est surtout là le problème. Sauf dans quelques cas très rares, on hésite beaucoup, en ce moment, à accepter des films autres que ceux dans lesquels on investit directement, d'une façon ou d'une autre, et où l'on peut réaliser des bénéfices des deux côtés—grâce à la réalisation même et grâce à la distribution.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Nous ne voyons aucun inconvénient à ce que l'on investisse dans des films canadiens.

M. Knight: Non, bien sûr. Mais le danger, c'est qu'étant donné l'attitude actuelle à l'égard des films canadiens, on a les commandes de la situation, si bien qu'on ne se contente pas d'investir, mais on devient aussi propriétaire des films, on ramasse tous les bénéfices, et rien ne revient au Canada. C'est là le problème. Ce n'est pas qu'on investit, ce sont les conditions de l'investissement.

M. Stanbury: Pourriez-vous donner des exemples de cela?

M. Knight: Oui, mais ce ne sont pas de très bons exemples, malheureusement. Le réalisateur d'un film fait à Montréal il y a deux ans est venu me trouver avec un contrat de distribution. Il voulait que je lui donne le droit de permettre à nos membres de travailler sans paiement direct, mais en recevant à la place une part de la valeur du film.

Les conditions du contrat étaient telles qu'il n'y aurait aucun bénéfice remis au réalisateur du film avant que toutes les dépenses du distributeur n'aient été payées. Il n'y avait pas de disposition du contrat qui prévoit un moyen d'indiquer, tout d'abord, quelles étaient les dépenses du distributeur, ou si elles avaient été payées, mais il n'y avait aucune indication de ce que ces dépenses seraient, ou du montant qu'elles atteindraient. Il me semblait donc fort douteux que le réalisateur reçoive le moindre argent.

I discussed this at that time with a Canadian writer who had made films—I prefer not to name him at this moment in time, because I have not consulted him about using this particular experience of his—and he told me that his experience had been precisely that; that he had made the film in Canada—in Toronto, to be precise—that he had obtained a distribution contract with an American distributor on precisely the same terms that I have just described to you; and that he never got another penny back—not a penny.

American film makers run into this problem, as well, never mind Canadians. They are not discriminating against Canadians on this; they will do it to anyone.

In addition to this, when you tell them you are not going to invest your money in the film until they have guaranteed distribution, this certainly puts the whips into their hand, and my fears at the moment are of the hypothetical things that can happen in the future as a result of the present policy.

These are examples I can quote from the past before the introduction of the Canadian Film Development Corporation.

Mr. Stanbury: Do you know of any current examples?

Mr. Knight: No.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): It would seem to me that this Committee would be very eager and anxious to call before it witnesses who could illustrate this sort of thing from both sides of the fence, if we knew where to find them.

Mr. Stanbury: We will have the film makers here.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): Yes. If your friend would give you an example of his contract, for instance, you might follow that up and ask—

Mr. Knight: I may even still have that contract in my files in Montreal. I am not sure, but if it is there I will send it to you, by all means.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Osler): Thank you. Mr. Alexander? Is there anyone else?

Mr. Mongrain, will you take over the Chair. I must leave. Thank you.

The Vice-Chairman: Thank you very much.

Mr. Stanbury: On Mr. Danson's point about the CBC using a feature film made by a private film maker, is not one of the problems here that a film made for television is not necessarily very marketable for exhibition in movie houses, and that a feature film

[Interpretation]

J'en avais parlé à l'époque avec un écrivain canadien qui avait fait des films—je ne le nommerai pas, pour le moment, car je ne lui ai pas demandé si je pouvais citer son cas particulier—et il m'avait dit qu'il lui était arrivé exactement la même chose. Il avait fait un film au Canada—à Toronto, pour être plus précis,—il avait obtenu un contrat de distribution avec un distributeur américain exactement aux mêmes conditions que celles que je viens de décrire, et il n'en avait jamais retiré un sou—pas un sou. Les réalisateurs de films américains se heurtent à la même difficulté; il ne s'agit pas que des Canadiens. Ce n'est pas que l'on traite les Canadiens injustement; on en fait de même avec tout le monde.

De plus, lorsqu'on leur dit qu'on ne va pas investir d'argent dans le film avant que la distribution ne soit garantie, cela leur donne le dessus, et ce que je craignais à l'heure actuelle, ce sont les choses hypothétiques qui pourraient se produire à l'avenir par suite de la politique actuelle.

Je peux citer des exemples tirés du passé, l'époque où l'on n'avait pas encore mis sur pied la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne.

M. Stanbury: Pourriez-vous donner des exemples actuels?

M. Knight: Non.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Il me semble que le Comité souhaiterait fort faire venir des témoins qui puissent illustrer la situation des deux côtés de la barrière si nous savions où trouver ces témoins.

M. Stanbury: Nous allons faire venir des réalisateurs de films.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Si votre ami pouvait vous donner un exemple de son contrat, disons, vous pourriez demander...

M. Knight: J'ai peut-être même encore ce contrat dans mes dossiers à Montréal. Je n'en suis pas sûr, mais si je l'ai encore, je vous l'envierai.

Le président suppléant (M. Osler): Merci, Monsieur Alexander. Quelqu'un d'autre a-t-il des questions?

Monsieur Mongrain, pourriez-vous prendre la présidence? Il faut que je m'en aille. Merci.

Le vice-président: Merci beaucoup.

M. Stanbury: Au sujet de ce qu'a dit M. Danson à propos du savoir, que Radio-Canada utilise des films à long métrage faits par des réalisateurs privés—l'un des problèmes n'est-il pas qu'un film fait pour la télévision n'est pas forcément très approprié à la présentation ade for movie houses is not necessarily appropriate for the television market, unless the two uses have been anticipated? Is this not one of the problems?

Mr. Knight: It is certainly one of the objections that have been raised in the past. I think the mere fact that every television station across the world has a late night movie belies that, frankly.

Mr. Stanbury: There are two different kinds of...

Mr. Knight: But, on the other hand the problem has been in the time sector that an advertiser has been willing to buy in the past; where you had a sponsor who bought a time slot and put a property in that time slot, and that is usually either a 28-minute time slot or a 54-minute time slot, depending on his ability to buy. That, I think, was the difficulty because the films for television were being made to fit into that time factor. This sponsorship of a particular time slot is dying out. It is not as prevalent as it was before and now people are buying spot commercial announcements rather than sponsoring particular programs, which gives the producer so much greater freedom to operate.

As a consequence of that, you have such series as It Takes a Thief, for instance, which is one of these things which has not started out at any rate with a 5-minute format where they would play it on television in North America and sell it for cinemas in Europe. There is more of this type of programming, of higher time slots, being created now simply because the industry is changing a little and people are buying smaller time units and buying spot announcements rather than sponsoring whole time segments.

Mr. Stanbury: In film, then, because of the changing nature of the industry, there are film makers either in television or outside of television who are anticipating in advance the use of their films both for television and for movie houses and planning them accordingly. If one plans a film either for television or for a movie house without taking into consideration its possible use in the other medium there can be difficulties in marketing it in the other medium.

Mr. Knight: Yes, but I think more and more people are recognizing the fact that both markets are there and both markets can be exploited.

Mr. Stanbury: If they understand that in advance then they are more likely to be able to market it in both media. You have mentioned—I am not sure you used this term—but I have the impression of a preponderance of American-produced commercials on Canadian radio and television. That has been my impression as well; yet I believe I was told recently that approximately 75 per cent of all commercials dans un cinéma, et qu'inversement un long métrage fait pour les cinémas ne convient pas nécessairement à la télévision, à moins que ces deux usages n'aient été prévus dès le départ? N'est-ce pas là l'un des problèmes?

M. Knight: C'est l'une des objections qui a été soulevée déjà. Le fait que tous les postes de télévision présentent des films chaque soir prouve le contraire.

M. Stanbury: Il y a deux sortes de...

M. Knight: D'un autre côté, il y a le problème du temps acheté par l'agence de publicité; lorsqu'un commanditaire achète une période de temps pour la publicité, soit une période de 28 minutes ou de 54 minutes selon son pouvoir d'achat, la difficulté vient de ce que les films pour la télévision doivent s'inscrire dans ce facteur temps. Ce genre de commandite a tendance à disparaître. Ce n'est plus la règle et les gens achètent de courts messages publicitaires au lieu de commander toute une émission. Ainsi le réalisateur travaille avec beaucoup plus de liberté.

En conséquence, il y a des séries d'émissions, comme It Takes a Thief, qui sont des émissions de 90 minutes, données à la télévision en Amérique du Nord et vendues aux cinémas d'Europe. La programmation d'émissions plus longues prend de l'ampleur tout simplement parce que l'industrie se modifie quelque peu et que les commanditaires achètent des périodes de publicité plus courtes et préparent de brefs messages publicitaires au lieu de commander des émissions complètes.

M. Stanbury: A cause de ces changements dans l'industrie, il y a des réalisateurs à la télévision ou au cinéma, qui prévoient à l'avance l'usage qu'on fera de leurs films à la télévision et dans les cinémas et qui réalisent des films en conséquence. Mais si on tourne pour la télévision ou pour les cinémas sans tenir compte des autres usages, il peut y avoir des difficultés de commercialisation.

M. Knight: Je pense qu'il y a de plus en plus de gens qui se rendent compte qu'il y a deux marchés à exploiter.

M. Stanbury: S'ils le comprennent à l'avance, il est probable qu'ils pourront exploiter les deux. Vous avez parlé, je ne sais pas si c'est le mot que vous avez utilisé, de votre impression qu'il y a une prépondérance de messages publicitaires préparés par des Américains à la radio et à la télévision canadienne. C'était mon impression également, mais on m'a dit récemment que 75 p. 100 de la publicité à la télévision et à la radio shown on Canadian television and heard on Canadian radio are Canadian produced. Can you shed any light on this apparent conflict of information?

Mr. Knight: Yes. You could fiddle with this kind of statistic, of course. There are commercials and commercials. Actually the figures that the advertisers themselves have presented to us—we are in some dispute with them as to the nature of these statistics—but they claim that 60 per cent of all commercials are made in Canada and 40 per cent are imported, which is bad enough in my opinion. Our figures tend to show the reverse but the difference probably lies in these two areas. We are probably—in fact I know we are—looking at the English market only, whereas they are probably looking at English and French, which would create one of the differences.

The other difference is that the majority of local commercials, that is very low-cost, local commercials made by the local retail stores in Armpit, Ontario, etc., are, of course, Canadian made, but these commercials do not in any large part employ any talent. They do not employ any writers. They are written by local salesman of television time and very frequently they are performed by the automobile dealer himself; and these are included in the statistics that the advertisers are sending out.

Mr. Stanbury: Are you signing up any auto dealers as members of ACTRA?

Mr. Knight: Yes, unfortunately.

An hon. Member: They are pretty good actors.

Mr. Knight: They certainly are.

Mr. Stanbury: That will bring up your average of income.

Mr. Knight: Well, not the reportable income, unfortunately. So there I think is the discrepancy. It is contained within those two areas.

• 1205

Mr. Stanbury: What do you think is the source of the difficulty here? I suppose we can attribute some of the difficulty with respect to production in the United States to low tariffs or dumping and that kind of problem. But when it comes to the large number of commercials produced in Canada but with American talent, as you pointed out, what is the reason for this? What can we do about it?

Mr. Knight: Can I go back to the first part of your question because I think there is another reason as well for the large number of importations which is related to the Canadian economy. Very many of the advertisers who use television as a medium of canadiennes sont préparés par des Canadiens. Pourriez-vous jeter un peu de lumière sur cette question?

M. Knight: Oui. On peut facilement jouer avec ces statistiques, il y a message publicitaire et message publicitaire. En fait, les chiffres fournis par les agences de la publicité, et il y a quelques différents entre nous à ce sujet, prétendent que 60 p. 100 des messages publicitaires sont faits au Canada et que 40 p. 100 sont importés, ce qui, à mon avis, est déjà déplorable. Nos chiffres indiquent plutôt le contraire, mais la différence découle probablement de ces deux domaines. Je sais que nous considérons uniquement le marché anglais tandis qu'eux considèrent le marché anglais et français, ce qui explique une différence.

L'autre différence vient de ce que, en grande partie, la publicité locale est très bon marché, les messages publicitaires des détaillants locaux, à Armpit, en Ontario, et ailleurs, sont faits au Canada, mais ils n'ont pas recours généralement au talent local. Il n'y a pas d'acteurs ni d'auteurs; ils sont rédigés par le préposé à la vente du temps réservé à la publicité et c'est souvent le concessionnaire d'automobiles qui le présente lui-même; ceux-ci sont comptés dans leurs statistiques.

M. Stanbury: Est-ce que l'ACTRA a accepté ces concessionnaires d'automobiles?

M. Knight: Oui, malheureusement.

Une voix: Ce sont de très bons acteurs.

M. Knight: Ils le sont certainement.

M. Stanbury: Ils feront monter la moyenne de vos salaires.

M. Knight: Mais non pas le revenu imposable, malheureusement. Voilà donc la différence qui existe dans ces deux domaines.

M. Stanbury: Mais d'où viennent les difficultés? Je suppose que certaines difficultés sont attribuables à la production aux États-Unis aux tarifs moins élevés, au dumping, et ainsi de suite. Mais lorsqu'on arrive au grand nombre de messages publicitaires réalisés ici à partir de talents américains, quelle en est la raison? Qu'est-ce qu'on peut faire à ce sujet?

M. Knight: Puisse-je revenir à la première partie de la question car je pense qu'il y a une autre raison qui explique le volume élevé des importations et qui rapporte à l'économie canadienne. Un grand nombre de publicitaires qui font leur publicité à la télévision vertising in Canada are subsidiary companies to American parent companies. The parent company makes the commercial. They are selling the same product in Canada. They can avoid a duplication of production costs by simply importing it. This, unfortunately, puts a Canadian corporation which is making a competitive product and which is not a subsidiary in a very disadvantageous situation because this corporation has to make its commercial for Canada only and therefore is a non-competitive situation with the subsidiary of the American company. I think this is a very important factor and that the effect of that must be very carefully considered. As to the importation of Americans the reasons that are given. . .

Mr. Stanbury: Before you go into that, do you have anything to suggest as to legislative action to correct the first?

Mr. Knight: By all means I do. I would recommend and I would suggest that it should be a condition of issuing a licence to a Canadian broadcasting company that it exhibit only Canadian-made commercials. This is a precedent which has already been established in Australian broadcasting. The effect in Australia has been quite startling. It has been startling in that all of the production facilities are working full time in Australia; that is, the independent production houses that we have been talking about are working full time in Australia and they are developing their skills and their techniques in the making of commercials. The actors are making an income out of the production of these commercials in Australia and the outflow of Australian actors has been reduced very considerably as a result of this. More of them are tending to stay at home because they can make a living at home out of the making of commercials and the effect on the industry has been quite startling.

Mr. Stanbury: Would this not have a far greater impact on the Canadian film industry than any movie house quotas which would take a long time to build up. . .

Mr. Knight: I think the effect on the industry would be immediate. It would, in my estimation, double their quota of work in the commercial field. It would put more people into employment. It would develop very quickly many more experienced cameramen, lighting men, and all of the other technicians that are part of the industry and would have a startling effect on the industry.

Mr. Schreyer: I can readily see how it would help the Canadian film industry and technicians working within it, but would it in any way help the Canadian acting talent? They would be performing at a different level there.

Mr. Knight: Let us not undersell the skills required to make a commercial announcement.

[Interprétation]

canadienne, sont des filiales de sociétés américaines. Ce sont les sociétés américaines qui préparent les messages publicitaires et qui les vendent au Canada. Ils évitent le coût des productions en l'important. Malheureusement la société canadienne qui n'est pas une filiale et qui veut faire concurrence se trouve dans une situation très désavantageuse, car elle doit faire un message publicitaire pour le Canada seulement et ne peut pas concurrencer les filiales américaines. C'est un facteur dont il faut tenir compte ici. Quant à l'importation d'américains. . .

M. Stanbury: Avant de passer à cette question avez-vous quelques suggestions à faire au sujet de mesures législatives qui pourraient corriger cette situation?

M. Knight: Oui, j'en ai. Je recommande et je voudrais que ce soit une condition préalable à la délivrance d'une licence à un réseau, qu'il n'utilise que des pages de publicité faites ici. C'est un précédent qui a été établi en Australie, où les résultats ont été assez étonnants, en ce sens que toutes les installations de production y travaillent à plein temps; les maisons indépendantes sont en train de mettre au point leur technique pour la préparation de messages publicitaires. Les acteurs en retirent des bénéfices et beaucoup moins d'acteurs Australiens quittent le pays. Ils restent en Australie parce qu'ils peuvent y gagner leur vie et cela a eu des effets très étonnants sur l'industrie.

M. Stanbury: Est-ce que cela n'aurait pas une plus grande influence sur l'industrie cinématographique canadienne que les contingentements des salles de cinéma ne serait long à mettre sur pied?

M. Knight: Je pense que cela aurait des effets immédiats sur l'industrie, et doublerait la quantité de travail dans le domaine publicitaire. Il y aurait plus d'emplois. Nous aurions plus de bons caméramen, d'éclairagistes, de techniciens de toutes sortes et très rapidement. Cela aurait un effet foudroyant sur l'industrie.

M. Schreyer: Je vois comment cela aiderait l'industrie cinématographique et ces techniciens, mais est-ce que cela aiderait aussi les acteurs canadiens? Ils travailleraient à un autre niveau.

M. Knight: Je pense qu'il ne faut pas minimiser les compétences requises pour la publicité.

[Text]

Mr. Stanbury: The important thing here that you are getting at is that this is the kind of bread and butter work which actors and producers and film makers and all the people that enter into the film industry need in order to build up to a point where they can make the films that can be shown in movie houses and on television.

Mr. Knight: Precisely. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. Danson: Then you do not subscribe to the theory that the actor or the artist has to be starving to be really creative.

Mr. Knight: No, I do not.

Mr. Stanbury: You wanted to go on to talk about the reason for the importation of so much talent used in commercials which are made in Canada.

● 1210

Mr. Knight: Yes. The reasons given to us by the advertisers when we confronted them with this had the complexion of a vicious circle. They say that the reason they employ Americans in commercials made in Canada, is that your members, your performers are not known to the public because they are not being exposed on Canadian-made programs. The Americans are being exposed on Canadian television; their voices, their faces have become known to the Canadian public. Therefore, they are in demand with the advertisers. Now, how do you solve that riddle?

Mr. Stanbury: I am not sure which company it is, but I think General Motors used to have a very familiar Canadian face on their commercials, and it seems to me the faces I have seen recently are not familiar at all.

Mr. Knight: That is Ford I think you are talking about.

Mr. Stanbury: Ford?

Mr. Knight: It is Ford, yes.

Mr. Stanbury: This shows how effective their commercials are.

Mr. Knight: But I notice in mid-campaign they made a switch and started using Bobby Hull. They started off using this American spokesman exclusively. I suspect they had a bad experience with it, because in the middle of the campaign they introduced Bobby Hull.

Mr. Stanbury: Who was Bill Walker the spokesman for?

Mr. Knight: Ford.

[Interpretation]

M. Stanbury: L'important, à notre avis, est qu'il s'agit d'un travail qui permet aux acteurs, réalisateurs, et auteurs de gagner leur vie, ce dont tout le monde de l'industrie cinématographique a besoin pour arriver au point où ils peuvent se consacrer aux films qui sont montrés dans les cinémas et à la télévision.

M. Knight: Oui, c'est exactement cela.

M. Danson: Mais vous ne souscrivez pas à la théorie selon laquelle l'artiste doit crever de faim pour être créateur.

M. Knight: Non, pas du tout.

M. Stanbury: Vous vouliez parler des raisons qui expliquent l'importation de tant de talents pour la publicité faite au Canada.

M. Knight: Oui. Les raisons que nous donnent les agences publicitaires lorsqu'on leur demande une explication ressemblent vraiment à un cercle vicieux. Ils nous disent qu'ils prennent des Américains pour les messages publicitaires faits au Canada, parce que nos acteurs, nos membres ne sont pas connus du public, parce qu'ils ne paraissent pas assez souvent. Les Américains sont connus à la télévision canadienne; leurs voix, leurs visages sont connus du public canadien. Donc, il y a plus de demandes des annonceurs pour eux. Alors, comment voulez-vous résoudre cela?

M. Stanbury: Je ne suis pas sûr, mais je crois que la General Motors avait quelqu'un, un Canadien bien connu, dans leurs commerciaux, et je pense que les visages que j'ai vus récemment ne sont pas connus du tout.

M. Knight: Je pense que c'est de Ford que vous parlez.

M. Stanbury: De Ford?

M. Knight: Oui, c'est Ford.

M. Stanbury: Eh bien! Cela montre à quel point ils sont efficaces.

M. Knight: Mais je constate qu'à mi-chemin, ils ont changé; maintenant, ils ont Bobby Hull pour leur publicité. Ils ont commencé avec ce porte-parole américain exclusivement. Peut-être que leur expérience a été mauvaise car, au milieu de cette campagne, ils ont introduit Bobby Hull.

M. Stanbury: Pour qui Bill Walker était-il le porte-parole?

M. Knight: Ford.

[Texte]

Mr. Stanbury: Ford.

Mr. Danson: Joel Aldred worked in the United States.

Mr. Knight: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: What is the answer, then?

How have you been trying to cope with it, or how should we try to cope with this problem?

Mr. Knight: The long-term answer is that we have not to get greater Canadian production in order that our members can more frequently be seen and heard by the public. In the short-term we have sought help from the Department of Immigration, for one thing: we have attempted to suggest to the Department of Immigration that the same type of criteria be used by the Department of Immigration in Canada as is used in the United States. We do not mind the Americans coming here to steal our bread and butter so long as we can go down there and steal theirs. But when it is a one way Street, with them coming here to take our job opportunities away from us, and we cannot get into the United States to do the same thing in reverse, then, of course, it becomes intolerable to us. It is not acceptable. We just cannot operate on this basis.

So, we have taken several courses of action. We have, as I say, made representation to the Department of Immigration here in Canada and I must say we got a very sympathetic hearing and I believe there is some action being initiated in that direction.

Secondly, we have undertaken a greater publicity and public relations campaign on behalf of our members—"public relations" is the wrong word because it is an industrial relations thing that we are undertaking. We are publishing a talent file book which will be distributed among the engagers so that our membership can become known at least to the people who are doing the engaging.

We are attempting to re-organize the talent agents in Canada with their co-operation. One of the major problems is that in New York and in Hollywood there is a talent agent industry which is efficient and which is professional and which can represent its clients very effectively to the advertiser. The potential producer of commercial going to New York gets service very quickly, in 24 hours he gets the people he wants. The same cannot be said of Canada at the moment. The talent industry is too small to support such an organization. So we are attempting, with the co-operation of those talent agents that exist, to set some new criteria for activity so that we can help them and they can help us in this area.

M. Stanbury: Ford.

M. Danson: Joel Aldred a travaillé aux États-Unis.

M. Knight: Oui.

M. Stanbury: Quelle est votre réponse, alors? Qu'est-ce que vous avez essayé de faire pour résoudre ce problème? Qu'est-ce qu'il faut essayer de faire?

M. Knight: La solution à long terme est d'avoir plus de réalisations canadiennes, pour que nos artistes soient mieux connus. Mais à court terme, nous avons demandé l'aide du ministère de l'Immigration pour une chose: nous avons essayé de leur suggérer d'utiliser les mêmes critères que ceux que l'on utilise aux États-Unis pour l'immigration. Même si les Américains viennent nous voler notre pain, cela n'est pas très important, à condition que nous fassions la même chose. Mais lorsqu'il s'agit de ruer à sens unique, et qu'ils viennent ici et nous enlèvent le pain de la bouche, et que nous ne pouvons pas aller faire la même chose aux États-Unis, eh bien là, la situation est intolérable. Ce n'est pas acceptable du tout. Nous ne pouvons pas travailler de cette façon-là.

Alors, nous avons pris plusieurs mesures. Nous avons présenté des instances au ministère de l'Immigration ici; ils ont bien sympathisé à notre cause et je pense qu'on songe à prendre des mesures.

Deuxièmement, nous avons commencé à faire plus de publicité, avoir plus de relations publiques. Le mot «relations publiques» n'est pas bon, il s'agit plutôt de relations industrielles. Nous publions un annuaire des artistes qui sera distribué parmi les gens qui engagent des artistes pour qu'ils soient au moins au courant.

Aussi, nous essayons de réorganiser les agences de talents au Canada. A New-York, à Hollywood, il y a une industrie qui s'occupe de trouver de nouveaux talents, qui est efficace et qui peut très bien présenter ses clients. Et, les réalisateurs qui vont à New-York sont rapidement servis; en 24 heures, ils ont les gens dont ils ont besoin. On ne peut pas dire la même chose ici. Notre industrie est trop petite pour soutenir une telle organisation. Alors, avec la collaboration des présents représentants d'artistes nous essayons d'établir de nouveaux critères pour que nous puissions leur aider et pour qu'ils puissent nous aider.

En dernier lieu, on nous a imposé une punition, une amende devrais-je dire, pour les artistes venant des

States, which is really an imposition of a penalty on the advertiser, where we charge instead of the usual $50 work permit which is normal for people participating in commercials, $150 work permit, which becomes an added expense to them. All of these things we have undertaken in an attempt to increase the work opportunities in commercials for Canadians. However, the only real answer is for us to make all of our commercials here in Canada.

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary: what form did the Australian action take? Was it a change in law, or practice?

Mr. Knight: Yes, the government department that issues licences in Australia is the Post Office. They issue licences for television stations in Australia. It is a condition of the issuance of that licence that the commercials exhibited will be made entirely in Australia with—I have forgotten the percentage—an allowable percentage for areas where they need to go outside of Australia for the purposes of geography or scenic requirements. In other words, if they want a snow scene they are allowed to go to Canada to get it.

Mr. Schreyer: To be candid, to the best of your knowledge has there been any negative aspect developing in so far as the Australian industry is concerned or the performers?

Mr. Knight: Certainly not the performers. I do not think either from the broadcasters—no, I do not really know the answer to that one, but I am making an assumption that the facilities for making commercials are very frequently—and certainly in those countries, anyway—in the hands of the broadcasters themselves. For instance, CFTO in Toronto makes a large number of commercials in their studios as does CFCF in Montreal, and the independent French station in Montreal makes a great many. So that, the broadcasters themselves would benefit from increased production within their production facilities, as would the film industry.

I cannot think of anybody really who would suffer. There would be an additional cost to those companies that are subsidiaries of American corporations in that they would be required to make an additional commercial for the Canadian market. That is the only hardship I can foresee.

Mr. Schreyer: I was going to ask if perhaps there was some indication of retaliation from those who exercise some leverage?

Mr. Knight: Not at all. Australia to a lesser degree had precisely the same problems in Australia with the use of American productions as we have in Canada. The advertisers still advertise on Australian television. There has been no falling off in the amount of advertising bought on Australian television. I do not know of any.

[Interpretation]

Etats-Unis, et c'est vraiment une imposition sur les publicistes. Au lieu de vendre un permis de travail à $50.00, ce qui est normal pour la publicité, maintenant, le permis est de $150.00; c'est une dépense accrue.

Nous avons essayé toutes sortes de choses du genre pour trouver plus de travail pour les Canadiens. Mais la seule véritable réponse est de faire toute la publicité ici au Canada.

M. Schreyer: Une question supplémentaire: Quel genre de mesure a-t-on prise en Australie? A-t-on modifié la loi ou les modalités?

M. Knight: C'est le Bureau de Poste qui émet les licences pour les postes de télévision en Australie.

Et il y a une condition avant de recevoir le permis: les émissions publicitaires doivent être faites entièrement en Australie, avec une marge (j'ai oublié le pourcentage) pour aller à l'extérieur là où des paysages doivent être faits à l'extérieur du pays. Par exemple, s'ils veulent une scène de neige, ils peuvent aller là chercher au Canada.

M. Schreyer: Y a-t-il des aspects négatifs dans cela au point de vue de l'industrie australienne ou au point de vue des acteurs?

M. Knight: Certainement pas au point de vue des acteurs, ni au point de vue des radiodiffuseurs non plus. Je ne sais pas vraiment la réponse à cette question, mais je suppose que les installations, comme ici d'ailleurs, appartiennent aux radiodiffuseurs. Par exemple, CFTO, à Toronto, fait beaucoup de message publicitaires dans ses studios comme CFCF à Montréal, et le poste privé français, à Montréal, en fait beaucoup. Alors les radiodiffuseurs eux-mêmes profiteraient d'une production accrue à même leurs installations, de même que l'industrie cinématographique.

Je ne peux penser à personne vraiment qui en souffrirait. Il y aura des frais accrus pour les filiales de sociétés américaines, car elles feraient des commerciaux supplémentaires pour le marché canadien. Ce serait la seule difficulté à mon avis.

M. Schreyer: Il y a peut-être des mesures de représailles contre ceux qui exercent cette pression?

M. Knight: Pas du tout. L'Australie a les mêmes problèmes au sujet de l'utilisation des émissions américaines, comme nous avons ici au Canada. La publicité existe toujours à la télévision australienne; n'y a pas de diminution sur l'achat de minutes de publicité. Je n'en connais pas.

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you.

Mr. Stanbury: You mentioned the fact that many of the advertisers are subsidiaries of American companies. Is the fact that many advertising agencies, or some advertising agencies, are subsidiaries of American companies part of the problem?

Mr. Knight: Not in the same direct sense, but in an artistic sense, yes. The criteria for artistic acceptance of a given commercial is determined by the New York Office, the Chicago Office, the Los Angeles Office, rather than the Montreal or the Toronto Office. The deals are initiated in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. If the idea for the commercial is an American idea, then quite obviously it is designed to fit American performers, American habitat, as it were, and not Canadian.

The mere fact that the advertising agencies are dominated by parent companies in the United States tends to cause the creative people in Canadian agencies to copy rather than to create for themselves. So, there has been no real creation of a Canadian image in advertising or Canadian way of advertising. For instance, if you go to any of the European countries, France or Germany—not France because they have not yet any commercials as yet—but Britain, more particularly, since the language is the same it is easier to compare: the commercials are quite different there—totally different. They have a British flavour to them; they taste British one could almost say, whereas in Canada you get somebody advertising what they call KEN-L-RATION”, whatever that may be.

Mr. Stanbury: They taste American. Can you suggest any way in which we can help alleviate that problem?

Mr. Knight: No, I do not believe so.

Mr. Stanbury: I suppose one of the ways is to propose it.

Mr. Knight: I think so. I think if the Canadian advertising agencies are given a greater opportunity of artistic freedom, which would naturally come if their commercials had to be made in Canada, they would take advantage of this artistic freedom and begin to create rather than copy.

Mr. Stanbury: It has been suggested to me that something more personal and more petty perhaps than those factors you mentioned sometimes enters into the situation—that people in an agency may simply find it more glamorous to deal with New York or Hollywood and personalities there rather than stay home and deal with you and your members.

Mr. Knight: That is the scuttlebutt, Mr. Stanbury, and I would not like to comment on it. But certainly

[Interprétation]

M. Schreyer: Merci.

M. Stanbury: Vous dites qu'un grand nombre d'agences de publicité sont des filiales de compagnies américaines. Est-ce le fait que tant d'agences de publicité sont des filiales d'agences américaines? Est-ce une partie du problème?

M. Knight: Non, pas dans le même sens direct, mais au sens artistique. Les critères pour les commerciaux sont déterminés par le bureau de New-York, de Chicago, de Los Angeles, au lieu des bureaux de Montréal ou de Toronto. Les idées viennent de New-York, Chicago, Los Angeles; s'il s'agit d'une idée américaine, eh bien! évidemment, elle est conçue pour entrer dans le mode de vie américain pour convenir aux acteurs américains.

Et comme toutes les agences de publicité sont des filiales américaines dans bien des cas, ici, on essaie plutôt de copier que de créer. Alors, il n'y a pas de création d'une image canadienne ici. En fait, si on va en Europe, en France, en Allemagne, non pas la France, parce qu'il n'y a pas de publicité à la télévision, mais la Grande-Bretagne, disons, c'est plus facile à comparer parce que la langue est la même, — les commerciaux sont très différents; ils ont un goût britannique, si on peut dire. Tandis que, au Canada, lorsqu'on annonce, par exemple, de la nourriture pour chiens, («Ken-L-Ration») eh bien! elle a un goût américain.

M. Stanbury: Leur goût est américain. Avez-vous des suggestions pour trouver une solution à cela?

M. Knight: Non, je ne pense pas.

M. Stanbury: Eh bien! il faut en parler publiquement.

M. Knight: Oui, je le pense. Et je pense que si les agences de publicité canadiennes avaient un peu plus de liberté artistique, ce qui se produirait si les commerciaux étaient faits au Canada, elles en profiteraient et pourraient commencer à créer au lieu de copier.

M. Stanbury: On m'a dit que quelque chose de plus personnel que ces facteurs entre en ligne de compte, que le personnel des agences trouve qu'il est plus élégant de faire affaire avec New-York ou Hollywood au lieu de rester ici et de travailler avec vous.

M. Knight: C'est un point bien litigieux, bien épineux mais je ne veux pas le commenter ici. Ce sont these are the stories one hears and these are the things that are said. That is all I can say on that.

Mr. Stanbury: It is the sort of thing which I suppose can only be discouraged by exposing the fact that that is the way your members often talk, and they feel that very often people in advertising agencies are impelled by this kind of motive, as well as by economic ones.

Mr. Knight: Making the assumption that people that work in advertising agencies are human, I imagine they are liable to the same types of weaknesses that the rest of us have and can be tempted by the niceties of this life, if I may put it that way.

Mr. Stanbury: Do any of your members ever suggest that similar motivation is one of the causes for the importation of so many American stars for television programs?

Mr. Knight: Yes, they do. There was a period, for instance, before the change of the law in the United States relating to talent agencies when a number of these talent agencies were owned and operated by production houses and, for that matter, the networks in the United States. A person looking for a particular actor in the United States would go to his agent and say, "Look, I want this actor to perform in this particular show" and the answer would come back, "yes, you can have him, but you will take this one and this one as well". This kind of package deal thing was rumoured very strongly for a very long time, but I think the change in the American law has brought that to an end. Large talent agency houses are a thing of the past. There are many much smaller operators now and they seem to operate on a different basis. I think that type of thing has come to an end.

There are all kinds of malpractices. You know, when you get a group of people who are fighting to make a living there are all kinds of malpractices. We had a very unfortunate incident in Montreal recently where a young singer and some writers in order to gain employment were almost forced to kick back to a producer part of the money that was being paid to them. They reported this fact to the Corporation and I understand that the CBC is taking some action in that respect now. But of course this kind of thing can happen in our business and it does happen, but it is not as prevalent as it used to be, if I may put it that way.

Mr. Stanbury: These are vague suggestions but they are so much in the minds of some of your members, I suggest, that they should be examined and we should have your comments or information on them, if that can be supplied.

It has been suggested, for instance, that one of the reasons that Canadian TV producers import American stars is to impress them with their production capabilities.

des choses qu'on entend, ce sont des choses qui se disent. C'est tout ce que je peux dire à ce sujet.

M. Stanbury: Je suppose qu'on ne peut détourner quiconque de cet état de choses qu'en dévoilant le fait que c'est l'attitude qu'adoptent vos membres qui croient que très souvent, le personnel des agences de publicité est poussé par ce genre de motifs en plus des motifs économiques.

M. Knight: Si l'on suppose que ces personnes qui travaillent dans les agences sont humaines, je suppose qu'elles peuvent être exposées aux mêmes faiblesses que nous et qu'elles peuvent être ainsi tentées.

M. Stanbury: Est-ce que certains de vos membres suggèrent parfois que pareille motivation est l'une des causes de l'importation de tant d'artistes américains pour les émissions de télévision?

M. Knight: Oui, en effet. Il y a eu une époque, avant que ne soit modifiée la loi américaine, où plusieurs agences artistiques étaient la propriété de maisons de production et des réseaux, aux États-Unis. La personne qui désirait retenir les services d'un acteur, se rendait à cette agence et disait: «Je désire tel acteur pour tel spectacle». On lui répondait: «Très bien, mais vous devez, en même temps, prendre celui-ci et celui-là». Ces dispositions ont existé pendant assez longtemps mais à la suite des modifications de la loi aux États-Unis, ceci est maintenant chose du passé. Il existe présentement plus d'agences plus petites qui travaillent différemment.

Mais il se produit toutes sortes de choses plus ou moins honnêtes lorsqu'un groupe de personnes luttent pour gagner leur vie. Dernièrement, à Montréal, un jeune chanteur et certains écrivains, afin d'obtenir des contrats, ont presque été forcés de remettre à un réalisateur une partie de l'argent qu'on s'était engagé à leur verser. Le tout a été porté à l'attention de la Société Radio-Canada qui, me dit-on, décide présentement de l'attitude à prendre. Ceci peut se produire dans une entreprise comme la nôtre et ceci se produit dans bien des cas mais ce n'est pas un problème aussi grave qu'autrefois.

M. Stanbury: Il s'agit d'allégations assez vagues, mais elles inquiètent tellement certains de vos membres que je crois que nous devrions les étudier et entendre vos commentaires à ce sujet.

On a dit, par exemple, qu'une des raisons pour lesquelles les réalisateurs de télévision, au Canada, importent des étoiles américaines, c'est qu'ils veulent rs, thereby facilitating the entry of the producer to Hollywood or New York. Have you had such specific complaints from your members, or is this just scuttlebutt too?

Mr. Knight: No, I do not believe this is just scuttlebutt. The number of coincidences is too great for it to be simply scuttlebutt. The number of coincidences which relate to a man who has been a producer of programs or commercials for that matter in Canada who has been responsible for importing American performers and has then subsequently wound up in Hollywood as a director or producer in that area are quite considerable.

Mr. Stanbury: But you would not want to suggest that it was just on the basis of coincidence and that it is not because of his talent?

Mr. Knight: No, it is because of his talent. Do not misunderstand the situation. No man without talent is going to land himself any major contract in the United States—no man without talent. These people have talent. Do not misunderstand me, they have talent. It is there is some way of ensuring, not your own talent but your entrance into the areas that are liable to employ you. However it is very difficult to make any such thing irrefutable. The motives that a man has in his own, they are locked within his own heart and in his own breast. You could look at him, you could watch him behave, and you could come to certain conclusions, but your conclusions might be equally as a result of your own prejudices as much as a result of his actions.

It is very difficult to bring these things forward and to say that this has definitely happened and that you can prove it. You cannot prove it.

Mr. Stanbury: If the feeling of some of your members along these lines are well founded, can you suggest any other way of coping with the situation other than to make the superiors of such persons aware of the possibility that this is happening—that an excessive use of American talent may be thus motivated and therefore perhaps they could be somewhat more careful in fully justifying each time the importation of American stars? Can they do more than that, can we?

Mr. Knight: I believe Dr. Davidson probably could, within the terms of the CBC, be a little more the guiding hand to the artistic side of the Corporation—he could perhaps determine policy in this area at least. As I understand it at the moment the individual producer has total and absolute artistic freedom which, in large terms, is as it should be.

However I do not believe that the imposing of legislation requiring him to justify in other than artistic terms the employment of a non-Canadian prouver leurs talents à ces artistes et faciliter leur propre entrée à Hollywood ou New-York. Avez-vous des plaintes précises à ce sujet, ou s'agit-il de rumeurs?

M. Knight: Je ne crois pas qu'il s'agisse simplement de rumeurs. Le nombre de cas est trop considérable pour qu'il s'agisse simplement de rumeurs. Le nombre de cas où une personne qui réalisait des émissions ou des commerciaux, qui était responsable de l'importation de ces artistes, et qui s'est par la suite retrouvée à Hollywood comme directeur ou réalisateur est très élevé.

M. Stanbury: Vous ne voudriez pas dire que c'est à cause d'une coïncidence et non de son talent?

M. Knight: C'est à cause de son talent. N'allez pas mal comprendre la situation. Aucune personne sans talent ne va obtenir un contrat majeur aux États-Unis. Il faut que ces gens aient du talent. Mais il y a une façon de se ménager un accès dans les secteurs qui peuvent vous fournir de l'emploi et c'est assez difficile de formuler des accusations précises. Les motifs d'une personne sont cachés. On peut toujours surveiller quelqu'un et en arriver à des conclusions mais dans bien des cas, les conclusions sont inspirées par des préjugés de l'observateur plus que par les actions de l'autre personne. Il est très difficile de dire que ceci s'est bel et bien produit et de le prouver.

M. Stanbury: Si les craintes de vos membres à ce sujet sont fondées, croyez-vous qu'il y aurait une façon de résoudre ce problème autre que de faire savoir aux supérieurs de telle ou telle personne ce qui semble se produire, savoir que des artistes américains sont utilisés en trop grand nombre et qu'il serait bon d'étudier la situation avec soin? Peuvent-ils faire davantage? Ou pouvons-nous faire davantage?

M. Knight: Je crois que monsieur Davidson, à Radio-Canada, pourrait avoir un peu plus la main-mise sur cette question, qu'il pourrait au moins fixer la politique de la Société dans ce domaine. À l'heure actuelle, le réalisateur a toute liberté en ce domaine et c'est, généralement, ce qui doit se produire.

Je ne crois pas que l'obliger à justifier la mise sous contrat d'un non-Canadien le priverait tellement de sa liberté artistique. Je crois, par contre, qu'une directive would be any great inhibiting factor in his artistic freedom, and I think such a policy directive from Dr. Davidson, for instance, in that particular field would be very helpful in this area.

Mr. Stanbury: Are you suggesting in effect that it should be presumed that Canadian talent can do just about any job, unless the producer's superior can be convinced otherwise?

Mr. Knight: I believe that to be absolutely true.

Mr. Stanbury: And the producer should in effect have to almost justify each individual importation of American talent?

● 1230

Mr. Knight: There are certain areas of the artistic field—and I am using the word "artistic" in the very broad sense of the theatre—where there are not Canadians to fill the ranks. There are no Canadian circuses, for instance, and, therefore, highwire artists are not very frequently found in Canada. One could probably say, with some justification, that no such animal exists in Canada.

But when one comes down to the more general categories of singer, dancer and actor, there is an absolute abundance of Canadian talent. Very rarely, except on the basis of personal bias, can one justify the use of an actor, or a singer, or a dancer.

There are exceptions in this area. I think the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should put itself more and more into this field of attempting to sell their products abroad. There may, on occasions, be commercial reasons for importing a star of international reputation, not because he is a better performer but because he is better box office, but that does not justify the importation of all of the character parts or the other minor roles.

If they are going to import them for commercial reasons, for box office reasons, or for the reason that they want to sell abroad, then I think they can justify it, and if they import people of international reputation we are not going to object to it, because we want production in Canada; and we feel that it must be sold abroad at a greater level than it has been in the past in order to develop it as an industry in Canada. Therefore, we would not object to that type of thing.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Knight, you said a few moments ago that you would not regard it as an inhibiting factor on a producer within the Corporation to be required to follow a policy of employing Canadian talent, all other things being equal. I take that to mean that you are personally convinced that no such understanding, or written policy, now exists. That surprises me a little, because I had assumed that this was in fact the case.

en ce sens, émise par monsieur Davidson, serait d'une très grande utilité.

M. Stanbury: Vous voulez donc dire, en fait, que les artistes canadiens peuvent remplir à peu près n'importe quel rôle et que le réalisateur doit en tenir compte?

M. Knight: Je crois que c'est vrai.

M. Stanbury: Vous croyez que les réalisateurs devraient justifier dans tous les cas, les importations d'acteurs étrangers?

M. Knight: Dans certains secteurs du monde artistique, et le mot artistique est utilisé ici dans son sens plus large, il n'y a pas de Canadiens pour remplir tel tel rôle. Ainsi, il n'y a pas de cirque canadien, il n'y a pas beaucoup de funambules au Canada. On pourrait dire, à juste titre, qu'il n'y a pas d'animal de ce genre au Canada.

Pour en venir à la catégorie des chanteurs, danseurs et acteurs, il y a une abondance d'artistes canadiens. C'est très rare qu'on puisse justifier, sauf par préjugé personnel, le recours aux services de tels acteurs chanteurs ou danseurs.

Il y a toutefois des exceptions. Je crois que la Société Radio-Canada devrait s'efforcer de plus en plus de vendre ses produits à l'étranger. Et, il pourrait alors y avoir des raisons commerciales pour justifier le recours aux services d'une vedette de réputation internationale, pas parce qu'il est meilleur mais parce que cette personne attire plus d'attention. Ceci justifie pas toutefois que l'on accorde tous les rôles et les autres rôles mineurs à des étrangers.

Mais si on importe un artiste pour des raisons commerciales, parce qu'il attire plus d'attention, parce qu'ils veulent vendre leur produit à l'étranger, c'est peut-être justifiable, et s'ils importent des vedettes internationales, nous ne nous y opposerons pas, car nous voulons que la production s'accroisse au Canada. Nous estimons qu'il faudrait la vendre davantage à l'étranger pour que notre industrie se développe.

M. Schreyer: Monsieur Knight, vous avez dit il y a quelques instants que vous ne croyez pas que le fait qu'un réalisateur soit tenu, à compétence égale, de prendre un acteur canadien, ne constitue pas une contrainte. Vous semblez dire qu'il n'existe pas de politique en ce sens à l'heure actuelle, ce qui ne vous surprend quelque peu car j'aurais cru que c'était le cas.

exte]

Mr. Knight: By no means is it the case. I do not think such a policy exists. Oddly enough, with the advertisers we have an agreement whereby they agree to give preference of employment to Canadians, but—

Mr. Schreyer: No; I am referring to within the Corporation.

Mr. Knight: We have no such clause in our agreements with the Corporation, although we are aiming to get one this time around.

An hon. Member: Or with private broadcasters?

Mr. Knight: Or with private broadcasters; no.

When I met with Dr. Davidson some time ago and was able to discuss this matter with him and some of the vice-presidents of the CBC, they stated that the individual director, or producer, as they call him, has absolute artistic freedom both in buying a script and in choosing the cast for the script. There are no direct written policies emanating from the CBC that would require them to justify the employment of non-Canadians.

Now, I do not think this should be confused with the fact that I believe it is the policy of the CBC to develop Canadian talent. They do. But at the same time they frequently import Americans who are little known and who have no greater talent than the people available in Canada.

The Vice-Chairman: And not only Americans.

Mr. Knight: Not only Americans.

The Vice-Chairman: And on the French network—

Mr. Knight: And on the French network; and Britishers, too, for that matter.

There was one notorious case a little while ago when they had Douglas Fairbanks Junior come to play a part in a CBC Festival production, and on the basis of the results, this could not really be justified. This was Tom Jones. I could name a dozen performers who could have played it better.

Mr. Schreyer: If there is this absence of an understanding between management and the producers I find it both surprising and disappointing, and I wish to observe that I do not see that a producer, to exercise his creative talent, has to have the power of a czar, to do just as he pleases and to ignore any requirement about the employment of Canadian talent.

[Interprétation]

Mr. Knight: Ce n'est pas du tout le cas. Je ne crois pas qu'une telle politique existe à l'heure actuelle. Il est assez surprenant que nous ayons une entente avec les agences de publicité pour qu'ils accordent la préférence aux acteurs canadiens.

Mr. Schreyer: Non. Je parle de Radio-Canada.

Mr. Knight: Il n'y a pas d'article semblable dans nos ententes avec la Société bien que nous ayons l'intention de l'introduire dans notre prochaine entente.

Une voix: Et avec les radiodiffuseurs privés? Ni avec les radiodiffuseurs privés.

Mr. Knight: Lorsque j'ai rencontré le docteur Davidson il y a quelque temps, j'ai pu discuter de ces questions avec lui et avec certains vice-présidents de la Société Radio-Canada. Ils ont dit que le réalisateur a une liberté artistique absolue autant à l'achat du texte et au choix des acteurs, il n'a pas de politique officielle de la Société Radio-Canada qui oblige le réalisateur à justifier le recours à un artiste étranger.

Il ne faut pas évidemment confondre ceci avec la politique de la Société Radio-Canada d'encourager les artistes canadiens, mais, en même temps, il arrive très souvent qu'ils importent des Américains assez peu connus qui n'ont pas plus de talent que les acteurs canadiens.

Le vice-président: Pas seulement des Américains...

Mr. Knight: Pas seulement des Américains.

Le vice-président: Et sur le réseau français...

Mr. Knight: Et sur le réseau français; et des anglais, également. Il y a un cas assez commun qui s'est produit il y a quelque temps. Douglas Fairbanks jr. est venu jouer un rôle dans une production de la Société Radio-Canada, ce qui n'est pas justifiable. Il parle de Tom Jones à l'émission Festival. J'aurais pu vous nommer une douzaine d'acteurs qui auraient mieux joué le rôle.

Mr. Schreyer: L'absence d'une entente entre l'administration et les réalisateurs est assez étonnante et décourageante. Je tiens aussi à dire que je ne puis comprendre pourquoi, pour exercer son talent créateur, un réalisateur doit avoir les pouvoirs d'un czar, de faire ce qui lui plaît et ne pas se soucier de prendre des acteurs canadiens.

[Text]

Mr. Knight: Whenever we bring it up with them as a subject for discussion I must say they are extremely sensitive and angry that we would dare to suggest what they consider to be a limitation to their artistic freedom. Those are the words most frequently used by them when we talk with them about it.

Mr. Danson: I see another danger to the public here. I am a great fan of both the National Film Board and the CBC; I think they have been great for the country. However, there have been periods when it seemed to me that every time I turned on the radio—I am showing my age—it was Bernie Braden, then Tommy Tweed and then the late John Drainie—all good; now we are perhaps getting that way with Bruno Gerussi. It may be that because of our limited outlets we become "stale" on some of our homegrown talent, too. Is there not some happy medium whereby you can import and export your talent and can have your cake and eat it, too?

Mr. Knight: If there could be import and export I suppose we would object less than we are now doing, but you cannot import and export at the moment except under the terms of Canadians becoming non-Canadians. In other words, a Canadian can go to work in the United States only if he is prepared to give up his Canadianism and become an American—become something else. If he goes as an immigrant, after a couple of years they might let him in; but only on condition that he gives up being a Canadian, and therefore he is then a non-Canadian; he has become an American. They do not accept a visiting performer in the United States except in certain areas of the stage in New York.

Mr. Schreyer: May I just follow that up and ask whether you are aware, Mr. Knight, of any attempt being made through official channels to try to equalize Canadian and American immigration laws as they apply to talent?

Mr. Knight: Yes; we raised this problem at a meeting with the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Immigration. The meeting was attended not only by ourselves but by Equity, which represents performers on the stage.

There is an organization known as the Canadian Council of Performing Arts Unions of which we are a member, and the meeting with the two ministers was held under their auspices rather than ours.

We made the presentation, and particularly J. Allan Wood of the American Federation of Musicians was able to present to the ministers some specific instances of the absolute inequity of border crossing incidents relative to musicians.

The Minister undertook to make representations to the American Government to seek a form of reciprocity in the application of the two acts, preferably based

[Interpretation]

M. Knight: Lorsque nous discutons de la question avec eux, je dois dire qu'ils sont très sensibles et irrités que nous osions prétendre limiter leur liberté artistique. Ce sont les mots qu'ils répètent continuellement.

M. Danson: Il y a également un autre danger pour la population. J'aime bien l'office national du film et la Société Radio-Canada, mais à une certaine époque chaque fois que nous ouvrons la radio, nous entendons Bernie Braden, Tommie Tweed et John Drainie—tous des artistes excellents. Et nous avons maintenant Bruno Gerussi. Toutefois, il se peut qu'à cause du nombre restreint de réseaux, nous en arrivons à nous fatiguer des artistes locaux. Est-ce qu'il n'y aurait pas moyen d'avoir le juste milieu, où l'on pourrait importer et exporter des artistes?

M. Knight: Si l'on pouvait importer et exporter de cette façon, nous aurions moins d'objections mais nous ne pourrions pas exporter à l'heure actuelle. Un Canadien par exemple, peut aller travailler aux États-Unis seulement à la condition d'abandonner sa citoyenneté et de devenir Américain. Ils n'acceptent pas d'artistes invités sauf dans certains cas au théâtre à New-York.

M. Schreyer: Je vous demanderais si vous avez connaissance de tentatives faites pour rendre les lois canadiennes et américaines de l'immigration vis-à-vis des artistes plus uniformes?

M. Knight: Oui. Nous avons fait part de ce problème lors d'une réunion avec le ministre de l'Immigration ainsi que le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures. L'Equity qui représente les artistes de la scène a également participé à cette réunion. Il y a une organisation, le Conseil des arts des Union des Arts d'interprétation, dont nous sommes membre, sous les auspices de laquelle, la réunion a eu lieu.

Nous avons présenté un mémoire et M. J. Allan Wood de l'American Federation of Musicians a mentionné aux ministres des cas précis où il y avait injustice lorsque des musiciens ont traversé la frontière. Le ministre s'est engagé à présenter un mémoire au gouvernement américain afin de tenter d'établir des accords réciproques pour l'application des deux lois de préférence fondée sur les normes canadiennes qui permettent toute liberté de mouvement de part on the Canadian standard of allowing a freedom of movement across the border. If this was unattainable, however, they said they would have to consider reciprocity on the standard of their American law.

We were then asked to produce evidence and specific instances to supply to the Minister. I believe the musicians have already done their part of it. The American Guild of Variety Artists are in the process of gathering their information together, as are we, and I now expect that information to be documented within a week.

What can happen from that point on I do not know, but it is an interesting coincidence that reported in some debates in the House of Commons recently there were some questions asked about the application of the American immigration law as it applies to other types of workers. Apparently, as a result of those representations, there are going to be representations made to the American Government as well. This is a problem that is not just related to performers by any means; it applies to all levels of workers across Canada. I understand that even General Motors are having some difficulties.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Knight, on the basis of your knowledge of the industry, I wonder how the economics of the Canadian independent film producing industry stacks up? Do you feel that independents produce less expensively than, say the CBC and the National Film Board? Also, as a side issue of that, would there be a more favourable artistic climate as opposed to a Crown corporation? And if these economics do exist, how would they relate to Hollywood?

In other words, could we also develop an export industry in commercials and in films simply on the basis of our economics? For example, if a series like Quentin Durgens were given to a private industry to produce completely, how do you feel that the economics and artistic quality would stack up against a CBC produced series of the same type.

Mr. Knight: That is difficult to answer. As to the first question—let us try the economic factors—I think any independent producer could probably bring in a film at a smaller total cost than the Corporation could, due very largely to the absence of large overheads that the Corporation must carry. It would not necessarily be a more efficient operation on the production floor. Direct costs would probably be equivalent, I should think, but it would be the indirect costs that would make the difference in the total figure. This is speculation, you understand; I have no—

Mr. Stanbury: The overhead is there anyway, and that is not going to make it cheaper for the CBC to buy film from an independent.

d'autre de la frontière. Toutefois, si on ne peut pas y arriver, il faudra songer à établir cette réciprocité en se fondant sur les normes américaines.

On nous a alors demandé de présenter des preuves et des cas précis au ministre. L'American Guild of Variety Artists a déjà entrepris leur partie du mémoire, comme nous, d'ailleurs. Je compte que tous ces renseignements seront déposés d'ici une semaine.

Ce qui va se produire à l'avenir, je n'en sais rien, mais c'est une coïncidence intéressante que dans les débats de la Chambre des communes, il y a eu des questions au sujet de l'application des lois américaines sur l'immigration à d'autres genres de travailleurs. Il semble qu'à la suite de la présentation de ce mémoire il y aura présentation d'un mémoire au gouvernement américain. C'est un problème qui ne se limite pas seulement aux artistes, mais s'applique à tous les travailleurs d'un bout à l'autre du Canada. Je crois que même General Motors a des difficultés.

M. Danson: M. Knight d'après votre connaissance de l'industrie, je me demande comment une industrie cinématographique pourrait être mise sur pied. Pensez-vous que des indépendants pourraient produire moins cher que disons, Radio-Canada ou l'Office national du film? Croyez-vous qu'il y aurait un climat artistique plus favorable que dans une société de la Couronne? Si ces facteurs économiques existent comment peuvent-ils se comparer à la situation d'Hollywood?

En d'autres termes, pourrions-nous créer une industrie exportatrice de commerciaux ou de films sur la base de notre économie? Par exemple, si une série comme Quentin Durgens était remise à l'industrie privée, quels seraient les résultats économiques et la qualité artistique par rapport à une série similaire réalisée par la société Radio-Canada?

M. Knight: La réponse est difficile. Voyons d'abord la question des facteurs économiques. Je pense que n'importe quel producteur indépendant pourrait probablement réaliser un film à un prix moins élevé que Radio-Canada principalement parce que ses frais généraux seraient moins élevés. Il ne ferait pas nécessairement un travail plus efficace. Les frais directs seraient à peu près les mêmes; ce sont les frais indirects qui feraient la différence. Ce n'est qu'une supposition; je n'ai pas...

M. Stanbury: Les frais généraux sont là de toute façon et cela ne diminuera pas le prix que devra payer Radio-Canada à un indépendant.

[Text]

Mr. Knight: That is right. That is the way I would think it would operate. But I am not quoting from specific instances when I say this.

As to the artistic aspect, I think there is a probability that because of the greater artistic freedom in the Corporation—depending on the individual talents of the men working on the film—the men working within the CBC would be less restricted. There is a tendency in the private sector to look to the market, and to consider the things that may or may not be acceptable under a kind of self-imposed censorship, as it were.

They are more likely, for instance, to look at those things that have been successful in the past and say, "Well, that actor has been successful in the past, therefore I will hire him; that writer has been successful in the past, therefore I will hire him; this type of story-line formula is what is being bought at the moment, therefore I will use that". In other words, they tend to play it safe and be lacking in a sense of adventure in this. Now this is not necessarily bad. This is an observation rather than a judgment of the situation.

For instance, William Shakespeare was a shareholder in a theatre and he wrote his plays for the marketplace; there is no doubt about it. If you examine Othello, for instance, you find a scene in the middle of the play where Iago is attempting to get one of the other characters drunk. He sings a song relating to British soldiers, and he tells the story of how the Englishman is a better drinker of beer than the German or the Dutchman. Now, the action of the play is taking place in Crete, so obviously the story has nothing to do with the action, but is related to the audience to whom he is trying to sell the play. He had a weather eye open for the market, and he created a masterpiece at the same time. So the things I am saying are not a judgment, they are an observation. I hesitate to make artistic judgments because it is so much a matter of taste.

● 1245

Mr. Schreyer: Perhaps I did not understand Mr. Danson's question correctly. I would like to ask—keeping ideology out of it—if there is a production which holds up hope of being exportable in terms of quality, like Quentin Durgens? Why should there be any better prospect of being able to export it if it is produced outside the aegis of the CBC?

Mr. Knight: Energy, I think—energy and compulsion. The man has invested in it and he has to get his money back. I think if the CBC took their productions and gave them to a sales organization and said, "You can have 20 per cent of everything you make on this", the CBC might get better results than they are getting now. But I do not think there is any other reason than that. I think the man who has invested his money has got to get his money back or else he is going to die in that business, and this does not apply to the CBC.

[Interpretation]

M. Knight: C'est exact. C'est ainsi que ça marcherait je suppose. Mais je ne cite personne lorsque je dis cela.

En ce qui concerne l'aspect artistique, je pense qu'à cause de la plus grande liberté artistique au sein de la Société, liberté, évidemment, qui dépend des réalisateurs, les gens qui travaillent au sein de la société Radio-Canada sont moins limités. Dans le secteur privé on s'oriente essentiellement vers les marchés et on songe à ce qui est considéré comme acceptable ou inacceptable d'après une sorte de censure personnelle.

Il est probable, par exemple, qu'ils sont plus enclins à se porter vers des choses qui ont eu du succès par le passé, on dira, par exemple, tel ou tel acteur a eu du succès, il y a quelques années, et nous allons l'embaucher, tel écrivain est populaire, nous allons avoir recours à ses services. Tel genre d'histoire a du succès, achetons-la. En d'autres termes ils ont tendance à ne pas risquer l'aventure et à jouer avant tout sur la sécurité. Ce n'est pas forcément mauvais, c'est une observation plutôt qu'un jugement.

William Shakespeare, par exemple, était actionnaire dans un théâtre et il a, incontestablement, rédigé ses pièces pour la place publique. Dans Othello par exemple, il y a une scène, vers le milieu, où Jago essaie d'enivrer un des personnages. Il chante une chanson sur les soldats britanniques et il raconte que: «l'Anglais est un meilleur buveur de bière que l'Allemand ou le Hollandais». Or, l'action se passe en Crète, ce qui veut dire que l'histoire n'a rien à voir avec le sujet, elle est écrite pour l'auditoire auquel elle s'adresse. Il écrivait pour le public et il a créé un chef-d'œuvre. Il ne s'agit pas d'un jugement mais d'une observation. Je ne veux pas formuler de jugement artistique car c'est essentiellement une question de goût.

M. Schreyer: Peut-être n'ai-je pas bien compris la question de M. Danson. Je voudrais vous demander, en laissant toute idéologie de côté, s'il y a une production qui pourrait être exportable, en termes de qualité comme Quentin Durgens? Pourquoi pourrait-on l'exporter davantage si elle est réalisée à l'extérieur de la Société Radio-Canada?

M. Knight: Ce sera sans doute à cause de l'énergie de celui qui a investi de l'argent et qui voudra récupérer ce qu'il a investi. Si la société Radio-Canada remettait sa production à un organisme de vente et si elle lui disait: «Vous aurez 20 p. 100 de tout ce que vous pourrez vendre», il est certain que la société Radio-Canada aurait de meilleurs résultats. Je ne crois pas qu'il y ait d'autres raisons que celle-là. Une personne qui investit de l'argent doit obtenir des résultats, autrement, il va se trouver en faillite. Cela ne s'applique pas à Radio-Canada.

exte]

Mr. Schreyer: It still remains a production that is produced within the CBC. It is just that the technique of selling or pushing or exporting it is changed.

Mr. Knight: If you are asking me to make a judgment, I think the CBC on the whole has made much better products than any independent producer has so far in Canada.

Mr. Schreyer: But they lack sales initiative.

Mr. Knight: That is the problem.

The Vice-Chairman: They are not hungry. Their deficit is always paid by the government.

Mr. Danson: That is right. In other words, you are saying that the private distributor would sell hard, but the private producer has to make sure that it is sold hard.

Mr. Knight: Yes.

Mr. Danson: Because he has got his investment.

Mr. Schreyer: It could be publicly produced and privately distributed.

The Vice-Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Mr. Stanbury: On a point of information. Mr. Danson perhaps would not know because he is not a member of the Committee that we were told that the National Film Board has under way an extensive analysis of the level of production which is economic in their plant, so that they can advise the government of the fullest possible use that can be made of private film makers without preventing the Board from doing its other things, research and development and so on, which everyone seems to agree it should always continue to do. There is a very definite concern within the Film Board and, I know, within the CBC too, of the kind that you have expressed. They say this will take some time, but I am sure the desire is there to try to feed more business to private industry.

An hon. Member: Without harming themselves in this case.

Mr. Stanbury: Well, of course, under the law the government film Commissioner is the government's adviser on film policy. That is his statutory duty, and it is Parliament's statutory duty to look to him for advice. One of the reasons for this Committee is to hear other points of view too.

I wanted to ask whether ACTRA might wish to file with this Committee the kind of information they are going to give to the immigration and external affairs authorities.

[Interprétation]

M. Schreyer: Cela reste une production de Radio-Canada. Vous croyez donc que c'est simplement la technique de vente qui doit être modifiée?

M. Knight: Si vous me demandez un jugement, je crois que la société Radio-Canada a eu jusqu'ici, une bien meilleure production que les réalisateurs indépendants du Canada.

M. Schreyer: Mais Radio-Canada manque d'initiative de vente.

M. Knight: C'est là le problème.

Le vice-président: Ils n'ont pas faim. Le déficit est toujours payé par le gouvernement.

M. Danson: C'est exact. En d'autres termes, vous voulez dire que le distributeur privé fera tout pour vendre, et que le producteur privé verra à ce que la vente soit bien faite.

M. Knight: Oui.

M. Danson: Parce qu'il a son investissement.

M. Schreyer: On pourrait produire publiquement et distribuer par voie privée.

Le vice-président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions?

M. Stanbury: M. Danson ne sait peut-être pas, car il n'est pas membre du Comité, que l'Office national du film a entrepris une analyse économique au niveau de la production pour pouvoir aviser le gouvernement de la meilleure façon d'utiliser les réalisateurs privés sans empêcher la société de faire les autres choses, recherche, développement, etc. dont tout le monde lui reconnaît le droit de continuer. Au sein même de l'Office national du film et de Radio-Canada, certaines inquiétudes ont été exprimées. On a dit que cela prendrait du temps, mais je suis certain qu'ils veulent tous confier plus de travail à l'industrie privée.

Une voix: Sans se faire de tort.

M. Stanbury: Bien entendu, en vertu de la Loi, le commissaire du film gouvernemental est le conseiller du gouvernement en matière de films. C'est son travail normal et il appartient au gouvernement de s'adresser à lui pour recevoir des conseils. Une des raisons pour lesquelles ce comité siège, c'est pour entendre également d'autres points de vue.

Je voulais tout simplement demander si l'ACTRA voulait présenter devant ce Comité les renseignements qu'elle présente à l'Immigration et aux Affaires extérieures.

[Text]

Mr. Knight: By all means, yes.

Mr. Stanbury: Examples of how immigration problems enter into the inhibition of development of Canadian talent.

Mr. Knight: Yes, I think it would be better if we could get a complete picture as it affects all of the performers.

Mr. Stanbury: Yes.

Mr. Knight: And, with your permission, I would ask the Canadian Council of Performing Arts unions to supply their brief, in which actors will be represented. In other words, you will get the complete and total picture rather than just the actors' picture on this one.

Mr. Stanbury: If the Chairman agrees, we might ask you to try to arrange for that to be supplied to the Clerk, and then it might be considered whether or not it should be distributed or added to our proceedings. I wonder, too, whether you would have any hard information on the proportions of commercials produced in Canada as opposed to outside of Canada; the proportions of Canadian artists used in Canadian-produced commercials as opposed to foreign artists—this sort of thing, to which you have referred, but for which you have not given us any statistical information or examples.

● 1250

Mr. Knight: Yes, as I say, the statistics are disputed. Our findings were based upon English language national commercials. We can supply the results of our study on that now and I think it would be only fair to mention that the advertisers have come up with a different set of figures.

Mr. Stanbury: We may hear from them as well.

Mr. Knight: Yes. On the second part of the question, the proportions of Americans used in Canadian productions, we can only do this in terms of money, I believe. I do not think we will be able to do it in terms of heads or people. Our statistics come to us as a result of contributions to a welfare fund which are identified, but they are only identified through a monetary system as being 2 per cent of total fees paid. We can do that in terms of money. I do not think we have the ability to do it in terms of numbers of people as yet.

The Vice-Chairman: Do you have any idea when you can supply this Committee with this information?

Mr. Knight: The end-of-the-year figures, that is to say, the figures for 1968, I think should be available

[Interpretation]

M. Knight: Certainement.

M. Stanbury: Des exemples qui permettraient de voir comment les problèmes d'immigration peuvent limiter l'expansion des talents canadiens?

M. Knight: Oui, je pense qu'il serait mieux d'avoir un tableau général de la façon dont cela affecte les artistes.

M. Stanbury: Oui.

M. Knight: Et, avec votre permission, je demanderais au Conseil canadien des Syndicats des arts d'interprétation de nous fournir un mémoire dans lequel les acteurs seraient représentés. En d'autres termes, vous auriez cette fois une image complète plutôt que le seul point de vue de l'acteur.

M. Stanbury: Si le président est d'accord nous pourrions peut-être vous demander d'essayer de fournir cela au greffier ensuite nous verrons si nous pouvons le distribuer ou l'ajouter à notre compte rendu. Je me demande aussi si vous avez des renseignements précis sur la proportion de commerciaux réalisés au Canada, comparé à ceux réalisés à l'étranger; proportion d'artistes canadiens utilisés dans la réalisation de commerciaux canadiens comparé aux artistes étrangers. Tout ce genre de détails dont vous avez déjà parlé mais dont vous n'avez pas donné d'exemples.

M. Knight: Comme je l'ai dit, nos résultats sont discutables. Nos résultats sont fondés sur les commerciaux en langue anglaise à l'échelle nationale. Nous pouvons vous fournir que les résultats de cette étude et il ne serait que juste de préciser que les agences de publicité ont des chiffres différents.

M. Stanbury: Nous pourrions les entendre elles aussi.

M. Knight: La deuxième partie de la question, savoir la proportion d'artistes américains dans les réalisations canadiennes. Je pense que cela ne peut être fait qu'en terme d'argent. Nous ne pouvons pas le faire en nombre de personnes. Nous avons des statistiques basées sur les cotisations versées à un fonds bien-être, dont les chiffres sont basés sur la rémunération, c'est-à-dire 2 p. 100 des honoraires versés. Nous ne pouvons pas nous baser sur le nombre de personnes alors nous l'avons fait en terme d'argent.

Le vice-président: Savez-vous quand vous pourriez donner ces renseignements?

M. Knight: Les chiffres, à la fin de l'année pour 1968, seront prêts vers la mi-mars. J'essaie de r y the middle of March. I am guessing, and I am relying upon various engagers of our members reporting back to us by that time. But, in the normal course of events, we should be able to supply it by the middle of March.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I have one question in an unrelated area. I take you back to your reference to cablevision—community antenna. I stepped out for a few minutes and you may have elaborated on this. If you have not done so could I ask you, why is it, since this problem has been continuing for a number of years, there has not been any test case taken by your organization to date? I ask that because it seems to be clear enough that in the operation of cablevision some of the operators are really taking advantage of creative works without compensation being paid to the performers, the writers, and so on. It seems to me that existing law provides protection if only the organization would avail itself of the existing law.

Mr. Knight: I cannot really give you the answer to that question. I have been President of this association for a year now and during that period we have made a study of the CATV situation. There are many complications. One of the complications was a case that was heard in a Montreal court which was related to a Montreal Alouettes football game which was relayed back to Montreal during a blackout from Ottawa, I believe. There has been a judgment on that. We are attempting at the moment to have our lawyers study the implication of that judgment as it relates to writers, if in fact it does relate to writers.

Our problem is this: the results of going to court are so uncertain to us at the moment, and the investment that we would have to make in going to court is so great, that the proposition really has not been fully worked out to our satisfaction. But certainly eventually, unless we can get some support from some other direction such as the Canadian Radio—Television Commission, we are going to have to go to court on this one.

Mr. Schreyer: You are not advocating in your statement here some course of action that Parliament could take in this regard are you? You acknowledge the problem, you state the problem, and then you suggest you may have to go to the CRTC or to the courts.

Mr. Knight: We are going to the CRTC and also we are going to go to the Economic Council of Canada which is at the present moment making a study of copyright.

Mr. Stanbury: You have made a submission to the CRTC?

Mr. Knight: No, not really. We have made a first submission to the CRTC where we pointed out to them the difficulties of copyright, but we made no fonder sur le nombre de membres qui présenteront leur rapport à ce moment-là. Nous pourrions donner les chiffres au mois de mars.

M. Schreyer: J'ai encore une question à poser au sujet de la référence que vous avez faite pour la télévision par antenne communautaire. Je voudrais vous demander maintenant pourquoi depuis, puisque ce problème existe depuis bon nombre d'années, pourquoi n'y a-t-il pas eu des causes types présentées par votre organisation devant les tribunaux? Je pose cette question parce qu'il me semble assez clair que pour la télévision par câble, certains opérateurs profitent d'un travail qui a été fait sans verser de compensations aux artistes, aux auteurs etc. . . . A mon avis, la loi prévoit certaines protections, si l'organisation veut bien elle-même satisfaire aux exigences de la loi existante.

M. Knight: Je ne peux pas vraiment répondre à cette question. Je suis président de l'ACTRA depuis un an maintenant et au cours de l'année, nous avons étudié la question de la télévision par câble. Il y a bien des complications; entre autres, une cause présentée devant un tribunal de Montréal au sujet d'une émission de football de l'équipe Alouette relayée par Montréal durant un «black out» d'Ottawa. Le jugement a été rendu. Nous essayons maintenant d'étudier les conséquences de ce jugement vis-à-vis des auteurs.

Voici notre problème: à l'heure actuelle, le résultat d'un recours aux tribunaux est tellement incertain et l'investissement pour y recourir est si élevé que les avantages ne semblent pas suffisants. La proposition n'a pas été étudiée suffisamment. Mais nous irons certainement devant les tribunaux, peut-être aurons-nous l'appui de la Commission de la radio et de la télévision.

M. Schreyer: Parlez-vous des mesures qui devraient être prises par le Parlement? Vous semblez accepter qu'il faudra se présenter soit devant les tribunaux, soit à la Commission de radio et de télévision.

M. Knight: Nous irons devant le Conseil économique du Canada et la Commission de radio et de télévision; le Conseil économique étudie présentement le problème des droits d'auteur.

M. Stanbury: Avez-vous soumis le cas à la CRTC?

M. Knight: Non pas réellement. D'abord, dans notre rapport à la commission, nous avons parlé des difficultés au sujet des droits d'auteur mais nous n'avons recommendation in that brief as to a possible course of action. I think we are going to, and I have written to Mr. Juneau asking for an appropriate date from him. I have not heard from him yet as to what he considers to be the best date to meet him. When I do we will make a presentation which will, I believe, make a recommendation as to a possible course of action.

Mr. Stanbury: Are you also considering asking the CRTC to develop a condition of licence similar to that now present in Australia with respect to—

Mr. Knight: We have already done so.

Mr. Stanbury: You have?

Mr. Knight: We have already done so.

The Vice-Chairman: I apologize for interrupting you. I would like to put a question to the members of the Committee. Do you not think it would be appropriate for this Committee to have a copy of this presentation so we can study it and make recommendations to Parliament? I am under the impression it will be different from the one we have here.

Mr. Knight: Yes, it will. It will make specific recommendations.

Mr. Stanbury: I think it might be a useful practice for an organization like yours, when you make a submission to a body which reports to this Committee, for you to distribute to members of the Committee, through the Chairman or directly, copies of your brief just for our information.

The Vice-Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: Is that what you are suggesting?

The Vice-Chairman: We might eventually be in a position to help you in some of those problems.

Mr. Knight: I think it is an obvious course of action to take. I think certainly we must do it.

Mr. Schreyer: Have you ever asked yourself, Mr. Knight, the question: Why is it that the CRTC does not make it a condition of licence to cablevision operators that such operator abide by the convention rules of copyright. Would this not be the simplest way to deal with the problem?

Mr. Knight: This is one of the questions we will ask in our next brief, obviously. We have already drawn the attention of the CRTC to our opinion about the Copyright Act as it relates to the community antenna operations. We are going to take it a step further in our next brief.

pas fait de recommandation dans ce mémoire à savoir quel genre de mesures devraient être prises. Je pense que nous le ferons. J'ai écrit à M. Juneau pour lui demander quelle date lui conviendrait. Je n'ai pas encore eu de réponse. Je ne sais pas encore quelle serait la date la plus favorable pour le rencontrer. Mais nous présenterons des recommandations sur les mesures à prendre.

M. Stanbury: Voulez-vous aussi demander à la Commission de la radio et de la télévision de songer à établir des conditions en vertu d'une licence semblable à celle actuellement en vigueur en Australie?

M. Knight: Nous l'avons déjà fait.

M. Stanbury: Vous l'avez fait?

M. Knight: Nous l'avons déjà fait.

Le vice-président: Je regrette de vous interrompre; j'aurais voulu poser une question. Pensez-vous messieurs qu'il conviendrait d'avoir une copie de ce mémoire pour l'étudier et faire des recommandations au Parlement? J'ai l'impression qu'il serait différent du texte que nous avons en main.

M. Knight: Oui, ce serait différent. Il y aurait des recommandations précises.

M. Stanbury: Je pense qu'il serait utile pour un organisation comme la vôtre que lorsque vous faites des recommandations à un comité, de distribuer le texte aux membres du comité, comme source de renseignement.

Le vice-président: Oui.

M. Stanbury: C'est là votre intention?

Le vice-président: Peut-être que nous pourrions vous aider plus tard.

M. Knight: Je pense que cela semble la seule chose à faire.

M. Schreyer: Monsieur Knight, vous êtes-vous déjà demandé pourquoi la Commission de la radio et de la télévision n'a pas proposer des conditions pour accorder les permis pour la télévision par câble. Pourquoi ne pas appliquer les droits d'auteur traditionnels à ce genre-là? Ne serait-ce pas là la solution la plus simple?

M. Knight: C'est une question que nous poserons dans notre prochain mémoire. Nous avons déjà attiré l'attention de la Commission sur les opérations de télévision par câble, vis-à-vis de la loi sur les droits d'auteur. Dans notre prochain mémoire, nous irons plus loin.

[Texte]

There are some interesting developments in the United States in this regard, which have not yet been completed, but in their hearings they seem to be coming to the conclusion—nothing has been stated definitely yet—that the community antenna operator will have to go back to the originator of a broadcast and get permission to use it before he can carry it. That seems to be what is going to happen in the United States, which would comply with their copyright law and put the originator of the broadcast in a position to negotiate a fee.

The Vice-Chairman: Any further questions, gentlemen? I want to thank Mr. Knight and Mr. Siren for this very informative testimony.

The next meeting of this Committee will be held next Tuesday afternoon after the Question Period to consider Bill S-5, which is the one about the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act.

[Interprétation]

Il y a des développements intéressants aux États-Unis à cet égard. Ce n'est pas terminé, mais dans les témoignages, rien n'a été précisément défini jusqu'ici, mais on semble conclure que les opérateurs de télévision par câble devront avoir la permission des radiodiffuseurs avant de retransmettre les émissions. Il semble que c'est ce qui arrivera aux États-Unis, ce qui serait conforme à leur Loi sur les droits d'auteur et les producteurs pourraient alors négocier leurs honoraires.

Le vice-président: Avez-vous autre chose à demander messieurs? Eh bien, je veux remercier M. Knight et son collègue qui nous ont fourni des renseignements très utiles. La prochaine réunion du comité aura lieu mardi après-midi, après la période des questions, aux fins d'étudier le Bill S-5 au sujet de la Loi sur les télécommunications d'outre-mer.

EVIDENCE

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I would like to all this meeting to order. We have before us today Bill S-5, an Act to Amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Act. To discuss the Bill with us we have Mr. D. F. Bowie, the President and General Manager immediately to my right; next to him is Mr. Gordon M. Waterhouse, the Vice-President in charge of finances and then Mr. E. Eliassen, the Vice-President in charge of engineering and operations. I have asked Mr. Bowie to make a short statement of explanation and then I will open the meeting to questions from the members. Following that, if we exhaust our questions, perhaps we could run through the bill clause by clause with a view to concluding discussion today and reporting it back to the House.

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I ask you a question?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Mongrain: J'ai devant moi, le budget des dépenses 1969-1970 et la liste de tous les différents services du secrétariat d'État qui relèvent de notre Comité, et je ne vois rien au sujet de l'organisme que représentent ces messieurs. Voudriez-vous m'expliquer de quoi il retourne?

Why is it that I do not see anything about them in this?

The Chairman: Canadian Overseas Telecommunications?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes.

The Chairman: They are in there; there is a loan in there that the government is making to Canadian Overseas Telecommunications.

Mr. Stanbury: Not under the Secretary of State; that is what Mr. Mongrain is referring to.

The Chairman: The reason they are appearing before us is because we have become the Committee to which all matters in the federal government dealing with communications are referred. We receive all of these. These gentlemen are in the business of providing com-

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le mardi 25 février 1969.

Le président: Messieurs, la séance est ouverte. Nous sommes saisis du Bill S-5, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines.

Pour en discuter, nous avons ici M. D. F. Bowie, à ma droite, qui est le président et le directeur général. A ses côtés, il y a M. Gordon M. Waterhouse, vice-président (Finances) et M. E. Eliassen, vice-président (Division du génie et des opérations). J'ai demandé à M. Bowie de faire un bref exposé d'explication, et j'inviterai ensuite les députés à poser des questions. Après avoir écouté les questions, nous pourrions faire une étude article par article du Bill, afin de terminer la discussion aujourd'hui et de le confier à la Chambre.

Mr. Mongrain: Sur un point d'ordre, monsieur le président, puis-je vous poser une question?

Le président: Oui.

Mr. Mongrain: I have before me here the Estimates for 1969-70 and the list of all the various services of the Secretary of State which are under our Committee, and I see nothing mentioned regarding the body which these gentlemen represent. Can you explain to me what it is all about?

Pourquoi n'y a-t-il rien à ce sujet ici?

Le président: La Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines?

Mr. Mongrain: Oui.

Le président: Il y a un prêt que le gouvernement assure à cette Société.

Mr. Stanbury: Mais pas sans la rubrique du Secrétariat d'État; c'est ce à quoi M. Mongrain veut en venir.

Le président: La raison de leur présence ici, c'est que nous sommes le comité auquel toutes les questions se rapportant aux communications sont renvoyées. Ces messieurs s'occupent des services de Communications et voilà pourquoi ils sont ici.

munication services and does come under this particular...

Mr. Mongrain: Normally they come under Transport.

The Chairman: They used to, but it has been transferred to this Committee.

Mr. Mongrain: It has been transferred to this Committee and it is so new that it does not appear. I see; that will be the new department, I suppose.

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

The Chairman: You may have noticed from our schedule that Mr. Kierans will be appearing on March 4 and 6.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

The Chairman: I shall call on Mr. Bowie now to make a statement.

Mr. D. F. Bowie (President and General Manager, Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The object of these amendments to the COTC, I think, is fairly simple. The first amendment refers to the elimination of the reference to service between the mainland of Canada and Newfoundland. When the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation Act was first written, Newfoundland was an overseas territory. It was a separate dominion, and by the time the Act had passed through the Houses of Parliament and Newfoundland had come into Confederation COTC, under the terms of its Act, was required to acquire the overseas assets of the Canadian Marconi Company, which were located at Drummondville and Yamachiche in the Province of Quebec.

In the middle of all these overseas assets there still remains this particular asset of providing service with Newfoundland, and it was not physically or practically possible to expropriate 99 per cent of the assets and leave this one little aerial standing up in the middle of the territory of Drummondville and Yamachiche and so the whole of the assets were expropriated.

From 1950 onwards COTC continued to provide the service with Newfoundland and we did our best to improve it, and I believe that we did do that. In fact, we made substantial strides in that direction. Eventually, after negotiations with the Canadian National Telecommunications, we transferred this operation to the CNT and since then that has

• 1545

[Interpretation]

M. Mongrain: Normalement, ces questions relèvent des Transports.

Le président: Autrefois, mais ils relèvent maintenant de nous.

M. Mongrain: Et c'est tellement récent qu'ils n'y paraissent pas. Il y aura le nouveau ministère, je suppose.

Le président: C'est exact.

M. Mongrain: Merci.

Le président: Vous avez dû remarquer sur notre liste que M. Kierans comparaitra devant nous le 4 et le 6 mars.

M. Mongrain: Merci.

Le président: Je demande à M. Bowie de faire son exposé.

M. D. F. Bowie (Président et directeur général de la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines): Je vous remercie monsieur le président, pour ce qui est de l'amendement à la Loi constituant la SCTT, il est très simple. Il s'agit en premier lieu de faire disparaître le passage visant le service reliant le continent canadien à Terre-Neuve. Lorsque la loi créant la société a été rédigée, Terre-Neuve était un territoire d'outre-mer. Terre-Neuve était un dominion distinct, et lorsque la loi a été adoptée par le Parlement et que Terre-Neuve est entrée dans la confédération, la SCTT a dû, en vertu des dispositions de la Loi, acquérir les avoirs outre-mer de la Canadian Marconi company situés à Drummondville et Yamachiche dans la province de Québec.

Tous ces avoirs outre-mer comprenaient le service assuré à Terre-Neuve et il n'était pas possible d'exproprier 99 p. 100 des biens et de laisser cette pauvre petite antenne entre Drummondville et Yamachiche. On a donc tout exproprié.

Alors, à partir de 1950, notre Société a continué d'assurer les services à Terre-Neuve et nous faisons notre possible pour l'améliorer et je crois que nous avons réussi. Nous avons fait des progrès notables en ce sens. Et, un jour, après des négociations avec le Service de télécommunications du Canadian National nous avons confié cette activité au CNT. Le been done. Canadian National now operate that service and therefore any reference in the COTC Act to Newfoundland ought to be removed in order to update the Act and bring us into the factual condition under which we are now operating.

The other recommendation is the removal of the restriction on the Board of Directors which prevents their being able to authorize any expenditure in excess of $50,000 without a special Order in Council. In 1950 I guess $50,000 was a figure of some importance, and I am not suggesting that it is not a figure of some importance at the present time, but in this day and age in the telecommunications field in particular I can only say from my own personal experience that there is not much telecommunications equipment you can buy for $50,000 these days.

The process of getting an Order in Council involves a lot of work by a lot of people and we believe that it is proper in present circumstances that this figure should be substantially larger. We have a very excellent Board of Directors; they are all sound, solid businessmen who do not allow anybody to be extravagant as I know from lots of experience. I have been the President since 1951 and we believe that it would certainly facilitate our operations and also eliminate a lot of work in Ottawa if the present restriction of not being able to make an expenditure of more than $50,000 without reference to Governor in Council were changed.

Those two things, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, are the two points of the proposals in the amendments to the COTC Act. I do not think it is necessary for me to say any more at this point but I would be very glad either to answer questions myself or, with the assistance of Mr. Waterhouse and Mr. Eliassen, answer any other questions that the Committee might wish to ask.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Bowie. I call on Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Bowie whether the COTC contemplates a major extension of its activity. I am thinking of the reference to your overriding jurisdiction in the field of satellites which I notice here in the Bill. Is this Act an emanation of your concept of increased expenditures and an increasing role of activities?

Mr. Bowie: I do not think our role will be increasing at all, but with the development of satellites undoubtedly we shall be called upon to make some substantially increased expenditures in that respect but all these expendi-

[Interprétation]

Canadien National assure maintenant ce service, alors tous les passages de la Loi qui visent Terre-Neuve doivent être supprimés afin de mettre la Loi à jour.

L'autre recommandation vise à faire disparaître la restriction qui empêchait le Conseil d'administration à autoriser des dépenses dépassant $50,000, sans un décret en conseil. En 1950, je suppose que $50,000 était une somme considérable, et je ne dis pas que c'est un chiffre insignifiant à l'heure actuelle, mais de nos jours et dans le domaine des télécommunications en particulier, je puis dire d'après mon expérience personnelle, qu'on ne peut pas acheter beaucoup de matériel de télécommunication pour $50,000.

La procédure pour obtenir un décret en conseil exige beaucoup d'efforts d'un grand nombre de personnes et nous estimons que dans les circonstances, ce chiffre devrait être majoré considérablement. Nous avons un Conseil d'administration très compétent. Ce sont des hommes d'affaires sûrs et habiles qui ne permettent pas d'extravagances. J'en suis le président depuis 1951, et nous estimons que cela facilitera notre travail et supprimera beaucoup de formalités à Ottawa, si cette restriction nous empêchant de faire une dépense de plus de $50,000 sans la permission du gouverneur en conseil, était supprimée.

Ces deux choses sont les deux faits saillants des amendements proposés à la Loi sur la SCTT. Il n'est point nécessaire d'ajouter davantage. Je serais heureux de répondre, avec M. Waterhouse et M. Eliassen aux questions des membres du comité.

Le président: Je vous remercie, monsieur Bowie. M. Macquarrie?

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président, je voudrais demander à M. Bowie si la SCTT envisage d'étendre considérablement son activité? Et je parle surtout de votre compétence prépondérante dans le domaine des satellites dont il est question ici. Cette Loi reflète-t-elle votre notion des dépenses accrues et l'accroissement de votre rôle?

M. Bowie: Notre rôle ne sera pas intensifié pour autant. Avec l'avènement des satellites, on nous demandera de faire des dépenses accrues dans ce domaine. Mais toutes ces dépenses, je dois dire, tous nos efforts relatifs tures and I feel I should say that everything that we do in relation to the international satellite organization—and I will stress the point «international» because there is a big conference going on in Washington right now and I leave from here tonight to go there tomorrow morning—will receive the government's approval before we get too deeply involved in it or, in fact, involved in it any more than we are at the present time.

Nevertheless, I think the Committee might find it easily understandable that in this field—I would not want to say that it is an unknown field at the present time—new things are developing all the time, and I think quite clearly it is in the Canadian interest that we go along with what is decided on an international basis.

Precisely what sort of expense will be involved in this we do not know at the present time, but I can say that Canada has been a member of the committee that has been functioning since 1964 and I have been the official member of the committee, and when I have not been able to go to the committee meetings Mr. Eliassen has gone on my behalf, and he is sitting two doors away from me here.

It is an 18-member committee and I can assure you that we have a very strong and hard look at the expenditures which were made.

Perhaps another point of great importance where Canada and the Corporation is concerned is Mr. Waterhouse, who is sitting on my right. He is chairman of the subcommittee on finance of the INTELSAT organization, and we certainly do everything within our power to keep the expenditures on this very fascinating subject of satellites within reasonable bounds. However, undoubtedly we shall be called upon to make further expenditures in the near future. This has to be a continuing job.

Just a few weeks ago the third satellite of the INTELSAT III series was launched. First of all we had Early Bird, which was—as I think is probably well known to everybody around here—a limited capacity satellite and which was called INTELSAT I. Then we had INTELSAT II, which was a supporting system to the Early Bird system. Recently the INTELSAT III went up and it provides 1,200 circuits instead of the 240 in the original Early Bird system.

The INTELSAT IV series of satellites should be launched in 1971 and they will produce, let us say, up to 10,000 circuits across à l'organisation internationale des satellites, et je souligne «internationale» parce qu'il y a une conférence en cours à Washington et je compte y assister demain matin, auront l'approbation du gouvernement avant de participer à cette entreprise et d'y contribuer davantage.

Néanmoins, le comité comprendra facile-ment que dans ce domaine, et je ne dis pas que c'est un domaine inconnu à l'heure actuelle, de nouveaux événements surviennent tout le temps. Il est dans l'intérêt du Canada que nous donnions suite aux décisions prises sur le plan international.

Nous ne savons pas précisément quelles dépenses seront faites à cette fin, mais le Canada est un membre de la commission qui fonctionne depuis 1964. Je suis membre officiel de cette commission, et lorsque je ne peux pas assister aux réunions de la commission, M. Eliassen qui est assis à ma droite y participe.

C'est une Commission de 18 membres et je puis vous assurer que nous examinons attentivement les dépenses qui ont été faites.

Un autre point important, pour le Canada et pour la Société, c'est que M. Waterhouse, assis à ma droite, est président du sous-comité des finances de l'Organisation internationale des satellites (INTELSAT). Et nous faisons tout notre possible pour maintenir les dépenses de ce sujet fascinant dans des limites raisonnables. Cependant, nous devrons sans doute accroître nos dépenses dans un proche avenir. Ce doit être un effort permanent.

Il y a seulement quelques semaines, le troisième satellite de la série INTELSAT III a été lancé. Tout d'abord, nous avons eu l'Oiseau matinal, dont vous avez je pense tout entendu parler, c'était un satellite aux possibilités limitées, appelé INTELSAT I. Après on a eu INTELSAT II qui était un système de soutien à l'Oiseau matinal. Récemment l'INTELSAT III a été lancé, il permet d'utiliser 1200 circuits contre 240 au système de l'Oiseau matinal.

La série de satellites INTELSAT IV devrait être lancée vers 1971 et produira, disons, jusqu'à 10,000 canaux à travers l'Atlantique the Atlantic. Whilst the satellite itself is going to cost more money the cost per circuit will come down. I think this is the important thing to remember where satellites are concerned, that they are able to produce a very large number of circuits, so one's operating costs generally tend to come down. We would hope that they will come down quite substantially, and as a consequence of that we would hope the international rates will come down. Does that answer your question, Mr. Macquarrie?

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes, that is helpful. May I ask, as a matter of interest, if you could give me a rough estimate in dollars how much it costs the COTC to perform what I will call the Canadian role in INTELSAT.

Mr. Bowie: Do you mean from an operating point of view, sir, or capital investment?

Mr. Macquarrie: I would be interested in both, yes.

Mr. Bowie: I think the capital investment is in the neighbourhood of about $4 million at the present time. If I might refer this to Mr. Waterhouse, he would...

Mr. Gordon M. Waterhouse (Vice President Finances) Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation: Yes, sir. I think it is a loser at this time to $5 million. We are anticipating a further capital expenditure in the fiscal year 1969-70 of $2 million. This is based on Canada's quota in the international consortium of just about 3¼ per cent.

We absorb the same percentage of the operating costs of the system; that is, the cost of maintaining the space segment only which, as I say, is 3¼ per cent of the cost. Against that, of course, we receive 3¼ per cent of the revenue earned by the international consortium, INTELSAT, for the lease of these circuits. Mr. Bowie mentioned the 240 and upwards of 10,000 circuits in the ones coming up in 1971. These are then leased to the users. The revenue from this is redistributed to the owners in the ratio in which they own the system.

So, we contribute towards the cost of operating the system, depreciation, interest and capital, of 3¼ per cent of the total cost—both capital and operating—and we get back our share of the revenue earned.

[Interprétation]

Bien que le satellite lui-même coûtera plus d'argent, le coût par circuit sera abaissé. C'est là le facteur important, dont il faut se rappeler dans le cas des satellites, ils peuvent produire un grand nombre de circuits, ce qui a tendance à en abaisser le coût. Et nous espérons qu'il s'abaissera considérablement et en conséquence, nous espérons que les tarifs internationaux vont baisser. Cela répond-il à votre question, monsieur Macquarrie?

M. Macquarrie: Oui ça aide. Pourrais-je vous demander à titre de renseignement, le coût approximatif afférant à la Société pour exécuter ce que j'appellerais le rôle canadien dans le cadre de l'INTELSAT?

M. Bowie: Vous parlez sur le plan de l'exploitation ou sur le plan des investissements?

M. Macquarrie: Je m'intéresse aux deux éléments.

M. Bowie: Je pense que les immobilisations voisinent les 4 millions de dollars à l'heure actuelle. Si M. Waterhouse pouvait répondre à cette question...

M. Gordon M. Waterhouse (Vice-président Finances) à la Société canadienne de télécommunications transmarines: Oui, monsieur. Je pense qu'à l'heure actuelle nous approchons de 5 millions de dollars. Nous comptons faire dans la nouvelle année financière 1969-1970, 2 millions de dollars supplémentaires d'investissements. Ce montant est calculé d'après la quote-part attribuée au Canada au consortium international, elle s'établit à environ 3¼ p. 100.

Nous absorbons le même pourcentage des frais d'exploitation du système, c'est-à-dire du coût de maintien du secteur spatial, c'est je l'ai dit 3¼ p. 100 des frais. En contrepartie nous recevons 3¼ p. 100 des recettes du consortium international INTELSAT pour la location des circuits. M. Bowie a mentionné que ces circuits passeraient de 240 à 10,000 en 1971. Ils sont loués aux utilisateurs. Les revenus sont redistribués aux propriétaires, dans la proportion de leur participation au système.

Donc, nous contribuons aux frais d'exploitation du système, à la dépréciation et à l'amortissement des capitaux à raison de 3¼ p. 100 du coût total et nous obtenons notre part des recettes.

Mr. Mongrain: A supplementary, Mr. Chairman. How many countries are involved in this scheme?

Mr. Bowie: At the present time, Mr. Chairman, there are 65 members of the international consortium. Perhaps it is 66 today, I am not quite sure, but they keep coming in. At the current meeting in Washington it is anticipated there will be about 80 nations taking part. We certainly hope that the Russians and the countries behind the Iron Curtain will be present. Some of them are already there.

Mr. Mongrain: Is France a member?

Mr. Bowie: France is a member.

Mr. Macquarrie: The other day the Postmaster General, when he was asked about who would represent the federal government at the satellite conference in Washington on February 24, replied:

A team of high officials from my department and the External Affairs Department

I presume he was embracing you people in the first part of that sentence.

Mr. Bowie: That is true, Mr. Macquarrie, and had it not been for this meeting here today I would be in Washington right now, sir.

Mr. Macquarrie: I was upset that the COTC was not mentioned at that stage of the game. I was hoping to be there.

Mr. Bowie: One simply has to hope, if I may put it that way, that at the present time the conference will be more concerned with procedures and practical matters.

Mr. Macquarrie: Right. I am very much impressed with the development of your company and its seeming competence in more than one field, if I may say so. When did you last have a deficit in your annual operations?

Mr. Bowie: Mr. Macquarrie, I can say—and I stick my chest out as far as the door at the end of the room—that we have never had a deficit, sir.

Mr. Macquarrie: I could not find one in my research so I am interested in that. Therefore your problem is not one of where you lay your hand on the next dollar, but there are internal procedures here.

[Interpretation]

M. Mongrain: Une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président, combien de pays participent à cette entreprise?

M. Bowie: Actuellement, monsieur le président, il y a 65 membres au consortium international. Peut-être qu'aujourd'hui ce chiffre est-il monté à 66, je l'ignore, il y a toujours de nouveaux membres qui viennent s'y ajouter. Au cours de la séance de Washington, on prévoit qu'il y aura 80 nations participantes. Nous espérons que les Russes et les pays situés derrière le Rideau de fer seront présents. Certains d'entre eux sont déjà membres.

M. Mongrain: Est-ce que la France est membre?

M. Bowie: La France est membre.

M. Macquarrie: L'autre jour, lorsqu'on a demandé au ministre des Postes qui représenterait le gouvernement fédéral à la conférence à Washington le 24 février, il a dit:

Une équipe de hauts fonctionnaires de mon ministère et du ministère des Affaires extérieures.

J'espère que dans la première partie de la réponse, il visait, messieurs, votre Société.

M. Bowie: C'est vrai, monsieur Macquarrie. Et ne serait-ce cette séance d'aujourd'hui, j'irais à Washington maintenant.

M. Macquarrie: J'ai été surpris qu'on n'ait pas mentionné la Société à ce moment. J'espère y être.

M. Bowie: On ne peut qu'espérer, si je peux m'exprimer ainsi, que la conférence, à l'heure actuelle, se préoccupera plutôt de procédure et de questions techniques.

M. Macquarrie: J'admire beaucoup l'essor de votre compagnie qui semble qualifiée dans plus d'un domaine. A quand remonte le dernier déficit d'exploitation?

M. Bowie: M. Macquarrie, je peux dire, et je m'en porte garant, que nous n'avons jamais eu de déficit.

M. Macquarrie: Je n'en avais pas trouvé dans mes recherches. Voilà pourquoi ça m'intéressait. En conséquence, vous ne connaissez pas de problème de financement, ce sont plutôt des problèmes de comptabilité interne.

[Texte]

Mr. Bowie: As far as one can foresee in any line of business a deficit is not foreseeable at all.

The Chairman: On the question of dollars, sir, I notice in the estimates that the government will be making a loan to you of about $5 million and last year there was a loan of $10.5 million. Could you explain to us what these loans are for?

Mr. Bowie: May I start off with the first half of that question first, Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to tell this Committee that although when we made the main estimates—and I think the Committee will remember that we are called upon to make these estimates in the month of August and we have to report them to the government in October—the crystal ball was just a little bit hazy so we said we would require about $5 million, but it now transpires that during the coming year we shall not be asking the government for a nickel. We have funds of our own and adequate revenues coming in to take care of that problem, so I hope we shall not be a burden on the country during the next 12 months.

The Chairman: It is a very unusual situation for a Crown corporation.

Mr. Macquarrie: How much administrative difficulty are you having in coping with the present legislation? What you say about the smallness of the figure is certainly sound. Is this a burden to your administration? Are you constantly going through this routine?

Mr. Bowie: Yes. I would not call it a difficulty; it is a burden, Mr. Macquarrie. As I said a little earlier, when you want to buy a piece of telecommunications equipment, unless you are getting into something terribly small these days you cannot buy it for $50 thousand, and sometimes we need this stuff fairly quickly.

One has to bear in mind that in the changing atmosphere brought about by the introduction of satellites the equipment that you have now for any particular operations may not be suitable for the satellite operation, so I think I may be excused if I say in order to keep pace with our American cousins, who are just a little bit ahead of us on a lot of these things because they are perhaps a bit closer to it than we are, we have an urgent need to buy equipment. So, the procedure at the present time is that I have to get Board

[Interprétation]

M. Bowie: Dans la mesure où nous pouvons le prévoir, aucun déficit n'est prévu.

Le président: Sur la question financière, monsieur, je remarque dans les prévisions budgétaires que le gouvernement vous fera un prêt d'environ 5 millions de dollars, et l'année dernière, le prêt a été de $10.5 millions. Pourriez-vous expliquer l'utilisation de ces prêts?

M. Bowie: Puis-je commencer par répondre à la première moitié de la question, monsieur le président? Je suis heureux de dire au comité que bien que nous ayons fait nos prévisions principales, le comité se rappellera qu'on nous avait demandé de le faire au mois d'août et de présenter notre rapport au gouvernement en octobre, à un moment où la boule de cristal était encore fumeuse, ce qui nous avait incité à demander 5 millions de dollars, je peux dire maintenant que nous ne demanderons pas un sou au gouvernement l'année prochaine. Nous avons des fonds propres et nous aurons des recettes qui pourront régler ce problème, nous espérons donc ne rien imposer au pays pendant les douze prochains mois.

Le président: C'est une situation plutôt insolite pour une compagnie de la Couronne.

M. Macquarrie: Avez-vous beaucoup de problèmes administratifs pour observer les dispositions de la loi telle qu'elle existe actuellement? Ce que vous dites de la faiblesse des chiffres est certainement vrai. Est-ce un poids pour votre administration? Devez-vous toujours suivre cette routine?

M. Bowie: Bien sûr, je n'appellerais pas ça un problème ou un fardeau, monsieur Macquarrie. Comme je l'expliquais plus tôt, lorsque vous voulez acheter un appareil de télécommunication, à moins que cet appareil ne soit très petit, on ne peut l'acheter pour $50,000, et parfois nous avons besoin de ces appareils assez rapidement.

On doit se rappeler que dans l'évolution de ce domaine, avec l'avènement de satellites, le matériel que nous avons maintenant pour un service particulier peut ne pas être adaptable au système par satellite. C'est pourquoi, on m'excusera si je dis que nous nous maintenons au niveau de nos voisins américains, qui nous dépassent dans ce domaine, nous avons un besoin urgent de matériel. A l'heure actuelle, je dois obtenir l'approbation du Conseil pour demander au ministre l'autorisation de dépenser quelque argent.

approval to make a submission to the Minister to spend a sum of money.

If something costs $50,001 the directors cannot authorize me to buy it without reference to the Governor in Council, certainly, and a submission to the Minister. The Minister then has his legal advisers in the department prepare a suitable submission to the Treasury Board, which studies it, and then it goes to Cabinet and from there to the Governor in Council for approval. We provide at least 25 copies of this thing.

We feel that we have grown up and have proved ourselves and that we ought to have some freedom to go out and buy necessary equipment and tools to do the job which, by act of Parliament, we have been told to do.

Mr. Macquarrie: If the figure were 500,000 instead of 50,000 would that ease your burden? I think you accept the word "burden" rather than "difficulty".

Mr. Bowie: That would help very considerably, yes. Speaking for the Corporation, my only other comment on that is that I understand that the desire is to bring the COTC into line with the Financial Administration Act which provides that the Governor in Council shall, from time to time, prescribe the amounts that will be allowed. This, I think, is the way the Bill has been worded.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I will pass, because others may be interested. At any appropriate time an amendment may be proposed and I want it understood that the amendment is emanating from the confidence we have in the Corporation but will indicate that we are not so enamoured of the practices of the Financial Administration Act. This will come at a later date. I do not want to do anything today which might delay this meeting, because we want you to go to Washington. We will find another avenue in another place.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, can the witness say what level the Governor in Council intends to set under the terms of the Bill?

Mr. Bowie: Pardon me?

Mr. Schreyer: Under the terms of Bill S-5, the one now before us, the Governor in Council will set the limit beyond which the Corporation cannot spend money.

Mr. Bowie: Yes.

Mr. Schreyer: What is that level? Do you have any idea?

[Interpretation]

Si quelque chose coûte $50,001, les directeurs ne peuvent m'autoriser à l'acheter sans en demander l'autorisation au Gouverneur en conseil, et sans doute faire une demande au ministre. Le ministre demande à ses conseillers juridiques de préparer la demande qui sera soumise au Conseil du trésor qui l'examine; elle est ensuite transmise au cabinet et au gouverneur en conseil. Nous en soumettons 25 exemplaires.

Nous estimons que nous sommes assez adultes, et que nous avons assez prouvé ce que nous pouvons faire pour qu'on nous accorde la liberté d'acheter le matériel et les outils nécessaires pour exécuter les travaux qui nous sont confiés.

M. Macquarrie: Si les chiffres étaient de $500,000 au lieu de $50,000, est-ce que cela allégerait votre fardeau? Je crois que vous préférez «fardeau» à «difficulté».

M. Bowie: Cela nous aiderait, évidemment, beaucoup. Au nom de la Société, le seul autre commentaire que j'aimerais faire est celui-ci: je sais que l'on veut que notre Société fonctionne selon les normes établies par la Loi sur l'administration financière, et selon lesquelles le gouverneur en conseil établit, de temps à autre, les montants qui seront alloués. C'est ce que dit le texte de loi, je crois.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président, je passe car il y a peut-être d'autres membres qui voudraient poser des questions. En temps et lieu, un amendement pourrait être soumis, et je désire signaler qu'il découlerait de la confiance que nous avons en cette Société et qu'il démontrerait que nous n'aimons pas trop les pratiques établies d'après la Loi sur l'administration financière. Cet amendement sera introduit plus tard. Je ne veux rien faire aujourd'hui qui puisse retarder cette réunion. Nous trouverons certainement d'autres voies.

M. Schreyer: Monsieur le président, je voudrais demander au témoin s'il connaît le montant que le gouverneur en conseil entend établir?

M. Bowie: Pardon?

M. Schreyer: Dans le cadre du Bill S-5 qui nous est présentement soumis, le gouverneur en conseil fixera le plafond au dessus duquel la société ne peut pas dépenser d'argent?

M. Bowie: Oui.

M. Schreyer: Quel est ce niveau? Est-ce que vous en avez une idée?

[Texte]

Mr. Bowie: I have no idea at all.

Mr. Schreyer: In a sense, my question is supplementary to Mr. Macquarrie's. If it is a burden—and I can certainly agree that it would be—to have to get special approval every time you have to make an expenditure in excess of $50,000, it seems to me to be important to know what level the Governor in Council will set under the authority of this Bill. If it is merely going to increase it to $10,000 it may not really solve your problem at all.

• 1605

Mr. Bowie: I would agree with you, Mr. Schreyer, and I hope it would not be less than the figure that Mr. Macquarrie has just mentioned. In this day and age, with a competent board of directors, it should be...

The Chairman: Mr. Bowie, do you know what figure would apply to a Crown corporation such as CNR, or Air Canada, or Atomic Energy, or Polymer, under this section of the Financial Administration Act?

Mr. Bowie: I do not know.

Mr. Schreyer: That was to be my next question.

The Chairman: I am sorry.

Mr. Schreyer: It seems to me, in a sense, that if the corporation has not been incurring any deficit it is almost a proprietary Crown corporation and that there should therefore be no limitation on the amount it can expend.

The Chairman: Perhaps the Committee might discuss this when we deal with the clause. Someone may want to move an amendment relative to this particular aspect.

Mr. Comeau: I have a supplementary, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Comeau?

Mr. Comeau: As I understand it, this Corporation has never had a deficit, but you have been granted loans by the government?

Mr. Bowie: That is right.

Mr. Comeau: Has this all been...

Mr. Bowie: It has not all been paid back, but it is being paid back over the years; and, hopefully, over the years we shall continue to pay back more. This coming year, for instance, we are not borrowing any money and to be able to make a substantial return on the amount that we have borrowed from

[Interprétation]

M. Bowie: Je n'ai absolument aucune idée.

M. Schreyer: Ma question est une question supplémentaire, en fait.

Si c'est un fardeau, et je reconnais que ce serait un fardeau que d'avoir à obtenir une approbation spéciale chaque fois que vous dépensez plus que $50,000, il me semble important de savoir quel est le niveau que choisira le gouverneur en conseil lorsqu'il appliquera ce bill. Si ce montant passe à $100,000 je ne crois pas que ce soit la solution à vos difficultés.

M. Bowie: Je suis d'accord avec vous, monsieur Schreyer et j'espère que ce ne sera pas moins que ce qu'a suggéré M. Macquarrie. Car, je pense qu'à notre époque...

Le président: Est-ce que vous savez, par exemple, quel est le plafond pour les sociétés de la Couronne telles que les Chemins de fers nationaux, Air Canada, Atomic Energy, Polymer?

M. Bowie: Je ne sais pas.

M. Schreyer: C'était ma question suivante.

Le président: Je m'excuse.

M. Schreyer: Je pense que pour une société qui n'a pas enregistré de déficit, il ne devrait pas y avoir de plafond.

Le président: C'est une question que l'on pourra peut-être discuter lorsqu'on étudiera cet article. A ce moment-là, un membre du Comité pourrait vouloir présenter un amendement.

M. Comeau: J'ai une question supplémentaire.

Le président: Allez-y.

M. Comeau: Dois-je comprendre que cette Société n'a jamais encouru de déficit et qu'elle a obtenu des prêts du gouvernement?

M. Bowie: Oui.

M. Comeau: Et, toutes ces dettes ont été...

M. Bowie: Tout n'a pas été remboursé. Nous espérons, à mesure que les années passeront, que nous pourrions en rembourser toujours davantage. Cette année, par exemple, nous n'empruntons rien mais nous espérons pouvoir faire un remboursement important sur la somme que nous avons empruntée à the government. We have figures on this. We expect to repay about $4 million this year.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Chairman, I am quite ignorant on this. May I ask, briefly, where your income is coming from?

Mr. Bowie: All the overseas telephone services, Telex services and about 75 per cent of the telegraph services overseas. Income comes strictly from overseas services.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: In its practical effect on you and on the Corporation would it make any difference if the limitation of, say, $500,000 were set by statute or by Order in Council?

Mr. Bowie: I do not think it would make any difference to us, no.

The Chairman: If it is set by Order in Council it can be changed much more quickly than if it is set by statute, which tends to freeze it.

Mr. Schreyer: Yes; but the burden to the Corporation—to use Mr. Bowie's term—is the same if he has to make special application, or representation, to the Governor in Council each time an expenditure in excess of that is necessary.

The Chairman: Yes, that is true; but if you do get into a situation where even $500,000 is no longer an adequate amount, the insertion of a figure in Section 3 of the Act would mean that you would have to come to the House of Commons to change it. Whereas, if it is left up to the Governor in Council it can be done by passing an order on it.

Mr. Schreyer: Oh, yes.

The Chairman: It is a much more flexible system.

Mr. Schreyer: That simply brings me back to the point that unless we know what amount the Cabinet has in mind it is really difficult for us to know whether we should approve this passing of authority from statute to the Governor in Council.

I have one further question, Mr. Chairman. Is it the COTC that operates the ground receiving station at Mill Village in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Bowie: We do.

Mr. Schreyer: What is the annual cost of operating that facility, and is it the only ground receiving station that the Corporation operates?

[Interpretation]

l'État. Nous espérons rembourser quatre millions, cette année.

M. Comeau: Monsieur le président, j'ignore à peu près tout en ce domaine. Est-ce que je peux vous demander d'où viennent vos recettes?

M. Bowie: Tous les services téléphoniques, le service de Telex, et environ 75 p. 100 des services télégraphiques d'outre-mer. Nos revenus nous viennent uniquement de ces services d'outre-mer.

Le président: Monsieur Schreyer.

M. Schreyer: Du point de vue pratique, pour vous et votre société, vous importe-t-il que le plafond soit fixé par règlement ou par arrêté en conseil?

M. Bowie: Cela nous importe peu.

Le président: Si ce plafond était fixé par un arrêté en conseil, il pourrait être modifié beaucoup plus rapidement.

M. Schreyer: En fait, le fardeau pour la Société est le même si elle doit faire des démarches spéciales chaque fois qu'elle désire dépenser davantage.

Le président: C'est vrai si vous en arrivez au point où le plafond de $500,000 est rendu inadéquat, l'insertion de ce montant à l'article 3 vous obligera à vous adresser aux Communes pour en demander la modification. Tandis que si le montant est fixé par le gouverneur en conseil, vous n'avez qu'à obtenir un arrêté en conseil pour le modifier.

M. Schreyer: C'est vrai.

Le président: Ce système est beaucoup plus flexible.

M. Schreyer: Mais j'en reviens à ceci: si nous ignorons le montant que le cabinet entend fixer, il nous est difficile de nous prononcer sur le changement suggéré.

Je désire poser une autre question, monsieur le président. Est-ce votre Société qui exploite la station terrestre de Mill Village, en Nouvelle-Écosse?

M. Bowie: Oui.

M. Schreyer: Quel est le coût annuel d'exploitation de ces installations? S'agit-il de la seule station terrestre que vous exploitez?

[Texte]

Mr. Bowie: We have a new air station at Mill Village at the moment. It opened about three weeks ago. The first one was the one put up by the Department of Transport for research and experimental purposes, and the DOTC put in the necessary equipment to make this commercially operational. There are many things you have to do to make it function commercially as compared with its use strictly on research and experiment.

1610

Thanks to the good nature of the Department of Transport we were allowed to use that on the basis of $1 a year until we built up our own earth station. This we did, and it is now operating and is connecting to the new Intelsat III satellite which went up at just about the same time.

The time will come, of course, when we shall have to have another station on the West Coast. This is very necessary.

Mr. Schreyer: I believe that 10 days or two weeks ago Intelsat sent up a satellite to serve the Pacific area. You do not have a ground receiving station there. I take it that is why the Corporation cannot avail itself of the service of that...

Mr. Bowie: We are using it. We are connecting into the Pacific satellite through the American earth station in the State of Washington. But we do not want to do that for too long.

Mr. Schreyer: Can you tell me, roughly, when the Corporation intends to proceed with the construction of a ground receiving station on the West Coast?

Mr. Bowie: We are looking at sites or beginning to look at sites as soon as the snow gets off the ground this year.

Mr. Schreyer: I see. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCleave: I might note that there is no snow on the ground in Nova Scotia at all this year. Perhaps they should build a second one here as well.

Mr. Bowie: The member from Nova Scotia will find out that if we put a second station in Nova Scotia it would not see the satellite over the Pacific, so I am sorry we cannot do it. It would make life much easier if we could.

Mr. Schreyer: That satisfies me, thank you.

Mr. McCleave: I wanted to do that before Mr. Schreyer got in his plug to put it in his own riding.

[Interprétation]

M. Bowie: Nous avons inauguré une nouvelle station à Mill Village, il y a environ trois semaines. La première avait été aménagée par le ministère des Transports à des fins de recherches. Nous avons installé l'équipement nécessaire pour qu'elle soit rentable sur le plan commercial, conversion qui a nécessité de nombreux travaux.

Le ministère des Transports l'a mise à notre disposition, moyennant un loyer annuel de un dollar, jusqu'à ce que nous ayons notre propre station terrestre. Elle fonctionne maintenant et est reliée au satellite Intelsat-3 qui vient d'être lancé dans l'espace. Évidemment, le jour viendra où il faudra avoir une autre station sur la côte ouest.

M. Schreyer: Je crois qu'il y a dix ou quinze jours, Intelsat a envoyé un satellite au-dessus de la région du Pacifique. Vous n'avez pas de station terrestre là-bas. Je suppose donc que votre Société ne peut profiter de ce satellite?

M. Bowie: Nous l'utilisons. Nous pouvons nous brancher sur ce satellite grâce à une station terrestre américaine dans l'état de Washington. Mais nous espérons ne pas fonctionner ainsi trop longtemps.

M. Schreyer: Avez-vous une idée approximative du moment où votre Société pourra construire une station terrestre sur la côte du Pacifique?

M. Bowie: Nous étudions les emplacements, plutôt nous le ferons aussitôt que la neige aura fondu.

M. Schreyer: Merci, monsieur le président.

M. McCleave: Permettez-moi de souligner qu'en Nouvelle-Écosse, il n'y a pas de neige cette année. Peut-être que là aussi on pourrait penser à construire une deuxième station.

M. Bowie: L'honorable député de Nouvelle-Écosse se rendra compte que si on construisait une nouvelle station en Nouvelle-Écosse, on n'aurait pas le moyen de recevoir le satellite du Pacifique. Ce serait beaucoup plus facile si on le pouvait, par exemple.

M. Schreyer: Je vous remercie.

M. McCleave: Et M. Schreyer lui, qu'est-ce qu'il va installer dans sa propre juridiction?

[Text]

The Chairman: Mr. McCleave.

Mr. McCleave: I have two questions. First, must your borrowing always be from the government resources, Mr. Bowie?

Mr. Bowie: Yes. We have no other authority to borrow from anywhere else.

Mr. McCleave: My second question. The amended section says that the Governor in Council may prescribe limits by regulations. The Governor in Council actually does not have to exercise that power, and if the Governor in Council does not exercise that power, does this give you complete freedom to run your financial affairs?

Mr. Bowie: We do have complete freedom to run our financial affairs except in this particular respect that we are concerned with at the present time. We cannot make an expenditure in excess of $50,000, and we cannot make leases over a certain period of time involving so many dollars, and so on. But for the rest of it, we do run it as a straightforward commercial proposition.

Mr. McCleave: Have you ever had any difficulty obtaining your capital requirements when you have approached federal governments in the last 15 to 20 years?

Mr. Bowie: None at all.

Mr. McCleave: May I ask a very facetious question, Mr. Chairman, about the makeup of the people on the Board of the C.O.T.C.? Are there any visionaries there who have ever spoken about national centres for performing satellites?

Mr. Bowie: I think the answer to that has to be no, sir.

Mr. Stafford: Would they put it at Halifax if they did?

The Chairman: Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: It would be interesting to see where these performing satellites come from and which ones he is referring to.

May I back up a little bit, Mr. Chairman? You say we have 3 per cent of this consortium. Are most of the other members privately-owned, publicly-owned, or what?

Mr. Bowie: In the satellite consortium?

Mr. Osler: Yes.

Mr. Bowie: They are mostly governments.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Monsieur McCleave.

M. McCleave: J'ai deux questions. D'abord est-ce que vous parlez toujours des ressources du gouvernement, monsieur Bowie?

M. Bowie: Oui. Nous ne pouvons pas emprunter d'argent ailleurs.

M. McCleave: Ma deuxième question c'est que la modification de l'article dit que le gouverneur en conseil peut prescrire les limites par le règlement. Le gouverneur en conseil n'est pas obligé d'exercer ses pouvoirs et s'il ne les exerce pas, ça vous donne toute liberté ou non pour vos affaires financières.

M. Bowie: Nous avons toute liberté de gérer nos affaires sur le plan financier. À cette différence que dans ce cas-ci, jusqu'ici nous ne pouvons pas faire des dépenses dépassant $50,000 et nous ne pouvons pas faire des dépenses en dehors d'un certain délai, etc. Mais quant au reste, la gestion est purement commerciale.

M. McCleave: Avez-vous jamais eu de difficultés pour obtenir vos capitaux lorsque vous avez approché le gouvernement ce quinze ou vingt dernières années?

M. Bowie: Pas de difficulté du tout.

M. McCleave: Puis-je poser une question très facétieuse, monsieur le président, au sujet de la constitution du Conseil du SCCT? Est-ce qu'il y a des gens là qui ont jamais parlé de centres nationaux pour les satellites d'interprétation?

M. Bowie: Je pense que la réponse serait non.

M. Stafford: Le situeraient-ils à Halifax s'ils l'établissaient?

Le président: Monsieur Osler.

M. Osler: Ce serait intéressant de savoir d'où viennent ces satellites d'interprétation et desquels on parlait exactement. Je me demande, pour revenir un peu en arrière monsieur le président, vous dites que nous avons 3.5 p. 100 de ce consortium. Ce qui m'intéresse c'est de savoir si les autres appartenaient à l'entreprise privée ou quoi.

M. Bowie: Dans le consortium de satellites?

M. Osler: Oui.

M. Bowie: C'est surtout des gouvernements.

[texte]

Mr. Osler: In numbers, but not actually in amounts. I mean, is the American one private, or public, or what?

Mr. Bowie: The American show is owned by COMSAT, which is public investment.

The Chairman: Private and public, is it not?

Mr. Osler: It is public investment with some private interests, is it not?

Mr. Bowie: I am sorry I should have said private investment, yes.

Mr. Osler: I understood it was a public investment with some private participation, that the controlling interest is owned by the American government, is it not?

Mr. Bowie: Oh, no.

Mr. Osler: It does not matter, anyway.

Mr. Bowie: The American government has the privilege of appointing a certain number of directors to the Board.

Mr. Osler: Well, it does not matter much anyway, Mr. Chairman. My point was that we have heard a great deal about trying to cut some of the Crown corporations loose and trying to find ways and means of making them stand on their own financial feet. This seems to me to be completely natural, and the thing that I wonder is why you should have come to the Governor in Council at all? Why should you not be capitalized with a certain figure, and then told to get on with your job and raise your own money when you need it, which presumably you can get from the government more cheaply than anybody else, but it would be a commercial transaction?

Mr. Bowie: We are paying fairly high rates of interest to the government.

Mr. Osler: Yes.

The Chairman: Could you do better on the open market?

Mr. Bowie: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Osler: Well, there would be the going rate, would there not?

Mr. Bowie: Pardon?

Mr. Osler: Mr. Schreyer wondered what the rates were.

29509—2½

[Interprétation]

M. Osler: En nombres, mais pas en volumes. Ce que je veux c'est de savoir si le satellite américain est public ou privé, ou quoi?

M. Bowie: Aux États-Unis c'est COMSAT qui est un investissement public.

Le président: N'est-ce pas un investissement public et privé?

M. Osler: C'est un investissement public avec des intérêts privés?

M. Bowie: Pardon, j'aurais dû dire privé.

M. Osler: J'ai cru comprendre que c'est un investissement public avec certaine participation privée, que le contrôle appartient au gouvernement américain. Est-ce que ce n'est pas le cas?

M. Bowie: Non, non.

M. Osler: De toute façon ça n'a pas d'importance.

M. Bowie: Le gouvernement américain a le privilège de nommer certains directeurs au conseil.

M. Osler: Je regrette, monsieur le président. Voici quel était mon argument. Nous entendons beaucoup parler d'efforts pour libérer les sociétés de la couronne et chercher des moyens de leur permettre de subvenir à leurs propres besoins. Je trouve que ça a bien du bon sens et c'est parfaitement logique. Je me demande pourquoi vous devriez vous adresser au gouverneur en conseil? Pourquoi ne pas fixer un certain chiffre et avoir des capitaux et ensuite se mettre au travail et prélever vos propres fonds quand vous en avez besoin, ce que vous pouvez obtenir du gouvernement moins cher qu'ailleurs.

M. Bowie: Oui, mais nous payons des intérêts assez élevés.

M. Osler: Oui.

Le président: Est-ce que vous pourriez faire mieux sur le marché libre?

M. Bowie: Non, je ne le pense pas.

M. Osler: N'y aurait-il pas le taux courant?

M. Bowie: Pardon?

M. Osler: M. Schreyer veut savoir quels étaient les taux.

[Text]

Mr. Bowie: Do you know offhand, Gordon?

Mr. Gordon M. Waterhouse:  $6\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.

Mr. Osler: This is perhaps an unfair question to ask you, but would it impede your operations in any way or make you any more efficient or less efficient if you did not have to go to the Governor in Council at all? You are capitalized presumably, are you not? You do not just draw down a loan. Have you a capital structure in this corporation?

Mr. Waterhouse: Not more than the government advances, no.

The Chairman: What is your ratio of debt to equity?

Mr. Waterhouse: Ratio of debt to equity?

The Chairman: Yes, I think what Mr. Osler is trying to say...

Mr. Waterhouse: Our equity is with the investment and our surplus, the investment by the Government of Canada, our advances and surplus.

Mr. Osler: I may be completely naive, but it seems to me that you would have a tremendous cash flow in this business.

Mr. Waterhouse: We have.

Mr. Osler: And therefore, if you need $50 million to do something, it might be quite likely that you can cover the cost of that $50 million in your own cash flow, that is, the amortization of the thing.

Mr. Waterhouse: Not to that extent, sir.

Mr. Osler: I do not know whether I am talking in proper figures. I just pulled that out of the hat. But I wonder, if you were capitalized and then you were pushed off on your own, would it not take some of the financial responsibility off the government's back? It would not in any way impede you people, would it? It would let you operate like an ordinary business.

The Chairman: I wonder if this is the proper group to whom we should be putting this question. I would think this would be properly addressed to the Minister.

Mr. Osler: It might be, but if my line of questioning came up with a solid answer in one direction, it would mean that this Clause 3 was extraneous.

[Interpretation]

M. Bowie: Au premier abord, le savez-vous, Gordon?

M. Waterhouse: A peu près à  $6\frac{1}{2}$  p. 100.

M. Osler: Cette question n'est peut-être pas tout à fait juste à votre égard, mais est-ce que ça ferait du tort? Est-ce que ça vous rendrait plus ou moins efficace si vous n'étiez pas obligé de vous adresser au gouverneur en conseil? Vous êtes capitalisés, n'est-ce pas? Vous ne vous en tenez pas à faire de emprunts. Vous avez une structure de capitaux dans cette société?

M. Waterhouse: Pas plus que les avances du gouvernement, n'est-ce pas?

Le président: Alors quelle est la proportion de vos dettes et équités?

M. Waterhouse: La proportion de dettes et équités?

Le président: Oui, je crois que M. Osler essaye de dire...

M. Waterhouse: Nos équités sont dans nos investissements et surplus, l'investissement du gouvernement du Canada, nos avances et les surplus.

M. Osler: Excusez-moi, je ne comprends peut-être pas mais j'ai l'impression que vous avez beaucoup de fonds de roulement.

M. Waterhouse: Oui.

M. Osler: Alors, s'il vous faut 50 millions de dollars pour faire quelque chose, ça pourrait être très vraisemblable que vous défrayiez ce 50 millions de dollars avec vos propres fonds, c'est-à-dire l'amortissement.

M. Waterhouse: Pas tant que ça, monsieur.

M. Osler: Je ne sais pas si je parle de chiffres clairs ou non, j'ai pris ceci comme exemple au hasard. Si, par exemple, vous êtes capitalisés, qu'on vous laisse voler de vos propres ailes, est-ce que vous n'allez pas envelopper certaines responsabilités financières au gouvernement, ce qui ne vous ferait pas de tort?

Le président: Je me demande si cette question devrait être posée à ce groupe. Je ne sais pas si c'est très opportun. Je pense que c'est plutôt au ministre qu'il faudrait l'adresser.

M. Osler: C'est possible, mais si on répondait clairement à mes questions, ça voudrait dire que l'article 3 est hors d'ordre.

[texte]

The Chairman: That also has been raised by Mr. Macquarrie and Mr. Schreyer. A supplementary, Mr. Mongrain?

Mr. Mongrain: How much do you still owe the government?

Mr. Bowie: $52.4 million.

Mr. Osler: And what are your total assets?

Mr. Bowie: The total assets are nearly $100 million.

Mr. Waterhouse: $97.5 million.

The Chairman: $97.5 million?

Mr. Bowie: Yes.

The Chairman: The Minister said that your assets exceeded $83 million.

Mr. Bowie: He was probably talking of the costs a little bit.

Mr. Osler: The normal business would certainly not need $50 million to operate on $100 million, a business of this type or magnitude. That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. Bowie: Yes.

Mr. Osler: Is there any way we can cut down your capital or give you some capital?

Mr. Bowie: It is my impression that, to use colloquialism, this would open up a can of worms.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer, a supplementary.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman could we have that clarified? You raised it yourself. The Minister said assets of $83 million and Mr. Bowie says $98 million or $99 million. That difference of $14 million or $15 million, can we have that explained?

The Chairman: Yes. I quoted this from Hansard of February 3, 1969, page 5086.

Mr. Bowie: This figure that we have just given you, $97.5 million, was cost and not depreciated, and that was a year later.

The Chairman: And this was a year later, the figure that Mr. Kierans was using. Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Bowie has indicated that there will be no capital

[Interprétation]

Le président: La question a aussi été soulevée par M. Macquarrie et M. Schreyer. Une question supplémentaire, monsieur Mongrain?

M. Mongrain: Combien devez-vous encore au gouvernement?

M. Bowie: 52.4 millions de dollars.

M. Osler: Et quel est votre actif total?

M. Bowie: Notre actif total est de près de 100 millions.

M. Waterhouse: 97.5 millions de dollars.

Le président: 97.5 millions de dollars?

M. Bowie: Oui.

Le président: Le ministre a dit que vos avoirs étaient supérieurs à $83 millions.

M. Bowie: Il parlait probablement des coûts.

M. Osler: Normalement, vous n'avez pas besoin de 50 millions de dollars pour une entreprise de 100 millions de dollars. C'est ce que je veux savoir.

M. Bowie: Oui.

M. Osler: Est-ce qu'il n'y aurait pas moyen de réduire le capital, de vous donner un capital?

M. Bowie: J'ai l'impression que ceci, si on peut se servir d'une expression idiomatique, causerait des tracas.

Le président: Une question supplémentaire, monsieur Schreyer?

M. Schreyer: Monsieur le président, pouvez-vous préciser, vous l'avez soulevée vous-même cette question, le ministre a dit un actif de 83 millions de dollars. M. Bowie dit 98 à 99 millions de dollars. Il y a une grosse différence de 14 ou 15 millions de dollars; pouvez-vous nous expliquer cela?

Le président: Oui j'ai cité du Hansard de février 1969, page 5086.

M. Bowie: Les chiffres que nous avons nous donnent simplement 97.5 millions, c'était le coût sans la dépréciation et ça c'était un an plus tard.

Le président: Et ça c'était un an plus tard, le chiffre utilisé par M. Kierans. Monsieur Dinsdale.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, M. Bowie a indiqué qu'il n'y aurait pas de demands on the government for the current fiscal year. Does this mean that the revenues of the Corporation are quite buoyant?

Mr. Bowie: It certainly does, yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: How are the rates for your overseas services determined? Is it an arbitrary thing, or is it in competition with rates for similar services by other countries?

Mr. Bowie: We certainly have competition on the telegraph rates. On telephone rates and the Telex we do not have competition, or on leased circuits.

Part of our problem here is that you have to have two ends to a communications circuit to make it work and you have to get the fellow at the other end to agree with you on how much you shall charge. It sometimes becomes quite difficult to persuade him to reduce his rates as low as we might like to have them. It is COTC's viewpoint—I might almost go so far as to say policy at this time to see about making some substantial reductions in the rates as soon as we can.

Mr. Dinsdale: I believe there have been reductions in recent years, or even months, in the overseas rates.

Mr. Bowie: Yes, we have done that.

Mr. Dinsdale: These would result from...

Mr. Bowie: ...negotiation with the distant ends.

The Chairman: That is the satellite operators.

Mr. Bowie: They could be cable operators as well as satellite operators. I would not want this Committee to get the impression that I am a satellite man 100 per cent. I have been in the communications business for 48 years. I started off in cables, I was in high frequency radio, I am in satellites at the present time, and I love them all. They all serve a very useful part.

Whether your communication be by high frequency radio or by satellite or by cable, quite obviously you have to agree with the man on the other end that you will work it in such and such a way and in such and such a fashion and that your rights will be so and so demandes de capitaux sur le gouvernement pour l'exercice financier en cours. Est-ce qu'il veut dire que les revenus de la Société sont en bon état, en plein essor?

M. Bowie: Mais oui, bien sûr.

M. Dinsdale: Comment les taux pour vos services de télécommunications transmarines sont-ils déterminés? Est-ce qu'il y a de la concurrence ou de la rivalité, par exemple avec les taux qui sont établis dans les autres pays? Comment fixez-vous ces taux?

M. Bowie: Nous avons certainement de la concurrence pour les taux de télégramme. Quant au téléphone et le Telex, nous n'avons pas de concurrence.

Une partie de notre problème vient du fait que lorsque vous avez un circuit de communications, il vous faut deux extrémités. Et faut que vous vous mettiez d'accord, avec celui qui est à l'autre extrémité, sur le tarif que vous allez exiger. Parfois, cela devient assez difficile de persuader celui qui est à l'autre bout de réduire ses tarifs autant que nous voudrions. La Société canadienne de télécommunications transmarines a cette attitude, et même comme politique, je dirai de voir à faire des réductions substantielles des tarifs, et le plus vite possible.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que vous n'avez pas eu des réductions ces dernières années, ou ces derniers mois, dans les tarifs des télécommunications transmarines?

M. Bowie: Oui, nous en avons eu.

M. Dinsdale: Alors, elles proviendraient de...

M. Bowie: ...négociations avec la partie qui est à l'autre bout du fil.

Le président: C'est-à-dire celui qui exploite le satellite.

M. Bowie: Cela peut être aussi bien pour les câbles que pour les satellites. Je ne voudrais pas que les membres du Comité aient l'impression que je me suis engagé à ce pour cent dans les satellites. Je suis dans les communications depuis 48 ans. J'ai commencé avec les câbles, ensuite j'ai fait de la radio haute fréquence, puis j'en suis venu aux satellites, et j'aime tout. Je trouve que chacun a un rôle extrêmement utile à jouer.

Que vous ayez vos communications par câbles, par radio à haute fréquence ou par satellites, de toute façon, il faut que vous soyez d'accord avec l'opérateur à l'autre bout pour fixer vos tarifs, à tous les égards, la façon de travailler, etc. En général, c'est ainsi and such and such. This is usually the way that rates are negotiated these days, and it is not so much an element of competition.

However, I will say for the benefit of this committee that I have from time to time had a lot of pressure put on me by the American carriers operating in Canada to raise our telegraph rates to the same level as they are in the United States; this I refused to do.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think you indicated that you hoped that there would be further reduction in overseas rates. What would be the main reason for this hope? Is it because of a gradual change, for example, from cable to high frequency transmission to satellite transmission? What is the real reason for the gradual lowering of cost?

Mr. Bowie: I think one reason which I think ought to be fairly apparent to people in Canada, is that COTC as a Crown Corporation is making a profit, and a substantial one, and we believe that some of this ought to be applied back to give the user the benefit of it. Another reason, and a very important one, is that with multichannel cables and multichan-nel satellite systems the cost per circuit comes down quite substantially and therefore you are able to give the service at lower cost. I think these are the two main reasons.

Mr. Mongrain: May I have a supplementary, Mr. Chairman?

What do you do with this substantial profit. Do you reinvest it at COTC or do you turn it back to the government?

Mr. Bowie: We do not turn it back to the government. That is why we are not asking the government for any money this year—because we are going to reinvest it.

Mr. Dinsdale: Just to continue this line of questioning for a moment, do you supply the satellite service used by CBC?

Mr. Bowie: If it is a satellite service overseas, yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: They use some satellite programming and it is your corporation which supplies this service to CBC?

Mr. Bowie: Yes.

que les tarifs sont négociés ces jours-ci. Ce n'est pas tellement un élément de concurrence.

Toutefois, je dirai au Comité que, de temps à autre, on exerce beaucoup de pressions sur moi, entre autres les entrepreneurs de messageries américains qui exploitent des services au Canada et qui veulent que l'on relève les tarifs au même niveau que ceux des États-Unis; mais je refuse de le faire.

M. Dinsdale: Je pense que vous espérez une nouvelle réduction des tarifs des télécommunications transmarines. Qu'est-ce qui justifie cet espoir? Un changement graduel, par exemple, des télécommunications par câbles aux communications par radio à haute fréquence, ou par satellite? Quelle serait la vraie raison pour laquelle on réduirait graduellement les coûts?

M. Bowie: Eh bien, je pense que l'une des raisons qui doit être assez évidente pour la population canadienne, c'est que la Société, qui est une société de la Couronne, fait des profits substantiels, et nous croyons qu'il faudrait réinvestir ici ces profits pour pouvoir rendre la chose rentable pour la population en même temps. Une autre chose qui est également très importante, c'est que, avec les câbles à plusieurs canaux et les satellites à plusieurs canaux, les coûts de circuit sont réduits et vous pouvez donc fournir des services à meilleur marché. Ce sont là les deux raisons principales.

M. Mongrain: Puis-je poser une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président? Qu'est-ce que vous faites avec ce profit substantiel? Est-ce que vous le réinvestissez dans la Société ou si vous le donnez au gouvernement?

Mr. Bowie: Nous ne le rendons pas au gouvernement. Cette année, nous ne demandons pas d'argent au gouvernement parce que nous allons réinvestir.

M. Dinsdale: Pour poursuivre dans le même ordre d'idées pendant quelques instants, est-ce que vous fournissez le service de satellite utilisé par Radio-Canada?

M. Bowie: S'il s'agit d'un service de satellite outre-mer, oui.

M. Dinsdale: Ils ont de la programmation par satellites et c'est votre Société qui fournit le service à Radio-Canada?

M. Bowie: Oui.

[Text]

Mr. Dinsdale: How would the rates be established for that service? Have you a captive market or is it a competitive one?

Mr. Bowie: You really have asked me a question that I find very difficult to answer here. I would like to say that the rates we are currently charging in Canada, or are about to charge, are approximately one-third the rate charged at the European end for the same service. I do not know the psychology or the philosophy that motivates the Europeans, whether they charge as much as the traffic will bear or whether they do not want to handle television, but their rates are considerably higher than ours. We are hopeful that eventually they will come down to a more reasonable level.

Mr. Dinsdale: How would the rates compare with those for similar service charged in the United States?

Mr. Bowie: I suppose you could almost call this a rate-fixing arrangement, but the United States and ourselves charge the same rate.

Mr. Dinsdale: I see.

Mr. Bowie: Quite obviously we have to, because we have the same sort of interest in telecasts. A lot of the stuff that is brought over on television to the United States comes up here, and sometimes the stuff that we bring in from Europe is sent down to the United States.

Mr. Dinsdale: What will happen to the rates when Canada gets her own satellite? Will they still have to be comparable to the States, or can we determine them?

Mr. Bowie: Sir, I think you are talking about a different satellite. This is a domestic satellite and the one that I have been talking about was international.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am speaking of the Canadian domestic satellite.

Mr. Bowie: I was answering you in respect of an international satellite.

Mr. Dinsdale: As it exists at the moment, but we are eventually going to have our own satellite for supplying Canadian domestic services exclusively, I would presume. Perhaps this is in the realm of the future.

Mr. Bowie: May I hold my hands up, Mr. Dinsdale, and say please do not ask me to answer that question because I do not know — I just don't know.

[Interpretation]

M. Dinsdale: Comment est-ce que vous fixeriez les tarifs pour ce service? Est-ce que vous avez un marché fermé ou est-ce que vous avez de la concurrence?

M. Bowie: Je pense que vous m'avez vraiment posé une bonne question. Mais je trouve assez difficile d'y répondre. J'aimerais vous répondre que les tarifs que nous fixons généralement au Canada, ou que nous sommes sur le point de fixer, représentent un tiers des frais exigés du côté européen pour les mêmes services. Je ne connais pas la psychologie ou la philosophie qui motivent les Européens: s'ils exigent autant que les tarifs de circulation, ou s'ils ne veulent pas de la télévision, mais, de toute façon, leurs tarifs sont beaucoup plus élevés que les nôtres. Nous espérons qu'ils seront abaissés à un niveau plus raisonnable.

M. Dinsdale: Comment pouvez-vous comparer vos tarifs avec ceux de services analogues aux États-Unis?

M. Bowie: Je pense que vous pouvez probablement parler d'un accord sur la fixation des prix, mais les États-Unis ont les mêmes tarifs que nous.

M. Dinsdale: Je vois.

M. Bowie: Évidemment, il faut absolument le faire, car nous avons à peu près le même intérêt dans la télédiffusion, et tout ce qui est présenté à la télévision américaine nous arrive ici aussi: et parfois, ce que nous faisons venir d'Europe est envoyé aux États-Unis.

M. Dinsdale: Alors, qu'arrivera-t-il aux tarifs lorsque le Canada aura son propre satellite? Est-ce qu'ils seront toujours comparables à ceux des États-Unis?

M. Bowie: Je pense que vous ne parlez pas du même satellite, Monsieur. Je pense qu'il s'agit d'un satellite canadien. Mais celui dont je parlais jusqu'ici est international.

M. Dinsdale: Je parle du satellite canadien.

M. Bowie: Oui, mais moi, je vous répondais en pensant au satellite international.

M. Dinsdale: Oui, tel qu'il est dans le moment. Mais éventuellement, nous allons avoir notre propre satellite pour desservir la population canadienne exclusivement. C'est peut-être dans le domaine du possible.

M. Bowie: Monsieur Dinsdale, veuillez ne pas me demander de répondre à la question parce que, vraiment, je ne connais pas la réponse.

[Texte]

Mr. Dinsdale: Fine.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, perhaps Mr. Bowie can say whether he sees the Corporation as being the operator of our domestic satellite system if and when it does become a reality in terms of providing the technical know-how and so on.

Mr. Bowie: I cannot say that I can see that because nobody at all has asked me about it.

The Chairman: Are there further questions?

Mr. Mongrain: What kind of staff do you have on the COTC?

Mr. Bowie: Do you mean in terms of numbers?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes.

Mr. Bowie: About 750 roughly.

Mr. Mongrain: What would be last year's payroll for instance?

Mr. Bowie: In 1968 it was just under $4.5 million.

• 1630

Mr. Mongrain: And what was your profit last year?

Mr. Bowie: It was near $4 million, after income tax and after interest payments to the government.

Mr. Mongrain: I have two compliments to pay to you here. You just mentioned that your rates are about one-third lower than in Europe. There is one thing that I can tell you: your service is a lot better—at least three or four times better. I can say that from experience. The other compliment is this. It is not very often that this Committee pays compliments to those who appear, but you have said that you never had any deficit and I think you deserve a lot of credit for that. I just wanted to underline that here because it is not very often we hear that.

As long as you do not have any deficit I, personally, would be in favour of not setting any limit to your expense allowance—as long as you stay within the limits of your budget of course, which is approved by Treasury Board.

Mr. Bowie: Oh yes.

Mr. Mongrain: That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Macquarrie: I do not want to try to detract from the credit which you deserve

[Interprétation]

M. Dinsdale: Bien.

M. Schreyer: Monsieur le président, M. Bowie pourrait peut-être me dire s'il considère que la Société sera l'exploiteur de notre système de satellites, lorsque ce système deviendra une réalité. Je parle par exemple des connaissances techniques, etc.

M. Bowie: Je ne peux pas l'envisager, parce que personne ne m'en a jamais parlé.

Le président: D'autres questions?

M. Mongrain: Quel genre de personnel avez-vous au sein de la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines?

M. Bowie: Vous voulez dire l'effectif?

M. Mongrain: Oui.

M. Bowie: Environ 750.

M. Mongrain: Combien a-t-on versé en traitements, l'an dernier par exemple?

M. Bowie: En 1968, un peu moins de 4 millions et demi.

M. Mongrain: Et votre profit de l'an dernier, de quel ordre était-il?

M. Bowie: Près de 4 millions de dollars, après les paiements de l'impôt sur le revenu et l'intérêt versé au gouvernement.

M. Mongrain: Je veux vous féliciter deux fois. Vous venez de dire que vos taux sont d'un tiers inférieurs à ceux de l'Europe, mais je peux vous dire que vos services sont bien meilleurs, au moins 3 ou 4 fois meilleurs. Et je le sais par expérience. Un autre commentaire que je fais, c'est que cela n'arrive pas tellement souvent que le Comité félicite les témoins, mais vous nous avez dit que vous n'avez jamais eu de déficits et je pense que vous méritez sérieusement d'être félicités. Je veux insister là-dessus, parce que nous n'entendons pas souvent cela. Du moment que vous n'avez pas de déficit, je suis pour qu'on ne fixe aucune limite à vos dépenses, pour autant que vous restiez dans les limites de votre budget, qui est approuvé par le Conseil du Trésor.

M. Bowie: Bien sûr.

M. Mongrain: C'est tout, monsieur le président.

M. Macquarrie: Je ne veux pas enlever à votre mérite, et je me joins aux félicitations and the expression of it by Mr. Mongrain I share. Concerning the stations at Mill Village and the one that may be built in the West, who paid the construction costs?

Mr. Bowie: The first station at Mill Village was built by the Department of Transport; the costs were paid by the Government of Canada. We have paid for the new one which we have just opened with funds provided by the government but we shall, of course, repay those and the one on the West Coast we shall pay for as well. The entire financial responsibility for those will devolve on the COTC, not the government.

Mr. Macquarrie: But the government built the first one.

Mr. Bowie: They built the first one.

Mr. Macquarrie: They provided funds for the second one?

Mr. Bowie: They provided funds for the second one but those funds are our responsibility. We pay interest on them and we will eventually pay them off and repay the government for the loan.

Mr. Macquarrie: Far be it from one of my political colouring to mention it, but the government has been a good friend in these operations from time to time.

The Chairman: The word "government", independent of party.

Mr. Macquarrie: Small "g" certainly.

Mr. Bowie: I have to say that our relations with governments of all parties, whatever color they were, have been extremely good and we have never had any conflict or problems, none whatsoever.

Mr. Macquarrie: Again, I think you have done a wonderful job but here and there the government apparatus has been helpful, as it should be, of course.

Mr. Bowie: Certainly; yes, I could not agree more.

Mr. Barrett: I thought we came to bury Caesar, not to praise him.

M. La Salle: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais poser une question d'ordre technique. On parle des satellites et ceci m'intéresse énormément. Je ne sais si c'est l'endroit et le moment tout désignés pour la poser, mais ce que vient de vous faire M. Mongrain. Pour ce qui est des stations de Mill Village et de celle que l'on va peut-être construire dans l'Ouest qui a payé les frais de construction?

M. Bowie: La première station de Mill Village a été construite par le ministère de Transports et le gouvernement fédéral a payé les frais. La nouvelle station que nous venons d'ouvrir, c'est nous qui l'avons payée, avec des fonds fournis par le gouvernement, mais que nous rembourserons, bien sûr. Et nous paierons aussi la station prévue sur la côte ouest. Toute la responsabilité financière sera assurée par la Société canadienne de télécommunications transmarines, et non par le gouvernement.

M. Macquarrie: Mais c'est le gouvernement qui a construit la première station.

M. Bowie: Il a construit la première.

M. Macquarrie: Il a fourni les fonds pour la deuxième station?

M. Bowie: Oui, mais c'est nous qui en assumons la responsabilité. Nous payons des intérêts sur ces fonds et finalement nous rembourserons l'emprunt au gouvernement.

M. Macquarrie: Ce n'est pas à quelqu'un de mon allégeance politique à en parler, mais il me semble que le gouvernement s'est montré généreux de temps à autre.

Le président: Il s'agit du mot «gouvernement», sans qu'il soit question de parti.

M. Macquarrie: Gouvernement avec un petit «g», bien sûr.

M. Bowie: Je dois dire que nos rapports avec les gouvernements de tous les partis, quels qu'ils soient, ont toujours été excellents et nous n'avons jamais eu avec eux le moindre conflit ou la moindre difficulté.

M. Macquarrie: Je le répète, j'estime que vous avez fait un travail excellent, mais de temps à autre, l'appareil gouvernemental a été fort utile, ce qui devrait être le cas évidemment.

M. Bowie: Bien sûr, je suis entièrement d'accord.

M. Barrett: Je croyais que nous étions pour enterrer César, non pour le glorifier.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I wish to pose a technical question. We are talking about satellites in which I am very much interested. I don't know whether this is the proper time and place to ask my question, but I should système de satellites étant mis sur pied au niveau canadien, j'aimerais savoir s'il sera pratiquement possible à une province, qui le désirerait, d'exercer un contrôle quelconque, par le truchement de ses stations terrestres, sur la qualité des émissions et ce, avec l'assentiment du gouvernement fédéral?

Mr. Bowie: I am sorry I did not quite get it all, but may I respond in English? I do better in English than I do in French. May I put it this way: I would regard that as a very difficult question for me to answer at this point in time and, in fact, I think I would go so far as to say that it would not be proper for me to answer it. I just do not know the answer, sir.

The Chairman: I believe that would be a question of policy.

M. La Salle: Oui, je comprends, monsieur le président. Je ne demande pas, enfin, je ne veux pas savoir si ces messieurs sont en faveur ou non d'une politique semblable. Mais, je voudrais savoir si, techniquement, c'est possible qu'une province sur dix ou deux provinces sur dix, je ne sais pas, puissent contrôler des émissions au moyen d'un satellite canadien.

• 1635

Mr. Mongrain: May I add a supplementary chat might help, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Mongrain: You told us a few minutes ago that there might be 10,000 circuits on the next satellite. Of course, I am no technician, but am I right in believing that on those 10,000 circuits if I were to choose such a program or such another one coming from such a country or such another country, I have the choice?

Mr. Bowie: I think this would be perfectly true. We could produce a program or communications at any given moment for any given purpose whatsoever, whether it be television or radio broadcast or what have you.

Mr. Osler: Does not the question also revolve around the matter of controlling the ground installations? Would you not then have to be able to take 5,000 of those 10,000 circuits or 3,000, or however many were rented, and beam them to a separate receiving station?

Mr. Bowie: This would be true and I could not give you the answer to that one because I think this would be a matter of government decision.

like to know whether, once this satellite system is organized at the Canadian level, it will be feasible for a province wishing to exercise some sort of control over the quality of programs by means of these ground stations, to do so with the approval of the federal government?

M. Bowie: Excusez-moi, je n'ai pas tout saisi, mais puis-je répondre en anglais? Je m'exprime mieux en anglais qu'en français. Disons que j'estime qu'il me serait très difficile de répondre à cette question pour le moment. J'irai même jusqu'à dire qu'il ne convient pas que j'y réponde. Je ne connais tout simplement pas la réponse, monsieur.

Le président: Je pense que c'est une question de principe.

Mr. LaSalle: Yes, I understand, Mr. Chairman. I am not asking, I do not want to know whether these gentlemen are in favour or not of such a policy. But I would like to know if, technically, it would be feasible for one or two provinces out of ten, for instance, to control programs by means of a Canadian satellite?

M. Mongrain: Pourrais-je poser une question supplémentaire qui pourrait vous aider, monsieur le président?

Le président: Oui.

M. Mongrain: Vous nous avez dit tout à l'heure qu'il y aurait peut-être 10,000 circuits branchés sur le prochain satellite. Bien sûr, je ne suis pas technicien, mais dois-je en conclure que, sur ces 10,000 circuits, j'aurais le choix entre différentes émissions venant de différents pays?

M. Bowie: C'est exact. Nous pourrions produire une émission ou des communications à tout moment et à n'importe quelles fins, qu'il s'agisse de télévision, de radiodiffusion ou autre.

Mr. Osler: Cela ne dépend-il pas aussi du contrôle des installations au sol? N'auriez-vous pas alors à réussir à capter 5,000 de ces circuits, ou 3,000, ou quelque soit le nombre de circuits loué, pour les transmettre à une station réceptrice séparée?

M. Bowie: En effet, mais je ne pourrais vous donner la réponse à cette question, car cela dépend d'une décision gouvernementale.

[Text]

Mr. Osler: Would it be technically possible?

Mr. Bowie: Technically possible, yes.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further specific questions?

Mr. Barrett: Could we get to the point here? Our witness indicated that he was headed for Washington and I am sure he would like to have a little bit of reprieve before he leaves. I am certain that we would all like to allow him to have his reprieve, so can we get to the core of the subject?

The Chairman: That is just what I was going to bring up. I just wanted to know whether there are any more general questions that members wanted to ask.

Mr. La Salle: Une question supplémentaire. A cette conférence à Washington, est-ce que tous les pays intéressés à la réalisation d'un satellite, ont déjà fait une demande à cet effet? Êtes-vous au courant de cela?

Mr. Bowie: I do not know at this point in time whether there are any new ones but we are certainly hopeful that as a result of the conference in Washington—you may perhaps have seen the few remarks I made to The Gazette in Montreal yesterday—the system will become more fully internationalized than it has been so far. In effect that means the United States should not have a veto power which it has at the present time and if we can achieve this I think we are entitled to hope that Russia and the other Iron Curtains countries, instead of talking about putting up Inter-Sputnik, will join in the consortium and that we will have a truly global system.

Mr. La Salle: De combien de personnes se compose la délégation canadienne?

Mr. Bowie: I think it is nine—eight or nine.

The Chairman: Are they all from your organization, or are they spread out across the departments?

Mr. Stafford: Mr. Chairman, I thought we were getting to Clause 1; where does that fit in?

Mr. Chairman: I would like to know whether there are any from Manitoba on that delegation.

Mr. Bowie: Well, I am afraid I do not know their origin at all. There are some from External Affairs, and some from—if I may use the expression at this point in time—the Depart-

[Interpretation]

Mr. Osler: Serait-ce possible du point de vue technique?

Mr. Bowie: Du point de vue technique, oui.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions?

Mr. Barrett: Pourrions-nous en venir à l'essentiel? Le témoin a laissé entendre qu'il devait partir pour Washington, et je suis certain qu'il aimerait avoir un peu de répit avant son départ. Nous voudrions tous lui permettre ce moment de répit, j'en suis sûr. Pourrions-nous passer au cœur du sujet?

Le président: C'est précisément ce que j'allais dire. Je voulais simplement savoir s'il y avait d'autres questions générales.

Mr. La Salle: A supplementary question. Have all the members at that conference in Washington who are interested in the development of a satellite already made an application to that effect? Are you acquainted with this?

Mr. Bowie: J'ignore pour le moment s'il y aura de nouveaux membres, mais nous espérons certainement que, par suite de la conférence de Washington—vous avez peut-être vu la brève déclaration que j'ai faite hier à la Gazette de Montréal—le système deviendrait plus international qu'il ne l'a été jusqu'à présent. En fait, cela signifie que les États-Unis ne devraient pas détenir le pouvoir de veto qu'ils ont actuellement; si nous réussissons à le leur enlever, il y aura bon espoir, je crois que la Russie et les autres pays du Rideau de fer, au lieu de parler d'installer Futer-Sputnik, se joignent à notre consortium, et que nous ayons alors un système vraiment international.

Mr. La Salle: What is the membership of the Canadian delegation?

Mr. Bowie: Neuf, je crois, huit ou neuf.

Le président: Sont-ils tous de votre Société, ou viennent-ils de divers ministères?

Mr. Stafford: Monsieur le président, je croyais que nous allions passer à l'article 1; qu'est-ce que cela a à voir?

Le président: J'aimerais savoir s'il y a des gens du Manitoba dans cette délégation.

Mr. Bowie: Je suis désolé, je ne connais pas du tout leur origine. Il y a des gens des Affaires extérieures, il y en a du ministère des Communications—si je peux utiliser cette ment of Communications, or whatever it may be, and some from the Embassy in Washington and Mr. Eliassen and I will be taking in...

M. La Salle: Étant donné que le Québec est très intéressé à un projet de satellites, vous ne savez pas s'il sera représenté d'une façon ou d'une autre, à la conférence?

Mr. Bowie: You have a very good French-Canadian representative on the team; his name is Gilles Bergeron. I gather he is a great friend of Judy LaMarsh.

M. La Salle: Représente-t-il la province de Québec au sein de la délégation canadienne ou simplement le Canada?

M. Bowie: Le Canada.

M. La Salle: Merci.

Mr. Chairman: Are there further questions? Perhaps, then, we can deal with the Bill clause by clause. Shall Clause 1 carry?

Mr. Comeau: When did this Corporation come into existence?

Mr. Bowie: On April 1, 1950.

Mr. Comeau: Nineteen hundred and fifty?

The Chairman: April Fool's Day.

Mr. Comeau: Newfoundland was in Confederation at that time. Can you tell me why this only came about in 1969, the change for Newfoundland?

Mr. Bowie: Until there was something substantive to change in the Act it did not seem worthwhile to remove just those few words—you know, to bring about a special change in the Act.

Mr. Stafford: It takes the set-up that long to get around to it.

Mr. Bowie: There are other more important things.

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On Clause 3—Limitation of Powers.

Mr. Macquarrie: This is the Clause that concerns me and this is awkward because I do not care to address these remarks to the COTC people. It is unfortunate the Minister is not here because my problem is the invocation of the Governor in Council. Heaven expression dès maintenant—ou quel qu'en soit le nom à venir, il y a aussi des gens de l'Ambassade du Canada à Washington, et M. Eliassen et moi-même allons...

Mr. La Salle: As the province of Quebec is very interested in the satellite project, do you know whether it will be represented in some way or other at the conference?

M. Bowie: Vous avez un excellent représentant canadien français dans l'équipe: il s'agit de Gilles Bergeron. Je crois que c'est un très bon ami de Judy LaMarsh.

Mr. La Salle: Does he represent the Province of Quebec in the Canadian delegation or does he simply represent Canada?

Mr. Bowie: Canada.

Mr. La Salle: Thank you.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Nous pouvons peut-être passer à l'étude du Bill article par article. L'article 1 est-il adopté?

M. Comeau: Quand la Société a-t-elle été mise sur pied?

M. Bowie: Le 1<sup>er</sup> avril 1950.

M. Comeau: 1950?

Le président: Le jour du poisson d'avril.

M. Comeau: Terre-Neuve faisait déjà partie de la Confédération, à l'époque. Pourriez-vous me dire pourquoi cette modification relative à Terre-Neuve n'a été effectuée qu'en 1969?

M. Bowie: On n'estimait pas que cela valait la peine de supprimer simplement ces quelques mots pour apporter une modification spéciale à la Loi jusqu'à ce qu'il devienne nécessaire de changer vraiment le fond de la Loi.

M. Stafford: Les rouages administratifs mettent tellement de temps à faire quoi que ce soit.

M. Bowie: Il y a d'autres choses plus importantes.

Les articles 1 et 2 sont adoptés.

Sur l'article 3—Limitation des pouvoirs.

M. Macquarrie: C'est là l'article qui me préoccupe. C'est une question un peu délicate, parce que je ne tiens pas à m'adresser à la Société. Malheureusement, le ministre est absent. Il s'agit pour moi de la question d'approbation émanant du gouverneur en conseil.

knows this is a development in removing things from parliamentary control and substituting therefor executive or Treasury Board control. It is in this particular area that I hope to suggest an amendment. I will not do it here, but I can give the thrust of it and then I will be through.

It is the suggestion that we shall have an amount and that when the amount is overreached Parliament and not the Governor in Council and the Treasury Board will then be invoked. This is a well established principle of parliamentary control of public funds and will be reflected in our proposed amendment.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I do not see the point that Mr. Macquarrie is trying to make because I am under the impression this will always be the limit of the budget that will be voted by Parliament to the COTC.

The Chairman: Is this true, Mr. Bowie?

Mr. Bowie: This is true.

The Chairman: You are limited anyway by the budget you submit to Treasury Board.

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, as long as they remain within the limits of the budget that has been voted by Parliament, why should we put a limit of their spending capacity?

Mr. Macquarrie: My suggestion is that we would broaden the Corporation's limits.

Mr. Stanbury: If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, you would be removing farther from parliamentary control the amount being spent, not only to the hands of the Governor in Council, which is responsible to Parliament, but to a Crown corporation.

Mr. Macquarrie: To a specified amount, yes; to the Crown corporation.

Mr. Stanbury: Now you are arguing against your previous point.

Mr. Macquarrie: No, I think I opened this subject about 20 minutes ago by indicating that up to a given amount—and this is done with other corporations—we would indicate our confidence in the Corporation's fiscal competence but that we would then suggest that Parliament be involved. I do not recall that the COTC is very often examined carefully by Parliament. We hope that forever and ever it will be a most successful operation, but one can never be sure of that when one is dealing with legislation.

[Interpretation]

Il s'agit de soustraire à l'administration du Parlement pour les confier au pouvoir exécutif ou au Conseil du Trésor. Et c'est dans ce domaine que je tiens à proposer un amendement. Je ne le ferai pas ici, mais je peux en donner l'essence.

Il est proposé que l'on considère un certain montant, et, lorsque ce montant est dépassé, il faut alors avoir recours au Parlement, et non au Conseil du Trésor ou au Gouverneur en conseil. C'est le principe bien établi du contrôle du Parlement envers les fonds publics qui se reflétera ainsi dans notre proposition d'amendement.

M. Mongrain: Je ne vois pas ce que M. Macquarrie essaie d'expliquer parce que j'ai l'impression que cette proposition s'inscrira toujours dans les limites des budgets votés par le Parlement à l'intention de la SCTT.

Le président: Est-ce exact M. Bowie?

M. Bowie: Oui.

Le président: Vous êtes de toute façon limités par le budget soumis au Conseil du Trésor.

M. Mongrain: Oui, pour aussi longtemps qu'ils se limitent au budget soumis au Conseil du Trésor, pourquoi devrions-nous établir une limite à leurs dépenses.

M. Macquarrie: Ma proposition c'est que nous élargirons les limites.

M. Stanbury: Si tel est le cas, monsieur le président, nous ferons disparaître encore davantage la mainmise parlementaire. Vous confiez la chose non seulement au gouverneur en conseil qui est comptable au Parlement, mais aussi à une société de la Couronne.

M. Macquarrie: Pour un certain montant oui.

M. Stanbury: Ainsi vous êtes contre votre première idée.

M. Macquarrie: Non; j'ai amorcé ce sujet il y a vingt minutes en disant que jusqu'à un certain montant,—et cela se fait pour d'autres sociétés—nous devrions manifester notre confiance à l'endroit de la compétence financière de la Société. Et c'est alors que nous proposerions que le Parlement participe à cette entreprise. Je ne me rappelle pas que la Société ait fait trop souvent l'objet d'examen par le Parlement. Nous espérons que cette entreprise sera satisfaisante, mais on ne peut jamais prévoir avec certitude lorsqu'on parle de mesures législatives.

[Texte]

Mr. Bowie: I should say, Mr. Chairman, at the COTC's annual budget is tabled in Parliament and is there for everybody to see.

The Chairman: Yes. I think what Mr. Macquarrie is getting at is that is has never really been considered in the House until the committee system evolved as it did. He did not have the time to deal with it.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, do I understand the witness to say that the proposal in this bill follows the usual procedure with respect to other Crown corporations pursuant to the financial administration?

Mr. Bowie: The Minister himself made this statement in the House on February 3. I am quoting from Hansard.

What will happen is that the Treasury Board will lay down the same rules that apply to other crown corporations. The Treasury Board will prescribe such limits as it may consider to be appropriate. In other words, the limitations presently listed in the legislation may not be the limitations which the Treasury Board will set. The corporation has to be under some control but that control would be less, at least as to physical amount, than presently exists.

Mr. Stanbury: And when you commented previously on what amount might be adequate as a limit for your expenditure you said, I believe, that you felt it should be at least as much as Mr. Macquarrie had mentioned.

Mr. Bowie: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: We should underline the fact that when you enshrine a particular figure in statute you lose the flexibility of changing the figure from time to time as technology changes and prices change.

Mr. Bowie: This is true.

Mr. Stanbury: You would not want to lose that flexibility, would you?

Mr. Bowie: I think it is a most desirable thing to have. If you get only two weeks' holiday and somebody says suddenly you can have three weeks' vacation this is always very acceptable.

Mr. Stanbury: But if they were to say you could only have one week or 10 days, that could be different, would it not?

[Interprétation]

M. Bowie: Le budget annuel de la SCTT est déposé au Parlement et tout le monde peut en prendre connaissance.

Le président: M. Macquarrie veut expliquer que son budget n'a jamais été examiné par le Parlement jusqu'à ce que le système des Comités permette de se pencher là-dessus.

M. Stanbury: Dois-je conclure que le témoin a dit que la proposition contenue dans ce bill rejoint les formalités habituelles qui régissent d'autres sociétés de la Couronne pour ce qui est de l'administration financière?

M. Bowie: Le ministre lui-même a déclaré à la Chambre le 3 février et je cite les propos du ministre extraits du Hansard:

M. Stanbury: Lorsque vous avez expliqué tout à l'heure quel montant conviendrait comme limite de vos dépenses, vous avez dit, sauf erreur, que vous estimiez que le montant devrait être au moins celui qu'avait mentionné M. Macquarrie.

M. Bowie: En effet.

M. Stanbury: Il ne faut pas oublier que lorsque l'on sanctionne un chiffre particulier dans une loi, on perd la latitude qui permet de modifier ce chiffre de temps à autre en fonction de l'évolution de la technologie et de la hausse des prix.

M. Bowie: C'est vrai.

M. Stanbury: Vous ne voudriez pas perdre cette latitude, n'est-ce pas?

M. Bowie: Je crois que c'est une solution très désirable. Si vous n'avez que deux semaines de vacances et que l'on vous dit tout à coup que vous pouvez en avoir trois semaines, c'est toujours agréable.

M. Stanbury: Mais si l'on vous disait que vous ne pouvez avoir qu'une semaine ou dix jours, ce serait une autre paire de manches, n'est-ce pas?

[Text]

Mr. Bowie: Then we get mad.

Mr. Stanbury: You prefer the flexibility, do you?

Mr. Bowie: I would certainly prefer the flexibility.

Mr. Stanbury: Thank you.

Clause 3 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I report the Bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, gentlemen. I wonder if the members of the Committee would be willing to deal now with the business that we have before us concerning our own internal affairs? That way we would not have to meet on Thursday.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: This will be an in-camera meeting so I would like to thank the gentlemen from the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation. I wish you well on your trip to Washington.

Mr. Bowie: I would like to express my appreciation for the very courteous reception we have had. Thank you.

[Interpretation]

M. Bowie: Nous serions furieux.

M. Stanbury: Vous préférez une certaine latitude?

M. Bowie: Assurément.

M. Stanbury: Merci.

L'article 3 est adopté.

Le préambule est adopté.

Le titre est adopté.

Le président: Puis-je faire rapport du Bill?

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: Je vous remercie, messieurs. Je me demande si les membres du Comité voudraient bien que nous examinions maintenant les travaux qui nous attendent en ce qui concerne nos propres affaires. Ainsi, il ne serait pas nécessaire de nous réunir jeudi.

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: Ce sera une séance à huis clos, et j'aimerais donc remercier ces messieurs de la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines. Je vous souhaite un bon voyage à Washington.

M. Bowie: J'aimerais vous remercier de votre accueil si courtois. Merci.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, March 4, 1969

• 0936

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see we have a quorum under the new rules. I have a brief announcement to make. There will be an extra sitting of the Committee on Thursday at 8 p.m., and we will be hearing a brief from the Canadian Library Association relating to Bill C-171 respecting the National Library. The reason we fitted them in there is because they are having their national convention, and it was done to accommodate them while they are in Ottawa.

The second announcement is that we have arranged a preview tour of the National Arts Centre for Wednesday, March 19 at 5.15 in the afternoon. We will be circulating a memo on this tour to each member at a later date. Wives, girl friends and mistresses, I am told, are invited.

Mr. Macquarrie: Is that for the record?

The Chairman: That is for the record.

This morning we are considering Item 15 of the Communications Estimates relating to the Post Office. If you have your Blue Books it can be found at page 37 and the details begin at page 41. Yesterday we distributed to each member Mr. Kierans' remarks on the Post Office Department; the Annual Report for 1968 was distributed to you earlier. To save time, is it agreed that Mr. Kierans statement be taken as read and inserted into the record at this point? Agreed?

Hon. Eric Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the study of the Post Office Estimates for 1969-70 comes shortly after the debate on Bill C-116, during which the financial position of the Department was scrutinized. As I stated then, we intend to take every possible measure to reduce the deficit and to arrive at a balanced budget within a few years.

A study of estimates will show that transportation charges and labour costs account for

TÉMOIGNAGES

Le mardi 4 mars 1969.

Le président: Messieurs, je vois qu'en vertu des nouveaux règlements nous avons quorum. Je désirerais faire une annonce. Il y aura une séance supplémentaire du comité jeudi, à huit heures du soir, et nous entendrons un exposé de l'Association des libraires canadiens, portant sur le bill C-171, au sujet de la Librairie nationale. Nous l'avons placée là, vu que l'Association tient son congrès national et nous avons voulu l'accueillir pendant que ses membres sont à Ottawa.

La deuxième annonce est la suivante: nous avons prévu une visite du Centre des Arts, mercredi, le 19 mars, à 5h. 15 de l'après-midi. On vous remettra des notes à ce sujet un peu plus tard. Les épouses, les amies et maîtresses seront les bienvenues.

Ce matin, nous allons étudier les crédits du ministère des Postes.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que c'est officiel?

Le président: Oui c'est officiel.

Ce matin, nous étudions l'article 15 des prévisions budgétaires des communications se rapportant aux Postes. Si vous avez en main le Livre bleu, vous le trouverez à la page 37; les détails commençant à la page 41. Hier, nous avons distribué à chaque député les observations de M. Kierans sur le ministère des Postes; le rapport annuel de 1968 vous a déjà été distribué. Afin de gagner du temps, il a été convenu que l'exposé de M. Kierans sera ajouté au compte rendu comme s'il avait été lu. D'accord?

L'hon. Eric Kierans (ministre des Postes): Monsieur le président, messieurs les membres du Comité, la présente étude des prévisions des Postes pour 1969-1970 vous est soumise peu après les débats sur le bill C-116, au cours desquels la situation financière du Ministère a été examinée. Comme je l'ai alors déclaré, nous nous proposons de prendre toutes les mesures possibles pour réduire le déficit et équilibrer notre budget au cours des quelques années prochaines.

L'étude des prévisions des Postes indique que les frais de transport et de main-d'œuvre

84 per cent of total costs of the Post Office and are the main reason for the rise in the cost of Post Office operations. The Post Office Department's financial structure has three main components:

- (a) parliamentary appropriations;
- (b) costs assumed by other government departments; and
- (c) expenditures paid from revenues.

The annual parliamentary appropriations result from the submission of annual estimates which were are to examine today. This includes salaries, transportation costs, traveling expenses, telephones and telegrams, printing, advertising, payments to Renevue and Sub Postmasters of $21 million which are classified as professional and special services, rentals, purchase of material and supplies—that is, resources which are normally required to operate a department of government.

Another principal element of operating costs listed in the Blue Book is made up of the services provided to the Post Office by other departments. These are identified at the beginning of the detailed portion of the Post Office Estimates and include accommodation provided by the Department of Public Works, accounting and cheque issue services provided by the Comptroller of the Treasury, contributions to Superannuation and the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, Surgical Medical Insurance Premiums and Employee Compensation Payments provided by the Department of Labour. The cost of providing these services is met by the other departments concerned from the appropriations voted to those departments by Parliament. However, they involve a significant cost which would be borne by the Post Office directly if the services were not provided by other departments. It is essential for costing purposes and for proper financial management that these be considered as part of the total Post Office costs. I intend to take this into account when balancing our Department revenues and expenditures.

Other costs are met by expenditures made from postal revenue under authority vested in the Postmaster General by virtue of the Post Office Act. Expenditures are made from revenue for the operation of Rural and Sub Post Offices, for special delivery messenger arrangements, idemnity paid on lost mail, as well as payments to Foreign Postal Administrations for money orders paid abroad, outgo-constituent 84 p. 100 des dépenses totales du Ministère et qu'ils sont la cause principale de la hausse des frais d'exploitation. La structure financière du ministère des Postes repose fondamentalement sur trois éléments principaux:

- a) les crédits que vote le Parlement,
- b) les frais que prennent à leur compte d'autres ministères fédéraux, et
- c) les dépenses payées à l'aide des recettes.

Les crédits annuels que vote le Parlement se fondent sur les prévisions annuelles qui lui sont présentées et que nous devons examiner aujourd'hui. Ces prévisions comprennent les traitements, les frais de transport et de déplacements, de téléphones et télégrammes, de l'impression et de la publicité, des versements de $21 millions aux maîtres de poste de bureaux à commission et auxiliaires dont les services sont classés dans la catégorie des services professionnels et spéciaux, des locations, et des achats de matériel et fournitures en somme, tout ce dont un ministère fédéral a normalement besoin pour son bon fonctionnement.

Un autre élément important des frais d'exploitation qui figure dans le Livre bleu, est celui des services que fournissent les autres ministères au ministère des Postes. Ces services, qui figurent en tête de la portion détaillée des prévisions des Postes, comprennent les locaux fournis par le ministère des Travaux publics, les services comptables et d'émission de chèques dont se charge le Contrôleur du Trésor, les contributions au Fonds de pension de retraite et aux régimes de pension du Canada et du Québec, les primes d'assurance chirurgicale-médicale, et les indemnités pour les accidents de travail versées par le ministère du Travail. Il n'en est pas moins vrai qu'il s'agit de frais importants que le Postes devraient elles-mêmes régler si ces services n'étaient pas fournis par d'autres ministères. Il est essentiel, pour l'établissement des prix de revient et d'une saine gestion financière, qu'on considère ces frais comme faisant partie de l'ensemble des frais des Postes. J'ai l'intention d'en tenir compte en établissant le juste rapport entre les recettes et les dépenses du Ministère.

D'autres frais sont couverts par les recettes postales en vertu de l'autorité conférée au ministre des Postes par la Loi sur les postes.

Certaines dépenses sont faites, en recourant aux recettes, pour assurer le fonctionnement des bureaux de poste ruraux et des bureaux auxiliaires. Les recettes postales servent également au paiement d'arrangements spéciaux pour la livraison par messagers des envois.

ng parcel post, the handling charges on Canadian mail that passes through other countries and the carriage of Canadian mail on foreign airlines. Revenues received from the operation of financial services such as money orders, philatelic sales, lock box rentals, Unemployment Insurance stamps, and so on, are used to cover a portion of the costs of providing these services.

Although expenditures from revenue do not form part of the appropriation to be voted by Parliament I believe, Mr. Chairman, the deliberations of this Committee would be incomplete if all Post Office operating costs were not taken into account. Unlike most other government departments, the Canada Post Office is a revenue-producing organization. To consider costs without discussing sales would be looking at only half the program.

The appropriation costs shown in the Blue Book for 1968-69 do not take into account fully the value of wage increases resulting from the wage contracts signed this past summer. Although there was an amount in the 1968-69 estimates to allow for wage increases, it was not possible in September, 1967 when those estimates were compiled, definitively to establish the total value of the final wage settlement. Our present calculations indicate that approximately $2.5 million will be required and this amount has been requested in the Supplementary Estimates now before the House.

The Estimates for 1969-70 take into account all wage adjustments authorized to date, but there are a few remaining classes such as Railway Mail Clerks, part-time help and administration staffs that have not yet been granted wage increases. These Estimates may have to be revised upwards if other significant increases are granted during the 1969-70 fiscal year. The expenditures from revenue shown also reflect recent payment agreements made with Revenue Postmasters.

Mr. Chairman, at the heart of Post Office Expenditures are the Labour Costs. The Canada Post Office is a labour intensive organization and, while much has been accomplished to increase productivity, there remains much to do. Production standards have been established for practically all of express, au règlement des indemnités pour le courrier égaré, aussi bien qu'au remboursement aux Administrations postales étrangères de la valeur des mandats de poste payés pour notre compte, des colis postaux partants, des frais de manutention du courrier canadien passant par d'autres pays et du transport du courrier canadien par les lignes d'aviation étrangères. Les recettes provenant de l'exploitation des services financiers tels que les mandats, la vente d'articles de philatélie, la location des cases postales, les timbres d'assurance-chômage, etc., servent à couvrir une partie des dépenses occasionnées par ces mêmes services.

Bien que les dépenses couvertes par les recettes ne fassent pas partie des crédits que vote le Parlement, j'estime, Monsieur le Président, que les délibérations du Comité seraient incomplètes si l'on ne tenait pas compte de tous les frais d'exploitation des Postes. Contrairement à la plupart des autres ministères fédéraux, les Postes canadiennes ont des recettes. Une étude des frais sans les comparer aux recettes équivaldrait à l'examen de la moitié de notre programme.

Les crédits qui figurent dans le Livre bleu pour 1968-1969 ne tiennent pas entièrement compte du chiffre des augmentations de salaires qu'ont entraînées les conventions sur les salaires signées l'été dernier. Bien qu'un montant ait été inclus dans les prévisions pour 1968-1969 pour des augmentations en 1967, lors de l'établissement des prévisions, d'estimer de façon définitive la valeur totale de l'accord final sur les salaires. Nos calculs actuels indiquent qu'il faudra environ $2.5 millions et ce montant a été demandé dans les Prévisions supplémentaires que la chambre est présentement en train d'étudier.

Dans les prévisions pour 1969-70 il est tenu compte de tous les rajustements de traitement qui ont été autorisés jusqu'à maintenant, mais il reste néanmoins quelques catégories d'emplois comme les commis ambulants, les aides à temps partiel et le personnel administratif qui n'ont pas encore bénéficié de hausses de traitement. Ces prévisions devront faire l'objet d'une hausse, si d'autres augmentations sont accordées pendant l'année financière 1969-70. Les dépenses à même les recettes, qui figurent dans nos prévisions, reflètent les récents accords de paiement conclus avec les maîtres de poste des bureaux à commission.

Monsieur le Président, l'article des frais de main-d'œuvre se situe au cœur même du secteur des dépenses du ministère des Postes. Le ministère des Postes du Canada est un organisme dont les frais proportionnels de la main-d'œuvre à son service sont très élevés, et malgré tout ce qui a été fait en vue d'aug-our city offices from Toronto on down to offices having a staff of seven or eight persons. In many areas the standards are being met and in some exceeded but where competition for labour is high, where post office facilities are old and inadequate, production is lagging. It is in these latter areas that improvements must be made, not only in production but in plant facilities and mail handling hardware. These improvements will lead to high production.

For 1969-70 there will be 45,155 man-years of work performed by Post Office staff. This is an increase of only 282, or less than 1 per cent over 1968-69. Wage increases alone will cost the Department an additional $14 million in 1969-70. During the 20 years 1948-68 the number of staff increased by 47 per cent, mail volume by 81 per cent but expenditures by 328 per cent and cost of labour by 428 per cent. One must remember here that labour and fringe benefit costs, including the remuneration paid to Revenue and Sub Postmasters, represent almost 63 per cent of the total costs of the Post Office.

Transportation, Mr. Chairman, ranks second only to labour in total Post Office costs. This, of course, is to be expected as an organization that is primarily a materials handling industry. The $109 million proposed for 1969-70 represent 21 percent of our costs and has increased by approximately $12 million from 1968-69. The substantial average wage increases of between 8 and 10 per cent per annum experienced nationally from collective wage agreements signed in the last two years were reflected in wage agreements negotiated by land mail contractors with their employees. This, together with increases in mail transportation charges and volume increases in foreign mail carried by airlines on international routes, caused a sharp rise in the over-all cost of providing mail transportation services.

menter la productivité et de maintenir à un bas niveau les frais de main-d'œuvre, il y a encore beaucoup à faire sur ce point.

Des normes de production ont été établies dans presque tous nos bureaux urbains, à partir de celui de Toronto jusqu'à ceux dont le personnel est de sept ou huit employés. Dans plusieurs bureaux, ces normes de production sont atteintes et parfois même dépassées, ainsi dans les endroits où la concurrence est forte sur le marché du travail et là où les locaux de la poste sont vétustes et insuffisants, la production en souffre. Il ne s'agit pas dans ces derniers cas de vouloir en premier lieu augmenter la production uniquement, mais avant tout d'améliorer les locaux et le matériel postal qui sert au traitement du courrier. Ces améliorations permettront d'augmenter la production.

En 1969-1970, il y aura 45,155 années-homme de travail par le personnel des Postes. C'est là une augmentation de 282 ou de moins de 1 p. 100 sur 1968-1969. Les hausses de traitement ont coûté à elles seules au Ministère une somme supplémentaire de 14 millions de dollars en 1969-1970. Pendant les 20 dernières années, soit de 1948 à 1968, le personnel a augmenté de 47 p. 100, le volume du courrier de 81 p. 100, mais les dépenses ont augmenté de 328 p. 100 et les frais de main-d'œuvre de 428 p. 100. Il ne faut pas oublier que les frais de main-d'œuvre et les avantages sociaux, qui comprennent la rémunération versée aux maîtres de poste de bureaux de poste à commission et de bureaux de poste auxiliaires, constituent presque 63 p. 100 du coût total des Postes.

Monsieur le Président, au chapitre de dépenses totales du Ministère, les transport se classent au deuxième rang. Il fallait, bien sûr, s'y attendre, car il s'agit là d'un organisme dont le rôle consiste essentiellement à transmettre des objets. La somme de 109 millions de dollars que nous proposons pour 1969-1970 représente 21 p. 100 de nos frais et constitue une augmentation de 12 millions de dollars sur 1968-1969. Les hausses substantielles de traitement de l'ordre de 8 à 10 p. 100 qui se sont produites à l'échelle nationale à la suite des conventions collectives signées au cours des deux dernières années, ont eu des répercussions sur les conventions collective de salaires entre les entrepreneurs du transport postal par voie terrestre et leur employés. Ces augmentations venant s'ajouter à la hausse des frais du transport postal et à l'augmentation du volume du courrier transporté à l'étranger par des voies aériennes internationales, ont occasionné une hausse marquée du coût général des services de transport postal.

The cost to the Post Office Department for services provided by other government departments reaches $92 million in 1969-70. This is an increase of $34 million over 1968-69 which is made up of $8 million price increase for accommodation provided by the Department of Public Works, $24 million to the super-annuation fund and $2 million for Canada and Quebec Pension Plans and employee group insurances.

The total costs of the Post Office at $527 million for 1969-70 are $54.6 million higher than the forecast for 1968-69 which is attributable to increased wage and fringe benefit costs at $35 million with virtually no increase in man years; to increased transportation costs of $12 million, to increased costs of accommodation with virtually no increase in total space at $8 million and a reduction in all other expenditures of $.4 million.

Total revenues are expected to reach a record of $481 million, an increase of $94.3 million over the forecast revenue for 1968-69. While the increased revenues are not yet sufficient to meet the total costs, the operating deficit has been reduced by some $40 million so the estimated level of $46 million. These forecast revenues for 1969-70 take into account the recent increases in postal rates which have an impact of some $91 million.

A task force has been working for the last several months with outside consultants conducting a series of studies that have two main objectives:

(a) The preparation of a report or blueprint for the Post Office to consider the feasibility of proceeding with a Crown Corporation concept.

(b) Studies of specified areas of Post Office operations that will generate tangible savings through improved productivity and the upgrading of operational efficiency.

Approximately 25 studies are already detailed in the Task Force report. Eleven of these studies are concerned with the Crown Corporation question and the remainder deal with productivity improvement and cost saving areas. The following are some examples:

Les frais du ministère des Postes quant aux services fournis par d'autres Ministères gouvernementaux se chiffrent à 92 millions de dollars en 1969-1970, soit 34 millions de plus qu'en 1968-1969. Cet excédent se compose d'une augmentation des prix de 8 millions de dollars pour les installations fournies par le ministère des Travaux publics, d'une contribution supplémentaire de 24 millions à la caisse de retraite, et d'une contribution supplémentaire de 2 millions au Régime de pensions du Canada, au Régime des rentes du Québec et au Régime d'assurance collective des employés.

Nous prévoyons que les dépenses totales des Postes seront de 527 millions de dollars en 1969-1970, soit une augmentation de 54.6 millions sur les prévisions de 1968-1969. Cette augmentation est attribuable aux augmentations de traitements et de contributions aux avantages sociaux qui se chiffrent à 35 millions de dollars même si les années-homme ne sont pour ainsi dire pas augmentées; à une hausse de 12 millions au chapitre des frais de transports; à des frais supplémentaires de 8 millions au chapitre des installations, malgré que l'espace global ne soit à peu près pas accru; et à une réduction de .4 million de dollars pour toutes les autres dépenses.

Nous prévoyons que les recettes totales atteindront un sommet sans précédent de 481 millions de dollars, soit 94.3 millions de plus que les recettes prévues pour 1968-1969. Même si cette hausse de recettes ne suffit pas pour couvrir toutes les dépenses, le déficit a été réduit de quelque 40 millions de dollars pour atteindre le niveau prévu de 46 millions. Les recettes prévues pour 1969-1970 tiennent compte de la récente majoration des tarifs d'affranchissement qui représente une somme de 91 millions de dollars.

Depuis plusieurs mois, une équipe spéciale qui travaille de concert avec des conseillers de l'extérieur, est chargée de faire des études visant deux buts principaux:

a) Préparer un rapport sur la possibilité de transformer le ministère des Postes en société de la Couronne,

b) Étudier certains domaines de l'exploitation postale qui permettraient de faire des économies par suite d'une productivité accrue et d'une efficacité d'exécution améliorée.

Déjà, environ 25 sujets d'étude sont inscrits au programme de l'équipe spéciale dont onze ont trait à la question de la société de la Couronne et les autres à l'amélioration de la productivité et aux économies à réaliser. En voici quelques exemples:

(a) Organization Study, including the status, role, objectives, functions, activities and alternative organizational forms and structures. This will include a review of the services provided by other departments or agencies.

(b) Environmental Study, including socio-economic trends (for example increasing urbanization), changing business methods, competition (for example, facsimile transmission), technology (for example, reliable optical reader).

(c) Management practices and working environment including guidelines for the implementation of suitable management practices, delegation of authority and responsibility, quality and completeness of communications between levels of management at Headquarters and in the field, the degree of involvement of supervisors in the decision making process, better short- and long-range planning, effective utilization of resources, training and development of managers, motivation towards higher productivity and minimizing possible conflict between management and operational staff.

(d) Total management information system, including the integration and co-ordination of reporting and control systems so that information essential to the various levels is available for operational control and for decision-making on a cost-benefit basis with all relevant factors known.

(e) Marketing and Sales including a review of the communications market in Canada and the Post Office's share of this market, a review of our present approach to marketing and public relations and generally a better definition of our objectives and strategy in the promotion of postal services through more effective selling, advertising and public relations programs.

(f) Transportation, including the rearrangement of present services or their replacement with more efficient and economical means of transportation. This will mean an in-depth examination of all existing transportation services such as transportation of letter carriers, government-operated vehicles, railway post

a) Étude sur l'organisation, portant sur le statut, le rôle, les objectifs, les fonctions, les activités et d'autres façons possibles de structurer l'organisme. Cette étude comprendra une analyse des services fournis par d'autres Ministères et organismes.

b) Étude du milieu, portant sur les tendances socio-économiques (l'accroissement des centres urbains), l'évolution des méthodes relatives aux affaires, la concurrence (la transmission par facsimilé), la technologie (un lecteur optique fiable).

c) Procédés de gestion et milieu de travail, comprenant les lignes de conduite relatives à l'adoption de procédés appropriés de gestion, la délégation des pouvoirs et des attributions, la qualité et l'efficacité des communications entre les divers niveaux des dirigeants de l'Administration centrale et ceux des services extérieures, le degré de participation des surveillants dans les prises de décisions, une meilleure planification à court et à long terme, l'utilisation efficace des ressources, la formation et le perfectionnement des cadres, la motivation en vue d'accroître le rendement et de minimiser les possibilités de conflit entre la direction et les employés de l'exploitation.

d) Système complet d'information au niveau des cadres comprenant l'intégration et la coordination des rapports et des systèmes de surveillance de façon à ce que les renseignements qui sont essentiels aux divers niveaux soient disponibles pour permettre de diriger les divers services et de prendre des décisions en connaissant tous les éléments de la question et en tenant compte des frais et des recettes.

e) Commercialisation et ventes comprenant une analyse du marché des télécommunications au Canada et de la participation des Postes à ce marché, une analyse de notre ligne de conduite vis-à-vis la commercialisation et les relations extérieures et de façon générale une meilleure définition de nos objectifs et de notre stratégie en vue de promouvoir les services postaux au moyen de programmes plus efficaces de vente, de publicité et de relations extérieures.

f) Transport, comprenant la réorganisation ou le remplacement des services actuels par des modes de transport plus efficaces et plus économiques, ce qui comporte un examen minutieux de tous les services de transport actuels, dont le transport des facteurs, les véhicules du gouvernement, les bureaux de poste offices, rural services, highway, water and air services and the introduction of suitable containers.

There are many other important studies, such as:

- (a) manpower inventory, planning and development
- (b) staff relations
- (c) classification of positions, compensation and benefits
- (d) the introduction of new or improvement of existing electronic data processing equipment
- (e) planning of facilities for Toronto and Montreal and design of facilities in general
- (f) mail sortation and distribution
- (g) wickets, lock boxes and other supplementary services, such as special delivery, registration, C.O.D., shortpaid items and directory service
- (h) work measurement and performance standards
- (i) service standards

Furthermore, we will realize the importance of mechanization and automation. New Post Offices will be provided with the latest equipment suitable to our needs. We will inquire very carefully into automation and even better mechanization through our Task Force studies. We are studying developments in other countries.

Mr. Chairman, we are endeavouring to increase efficiency, reduce the costs and increase revenues in the Post Office in every manner possible. My only regret, and also that of my officials, is that we cannot balance our budget this year. We are, however, aiming at a target of a balanced budget in 1971-72, taking into account every type of expenditure affecting the Post Office Department, including those provided by other Departments. For the present, Mr. Chairman, we can do no better than to keep up these efforts towards real benefits for the Government of Canada and the taxpayers. Thank you.

The Chairman: I now call upon Mr. Kierans, the Postmaster General, soon to become the Minister of Communications, to introduce his officials and then we shall proceed with direct questioning.

ambulants, les services ruraux et routiers, les services par mer et par air, et l'introduction de véhicules appropriés.

Il est d'autres sujets d'étude importants, à savoir:

- a) l'inventaire, la planification et le perfectionnement de la main-d'œuvre
- b) les relations de travail
- c) la classification des postes, la rémunération et les avantages sociaux
- d) l'adoption d'un système d'ordination neuf ou amélioré
- e) la planification des installations à Toronto et Montréal et de toutes les installations en général
- f) le tri et la distribution du courrier
- g) les services au guichet, le service des cases postales et autres dont le service par exprès, la recommandation, les envois C.R., les objets insuffisamment affranchis et le service de recherches d'adresses
- h) la mesure du travail et les normes de rendement
- i) les normes du service

Nous comprenons aussi l'importance de la mécanisation et de l'automatisation. Les nouveaux bureaux de poste seront munis d'un équipement moderne, conforme à nos besoins. Notre équipe spéciale se penchera aussi sur la question de l'automatisation et sur les possibilités d'une meilleure mécanisation. Nous nous tenons au courant des progrès réalisés par les autres pays dans ce domaine.

Monsieur le président, nous faisons tout ce que nous pouvons afin d'accroître l'efficacité, de réduire les frais et d'augmenter les recettes du ministère des Postes. Mon seul regret, qui est aussi celui des hauts fonctionnaires de mon ministère, est de ne pouvoir équilibrer notre budget cette année. Nous voulons, toutefois, pouvoir présenter un budget équilibré pour 1971-1972 qui englobera toutes les dépenses qui touchent de près ou de loin le ministère des Postes, même s'il s'agit de dépenses pour des services fournis par d'autres Ministères. Pour l'instant, monsieur le président, je ne peux faire mieux que de poursuivre les efforts commencés en vue de faire économiser le plus d'argent possible au gouvernement du Canada et au contribuable. Merci.

Le président: J'inviterais maintenant M. Kierans, le ministre des Postes qui sera bientôt le ministre des Communications, à présenter ses hauts-fonctionnaires. Nous pourrions ensuite répondre aux questions.

[Text]

Mr. Kierans: The Deputy Minister is in Montreal and unfortunately could not be here today. I think hon. members are probably aware that yesterday we concluded an agreement to take over all of the contracts of ROD Service and, of course, this will raise a number of questions which demand his attention. With me is Tom Bond, the Assistant Deputy Minister, Mr. Fred Pageau and Mr. Gordon Sinclair as well as a number of officers on the side, so we are fully prepared to answer all of your questions. The ones that I cannot field I will be very pleased to ask Mr. Bond to field or to pass over to others.

Since your Chairman has already said that we will take the statement as read, that saves us considerable time and I am very pleased that we have adopted this policy.

The Chairman: So are we. Does anybody have a question? Mr. Macquarrie?

Mr. Macquarrie: I actually have quite a few, Mr. Chairman, but I do not want to pose them all at one time; that would be rather greedy.

I have read the statement with great care and I suppose it would be good procedure for me to relate my first questions to the statement. Unlike you, Mr. Chairman, I rather missed hearing the Minister read his statement. I wonder whether I might ask some specific questions on matters, not all that important, but which did puzzle me. For instance, I was interested in the expression on page 2:

...the handling changes on Canadian mail that passes through other countries...

I had thought that...

Mr. Kierans: What line is that?

Mr. Macquarrie: It is mid-page, Mr. Minister. How is this arrived at and what sort of basis of assessment do we have or are we victims of?

Mr. Kierans: I will ask Mr. Pageau to deal with this.

Mr. F. Pageau (Director of Postal Rates and Classification): There is no charge of the transportation of international mails when that mail consists of letter mail or printed matter, but when another country delivers bags of parcels or transports bags of parcels that are to go to other countries, we have to compensate those other countries and there are certain charges which are agreed upon

[Interpretation]

M. Kierans: Le sous-ministre est à Montréal et malheureusement il n'a pas pu se rendre ici aujourd'hui. Les honorables députés savent sans doute, qu'hier, nous nous sommes mis d'accord pour prendre en main tous les contrats qui étaient détenus par ROD Service. Ceci donnera lieu à un certain nombre de problèmes qui exigeront son attention. Et j'ai avec moi M. Tom Bond, sous-ministre adjoint, M. Fred Pageau et M. Gordon Sinclair, et il y a également à mes côtés un certain nombre de hauts fonctionnaires qui sont prêts à répondre à toutes vos questions. Les questions auxquelles je ne pourrai pas répondre, je les passerai avec plaisir à M. Bond qui y répondra ou les passera à quelqu'un d'autre. Comme votre président a déjà dit que l'exposé serait considéré comme ayant été lu, nous épargnerons un temps considérable et je suis très heureux que nous ayons adopté ce procédé.

Le président: Nous le sommes aussi. Est-ce que quelqu'un désire poser des questions? Monsieur Macquarrie.

M. Macquarrie: J'ai plusieurs questions à poser, monsieur le président, mais je ne les poserai pas toutes en même temps. J'ai lu avec beaucoup de soin l'exposé qui a été fait et je crois que ce serait un bon procédé de ma part d'y rattacher ma première question. Contrairement à vous, monsieur le président, j'ai regretté ne pas entendre le ministre lire son exposé. Je me demande si je peux poser des questions précises sur des questions qui ne sont pas importantes, mais qui m'ont dérouter. Par exemple, je m'intéressais à la citation de la page 2:

...des frais de manutention du courrier canadien passant par d'autres pays...

J'avais pensé que...

M. Kierans: Quelle ligne s'il-vous plaît?

M. Macquarrie: Au milieu de la page, monsieur le ministre. Comment cela se fait-il et quelle sorte d'arrangement avons-nous ou sommes-nous victimes?

M. Kierans: Je vais demander à M. Pageau de répondre à cette question.

M. F. Pageau (Directeur de la classification et des tarifs postaux): Il n'y a aucun frais pour le transport du courrier international lorsque ce courrier est constitué par des lettres ou des imprimés, mais lorsqu'un autre pays livre des sacs de colis ou transporte des sacs de colis destinés à d'autres pays, nous devons rembourser cet autre pays et il y a certains frais négociés entre les deux pays, ou between the two countries, or all the countries of the world, according to the distance over which the parcels of the country of origin have to go through.

We have two charges; one is the terminal charge of the country of destination and the other is the transit charge to compensate the country to take over our mails from the point of entry and we do this in the reverse direction.

Mr. Macquarrie: But it is only on bags of parcels?

Mr. Pageau: Yes.

Mr. Macquarrie: I had thought that first-class mail went through as one of the great exercises in practising internationalism that we have had for a long time.

Mr. Pageau: I should say, Mr. Chairman, that this also applies to air mail.

Mr. Macquarrie: I know it will be a general figure, but between Canada and the United States could you indicate the amount of charges we assess for this operation and the amount of charges we pay them?

Mr. Pageau: Yes, we have a special convention with the United States. On the parcel mail we are paid by the United States 45 cents for each parcel that comes into the country and we pay them, in turn, 50 cents. Through two statistical periods in the year here we take detailed account of every parcel that is exchanged between the two countries, we set the charges. We are paid, actually, because the imbalance of traffic is in their favour.

Mr. Macquarrie: You mean that we handle good many more parcels of theirs than they do of ours?

Mr. Pageau: Yes.

Mr. Macquarrie: What would be an overall figure of what we pay them for the handling of our parcels?

Mr. Pageau: Actually we do not pay them; there is not actual payment. They pay us for the difference, so there is no actual payment except once a year when we establish our account with them. I have not got this separately, but I think it is close to $1 million.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am wondering, too, on page 4 in reference to the increased costs:

This, together with increases in mail transportation charges...

tous les pays du monde, et qui varient en fonction de la distance que les colis du pays d'origine doivent traverser.

Nous avons deux taux; le taux terminal du pays destinataire et le taux de transit visant à rembourser le pays qui transporte notre courrier à partir du point d'entrée et qui fait le même transport en sens inverse.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mais il s'agit exclusivement de sacs de colis?

Mr. Pageau: Oui.

Mr. Macquarrie: Je pensais que le courrier de première classe était acheminé gratuitement, qu'il était le grand exemple de la coopération internationale.

Mr. Pageau: Ceci s'applique également au courrier aérien.

Mr. Macquarrie: Je sais que ce ne sera qu'un chiffre approximatif, mais pourriez-vous indiquer quel montant nous payons aux États-Unis et quelle somme ils nous paient en retour?

Mr. Pageau: Nous avons une convention spéciale avec les États-Unis. Pour les colis postaux, les États-Unis nous paient 45 cents pour chaque colis qui rentre et nous leur versons 50 cents pour les colis à destination des États-Unis. Nous avons pris les statistiques de deux années et calculé le nombre de colis échangés. Nous recevons de l'argent car le volume est en notre faveur.

Mr. Macquarrie: Vous voulez dire que nous transportons beaucoup plus de leurs colis qu'ils ne transportent des nôtres?

Mr. Pageau: Oui.

Mr. Macquarrie: Quel est le chiffre total que nous devons leur verser pour la manutention de nos colis?

Mr. Pageau: Nous ne leur versons pas d'argent; il n'y a pas de paiement de fait sauf une fois par année lorsque nous faisons les comptes et qu'ils nous remboursent la différence. Je n'ai pas de chiffres séparés, mais je pense que c'est de l'ordre de $1 million.

Mr. Macquarrie: Et à la page 5 également, au sujet de l'augmentation...

Ces augmentations venant s'ajouter à la hausse des frais du transport postal...

and so on. What is your projection of the difference in cost of your new all-up policy and the practice as it existed before? How much more will it cost your Department to carry more mail through the air?

Mr. Kierans: You are referring mainly to the first class?

Mr. Macquarrie: Right.

Mr. Kierans: That is where the all-up service applies.

Mr. Pageau: The loss in revenue from the air mail rate that we used to charge on first class over eight ounces in weight and the additional transportation charges that we would have to pay Air Canada because some of this mail is going by air, would be approximately $1.2 million.

Mr. Macquarrie: $1.2 million, yes.

Mr. Kierans: But the service would be a lot better.

An hon. Member: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. Macquarrie: Is the type of mail over the one ounce first class mail?

• 0945

Mr. Kierans: Over eight ounces.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes, eight ounces.

Mr. Kierans: We had the all-up service up to that before.

Mr. Macquarrie: On page 6 you have a reference to important studies on staff relations. How many of the employees of the Post Office Department were on a five-day week before the imposition of five-day delivery? I find there is considerable confusion in the country and the belief that five-day delivery is something new which cuts down six days of work, and so on. I would be interested in that.

Mr. Kierans: Since Mr. Bond took part and represented the Department in the negotiations with the unions for the first major contract that we have concluded with them, I will, ask him to deal with that.

Mr. T. Bond (Assistant Deputy Postmaster General (Operations)): Thank you, sir. The letter carriers, representing about 11,000 to 12,000 people, were on a five-day work week but over a six-day period. This, of course, was prior to bargaining. The postal clerks, representing about the same number of employees, were working five days but over a etc. Quel sera l'influence de votre nouvelle politique d'amélioration sur les structures existantes? Combien cela va-t-il coûter de plus à votre ministère pour transporter plus de courrier par avion?

M. Kierans: Vous voulez parler particulièrement du courrier de première classe?

M. Macquarrie: Exact.

M. Kierans: C'est là où l'amélioration des services s'applique.

M. Pageau: Le déficit résultant du taux d'affranchissement imposé sur le courrier de première classe de plus de huit onces et les frais de transport additionnels que nous devons verser à Air Canada, parce qu'une partie du courrier est acheminée par avion, s'élèverait à environ $1,200,000.

M. Macquarrie: Oui. $1.2 million.

M. Kierans: Mais le service serait bien meilleur.

Une voix: Je suis heureux de l'entendre.

M. Macquarrie: Le genre de courrier au-dessus d'une once est-il première classe?

M. Kierans: Au-dessus de huit onces.

M. Macquarrie: Oui, huit onces.

M. Kierans: Le service a été amélioré jusqu'à ce poids auparavant.

M. Macquarrie: A la page 6, vous parlez des études sur les relations de travail. Combien d'employés du bureau de poste travaillaient cinq jours par semaine, avant l'imposition du service de cinq jours? J'ai constaté que les gens ne sont pas très bien renseignés, et ils pensent que le service de cinq jours est quelque chose de nouveau qui supprime les six jours de travail, etc. J'aimerais avoir des précisions.

M. Kierans: Monsieur Bond ayant représenté le ministère aux négociations avec les syndicats, je vais l'inviter à répondre à cette question.

M. T. Bond (adjoint au sous-ministre des Postes, Opérations): Merci monsieur. Les facteurs qui sont au nombre de 11 ou 12 mille, avaient une semaine de cinq jours de travail mais étalée sur 6 jours. Les commis de bureau de poste dont le nombre est à peu près aussi élevé, travaillaient déjà 5 jours par semaine mais étalés sur 7 jours. C'était la even-day period and this generally applied throughout the work force as it was constituted in the Post Office Department prior to bargaining.

Subsequent to bargaining we continued with the same program until the introduction of the five-day delivery cycle for letter carriers and with the introduction of that program on February 17 the letter carriers are now on a straight five-day cycle, Monday to Friday. The other employees are working their five days, but over the seven-day cycle.

There are other smaller groups within the Post Office Department in the administrative range that are working a five-day week, but I am dealing now basically with the bulk of the employees that are covered by the agreement signed by the Council of Postal Unions on August 9.

Mr. Macquarrie: But neither immediately before nor after did you have six-day employees?

Mr. Bond: There were a number of employees that were working, prior to the bargaining, over five and one-half days. In other words, they would work over a six-day period but they would work one-half day on the sixth day, as it were. As a result of the bargaining, this was eliminated in the Council of Postal Workers which are the inside workers of the bargaining unit of the Council of Postal Unions, and with the introduction of the five-day week, for the letter carriers who, up to that time, had worked over a five and one-half day week this was also discontinued and now it is a straight five-day week for the letter carriers, Monday to Friday.

Mr. Macquarrie: So we have, then, some employees who have had a reduction in their total working hours for a week?

Mr. Bond: No, it was a 40-hour week all the time, but if they worked a five and one-half day week it meant they worked, perhaps, a couple of half days during the week. We adjusted the work schedules to give them complete days of work.

Mr. Macquarrie: So the hour total is the same; on the dispersal over a day basis it has been altered...

Mr. Bond: Right, sir.

Mr. Macquarrie: ...on a narrower base. Now, I have another matter of importance...

The Chairman: I wonder, Mr. Macquarrie, whether we could exhaust all questions on situation générale au sein des Postes avant les négociations.

A la suite des négociations, nous avons continué l'ancien système jusqu'à l'entrée en vigueur du service de cinq jours. A présent les facteurs travaillent du lundi au vendredi les autres employés continuent à travailler cinq jours d'une période de 7 jours.

Il y a d'autres petits groupes de travailleurs qui travaillent cinq jours par semaine, mais je parle actuellement du gros des travailleurs concernés par l'entente conclue avec le Conseil des syndicats des postiers le 9 août.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que vous aviez auparavant des travailleurs qui travaillaient six jours par semaine?

M. Bond: Il y avait plusieurs employés avant les négociations qui travaillaient cinq jours et demi. Ils travaillaient pendant une période de six jours mais seulement une demi-journée le sixième jour. A la suite de négociations ceci a été éliminé pour les employés du Conseil des travailleurs postaux qui sont les employés travaillant à l'intérieur puis cela a été éliminé pour les facteurs à compter de l'entrée en vigueur du service de cinq jours, les facteurs travaillent donc maintenant cinq jours, du lundi au vendredi.

M. Macquarrie: Il y a donc certains employés qui ont vu baisser leur nombre hebdomadaire d'heures de travail?

M. Bond: Non, il y a toujours eu la semaine de 40 heures même si le travail était réparti sur cinq jours et demi.

M. Macquarrie: Le nombre d'heures reste donc le même, elles sont seulement réparties autrement...

M. Bond: Exact.

M. Macquarrie: ...et sur une base plus étroite. Il y a une autre question...

Le président: Je crois, M. Macquarrie, qu'on devrait épuiser toutes les questions avant d'en this particular aspect before moving on to the other items? Does anyone else have any question on this subject?

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Minister, it may not relate to this statement, but what is pressing and what is very important at this time, I think, is the fact that when one raises the charges on services to the people of Canada, the service should become better and to this date this has not happened. I am going to cite just a couple of examples, Mr. Minister.

One is that it takes two days for a letter to go from Ottawa to Vancouver to be delivered, and yet from Ottawa to Toronto it takes four days. Another example is that I mailed a letter to my children from the House of Commons to a residence in Ottawa and that took four days. There is something seriously wrong when this is happening. That is my only question.

Mr. Kierans: There are several problems here. The Economic Council, for example, urges all Canadian enterprises, whether public or private, to increase their productivity. People can write books on the necessity of increasing productivity, but when you really get down to it and introduce the changes in organization, management, attitude, structure, it is a lot more difficult, especially in a corporation or an institution as large as the Post Office, with 48,000 people, because the whole 48,000 or each one of them are affected in different ways by the changes that are taking place. They are moved around, they become somewhat uncertain, they do not know exactly where they are going to end up in all of this, and I think that basically everybody admits that the Post Office is going through a period of very radical and necessary change.

I do not accept the fact that the service is actually worse than it was. What I do admit is that there are an awful lot more complaints. On the other hand, you often get calls from persons saying, for example, that they do not agree with a certain letter published in the newspaper. Last week, for example, I was informed that a letter was mailed in Hamburg on Monday morning and was delivered in Montreal on Tuesday morning.

The point that I want to make here is that people, because they now have to pay a great deal more, legitimately can take a look at delays that they had become accustomed to and never questioned and now begin to question them much more. I am extremely happy about these inquiries, whether they be questions in the House, questions in Committee venir à un autre sujet? Est-ce que quelqu'un d'autres a des questions à poser sur ce sujet?

M. Paproski: Monsieur le ministre, ceci n'a peut-être rien à voir à votre déclaration et ce qui semble être très important, à ce moment-ci, c'est que lorsqu'on augmentera les tarifs de certains services offerts à la population canadienne les services devraient être meilleurs. Jusqu'ici, ce n'est pas ce qui s'est produit, je vais vous citer quelques exemples, monsieur le ministre.

Cela prend deux jours pour qu'une lettre, qui part d'Ottawa se rende à Vancouver mais, d'Ottawa à Toronto cela prend 4 jours. Autre exemple, j'ai mis une lettre à la boîte à la Chambre des communes pour mes enfants qui résident à Ottawa et cette lettre a mis quatre jours à arriver à destination. Il y a quelque chose qui ne va pas, c'est certain. C'est là ma question.

M. Kierans: Il y a plusieurs problèmes en cause. Le Conseil économique, par exemple, demande que les entreprises canadiennes, publiques ou privées accroissent leur productivité. On peut écrire des livres sur la nécessité d'accroître la productivité mais lorsqu'on s'y met et qu'on présente des changements au sein de l'organisation, de la gestion des attitudes et des structures, c'est bien plus difficile, surtout dans le cas d'une institution aussi considérable que le ministère des Postes où chacun des 48,000 employés est affecté de façon assez différente par ces changements. On les transfère, leur sort est quelque peu incertain, et ils ne savent pas exactement où ils vont aboutir à la suite de tous ces changements; et tout le monde reconnaît que le ministère des postes subit des changements radicaux qui s'imposent.

Je n'accepte pas le fait que le service est vraiment pire qu'il était. J'admets toutefois qu'il y a beaucoup plus de plaintes qu'auparavant. D'un autre côté je reçois parfois des appels téléphoniques de gens qui disent qu'ils ne sont pas d'accord avec ce que dit une lettre publiée par les journaux. On me dit que, la semaine dernière, une lettre a été jetée à la poste à Hambourg le lundi et a été livrée à Montréal le mardi matin.

Ce à quoi je veux en venir c'est que parce qu'ils doivent payer davantage, les gens sentent qu'ils peuvent protester à cause des délais auxquels ils étaient habitués auparavant. Je suis très heureux que ces enquêtes soient faites, que ce soit par des questions en Chambre ou devant le Comité, ou que ce soit des plaintes faites par lettre ou par téléphone, ke yours, sir, or complaints that come in by letter or telephone, because when we get them we pay attention to them. We have a whole series of studies going on.

One of our major problems is precisely the one you mentioned, the Ottawa-Toronto-Montreal triangle. This really affects distribution right across Canada, because these are all centres for the distribution of mail.

Mr. Paproski: May I interject a question here, Mr. Minister. Is it correct that since you have instilled the increase on postal rates there has been a problem in this triangle?

Mr. Kierans: Yes.

Mr. Paproski: There was no problem before.

Mr. Kierans: Yes, the problem always existed but people were used to it. I think you will also agree, sir, that in the last six or eight months a great deal more attention has been focussed on the Post Office. I do not know why.

Mr. Paproski: This happens.

Mr. Kierans: Therefore people become concerned with the Post Office and the Postmaster General and take a look at their service much more closely than they ever did in the past. But the problems were already there.

What this does is galvanize us. We have had study teams leave Ottawa, for example, go into Toronto and Montreal and come up with recommendations that if we alter the schedules, or if we add a few more casuals on a certain period, or part time workers, or if we do this or that, we can get the mail sorted 45 minutes earlier, or we can get it out by adapting ourselves to truck schedules that have changed probably over the last three, four or five years, and to which we have not accommodated ourselves.

We are doing all of these things and we are giving our best to improve. We do not like it when a letter leaves Ottawa and is not delivered the next morning in Toronto—we do not like that a bit. But I submit to you that the vast bulk of it is delivered the following day. However, if a small percentage of it is not delivered, the public now are much more aware of it than they were before. I am not excusing it, I am just saying that we have a situation in which we are trying to modernize an institution that is 100 years old.

The Chairman: Would you say that one of our problems is that as a result of the car lorsque nous les recevons nous y portons attention. Il y a une foule d'études et d'enquêtes en cours à l'heure actuelle.

Le problème principal, c'est le triangle Ottawa—Toronto—Montréal, qui affecte la distribution d'un bout à l'autre du Canada car ce sont des centres de distribution du courrier.

M. Paproski: Me permettez-vous de poser une question? Est-il vrai que ce problème existe seulement depuis le moment où vous avez augmenté les frais postaux?

M. Kierans: Oui.

M. Paproski: Il n'y avait pas de problème avant?

M. Kierans: Il y a toujours eu un problème dans cette région, mais les gens s'y étaient habitués. Depuis six ou huit mois, on accorde beaucoup plus d'attention au ministère des Postes. Je ne sais pas exactement pourquoi.

M. Paproski: Ce sont des choses qui arrivent.

M. Kierans: Les gens s'intéressent davantage au ministère des Postes et au ministre des Postes, ils surveillent ce service beaucoup plus qu'ils ne le faisaient par le passé. Toutefois, les problèmes existent depuis toujours. Cela nous place sous une certaine pression. Des équipes d'étude sont parties d'Ottawa pour aller à Toronto et Montréal et ont fait des recommandations selon lesquelles nous modifions les horaires, si nous ajoutons certains employés ici ou là, si l'on fait ceci ou cela, le courrier sera trié 45 minutes plus tôt, nous pourrions en assurer la livraison en nous adoptant aux horaires qui ont changé depuis 3, 4 ou 5 ans.

Nous faisons tout cela, nous faisons tout en notre pouvoir pour améliorer la situation. Nous sommes désolés de voir qu'une lettre qui part d'Ottawa le soir ne soit pas livrée à Toronto le lendemain matin. Je vous assure toutefois que la majorité du courrier est livré le lendemain. Toutefois, si une faible proportion de ce courrier n'est pas livré, je crois que les gens s'en rendent compte beaucoup plus qu'auparavant. Je ne tente pas de trouver des excuses, j'essaie tout simplement de moderniser une institution qui est déjà vieille de cent ans.

Le président: N'avez-vous pas un problème quant au moral des employés depuis le début changes and the studies that you are doing now you have a morale problem among the men working there and that this has caused a certain deterioration in service?

• 0955

Mr. Kierans: I do not think we have a morale problem in the Post Office. As a matter of fact, in travelling across the country and meeting the various people working for the Post Office I have been very much impressed with the dedication and the concern for the service. These people are very conscious of the fact that in the past they have not been given the necessary plant facilities. This is especially true, for example, in Montreal and Toronto. I would judge that of all the post offices I have seen, Edmonton is probably the most automated. Is there another one?

Mr. Bond: Edmonton, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

Mr. Kierans: Yes, the Western ones are automated. Of the three of them, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Edmonton, I was most impressed by Edmonton.

Mr. Paproski: I am glad, Mr. Minister, because that is in my constituency.

Mr. Kierans: I think a lot of it has also had to do with the fact that we, as Members of Parliament, have judged this as a political preserve. We, too, also have something to say in how the Post Office is managed in our respective counties or ridings.

I think most of you are aware that this element of, let us say, interference or intervention in the running and management of the Post Office has been greatly diminished and it now is operating on a very much more businesslike basis. In other words, the people who are at the top of the Post Office, like Mr. Faguy, Mr. Bond, Mr. Malo, Mr. Sinclair and others, are responsible from now on—and I am holding them responsible. I can hold them responsible now because they cannot come back to me with excuses like: Yes, that is all right, but you wanted to name the postmaster in your own riding of Duvernay, or you decided that they needed five post offices whereas three would have been sufficient. I could not have pinned the responsibility on them before, but I can pin it on them now.

Mr. Macquarrie: Could I supplement a question here? In the light of your remarks, Mr. Minister, are you aware that the two spokesmen for the letter carriers told the nation yesterday that mail service is, in fact, des changements, ce qui a entraîné une détérioration du service?

M. Kierans: Je ne crois pas qu'il y ait un problème quant au moral des employés du ministère des Postes. En voyageant d'un bout à l'autre du pays, j'ai rencontré une foule de gens qui travaillent pour le ministère des Postes. J'ai été très impressionné du dévouement et de l'intérêt que ces gens portent au ministère. Ils savent que par le passé ils n'ont pas eu les installations dont ils avaient besoin. C'est particulièrement vrai à Montréal et à Toronto. Je crois que de tous les bureaux que j'ai vus, celui d'Edmonton est le plus automatisé. Y en a-t-il d'autres?

M. Bond: Edmonton, Winnipeg et Vancouver.

M. Kierans: Les bureaux de poste de l'Ouest sont automatisés. Celui d'Edmonton m'a impressionné davantage.

M. Paproski: J'en suis heureux car il est dans ma circonscription.

M. Kierans: Je crois qu'il y a également le fait que, comme députés, nous le voyons comme une réserve politique. Nous avons quelque chose à dire quant à la façon dont les bureaux de poste fonctionnent dans nos circonscriptions.

Vous savez tous que cet élément d'intervention dans l'administration du ministère des postes prend de moins en moins d'importance et que le ministère fonctionne maintenant beaucoup plus comme une entreprise privée, c'est-à-dire que les hauts fonctionnaires du ministère, je pense à M. Faguy, M. Bond, M. Malo et M. Sinclair et d'autres sont responsables de ce qui va se produire à l'avenir et je vais les tenir responsables. Ils ne peuvent pas revenir et me donner des excuses comme, par exemple, oui, c'est très bien, mais vous avez voulu désigner les facteurs dans votre circonscription de Duvernay, ou vous avez à décider que dans telle région il fallait cinq bureaux de poste alors que trois auraient suffi. Je n'aurais pas pu en jeter la responsabilité sur leurs épaules auparavant, mais je peux le faire à présent.

M. Macquarrie: A la suite des commentaires que vous avez faits, monsieur le ministre, savez-vous que les deux représentants des facteurs nous ont dit hier que le niveau du service baissait et que l'inefficacité était à eteriorating and that inefficiency is fast becoming the new guide to operations. So it is not the politicians who are building it up but all, it is your own people.

Mr. Kierans: These are the leaders of the two syndicates. They are making these statements. I have suggested that we have to work with the unions and that they also have to do their part to ensure that there is greater productivity. We realize that the people in the Post Office are handling increasing volumes and that therefore we have to modernize, we have to introduce equipment which has the effect of reducing the number of man-hours or man-days that we require, and that this causes a certain amount of uncertainty. But I quarrel with the statement that there is inefficiency. There is inefficiency but not increasing inefficiency.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, I had not finished my questioning as far as services are concerned.

The Chairman: All right.

Mr. Paproski: You came in with a supplementary, followed by Mr. Macquarrie, and I was lost.

The Chairman: This is the way that this committee works. As long as they are on the same subject, supplementaries are all right.

Mr. Paproski: In going from services to morale problems you certainly are changing the subject matter.

The Chairman: The Chair makes that judgment.

Mr. Paproski: I beg to differ, Mr. Chairman. I do not think that the Chair should make this kind of judgment. There is no connection between services and morale problems. If you think you are right perhaps we could take a little vote in it.

The Chairman: Since this is not a business meeting, no votes are permitted to be taken.

Mr. Paproski: So you make your own rules now. You would be a heck of a guy to have in a poker game.

The Chairman: That way you always win.

Mr. Dinsdale: Just on this point, since Mr. Paproski is raising it, I objected the other présent le mot d'ordre. Ce ne sont donc pas les hommes politiques qui sont en cause, mais vos propres employés.

M. Kierans: Il s'agit des chefs des deux syndicats qui ont fait des déclarations. J'ai dit que nous devons travailler en collaboration avec les syndicats, mais ils ont également un rôle à jouer pour assurer la productivité. Nous savons que les gens des bureaux de poste doivent distribuer un volume plus considérable de courrier et que nous devons donc nous moderniser, introduire des machines qui réduisent le nombre d'heure-hommes de travail, ce qui nous cause certaines inquiétudes. Toutefois, je ne suis pas d'accord avec les déclarations selon lesquelles il y a un manque d'efficacité. Il y a un manque d'efficacité, mais elle n'empire pas.

M. Paproski: Monsieur le président, je n'ai pas terminé mes questions au sujet des services du ministère des Postes.

Le président: D'accord.

M. Paproski: Vous avez posé une question supplémentaire et M. Macquarrie a ajouté son mot, et je n'ai pas pu reprendre la parole.

Le président: C'est ainsi qu'on procède ici. Les questions supplémentaires sont recevables si elles portent sur le même sujet.

M. Paproski: Lorsqu'on passe des services à la question du problème du moral des employés, vous changez le sujet, je crois.

Le président: C'est au président d'en juger.

M. Paproski: Non, monsieur le président, je ne crois pas que le président puisse rendre un tel jugement. Il n'y a pas de rapport entre le problème du service et le problème du moral des employés. Si vous croyez avoir raison, je crois qu'on pourrait prendre un vote.

Le président: Comme nous n'avons rien à étudier, il n'est pas permis de prendre un vote.

M. Paproski: Maintenant, vous faites vos propres règlements. J'aimerais bien nous voir dans une partie de poker.

Le président: Ainsi, on gagne toujours.

M. Dinsdale: Puisque M. Paproski en parle, je me suis opposé l'autre jour à la façon arbitraire dont nous procédons à ce Comité. Surtout à la suite de la décision qui a été prise dans un comité à huis clos, qu'on devait avoir au moins cinq membres pour siéger. J'avais dit à ce moment-là que le minimum ticularly to the decision that was engineered in an in-camera meeting to proceed with a minimum of five members. I said then that the minimum would tend to become a maximum. I was five minutes late getting here this morning, and we were under way with five members of the Conservative Party and one Liberal present. We cannot have this sort of arbitrary procedure if we are going to—

[Text]

The Chairman: Are you excluding me, Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Two Liberals, excuse me.

The Chairman: As a matter of fact, there were three including Mr. Kierans and myself.

Mr. Dinsdale: If we are going to have an effective committee system we cannot have this arbitrary sort of procedure. We have to work as a group and come to decisions that are agreed to by all members of the Committee. You may proceed, Mr. Paproski.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, may I ask Mr. Paproski if Mr. Bond could be permitted to reply a little further to an earlier question. He does not feel he completed his reply to Mr. Macquarrie, and I think it will follow along with your questioning.

Mr. Paproski: All right.

Mr. Bond: I deal with your question, Mr. Macquarrie, basically in relation to the Council of Postal Unions, which by membership is the largest bargaining unit in the Post Office Department. We are aware, of course, that there is the Canadian Postmasters' Association which bargains separately for the employees in what we call semi-staff and revenue post offices and in these areas, of course, the scheduled hours a week are in accordance with the negotiations that were conducted between the Department and the Canadian Postmasters' Association.

In the smaller revenue post offices you will find postmasters who are open for business six days a week. The post office is run in conjunction with a small store or business and when he is open for business he just runs his post office as part of the business. Again in the semi-staff offices, which are the larger ones—they are between our letter carrier offices and our smaller revenue offices in small stores, and things of that nature—you will find variations of the work cycle. It will be 40 hours in the semi-staff offices but it may be over a five and one half day period aurait tendance à devenir un maximum. Je suis arrivé cinq minutes en retard ce matin et il y avait ici cinq députés conservateurs et un libéral. Nous ne pouvons pas procéder de façon aussi arbitraire...

Le président: Est-ce que vous ne me comprenez pas, M. Dinsdale?

M. Dinsdale: Deux députés libéraux, pardon!

Le président: En fait, il y en avait trois, y compris M. Kierans et moi-même.

M. Dinsdale: Si notre Comité doit être efficace, nous ne pouvons pas procéder de façon aussi arbitraire. Nous devons travailler comme un groupe sait le faire, et prendre des décisions sur lesquelles tous les membres du Comité doivent être d'accord. Vous pouvez continuer, monsieur Paproski.

M. Kierans: Monsieur le président, puis-je demander à M. Paproski si M. Bond ne pourrait pas apporter quelques précisions à une question qu'on a déjà soulevée? Il n'a pas eu le temps de terminer sa réponse à la question de M. Macquarrie, semble-t-il. Il passera ensuite à votre question.

M. Paproski: D'accord.

M. Bond: Je rattache votre question, monsieur Macquarrie, au problème posé par le Conseil des unions des postiers du Canada qui est la plus grande unité de négociation du ministère des Postes, au point de vue membres. Nous savons bien sûr qu'il existe une Association des maîtres de poste du Canada qui négocie uniquement pour les employés des bureaux semi-urbains et à commission. Dans ces secteurs, les heures de travail prévues sont en accord avec ce qui a été négocié entre l'Association des maîtres de poste du Canada et le ministère.

Dans les plus petits bureaux de poste à commission, le maître de poste est de service six jours par semaine. On exploite le bureau de poste en même temps qu'un petit magasin ou un autre petit commerce. Alors les heures du bureau de poste sont les mêmes que les heures d'ouverture du magasin. Dans les bureaux semi-urbains, les plus importants, il y a des variations dans les cycles de travail entre les bureaux avec facteurs et les plus petits bureaux à commission, ou autres du même genre. On peut avoir 40 heures dans les bureaux semi-urbains, mais on peut avoir un one week and perhaps four and one half days the following week. I merely wanted to clarify this.

The Chairman: Mr. Paproski?

Mr. Paproski: I was going to cite an example here, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Minister. The fact that you have budgeted for quite a large amount of money, your intention is to eventually bring new equipment into the postal departments, and I think the reason for the increase in postal rates is to get enough funds so that you can modernize your postal departments.

However, I must also bring to your attention, sir, that at one time the postal service was not intended to make money. It was intended to be a service like Air Canada was at one time, a service for the people of Canada, and the tendency seems to be getting away from that. I realize that you have to get your equipment, but can you project into the future and tell us when you expect to get some of this new equipment from the United States for modernizing your postal departments and how long a period of time it is going to take before you can revitalize your postal departments with the new sorting equipment which they are now using in some of the modern post offices in the United States?

Mr. Kierans: In reply, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the increase in postal rates really related more to history than it did to the future. We were faced with a situation where, without any increase in postal rates, the deficit that would have been before this year would have been somewhere between $130 million and $140 million.

Therefore we were faced with the question of whether we should take a look at the past philosophy that this is a service that is to be provided. It is a service that is to be provided. Should it be provided at less than cost? We felt that it should not. This is a service that is being used by different segments of society in varying degrees. The business community uses it a lot more than you or I, or even as the presidents of corporations do in a personal way.

période de travail de cinq jours et demi, une semaine, et quatre jours et demi la semaine suivante. Tout ce que je voulais, c'est éclaircir la question.

Le président: Monsieur Paproski?

M. Paproski: Je voudrais donner un exemple, monsieur le président, et monsieur le ministre. Votre budget prévoit une forte somme d'argent; votre intention est donc d'acquérir un nouvel équipement pour le ministère des Postes, un jour ou l'autre. Et je crois que la raison pour laquelle vous avez accru les tarifs d'affranchissement, c'est de pouvoir acquérir cet équipement plus moderne.

Mais je dois aussi vous faire remarquer, monsieur, qu'à un moment donné le Service postal n'avait pas pour but de faire ces frais. Le ministère des Postes était tout simplement un service, tout comme Air Canada, à un moment donné, était un service pour la population du Canada, mais on tend, semble-t-il à s'écarter de cela. Je sais que vous devez moderniser votre équipement, mais pouvez-vous nous dire quand vous espérez recevoir ces nouveaux appareils des États-Unis, pour moderniser les installations du ministère des Postes, et combien de temps cela prendra avant que vous puissiez rajeunir, disons, votre ministère des Postes avec le nouveau matériel de tri qu'on utilise actuellement aux États-Unis, dans certains bureaux de poste modernes?

M. Kierans: Monsieur le président, pour répondre, disons que la hausse des tarifs d'affranchissement portait plutôt sur le passé que sur l'avenir. Nous avions à faire face à une situation où le déficit, cette année, aurait été de 130 à 140 millions de dollars, s'il n'y avait pas eu de hausse des tarifs d'affranchissement.

Alors, c'est à ce moment-là qu'on a dû se poser la question: devons-nous étudier le passé et voir si c'est un service que nous devons fournir? C'est un service que nous devons fournir. Est-ce qu'on doit le fournir à moins que le prix coûtant? Nous avons cru que non, c'est un service qui est utilisé par différents secteurs de la société, à des degrés divers. Le monde des affaires l'utilise beaucoup plus que vous et moi, et plus que les présidents des grandes sociétés le font d'une façon personnelle.

En moyenne, une famille envoie une lettre par semaine. Dans une grande entreprise, par exemple les compagnies d'électricité ou de téléphone, on expédie des dizaines de milliers companies—can be many tens of thousands of letters per week. Should those people pay for these services?

Basically the whole orientation of the rate increases was that in first class mail there was a legitimate reason for asking a family that mailed one letter a week to pay for that letter. The increase from 5 cents to 6 cents meant an increase of 50 cents a year, but if that same family used the service more than the average and mailed five letters a week, it would cost $2.50 a year. Is there any reason that a family with a prolific letter writer among its members should be subsidized by a family that has not?

Mr. Paproski: The family that writes together pays together!

M. Kierans: Quant au courrier de la troisième classe mail is there any reason why those firms which use the advertising media, the direct mail media, as a means of promoting the sale of their products should not pay the full cost? A similar situation applies in the case of parcel post.

Of course, we are still faced with the basic dilemma that we subsidize—and this is virtually the only area that we subsidize or have wanted to subsidize—the second class mail. This goes back to the beginning of the creation of the Post Office, when the only means of communication was by mail. It was the printed word which had to be mailed and carried by the Post Office. We are now going to subsidize that to the extent, I would think, of at least about $40 million next year.

That is why there has been this partial increase of about $90 million instead of $130 million to bring us closer than we were to a break-even point. We will not recover all of the remaining $40 million over the next four or five years by improved methods but we will recover a great deal of it.

However, in the meantime, of course, costs will keep going up. So, the principle of the increases has been, as much as possible, to charge the people who actually use our services, the cost of those services.

With respect to the future, a series of studies is being conducted by Kates, Peat, Marwick & Co., and other types of firms are involved in it as well, and they are each investigating and preparing studies and making recommendations on various aspects of the Post Office; the internal flow of communications, transportation services, marketing services, the over-all possibilities and the philosophical aspects of whether this should de lettres par semaine. Ces gens devraient-ils payer pour les services qu'ils reçoivent?

Cette hausse des tarifs découle avant tout du fait qu'il existe une raison légitime d'accroître le tarif d'affranchissement du courrier de la première classe, et d'exiger d'une famille qui expédie une lettre par semaine qu'elle paie l'affranchissement de cette lettre. La hausse de 5 à 6 cents signifiait une augmentation de 50 cents par an, mais si la famille expédie cinq lettres par semaine, elle paiera en conséquence $2.50 par an. Si la famille compte un épistolier prolifique, est-ce que nous devrions faire payer tous ses frais par des familles qui n'utilisent que très peu le poste?

M. Paproski: La famille qui écrit ensemble paie ensemble!

M. Kierans: Quant au courrier de la troisième classe, y a-t-il des raisons pour que les maisons qui utilisent la publicité par la poste pour promouvoir la vente de leurs produits n'en assument pas tous les frais. Le même cas se présente pour les colis postaux. Alors nous avons à faire face au même dilemme devrions-nous fournir des subventions dans le cas du courrier de la deuxième classe? C'est le seul secteur que nous avons subventionné ou voulu subventionner. Cela se fait depuis la création du ministère des Postes, alors que le seul moyen de communication était la poste. L'écrit était transporté par le ministère des Postes. Nous allons donc fournir des fonds, j'en crois, jusqu'à concurrence de 40 millions de dollars au moins, l'année prochaine.

C'est pourquoi il y a eu cette année partielle d'environ 90 millions de dollars, au lieu de 130 millions pour nous rapprocher du seuil de rentabilité. Nous ne recouvrerons pas tous les autres 40 millions, au cours des quatre ou cinq prochaines années, grâce à des méthodes améliorées, mais au moins une bonne partie.

En attendant, les prix vont continuer à monter. Le but de la hausse est donc de mettre les frais en accord avec ce que les gens utilisent comme service, en fonction du coût des services.

Pour ce qui est de l'avenir, nous avons une série d'études menées actuellement, par la maison Kates, Peat, Marwick and Co., et différentes entreprises qui font des enquêtes sur ce sujet et formulent des propositions concernant les différents aspects du travail du ministère des Postes: les communications interérieures, les transports, la commercialisation, les possibilités générales concernant l'orientation du travail du ministère pour voir si c be treated as a Crown corporation or whether some day in the future you can recommend that this should be a Crown corporation.

Their studies must be completed in September, and at that time I will be better able to answer when we will introduce extensive modernization. In the meantime it is certain that we will have to make decisions this year in Montreal and Toronto. These are decisions that may, for financial reasons, have to be postponed temporarily but the decisions will be made to modernize Montreal and Toronto, and it may take five to seven years before we have the kind of plant and equipment there that we feel will provide the type of service that the people of those cities and areas, because they are international centres of distribution, and the people of Canada have a right to expect.

Mr. Comeau: As Postmaster General which chairman.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Comeau: As Postmaster General which do you favour more highly, to make this a paying department or to increase the services?

Mr. Kierans: The demand for services comes from the people and the services that they demand will be given to them but at the price those services cost. We can do it in one of two ways: we can charge the people who want special air mail services or who want a special service for the delivery of mail order catalogues at cost including, let us say, an element for depreciation of the equipment that is involved in providing that service, or we can charge them as part of the general expaying public.

If you ask me which I favour I will make the distinction—and I think it is the same distinction that you are making—that I do not think this should be a charge on the general taxpayers of Canada but on those people who use the services and who benefit from the particular services. Mind you, that is from a business point of view, that is from the point of view of a Minister charged with this particular department. From the over-all political point of view it may be decided that there are certain services that must continue to be subsidized, but I think that we are going to outline very clearly what those services are that are being subsidized so that the people of Canada will know.

Mr. Comeau: Are you convinced, sir, that the service has improved since you came, or ne devrait pas faire de ce ministère une société de la Couronne.

Ces études doivent être terminées pour septembre. A ce moment-là, nous serons mieux placés pour vous dire quand nous serons en mesure de mettre en vigueur la modernisation. Nous essayons de commencer ce travail dès cette année à Toronto et à Montréal. Il faudrait peut-être remettre certaines décisions, pour des raisons financières, mais on va décider de moderniser les bureaux de Montréal et de Toronto. Cela prendra peut-être de cinq à sept ans avant que nous ayons les appareils et le matériel nécessaires pour fournir les services que les gens de ces centres internationaux de distribution peuvent espérer obtenir.

M. Comeau: J'ai une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président.

Le président: Allez-y.

M. Comeau: En tant que ministre des Postes, qu'est-ce que vous préférez? Faire de votre ministère un ministère payant, ou accroître vos services?

M. Kierans: Les exigences concernant le service viennent des gens. Et, les services qu'ils exigent leur seront fournis au prix que ces services coûtent. Nous pouvons le faire de deux façons: nous pouvons faire payer les gens qui veulent un service spécial de poste aérienne, ou qui veulent un service spécial de livraison, et exiger d'eux un tarif comprenant, disons, une certaine fraction pour tenir compte de la dépréciation de l'équipement ou encore, nous pouvons incorporer ces frais à ceux que paie le grand public.

Je fais ici une distinction. Je crois que vous faites la même. Je crois qu'on ne devrait pas imputer ces frais à tous les contribuables canadiens, mais seulement à ces gens qui utilisent certains services spéciaux. En tant que ministre en charge de ce ministère. Au point de vue politique, il y a certains services pour lesquels nous devons continuer de subventionner, mais il faudra établir clairement quels sont ces services de sorte que la population soit au courant.

M. Comeau: Est-ce que vous êtes convaincu que le service s'est amélioré depuis votre do you have enough statistics to show that it has?

Mr. Kierans: No, I would not have those. I would not expect that you would be able to show that this reorganization is proving out until the end of a year.

It is something like any corporation. Let us say a corporation is going through an extensive reorganization because it had a loss in the tens of millions of dollars. Very few corporations that go through that kind of an upheaval will get out of that loss in three months, four months, or even six months, because obviously there is a problem of morale; there is a problem of emphasis in one direction or another, one activity or another, the cutting out of loss operations, and all the rest. This takes a long while—two, three, four years—to work its way through a system of 48,000 employees, to come back to my own.

The Chairman: Perhaps we could go back to Mr. Paproski and then Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Paproski: I have one final question, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Minister, what is the rough figure for modernizing? You have said that you set the goal of seven years, approximately seven to ten years, to modernize. Have you projected a long-range plan of how much it is going to cost you to modernize first the total Post Office, then Toronto and Montreal separately?

Mr. Kierans: No, we have not, because this is what the studies are all about at the moment, and they are very extensive studies. But I can give you an idea of the cost. For example, if we wanted to build a first-class main terminal in downtown Toronto, I think that would be, including equipment, of the order of $60 million. If we decided to reinforce that in the various metropolitan areas, the borough areas, Scarborough, North York and the rest, with smaller terminals, each of those could cost $9 million or $10 million, I would imagine, fully equipped. The same thing would go for Montreal, but we have not made the decision on how we will do it. We have had enough studies going on for years that these decisions have to be made, but that gives you an order of magnitude.

Mr. Paproski: Thank you.

arrivée. Est-ce que vous avez des statistiques à l'appui?

M. Kierans: Non, je n'ai pas de statistique et je ne m'attends pas à être en mesure d'indiquer les fruits de cette réorganisation avant la fin de l'année.

C'est la même chose qui se produit dans toute grande société. Disons qu'une société entreprend une importante réorganisation parce qu'elle a subi une perte de plusieurs dizaines de millions de dollars. Il leur faudrait de nombreux mois avant de pouvoir combler ce déficit, parce qu'évidemment il y a un problème de morale; il y a un problème de mettre l'accent dans une direction ou dans l'autre; la réduction des opérations à perte est tout le reste. Cela peut prendre de trois à quatre années avant qu'il touche un personnel de 48,000 employés, et que j'en aie des échos.

Le président: On pourrait peut-être laisser la parole à M. Paproski et ensuite à M. Stewart.

M. Paproski: Une dernière question, monsieur le président et monsieur le ministre, pourriez-vous me donner un chiffre approximatif du coût de la modernisation? Vous dites que vous avez établi un programme de sept années, environ sept ou dix années, en vue de moderniser. Avez-vous établi un plan à long terme? Combien en coûtera-t-il d'abord pour rénover tous les bureaux de poste au complet et ensuite le coût de celui de Toronto et de Montréal séparément?

M. Kierans: Non, les études que nous faisons actuellement portent là-dessus. Nous n'avons pas encore les chiffres. Les études sont très approfondies. Je puis vous donner une idée du coût. Par exemple, si nous voulons construire un nouveau terminus postal pour le courrier de première classe dans le centre de Toronto cela coûterait quelque chose comme $60 millions y compris l'équipement. Si on décide d'améliorer les services à Scarborough, North York et les autres régions avoisinantes en les dotant de nouveaux terminus, cela pourrait coûter de $9 à $10 million dans chaque cas, y compris l'équipement complet. Ce serait la même chose à Montréal. Mais nous n'avons pas pris de décision encore concernant la façon dont nous le ferons. Nous avons des études en cours depuis plusieurs années mais nous n'avons pas encore pris de décision. Vous avez quasiment une idée de la tâche en main.

M. Paproski: Je vous remercie.

[Texte]

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Has it not been the pride of the Canada Post Office and the claim or the past number of years that one-day service anywhere in Canada is a fact?

Mr. Kierans: I do not think we had one-day service anywhere in Canada, Mr. Stewart. The major problem with increasing mail is the facilities with which you are operating in the main distribution terminals.

If you are operating out of plants and facilities that were geared to a very much slower pace of activity, such as the Canada of the thirties, and you still have those same facilities and those same buildings, and when you have the kind of mammoth activity that you have today, then obviously it is not the fault of the people working in that environment. You cannot blame them. You can simply say that because of other needs, whatever it may have been, the government has not, in the past ten or twenty years, invested in the plant and equipment that would allow them to do the job and to maintain this objective. In other words, in a slower-paced Canada it was possible, but now it takes a lot longer to go through the main distribution centres.

However, I still feel that we can make enough improvements as a result these studies to take us through the next two or three years, so that we can greatly improve our performance and so that the bulk of the mail—and by the bulk of the first class mail I mean about 95 per cent of it—will go through with one-day delivery service.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): So you feel that it is a question of the facilities and so on, rather than a desire on the part of employees to work to rule.

Mr. Kierans: I would say that if any private corporation had been handling the mail and had seen its volume increase year by year the way the Post Office's volume has increased, that private corporation would long since have built the kind of facilities and would have invested in the kind of equipment that is necessary today.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Minister, you were saying that the naming of a postmaster in a certain riding is a thing of the past; that rather than ask for five post offices where three would do, this kind of thing cannot come about. I am just wondering about this.

[Interprétation]

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Le ministère des Postes du Canada ne laissait-il pas entendre au cours des dernières années que la livraison du courrier le jour même partout au Canada pourrait devenir réalité?

M. Kierans: Non, nous n'avons pas de service le jour même, partout au Canada, monsieur Stewart. Avec l'augmentation du courrier, ce sont les installations dans les principaux centres de distribution, qui constituent le principal problème.

Si le rythme d'activité est plus faible, comme dans les années trente, par exemple, et que vous avez les mêmes installations, avec l'augmentation du travail qu'il y a aujourd'hui, ce n'est pas la faute des gens qui travaillent à cet endroit. On ne peut pas les blâmer. On peut simplement dire qu'à cause d'autres besoins, quels qu'ils soient, le gouvernement n'a pas, au cours des dix ou douze années, investi des sommes suffisantes à l'achat du matériel nécessaire pour tenir compte de la situation nouvelle. Au Canada, cela était possible il y a quelques années mais aujourd'hui, c'est assez difficile de le faire aux principaux centres de distribution.

Je crois, toutefois, que nous pouvons faire des améliorations suffisamment importantes, à la suite de ces études, pour nous permettre de traverser les deux ou trois prochaines années, et améliorer grandement notre rendement de façon à ce que l'ensemble du courrier de première classe, ou 90 p. 100 de ce courrier fasse l'objet du service de livraison en 24 heures.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Il nous semble que c'est une question d'établissements et d'installations, plutôt qu'une grève du zèle.

M. Kierans: Je pense que si une société privée avait entrepris le travail du ministère des Postes et avait vu son volume de travail augmenter d'année en année, de la façon dont cela s'est produit au ministère des Postes, cette société privée aurait établi, depuis longtemps, le genre d'installations que nous désirons et qui s'imposent.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Monsieur le ministre, vous disiez que la nomination des maîtres de poste dans certaines circonscriptions est quelque chose du passé. Qu'il n'y aurait plus de cas où l'on demande 5 bureaux de poste lorsque 3 suffiraient. Je me demande donc si

[Text]

Do you infer by this that there is a certain amount of patronage in the Post Office that is being done away with?

Mr. Kierans: Let me put it this way. When you find, let us say, four sub-post offices in an area of about 2.8 miles and you look at it and you figure that you can replace the four sub-post offices by adding 2.8 miles to an existing rural route and save the Canadian taxpayers many thousands of dollars in the process, and give the people who live in that area much better service, then you have to ask yourself how it was that the four sub-post offices were opened?

We have all kinds of examples. We have an example where the only customers of one of these post offices were the postmaster and his wife. We have other examples where you have ten or twelve people who are customers of a post office that would cost in the order of $1,700 where the total sales of stamps—I am not talking about the profit—was $82. This is the kind of thing—whether this is patronage or what I do not know. But it is not business, and it is not fair use or allocation of the taxpayer's funds.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I think we all appreciate your doing away with that kind of thing, Mr. Minister. I am sure that patronage is something that we want to get away from. But I am just wondering if the same thing cannot apply to the public servants, who perhaps make choices based on their own considerations, the way politicians might on their own. This thing works both ways, and I wonder if perhaps the fact that the three most modern post offices in Canada are in the Western Provinces is not a reflection on the higher management of the Public Service portion of the Post Office.

Mr. Kierans: Yes, but we have to accept ministerial responsibility. Ministerial responsibility really implies that if there is a lack of suggestions coming forward from the Public Service for improving the services, then it is up to the Minister to make such suggestions himself. On the other hand I would say that both previous Ministers and the senior officers in the Post Office—and I know this for a fact—had a long list of suggestions for improvement of the services, which for lack of funds or other reasons were not considered to be priority.

Let us face it, for a long time people wondered why we should automate the Post Office or modernize it. People considered that as long as there was unemployment in Canavous voulez dire par là qu'il y a une certaine quantité de patronage au ministère des Postes qu'on va éliminer?

M. Kierans: Permettez-moi de m'expliquer. Lorsque vous vous apercevez qu'il y a quatre bureaux de poste secondaires dans une région de 2.8 milles que vous étudiez cela et que vous vous apercevez que vous pouvez remplacer ces bureaux de poste en ajoutant 2.8 milles à une route rurale existante, et épargner ainsi des milliers de dollars aux contribuables, tout en donnant aux gens qui vivent dans cette région un meilleur service. Alors, il faut se demander comment il se fait qu'il y avait quatre bureaux de poste secondaires.

Nous avons beaucoup d'exemples, même un exemple où un des seuls clients d'un bureau de poste étaient le maître de poste et son épouse. Il y avait des endroits où il y avait dix ou douze clients à un bureau de poste qui coûte quelque chose comme $1,700 et où la vente totale des timbres, je ne parle pas des bénéfices, était de $82. Est-ce que c'est du patronage? Je ne sais pas, mais ce n'est pas une utilisation rationnelle de l'argent des contribuables.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): J'apprécie la façon dont vous réglez ce genre de problème, monsieur le ministre. Je suis certain que le patronage est quelque chose dont nous voulons nous débarrasser, mais je me demande simplement si la même chose ne peut pas s'appliquer aux fonctionnaires qui font des choix fondés sur leurs propres intérêts, de la même façon dont les politiciens le font. Il y a les deux côtés de la médaille. Je me demande si le fait que les deux bureaux de poste les plus modernes se trouvent dans les provinces de l'Ouest ne reflète pas la haute administration du ministère assurée par la Fonction publique.

M. Kierans: Nous devons prendre des responsabilités en tant que ministre. La responsabilité ministérielle comporte un manque de propositions de la part de la Fonction publique visant l'amélioration du service, de sorte qu'il appartient au ministre de les faire lui-même. Les deux ministres des Postes précédents et les hauts fonctionnaires du ministère, et j'en suis certain, avaient une longue liste de propositions visant l'amélioration du service auxquelles, à cause d'un manque de fonds, ou pour d'autres raisons, ils n'ont pas pu donner la priorité.

Depuis longtemps, reconnaissons-le, les gens se demandent pourquoi on devrait automatiser les bureaux de poste ou les moderniser. Puisqu'il y a tant de chômage au Canada la, the best way to solve the unemployment problem was to put people into the Post Office. They did not realize that we are living in a completely different kind of world, that machine power can do much more and demands less space and fewer facilities than manpower.

The Chairman: I have a supplementary question from Mr. Broadbent, and then Mr. Comeau on Mr. Stewart's question.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Kierans, I was interested in your comments on the social philosophy, if you like, of the postal department. What would you think of the idea of taking a service like the postal service and treating it as a service that should be open to anyone, not necessarily for the direct users to pay for, but as a general social good, in the same way as educational facilities, highways, and so on? What lies behind this is long run social philosophy, if you like.

There are certain people who believe that the kind of society we should be moving towards is one in which monetary barriers between people and institutions should be broken down, and it has been argued by some theoreticians, at least, that one of the best ways of doing this is to take as many goods and services out of the commodity market as you possibly can and pay for them collectively through a taxation system. So take, for example, the post office, we could wipe out all costs...

Mr. Kierans: Not all costs; all charges.

Mr. Broadbent: ...all charges and pay for these services through income and corporate taxes. Now, what would be your ideas on this as a general social philosophy and second—and not, of course, unrelated to it—could it be efficiently done?

Mr. Kierans: I would say that the post office rates have very low priority on the basis of your criterion, Mr. Broadbent. You are talking about the taxes taken from the people of Canada, and if the taxes paid by the general public are to pay for things that the general public wants, education would rate number one, or perhaps health—I do not know. Perhaps it would be social welfare, but all three anyway would rate far above the post office as having a first claim on the taxes paid by the people of Canada.

After you have satisfied all the claims in these areas of education, health, welfare, and the other things that people want, including actuellement, le meilleur moyen de régler le problème c'est de faire travailler les gens aux bureaux de poste. Ils ne se rendent pas compte que tout le contexte est changé, que les machines peuvent faire beaucoup plus que l'homme tout en exigeant moins de locaux et de services.

Le président: Une question supplémentaire de M. Broadbent, puis M. Comeau au sujet de la question de M. Stewart.

M. Broadbent: Monsieur Kierans, vos commentaires sur la philosophie sociale du ministère des Postes m'ont vraiment intéressé. Que pensez-vous de l'idée de prendre un service comme le service postal, et d'en faire un service qui serait ouvert à tout le monde et non pas nécessairement à la charge des utilisateurs directs, mais comme un bien pour la société en général, tout comme l'enseignement, les routes, et ainsi de suite. Il y a une philosophie sociale qui sous-tend tout cela.

Il y en a qui croient que le genre de société à laquelle nous devrions aspirer en est une où les barrières monétaires entre les gens et les institutions seraient éliminées. Certains théoriciens ont soutenu qu'une des meilleures manières de les éliminer est de tirer le plus de biens et de services possible du marché des produits et de les payer au moyen de taxes. Par exemple, au ministère des Postes, nous pourrions éliminer tous les coûts...

M. Kierans: Pas tous les coûts, tous les frais.

M. Broadbent: ...tous les frais et payer pour ses services au moyen d'impôts sur le revenu des particuliers et des sociétés. Quel serait votre opinion là-dessus en tant que philosophie sociale et est-ce que cela peut se faire de façon efficace?

M. Kierans: Je dirais que les taux des bureaux de poste, selon vos critères, n'ont pas de priorité. Vous parlez des taxes que l'on tire de la population du Canada. Si les taxes payées par le public en général doivent servir à défrayer ce que les gens désirent, l'éducation, ou la santé, aurait la première priorité. Ce serait peut-être le bien-être social mais ces domaines auraient probablement la priorité sur le service des postes concernant l'attribution des recettes fiscales.

Après avoir répondu à toutes les demandes de la santé, de l'enseignement, du bien-être, y compris les propositions qui ont été faites par those suggested to them by your party and the Liberal party and others, if you then have money left over to pay for providing free postal services to all the people of Canada I would say, yes, all right. However, I cannot see the day coming in the foreseeable future when we could say that we can finance all of the needs and satisfy all of the needs of our young people for education, and of our older people for pensions, and the entire population for health care, and also decide that we are going to subsidize all the users of the postal service.

In other words, while I rate myself a very important department, I do not rate the Post Office Department as having a priority over any of these and we are not anywhere near satisfying the needs of people in these areas. Until we are, your question is irrelevant and I do not think it is going to become relevant for a long time to come.

Mr. Broadbent: I would agree that in any real society now you have a scarcity of resources so you have to make decisions in terms of certain social priorities, and the ones you enumerated I think I and most Canadians would agree with. However, I am not sure that really hits the question dead on. For example, you spend so much on society for postal services. In the kind of scheme you propose, broadly speaking, the users are going to pay, but if we have a different social priority—say, one of re-distributing wealth—you might decide to pay for that service out of income tax, roughly, or income corporation tax, and make all of us who earn more than $10,000 a year, or corporations, in effect pay for the same service you are talking about, while everyone else who earns less than $10,000 may not have to pay one cent if you pay for it out of general revenue. Would that not make sense?

• 1025

Mr. Kierans: It would make sense if you could tell me where the money is coming from. But I tell you what makes sense to me is that if I had done nothing there would have been a deficit exceeding $130 million next year, and what does that mean? That means simply this: before the government could address itself to the needs of the people for health care, education, and other priorities, it would have to subtract $130 million from revenues. In other words, it would be taking that away from the people who have a right to expect better pensions or whatever it may be, including Mr. Knowles' suggestion in the House.

[Interpretation]

votre parti et d'autres, si tous les gens sont satisfaits que tout a été fait et qu'il vous reste de l'argent pour fournir un service postal gratuit aux gens du Canada, alors je serais d'accord. Mais je ne vois pas comment cela pourra se faire dans un avenir prochain où nous pourrions répondre à tous les besoins de l'éducation des jeunes et des pensions de retraite pour les gens âgés, et de services sociaux et de santé pour l'ensemble de la population, et ensuite décider de fournir un service postal subventionné par tous les usagers.

Je sais que bien que je sois à la tête d'un ministère important, nous n'avons pas la priorité sur les ministères que j'ai mentionnés et je ne crois pas que nous sommes prêts de répondre à tous les besoins dans ces domaines. Je ne crois pas que votre question soit pertinente pour le moment.

M. Broadbent: Je sais que dans une société il y a des ressources limitées et il faut prendre des décisions concernant l'utilisation et la répartition de ces ressources, selon les priorités énumérées. Je suis d'accord, et la plupart des Canadiens le sont également. Mais est-ce que vous répondez bien à la question à ce moment-là? Vous avez dépensé pour assurer des services postaux à la société. Dans le régime que vous proposez les utilisateurs vont payer pour ces services, mais si nous avions des priorités sociales différentes, une redistribution des richesses, par exemple, que l'on financerait à partir des impôts sur le revenu des particuliers et des sociétés, tous les gens qui gagnent plus de $10,000 par année et les sociétés, paient pour les services dont vous parlez, tandis que tous les gens qui gagnent moins de $10,000 n'auraient rien à payer si vous tirez vos fonds des recettes publiques. Est-ce que cela ne serait pas possible?

M. Kierans: Oui, si vous pouviez me dire d'où vient l'argent. Ce qui, pour moi, a du sens c'est que si nous n'avions rien fait, il y aurait eu un déficit de plus de $130 millions des recettes. Autrement dit, il enlèverait aux gens qui sont en mesure de s'attendre à de meilleures pensions, et ainsi de suite, y compris la proposition faite par M. Knowles en Chambre.

Texte]

Now, let us say that instead of $130 million deficit we broke even in the Post Office. This would mean that we would have $130 million more than otherwise to pay for other needs that are real needs, because the general public is not suffering from this increase in taxation—the general public is not suffering. The people who now are being asked to pay for the actual cost of these services—the close to 10 per cent via first-class mail—are the business firms who send it. They are the ones so, in effect, they are being charged.

Mr. Broadbent: There are two aspects to the question and I am not trying to make rhetorical points, or something. If one is really interested in moving towards this kind of society you might be able to do it and pay the costs now. If, to take your example, most of the first-class mail comes from businesses, increase corporation taxes and let everyone, including the businesses that have to stamp all their envelopes whenever they use them, just put them in the mail box without anything on them.

Mr. Kierans: Yes, but do you know what would happen? When goods or services are free, Mr. Broadbent, what happens?

Mr. Broadbent: A lot of people would use it.

Mr. Kierans: Yes, a lot of people would use it who would not otherwise use it and instead of 48,000 people we would have perhaps 75,000 people in the Post Office. We would have twice as many post offices, we would need twice as much capital investment, plant and equipment, all for something we have declared free.

Let us just take the situation the way it is. The situation is that next year our costs are going to be in excess of $500 million. Then we decide that this is a service that should be made available to everybody free. Our costs would not remain there, but let us say that they did remain there, in excess of $500 million. That comes out of corporations, your income taxes, your sales taxes and everything else, and that $500 million is spent on providing services instead of secondary education or our young people, because you cannot spend the same $500 million twice, can you?

I think your point is to tell us or show us where we can get that extra $500 million. You say, well just raise the taxes on corporations. If you raise the taxes on corporations above the general average in the western world, our corporations are that much weaker in their competitive struggle in international markets.

[Interprétation]

Disons qu'au lieu d'avoir un déficit de $130 millions, nous pouvions faire nos frais. C'est-à-dire que nous aurions $130 millions de plus que nous avons actuellement pour les besoins qui constituent des besoins réels car le public ne souffre pas de cette hausse des impôts. Les gens à qui l'on demande de payer pour le coût réel de ces services, soit près de 80 p. 100 de notre courrier de première classe, sont des entreprises commerciales. Ce sont eux qui utilisent le service, c'est donc à eux de payer.

M. Broadbent: Il y a deux aspects à la question, et je ne veux pas faire de rhétorique. Si l'on veut en arriver à ce genre de société, on pourrait le faire et le défrayer. Pour reprendre votre exemple, disons que la plupart du courrier de première classe vient des entreprises, qu'on accroisse les impôts sur les sociétés, et laissez tout le monde, y compris les entreprises qui doivent affranchir leurs lettres, utiliser ce service sans frais.

M. Kierans: Oui, mais vous savez ce qui se produit quand un service est gratuit.

M. Broadbent: Beaucoup de gens s'en servent.

M. Kierans: Oui, beaucoup de gens vont s'en servir qui autrement ne s'en serviraient pas; au lieu de 48,000, il nous faudrait peut-être 75,000 employés. Nous aurons deux fois plus de bureaux de poste, nous devons avoir deux fois plus d'immobilisations et tout cela pour un service gratuit.

Prenons la situation telle qu'elle est. L'an prochain, nos frais seront de plus de $500 millions. Nous décidons alors que ce service doit être mis gratuitement à la disposition de tout le monde. Les frais n'en resteraient pas à $500 millions, je suis certain qu'ils augmenteraient, et même si ils restaient à ce niveau, il faudrait le tirer des impôts sur les sociétés, les particuliers, les taxes de vente, etc. Tout cela servirait à fournir ce genre de services au lieu de servir à l'éducation des jeunes. Parce que vous ne pouvez pas dépenser le même $500 millions deux fois.

Vous voulez nous dire où on peut trouver ces $500 millions, en augmentant les impôts sur les sociétés. Mais si l'on hausse les impôts sur les sociétés au-dessus de la moyenne du monde occidental, nous allons affaiblir la position concurrentielle de nos entreprises sur les marchés internationaux. Plus on tire de

[Text]

Therefore, the more you pursue that line the more you weaken the Canadian capacity to compete.

Mr. Broadbent: Wait now; you have already acknowledged that the corporations are paying the bulk of the cost directly for the service.

Mr. Kierans: Yes.

Mr. Broadbent: They are the ones that are already paying most of the costs of the post office, if you like. So it would be some increase, granted. I am not just saying the corporations; this gets back to Carter and redistributing tax load. I am not sure that your general economic point would hold about the postal service as it would for any commodity good—if you make it free of course the demand will go up.

Does this necessarily hold true for the postal service? Because I can mail a letter free instead of for six cents, does this mean I am going to write ten times as many letters?

Mr. Kierans: Oh, sure. If you are a business firm you are, because you are not going to advertise in magazines when you can just flood the market with third-class mail.

Mr. Broadbent: That is good point.

The Chairman: Perhaps we will go on to Mr. Comeau and then back to Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Stewart raised a point a while back, Mr. Chairman, and the Minister gave some examples of services some rural post offices, for example, where only the postmaster might be using the service. I agree that there are some of these cases, but they are not that plentiful, I do not think. I would be interested in getting the figures.

• 1030

Let us leave those and go to another group where you might be operating at a deficit and it is economically valid, let us say, to change from this type of service to a rural service. I say that in quite a few cases—those that I hear about anyway—the service is decreasing, where you may have some delays, and so on.

My question is this: Are you really willing to sacrifice service for cost? I say this because we have other examples that are less important than the Post Office. For example, we dealt just before Christmas with the National Arts Centre. The cost there was no problem. Service—that was it. Would you care to comment on that, Mr. Kierans?

[Interpretation]

notre côté, plus la capacité concurrentielle du Canada serait affaiblie.

M. Broadbent: Un instant. Vous avez déjà dit que les sociétés paient déjà la plus grande partie des frais directement pour ce service.

M. Kierans: Oui.

M. Broadbent: Elles paient déjà la plupart des frais du service des postes. Il y aurait une certaine augmentation, je l'admets. Mais je ne parlais pas seulement des sociétés: on revient à Carter et une nouvelle répartition du fardeau fiscal. Je ne suis pas certain que votre argument d'ordre économique vaut pour le service postal comme pour tout autre produit. Si vous le rendez gratuit, par exemple, la demande augmentera.

Mais est-ce que cela s'applique véritablement au service postal? Disons, est-ce que le fait que je puisse envoyer ma lettre gratuitement au lieu de payer 6 cents, veut dire que j'écrirai dix fois plus de lettres?

M. Kierans: Certainement, si vous êtes une société, oui, car vous n'allez faire de la publicité dans les revues si le service postal est gratuit.

M. Broadbent: C'est un bon argument.

Le président: M. Comeau et M. Stewart ensuite.

M. Comeau: J'en viendrai maintenant à ce qu'a dit M. Stewart. Monsieur le ministre, vous avez donné des exemples de certains bureaux de poste ruraux où il n'y avait que le maître de poste qui se servait de ces services. Je crois qu'il y a de tels cas, mais ils ne sont pas tellement nombreux. J'aimerais avoir des chiffres à ce sujet.

Passons, si vous voulez bien, à un autre groupe où vous avez un déficit, et où il serait économique d'abandonner ce service pour un service rural. Je sais que dans certains cas, ceux que je connais, du moins, il y a des retards, la qualité du service baisse, et ainsi de suite.

La question que je veux vous poser est la suivante: voulez-vous vraiment sacrifier la qualité du service au facteur coût? Il y a certains services moins importants que celui du bureau de poste. Je songe, par exemple, au Centre national des arts, où le coût n'était pas important. On a voulu un très beau centre et c'est tout, à n'importe quel prix. Qu'en pensez-vous?

[Texte]

Mr. Kierans: I do not know. Whom do you want me to criticize?

Mr. Comeau: I am wondering whether you are willing to sacrifice service for cost? Is this your objective?

Mr. Kierans: We have to provide service, and there has to be a service provided to everybody in Canada. I cannot give you the exact figures—this was an interim report—but we examined between 600 and 700 post offices which qualified under the criteria for closing post offices: the revenue was far less than the cost; the number of families served was less than 30, and so on and so on. I am just giving you a general figure, but the order of the decisions that we actually took is correct.

We decided to close down about 486 post offices and to keep open about 184. Was it 84? All right; 284. Was the other figure 486? It was 499? All right; we did better than I thought we had; I was going to give you 184. It would have been easy to save money by closing down the other 284. We did not. We kept them open because there was no other way of providing service to those people on any economic basis. Therefore, our decisions may be running 2 to 1. I thought they were running 3 to 1, but apparently they are running 2 to 1. In the case of the other 499 we did make a decision to close them down but it was obviously because we could not provide a better service; or service.

Mr. Schumacher: A further supplementary to that, Mr. Chairman. I can appreciate the Minister's comments about the postmaster and his wife being the only customers, but I think further consideration should be given to his arbitrary figure of 30 families. There are large areas of this country where many of these post offices would be serving between 10 and 30 families. From the examples I have seen of the proposals to close some of these post offices I think the philosophy of the Department is to reduce service; because whereas these families were accustomed to daily service—the post office being located in their general store, in many cases—the proposal to replace these post offices has been to do so with rural route delivery which, in effect, means three-day-a-week service.

I think it is completely wrong for the Post Office to say that people who live in larger communities are going to get daily service, whereas those who happen to live 20 or 30 miles away from these larger communities are going to get three-day-a-week service.

[Interprétation]

M. Kierans: Je ne sais pas. Que voulez-vous que je critique?

M. Comeau: Je me demande si vous êtes prêt à sacrifier le service pour épargner. Est-ce votre objectif?

M. Kierans: Il faut fournir un service et il faut que ce service soit mis à la disposition de tous les Canadiens. Je ne puis pas vous donner des chiffres précis, car il s'agit d'un rapport préliminaire, mais nous avons jeté un coup d'œil sur 600 ou 700 bureaux de poste qui tombaient sous les critères fixés pour fermer les bureaux de poste. Les recettes étaient insuffisantes, le nombre de familles desservies était de moins de 30, etc. Je vous donne seulement un chiffre général.

Nous avons décidé de fermer environ 486 bureaux de poste et d'en conserver 84, était-ce 284? D'accord pour 284. L'autre chiffre était de 499? Nous avons mieux fait que je ne le pensais. Voilà un cas où il aurait été facile d'épargner de l'argent en abandonnant les 284 autres bureaux de poste. Nous les avons gardés car c'était la seule façon économique de fournir un service aux gens en question. Alors, nos décisions de fermer étaient dans un rapport de 2 contre 1. Nous avons décidé de fermer 499 bureaux car nous ne pouvions pas offrir un meilleur service.

M. Schumacher: Je suis sensible à ce qu'a dit le ministre, dans son exemple où le maître de poste et son épouse sont les seuls clients, mais je crois qu'il faudrait étudier davantage ce chiffre arbitraire de 30 familles. Dans bien des grandes régions du Canada, les bureaux de poste ne desservent que de 20 à 30 familles. Et le ministère a adopté le principe, si j'en juge d'après les décisions prises pour les fermer, de réduire la qualité du service car ces familles recevaient un service postal quotidien lorsque le bureau de poste se trouvait dans le magasin général; la proposition visant à remplacer ces bureaux de poste comporte le service rural, soit trois livraisons par semaine.

Je crois que le bureau de poste se trompe en disant que les gens des grandes villes vont avoir un service quotidien alors que les gens qui habitent à une distance de 30 milles des grands centres auront un service trois fois par semaine. Ce n'est pas tellement une question

[Text]

This is not reducing the cost. It is only reducing the service.

I do not think the Department has given proper consideration to the implications of this reduction in service. Apart from the delivery of mail, it denies them the opportunity of buying COD, of having registered mail deliveries, as well as pick-ups, and their parcel post service is denied. In many cases they have to drive 20 and 30 miles to town for these things because they cannot, because of the uncertainties of weather, wait for the courier to come; and he might be an hour-and-a-half or two hours late. When you consider the real cost to these families who are engaged in the farming business they are hidden costs which you are going to create through the reduction of this service.

There is also the question of the type of box that is going to be substituted. They are not necessarily going to be boxes at front gates; they are going to have to be group boxes, in many cases, and those are subject to vandalism. There is also the problem of those families getting to those group boxes in the wintertime in the uncertain weather conditions in many parts of the country. I just do not think it is right to say that because fewer than 30 people are using a post office they should be wiped out and become second-class citizens. It is merely another burden on this part of the economy, because you are going to increase their costs.

Mr. Kierans: In the first place, I have already cited that in the 284 cases where we felt we could not provide better service, or service, we did not eliminate the rural post office. You say that a rural route goes out only three times a week. The majority of them go out five times a week. But that is not the point. The point is that probably this is all the rural post office was providing anyway—three-day-a-week delivery. There are lots of things like this. I think, however, you are carrying some of your examples to the upper limits, when you talk of a family that may have to come in 20 miles because the courier might be an hour-and-a-half late. I cannot conceive of what would be the urgency that would induce them to do so. There may be particular circumstances in which it might happen, perhaps once a year, but certainly if the family can get to the post office the courier can get out to the family.

We do not provide service to every single family in Canada. If you feel that we should follow the family which goes homesteading, where there are no roads, no matter how far away, I do not think that that is a burden the de réduire les frais, c'est une question de réduire le service.

Je crois que le ministère n'a pas songé à toutes les répercussions de cette baisse de la qualité du service. En plus de la livraison du courrier, on enlève le service de paiement sur livraison, la livraison des lettres recommandées, de même que les collectes et le service de livraison des colis. Ils doivent se rendre en ville, soit à 20 ou 30 milles de là, pour obtenir ces services, car, avec les intempéries, le facteur peut être retardé considérablement. Si on tient compte des frais que cela comporte pour ces familles agricoles, il y a des frais cachés qui seront créés par la réduction de la qualité du service.

Il y a également la question du genre de boîte postale qu'on va substituer. S'il ne s'agit pas de boîte postale à l'entrée, se seront des boîtes communautaires qui font souvent l'objet de vandalisme. Ces familles auront peut-être de la difficulté à se rendre à ces boîtes postales communautaires l'hiver à cause des intempéries. Je ne crois pas qu'il soit juste de dire que parce qu'il y a moins de 30 personnes, il faut les traiter comme des gens de deuxième classe. Ce n'est qu'un autre fardeau sur ce secteur de l'économie, car vous allez accroître leurs coûts.

M. Kierans: Tout d'abord, j'ai déjà dit que dans 284 cas où nous ne croyons pas pouvoir améliorer le service, nous avons conservé les bureaux de poste ruraux. Vous dites, de plus que pour le service rural, le courrier ne se rend que trois fois par semaine, alors que dans la plupart des cas, c'est cinq fois par semaine. En outre, je pense que c'est le service qui était fourni par le bureau de poste local, trois livraisons par semaine. Je pense que vous poussez vos exemples à la limite lorsque vous parlez d'une famille qui devra voyager 20 ou 30 milles parce que le courrier est en retard d'une heure et demie. Je ne vois pas quelles circonstances particulières les y amèneraient. Cela se produira peut-être une fois par année. Si la famille peut se rendre au bureau de poste, il est certain que le facteur peut se rendre jusqu'à la famille.

Mais nous n'allons pas fournir les services à chaque famille du Canada. Est-ce qu'il faudrait suivre les gens s'ils vont coloniser quelque part, où il n'y a pas de route, où ils sont perdus dans l'immensité. Ce n'est pas un far people of Canada are prepared to carry. There will, however, be facilities fairly close to that family, no matter in what colonist part of Canada they may have decided to reside, that will give them service.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Minister fully appreciates the practical results of these things. He may say he cannot see why they would miss him, but the fact is that if they miss him once the mail is not delivered again. For example, if a registered letter comes on a Wednesday and they are not able to be there to meet the courier it goes back into Calgary and it will not be brought out again. They have to go into the terminal to pick it up.

Mr. Kierans: The man is advised, as you or I are advised in the city, that the letter carrier has passed by; that he has rung the bell; that there has been a parcel or a registered letter that he could not deliver and will you please call at the post office. I do not think you can expect that if the family is not at home the man should wait around for the rest of the day, or should come back the following day. These deliveries are scheduled, and...

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Chairman, I am not expecting that. All I am saying is that that is going to be the result of that type of service.

Mr. Kierans: That happens already; and it happens in big cities as well as in rural areas.

Mr. Schumacher: In big cities they may have to go one or two miles to the post office, but in these rural areas you are talking about 20 and 30 miles—and that adds costs. To me, the implications of what happens have not been fully considered.

Mr. Kierans: What would you propose we do?

Mr. Schumacher: Try to keep these smaller rural post offices open. You say you are saving only $600 to $800 a year in many cases. When you divide that by 20 or 30 families, and consider what the other costs to those families are going to be, I do not see that you are really saving. What you are really doing is reducing them to a lower level of service than other people are getting.

Mr. Kierans: Out of roughly 780 I have given you 284 cases in which we made a decision to keep the post office open. This, I think, fits all of the circumstances you have outlined. However, because you come from deau que les Canadiens sont prêts à accepter. Toutefois, il faut que des services de poste soient relativement prêts de ces familles, quelle que soit la région où elles s'établissent.

M. Schumacher: Je ne crois pas que le ministre se rend compte des conséquences pratiques de cette question. Il ne voit peut-être pas comment ce service leur fera défaut, mais il n'en reste pas moins qu'il leur fera défaut lorsqu'il n'y aura plus de livraisons. Prenez le cas d'une lettre recommandée, qui arrive le mercredi et que ces gens ne sont pas là pour la recevoir, la lettre retourne à Calgary et il faudra que la personne retourne au terminus pour chercher la lettre.

M. Kierans: La personne est avertie que le facteur est passé, tout comme en ville, et que le colis ou la lettre recommandée n'a pas pu être livrée, et qu'il a été déposé au bureau de poste. Je ne crois pas qu'il serait raisonnable que le courrier attende tout le reste de la journée ou qu'il revienne le lendemain.

M. Schumacher: Je ne m'attends pas à cela, monsieur le président. Mais je vous dis que ce sont tout simplement les résultats de ce genre de service.

M. Kierans: Cela se produit déjà, tant dans les villes que dans les régions rurales.

M. Schumacher: En ville, on a qu'à faire un mille ou deux. Mais dans les régions rurales, il faudra se rendre à une distance de 20 ou 30 milles, ce qui ajoute des coûts. A mon avis, les conséquences n'ont pas été suffisamment étudiées.

M. Kierans: Que proposez-vous?

M. Schumacher: De tenir ouvert et de conserver ces petits bureaux de poste ruraux. Vous dites que les épargnes ne sont pas tellement substantielles, de $600 à $800 par année. Si vous partagez cette somme entre 20 ou 30 familles et que vous tenez compte des frais entraînés pour ces familles, je ne crois pas que vous épargnez de l'argent et la qualité du service que vous offrez à ces familles est inférieure à la moyenne.

M. Kierans: Je vous ai donné 284 cas sur environ 780 où on a décidé de tenir ces bureaux ouverts. Puisque vous venez de l'Alberta, voici l'exemple que j'ai cité il y a un instant, où 18 familles n'ont recours aux

[Text]

Alberta I will give you the example that I referred to earlier, of 18 families that used the post office to the extent of $82 in one year. That was along the southern border. The families were scattered. They were ranchers, and so on. They had children; they were fairly well-off; they went into the regional centre every day and they did their shopping; they brought their children to the regional high school in Lethbridge or Medicine Hat—I have forgotten which was the closer. They did all their business there. As a result, all they had left over to give to the post office in a solid year was $82. I have forgotten the cents. I think that is about as clear an indication as you would want from any community of the extent to which it values that particular post office; and they have given it themselves. I do not know if we are referring to the same thing...

Mr. Schumacher: No; it is a different situation, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Kierans: Yes; but... that is the family that is coming into some town to make its purchases and to do its business, and it is doing its post office business and buying its stamps at the same time.

Mr. Schumacher: Perhaps I could agree with the Minister, Mr. Chairman, if it were based on 18 families, but it seems to be arbitrary to draw the line at 30 families. There is a significant difference, in my opinion, between 20 and 30—

Mr. Kierans: The line is not arbitrary. There is let us say, one out of three, which means that two were closed and one was not, even if the 30 criterion applied. It is a rule of thumb, and it is a guideline.

The Chairman: Perhaps we can have Mr. Stewart and then come to you, Mr. Cadieu.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I will stay on the subject of revenue and service, Mr. Chairman. There has been a lot of consternation about the post office boxes. Mr. Kierans could you tell us what is the revenue from post office boxes across Canada?

Mr. Kierans: I received a report this morning. Mr. Pageau will give you the exact figures, but since the increase in rates a spot check has been done across the country. We are selling more lock boxes than ever before in the month of February. The exact revenue that we get from lock boxes I think I will leave to Mr. Pageau or Mr. Sinclair.

[Interpretation]

services du bureau de poste que pour un valeur de $82 par année. C'était dans la partie sud de l'Alberta, les familles étaient éparpillées, des éleveurs surtout. Ces familles avaient des enfants et ne manquent de rien. Elles se rendaient à la ville la plus rapprochée tous les jours, faire leurs achats. Elles conduisent leurs enfants à l'école secondaire régionale, je ne me souviens pas si c'était Lethbridge ou Medicine Hat. Tout ce que ces familles ont pu donner au bureau de poste régional, dans une année, c'est une somme de $82. Je crois que c'est une indication de la valeur qu'on attache au bureau de poste. Et ils l'ont donné d'eux-mêmes. Je ne sais pas si nous parlons de la même chose.

M. Schumacher: Non, c'est d'une situation différente.

M. Kierans: Ces familles se rendent dans les villes pour faire leurs achats, vont au bureau de poste et ils y achètent leurs timbres au même endroit.

M. Schumacher: Je suis d'accord avec le ministre s'il s'agit de 18 familles. Mais je crois qu'on a tracé, d'une façon très arbitraire, une limite au niveau de 30 familles. Il y a une différence énorme entre 20 et 30.

M. Kierans: La ligne n'est pas arbitraire. Il y a un rapport de 1 à 3, c'est-à-dire qu'il y a deux bureaux qui ont été fermés pour un qui a été conservé ouvert, même en appliquant le critère de 30 familles. C'est un principe directeur, pas un critère absolument.

Le président: Nous pourrions revenir à M. Stewart, et ensuite à M. Cadieu.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Je vais m'en tenir à cette question des recettes et des services. Il y a eu beaucoup de consternation au sujet des boîtes postales, et je me demande, monsieur le ministre, si vous pourriez nous dire quelles sont les recettes provenant de la location de boîtes postales dans les bureaux de poste d'un bout à l'autre du Canada.

M. Kierans: J'ai reçu ce matin un rapport. Je sais que M. Pageau a les chiffres en question. Mais depuis l'augmentation des taux, on a fait une vérification sporadique d'un bout à l'autre du pays et nous avons loué plus de boîtes postales qu'auparavant, en février. Je crois que M. Pageau a les chiffres en main, ou peut-être M. Sinclair.

[Texte]

Mr. F. Pageau (Director, Postal Rates and Classification, the Post Office Department): Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister answered that on a question from Mr. Macquarrie on February 26. The revenue derived from rental of boxes was $2,497,000 in 1967-68.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): About $2½ million the revenue?

Mr. Pageau: Yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): And this revenue going to go up in the next fiscal year?

Mr. Pageau: Yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): You say there is a greater demand for post office boxes. Is there any indication that people are using general delivery as a result of the raise in the...

Mr. Pageau: Not yet; and the fact that there is an increased demand for boxes across the country would indicate that they prefer this special service.

The Chairman: When was the last time postage box rates were raised?

Mr. Kierans: In 1927.

The Chairman: I have Mr. Cadieu, on a supplementary, and then Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): I am very much concerned. I have a very large rural area, and I thought these people had co-operated very well with the Department in allowing the closing of many of these small post offices that had been there for so many years. I had very few complaints. I was surprised that the people were so co-operative. I saw that it was because of better road conditions, and so on.

I was, however, very disturbed to find out, after the people had co-operated in this manner, not even asking for a mail route delivery, that the Minister should be so hasty as to talk about doubling the rental on post office boxes. I thought he should have said, "We will give you free postal boxes if you will come and get your mail"—it will be saving that amount of money—instead of breaking the contract with the people who had already paid in advance for these mail boxes in November.

[Interprétation]

M. F. Pageau (directeur, Tarifs et Classifications, ministère des Postes): Le ministre a répondu lors d'une question de M. Macquarrie, le 26 février. Les recettes provenant de la location des boîtes postales furent de $2,497,000 en 1967-1968.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Environ deux millions et demi de dollars?

M. Pageau: Oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Et ces recettes vont s'accroître au cours de l'année financière en cours?

M. Pageau: Oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Vous dites qu'il y a une forte demande pour ces boîtes. Ne croyez-vous pas que les gens se servent davantage des services généraux de livraison à cause de l'augmentation des taxes?

M. Pageau: Pas encore. Le fait que la demande a augmenté indique que les gens préfèrent ce service spécial.

Le président: Quand a eu lieu la dernière augmentation?

M. Kierans: En 1927.

Le président: Une question supplémentaire de M. Cadieu, puis M. Dinsdale.

M. Cadieu (Meadow-Lake): Je suis inquiet à ce sujet. Je représente une région rurale très étendue. Je croyais que les gens avaient collaboré avec le ministère pour permettre la fermeture de ces petits bureaux. J'ai reçu très peu de plaintes. J'ai été surpris que les gens collaborent à ce point. J'ai constaté que c'est parce que les routes sont en meilleur état, etc.

Mais j'ai été très inquiet de constater qu'après que les gens aient collaboré de cette façon, sans même demander de livraisons rurales, que le ministre ait parlé si vite de doubler le tarif de location des boîtes postales. Il aurait dû mettre ces boîtes postales à la disposition des gens gratuitement et épargner cette somme au lieu de rompre le contrat avec les gens qui avaient payé leur location à l'avance en novembre.

J'ai reçu, depuis quelques jours, des lettres de certaines personnes qui semblaient dire qu'on avait menacé une seconde fois de leur entirely cut off this mail box. I thought this was very unjust, when these people had co-operated so well, were willing to allow the Department to close many of these small post offices, did not even ask for a rural mail route and were willing to drive 30 to 50 miles to get their mail probably to find that the coin they had perhaps would not work in the stamp machine. I wonder if the Minister was not going far out of bounds and being altogether too hasty in talking about doubling the price of mail boxes. I thought they might even have reduced the price instead of pouncing on them. Many of these families cannot afford this double price on mail boxes and are going to cancel them.

Stop and think of the extra work that this entails for the postal employees, and that many of these people will have to drive 25 or 30 miles if they cannot afford a box. They will probably get into town on a Saturday afternoon and find that the post office is closed. This is creating quite a hardship. I do not think the Minister was co-operating very well with the public in these outlying places.

I do not think the increase is legal—to make a contract with somebody, have them pay in advance, and then turn around and say, "Here, I am going to double this". Has the Minister re-tracted that demand?

Mr. Kierans: We have corrected that, sir. Where the contract was signed prior to the increase that contract stands. This criticism was a just one for several weeks, because postmasters were putting in slips saying, "You owe us another $2", because the box had gone up to $4...

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Do you not think, Mr. Kierans, that you should go one step farther, and that people who have to drive 25 to 50 miles to get their mail should have a free box?

Mr. Kierans: There, again, as you know, if you make a service free everybody in Canada will decide they are in rural areas and will all want boxes, therefore, we have to go ahead and invest in a great many more boxes; have probably to double the size of the post office; and have to get the Department of Public Works to build extensions, or other floors, on the post office. This is a service—

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): If the population is there and it demands it, I would say it would be money well spent.

Mr. Kierans: I do not think it would be money well spent. I think it would be a waste of money.

[Interpretation]

enlever ces boîtes postales. Il me semble que c'est injuste, puisque les gens ont collaboré et étaient prêts à permettre au ministère de fermer un bon nombre de petits bureaux de poste sans même demander de livraison rurale, et à faire 30 ou 50 milles pour aller chercher leur courrier, avant de constater que le distributeur de timbres ne fonctionnait plus avec les mêmes pièces de monnaie. Je me demande si le ministre n'a pas procédé un peu trop vite lorsqu'il a décidé de doubler le tarif des boîtes postales. Je crois plutôt qu'on aurait dû baisser le prix de ces casiers postaux. Un bon nombre de familles ne peuvent pas se permettre de payer le nouveau tarif.

Songez au travail supplémentaire que cela exige des employés des postes, et que ces gens doivent faire 30 ou 50 milles pour prendre leur courrier, s'ils ne peuvent pas se permettre une boîte. Ils se rendent probablement en ville le samedi après-midi et ils constatent que le bureau est déjà fermé. Je crois que le ministre n'a guère collaboré avec la population dans ces régions.

Je ne pense pas que cette augmentation soit légale, de passer un contrat avec une personne qui paie d'avance, et ensuite doubler le tarif. Je me demande si le ministre a rétracté cette menace.

M. Kierans: Nous avons corrigé la situation. Lorsque le contrat avait été signé avant l'augmentation, le contrat est demeuré en vigueur. Cette critique était justifiée pendant quelque temps car les maîtres de poste demandaient aux gens de verser $2 de plus parce que le tarif était passé à $4.

M. Cadieu (Meadow-Lake): Ne pensez-vous pas, M. Kierans, que vous devriez aller plus loin et mettre gratuitement une boîte postale à la disposition des gens qui doivent faire de 25 à 50 milles pour prendre leur courrier?

M. Kierans: Encore une fois, lorsque le service est gratuit, tout le monde veut en profiter et décident qu'ils sont d'une région rurale et méritent une boîte postale. Il faudra accroître le nombre des boîtes. Il faudra sans doute doubler les dimensions du bureau de poste, demander au ministère des Travaux publics de se mettre à l'œuvre.

M. Cadieu (Meadow-Lake): Je crois que si la population l'exige, ce sera de l'argent bien dépensé.

M. Kierans: Je ne crois pas que ce soit le cas, je crois que ce sera du gaspillage.

[Texte]

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): It would be a way of giving these people the service.

I thought these people were very fair. I do not think I have had more than one or two complaints in my 11 years when the Department has come out and sought to close a small post office. I was surprised at how the people really did co-operate on the closings when they had been used to just going down the road and getting their mail.

Mr. Kierans: The reason for the few complaints—and I am glad, sir, that you have mentioned this—is that actually the people are satisfied now that there is a better way of doing things and that they are getting better service. That is why they are not complaining. They would be complaining, and you would have had many more than two letters, if they had cause to complain—that is, if the service was poorer. We have only increased this from $2 to $4.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Yes; but $2 is a lot of money to some of these people.

Mr. Kierans: The $2 price has existed since 1927. This is one of the things which contributed to the position we found ourselves in last fall, of facing, for this coming year, a deficit of $130 million.

I think that is another reason that the people are not complaining. They realize that a post office box is available to them at any time in the lobby where these lock boxes are located and that they are open even when the general wicket itself is closed and there is no service. As an additional service to them they do not have to be there at the hours at which the general wicket, or general delivery, is open. Therefore, the people generally realize that a lock box provides a very much improved service, and that it is worth $4 a year.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): If you can afford it. If you do not have the $4...

Mr. Kierans: If you have not got the $4 you can revert to the general delivery.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Yes; and then find nobody there—that the post office is closed.

Mr. Kierans: Yes; but then you are conditioned by the hours at which the post office is open.

[Interprétation]

M. Cadieu (Meadow-Lake): Je crois que ce serait une façon de donner à ces gens le service dont ils ont besoin.

Je crois que les gens ont été très justes. Ils n'ont pas formulé de plaintes lorsque le ministère a voulu fermer les petits bureaux de poste. Les gens ont vraiment beaucoup coopéré lors de la fermeture des bureaux de poste, même s'ils avaient l'habitude d'aller à l'entrée pour recevoir leur courrier.

M. Kierans: Il y a eu très peu de plaintes, et je suis heureux que vous l'ayez répété, c'est que les gens se rendent compte qu'il y a un meilleur service. C'est la raison pour laquelle ils ne se plaignent pas. Soyez certain que s'ils n'étaient pas satisfaits, vous recevriez beaucoup plus de deux lettres de plaintes, si le service était mauvais. Nous avons augmenté le tarif des boîtes postales de $2.00.

M. Cadieu (Meadow-Lake): C'est une somme considérable pour certains d'entre eux à $4.00.

M. Kierans: C'est depuis 1927 que les boîtes postales ne coûtent que $2.00. C'est une des raisons pour lesquelles nous nous sommes trouvés dans la situation que nous avons connue l'automne dernier. Nous devons faire face à un déficit de $130 millions.

C'est une autre raison pour laquelle les gens ne se plaignent pas. Ils se rendent compte que les boîtes postales sont mises à leur disposition à tout moment du jour, même lorsque le guichet principal est fermé. C'est un service supplémentaire qu'on leur offre. Les gens se rendent compte qu'une boîte postale leur fournit un excellent service qui vaut bien $4 par année.

M. Cadieu (Meadow-Lake): Si vous pouvez vous le permettre.

M. Kierans: Si vous n'avez pas les $4 vous pouvez toujours vous en remettre au courrier ordinaire.

M. Cadieu (Meadow-Lake): Oui, et trouver le bureau de poste fermé.

M. Kierans: Il suffit de se rendre au bureau de poste lorsqu'il est ouvert.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): That is all right; but I think you were very hasty in raising the postal box rental. I think it should be given another look. People in these rural areas should be given more consideration when you are going to close the post office in a farming community, and they have to drive perhaps 25 or 30 miles to town and find no postmaster on the job. They would not mind it nearly so much if they could afford to have a post office box and the coin necessary to buy some stamps.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: On this point, Mr. Chairman, I think one of the main criticisms against the new procedures and practices for the Post Office Department has been that it is urban oriented, it is geared to increase efficiency in the big cities and decrease service in the outlying centres. Certainly the discussion that we have had this morning demonstrates this point. If the bill had gone to a committee I think this point would have been made quite forcefully before the door had been more or less closed. However, during the course of the discussion this morning the Minister has indicated that certain modifications have been made in the reduction of x services to the rural parts of Canada. For example, he stated that some of the smaller post offices that were to be closed are now being kept open. Is this on a formula basis or on the basis of individual protest?

Mr. Kierans: No, it is not on the basis of protest. It is on the basis of an objective analysis of given situations. There were 284 situations which came under the criteria of less than 30 families or the costs were very much higher than the actual use warranted, and therefore we examined them. We came to the conclusion that there was no other way of providing service in these 284 cases—and, as I say this was out of 800 cases—and therefore we continued the service as it presently existed. In 499 cases we decided there was a way of providing an alternative service that would be a better service and I would deny, although there is a basis for your statement, that the Post Office is urban oriented, Mr. Dinsdale.

The basis for your statement is certainly a legitimate one, that if we applied the six-day week to all of Canada, rather than to just the urban areas that it would have hit the rural areas harder for sociological reasons, and so on, because people expect a mail delivery on Saturday. In fact, in a large number of areas we gear our rural delivery not on when the

[Interpretation]

M. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Oui, mais je crois que vous avez agi beaucoup trop rapidement lorsque vous avez décidé d'augmenter ce tarif. Il faudrait prendre les gens des régions rurales davantage en considération lorsque vous décidez de fermer un Bureau de poste. Dans certains cas, ils vont voyager 25 ou 30 milles et trouver le maître de poste absent. Ce ne serait pas si grave s'ils pouvaient se permettre une boîte postale et s'ils ont les nécessaires pour acheter des timbres.

Le président: M. Dinsdale?

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, je crois qu'une des critiques qui a été formulée à l'endroit du ministère des Postes, c'est que c'est un service qui dessert essentiellement les régions urbaines. On veut accroître l'efficacité dans les grandes villes et on sert moins bien les centres environnants. À la suite des discussions qui ont eu lieu ce matin, c'est une question qui ressort de façon bien évidente. Je crois que si le bill avait été soumis à un comité, on aurait soulevé ce point avec beaucoup d'insistance. Au cours des discussions de ce matin, le ministre a indiqué qu'il y a certaines modifications qui avaient été apportées en ce qui concerne la réduction des services dans les régions rurales du Canada. Il dit, par exemple, que certains petits bureaux de poste qui devaient être fermés restent ouverts. Est-ce que cela fait suite aux protestations qui lui ont été adressées?

M. Kierans: Non, cela fait suite à une analyse très objective de la situation. Dans les 284 cas qui tombaient sous le coup des critères déjà exposés, soit moins de trente familles, ou des dépenses plus élevées que les revenus, nous en sommes venus à la conclusion qu'il n'y avait pas d'autre moyen de fournir un meilleur service pour ces 284 cas sur 800 cas. C'est la raison pour laquelle nous avons maintenu ces services, tels qu'ils existent à l'heure actuelle. Toutefois, dans 499 cas, nous avons conclu qu'il était possible de fournir un meilleur service autrement, et c'est le fait que le ministère des Postes soit orienté vers les villes, monsieur Dinsdale.

Vous savez, bien entendu, que nous avons mis en vigueur la semaine de six jours: cela affecté évidemment les régions rurales pour des raisons sociologiques, etc., mais je sais que, dans bien des cas, la livraison du courrier dans les régions rurales se fait non pas lorsque le courrier de la première classe est prêt, mais lorsque les journaux locaux sont first class mail is ready for sorting but when the local newspapers are ready for delivery, and apparently people can wait a day or two for first class mail. These are the facts as we found them to be. They can wait for their telephone bills, their hydro bills or even their personal letters, but they want to get their newspapers and reading material on Saturday. So, we switched. It was not because of political pressure although, let us say, it was pressure in the sense that a great number of our colleagues on both sides of the House led the explanations and made these things much clearer to us.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is it possible to get a list of the post offices that have closed or where you are contemplating closure?

Mr. Kierans: Yes, in any riding. We have been furnishing them regularly. If you want to find out which ones they are in your particular riding you can do so. I would not want you to ask for all 264, but a number of members have asked, "How many have you closed in my particular riding? How many are you looking at?" and so on, and you can get that information.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have been getting notifications from time to time that offices are closing, but I am also getting letters from local communities, that feel they are under the sword of Damocles. I think it arises from the fact that there has been a reversal of decision in this regard and there is now a stay of proceedings, as you have indicated, in connection with some of the post offices that were originally scheduled to close.

Mr. Kierans: Let me put it this way...

Mr. Dinsdale: There is where the mystery rises, the uncertainty.

Mr. Kierans: There is no mystery, Mr. Dinsdale, if you want...

Mr. Dinsdale: The uncertainty.

Mr. Kierans: If you want to table a question in the House, "How many have you closed in my particular riding in the last year, four or five years?" You will get that right away or, "How many are you presently looking at?" "How many are likely to be closed?" We would then reply that in prêts à attendre deux ou trois jours pour recevoir leurs comptes ou leurs lettres ou leur courrier de la première classe, mais ils veulent recevoir leurs journaux le samedi. Ils veulent avoir leurs journaux à temps. Nous avons changé notre politique: mais il ne s'agissait pas de pressions politiques, même si beaucoup de nos collègues ont donné des explications, nous ont exposé la situation bien plus clairement.

M. Dinsdale: Est-il possible d'avoir la liste des bureaux de poste qui sont fermés, ou que vous avez l'intention de fermer.

M. Kierans: Si vous voulez voir ce qui s'est produit dans votre circonscription,—je ne voudrais pas que vous demandiez la liste des 264 circonscriptions,—je pourrais tout de même vous donner la liste dans votre circonscription. Certains députés m'ont demandé combien on a fermé de bureaux dans leur circonscription, ou combien on a l'intention de fermer, etc. On peut obtenir ces renseignements.

M. Dinsdale: Je reçois de temps à autre un avertissement selon lequel les bureaux de postes ferment. Je reçois également des lettres de citoyens qui se sentent sous l'épée de Damoclès. Il y a eu un changement dans cette décision et ces bureaux de postes qui devaient être fermés sont restés ouverts.

M. Kierans: Voici...

M. Dinsdale: Il y a un élément d'incertitude, du mystère là-dedans.

M. Kierans: Il n'y a pas de mystère, monsieur Dinsdale, si vous voulez...

M. Dinsdale: De l'incertitude.

M. Kierans: Vous pourriez poser une question à la Chambre. Vous pourriez demander combien de bureaux de poste ont fermé leurs portes depuis tant d'années, dans votre circonscription. Vous pourriez demander également quels sont les bureaux de postes qui vont fermer. Nous répondrions alors qu'au Manitoba, on envisage d'étudier six cas, et vous pourriez en examiner un certain nom-

[Text]

Manitoba six are scheduled for examination and you could look at this six or eight or fifteen of them, whatever it might be. In one riding, which was a Liberal riding, by the way, there were 32 or 33. Was that your riding?

The Chairman: I had that feeling.

Mr. Kierans: You could look at this. These examinations may take about six or nine months and you could take a look at them. I think you would find, being reasonable, that in the case of 20 of them a rural route would be a better service, but you are not so sure of the other 10 or 12. You could start making your own soundings. It may wind up that we will come to a meeting of the minds that five or six of them should definitely not be closed, or perhaps even ten of them should not be closed.

Mr. Dinsdale: Apparently the decision is made strictly on economic factors, according to this "pay your way" formula that is now operating within the Post Office Department. In many of the small communities post offices are a social institution, and this is the point that has been missed in many of these decisions. The post office was one of the first public service ever offered by the government and then suddenly and arbitrarily, without adequate consultation with the elected representatives of the people, we are closing down these social institutions which might not be quite economically feasible. It will mean in some instances—and I can give some specific examples of this—that whether the corner store survives or not, the additional revenue and the additional traffic in that store would be decided by the fate of the post office which is established in a general store.

Mr. Kierans: Let me put it...

Mr. Dinsdale: It is a social problem, not an economic problem.

Mr. Kierans: The economic facts are what attract us to a particular post office, Mr. Dinsdale. You are quite right in this. What attracts us to it are the financial results of our examination. We find out that the revenue in a given post office is $222 and the cost is $1,486, so bing, we zero in on it, but what causes us to do nothing about roughly one in three of these situations—and they are all the same—is that we decide regardless of the economic and financial aspects that one out of the three will remain open, and that is a social decision because there is no other way in which we can provide an adequate service to those people.

[Interpretation]

bre. Dans une circonscription, libérale, il y en a eu 32 ou 33. Était-ce votre circonscription?

Le président: Je l'ai cru.

M. Kierans: Vous pourriez jeter un coup d'œil à tout cela. Cette étude peut prendre de six à neuf mois dans certains cas. Dans 20 cas, peut-être un service rural serait une meilleure solution, mais dans les autres 10 ou 12 cas, on ne peut être aussi sûrs. Vous pouvez commencer votre propre enquête. On pourra peut-être tomber d'accord sur le fait que cinq ou six d'entre eux ne devraient pas être fermés.

M. Dinsdale: Il semble que cette décision ait été prise pour des raisons strictement financières mais, dans bien des petits centres, le bureau de poste est une institution sociale. C'est ce qu'on n'a pas compris dans bien des cas. Dans bien de ces cas, le bureau de poste est un des premiers services publics offerts par le gouvernement et, tout à coup, et de façon très arbitraire, sans consultations avec les représentants du peuple, on ferme les bureaux de poste qui sont des institutions sociales et qui ne sont peut-être pas rentables du point de vue économique, mais qui apportent tout de même un revenu supplémentaire au magasin général. Ce qui veut dire que, au gré du ministère des Postes, les revenus du magasin général peuvent augmenter ou diminuer. C'est un problème social et non pas un problème économique.

M. Kierans: Voici...

M. Dinsdale: C'est un problème social et non pas un problème économique.

M. Kierans: Je sais bien que dans certains cas il s'agit de facteurs économiques. Nous le savons et nous nous apercevons que le revenu d'un bureau de poste donné est de $222 par rapport à des dépenses de $1,486. Il s'agit de situation semblable. Toutefois, dans un cas sur trois, nous décidons de tenir ouvert, quelle que soit la situation financière de ce bureau de poste. Cette décision est une décision prise pour des motifs sociaux. Il n'y a pas d'autres moyens d'assurer à la population un service suffisant.

[Texte]

With respect to the five-day week in rural areas, what attracted us to it was the fact that by discontinuing rural six-day delivery across Canada we could save money on it; we found out that we could save about $1 million, I think it was, on the rural part of it and that this could not be related at all to the sociological or social effects of cutting out delivery on Saturday in the rural areas. So, the $1 million just went by the boards, that is all. We decided to keep it open and it cost us about $1 million more, but it is a social situation.

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not want to monopolize the discussion but after one more question I will yield. I merely wish to point out that I cannot understand government reasoning which suddenly moves to a formula of public finance which says that the Post Office Department, the basic means of communication in this nation—and we still have many outlying parts, we are not all living in Montreal or Toronto or Winnipeg, there are still many outlying parts where the post office service is fundamental to communication—must pay for itself regardless of the sociological consequences in the outlying areas of Canada. The Minister referred to them as the colonial areas of Canada.

Mr. Kierans: The colonist areas.

Mr. Dinsdale: And, by the same token, subsidizing to the tune of $160 million in the field of communications. It is basic inconsistency and it is discrimination against various parts of Canada.

Mr. Kierans: We do not recover our costs in any of these rural operations, that is a subsidy, but your own party, Mr. Dinsdale, criticizes the government every day in the House and preaches fiscal responsibility. We attempt to show some recognition of and a desire to relate cost to use, and then we are criticized even more by the very party that demands we show some fiscal responsibility.

We are not depriving anyone of service. It does not cost you or me any more to mail a letter to Frobisher Bay, but it costs us more to deliver it. We are not making any money on that.

Mr. Dinsdale: But fiscal responsibility, I think, goes beyond saving dollars and cents.

[Interprétation]

C'est la même chose dans le cas de la semaine de cinq jours. Dans les régions rurales, nous avons constaté qu'en abolissant la livraison de six jours, nous pourrions épargner de l'argent, nous avons constaté que nous pourrions épargner environ un million de dollars et que cela n'avait rien à voir avec les effets sociaux ou sociologiques qu'aurait l'interruption de la livraison postale le samedi, dans les régions rurales. A ce moment-là, nous n'avons pas tenu compte du million de dollars. Nous avons décidé de conserver ces services de six jours et c'est une décision qui a été prise pour des motifs sociaux.

M. Dinsdale: Je ne veux pas monopoliser votre attention, mais il y a une dernière question que je désire vous poser. Je tiens à dire que je ne comprends pas les raisons du gouvernement, qui a adopté une politique de financement public en vertu de laquelle le ministère des postes, qui est un moyen de communication fondamental dans notre pays, et il y a encore des régions assez éloignées: nous n'habitons pas tous Montréal, Toronto ou Winnipeg, il y a bien des régions, dis-je, où le bureau de poste est un élément essentiel de communication, doit faire ses frais, peu importe les conséquences sociologiques que cela aura dans les régions isolées du Canada. Le ministre a parlé de ces régions comme des colonies du Canada.

M. Kierans: Des régions de colonisation.

M. Dinsdale: Je songe au domaine des communications qui reçoit des subventions de l'ordre de 160 millions de dollars. C'est illogique, et c'est de la discrimination à l'égard de diverses parties du Canada.

M. Kierans: Nous ne faisons pas nos frais avec les régions rurales; il s'agit de subventions, mais votre propre parti; monsieur Dinsdale, critique tous les jours, en Chambre, et demande qu'il y ait une certaine responsabilité fiscale. Nous voulons montrer que nous tenons compte de cela et que nous avons l'intention d'avoir des coûts en proportion de nos dépenses. Et ce même parti qui vous demande de faire preuve de responsabilité fiscale, vous critique encore davantage.

Nous ne voulons priver personne du service. Ça ne nous coûte pas plus cher, à vous ou à moi pour envoyer une lettre par la poste à Frobisher Bay, mais ça nous coûte plus cher pour en faire la livraison. Nous ne faisons pas d'argent avec cela.

M. Dinsdale: La responsabilité fiscale va plus loin que la question d'économiser quel-

Medicare centres for performing arts and the CBC—$160 million—here are the real examples of it...

Mr. Kierans: Let us say we are showing some of it in this area.

Mr. Dinsdale: ...and not basic mail service to the outlying centres of Canada?

The Chairman: Perhaps we could go back to the subject under discussion, which is the mail service. I have Mr. Stafford on my list, followed by...

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I was specifically on mail service.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes; but you were also on art centres and everything else. I think we are digressing far too much from the original subject, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: We are discussing the question of service, and we have been dealing with the rural service.

Mr. Dinsdale: A kangaroo court.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I have been sitting here for 25 minutes. I started questioning a while ago and I have not been able to get back. Now I do not even remember what I was talking about.

Mr. Dinsdale: On that point, Mr. Stewart criticized the improvement of facilities in the west as discriminating in favour of the west. The reason that has happened is that mail is basic to the less-populous regions of Canada and was so recognized by the government.

The Chairman: Mr. Stafford?

Mr. Stafford: Mr. Chairman, first of all, I have a complaint. I do not say too much in this Committee, but I have been analyzing the supplementary questions here today. You are limiting questions to a particular subject matter, but none of the interjections I have heard this morning, under the guise of being supplementary, are really supplementary. They merely interrupt the questioner and waste time.

The Chairman: Then, perhaps...

Mr. Stafford: Mr. Stewart has been sitting here in eager anticipation of his turn, and all ques dollars et quelques sous. Par exemple, medicare, les centres des arts d'interprétation, Radio-Canada: 160 millions. Voilà des exemples réels, concrets.

M. Kierans: Disons que nous en démontrons dans ce domaine.

M. Dinsdale: Et non pas pour ce qui est du service postal essentiel aux collectivités éloignées au Canada

Le président: Nous pourrions peut-être revenir au sujet du débat qui est le service du courrier. Sur ma liste j'ai M. Stafford suivi par...

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, je parlais spécifiquement du service du courrier.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Oui, mais vous parliez également des centres d'art et de tout le reste. Je crois que nous nous éloignons beaucoup trop du sujet original.

Le président: Nous discutons de la question du courrier, et nous avons traité du service rural.

M. Dinsdale: C'est un jugement irrégulier.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Je suis assis ici depuis 25 minutes. J'ai commencé à poser des questions il y a quelque temps et je n'ai pas encore réussi à reprendre la parole. Maintenant je ne me souviens même plus de quoi je parlais.

M. Dinsdale: A ce sujet, M. Stewart a critiqué l'amélioration des installations dans l'Ouest. Il a dit que c'était de la discrimination en faveur de l'Ouest. La raison pour laquelle cela s'est produit c'est que le courrier est fondamental dans les régions moins peuplées du Canada et le gouvernement a reconnu ce fait.

Le président: M. Stafford?

M. Stafford: Monsieur le président, d'abord j'ai une plainte à formuler. Je ne parle pas tellement dans ce Comité, mais j'ai étudié les questions supplémentaires. Puisque vous voulez qu'on traite précisément des différentes questions à un sujet précis aucune des interventions que j'ai entendues ici ce matin sous forme de questions supplémentaires sont vraiment des questions supplémentaires. Elles ne servent qu'à interrompre celui qui pose des questions et sont une perte de temps.

Le président: Alors peut-être...

M. Stafford: M. Stewart est demeuré assis en attendant son tour avec beaucoup d'anticipation.

[Texte]

is time has been taken up by others, much of it wasted on the same old questions.

The Committee would be a great deal more interesting if you were to limit it to the subject matter, and keep it on the one point all the time and stop all these irrelevant questions. It makes it very dry. I am sure no one here today is more anxious than Mr. Stewart. I would not say this if I were in the habit of taking up as much of the time of this committee as are certain others across the way.

The Chairman: Perhaps, Mr. Stafford, you might set a good example.

Mr. Stafford: I am setting it right now. I just will not be in this Committee much longer if I have to listen all the time to these interjections which are not supplementaries at all.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman...

Mr. Stafford: Along the same line and you can wait, Mr. Dinsdale. I am going to ask to let me permit to ask a couple of questions. You have got a great habit of asking supplementaries all the time...

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, then?

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Stafford has accused me of monopolizing the time. I have asked one supplementary this morning, which lasted for about 10 minutes. Mr. Stewart has already made two interjections.

Mr. Stafford: Mr. Stewart has been waiting for half an hour to go on with his questions.

Mr. Dinsdale: If I may, Mr. Stewart has already had two interjections.

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart had the floor and I interrupted him to permit supplementaries which Mr. Stafford says were not supplementaries. That is the situation. Mr. Stewart will follow Mr. Stafford, after Mr. Stafford asks his supplementaries.

Mr. Stafford: Actually I have no more supplementaries on that subject. I have a few questions, but they will not take long. I think Mr. Stewart should go on with his questions.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): No; it is all right. I have finished asking my questions. I have to go to External Affairs. Before I do I wish to pation, et tout son temps a été accaparé par d'autres. Beaucoup de temps s'est perdu par la répétition des mêmes questions. Le Comité serait beaucoup plus intéressant si vous le limitiez au sujet débattu, si vous le gardiez sur le sujet en tout temps et si vous mettiez fin à ces questions qui n'ont rien à voir avec le sujet. Ça rend la chose très ennuyeuse. Je suis sûr que personne ici aujourd'hui n'est plus intéressé que M. Stewart. Je ne dirais pas cela si j'avais l'habitude de faire perdre du temps au Comité comme le font certaines personnes de l'autre côté.

Le président: Peut-être M. Stafford pourriez-vous donner le bon exemple.

M. Stafford: Je donne le bon exemple dans le moment. Je ne resterai pas ici beaucoup plus longtemps si j'ai à subir constamment ces interjections qui sont aucunement des questions supplémentaires.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président...

M. Stafford: Dans le même ordre d'idée, et vous pouvez attendre, je vais demander qu'on me permette de poser une ou deux questions. Vous avez la bonne habitude de poser des questions supplémentaires à tout propos...

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, je veux parler d'une question de privilège.

Le président: Monsieur Dinsdale?

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur Stafford m'accuse d'accaparer le temps. J'ai avancé une seule question d'ordre supplémentaire et elle n'a duré que 10 minutes. Monsieur Stewart a fait deux interventions.

M. Stafford: Monsieur Stewart attend depuis une demi-heure pour enchaîner avec ses questions.

M. Dinsdale: Si vous le permettez, monsieur Stewart a déjà fait deux interventions.

Le président: Monsieur Stewart avait la parole. J'ai interrompu monsieur Stewart pour permettre des questions qui, selon monsieur Stafford, ne sont pas des questions supplémentaires. Voilà la situation. Monsieur Stewart parlera après monsieur Stafford, après qu'il aura posé ses questions supplémentaires.

M. Stafford: Je n'ai plus de questions supplémentaires sur ce sujet-là. J'ai quelques questions à poser mais elles ne seront pas longues. Je crois que M. Stewart devrait procéder avec ses questions.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Non, ça va, j'ai terminé et je dois aller au Comité des affaires extérieures. Mais, avant de quitter je voulais say, as the Minister is here, that we have been piling up on him a little this morning.

I think the Minister should be congratulated for his forward-looking, new Department. We are turning the Post Office into an organization for tomorrow rather than one for yesterday. I am glad to see that the old style general store and barber shop as a congregating place is a thing of the past and not of the future.

The Chairman: Mr. Stafford, are your questions directly on the subject of rural service?

Mr. Stafford: Yes. I wanted to ask Mr. Kierans how many people in Canada live more than, say 20 miles from a post office and have to pick up their own mail? Are there many?

• 1105

Mr. Kierans: There are 600,000 families that are served by rural route, but how many families we cannot reach by rural route and have to come into the nearest post office I do not know.

Mr. Stafford: My question relates to the suggestion of free post boxes for anyone who lives more than 20 miles away and has to call for his mail, with the drawback of having to be there at a certain time. Would it be possible to consider only a few people getting free boxes because of the long distance they have to go to a post office? I do not mean everyone, because, as you say, they would take up the boxes as fast as they came out.

Mr. Kierans: Yes; we will take that point into consideration.

Mr. Stafford: What percentage of post office boxes are rented by businesses which deduct the charges as an expense?

Mr. Kierans: I do not think we can answer that directly, but can we give the breakdown of the people who pay the $2, according to the old rate, and those who pay more? I think the larger boxes would be used, by and large, by businesses, or professional firms, or perhaps architects, or lawyers.

[Interpretation]

dire que, comme le ministre est présent, que nous l'avons bousculé un peu ce matin. Il faut, je crois, le féliciter pour l'esprit de prévoyance manifesté par le nouveau ministère. Nous faisons du bureau des postes une organisation pour l'avenir au lieu d'une organisation du passé. Je suis content de voir que le vieux magasin général et le salon du coiffeur qui servaient de lieu de réunion sont choses du passé qui n'ont plus leur place dans l'avenir.

Le président: La question que vous voulez poser, monsieur Stafford, porte-t-elle directement sur le sujet?

M. Stafford: Oui. Je voudrais demander à M. Kierans combien de gens au Canada habitent à plus de 20 milles du bureau de poste et doivent aller chercher leur courrier?

M. Kierans: Je n'ai pas de statistiques là-dessus. Il y a 600,000 familles qui sont desservies par les services de distribution ruraux. Mais, combien de familles y a-t-il que nous ne pouvons pas rejoindre par distribution rurale et qui doivent se rendre au bureau de poste, eh bien, ça je ne le sais pas.

M. Stafford: Ma question se rattache à la proposition qu'il y ait des boîtes postales gratuites pour quiconque habite à plus de 20 milles, disons, d'un bureau de poste et qui est obligé d'aller chercher son courrier avec l'inconvénient d'avoir à être là à un temps déterminé. Serait-il possible, dans le cas d'un petit nombre de personnes, de songer à leur procurer des boîtes gratuites en raison de la distance qu'ils ont à parcourir pour atteindre un bureau de poste? Je ne veux pas dire pour n'importe qui, car comme vous le dites les boîtes seraient prises dès qu'elles feraient leur apparition.

M. Kierans: Je vais étudier cette question.

M. Stafford: Quel serait le pourcentage de cases postales qui sont louées par des entreprises commerciales qui déduisent les frais de leurs dépenses.

M. Kierans: Je ne pense pas que nous puissions répondre directement. Nous pourrions vous donner la répartition des gens qui paient $2 en vertu de l'ancien tarif et les gens qui paient plus. Je pense que les plus grandes cases postales sont celles qui sont utilisées par les entreprises industrielles, par exemple, ou les gens de profession comme les architectes les avocats.

[Texte]

Mr. Pageau (Director, Postal Rates and Classification Branch): We do not, for verification, ask what their occupation is.

Mr. Kierans: No; but can we say that we rent so many post offices lock boxes at $2, and so many at above $2. Have we a breakdown?

Mr. Pageau: We do not have a breakdown.

Mr. Kierans: I am sorry; I think that is about the only statistic we could relate to our question.

Mr. Stafford: Anyone applying for a box has to fill out an application form, and I understand that all these questions are on it—What do you want it for and so on—and then a recommendation. It seems to me that in most post offices the majority of them are used by businesses or by those who can deduct them as expenses. Is that so?

Mr. Kierans: We do not have that information at headquarters, but, Mr. Stafford, I would like to know for my own information, and I will pass it on to you. I think that could give you and me an idea of the breakdown that you want, which is how many post office boxes are rented at $2 and how many are rented in all the brackets above that? As a person, I cannot see myself needing more than a $2 box, but as an architect, or a lawyer, or the Dupont corporation, I can see myself needing something very much larger.

Mr. Stafford: Along the same line—and I might say that I was quite surprised by Mr. Broadbent's question—does any country in the world have free mail service?

Mr. Kierans: None that I know of.

Mr. Broadbent: Have you made a survey, Mr. Kierans?

Mr. Kierans: I am certain that if you knew of one, such as Sweden, or Holland, or Great Britain, you would have cited it.

Mr. Broadbent: That is it; I do not know. When you say you do not know, is this the result of checking or have you just not checked?

Mr. Kierans: I will ask Mr. Pageau.

Mr. Pageau: Mr. Chairman, we know this, because we have the rates of all countries in

[Interprétation]

M. Pageau (Directeur des tarifs et classification, ministère des Postes): Nous ne leur demandons pas, à titre de vérification, quelle est leur profession.

M. Kierans: Non, mais nous savons que nous louons tant de boîtes à $2 et nous avons aussi un tel nombre qui se loue à plus de $2.

M. Pageau: Nous n'avons pas cette répartition.

M. Kierans: Je regrette, mais je crois que c'est à peu près la seule statistique que nous puissions vous communiquer à ce sujet.

M. Stafford: Quand quelqu'un demande une case postale, il doit soumettre une demande, et on me dit que toutes les questions sont sur les formules. Il me semble que, de la façon que je comprends les choses, ce sont les entreprises industrielles qui utilisent pour la plupart les cases postales ou ceux qui peuvent en déduire les frais.

M. Kierans: Nous n'avons pas ces renseignements au bureau principal, mais je suis certain que, pour ma propre gouverne, j'aimerais avoir ces renseignements et je vous les communiquerai ensuite. Cela nous donnera une idée de la répartition que vous désirez connaître, pour savoir combien il y a de boîtes postales qui sont louées à $2 et combien sont louées à un tarif supérieur. À titre privé je ne vois pas quel besoin j'aurais d'avoir une boîte de plus de $2 à ce moment-là, mais si j'étais un architecte, un avocat ou la société Dupont, je puis concevoir qu'il me faudrait quelque chose de beaucoup plus grand.

M. Stafford: Dans le même ordre d'idée, je suis surpris par la question qu'a posée M. Broadbent. Y a-t-il des pays dans le monde qui ont des services postaux gratuits?

M. Kierans: Aucun, que je connaisse.

M. Broadbent: Avez-vous fait enquête, monsieur Kierans.

M. Kierans: Je suis certain que si vous connaissiez un pays, comme la Suède ou la Grande-Bretagne ou les Pays-bas, vous l'auriez mentionné.

M. Broadbent: C'est justement, je ne sais pas. Quand vous dites que vous n'en connaissez pas, est-ce après avoir vérifié, ou n'avez-vous pas vérifié?

M. Kierans: Je vais demander à monsieur Pageau.

M. Pageau: Monsieur le président, nous savons cela car nous avons les tarifs postaux the world. We have 135 countries in the Universal Postal Union, plus all the territories. All these have rates, and we know what their rates are. The services may be subsidized in certain countries for governmental purposes, but there are rates for every class of mail. There is no such thing as a free service.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, from this I take it we have a glorious opportunity in Canada to set the path for the future.

Mr. Kierans: And at the same time reduce our expenditures in the field of education, health services and everywhere else.

Mr. Broadbent: That is a good...

Mr. Kierans: It is an opportunity, but it may not be a glorious one.

The Chairman: Mr. Stafford?

Mr. Stafford: This is hardly a supplementary, but I can only say in reply to Mr. Broadbent that he would raise corporation fees to the point where there probably would be no corporations in Canada.

What percentage of the total Canadian postal business done with the Post Office is done by businesses which can deduct such expenditures as an expense?

Mr. Kierans: In the first class mail area it is close to 80 per cent.

Mr. Stafford: What would it be of the remainder?

Mr. Kierans: The remainder, second class mail, would be all of the publishing industry, would it not?

Mr. Stafford: To answer, in some way, the allegations of Mr. Broadbent, I wanted to know roughly the total amount from all Post Office activities that would be spent by businesses who can deduct it. That is, how much the actual private sector takes out of the money they pay income tax on.

• 1110

Mr. Kierans: I think we can answer that in a different way. In 1967-68, it was $161 million for first class mail and the total revenue was $337 million. Let us say that $40 million of the $161 million—we will take 25 per cent of that—was personal mail. That would mean, taking the $40 million off the $337 million, that close to $300 million, we can say, would de tous les pays du monde. Nous avons 135 pays dans l'Union postale universelle, ainsi que de tous les territoires. Nous savons que tous ont des tarifs et quels sont leurs tarifs. Les services peuvent être subventionnés par le gouvernement dans certains pays, mais il y a des tarifs en vigueur pour toutes les classes de services postaux. Il n'y a pas de distribution gratuite de courrier.

M. Broadbent: Nous avons l'occasion unique de créer un précédent au Canada en vue de l'avenir.

M. Kierans: Tout en réduisant nos dépenses dans le domaine de l'éducation, de la santé et partout ailleurs.

M. Broadbent: Ça, c'est bien...

M. Kierans: C'est une occasion, mais elle n'est peut-être pas glorieuse.

Le président: Monsieur Stafford.

M. Stafford: C'est à peine une question supplémentaire, mais je puis seulement dire, en réponse à M. Broadbent, qu'il augmenterait les frais des sociétés industrielles au point où il ne resterait peut-être plus de ces sociétés au Canada. Quel pourcentage de l'ensemble des affaires postales au Canada transigées avec le Bureau des postes est effectué par des entreprises qui peuvent déduire de tels frais des dépenses?

M. Kierans: Dans le cas du courrier de première classe, près de 80 p. 100.

M. Stafford: Qui constituerait alors le reste?

M. Kierans: Le reste, dans la catégorie de deuxième classe, correspondrait à toute l'industrie de la publication, n'est-ce pas?

M. Stafford: Voici exactement quelle est la question. D'une façon ou d'une autre, après les assertions de M. Broadbent, j'ai voulu savoir en gros le montant total qui sera dépensé dans toutes les activités du Bureau des postes par des entreprises industrielles qui peuvent déduire ces sommes. C'est-à-dire combien le secteur privé actuel soustrait des montants qu'il paie en impôts?

M. Kierans: Je crois que je puis répondre à votre question autrement. De 1967 à 1968, les chiffres ont été $161 millions pour le courrier de première classe, le revenu total a été $337 millions. Disons $40 millions du $161 million et prenons 25 p. 100 de ce montant comme étant du courrier personnel. Ce qui veut dire soustraire 40 millions du 337 millions, qu business. No; we would have to say that certainly all of the revenue in second class mail and all of the revenue in third class mail—circulars, and so on, are chargeable expense; the bulk of it is a chargeable expense; and in fourth-class mail, parcel post, of course, again would be divided. But if you want a figure I would say that out of $337 million you could probably say that $250 million or $260 million is paid by the people who do business—$300 million we can save would be business—well, no, we would have to say that certainly in all of the revenue of second-class mail, all of the revenue in third-class mail, you know, the bulk of your circulars and all that are chargeable expense, and in fourth-class mail your parcel post of course again would be divided. If you want a figure, out of $337 million you could probably say that $250 million to $260 million is paid by the people who do business in this country.

Mr. Stafford: Yes, sir—and maybe more.

Mr. Kierans: And maybe more.

Mr. Stafford: And if Mr. Broadbent's supposition were given any kind of recognition whatsoever that might be a billion dollars.

Mr. Kierans: Well, under Mr. Broadbent's supposition the people who would benefit from free service across the country would be the business corporations.

Mr. Stafford: And if they spend $250 million or possibly $300 million to do it, if they put it free they would probably go to all lengths.

Mr. Kierans: Yes.

Mr. Stafford: You said you were investigating all these incidents further to Mr. Paproski's question concerning poor service. When I was sitting in Air Canada yesterday I read a very critical letter in yesterday's Montreal Gazette stating examples of poor service—in fact, it was very critical—which concluded with something to the effect that if prices are going up, service should improve. Have you investigated that letter yet?

Mr. Kierans: No; I was in Montreal and I read the letter, and I intend to ask my special assistant to call the person who wrote that letter in yesterday's Gazette and ask him if he has copies of the envelopes and the postmarks available as evidence of all of the criticisms made in that letter.

Mr. Stafford: I have just one other question to pose in relation with what I asked you a minute ago. Can you give...

près de $300 millions proviendrait des affaires.

Toutes les recettes du courrier de la deuxième classe et du courrier de la troisième classe, les circulaires, les imprimés, etc., la plupart de ces choses-là sont imputées à celui qui les expédie et, quant au courrier de la quatrième classe, les colis postaux sont divisés. Si vous voulez des chiffres, sur 337 millions, disons que 250 à 260 millions sont payés par les gens qui font des affaires au pays.

M. Stafford: Et peut-être plus.

M. Kierans: Peut-être.

M. Stafford: Et si on admettait l'hypothèse de M. Broadbent, on pourrait atteindre un milliard de dollars.

M. Kierans: Selon l'hypothèse de M. Broadbent, si des gens bénéficiaient d'un service gratuit au pays, ce serait les maisons d'affaires.

M. Stafford: Et si on dépense de 250 à 300 millions pour le faire, et que le service est gratuit, on irait probablement jusqu'au bout.

M. Kierans: Oui.

M. Stafford: Vous avez dit que vous étudiez toutes ces incidences, pour donner suite à la question de M. Paproski concernant le piètre service. À Air Canada, hier, je lisais dans la Gazette de Montréal une lettre critiquant le service et donnant des exemples d'un piètre service. La lettre concluait en disant que si les prix ne cessent d'augmenter, le service devrait s'améliorer en conséquence. Avez-vous pris connaissance de cette lettre?

M. Kierans: J'ai lu cette lettre, à Montréal. J'ai l'intention de demander à mon adjoint spécial d'appeler la personne qui a écrit cette lettre et de lui demander si elle a des copies des enveloppes et des cachets, comme preuves des critiques qu'elle a soulevées dans cette lettre.

M. Stafford: J'ai une dernière question à poser en relation avec ce que je viens de vous demander. Comme vous donnez...

[Text]

The Chairman: Mr. Broadbent, on a question of privilege.

Mr. Broadbent: Not knowing the rules of the House I am not sure that I have a legitimate question of privilege, but many people indulge in this practice. I just wanted to make it clear that I was not making a proposition; it was a genuine question about the actual economic feasibility of such a proposal.

The Chairman: Mr. Broadbent, you are quite right; you do not have a question of privilege.

Mr. Broadbent: Is that right? I thought the allegation was that I had made a proposition or proposal; it was not. I was asking a question with certain ideas in mind about the feasibility of something.

Mr. Stafford: As I understood your question you were talking about a society...

The Chairman: Mr. Stafford, perhaps we could return to the subject.

Mr. Stafford: What would be the percentage of service—it does not take me long to get to the subject, Mr. Chairman! What would be the percentage of service given by the Post Office to people who cannot deduct their postage paid—I mean the service given to them? You have already given us the expenditures that can be deducted as rather high from businesses. What proportion of your service would be given to those people who do not deduct? In other words, does it cost you more to keep the Post Office open for businesses or for the ordinary person?

Mr. Kierans: We start from the other end, Mr. Stafford. We want to distribute first-class mail, the letters between people, right across the country so we would have to have a very large establishment to look after the letter that you may write today to Nanaimo, tomorrow to Frobisher and the day after to Sydney, Nova Scotia. That is the kind of operation we conduct.

From then on, everything else has to bear its share of the average costs and not marginal shares. I doubt whether we could break it down to what proportion of our time is occupied with handling letters of the business community other than the actual dollar figure.

Mr. Stafford: But would it not be obvious that it costs far less to service those business people in proportion to the money they spend on the average?

[Interpretation]

Le président: Monsieur Broadbent, qui sou lève une question de privilège.

M. Broadbent: Je ne sais pas si ma question est légitime, car je ne connais pas le Règlement de la Chambre, mais plusieurs personnes le font. Je voudrais qu'il soit bien clair que je ne faisais pas une proposition. C'était une simple question quant à la possibilité, au point de vue économique, de former un service postal gratuit.

Le président: M. Broadbent, vous n'avez pas une question de privilège.

M. Broadbent: Vraiment? J'avais pensé que mon collègue alléguait que j'ai fait une proposition. Ce n'est pas le cas. C'est une idée qui m'est venue à l'esprit quant à la possibilité de le faire.

M. Stafford: J'ai cru comprendre que vous parliez d'une société.

Le président: Revenez-en au sujet, s'il vous plaît.

M. Stafford: Quel est le pourcentage du service donné par le ministère des Postes qui est offert aux gens qui ne peuvent pas déduire leurs frais d'affranchissement? Vous avez dit que ces dépenses déductibles sont élevées dans le cas des entreprises. Quelle est la proportion de vos services qui est offert à ces gens qui ne peuvent pas les déduire? En d'autres mots, est-ce que ce sont surtout les entreprises qui bénéficient du bureau de poste ou les particuliers?

M. Kierans: Nous commençons par l'autre bout, monsieur Stafford. Nous voulons distribuer le courrier de première classe, les lettres échangées entre personnes, d'un bout à l'autre du pays. Nous devons donc avoir de grandes installations pour expédier les lettres que vous écrivez à Nanaimo aujourd'hui, à Frobisher demain et ensuite à Sydney, (Nouvel Écosse). C'est le genre de travail que nous faisons.

Chaque élément doit défrayer sa part de coûts moyens et non pas une part marginale. Je doute que nous puissions dire quelle est la proportion de notre temps qui est consacré à l'expédition des lettres du monde des affaires, sinon par des chiffres des dépenses.

M. Stafford: N'est-il pas évident qu'il coûte beaucoup moins de fournir ces services aux entreprises proportionnellement à ce qu'il paie pour ces services, en moyenne?

[texte]

Mr. Kierans: Oh, yes; that I would agree with.

Mr. Stafford: Then it is fairly equitable so far as the man on the street is concerned.

The Chairman: Mr. Macquarrie?

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I am supplementing Mr. Stafford or not, but that is when I put my hand up.

I do not share the optimism of the Minister concerning the good service which is generally being rendered by your alterations from post offices to rural routes, and I am surprised that you are not getting the kind of mail that some of the rest of us are.

The other thing that I am interested in in this particular connection is that you never lose one of these post offices without increasing the amount paid to the carrier who serves it. Therefore I think a true figure of saving must include the increase that the rural carrier receives. I have many, many, many instances of people who are not convinced at all that you have improved the service either in the incoming or the outgoing mail and if you like I will send you my file and those of some of my colleagues, and they are quite substantial.

I place my subjective judgment against yours on that and bring to bear a good many arguments, and I suppose time alone will be able to decide who in fact has made the better perception of it. But what I was really interested in is the question I asked about lock boxes. We have had the figure for the revenue. I wonder whether we could have the figure produced for the other side of it?

Mr. Kierans: For the same year?

Mr. Pageau: The cost was $4,663,000.

Mr. Macquarrie: It was made up of what factors?

Mr. Pageau: It is made up of the factors of the provision of lock boxes and the additional space that we have to provide; wicket service because we have to settle their financial transactions.

Mr. Macquarrie: I recall the answer indicated that these were considered operational and not capital costs. That rather surprised me—space, repairs, upkeep. I was wondering...

Mr. Pageau: Rental, of course.

[Interprétation]

M. Kierans: Oui, je suis d'accord.

M. Stafford: En autant que l'homme de la rue est concerné, cela est juste.

Le président: M. Macquarrie?

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président, je ne sais pas si j'ajoute à ce qu'a dit mon confrère, mais en tout cas, j'aimerais poser une question supplémentaire.

Je ne partage pas l'optimisme du ministre sur le bon service qui est ordinairement fourni en passant du système des Bureaux de poste aux livraisons rurales. Je suis surpris que les gens ne vous écrivent pas à ce sujet, comme ils nous écrivent.

Ce que j'aimerais savoir à cet égard, c'est que vous ne fermez jamais ces bureaux de poste sans augmenter le montant versé aux facteurs qui desservent cette région. Est-ce que, à ce moment-là, le chiffre des économies ne devrait pas comprendre l'augmentation accordée au facteur? Je connais beaucoup de gens qui ne sont pas convaincus des améliorations que vous avez apportées. Je pourrais vous soumettre des dossiers à ce sujet, des dossiers très complets qui ont été accumulés par mes collègues et moi. Je présente mon point de vue pour qu'on puisse le comparer avec le vôtre. Seul le temps pourra nous dire lequel d'entre nous a mieux compris le problème. Ce que j'aimerais véritablement savoir, c'est au sujet des boîtes postales aux bureaux de poste. Vous nous avez donné les chiffres des recettes. Je n'ai pas de chiffres quant à l'autre côté de la médaille.

M. Kierans: Pour la même année?

M. Pageau: Le coût était de $4,663,000.

M. Macquarrie: Ce coût est constitué de quels éléments?

M. Pageau: Cela comprend la fourniture des boîtes et de l'espace supplémentaire requise, ainsi que du service au guichet car il faut régler leurs transactions financières.

M. Macquarrie: Je me rappelle que, selon la réponse, on les considérait comme des frais d'exploitation et non pas des frais d'immobilisation. Cela me surprend un peu, l'espace, les réparations, l'entretien. Je me demande...

M. Pageau: La location, évidemment.

[Text]

Mr. Macquarrie: But none of this you call capital.

Mr. Kierans: Do we write off lock boxes the same year?

Mr. Pageau: No; this is a charge against us by Public Works. We could not actually call it capital costs. This is a charge against us for the space. In our case we do not call it capital costs because we do not provide the initial investment and we do not know how Public Works does it. It is a capital charge against us by Public Works every year for the space we occupy and the equipment they provide, and maintenance and repairs, and so forth.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would agree it could be called a capital cost. I was impressed by the precision with which you arrived at that figure. I presume this was studied too, or you would not have had such a precise figure, had patrons asked for general delivery to which they are entitled instead of renting a lock box, would you not have some costs then in terms of extra staff, and so on? Is all that factored in your precise answer?

Mr. Kierans: No, that is not. We are just costing an actual situation, the cost of general delivery today compared with the cost of providing the additional services implicit in a locked-box service. You are talking of the opportunity costs; if we did not have the one, what would be the cost of adding more clerks at the general delivery wicket. I would imagine we would have to add them, depending on the post office. There may be cases, but I do not think there would be very many, where we would not have to. People would have to stand in queues.

In other cases we would certainly have to add them. That is a hypothetical situation and we have enough trouble in determining our costs on the actual situations without developing cost analyses and procedures on hypothetical situations, but it is a relevant question. It was a question that we considered very carefully when we put up the lock-box rates, for example. If there were a flood out of people who rented lock boxes into people demanding general delivery service this would increase our costs considerably, so that the benefits of the increased rates from those who kept on using lock-box services would be wiped out by the additional costs of providing general delivery service. However, so far this has not happened.

As a matter of fact, as I suggested earlier, the indications are that people for some rea-

[Interpretation]

M. Macquarrie: Ce n'est pas un capital de formation.

M. Kierans: Est-ce qu'on amortit les boîtes la même année?

M. Pageau: Non. C'est un coût qui nous est imputé par le ministère des Travaux publics. Nous ne pourrions pas dire que ce sont des coûts d'immobilisation. Nous devons payer pour l'espace. On ne les appelle pas des frais d'immobilisation, car nous ne faisons pas les premiers investissements nécessaires et nous ne savons pas comment les Travaux publics procèdent. Ils nous imputent des frais pour l'espace et le matériel qu'ils fournissent, l'entretien, les réparations, et ainsi de suite.

M. Macquarrie: Je suis d'accord que l'on pourrait l'appeler un coût d'immobilisation. Je me demande comment vous faites pour arriver à un chiffre aussi précis. Je suppose que vous l'avez étudié, sans quoi vous n'auriez pas eu un chiffre aussi précis. Au lieu de louer une boîte sous clef, si les clients exigeaient une livraison générale à laquelle ils ont droit. Est-ce que vous ne devriez pas employer plus de personnel et avoir d'autres frais?

M. Kierans: Non. Nous établissons le coût d'une situation réelle, soit les frais de livraison générale par rapport aux services qui comportent les boîtes sous clef. Vous parlez de coûts éventuels. Si nous n'avions pas ce service, il faudrait ajouter des commis aux guichets, tout dépend du bureau de poste. Il y a des cas où nous ne serions pas obligés de le faire. Les gens seraient obligés de faire la queue.

Et dans d'autres cas nous serions obligés d'accroître le personnel. C'est une situation hypothétique. Nous avons déjà assez de difficulté à déterminer les coûts pour les situations réelles sans nous mettre à faire des analyses de coûts pour des situations hypothétiques. Mais c'est une question pertinente. Nous avons étudié la situation avant d'installer des boîtes. Si les gens qui louent des boîtes décident tout à coup d'exiger le service de livraison normal, cela accroîtrait de beaucoup nos coûts. Les recettes provenant du tarif accru des boîtes seraient plus qu'absorbées par les coûts plus élevés du service de livraison normal. Mais cela ne s'est pas encore produit.

Comme je l'ai dit plus tôt, tout semble indiquer que les gens, pour une raison ou une on or other are buying lock-box services in increasing numbers.

1120

Mr. Macquarrie: No doubt it is the affluent society still with us. I do submit, as a matter of equity and not economics, that when the nation is told this particular part of a public service is costing so much and the deficit is so great that we must raise the rates against the public, these other factors should be considered. This is why I think this broad spread between its cost and its revenue is perhaps a bit unrealistic. Naturally I would not impute any motives, but I am wondering whether perhaps you have not oversold and extra underlined the deficit in this.

Mr. Kierans: Well, I am willing to take all of my responsibilities, but I will say this. I read the answer to the questions that you ask and every member asks about the day before they are tabled in the House. You know, they come through the Minister's office and he looks at them. I have never changed a single answer. The only question that I have ever asked when I have seen questions in the House on the Order Paper has been: "Why is question 702 not answered thus far, because that was asked seven weeks ago", or something like that, but there is no interference and I think all of my officers here will bear that out. The answers that they provide you are supposed to be factual and objective and when I read them before they go through my office to be tabled, I learn as much as you do, guess, about them.

There is one thing I would like to correct. It is with regard to an earlier remark you made and I would like to put it on the record. When we say to you that the closing down of a post office means a net saving of $1,200, that word "net" means "net", because we have taken into that the additional cost of, let us say, $487 to our rural route contractor, who has picked up all the people who were being served. It is a net figure.

Mr. Macquarrie: So how much are you saving from the figures—what was the figure on that?

Mr. Kierans: The figure is $295,000.

Mr. Macquarrie: I want to make it clear that I am not suggesting that any answers that you are giving me are cooked answers. I am suggesting that there are relevant matters that might well and realistically be considered. As a matter of fact your Department is very far one of the better ones in returning answers from the Order Paper.

[Interprétation]

autre, préfèrent de plus en plus le service des boîtes postales.

M. Macquarrie: C'est que la société affluente existe toujours. J'imagine que, du point de vue de la justice, et non pas de l'économie, lorsqu'on dit à la population que tel service de la Fonction publique coûte tant et que le déficit est tel que nous devons augmenter les tarifs au détriment du public, il faut tenir compte de tous ces facteurs. C'est pourquoi l'écart entre les frais et les recettes n'est peut-être pas très réaliste. Je ne veux pas vous attribuer des motifs, mais peut-être que vous avez insisté trop sur le déficit.

M. Kierans: Je veux prendre toutes mes responsabilités en ce domaine. Je dirais donc ceci: c'est que j'ai lu les réponses aux questions que vous avez, vous et les autres députés, soulevées en Chambre; ces questions viennent au bureau du ministre; je n'ai jamais modifié une réponse; tout ce que j'ai déjà demandé concernant les questions en Chambre à l'ordre du jour, c'est pourquoi est-ce qu'on n'a pas répondu encore à la question 702, par exemple, étant donné qu'elle a été posée il y a sept semaines. Les réponses qu'ils vous donnent sont vraies, objectives, et tiennent compte des faits. Je les lis, avant qu'elles ne quittent mon bureau, et j'en apprendrais autant que vous à ce moment-là.

Il y a une chose que j'aimerais corriger concernant le début de vos remarques,—je voudrais que cela soit inscrit au dossier—disons, que lorsque un Bureau de poste doit être fermé, cela nous fait économiser, par exemple, $1,200. C'est là une économie nette. Car il y a des frais additionnels, disons de $487.00 pour les frais de distribution totale. Mais le chiffre donné est net.

M. Macquarrie: Combien économisez-vous? Quel était le chiffre?

M. Kierans: $295,000.

M. Macquarrie: Je ne veux pas laisser entendre que les réponses que vous me donnez sont des réponses imparfaites, mais je voudrais parler des questions pertinentes que l'on devrait envisager à ce moment-ci. Eh bien! je voudrais vous dire que votre bureau répond très bien en général aux questions qui sont posées.

[Text]

Mr. Kierans: Thank you very much. On their behalf I am glad to accept that.

Mr. Macquarrie: I want you to know that we do not think you are bad people; we just think you are wrong.

The Chairman: I have Mr. Broadbent, Mr. Nesbitt and Mr. Ritchie.

Mr. Dinsdale: For clarification, that figure was $295,000?

Mr. Kierans: I am glad you asked, because it is $292,000.

Mr. Dinsdale: For 499?

Mr. Kierans: For 499 post offices.

Mr. Dinsdale: And all this social disruption for that small amount?

Mr. Kierans: In these 499 cases the people are provided with a better service than they had before. It may take them a week or two to get used to it.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is not what my letters say.

Mr. Kierans: This was a pilot experience started under my predecessor, Mr. Cote, particularly on a fairly extensive scale in the region of the Gaspé. At the end of six months, despite the resistance to change that you find in any region in Canada, the people were very much happier with the alternative service than they ever had been. They had not known that there could be this kind of improved service. As a matter of fact the current member who is a Liberal and was in Mr. Cote's office as an executive assistant attributes his election to this fact.

The Chairman: Then those of us from rural areas can all look to being re-elected with increased margins as a result of your activities. Mr. Broadbent.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Kierans, I have received two letters, only two, from postmen with a number of objections, and what I have tried to do is to select from the questions they raised matters which would have general significance...

The Chairman: Is this a new subject from the rural post office situation?

Mr. Broadbent: I am sorry, it is.

The Chairman: Then perhaps we could go on to Mr. Nesbitt and Mr. Ritchie, and then

[Interpretation]

M. Kierans: Je vous remercie en leur nom.

M. Macquarrie: Je voulais vous dire que nous ne croyons pas que vous êtes de mauvais gens, mais vous avez tort, c'est tout. Il y a une différence entre les deux.

Le président: Messieurs Broadbent, Nesbitt Ritchie.

M. Dinsdale: $295,000?

M. Kierans: Non, c'est $292,000.

M. Dinsdale: Pour 499 bureaux.

M. Kierans: Pour 499 bureaux de poste.

M. Dinsdale: Et tout ce chambardement pour un si petit montant?

M. Kierans: Dans ces 499 cas, le service est amélioré; cela peut prendre une semaine mais le service s'améliore.

M. Dinsdale: Ce n'est pas ce que me disent les gens qui m'écrivent.

M. Kierans: Ce sont des expériences-pilotes qui ont débuté au temps de mon prédécesseur, M. Côté, sur une grande échelle, dans la région de Gaspé. Malgré la résistance aux changements que l'on perçoit dans toute la région du Canada, à la fin de six mois, les gens étaient beaucoup plus satisfaits du nouveau service que l'on offrait. Ils savaient que l'on pouvait peut-être leur offrir ce service mais quand on leur a offert ce service en réalité, ils ont été très satisfaits. J'ai connu une personne qui était dans le bureau de M. Côté à ce moment-là et qui a été élue à cause de cette réforme.

Le président: Tous les députés des régions rurales peuvent donc être réélus avec de majorités plus fortes à en croire vos réalisations. M. Broadbent.

M. Broadbent: J'ai reçu deux lettres, mon sieur Kierans, seulement deux lettres, de la part de postiers et ce que je voudrais faire, c'est parler au sujet des questions qu'ils ont soulevées, des questions qui se rapportent...

Le président: Est-ce que cela se rapporte au présent sujet ou si c'est une nouvelle question?

M. Broadbent: J'ai peur que ce soit du nouveau.

Le président: Si c'est une nouvelle question, nous allons donc passer immédiatement me back to you on a new subject. Mr. Nesbitt?

Mr. Nesbitt: I came in just a few minutes ago, Mr. Chairman, and I gather the questions specifically at the moment concern rural post offices.

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Nesbitt: On delivery only?

The Chairman: Delivery, lock boxes and anything having to do with rural services.

1125

Mr. Nesbitt: I will ask a question and I think it applies in that case then. I think the Minister has probably had a number of complaints concerning the delay in mail delivery the last while and while the question that I raise concerns the city of Woodstock, nevertheless it would apply to the rural areas immediately around.

I have a letter here which is a copy of a letter sent to the Minister a while ago by a manager of a trust company. The Minister probably would not remember it, but I will quote one of the paragraphs:

In this morning's mail I have received two letters, the envelopes of which are enclosed. I do not know why it should take five days for a letter to come from Willowdale...

at is in Toronto

...to Woodstock and two days for a letter to come from Etobicoke to Woodstock...

Now this is a complaint that was noticed in our area, which is a very heavily populated area of southern Ontario, during the last couple of months. I know, Mr. Chairman, that it used to be that letters were mailed in my constituency one afternoon and I received them here the next morning. There is now a delay of up to three or four days. I know the Minister is looking into these things and I am wondering if he could give us any hope that the mail delivery would be improved in this regard?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Nesbitt, the trust company probably got several hundred letters that morning, but these two cases, you know, could be real and they should not have happened. This is where we are concentrating our study, as I said earlier before you arrived; on the triangle—the Ottawa, Toronà M. Nesbitt et nous reviendrons à vous par la suite. Monsieur Nesbitt?

M. Nesbitt: Je viens tout juste d'arriver, monsieur le président. J'ai une question précise à l'heure actuelle et c'est sur les bureaux de poste régionaux. Je crois que l'on parle de ce sujet.

Le président: C'est vrai.

M. Nesbitt: Les questions des livraisons?

Le président: Les questions des livraisons, des boîtes sous clé, le service rural en général.

M. Nesbitt: Ma question a trait à ce sujet alors.

Je suis certains que le ministre a entendu un certain nombre de plaintes concernant les délais de la livraison du courrier. Les questions que je veux soulever s'appliquent à Woodstock et aux régions rurales environnantes. J'ai une note ici, c'est une copie d'une lettre qui est envoyée au ministre par une société de fiducie de cette région, le ministre a probablement lu cette lettre déjà; je lis l'un des paragraphes:

Dans le courrier de ce matin, j'ai reçu deux lettres: Vous en trouverez les enveloppes sous pli. Il a fallu 5 jours pour que ces lettres partent de Willowdale, près de Toronto, pour arriver à Woodstock, c'est-à-dire environ 80 milles, alors que d'autres ont pris deux jours de Etobicoke à Woodstock.

Je sais qu'il y a des régions qui sont très peuplées, qui peuvent causer des problèmes, mais, au cours des deux derniers mois, comme vous le savez, monsieur le président, j'ai reçu beaucoup de lettres de mes commettants. Autrefois, il me semble que c'était plus rapide; aujourd'hui, le délai peut être de trois ou quatre jours. Est-ce que vous pouvez nous donner une assurance que le service s'améliorera?

M. Kierans: Monsieur Nesbitt, votre société de fiducie a probablement reçu 700 lettres cette journée-là et les deux qui ont été mentionnées sont les deux exceptions qui confirment la règle. Nous essayons d'étudier les problèmes dans les régions de Toronto, Montréal, Ottawa; ce sont les régions où des to, Montreal triangle—because these are the massive distribution centres. These are where delays are occurring. Montreal and Toronto certainly we can tag, too, as having a lack of facilities to handle this kind of mail. This is quite right. Ten years ago, given the volume of those days, it was much easier to put that kind of mail through Toronto than it is today.

The facilities have not changed, but the volume has gone up 85 per cent in 20 years and the facilities are exactly the same. Of course your problems increase geometrically even though your volume has only gone up 85 per cent. Twenty years ago the Toronto post office was satisfactory for the kind of volume that Toronto had.

This is where we are concentrating our studies. We have already found a lot of minor flaws that we have not adjusted to—changed trucking routes, or the trucks leaving Toronto and so on. Forty-five minutes here and there means a day if you get it on the truck or a day lost if you do not get it on the truck; and in forwarding your mail, you know, instead of waiting until 6 or 7 o'clock, maybe forwarding 70 per cent of it that you have at 4 o'clock, or 40 per cent that you have at 4 o'clock, getting that on the way so that it is delivered promptly the next day.

There are all sorts of studies going on. We recognize that this is a real problem. I have no doubt at all about your two letters and the two envelopes. I would feel that a more objective statement would have been made if he had said: "Well, yes, we got 83 letters this day 41 of them came in two days and 40 of them came in the one-day delivery, but here are two that took five days." I think that this is about the percentage that you would find.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to hear that the Minister is looking into this. I think it is very important. But that does not quite answer my question. Perhaps I did not make myself very clear. In addition to this particular letter of complaint, which I only brought up as an example, I myself, as I said, in my daily correspondence have had the same problem. To be perfectly fair, some of the letters do arrive the next day after they are mailed, but I would say at least 50 per cent of the letters that I have received within the last three months—and this is the important thing, I think—have been delayed up to five days in some cases. I had never noticed it, I had never had any examples of it until last November and it is since last délais se produisent. A Montréal et à Toronto nous pouvons identifier ce délai; il y a un manque d'installation pour transporter le courrier, cela existait il y a quelques années et le volume n'a fait qu'augmenter, et cette situation ne peut donc qu'empirer.

C'était plus facile autrefois d'acheminer ce volume ensemble de courrier. Le courrier a augmenté de 85 p. 100 en 20 ans. Alors, les problèmes se multiplient géométriquement aussi, même l'augmentation du volume du courrier n'a été que de 85 p. 100. Il y a quelques années, le service à Toronto était satisfaisant compte tenu du volume, mais le volume a augmenté et nous concentrons nos études dans ces domaines.

Nous avons eu certaines critiques; nous voulons modifier les voies de distribution par camion, selon les besoins, pour Toronto; sauver 45 minutes ici ou là, cela peut se traduire par l'économie d'une journée d'acheminement par exemple. Nous voulons modifier les horaires, améliorer les méthodes d'expédition de courrier, expédier 70 p. 100 du courrier de la façon que nous l'obtenons, peut-être à 4 heures au lieu de 5 heures, sans attendre 5 heures, c'était l'heure prévue autrefois.

Toutes sortes d'études sont actuellement en cours; nous reconnaissons que c'est là un problème véritable. Je sais que les deux problèmes que vous avez mentionnés, sont réels, mais je crois que des déclarations plus objectives auraient eu lieu si nous avions vu que ces deux lettres sont simplement l'infime minorité des lettres qui ont été acheminées dans un certain temps. La plupart sont parvenues plus rapidement que cela. C'est une exception si cela a pris 5 jours.

M. Nesbitt: Monsieur le président, je suis très heureux d'entendre le ministre dire qu'il va étudier la question, mais ceci ne répond pas tout à fait à la question que j'ai posée. En plus au sujet de ces plaintes, je crois, je suis moi-même demeuré en communication avec une personne en question, et je dois dire que certaines lettres arrivent le lendemain, mais moins 50 p. 100 des lettres que j'ai reçues depuis trois mois, et ce sont des lettres importantes, me sont parvenues après un délai parfois de 5 jours.

La question que je veux poser au ministre est la suivante: je n'ai jamais constaté avant le mois de novembre que certains délais se produisaient, mais je crois que c'est ce qui s'est produit. Je voudrais seulement signaler

[texte]

November that these extensive delays on quite large scale have taken place. If the Minister looking into it, fine; but I would like to draw to his attention that this is, in fact, taking place in that general area.

Mr. Kierans: And I would like to make the point that we made a little earlier. You began to notice it last fall when people began to zero in on the post office. It is quite possible that a great many of these incidents did also happen prior to the sudden upsurge of interest in the post office, prior to the increase in the pricing of our services. People now, because they are paying more, demand services. Before that they took it for granted without—I do not think I ever looked at the postmark on an envelope in my life prior to the time I got in the Post Office. I think a great many people never looked at a postmark prior to the time they were suddenly faced with an increase in rate, but the problem exists.

Mr. Nesbitt: I will just say in conclusion—and I will finish my questioning at this particular point—that may well be, but I always take very careful note of when letters are written and I have noticed the problem only once late last fall. I had never noticed it before that except in a most rare instance; now it comes up 40 or 50 per cent of the time.

The Chairman: All right. Mr. Ritchie?

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, and Mr. Minister, my questions are mostly on the rural post office. First of all, how is the revenue arrived at in a small rural post office?

Mr. Kierans: The stamps that are sold.

Mr. Ritchie: Is this fair? The intake of mail is not considered?

Mr. Kierans: No, we consider the particular local post office as a generator of revenue, such as branchbanks are considered. I want to make clear that the vast majority of our post offices across the country do not break even just, I suppose, as the vast majority of branch banks do not break even but you need them to have a branch banking system.

As a matter of fact, I believe five post offices generate about 50.5 per cent of the total revenue of the Post Office—just five post offices. The group that we are concentrating on actually comprises about 24 per cent of our post offices that generate less than $445. This is where we are starting, which means that they sell less than $445 worth of stamps au ministre que cela se produit en général partout.

M. Kierans: Vous avez commencé à le constater l'automne dernier, lorsque les gens ont voulu se plaindre du Bureau de poste. Il est fort possible que ces incidents se soient produits avant même l'augmentation des taux. Les gens qui paient davantage ont tendance à exiger un meilleur service. Je n'avais pas l'habitude de jeter un coup d'œil sur la date d'expédition de la lettre avant d'entrer aux postes. Je crois que beaucoup de gens qui ne le faisaient pas, le font depuis la hausse des tarifs. C'est un problème qui existe.

M. Nesbitt: En terminant, je voudrais dire que c'est possible, mais je note toujours la date d'expédition soigneusement et je n'ai constaté ce problème que l'automne dernier. Cela ne se présentait que très rarement avant. A l'heure actuelle, c'est dans 40 ou 55 p. 100 des cas.

Le président: Oui. Monsieur Ritchie?

M. Ritchie: Monsieur le président, mes questions portent essentiellement sur les bureaux de poste ruraux. D'abord, comment réalise-t-on des recettes dans les petits bureaux de poste?

M. Kierans: Par la vente des timbres.

M. Ritchie: Est-ce juste? On ne tient pas compte du nombre de lettres reçues?

M. Kierans: Non. Nous considérons qu'un bureau de poste produit des recettes, tout comme dans le cas des succursales des banques. Je tiens à dire que la grande majorité de nos bureaux de poste d'un bout à l'autre du pays n'arrive pas à rencontrer leurs frais et ce doit être le même cas dans le cas des succursales des banques, mais ces succursales sont nécessaires.

Il y a environ cinq bureaux de poste qui produisent environ 50 p. 100 des recettes du ministère des Postes. Le groupe qui nous intéresse actuellement représente environ 24 p. 100 de nos bureaux de poste qui produisent moins de $445. Alors ceci veut dire qu'ils vendent moins de $445 de timbres par année. Il y a donc lieu d'étudier la situation.

[Text]

In a year so there is a legitimate reason to look at them to see how necessary they are.

The community they serve buys less than $445 worth of stamps in an entire year. Some very small post offices in Toronto, Montreal or other large centres would sell $1,000 worth of stamps in a single day.

Mr. Ritchie: The reason I suggest this is that I know a smart postmaster or postmistress in these small places can go to larger centres to, say, a legal firm and say, you had better buy your postal stamps from me. This puts their sales up so that these figures of revenue are subject to some variation. They are made only on the sale of stamps to the people who use them, not taking into consideration the mail that is also delivered. I do not know whether this is altogether quite fair.

The other thing I was wondering about is the fact that most of these small post offices are a kind of little conglomerate. They farm and they have a store and they have bulk oil, and they may buy pulpwood, and so on. Do your officials ever go to them and say well, now, based on what you are on, you had 45 or 50 patrons but you are now down to 30. Therefore, your income would have to be reduced to fall in line with our formula. People do not expect all portions of their business to continue full blast or always go ahead, but these people might say, well, we will take this at a reduced figure because it fits in with our business. Do your Post Office people approach it in that way?

Mr. Kierans: We base the payments that we make to these small postmasters or postmistresses on the total amount of business they do, not solely on the sale of stamps. It is based also on the inflow of mail. We do not make offers to them or seek to beat them down. If that is what you mean the answer is, no. We simply judge on the basis of the traffic in and out whether it is justified, whether there are alternative ways of satisfying the needs that exist to the extent that they do exist.

Mr. Ritchie: I just suggest that perhaps some of these people might be willing to continue the post office at a reduced level based on the number of patrons they have. After all, they have less work because they have fewer patrons. I think you have closed about 10 or 12 in my riding, and I agree for most of them, but I think for about three I felt you were a little hasty and perhaps they should have been spun out for another year or two.

[Interpretation]

Si par exemple un bureau de poste vend moins de $445 de timbres dans une année. Je sais qu'en ville, par exemple, on vend parfois pour $1,000 de timbres en une seule journée.

M. Ritchie: Je crois qu'un maître de poste bien avisé pourrait aller en ville voir une société quelconque et lui demander d'acheter des timbres à son bureau de poste. Leurs ventes seraient donc plus élevées, de sorte que ces chiffres sont sujets à des fluctuations. On se fonde exclusivement sur le nombre de timbres vendus et on ne tient pas compte du volume de courrier qui est livré. Je me demande si c'est juste.

De plus, les petits bureaux de poste fonctionnent habituellement partie d'une entreprise composée. Ils font de l'exploitation agricole, tiennent un magasin, vendent de l'huile en vrac, achètent du bois à pâte, etc. Est-ce que vos fonctionnaires vont parfois leur dire: vous n'avez pas assez de clients, vous en avez 40 ou 50 et vous n'en avez plus que 30. Il faudra réduire votre traitement pour tenir compte de notre formule. Les gens ne s'attendent pas évidemment à ce que tous les secteurs de leur entreprise fonctionnent bien tout le temps et ils accepteront un traitement inférieur pour conserver le bureau de poste parce qu'il cadre bien avec leur entreprise. Est-ce ainsi que vous procédez?

M. Kierans: Les salaires qui sont versés aux maîtres de poste sont calculés sur leur chiffre d'affaire global, il ne s'agit pas simplement de la vente des timbres. Il y a également le volume du courrier. Nous ne leur faisons pas d'offres et ne cherchons pas à les renfrogner. Non. Nous jugeons simplement d'après le volume du courrier, si la disparition du bureau est justifiée, et s'il y a d'autres moyens de satisfaire aux besoins réels des clients.

M. Ritchie: Je crois que certains maîtres de poste seraient prêts à continuer de fournir le service à un salaire moindre d'après le nombre de clients sur lesquels ils peuvent compter. Ils ont moins de travail s'il y a moins de clients. Vous en avez fermé 10 ou 12 dans ma circonscription, et je suis d'accord dans la plupart des cas, mais je crois que dans environ 3 cas on n'aurait pas dû fermer ces bureaux de poste si vite. On aurait pu les conserver pendant un an ou deux.

Texte]

In my town you are keeping the wickets open at night, seven days a week, which I think is an improvement and I would like to comment the Post Office for this. How is it working out? Have you any reports?

Mr. T. Bond (Assistant Deputy Postmaster General (Operations) Post Office Department): Seven days a week. This has to be a special...

Mr. Kierans: I do not know what you did or whose arm you twisted, but it is not supposed to be open seven days a week.

Mr. Ritchie: Perhaps I am wrong.

An hon. Member: That is the wrong thing to say.

Mr. Kierans: We are not going to look into it; do not tell us the name of the town.

Mr. Ritchie: I am sorry. I meant the boxes in the lobby.

Mr. Kierans: Are they in a store?

Mr. Ritchie: No, no, in the Post Office. In small towns, and so on have you considered whether more boxes might help to reduce the labour cost?

Mr. Kierans: Oh yes, but the people would have to want to subscribe to the boxes. We will certainly make the boxes available if there is a demand for them. I think you are quite right. The more people that use the boxes, of course, the less pressure there is on the general delivery.

Mr. Ritchie: Therefore, in areas particularly that do not have daily delivery, might this not be a way of giving better service? Perhaps boxes should not be free, but they should be more nominal, taking into account the fact that they do lessen the labour load of the branch post office.

Mr. Kierans: That is taken into account. We consider that where $2 was a nominal amount in 1927, perhaps $4 is even more nominal in 1969.

Mr. Ritchie: I might say that for a while it was very difficult to get a box. I tried for a month to get a box in my small town. I would like to ask a few more questions. Have you had any survey of how many farm periodicals, and so on, might go out of business or will be in difficulty with the new rates?

[Interprétation]

Dans la ville où j'habite les guichets sont ouverts le soir, sept jours par semaine. Je crois que c'est excellent et je veux en féliciter le ministère des postes. Mais quels en sont les résultats? Avez-vous eu des rapports?

M. T. Bond (sous-ministre adjoint, (exploitation, ministère des Postes): Sept jours par semaine? C'est sûrement un cas spécial...

M. Kierans: Je ne sais pas comment vous avez pu y arriver, car d'habitude les bureaux de poste ne sont pas ouverts sept jours par semaine.

M. Ritchie: Je fais peut-être une erreur.

Une voix: Ce n'est pas une chose à dire.

M. Kierans: Nous n'allons pas faire enquête; ne nous dites pas le nom de la ville.

M. Ritchie: Je ne parle pas de guichets, je parle des boîtes postales.

M. Kierans: Sont-elles dans un magasin?

M. Ritchie: Non, dans le bureau de poste. Dans les petits villes, est-ce qu'on a fait enquête pour voir si un nombre plus élevé de boîtes postales permettrait de faire baisser le coût de la main-d'œuvre?

M. Kierans: Oui, mais il faudrait toutefois que les gens achètent ces boîtes. Nous mettrons certainement ces boîtes à la disposition si les gens le désirent. Je crois que vous avez raison. Plus il y aura de boîtes postales ou de casiers postaux, moins il y aura de pression sur le service de livraison.

M. Ritchie: Lorsqu'il n'y a pas de livraison quotidienne à domicile, ne serait-ce pas un moyen de donner un meilleur service? Ces boîtes postales ne seraient pas nécessairement gratuites, mais à un coût nominal, étant donné qu'elles permettent de diminuer la charge de travail des petits bureaux de poste.

M. Kierans: Nous en tenons compte. Nous estimons que la somme de $2 était déjà une somme nominale en 1927 et je crois qu'en 1969, la somme de $4 est encore plus nominale.

M. Ritchie: Pendant un certain temps, il était très difficile d'obtenir un casier postal. J'ai tenté pendant plusieurs mois d'obtenir une boîte postale dans la ville où j'habite. Je voudrais poser encore quelques questions. Est-ce que vous avez entrepris un certain relevé des revues agricoles, par exemple, qui pourraient se trouver en difficulté à cause des nouveaux tarifs?

[Text]

Mr. Kierans: I left one of your earlier questions slip by.

The Chairman: I wonder, Mr. Kierans, if we could hold that back for a new subject, until we finish discussing the questions of the other members.

Mr. Kierans: On the lock box, though, if you had a shortage in your area there were certainly shortages across the country and perhaps surpluses in some areas, which we certainly intend to balance by moving them around. The shortages could be accounted for by the fact that at $2 we were losing money, and the more we put in, the more money we lost. At the $4 rate we expect to break even on this kind of service, so there is no reason why there should not be plenty of lock boxes, to answer that part of your question.

Mr. Schumacher: May I ask one further supplementary on service? This is my personal experience, Mr. Chairman. I have just noticed that since Christmas it is taking 10 days for mail to go from the post office here in the West Block to my box and other boxes in Drumheller, Alberta. When you are conducting your investigations I hope you will include this problem.

Mr. Kierans: We will include the West Block.

Mr. Schumacher: I do not know where the snag is, whether it goes through Toronto or what, but 10 days seems like a ridiculous period of time to take to go from here to Alberta.

The Chairman: Mr. Matte?

M. Matte: Monsieur le président, advenant le cas où on constate que, par suite de la nouvelle politique, le déficit est encore plus grand que lorsqu'il y avait des bureaux de poste; est-ce qu'on va revenir sur la décision?

M. Kierans: Je ne m'attends pas à ce que le déficit soit plus grand que par le passé. Je crois qu'il y aura un déficit l'an prochain d'à peu près 40 millions de dollars y compris toutes les augmentations de salaires qui sont assez considérables et aussi les allocations de 24 millions de dollars, je pense, pour les pensions.

M. Matte: Si vous étudiez le cas d'un bureau de poste en particulier, dans une municipalité donnée, en prévoyant qu'avec sa disparition vous aurez un revenu supplémentaire de $400 ou $500, vous pouvez agir ainsi. Mais il peut arriver que dans deux ans, par exemple, le service du courrier rural, vous

[Interpretation]

M. Kierans: J'ai oublié une de vos questions précédentes.

Le président: Monsieur Kierans, je me demande s'il ne serait pas possible de remettre la réponse à plus tard, lorsque nous aurons terminé avec les questions des autres députés.

M. Kierans: Pour ce qui est des boîtes postales, si vous n'en avez pas assez dans votre région, il est certain qu'il y a eu une pénurie de boîtes postales d'un bout à l'autre du Canada, et peut-être un excédent à certains endroits. Nous avons l'intention de faire un équilibre. La pénurie est peut-être attribuable au fait qu'à $2 nous perdions de l'argent, et plus nous avions de boîtes postales, plus nous perdions. Toutefois, à un taux de $4 nous allons arriver à combler nos frais et nous pourrons offrir plus de boîtes postales.

M. Schumacher: Une question supplémentaire quant au service. Monsieur le président, depuis Noël j'ai constaté qu'il y a un délai de dix jours quand on expédie du courrier de la Chambre des communes à Drumheller, Alberta. Lorsque vous ferez votre enquête, j'espère que vous l'étendrez à ce problème.

M. Kierans: Nous l'étendrons à l'édifice de l'ouest.

M. Schumacher: Je ne sais où le courrier est retardé, s'il passe par Toronto ou quoi, mais je crois qu'une période de dix jours c'est un peu ridicule.

Le président: Monsieur Matte.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, should one notice that after following the new policy, the deficit is even greater than when those post offices were open, will you change your decision?

Mr. Kierans: I do not expect the deficit to be greater than in the past. I think next year's deficit will be around $40 million and that would take into account all salary increases which are fairly considerable, and also allocations for $24 million, I believe, for pensions.

Mr. Matte: If you study the case of a particular post office, in a given municipality, by expecting that its disappearance will give an added revenue of $400 or $500—in a case like this, you can act that way. But it may happen that within two years, for instance, rural mail service will cost more than the coûte plus cher que le bureau de poste ne vous coûtait. Il peut arriver que les soumissions présentées l'an prochain ou dans deux ans...

M. Kierans: Oui, cela peut augmenter...

M. Matte: ...elles vont certainement augmenter parce que le postier se rendra compte qu'il y perd, avec toutes les responsabilités qu'il a.

M. Kierans: Nous allons essayer de restreindre les augmentations dans les contrats pour les routes rurales, mais toutes les routes rurales, monsieur Matte, sont subventionnées par le gouvernement et nous perdons de l'argent dans les routes rurales, cela est clair. Mais, ce que nous essayons de faire est de tout simplement réduire le déficit. Et, en éliminant, par exemple, un bureau de poste dans tel ou tel comté, nous savons que nous allons diminuer nos coûts de $1000 par exemple.

Mais, il peut arriver d'ici deux ou trois ans que l'augmentation des contrats soit de l'ordre de $1500 par année. A ce moment, nous ré-examinerons l'affaire. Cela peut arriver mais j'en doute grandement.

M. Matte: Le point de vue humain a-t-il été suffisamment considéré? Je vous ai déjà souligné un cas particulier, et j'y reviens, parce que cela me fait beaucoup de peine de voir que vous êtes resté sur votre position. Lorsque vous parlez d'une municipalité normalement constituée, avec tout ce que cela comporte dans le Québec, vous savez, l'esprit paroissial, et le reste, il est presque inconcevable de parler d'une municipalité sans bureau de poste. Au point de vue humain, c'est inconcevable.

M. Kierans: Voilà des raisons sociales, mais il faut aussi parler des nécessités économiques. S'il nous en coûte assez cher, $3000 ou $4000 par année pour avoir un bureau de poste au lieu d'une route rurale, est-ce que le bureau de poste vaut le montant de $4000? Ce sont les impôts, les vôtres et les miens aussi que l'on dépense.

M. Matte: Je ne suis pas tellement convaincu de cette affirmation. Serait-il possible d'avoir le bilan de chaque bureau de poste pour un district donné?

M. Kierans: Oui, dans votre comté, par exemple, on peut vous donner les chiffres, le revenu de tel ou tel bureau de poste et les coûts d'opération.

M. Matte: Supposons dans une municipalité assez considérable, disons, une municipalité de 2000 âmes, où il y a deux ou trois post office did. It could be that the tenders to be called next year or two years from now...

Mr. Kierans: Yes, this might increase...

Mr. Matte: ... they will certainly increase because the postman will realize that he is on the losing end with all the responsibilities he assumes.

Mr. Kierans: We will try to limit the increases in contracts for rural routes, but all rural routes, Mr. Matte, are subsidized by the government, and we always lose money on rural route, that is clear. But what we are trying to do is simply reduce the deficit. And by eliminating, for instance, a post office in this or that riding, we know that the costs will be decreased by a $1,000, for instance.

But within two or three years, it is possible that contracts could increase by a sum of about $1,500 a year. We will then re-examine the situation. This may happen, but I doubt it very much.

Mr. Matte: Has the human aspect been sufficiently taken into account? I have already pointed a particular case out to you, and I bring it up again because I am very sorry to see that you have kept the same position. When you refer to a normally constituted municipality with all that entails in Quebec—you know, parochial spirit, and so forth—it is almost inconceivable that a municipality would not have a post office. From the human point of view, it is inconceivable.

Mr. Kierans: This is from the social point of view, but we also have to deal with the economic needs. It may cost $3,000 to $4,000 a year to have a post office instead of a rural route, but is that post office worth $4,000? It is your income tax and mine that pays for what we spend.

Mr. Matte: I am not quite sure of that. Would it be possible to have the accounts of a post office in a specific district?

Mr. Kierans: Yes, in your own riding, for instance, we could give you the figures, the revenues and the operating costs of any particular post office.

Mr. Matte: Thus, let us suppose a fairly important municipality of, let's say 2,000 people, with two or three post office employees.

[Text]

employés au bureau de poste; il peut fort bien arriver que, à ce moment-là, le revenu ne dépasse pas du tout les dépenses.

M. Kierans: Il n'est pas question de fermer un tel bureau de poste, monsieur Matte, pas question du tout.

M. Matte: Il n'est pas question, dites-vous; excusez-moi je n'ai pas compris.

M. Kierans: Pour une municipalité de 2000 âmes, non, il n'est pas question de fermer le bureau de poste.

M. Matte: Une municipalité qui a 2000 âmes gardera donc nécessairement son bureau de poste. C'est cela que vous affirmez?

M. Kierans: Oui, je suis prêt à vous assurer que nous n'avons pas l'intention de fermer un tel bureau de poste. Mais il peut arriver qu'à travers le Canada un tel endroit existe. Il y a des régions spéciales. Mais je doute que cette situation se présente. Y a-t-il un cas particulier qui...

M. Matte: Non, mais je fais la comparaison suivante: si dans une municipalité de 2000 âmes vous n'enlevez pas le bureau de poste, peu importe qu'il soit déficitaire ou non, pourquoi l'enlever dans une municipalité de 1000?

M. Kierans: Nous ne voulons pas non plus fermer un bureau de poste desservant une municipalité de 1000. Nos critères valent pour une région ou une communauté de moins de 30 familles.

M. Matte: Le cas que je vous avais soumis était celui de la municipalité de Sainte-Christine, dans le comté de Champlain, une municipalité parfaitement constituée.

M. Kierans: Quelle est la population de ce comté?

M. Matte: Il y a une centaine de familles, soit 500 ou 600 personnes. Or la municipalité est déjà divisée par différents services, et il s'ensuit que le bureau de poste d'Auvergne, dans le village de Sainte-Christine, dessert à peu près 43 familles. Actuellement, on veut enlever le bureau de poste de Sainte-Christine. Alors j'ai demandé que l'on revise cette politique. Si on faisait de Sainte-Christine le centre même, avec les deux routes rurales...

M. Kierans: Combien de bureaux de poste avez-vous dans cette municipalité, à l'heure actuelle, un seulement?

M. Matte: Il y a un bureau de poste qu'on veut enlever, et puis il y a trois routes rurales.

[Interpretation]

In a case such as this, it may well happen that the revenues do not exceed the expenditures.

Mr. Kierans: There is certainly no question of closing such a post office, Mr. Matte, no question at all.

Mr. Matte: There is no question of doing that—excuse me, but I don't understand.

Mr. Kierans: In a municipality of 2,000 people, there would be no question of shutting down the post office.

Mr. Matte: A municipality where there are 2,000 people would thus necessarily keep its office. Is that what you are stating?

Mr. Kierans: Yes, I am willing to assure you that we have no intention of closing such a post office. However, there could be one such case in Canada. There are special regions. But I doubt that situation of this nature will arise. Is there a special case that...

Mr. Matte: No, but I am going to make the following comparison. In a municipality with 2,000 people, if you do not take away the post office, why take it away in the case of a municipality that would have 1,000 people?

Mr. Kierans: We do not want to close the post office either in the case of a municipality of 1,000 people. Our criteria apply in the case of an area or community of less than 30 families.

Mr. Matte: The case I had submitted to you dealt with the municipality of Sainte-Christine, in the Champlain Riding, perfectly constituted municipality.

Mr. Kierans: What is the population of this riding?

Mr. Matte: There are about 100 families. There must be about 500 to 600 people in this municipality. But, since this municipality is already divided up by different services, as a result the Auvergne post office in the village of Sainte-Christine serves about 43 families. At the present time, they want to take the post office away from Sainte-Christine. So, I have asked that this policy be reconsidered. If Sainte-Christine were made into the centre itself, with the two rural routes...

Mr. Kierans: How many post offices do you have in this municipality right now, only one?

Mr. Matte: There is a post office that they want to take away and there are three rural routes.

[Texte]

M. Kierans: Et on va remplacer le bureau de poste par une nouvelle route rurale?

M. Matte: C'est cela, ce qui veut dire, que si j'envoie du courrier à Sainte-Christine, mais je n'adresserai «Sainte-Christine». Je vais adresser «Portneuf Station» pour un rang ou «Saint-Léonard», qui n'est pas dans le comté d'ailleurs, mais dans le comté de Portneuf, pour un autre rang, ou encore «Saint-Basile» pour un autre rang mais je n'adresserai pas «Sainte-Christine», car cela n'existe pas, même si c'est une municipalité aux termes de la loi.

C'est là le point de vue humain que je soulignais tout à l'heure.

M. Kierans: D'accord, je vais répondre à votre lettre.

M. Matte: Vous y avez déjà répondu.

M. Kierans: Oui? En disant quoi?

M. Matte: En disant que la décision était prise et que c'était...

M. Kierans:... que nous allons fermer le bureau de poste...

M. Matte: ...parce que le revenu en timbres était de $700. Et justement, si le revenu n'est que de $700 c'est parce que la municipalité est déjà divisée entre 3 ou 4 autres bureaux de poste. Mais le revenu dépassera certainement $1000 si vous avez un seul bureau de poste qui desserve toute la municipalité.

M. Kierans: Vous suggérez dans ce cas qu'au lieu d'éliminer le bureau de poste il faudrait éliminer les routes rurales.

M. Matte: Il faudrait peut-être en construire un, même.

M. Kierans: Vous voulez éliminer les routes rurales?

M. Matte: Pas nécessairement, mais faire de Sainte-Christine un centre avec un bureau de poste qui desserve les quatre routes rurales ou les trois rurales, ce qu'il y a actuellement dans cette municipalité-là.

M. Kierans: Je vais demander à mon adjoint de faire un peu de recherches dans ce sens-là.

M. Matte: Une autre question au sujet des districts postaux: Il y en a deux dans le Québec et quatre en Ontario. Pourquoi quatre districts en Ontario et deux dans le Québec?

[Interprétation]

Mr. Kierans: And the post office will be replaced by a new rural route?

Mr. Matte: That's right, and this means that if I send a letter to Sainte-Christine, I will never be able to use the "Sainte-Christine" address. I will have to address it to "Portneuf Station" for a rural route or else to "Saint-Leonard" which is not in the riding but in Portneuf riding, or I will have to send it to "Saint-Basile" for another rural route, but I shall not address it to "Sainte-Christine", because it does not exist, even though it is a municipality within the legal sense of the term.

That is the social point of view that I was referring to earlier.

Mr. Kierans: All right, I'll answer your letter.

Mr. Matte: You have already sent me an answer.

Mr. Kierans: Yes? What did I answer?

Mr. Matte: You said that the decision had been taken and that...

Mr. Kierans: ... we would close the post office...

Mr. Matte: ...because the revenue from stamps was only $700. And the reason why the revenue is only 700, is because the municipality is already divided up between 3 or 4 other post offices. But the revenue would certainly exceed $1000 if there were one single post office to serve the entire municipality.

Mr. Kierans: You suggest to eliminate the rural routes rather than the post office?

Mr. Matte: We should perhaps even build one.

Mr. Kierans: You would like to eliminate the rural routes?

Mr. Matte: Not necessarily, but I think Sainte-Christine should be made into a centre with a post office that would serve the three or four rural routes of that municipality.

Mr. Kierans: I shall ask my deputy to look into this question.

Mr. Matte: Another question regarding postal districts. There are two in Quebec and four in Ontario. Why four districts in Ontario and two in Quebec?

[Text]

M. Kierans: Pour la distribution dans la province de Québec, il y a deux grandes villes: la ville de Québec elle-même et la ville de Montréal. On peut plus facilement, plus économiquement faire la distribution à partir de ces deux endroits, dans toute la province de Québec.

M. Matte: Alors vous avez deux centres qui desservent 6 millions 300 mille habitants.

M. Kierans: Oui, mais voici, monsieur Matte. La ville de Québec est un centre de distribution pour toute la Gaspésie et la Côte-Nord. C'est naturel, c'est normal pour n'importe quel ministère. Même quand j'étais dans le gouvernement, à Québec, nous avons toujours considéré Québec et Montréal comme les deux plus grands centres. Ce serait un peu plus difficile de faire d'une ville comme Rouyn-Noranda, par exemple, un centre de distribution, parce qu'un grand centre de distribution est mieux servi par Québec ou Montréal.

M. Matte: Mais, alors, pourquoi ne pas faire la même chose en Ontario?

M. Kierans: On ne peut prendre une telle décision que quand on examine les faits économiques. J'imagine qu'il est moins cher de diviser l'Ontario en quatre qu'en deux.

M. Matte: Et dans le Québec.

M. Kierans: Non.

• 1150

M. Matte: Une dernière question, monsieur le ministre. Est-ce qu'il est possible de déterminer les revenus du ministère des Postes, par province?

M. Kierans: Certainement. Je peux le faire. Est-ce que vous désirez des renseignements là-dessus?

M. Matte: Si c'est possible, oui. Dans plusieurs domaines, on nous répond souvent qu'on n'a pas de statistiques par province. Dans votre ministère, est-il possible...

M. Kierans: Si vous posez une question, on va vous répondre.

M. Matte: C'est bien, je vous remercie.

Mr. Macquarrie: Just before we get in out of the country I have one more question. A thing that has concerned many of us for a long time is the unreal tenders which come in for rural couriers' contracts. Some people have been working at atrociously low earnings. I wonder if you could tell me what

[Interpretation]

Mr. Kierans: For distribution, in Quebec there are two major cities: Quebec City and Montreal. It is easier and more economical to make the distribution from these two centres for the whole province of Quebec.

Mr. Matte: You have then two centres that serve 6,300,000 people.

Mr. Kierans: Yes, Mr. Matte. The City of Quebec is the distribution centre for the whole region of Gaspé and the Northern Shore. I think it is normal, it is natural for no matter what Department. Even when I was in the Quebec government, we always considered Quebec City and Montreal as the two major centres. It would be somewhat more difficult to make a town like Rouyn-Noranda for instance, into a distribution centre because a large distribution centre is more adequately served by Quebec City or Montreal.

Mr. Matte: Well then, why not do the same in Ontario?

Mr. Kierans: Before taking a decision of this nature, we have to look at the economic factors involved. I imagine it is less expensive to divide Ontario into four centres than into two.

Mr. Matte: And, in Quebec?

Mr. Kierans: No.

Mr. Matte: One last question, Sir. Would it be possible to establish what post office revenues are by province?

Mr. Kierans: Certainly, I could do this. Do you wish to have any information regarding this?

Mr. Matte: I would like to have it, if possible, because we are often told that there are no statistics available for each separate province. But in your Department, would it be possible? ...

Mr. Kierans: If you ask a question, I will be glad to answer.

Mr. Matte: Thank you.

M. Macquarrie: Avant de quitter la campagne, je voudrais poser une autre question. Beaucoup d'entre nous avons été frappés par ces irréelles soumissions pour les contrats ruraux. Dans certains cas des gens ont travaillé à des taux affreusement bas. Je me demande si vous pourriez nous dire ce qu' precisely you are doing about this sort of thing? I know that it has been under consideration. Are you establishing a realistic floor or are you working on this obvious spotting of injustice?

Mr. Kierans: Oh yes. I think you are referring to—and I wonder at it myself—contractors who take rural routes for $1,487 or amounts like that. Obviously, they are combining this particular service and the hours which they have to spend on it with other activities, because they could not possibly live on that or even service or pay for the expenses of their trucks. We do not like this and we are—and this is causing some political problem—moving to amalgamate routes in order to have full-time people servicing routes on a full-time basis. Obviously, a number of members might feel that instead of having one man who has a contract for $8,400 it is better to have four who average $2,100 and they can add this to supplement their other income—and it also gives them a base on which to provide trucking services for other enterprises in their areas. But, basically, this is not the most economic way of doing it, Mr. Macquarrie, and there is a great movement on in the Post Office to reorganize and amalgamate rural routes.

Mr. Macquarrie: You are protected, of course, by the usual formula "the lowest or any tender not necessarily received". Are you still in general accepting the lowest tender?

Mr. Kierans: Oh, I would say so in the vast majority of cases. I remember one case in which it was not accepted but the man had already taken the contract a couple of times before, faded out on it, and obviously we did not want to trust him again.

Mr. Macquarrie: It seems to me that so many times the trouble comes from someone submitting a tender in order to get the wretched contract and it is a totally unrealistic figure.

Mr. Kierans: In business I had an experience where a competitor was applying for a Federal Government contract. It was supplying wax to the Federal Government, and he got the contract. It came up again and he got it again, because he had underbid himself. This goes back to the early fifties. At the end of about three or four years he realized that he had just underbid himself. Everybody else had long since given up, but every year he continually underbid himself until finally he went out of business. So we are very much aware of this problem. He lost the rest of us vous voulez faire à ce sujet? Je sais que vous avez étudié la question. Est-ce que vous êtes en train de fixer un minimum raisonnable ou travaillez-vous à remédier à ces injustices?

M. Kierans: Oh oui, je pense que vous parlez de certaines personnes qui desservent des routes rurales pour $1,487. Il est certain que ces gens ont également d'autres activités, car ils ne pourraient pas vivre avec cela, voir même payer l'entretien et les frais de leur camion. Nous ne sommes guère satisfaits de cela, nous voulons tenter, et cela pose des problèmes politiques, d'amalgamer des routes rurales pour avoir des employés à plein temps qui desservent ces routes rurales de façon continue. Certains députés vont peut-être penser qu'au lieu d'avoir une personne ayant un contrat de $8,400 il vaut mieux avoir quatre personnes qui demandent $2,100 chacune, revenu qui s'ajoute à ce qu'elles ont déjà, tout en leur laissant la possibilité de faire d'autres transports dans leur région. Mais, je crois que ce n'est pas la meilleure façon de procéder. Il y a à l'heure actuelle des changements au sein du Bureau de poste en vue de réorganiser et d'amalgamer les routes rurales.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que vous acceptez de façon générale la soumission la moins élevée?

M. Kierans: Dans la grande majorité des cas je dirais oui. Je me souviens d'un cas où on n'a pas accepté la soumission la plus basse, mais c'était une personne qui avait présenté des offres à plusieurs reprises et qui n'avait pas pu s'acquitter de ses responsabilités par la suite.

M. Macquarrie: Il me semble que la plupart du temps, cela provient du fait que les gens soumissionnent pour obtenir ce mauvais contrat et leur chiffre est absolument farfelu.

M. Kierans: Lorsque j'étais en affaires, j'ai vu un concurrent soumissionner pour fournir de la cire au Gouvernement fédéral, il obtint le contrat. À l'échéance du contrat, il l'obtint de nouveau, parce qu'il soumissionnait à perte. C'était dans les années cinquante. Après trois ou quatre ans, il réalisa qu'il perdait de l'argent. Tout le monde avait renoncé depuis longtemps, mais chaque année il continuait à offrir ses services à perte, jusqu'au moment où il fit faillite. Nous connaissons donc le problème.

who were in that business at the time in the first year.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes. I was thinking of the side effects on patrons too in this sort of thing. Thank you.

The Chairman: I have a question, Mr. Kierans, that bothers a lot of people in North-western Ontario who are heavily dependent on tourism. I am referring to summer post offices in communities where we have perhaps only four people all year around but that number jumps up to around 50 families for four months during the summer.

Mr. Kierans: We are keeping them open for the summer months only. We will provide a service in that area for the summer months.

The Chairman: That is fine; that answers the question.

Mr. Stafford: I just wanted to ask one question. • 1155

How close does a person have to live to a mail route to be added?

Mr. Kierans: To be added to an existing mail route?

Mr. Stafford: Yes. What is the longest distance that you refuse them delivery.

Mr. Kierans: One half mile.

Mr. Stafford: So if a person lives beyond one and a half miles does he have to go all the way back to the post office or do you put a terminal box there for him? Let us suppose he lives two miles away, what do you do?

Mr. Kierans: He can put a box at the nearest point.

Mr. Ritchie: Has the Minister's staff any figures on the average cost per patron in a rural route?

Mr. Kierans: I doubt if we would break them down like that.

Mr. R. J. Cousens (Assistant Director, Transportation Branch, Post Office Department): It is $18.85 per year.

Mr. Ritchie: And there is no great fluctuation per patron over the country—that is, some are not double others?

Mr. Kierans: That would be an average cost; some of them might be $6 and some of them might be $200, you know, if they are in the North.

[Interpretation]

M. Macquarrie: Je songeais aussi aux effets que ceci pouvait avoir sur les clients. Merci.

Le président: J'ai une question, monsieur Kierans qui gêne beaucoup de personnes du nord-ouest de l'Ontario qui dépendent du tourisme, ce sont les bureaux temporaires. Dans certaines régions, il n'y a peut-être que quatre personnes résidant en permanence, mais le nombre de gens qui habitent la région va augmenter beaucoup pendant l'été, disons jusqu'à 50 familles.

M. Kierans: Ces bureaux ne sont ouverts que pendant l'été. Nous fournissons un service dans cette région pour tenir compte des estivants.

Le président: Parfait, cela répond à la question.

M. Stafford: A quelle distance une personne doit-elle se trouver d'une route rurale pour bénéficier du service postal?

M. Kierans: Pour être ajoutée sur une route existante?

M. Stafford: Oui, à partir de quelle distance refusez-vous?

M. Kierans: Un demi-mille.

M. Stafford: Donc, si une personne habite à plus d'un demi-mille doit-elle aller au bureau de poste ou bien placez-vous une boîte? Disons, par exemple, que la personne habite à deux milles de la route, que faites-vous?

M. Kierans: Elle peut toujours installer une boîte au point le plus près.

M. Ritchie: Quel est le coût moyen par client le long des routes rurales?

M. Kierans: Je ne pense pas que ce calcul ait été fait.

M. R. J. Cousens (Adjoint au directeur, direction des transports, Ministère des Postes): $18.85 par an.

M. Ritchie: Il n'y a pas de fluctuation considérable d'un bout à l'autre du pays?

M. Kierans: Ceci dépend des circonstances, dans certains cas, il y a des fluctuations assez considérables, cela peut-être $6 et jusqu'à $200 dans le Nord.

[Texte]

Mr. Ritchie: There is that much variation?

Mr. Kierans: Maybe if they are in John Reid's riding.

The Chairman: It would be very high.

Mr. Ritchie: I was going to ask about farm periodicals and newspapers. Has there been any survey by your Department on the effect the new rates may have?

Mr. Kierans: We have had a great number of representations. And from all types of organizations—labour unions and so on. But you are referring specifically to farm papers.

Mr. Ritchie: I will leave it at that for now anyway.

The Chairman: I think we can deal with the general run of it because it is not an exclusive problem.

Mr. Kierans: No. The problem with the majority of these weekly newspapers is that we were recovering about 9.3 per cent of our cost. In other words, we got a little more than 9 cents back out of every dollar in cost. Although we increased this considerably, I see no reason that any newspaper should go out of business.

What has happened in the economics of publishing has been that the actual charge or subscription rate of farm journals, for example—and I am thinking of some of the Western farm newspapers—has gone down, because of the way in which they have been sold on a bulk basis to co-operatives and others, from $1.00 a year to about 10 cents a year. Now that is a large discount.

Now the majority of these papers could recover the increased cost of postage. Let us say that they do charge $1.00. By adding 25 cents a year from $1.00 to $1.25, they have their money back—or by adding 25 or 35 cents a year to the 10 cents that they already charge for their monthly or their weekly farm newspapers. The majority of them are in this area. And we have had them in, just as the unions have come in. We say to them: Well how much are you charging your members for this?" And they say: One dollar. I admit, on the one hand, the increase that they say is 100 per cent or 500 per cent, but in actual cost to their members that means that it will have to go up 35 cents a year. I ask them if their weekly or monthly newspaper is worth $1.35 instead of $1.00.

The reason for the increases, sir, is that none of these second class things have been increased since 1951, and the increase then was only a very nominal one.

[Interprétation]

Mr. Ritchie: D'aussi fortes variations?

Mr. Kierans: Peut-être, s'ils sont dans la circonscription de John Reid.

Le président: Ce serait beaucoup.

Mr. Ritchie: Je veux vous poser une question au sujet des hebdomadaires et des magazines fermiers. Votre ministère a-t-il fait une enquête sur l'influence des nouveaux tarifs?

Mr. Kierans: Il y a eu de nombreuses représentations qui nous ont été adressées par une foule d'organisations, il y a les syndicats, les associations, etc. mais vous ne vous intéressez qu'aux magazines fermiers?

Mr. Ritchie: Oui, pour le moment.

Le président: Je crois qu'on pourrait en traiter en général car il ne s'agit pas d'un problème exclusif.

Mr. Kierans: Les problèmes de la majorité de ces hebdomadaires c'est que nous pouvions récupérer 9.3 p. 100 de nos frais seulement. En d'autres termes pour chaque dollar de frais, nous ne recevions guère plus de 9 cents. Bien que nous ayons augmenté cela considérablement, je ne vois pas pourquoi les journaux devraient faire faillite.

Ce qui s'est passé en réalité, c'est que les tarifs d'abonnement des journaux agricoles, et je songe à certains journaux de l'Ouest, ont baissés parce qu'ils sont maintenant vendus en gros aux coopératives ou autres.

La majorité de ces journaux pourraient recouvrer leurs frais de poste en augmentant les tarifs d'abonnement d'un dollar à $1.25 par année. Ils ont protesté tout comme les syndicats. Nous leur avons dit «Quels sont vos tarifs d'abonnement»? Ils ont répondu $1. J'admets que c'est une augmentation de 400 à 500 p. 100 mais intrinsèquement ce n'est guère que trente-cinq sous par année pour chaque abonné. Je leur ai demandé si leur journal ne valait pas $1.35 plutôt que $1.00. Les tarifs postaux de seconde classe n'avaient pas été augmentés depuis 1951.

[Text]

Mr. Ritchie: Most farm periodicals and so on carry a great deal of information compiled by governments departments. I am thinking of articles on how to cook better, how to raise chickens, and so on. If newspapers quit using this for filler, have you had any indication from other government departments that this would prove serious.

Mr. Kierans: No, I have had no representations. I had representations from the journals or the newspapers themselves that this material is educational, is vital, that the whole quality of life in Canada would go down if this or that particular newspaper went out of existence. There are a number of arguments to that. I can understand that they are reacting against the increase.

As I have said, it is not as serious as the actual absolute or the percentage figures would lead one to believe. On the other hand, if one or two did go out of business, if there is actually a demand for or a need for this kind of newspaper, another publisher would either expand his circulation, or set up another newspaper to fill the gap.

Mr. Ritchie: Still it would be a sizeable cost to somebody. In order to keep the farm economy efficient, this information that spills out of all our government research institutions has to be disseminated somehow, and this is a relatively cheap way of doing it.

Mr. Kierans: Yes, and to the extent that it is valuable to the readers, to the market concerned, I would say that the people are willing to pay for it because the order of the change in subscription rate might be 25 cents; it might be 30 cents; it might be 50 cents a year.

Mr. Ritchie: And so your department has under survey what effect the new rates will have on these farm periodicals and newspapers.

Mr. Kierans: We know the effect. If a group of ten farm newspaper representatives came in this afternoon to see me, Mr. Pageau and his colleagues would have for each one of them a complete list of all the statistics, so that we would be able to analyze the situation. One of the largest labour unions in Canada came in about 10 days ago or two weeks ago criticizing violently what they considered to be a 900 per cent increase. And in fact it was a 900 per cent increase, but in actual terms it was the difference between $1 and $1.35 a year for their members. That is all it was, and this particular union, the

[Interpretation]

M. Ritchie: La plupart des journaux agricoles contiennent des renseignements publiés par le gouvernement au sujet de la façon d'élever des poules, de mieux cuisiner etc. ... Si on abandonne ces publications est-ce que ceci aura des conséquences graves.

M. Kierans: Je ne crois pas. Je n'ai pas reçu de représentation en ce sens, me disant que leurs renseignements sont essentiels et que le niveau de vie au Canada baisserait si ces journaux ne pouvaient pas être diffusés.

Peut-être que les chiffres nous portent à croire certaines choses qui ne sont pas vraiment fondées. Par contre si deux ou trois journaux ont dû abandonner les affaires, et s'il existe réellement un besoin pour ce genre de publication, un autre propriétaire de journaux verrait à combler le vide.

M. Ritchie: Le coût en serait encore assez élevé. Afin de conserver l'économie agricole efficace il faut que les renseignements qui sortent de nos institutions de recherches gouvernementales soient disséminés d'une façon ou d'une autre. Ça serait un moyen relativement économique de le faire.

M. Kierans: Oui, et en autant que les données qu'ils fournissent soient utiles aux lecteurs et au marché concerné, je dirais que les gens sont désireux d'obtenir ces renseignements, quitte à les payer. Une modification aux tarifs pourrait porter le prix des abonnements à 50 cents par an.

M. Ritchie: Le ministère étudie actuellement l'effet qui pourrait résulter des nouveaux taux relativement à ces périodiques et journaux.

M. Kierans: Nous connaissons le résultat. Si dix représentants de journaux se présentaient à mon bureau, cet après-midi, M. Pageau et ses collègues pourraient distribuer à chacun une liste complète de statistiques. Ainsi, nous serions en mesure d'étudier leurs problèmes. Le représentant d'un des plus grands syndicats du Canada est venu, il y a environ une dizaine de jours, protester violemment contre l'augmentation de 900 p. 100 mais, en réalité cette augmentation représentait la différence exigée d'un dollar à un dollar et trente-cinq cents par an pour leurs membres. Pas plus que cela et, le syndicat en cause, les Travailleurs

[Texte]

United Automobile Workers, are not a poor union.

The Chairman: That would be a fair statement.

Mr. Ritchie: Turning to the scientific periodicals, under the International Postal Agreement I believe you carry everybody's mail from outside free in the country of Canada. Is that right?

Mr. Kierans: We carry it.

Mr. Ritchie: Yes, and they carry ours in turn?

Mr. Kierans: That is right.

Mr. Ritchie: Have you had any studies or surveys of the possible effect of these new rates on these scientific periodicals, particularly the small one?

Mr. Kierans: You mean, will there be more of them coming in?

Mr. Ritchie: No, the effect on our own, the ones we are producing here. Have you any indication that some of them will cease publication?

Mr. Kierans: No, we have had no indication. I think what will happen is that—Mr. Macquarrie and I probably subscribe to the same journals; our interests are in the same area—we will find that our subscription rate will go up but I certainly would be very happy to pay it. I imagine Mr. Macquarrie would be too, not happy but anyway he would pay it because we both find those publications to be of tremendous interest to us. Our backgrounds are in the same areas of economics and political science and we want to keep up with our own particular disciplines.

Mr. Ritchie: I would suggest that in the scientific fields, Canadian periodicals are under considerable pressure from American ones which are, of course, always cheaper relative to the volume of information they contain, and that is just because there are 200 million people in the United States. It may well be that we have to be careful that we do not do these periodicals in. I think they are very useful, not only for the people who get them, but there has to be a forum for our scientists to put down in print what they have done. We as a government spend a great deal of money in scientific research, and if there is no forum for the fellow to write down what he has found, it is not good.

leurs Unis de l'automobile n'est pourtant pas pauvre.

Le président: C'est juste.

M. Ritchie: Quant aux périodiques scientifiques, en vertu de l'entente internationale des postes, je crois que vous accordez la franchise postale au courrier étranger qui entre au Canada.

M. Kierans: Nous l'accordons.

M. Ritchie: Les pays étrangers nous rendent-ils le même service?

M. Kierans: Oui, en effet.

M. Ritchie: Avez-vous fait des enquêtes concernant les résultats possibles des nouveaux tarifs, des publications et imprimeries scientifiques?

M. Kierans: Voulez-vous dire qu'il y aura beaucoup plus de publications qui entreront au Canada?

M. Ritchie: Non. Je parle de nos propres publications, celles que nous produisons ici. Est-ce qu'on a des indications que l'une ou l'autre d'entre elles va cesser de paraître?

M. Kierans: Non, nous n'avons aucune indication. Ce qui se produirait, probablement, les uns continueront de s'abonner au même journal parce que leur intérêt sera toujours là. Les gens ne sont peut-être pas toujours heureux de payer des abonnements de plus en plus élevés, mais comme ils ont besoin de ces publications, ils les paieront volontiers afin de se tenir au courant des derniers développements de la science politico-économique, par exemple; alors à ce moment-là il faut s'abonner à ce journal pour avoir les renseignements les plus récents.

M. Ritchie: Je crois que, dans le monde scientifique, les périodiques canadiens se font damer le pion par leurs pendants américains, puisque ces derniers ont un coût de revient moins élevé en raison de leur tirage qui peut atteindre jusqu'à 200 millions de personnes aux États-Unis. Il se peut fort bien que l'on doive procéder avec précaution pour ne pas nuire à ces périodiques. Ils sont très utiles. Ils procurent aux hommes de science un moyen de faire connaître le fruit de leurs recherches. Le gouvernement doit voir à leur assurer ce moyen.

Mr. Kierans: I agree with you entirely.

Mr. Ritchie: I have no further questions.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané.

• 1205

M. De Bané: Monsieur le ministre, je ne sais pas si vous avez vu l'annonce publiée par le journal Le Soleil sur une page en couleur et qui parlait de la loi Kierans.

M. Kierans: On m'en a parlé à la Chambre.

M. De Bané: Je représente une région de la Gaspésie et plusieurs de mes électeurs m'ont dit qu'ils trouvaient l'augmentation de $15 à $17 par année assez substantielle. C'est une région où le revenu annuel per capita est inférieur à $800 par année selon les statistiques fédérales. Avez-vous quelque chose à ajouter sur ce que vous avez dit à la Chambre?

M. Kierans: Non, monsieur De Bané. Je pense que c'était M. Caouette, ou un autre, qui m'a demandé si j'avais d'autres recommandations à faire. La question était irrecevable, mais j'étais sur le point de suggérer à M. Caouette ou à la direction du journal Le Soleil d'augmenter le prix pour l'espace de leurs annonces, de même pour l'espace de celle qu'on venait de publier.

M. De Bané: Est-ce que la revue Reader's Digest a des privilèges quelconques?

M. Kierans: Non. On subventionne tous les magazines de deuxième classe. On leur demande de payer, en moyenne, 33 p. 100 des frais. Le Reader's Digest tombe dans cette classe. Il n'y a aucune discrimination à l'égard du Reader's Digest ou du Time Magazine. Ils paient exactement le même tarif que tous les autres magazines de cette classe.

M. De Bané: Merci beaucoup.

The Chairman: Mr. Schumacher.

Mr. Schumacher: I wonder if the Minister can say whether or not the parcel post branch of the postal service is paying for itself?

Mr. Kierans: Well, last year the parcel post did break even. This year, apparently, we anticipate a loss on the parcel post area, and we probably will be considering recommendations and ways and means of reducing the losses in the parcel post.

Mr. Schumacher: Will you be considering a possible increase in the rates for parcel post?

[Interpretation]

M. Kierans: Je suis entièrement d'accord avec vous.

M. Ritchie: Je n'ai pas d'autres questions.

Le président: Monsieur De Bané.

Mr. De Bané: Sir, I do not know whether you saw the advertisement published by Le Soleil, a big colour advertisement that referred to the Kierans Act.

M. Kierans: It was mentioned to me in the House.

Mr. De Bané: I represent one of the Gaspe areas and several of my electors have told me that they considered the increase from $15 to $17 per year as quite substantial. It is an area where the per capita income is inferior to $800 per year, according to the federal statistics. Do you have something to add to what you said in the House of Commons.

Mr. Kierans: No, Mr. De Bané. I think it was Mr. Caouette or somebody else who asked me if I had other recommendations to make. The question was out of order, but I was on the point of suggesting their rates for their advertising space and also for the space of the advertisement they just published.

Mr. De Bané: Does the Reader's Digest have any privileges?

Mr. Kierans: No. We subsidize all second class magazines. We ask them to pay, on the average, 33% of the costs. The Reader's Digest is in that class. There is no discrimination for or against Reader's Digest or Time Magazine. They pay exactly the same tariff as the other magazines in that category.

Mr. De Bané: Thank you very much.

Le président: Monsieur Schumacher.

M. Schumacher: Le ministre pourrait-il nous dire si la Division des colis postaux du Service des postes réussit à combler ses frais.

M. Kierans: L'année dernière la Division des colis postaux a réussi à combler ses dépenses. Cette année, nous nous attendons à un déficit, et nous étudierons probablement les recommandations et les moyens de réduire les pertes à la Division des colis postaux.

M. Schumacher: Prévoyez-vous une augmentation possible des tarifs des colis postaux.

[Texte]

Mr. Kierans: There are many other ways of doing it, you know. Parcel post—again Edmonton is an example—can be handled very efficiently. However, in a number of our post offices now it is handled manually without any automatic equipment at all. Let us say the raising of rates in the parcel post area would be the last resort. We will explore every other possibility of bringing it into balance beforehand.

Mr. Schumacher: Speaking about the matter of service again, does the Department have a priority in respect to the handling of mail, and if it does what priority does parcel post have?

Mr. Kierans: The first class mail is clearly number one priority. I would say that the priorities of the Department are first class mail above everything else, then the daily newspapers, and then would come the third and fourth class after that.

Mr. Schumacher: Where does parcel post all into that?

Mr. Kierans: Fourth class. But it would be about third in importance, I would think.

Mr. Schumacher: Do you have any evidence in the studies carried on by the Department since the last revision of rates that people are turning to other sources of delivery in regard to parcel post? For example, I understand at Christmastime the volume of Christmas cards went down greatly, which might be attributed to the increase in rates. Is there a similar thing happening in the area of parcel post?

, 1210

Mr. Kierans: Yes, Christmas cards went down a great deal because out of the 20 million Canadians, I would say the four or five million who send out Christmas cards took a look at their mailing lists, and cleaned them up a bit. They were persuaded to do this because of the increase in rates. This drew their attention to it, and they found out that they had been sending postcards—as I certainly found out, and as politicians here we all found out—to people for years just by vote. They were on a list and there was really no reason for it. I certainly reduced my own list a great deal because they were not ranked. I finally got that one in.

With regard to parcel post, no, we have no evidence up to now. In fact, different entrepreneurs have come in, saying they wanted to establish themselves as competitors in the business of handling mail, and we have

[Interprétation]

M. Kierans: Il y aurait plusieurs autres moyens d'arriver au même résultat. La manutention des colis postaux—prenons encore la ville d'Edmonton comme exemple—ne pose pas de gros problème. Cependant, dans un certain nombre de nos bureaux de poste, la manutention se fait encore à la main, sans aucun équipement automatique. Disons que l'augmentation des tarifs des colis postaux serait la dernière solution à laquelle nous aurions recours.

M. Schumacher: Pour revenir à la question du service, le ministère n'a-t-il pas une priorité concernant la manutention du courrier? Quelles sont les priorités des colis postaux?

M. Kierans: Le courrier de première classe a la priorité absolue. Je dirais que les priorités du ministère sont d'abord le courrier de première classe, ensuite, les quotidiens et en dernier lieu le courrier de troisième et quatrième classe.

M. Schumacher: Dans quelle catégorie entrent les colis postaux?

M. Kierans: Dans la quatrième classe. Mais je crois que c'est la troisième en importance.

M. Schumacher: Avez-vous des preuves, d'après les études qui ont été faites depuis la dernière modification des tarifs, que les gens cherchent d'autres moyens de livraison pour leurs colis postaux. Par exemple, je sais qu'à Noël, le volume des cartes de Noël a diminué grandement. Peut-on attribuer cette diminution du volume à l'augmentation des tarifs? La situation est-elle la même en ce qui concerne les colis postaux?

M. Kierans: Oui, l'envoi des cartes de Noël a grandement diminué, parce que, sur les 20 millions de Canadiens, je dirais que les quatre ou cinq millions de personnes qui ont l'habitude d'envoyer des cartes ont révisé leurs listes d'envoi et ont laissé tomber une bonne partie des noms. Justement à cause de l'augmentation des tarifs? Peut-être pas! Il en est de même des cartes postales. On a constaté que c'était une routine. On ne voyait plus de raison d'avoir tel nom sur la liste. J'ai moi-même réduit de beaucoup ma liste d'envoi. Il y avait un manque de sincérité.

En ce qui concerne les colis postaux, nous n'avons pas de preuve jusqu'à présent. En fait, plusieurs entrepreneurs sont venus nous dire qu'ils voulaient établir un service concurrentiel de transport des colis et nous les encouraged them in every way. We have pointed out to them of course that we have a monopoly in only one field, that of first class mail, but we welcome the competition. I personally do welcome it. If I suddenly found out that in the Vancouver area a private entrepreneur was able to deliver parcels cheaper than we were, faster than we were, or better, I would have a prima facie case for going into Vancouver and raising the roof.

Mr. Schumacher: Do I take it that you would like to see people in Canada consider alternative methods for delivering their parcel post, papers and so on?

Mr. Kierans: When the increases in the other areas went up, let us say, on mail order catalogues and so on, people who were upset at a 300 or 400 per cent increase came in and said they would use some other means. My answer was, "You go right ahead, this is a free country, you are at perfect liberty to do so".

Mr. Schumacher: But at this stage you cannot tell us how much your business has been reduced in that area?

Mr. Kierans: No, and I do not think it has. Perhaps I always say a little too much, but I would not myself choose to invest in somebody that wanted to compete with the way the Post Office is going to be in the delivery of mail, including parcel post.

The Chairman: The converse of that would be that you could compete successfully with your present operators.

Mr. Kierans: Yes, that is right, but they will not be able to.

I would not counsel anyone here to invest in such an operation, but I hope that people will try it.

The Chairman: Did you have a further question, Mr. Macquarrie?

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the whole question of publications. I have noticed you constantly suggesting that members of organizations should pay more. I do not know that you are making all that much headway with the people to whom you present this argument.

While granting that a member of a scientific or an educational body should, in fact, and likely would, in fact, assist, do you ever entertain the notion that perhaps the country as a whole—the government and you as a avons encouragés à le faire. Nous leur avons fait remarquer que nous n'avions le monopole que dans un seul domaine, celui du courrier de première classe. Nous accueillons avec bienveillance la concurrence. Si je m'aperçois par exemple que dans la région de Vancouver, un entrepreneur privé est capable de livrer les colis postaux d'une façon plus rapide et plus économique que nous le faisons, eh bien, cela nous fournira une excellente occasion pour aller à Vancouver étudier la situation et voir un peu ce qui ne va pas.

M. Schumacher: Dois-je en conclure que vous aimeriez voir les Canadiens envisager d'autres méthodes d'acheminement de leurs colis ou de leurs journaux?

M. Kierans: Lorsque les tarifs ont augmenté, dans d'autres secteurs, disons par exemple, pour les catalogues de vente et autres, des gens ont mal accepté une augmentation de 300 ou 400 pour cent, ils sont venus nous dire qu'ils allaient envisager d'autres moyens. Je leur ai répondu qu'ils en avaient parfaitement le droit, que nous étions dans un pays libre.

M. Schumacher: Mais vous ne pouvez pas dire de combien cela a diminué dans ce domaine?

M. Kierans: Non, mais je ne pense pas qu'il y ait eu de diminution. Je parle peut-être un peu trop, mais je pense que je ne voudrais pas acheter d'actions d'une société qui voudrait faire concurrence à ce que sera le ministère des Postes dans ce domaine de la livraison du courrier, y compris les colis.

Le président: Ce qui veut dire que vous pourriez faire face victorieusement à la concurrence avec vos structures actuelles.

M. Kierans: C'est exact. Je ne vous conseille pas personnellement d'investir dans une telle entreprise qui voudrait concurrencer le ministère des postes. Mais j'espère cependant que certains essaieront.

Le président: M. Macquarrie avez-vous une autre question?

M. Macquarrie: Je m'intéresse à la question des publications. J'ai remarqué que vous avez suggéré constamment que les membres de différents organismes devraient payer davantage. Autant que je sache vous ne faites pas beaucoup de progrès auprès des gens à qui vous présentez ces arguments.

En admettant qu'un membre d'un organisme scientifique ou éducatif doive aider, avez-vous déjà pensé que peut-être le pays dans son ensemble, le gouvernement dont vous êtes membre, pourraient avoir quelque member of it—might have some responsibility in assisting the production of Canadian publications of value and of thought? It seems to me that much of the effort that has gone into making this country was this constant search for a Canadian identity and a Canadian recognition. The publishers of many magazines, periodicals and quarterlies do say that our rates will in fact inhibit, if not restrain or absolutely prohibit, their continuing publications.

I am wondering if a government—any government—can sit idly by and say, "It is up to the members." Is it not a part of your whole job as a communicator, as someone interested in the flow of ideas as well as the flow of letters, to take some responsibility on behalf of the government?

Mr. Kierans: As one vitally interested in the economic journal I would feel that I would be prepared to pay for the cost of getting that journal out, and as someone vitally interested I should be concerned that it be a non-profit or a break-even operation.

I do not see that I have, as an individual, the same responsibility for making sure that the physicist or the chemist or the pharmacist journals go out. I think that those who are interested in physics and the latest advances in chemistry are the ones who have this particular responsibility.

As a member of a government it is true that I have a general interest in this, and if they have to be subsidized I suppose I would be quite prepared to vote for a scheme whereby, under a definition of what is of value, if you can ever reach such a definition, to the general quality of life in Canada, shall be subsidized by the government.

But I do not think that subsidy should come through the intermingling or the giving of special concessionary postal rates. I think that is something that should come explicitly, come openly by a department that is concerned with that. In this case I would think it might be the Secretary of State. In other cases, if it is labour magazines, it might be the Department of Labour—they might have an interest in it. But that is where the subsidies should come from.

The argument that I get all the time is that all of these journals are non-profit journals, and I accept that. But most people's idea of a non-profit journal is not that it does not make profit—we are all agreed on that—but that it should make considerable losses which can somehow be charged to the government inresponsabilités quant à l'aide aux publications canadiennes de valeur ou de fond? Il me semble que tous les efforts pour construire ce pays n'ont été qu'une recherche constante d'une identité et d'une reconnaissance canadiennes. Les gens qui publient des magazines, des périodiques et des revues trimestrielles, disent que vos tarifs vont les handicaper, sinon les empêcher de continuer de publier leurs publications.

Est-ce que le gouvernement peut laisser cela se produire et dire «cela les regarde»? Est-ce que cela ne fait pas partie de vos attributions de veiller à ce que le flot d'idées comme le flot de lettres coulent constamment. N'avez-vous pas à prendre certaines responsabilités au nom du gouvernement?

M. Kierans: Si je m'intéresse à un journal économique, je dois être prêt à payer le coût d'édition du journal, si je suis intéressé de façon vitale, je veillerai à ce que l'édition se fasse sur une base équilibrée.

Je ne vois pas pourquoi en tant qu'individu, je devrait avoir les mêmes responsabilités vis-à-vis du journal des physiciens, des chimistes ou des pharmaciens. Je pense que ces responsabilités incombent à ceux qui s'intéressent à la physique ou aux derniers progrès de la chimie.

Il est exact qu'en tant que membre du gouvernement, mon intérêt doit être général et si des journaux devaient être subventionnés, je serais prêt à voter pour un plan en vertu duquel, moyennant une définition de l'intérêt national si on peut en arrêter une, le gouvernement pourrait subventionner des périodiques d'intérêt national.

Mais je ne pense pas que ces subventions doivent prendre la forme de tarifs postaux préférentiels. Ce doit être une subvention ouverte provenant du ministère concerné. Dans ce cas, disons le Secrétariat d'État. Dans d'autres cas ça pourrait être le ministère du Travail, s'il s'agit de magazines portant sur le monde du travail. Mais de toutes façons c'est ainsi que doivent être accordées les subventions.

L'argument que j'entends constamment, c'est que tous ces journaux sont des journaux sans buts lucratifs et j'accepte cette assertion. Mais la plupart des gens pensent que les journaux sans buts lucratifs, non seulement ne doivent pas faire de bénéfices, mais qu'ils doivent avoir des déficits que l'on pourra ensuite stead of the people who are interested in this particular area.

My feeling of a non profit quarterly, in whatever field it may be—anatomy, architecture, economics or political science—is that it should break even. Agreed, it does not make a profit, but it also should be run by the people who are running it in a way that it does not make a loss either—or the loss is chargeable to those who are sponsoring it and those who are members of it. If it still cannot make its way, then the matter goes before the government and a special case is made of it—but not by mixing it up with postal rates.

Mr. Macquarrie: I observe that already many of the publications, especially of the learned societies, to draw upon contributions from their members as an internal subsidy to get the publication out, but it is extremely difficult in Canada—as the doctor here points out—for the medical people to publish because they are competing against an American medical journal, if that is what it is called.

I cannot take the same relaxed view as you do, that if there is a need there someone will fill it. The troubles and trials which publishers of thought magazines have had in this country are horrendous and immense. I am told, for instance, that there is great difficulty at the present time in getting launched any kind of organ which will reflect some of the thoughts and anxieties of the Indian and Eskimo people. Yet, there is another side of the coin—a government department is issuing a publication dealing with this matter, and I cannot see that this is going to be a thorough and comprehensive discussion of a very important question. I believe that all of us as legislators are interested in having the kind of climate which would assist that problem. Your Post Office used to do it.

Mr. Kierans: We still do it.

Mr. Macquarrie: To a degree, but you are obviously not carrying out a policy which is not inflicting pain upon these people. I cannot believe that all these publishers are wrong when they tell you that they are going to be up against it under these new rates. This seems incredible—they have been in the business a long time.

Mr. Kierans: A postmaster general is up against it when he faces $130 million deficit—that is quite clear. We did not try to get out from under the whole $130 million but we increased rates by about $91 million. In that faire payer, d'une façon ou d'une autre, au gouvernement plutôt qu'aux gens intéressés.

Pour moi, une revue trimestrielle sans but lucratifs, quel que soit son sujet, anatomie, architecture, économie ou science politique doit équilibrer son budget. D'accord, elle ne fait pas de bénéfices, mais les gens qui la gèrent doivent s'arranger pour ne pas perdre d'argent non plus. S'il y a un déficit il doit être payé par les gens qui la patronnent et par les membres. Si elle ne peut toujours pas faire ses frais, à ce moment-là, le cas peut être porté devant le gouvernement pour être étudié, mais n'y mêlons pas le tarif postal.

M. Macquarrie: Je crois que je pourrais vous faire remarquer que déjà plusieurs publications, surtout des sociétés savantes, exigent des contributions de leurs membres pour tenter d'équilibrer leur budget et il est excessivement difficile de publier au Canada, car, comme l'a fait remarquer le docteur pour le domaine médical, il faut faire face à la concurrence des revues américaines.

Je ne peux pas considérer la question avec autant de détachement que vous, lorsque vous dites que s'il y a un besoin, quelqu'un y pourvoiera. Les problèmes et les procès qu'ont eus les éditeurs de revues sérieuses de ce pays sont terribles et énormes. Il y a des difficultés à l'heure actuelle à faire établir un organe qui pourrait réussir à donner voie aux pensées et à l'anxiété des Esquimaux et des Indiens par exemple. Il y a un autre côté de la médaille: un ministère du gouvernement édite une publication traitant de cette question et je ne vois pas comment il pourra y avoir une discussion complète de ce problème important. Nous tous en tant que législateurs avons essayé de créer un genre de climat susceptible de conduire à des solutions à ce problème. Le ministère des Postes a essayé.

M. Kierans: Il essaie encore.

M. Macquarrie: Jusqu'à un certain point mais vous n'avez pas une politique qui permette de régler les problèmes de ces gens. Je ne peux pas croire que tous ces éditeurs ont tort lorsqu'ils vous disent que vous avez tort d'imposer ces nouveaux tarifs, ils sont dans les affaires depuis longtemps.

M. Kierans: En tant que ministre des Postes, je suis obligé d'être contre, quand je vois que j'ai à faire face à un déficit de 130 millions. Nous n'avons pas essayé d'éponger tout le déficit d'un coup, nous aurons seulement way we distributed among the hundreds of thousands of business enterprises and publishing firms across the country that $90 million challenge.

Their challenge is what mine was—to recover their particular increase, or the increased deficit that this will cause them. Therefore, it behooves each one of the learned societies—to come back to your specific field of interest—to explain to their members that from now on the postage of Canadian Journal of Economics is going to cost $2.00 more per member, or 40 cents more per member, and the medical profession to their tens of thousands of doctors in the country, “Look, we are going to have to charge you $5.00 a year more.” Instead of us paying that additional $5.00 for the doctors, I suggest to you that the members of the medical profession can quite easily afford it themselves.

If they tell me that unless the general taxpayer of Canada takes up that additional $5 per year their Canadian Medical Association Journal is going to go under, I am going to adopt a pretty skeptical and cynical approach. If it should turn out that way, which I do not for a moment expect, then I would reach the rather brutal conclusion that doctors apparently—and there are tens of thousands of them—do not consider that the weekly is worth the additional $5 a year. Why should anybody want to save it if the doctors themselves do not consider that it is worth saving?

Mr. Macquarrie: You would divest yourself completely of any moral responsibility in this and throw it all at the doctors.

Mr. Kierans: Look, I think my moral responsibility is to use the taxpayer's money in the best possible fashion. Let other people make the moral decision, but those are the explicit decisions as to what should or should not be subsidised, instead of everything being subsidised. I think these people can walk, and I think you think so too.

Mr. Macquarrie: Well now, you have chosen the doctors and this, I suppose, was a deliberate choice. They, of course, can afford this but...

Mr. Kierans: And they have been raising Hell too!

Mr. Macquarrie: I am thinking about those who are not rich.

The Chairman: What about the poor starved academics?

millions de dollars, de recettes supplémentaires. Nous répartissons ces $90 millions entre les dizaines de milliers d'entreprises industrielles et d'entreprises de publications à travers le pays.

Leur problème est maintenant le même que celui que j'avais, à savoir récupérer leur déficit s'ils en ont un. Il incombe maintenant aux sociétés savantes de revenir à leur domaine particulier. Nous leur demandons d'expliquer à leurs membres qu'à partir de maintenant les tarifs postaux pour le Canadian Journal of Economics seront majorés de deux dollars par personne. Nous demandons à la profession médicale de faire savoir à ses dizaines de milliers de membres que leurs frais seront majorés de cinq dollars par année. Plutôt que de déboursier nous-même ce cinq dollars je crois que les membres de la profession médicale peuvent y arriver facilement.

S'ils viennent me voir et me disent qu'à moins que les payeurs de taxes du Canada n'absorbent cette hausse leur publication risque d'enregistrer un déficit, je ne m'en ferai pas outre mesure. Si tel était le cas, ce dont je doute, je devrai en conclure que les médecins sont d'avis que cet hebdomadaire ne vaut pas les cinq dollars additionnels qu'on leur réclame. Pourquoi devrions-nous, nous, sauver cette publication du désastre si les médecins eux-mêmes trouvent que ça n'en vaut pas la peine?

M. Macquarrie: Vous vous départiriez de toute responsabilité morale en ce domaine pour en laisser retomber le fardeau sur les médecins?

M. Kierans: Je crois que ma responsabilité morale se limite à utiliser l'argent des contribuables de la meilleure façon possible. Ces décisions explicites établissent ce qui doit ou ne doit pas être subventionné. On ne doit pas tout subventionner.

M. Macquarrie: Vous avez choisi, comme exemple, les médecins et je suppose que votre choix était délibéré. Ils peuvent payer, certes, mais...

M. Kierans: Et ils se sont plaints.

M. Macquarrie: Je songe à ceux qui ne sont pas riches.

Le président: Et que penser des pauvres professeurs?

[Text]

Mr. Macquarrie: I am thinking about the poor professors, yes, and I am thinking about the Queen's Quarterly, the Dalhousie Review, a whole host of publications which have neither funds nor rich subscribers. Surely, these things are valuable to our society.

Mr. Kierans: All right. Tell me what you are thinking about them. I read them too.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would not like to see Canada without that sort of publication.

Mr. Kierans: No, and I do not think that for an extra 50 cents a year they are going to be out of circulation.

Mr. Macquarrie: Here, of course, is where you refuse to accept the arguments of those who are involved. I would have thought that you were the kind of man would be constantly taking the advice of experts. I believe you do in many other fields, and here these are experts and you scorn them.

Mr. Kierans: Yes, I have taken their advice, but with a grain of salt. What they are very anxious to tell me is just your reaction or my wife's reaction, or my mother's reaction when she goes into a store and sees the prince of eggs has gone up 5 cents or 7 cents a dozen and says, "I am not going to buy them", and she does not buy them that day, but the day after she is in there buying eggs because she needs eggs. The doctors may say today that they are not going to buy the medical journal at $5 more, but if they need it, they will be in there the day after tomorrow buying it.

Mr. Macquarrie: Let us keep away from the doctors.

Mr. Kierans: And the people who buy the Queen's Quarterly.

Mr. Macquarrie: You are almost suggesting that they are attempting to sell you a bill of goods.

Mr. Kierans: Oh sure they are. So are you.

Mr. Macquarrie: Do you really believe that? I am genuinely concerned. You, of course, are heading a department and also bearing some collegiate responsibility for other departments. I do not know that the labours of what you are now doing will produce such a satisfactory result, if we end up by diminishing your deficit and increasing the deficit of the Secretary of State or the Canada Council or what-have-you.

[Interpretation]

M. Macquarrie: Je pense aux pauvres professeurs et je songe également au Queen's Quarterly et au Dalhousie Review et à toutes ces publications qui n'ont ni fonds, ni riches abonnés. Tout ceci est sûrement utile à notre société.

M. Kierans: Très bien. Dites-moi ce que vous en pensez. Moi aussi je les lis.

M. Macquarrie: Eh bien, je ne veux pas que ces publications disparaissent du Canada.

M. Kierans: Moi non plus mais je ne crois pas qu'une majoration annuelle de cinquante cents les accule à la faillite.

M. Macquarrie: Vous refusez d'admettre les arguments de ceux qui sont en cause. Je croyais que vous étiez de ce genre d'hommes toujours prêts à écouter l'avis des experts. Je crois que vous le faites en d'autres domaines, mais qu'ici vous faites fi de leurs conseils.

M. Kierans: J'ai accepté leurs conseils, mais avec un grain de sel. La situation est la même que lorsque ma mère se rend à l'épicerie et réalise que le prix des œufs a été majoré. Elle déclare qu'elle n'en achètera plus, ce qu'elle fait ce jour-là. Mais elle y retournera le lendemain et en achètera parce qu'elle en a besoin. Les médecins peuvent affirmer aujourd'hui qu'ils ne déboursent pas les cinq dollars additionnels, mais s'ils ont besoin de cette publication ils se raviseront en l'espace de quelques jours.

M. Macquarrie: Laissons les médecins de côté.

M. Kierans: Ainsi que ceux qui achètent le Queen's Quarterly.

M. Macquarrie: Vous semblez vouloir dire qu'ils veulent vous rouler?

M. Kierans: Oui, et vous aussi.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que vous croyez réellement cela? Je m'inquiète réellement de la situation. Vous êtes à la tête d'un ministère, vous avez des responsabilités concernant d'autres ministères aussi. Je ne sais pas si ce que vous faites actuellement amènera des résultats meilleurs si l'on réussissait à diminuer votre déficit et à accroître des déficits dans d'autres ministères pour combler le vôtre.

[Texte]

In other words, I think that sometimes you do must look beyond your own Department and see what will be the logical, likely or at least possible repercussions.

Mr. Kierans: Well, all right. I think the repercussions here are not as serious as they are made out to be. However, let us say that they are, and we come to a decision that we should reverse ourselves on all of this: the cost, I suppose, in terms of the journals—and this means that you have to extend it to the Royal Winnipeg Ballet and the Place des Arts and everybody else—would come to the order of $20 million; this relaxation of the bill would bring it down from $90 million to $70 million. So, I go to the government, I go to the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister and say: "I am sorry, the deficit is going to be $20 million higher than we thought it was going to be". At the same time I should be prepared to tell Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Benson, "You can take it out of here or there." Where will we take it out of, Mr. Macquarrie—out of education, out of health or out of welfare, or what?

The Chairman: Or raise taxes.

Mr. Kierans: Or raise taxes?

Mr. Macquarrie: I would say, just to distort this a bit, that it is no more difficult on the country to have the deficit in someone else's department than to have it in yours. Shifting the deficit is not all that great an accomplishment.

Mr. Kierans: Then your solution is that we raise taxes by $20 million.

Mr. Macquarrie: It may make you happier.

Mr. Kierans: Instead of you and me, as subscribers to the Queen's Quarterly, paying it.

Mr. Macquarrie: Oh, I think we will have to pay our share, yes, but I do not think we can sit idly by...

Mr. Kierans: If we do not get the $20 million we are going to have a larger deficit.

Mr. Macquarrie: If some of these publications cannot function, I think you have to, if I may say so, take perhaps a little broader and possibly a little more compassionate look at this.

The Chairman: If I understand the situation properly, you are suggesting Mr. Mac-

A un certain moment, vous aussi vous devez regarder à votre ministère et vous dire quelles seront les incidences logiques ou possibles.

M. Kierans: Eh bien, les incidences possibles ou logiques sont très graves. Disons qu'il en existe. Nous devons étudier le coût concernant les journaux; tout ceci est un problème dans la région de Winnipeg et ailleurs aussi. Disons que cela coûte 20 millions de dollars. Disons que grâce à nos mesures, nous passons de $90 millions à $70 millions, à ce moment-là, je vais voir le ministre des Finances et le premier ministre, «Eh bien, je lui dis, ce sera $20 millions de plus que ce que nous avons prévu.» A ce moment-là, je dois être prêt à dire à M. Trudeau et à M. Benson, «Où trouver la solution, où est-ce que nous allons trouver d'autres fonds?» Est-ce que nous n'allons pas empiéter sur le domaine de l'éducation ou d'autres domaines?

Le président: Ou augmenter les taxes?

M. Kierans: Oui.

M. Macquarrie: Je dirais, pour ma part, juste pour biaiser vos propos que vous devez vous attendre à avoir des déficits dans votre ministère. Vous ne pouvez pas imputer vos déficits à d'autres ministères.

M. Kierans: Vous suggérez tout simplement que nous augmentions les taxes de $20 millions.

M. Macquarrie: Si cela peut vous faire plaisir.

M. Kierans: Au lieu de demander à ceux qui reçoivent le Queen's Quarterly de le payer.

M. Macquarrie: Nous devons payer notre part, mais nous ne pouvons pas...

M. Kierans: Si nous n'avons pas ce $20 millions, nous aurons un plus gros déficit.

M. Macquarrie: Si certaines de ces publications ne peuvent pas exister sans ce genre de subventions, eh bien, à ce moment-là, nous devons adopter une attitude plus générale, plus compréhensive.

Le président: Si je comprends bien la situation, vous suggérez, monsieur Macquarrie, quarrie, that it is not wished for use to get out a specific sum of money to subsidise these publications. You would prefer to see them subsidised by the general postal revenue which then is subsidised by the general taxpayers.

Mr. Macquarrie: That is something like I feel.

The Chairman: In other words, in one case it is a hidden deficit, where nobody really knows how much these journals are being subsidised; and in the other case it would be an explicit subsidy for these journals.

Mr. Kierans: In other words, am I to take it, Mr. Macquarrie—I do not know if I have the right to answer a question—that the Conservative Party stands for bigger better deficits?

Mr. Macquarrie: I have not asked for bigger or better ones, but if I may give you a nautical comparison, I am not sure that you are improving the fleet all that much if you bail out of one boat and pour it into another, and this just might happen. If there is a recognition that there is a need for these things, and I hope that there will be, it may be that someone else will have to bear the grief for this particular thing.

Mr. Kierans: Let us say in this room there are four of us who are interested in reading the Queen's Quarterly, should the other 16 or 18 people be expected to pay the costs of the Queen's Quarterly for four of us who are really interested in it? Or should we measure the extent of our interest by paying for the cost of it?

Mr. Macquarrie: I suppose that I could ask you, and it would be just a logical, if I, supposing I did not own a radio or television, should pay the deficit in the CBC? I cannot see that point at all.

Mr. Kierans: All right. You are using an analogy. It depends which way you want to go. If you use that analogy and say that every department should have bigger and better deficits, I suppose you are starting from the right position. But if you take a look at what is going on here and you say that there should be a real examination and a real effort to bring revenues into line with costs, I would think that the Conservative Party would feel that this is the direction in which we should go. At least, this is what they preach across the country.

Mr. Macquarrie: Actually, we are not given to theological injunctions at all. Conservatives qu'il ne serait pas sage que les revues dont vous venez de parler devraient recevoir de subventions du ministère du Revenu national.

M. Macquarrie: C'est quelque chose que je...

Le président: C'est un déficit caché, personnel ne sait que les journaux sont subventionnés, mais il y aurait quand même une subvention explicite concernant les journaux.

M. Kierans: Je ne sais pas si j'ai le droit de vous poser cette question, mais est-ce que le parti conservateur veut de plus grands, de plus beaux déficits?

M. Macquarrie: Je vais vous donner des comparaisons analytiques. Je ne suis pas certain que vous améliorez la situation. Si l'on reconnaît qu'il y a un besoin pour ce genre de publications, j'espère que les gens reconnaîtront que ce besoin existe, il faudra que des gens autres que ceux qui sont abonnés, aident à payer les frais.

M. Kierans: S'il y a quatre personnes qui sont intéressées à lire le Queen's Quarterly, eh bien, est-ce que les seize ou vingt autres personnes dans la pièce doivent payer le coût de ce magazine qui n'intéresse que quatre d'entre nous, ou bien est-ce que nous ne devrions pas mesurer l'étendue de notre intérêt en payant les frais qu'il nous coûte.

M. Macquarrie: Il serait tout aussi logique si moi qui n'ai pas de radio, de téléviseur, refuse à ce moment-là de payer le déficit. Radio-Canada.

M. Kierans: C'est une analogie, mais tout dépend de ce que vous voulez faire. Si vous voulez utiliser cette analogie et dire que tous les ministères devraient avoir de plus grands déficits, eh bien, à ce moment-là, votre position est compréhensible. Mais si vous regardez ce qui se produit ici, que vous dites qu'il devrait y avoir un ré-examen et un effort réel pour aligner les prix sur les coûts, eh bien, moi j'estime que c'est la direction dans laquelle nous devrions aller. C'est ce qu'ils prêchent à travers le pays.

M. Macquarrie: Eh bien, nous ne voulons pas aller dans des questions théologiques. L

We are going to spend all sorts of money n improving communications in another way, nd I would not want to lose some of the omunications in the printed page because ome poor publication became enmeshed in our laudable search for a surplus.

The Chairman: Mr. Matte.

Mr. Matte: Should we come back to the opic of telecommunications?

The Chairman: No, that will be done Thursday. Mr. Comeau, did you have a question?

Mr. Comeau: I have several questions that io not deal particularly with the subject.

The Chairman: That is fine. We can move m to another subject.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have several questions, nd I do not want to be talking constantly. Is t the usual procedure to adjourn at twelve irty.

The Chairman: No, we usually go right on o one o'clock. We have Mr. Kierans coming ack on the communications aspect of his epartment on Thursday.

Mr. Macquarrie: When will he be back on he Post Office?

The Chairman: Well, we hope to clean it up today, and we have scheduled a further meet- ing on Friday if it is necessary to complete consideration of it.

conservateurs sont imparfaits, la société actuelle est injuste, imparfaite. Nous le savons. Je sais que vous êtes très bon dans les débats, alors je me demande si, vous ne me ferez pas croire que des gens exigent des déficits seulement pour le plaisir d'avoir des déficits.

Si tel était le cas du parti conservateur, je serais dans un autre parti. Nous voulons tous, j'espère, sauvegarder certaines valeurs au sein de la vie canadienne. Ce genre de juge- ment de valeur va à l'encontre de vos objec- tifs financiers au sein de votre ministère. Tout ce que je vous demande, c'est que vous nous disiez ce que coûtent ces politiques. Il y a peut-être d'autres facteurs, d'autres facteurs très importants.

Nous allons dépenser des sommes d'argent considérables pour améliorer les communi- cations dans d'autres secteurs, je ne voudrais pas perdre l'élément de communication que constituent les journaux et les publications. Vous cherchez, bien entendu, à faire un sur- plus et c'est tout à fait louable.

Le président: Monsieur Matte?

M. Matte: Revenons-nous sur le sujet des télécommunications?

Le président: Non, c'est pour jeudi. Mon- sieur Comeau, aviez-vous quelque chose à dire?

M. Comeau: J'ai plusieurs questions à poser qui ne touchent pas exactement à cette question.

Le président: C'est bien, nous pouvons aborder un autre sujet.

M. Macquarrie: J'ai plusieurs questions à poser, mais je ne vais pas parler tout le temps. Est-ce qu'on a l'habitude d'ajourner à midi et demi?

Le président: Non, nous allons poursuivre jusqu'à une heure. M. Kierans va revenir jeudi au sujet du service des communications de son ministère.

M. Macquarrie: La question du ministère des Postes?

Le président: Nous espérons régler la ques- tion du ministère des Postes, le plus tôt possi- ble, jeudi ou vendredi, nous allons terminer, je l'espère, l'étude des crédits.

M. Macquarrie: Il y a certaines questions très importantes que je désire adresser à M. Kierans et je ne voudrais pas laisser l'impres-ered in half an hour. This is important questioning.

The Chairman: Let us push on and see what we can accomplish.

Mr. Macquarrie: Well I can assure you that I will not be through inquiring by one o'clock.

The Chairman: We can get into them anyway.

Mr. Comeau: First of all, Mr. Chairman, the Postmaster General has asked us what we stood for. I say that the Conservative Party is interested in this matter because they are here today. The Liberals are not here.

The way I understand it is that the Department is willing to sacrifice service for profit. This is the way I see it. You did not quite answer my question before. But anyway, I would like to get back on the boxholders and boxes if I could.

Mr. Kierans: We are not willing to sacrifice service for profit. We are bringing into balance the costs of the services we provide with revenues. We are charging for them the costs of those services, or attempting to do so. We cannot do it in every area.

But we believe that as a department, as distinct from many other departments such as the Department of Health and Welfare for example, we are a department that can be reasonably expected to charge for the services it renders to the people. In welfare, you cannot. And to the extent that we succeed in accomplishing this, there will be that much better financial position or situation in which this government finds itself, and therefore that much more flexibility for this government to do the things the people want it to do. That is our philosophy, that this is a service that can be legitimately charged for.

Mr. Comeau: I hope that once you are through with the Post Office you will get on with some other departments because...

Mr. Kierans: I am happy where I am.

Mr. Comeau: I hope that the Prime Minister will shift you around a little bit. May I go on with the boxholder subject, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Well, we have already gone through that at some length.

[Interpretation]

sion que l'on puisse épuiser ces questions en une demi-heure.

Le président: Laissons aller, et nous verrons ce que nous pouvons régler.

M. Macquarrie: Je puis vous assurer que j'en aurai pas terminé mes questions à une heure.

Le président: Nous pouvons au moins aborder ces questions.

M. Comeau: Monsieur le président, le ministre des Postes nous a demandé ce que nous voulions. Je dis, toutefois, que le parti conservateur s'intéresse à ces questions, car il assiste précisément à la réunion du comité. Les libéraux ne sont pas ici. Ceci se résume à une question que j'ai posée plus tôt. Si j'ai compris bien, le ministère veut sacrifier les services au prix du profit. Vous n'avez pas tout à fait répondu à ma question auparavant, mais je veux en revenir à cette question des boîtes postales.

M. Kierans: Nous ne voulons pas sacrifier la qualité des services au profit de la rentabilité. Nous tentons, toutefois, d'équilibrer le coût des services que nous offrons par rapport au revenu. Nous voulons charger pour ces services le prix qu'ils nous coûtent. Nous ne pouvons pas faire cela dans tous les domaines.

Nous croyons, toutefois, que notre ministère, par opposition au ministère de la Santé par exemple, est un ministère qui peut prélever des fonds proportionnés aux services qu'il rend à la population. Dans le domaine du bien-être c'est impossible. Et, dans la mesure où nous réussirons à réaliser ceci, le gouvernement se trouvera en meilleure posture financière et le gouvernement pourra alors faire les choses qu'il doit faire. Et c'est notre philosophie. C'est un service qui peut, d'une façon légitime, devenir rentable.

M. Comeau: J'espère que lorsque vous aurez fini de nettoyer le bureau de poste vous irez dans d'autres ministères.

M. Kierans: Je suis très heureux d'être là où je suis.

M. Comeau: Je voulais dire que le premier ministre vous envoie ailleurs.

Pour en revenir à cette question des boîtes postales, monsieur le président.

Le président: Nous avons déjà étudié cette question bien en détail.

Texte]

Mr. Comeau: I am wondering whether it as seen fully covered.

The Chairman: Yes, we spent about an hour and a half on it, Mr. Comeau.

Mr. Comeau: Well, I have a specific question and you can tell me afterwards if it has been asked and has been dealt with. It has been brought to my attention, and I know myself, that boxholders perform a useful service in the Post Office inasmuch as it means that the mail does not have to be shuffled and reshuffled in the general delivery section. If all the Post Office boxholders decided not to pay these rental fees, these rentals for their boxes, there would certainly be, to my mind, a mess in the general delivery set-up. It seems that boxholders, therefore, are paying more than their share of the increase in postal costs. While boxholders pay more, rural route users do not, nor do people who receive their mail by general delivery.

The Chairman: We have gone through that merry-go-round, Mr. Comeau.

Mr. Comeau: Alright. That is all for now.

The Chairman: Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Schumacher: Could I ask a short question before Mr. Macquarrie begins? It has to do with the quality of paper used for stamps. It has occurred to me recently on several occasions that the paper is very thin, and I cannot think of a poorer quality of paper on which to print stamps.

Mr. Kierans: We had a problem with that, which will be cleared up by the end of March, the end of this month. They are putting in new equipment, and the perforation will be a great deal better than it was.

Mr. Schumacher: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Ritchie, and then Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Ritchie: I would like to return to periodicals. The Canadian Medical Journal will survive, there is no doubt about it, but it is surviving already by being half as thick and cutting down on the number of scientific papers that were in it. But I would like to point out that if the subscription rate goes too high, then in looking for scientific knowledge you might just as well buy an American periodical. If the cost of carrying a periodical is one dollar, it might be better business to carry a Canadian one at a loss of 20 cents than an American one at a loss of a dollar. I think the Post Office has to think somewhat in these terms at times.

[Interprétation]

M. Comeau: Je me demande, toutefois, si la question est épuisée.

Le président: Je crois que nous avons passé une heure et demie sur le sujet.

M. Comeau: J'ai une question plus précise, monsieur le président. Vous pourriez peut-être me dire plus tard si la question a reçu une réponse. On a porté à mon attention, le fait que les locataires de boîtes postales rendent un service au bureau de poste, car le courrier n'a pas à être acheminé plus loin. Il est certain que si les locataires ne louaient pas de boîtes postales, il y aurait certainement une augmentation du service de livraison. Je crois que les locataires de casiers postaux paient plus que leur part. Et les personnes qui se trouvent le long de routes rurales, ne paient pas ces services, ni les gens qui reçoivent leur courrier à domicile.

Le président: Nous avons déjà étudié cette question.

M. Comeau: D'accord; c'est tout pour le moment.

Le président: Monsieur Macquarrie?

M. Schumacher: Une dernière question avant la question de M. Macquarrie; une question qui porte sur la qualité du papier utilisé pour l'impression des timbres. J'ai constaté dernièrement que c'est un papier très mince. Et je ne crois pas que nous pourrions employer un plus mauvais papier que celui-là.

M. Kierans: C'est un problème qui va être réglé à la fin du mois de mars. Nous sommes à installer du nouveau matériel et la perforation sera bien meilleure qu'auparavant.

M. Schumacher: Merci.

Le président: Monsieur Ritchie?

M. Ritchie: Je veux en revenir à la question des périodiques. Le «Journal Médical Canadien» survivra, j'en suis sûr, mais je tiens à souligner que si les taux d'abonnements deviennent trop élevés, les gens vont s'abonner à des publications américaines. Et il vaut parfois mieux transporter ou assurer la livraison d'un magazine canadien en assumant une perte de 20 cents que d'assurer la livraison d'une revue américaine en assumant une perte de $1. Je pense que le ministère des Postes devrait un peu songer à cela.

[Text]

Mr. Kierans: We do think in those terms, sir. There is no way in which we can recover the money from distributing the American Medical Journal. We are part of this international postal union of 135 countries and they carry our mail free in return for us carrying theirs, distributing theirs across the country. I still do not feel that that is a valid argument to subsidize journals or Canadian papers.

Mr. Ritchie: I do suggest that the Canadian Medical Journal will survive but there are many smaller ones that may not. We have to assume that they just will not, and we will be that much poorer for it, I think.

Mr. Kierans: There may be a few that will go out of business, but they are going out of business all the time anyway. Probably the best-edited farming weekly in all of Canada, talking from an editorial point of view, was the Family Herald and Weekly Star, and that went out of business about three months before I ever came into the federal government, so nobody can blame me for that one. It was a big paper, and a rich one in the sense of its financial backing, and they could have sustained losses. But they simply saw no future for that kind of paper. Papers are coming and going all the time. It is a hazardous, very competitive industry. I hate to see it, but I do not think anybody is going to prevent it.

Mr. Ritchie: I have no further questions.

The Chairman: Do you have another questions, Mr. Comeau?

Mr. Comeau: I do not know whether we can go on. We have only three Conservative members here.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Macquarrie said he had some extra questions. I think he said that he would want to adjourn the hearings now and take them up another day, if this is agreeable.

Mr. Comeau: I think it would be. I think we should review the resolution we passed the other day because this minimum is becoming a maximum.

The Chairman: The idea behind the resolution was to give those who had questions the opportunity to ask them at length and those who were not interested the opportunity to do something constructive.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Chairman, I think when we are reviewing these things we

[Interpretation]

M. Kierans: Il n'y a aucun moyen de récupérer la somme versée pour le transport d'une revue américaine. Les Américains transportent gratuitement notre courrier et nous transportons gratuitement le leur. Nous ne croyons pas qu'il s'agisse d'un argument valable pour justifier des subventions aux journaux canadiens.

M. Ritchie: Je crois que les journaux médicaux du Canada vont survivre, mais il y a des journaux à circulation plus restreinte qui vont en souffrir, n'est-ce pas?

M. Kierans: Cela se peut, mais il y a certainement des journaux qui doivent fermer leurs portes. Je crois que le meilleur journal agricole, le mieux préparé au Canada, était le «Family Herald and Weekly Star». Il a dû fermer ses portes trois mois avant même que j'arrive au ministère des Postes. C'était un journal assez riche qui aurait pu faire face à une augmentation des frais. Et, on a jugé que ce journal n'avait aucun avenir. L'industrie des journaux est une industrie très exposée à la concurrence.

M. Ritchie: Je n'ai d'autre question.

Le président: S'il n'y a pas d'autres questions...

M. Comeau: Je me demande si nous pouvons poursuivre la réunion. Il n'y a que trois députés conservateurs, ici.

Le président: M. Marquarrie a dit qu'il avait d'autres questions à poser. Je pense qu'il désire ajourner la séance et reporter ses questions à un autre jour.

M. Comeau: Je voudrais ajourner la réunion, à ce moment-ci, et reprendre la réunion plus tard. Je crois qu'il faudrait réviser la résolution qui a été adoptée, l'autre jour. Le minimum qui a été fixé est en train de devenir un maximum.

Le président: L'idée de la résolution était qu'elle permettait aux députés de poser toutes leurs questions et à ceux qui ne sont pas intéressés de s'absenter.

M. Schumacher: Je crois que la limite d'une heure a été fixée lorsque la Chambre siégeait would review our hours too. The one o'clock hour was set when the House met at two thirty. Now the House meets at two o'clock under the new rules, and I think we should discuss that time.

The Chairman: Well, the problem that we face is that there is a shortage of time available to committees because of the increased workload. We have been very fortunate in this Committee in that we have been able to get double periods because of the additional workload which we have taken on. It is a question of us using the time we can find in the most effective way. If the members would like to cut off a half hour short, then it would mean that they will have that much less time to question witnesses coming before us. It is not an easy problem.

We will be expecting Mr. Kierans back on Thursday morning to deal with the communications aspect of his Department. We will decide Thursday whether or not we are going to deal on Friday with communications or the Post Office again.

Thank you, Mr. Kierans, for your officials and your attendance.

deux heures et demie. Maintenant la Chambre se réunit à deux heures selon le nouveau règlement, il nous faudrait donc réviser nos heures.

Le président: Nous n'avons pas assez de temps en comité à cause de l'augmentation du travail. Nous avons été très chanceux jusqu'ici de bénéficier de séances doubles en regard de la surcharge de travail. Il s'agit d'utiliser le mieux possible le temps dont nous disposons. Si les députés veulent partir une demi-heure avant l'heure, c'est autant de temps en moins pour questionner les témoins. Ce n'est pas simple.

Nous aurons de nouveau M. Kierans jeudi matin pour étudier la partie communications de ce ministère. Nous déterminerons jeudi si nous nous occuperons des communications ou des postes vendredi.

Je vous remercie M. Kierans et je remercie également les fonctionnaires d'avoir assisté à la réunion.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see a quorum. I will call the meeting to order.

This morning we are considering the Estimates of the Department of Communications which will be found at page 36 of the Blue Book, with details on pages 38 to 40.

I would like to remind members that this evening at 8 o'clock we will be hearing a delegation on Bill C-171 respecting the National Library.

I now call Item 1 of the Communications Estimates.

Department of Communications

1 Departmental administration, including administration of the Radio Act and authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current fiscal year for this Vote not to exceed $15,449,500 and to spend revenue received during the current fiscal year—$9,669,000.

I now call on the Hon. Eric Kierans to introduce his officials and then give his statement. As Mr. Kierans has a Cabinet meeting at 10.15 he will be leaving at that time. However, the officials will stay on and will be available for the usual sharp questioning that members of this Committee provide.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): I am very sorry that I have to read the statement. I understand that it has just been distributed.

First of all, I would like to introduce the Deputy Minister, Mr. Allan Gotlieb, the two Assistant Deputy Ministers, Dr. Chapman and Gilles Bergeron, and Gordon Nixon. We have other officials here too. I think you will be able to get all of the information that you want. I would refer most of your questions to them anyway. The Cabinet meeting starts at 10 o'clock and I have to be up there as soon as I can.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, the study of the estimates of the

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le jeudi 6 mars 1969

Le président: Messieurs, nous sommes en nombre, nous pouvons commencer la réunion. Ce matin nous sommes à étudier les prévisions budgétaires du ministère des Communications qui se trouvent à la page 36 du Livre bleu, avec les détails dans les pages 38 à 40.

Ce soir à huit heures, nous allons entendre une délégation pour l'étude du bill C-171, Loi concernant la Bibliothèque nationale.

On passe maintenant au poste 1 des prévisions budgétaires du ministère des communications.

Ministère des Communications

1 Administration centrale, y compris l'application de la Loi sur la radio et ses règlements et, nonobstant la Loi sur l'administration financière, l'autorisation, pour l'année, de prendre des engagements jusqu'à concurrence de $15,449,500 et de dépenser les recettes touchées au cours de l'année—$9,669,000

Je vais maintenant inviter monsieur le ministre Eric Kierans à présenter ses fonctionnaires et à lire sa déclaration.

M. Kierans doit s'absenter à 10h15 pour assister à une réunion du Cabinet, il va nous quitter à ce moment-là mais les fonctionnaires vont demeurer avec nous et ils vont répondre aux questions posées par les députés.

M. Eric William Kierans (ministre des Postes): Je suis désolé de devoir lire cette déclaration, je crois qu'elle a été distribuée.

Je veux d'abord présenter M. A. E. Gotlieb, sous-ministre et le Dr John H. Chapman, M. Gilles Bergeron, sous-ministre adjoint, ainsi que M. F. G. Nixon. Il y a également d'autres fonctionnaires qui sont ici aujourd'hui. Je crois que vous pourrez obtenir tous les renseignements que vous désirez, je m'y reporterai de toute façon, la réunion du Cabinet commence à 10 heures et il est certain que je devrai me rendre là-bas le plus tôt possible.

Monsieur le président, messieurs les membres du Comité, l'étude du budget des dépenses

Department of Communications for 1969-70 comes only a week after second reading on Bill C-173, which will establish this Department. At that time, I discussed in some detail the over-all purposes and objectives of the new Department, and I will not repeat them here. My remarks apply to Part A, the Department of Communications, in our estimates. Part B, the Post Office, was dealt with earlier this week and will be continued tomorrow. The summary on page 36 of the Blue Book of Estimates represents the first full fiscal year of the new department. Two loan items of concern to the Department are given on Page 460. When I discussed the Revised Estimates for 1968-69 with the Committee on December 6, 1968, I stated that the new department would be mainly formed through transfers from the Departments of Transport and National Defence. The former Defence Research Telecommunications Establishment, to which the footnote on Page 36 refers, will in future be known as the Communications Research Centre.

Research and Development for other Departments

On the transfer of the Research Centre (Defence Research Telecommunications Establishment) from the Department of National Defence to this department it was agreed that certain important military projects would be continued in 1969-70. These have been identified and costed jointly between the Defence Research Board and the Department of Communications. The total cost of this activity will be recovered from the Department of National Defence.

Communications and Space Research

The Research Satellite Program accounts for an estimated $3.1 million of the $5.0 million shown for construction and acquisition of equipment under Vote 5 on page 39. This contract is now in the final stages of negotiation and covers the third in the ISIS (International Satellites for Ionospheric Studies) series satellites to be built in Canada. This program continues to have considerable success. ISIS I was successfully launched in January this year and is third Canadian scientific satellite now functioning in orbit.

[Interpretation]

ses du ministère des Communications pour l'année 1969-1970 arrive une semaine seulement après la seconde lecture du Bill C-173 qui doit créer ce Ministère. A ce moment-là j'ai exposé avec assez de détails les buts et les objectifs généraux du nouveau Ministère, je ne les répéterai pas aujourd'hui.

Je parlerai de la Partie A, le ministère des Communications dans nos prévisions. La Partie B, les Postes, a été expliquée plus tôt cette semaine et sera reprise demain. Le sommaire à la page 36 du Livre bleu sur les prévisions budgétaires a trait au premier exercice financier complet du nouveau Ministère. A la page 460 se trouvent deux prêts, très importants pour le Ministère. Lorsque j'ai discuté les prévisions révisées de 1968-1969 avec le Comité, le 6 décembre 1968, j'ai déclaré que le nouveau Ministère serait surtout formé à partir de transferts de juridiction du ministère des Transports et du ministère de la Défense nationale. L'ancien Comité de recherches sur les télécommunications de la Défense, dont il est question au renvoi au bas de la page 36, sera dorénavant connu sous le nom de Centre de recherches sur les télécommunications.

Lorsque le Centre de recherches (Comité de recherches sur les télécommunications de la Défense) est passé du ministère de la Défense nationale à notre Ministère, il a été convenu que certains projets militaires importants seraient continués en 1969-1970. Ces projets ont été dévolus au Conseil de recherches pour la défense et au ministère des Communications et les prévisions ont été établies conjointement. Les dépenses totales de cette activité seront remboursées par le ministère de la Défense nationale.

Télécommunications et recherches spatiales

Le Programme de recherches sur les satellites compte pour 3.1 millions de dollars de prévisions de 5 millions de dollars indiquées pour la construction et l'acquisition du matériel au crédit 5 à la page 39. Ce contrat, qui est maintenant aux derniers stades de négociation, a trait au troisième ISIS (Satellites internationaux d'études ionosphériques) de la série de satellites qui doivent être construits au Canada.

Ce programme se poursuit d'ailleurs dans les meilleures conditions qui soient. ISIS I a été lancé avec succès en janvier de cette année pour ainsi devenir le troisième satellite scientifique canadien à fonctionner sur orbite es systèmes de télécommunications de l'État

L'Agence des télécommunications administratives est chargée de planifier, de diriger et de conseiller les ministères et les agences du gouvernement fédéral en matière de télécommunications.

L'une des principales fonctions de l'Agence au cours de l'année qui vient d'être traitée des besoins auxquels auront à faire face les ministères et les agences du gouvernement à mesure qu'ils aborderont le domaine toujours grandissant de l'ordination et des télécommunications. Peut-être pourriez-vous concevoir plus facilement dans quelle mesure des économies peuvent être réalisées, si je vous dis qu'une somme d'environ 5 millions de dollars a pu être épargnée en 1967-1968 par des agences du gouvernement fédéral participant au réseau des télécommunications du gouvernement. En 1968-1969, les économies ainsi réalisées excéderont 6 millions de dollars. L'Agence prévoit qu'une somme de 7 millions de dollars sera épargnée en 1969-1970, malgré la hausse des tarifs qui a été proposée par l'industrie du téléphone au niveau fédéral et au niveau provincial.

églementation des télécommunications

L'administration de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion comprend trois principaux secteurs d'activité, la planification du spectre radioélectrique, la délivrance des licences et des certificats aux stations de radiodiffusion, ainsi que la suppression du brouillage.

Vous noterez que le coût de l'exploitation du Ministère sera contrebalancé par les recettes provenant du droit à la licence versé par les stations radiophoniques et qui rapportent environ $3,222,000. Le crédit 10 prévoit le versement d'une subvention annuelle au Canadian Radio Technical Planning Board. Le Comité a été un conseiller efficace auprès du gouvernement dans les domaines techniques touchant la gestion du spectre radioélectrique. C'est un Comité bénévole formé d'organismes nationaux de sociétés exploitantes et de fabricants d'appareils récepteurs au Canada.

La subvention aide à défrayer les services de secrétariat et d'administration.

L'Inter-American Radio Office à la Havane, est chargé de l'enregistrement des fréquences de la radiodiffusion à modulation de fréquences (AM). Il dessert les signataires de l'Entente sur la radiodiffusion régionale de l'Amérique du Nord, dont le Canada fait partie. L'Office ne fonctionne pas présentement; la demande est maintenue pour acquitter des comptes en souffrance.

Government Telecommunications Systems

The Administrative Telecommunication Agency is responsible for providing planning, direction and advice to departments and agencies of the Federal Government on all telecommunication matters.

One of the prime activities of the Agency during this coming year is to deal with the needs of the Federal Departments and Agencies as they move into the rapidly expanding area of data processing and data communications. Some idea of the savings that have been realized by the Federal Government Agencies participating in the Administrative Telecommunications Agency's network systems can be appreciated if I tell you that the savings experienced in the year 1967-68 approximated 5 million dollars for the year. In 1968-69 these will exceed 6 million dollars. The Agency forecasts a 7 million dollar savings in 1969-70 in spite of the proposed increases in tariff rates that have been applied for by the telephone industry both at Federal and Provincial regulatory level.

Regulation of Telecommunications

The administration of the Radio Act involves three main activities, radio spectrum planning, licensing and certification of radio and broadcast stations, and the control of interference.

You will note that the operating costs of the Department will be offset by the revenue from radio station licence fees which is estimated at $3,222,000.00. In Vote 10 funds are provided for an annual grant to the Canadian Radio Technical Planning Board. It has proven to be an effective advisory body to the Government on technical matters relating to radio spectrum management. It is a voluntary Board made up of national organizations of users and manufacturers of radio in Canada. The grant helps pay for secretarial and administrative services.

The Inter-American Radio Office in Havana is responsible for the registration of AM broadcasting frequencies. It serves the signatories of the North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement of which Canada is one. The office is not now functioning, the item is being retained to meet outstanding billings.

International Telecommunications

For increased effectiveness in coordination of international telecommunications, a new division has been established within the Department during the past year and will be expanded during 1969-70.

New complexities are arising in securing Canada's place in international communications to meet the short-term and long-term interests of the Canadian public. Negotiations with other countries and international agencies is an increasing activity. For example, at this moment the structure of the International Satellite Consortium is under re-negotiation in Washington. Any satellite project involves the International Telecommunication Union which is responsible for allocating radio frequencies for satellites as well as radio stations on the ground.

● 0945

Vote 10 includes an amount of $235,000 as Canada's share of the cost of the ITU. Important assemblies under the ITU for which we are preparing include the Plan Committee for Latin America at Asuncion, Paraguay, in September, 1969, the Radio Consultative Committee at New Delhi at the beginning of 1970 and the World Administrative Radio Conference on Space Communications in Geneva at the end of that year.

We are also preparing to hold a Commonwealth Telecommunications Conference in May 1970. This will be the first time Ottawa has been the meeting place for this event.

National Telecommunications Policy

As I mentioned last week, we are establishing a telecommunications legislation task force composed jointly of government officials and experts retained from the universities and the business world.

Loans

There are two loan items on Page 460 of the Blue Book. L10 relates to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation and shows a decrease from 1968-69, resulting from increasing revenues of that Corporation and decreased capital expenditures for the international satellite communications terminal and cable systems.

[Interpretation]

Télécommunications internationales

Afin d'accroître l'efficacité de la coordination des télécommunications internationales, une nouvelle division a été mise sur pied au Ministère l'année dernière et ses attributions seront élargies au cours de 1969-1970.

Nous voulons qu'au palier international des télécommunications, le Canada se taille une place qui réponde aux intérêts à court et long terme des Canadiens. De nouvelles complications surgissent dans ce domaine. Les négociations avec les autres pays et avec les organismes internationaux ne cessent de multiplier. Ainsi, on est à repenser, à Washington, la structure du Consortium international des télécommunications par satellite. Tout projet relatif aux satellites engage l'Union internationale des télécommunications qui est chargée de la répartition des fréquences radioélectriques pour les satellites, de même que pour les postes de radio terrestres.

Le crédit 10 comprend une somme de $235,000 qui constitue la part du Canada aux dépenses de l'Union internationale des télécommunications. Les assemblées importantes auxquelles nous sommes en train de nous préparer comprennent celles du Comité de planification pour l'Amérique latine, à Asunción (Paraguay) en septembre 1969, du Comité consultatif des radiocommunications, à New Delhi au début de 1970, et la Conférence administrative mondiale des radiocommunications spatiales qui aura lieu à Genève à la fin de cette année.

Nous sommes aussi à préparer une Conférence du Commonwealth sur les télécommunications qui aura lieu en mai 1970. Pour la première fois, Ottawa sera le siège de cette conférence.

Une politique nationale des télécommunications

Comme je l'ai signalé la semaine dernière, nous sommes à mettre sur pied une équipe spéciale chargée d'étudier la législation sur les télécommunications, une équipe qui est composée de hauts fonctionnaires gouvernementaux et de spécialistes du monde universitaire et des affaires.

Prêts

Il y a deux prêts à la page 460 du Livre bleu. Le crédit 10 concerne la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmaritimes et indique une réduction par rapport à 1969 provenant d'une augmentation des recettes et d'une diminution des immobilisations pour les réseaux internationaux de câbles et de stations terrestres de télécommunications par satellites.

[Texte]

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je m'excuse d'interrompre le ministre. Mais il pourrait peut-être nous donner des éclaircissements. Il y a quelque chose qui me semble incomplet. Il y a deux semaines, quand les fonctionnaires de la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines ont comparu devant nous, ils nous ont dit que cette année, ils n'avaient pas besoin du 5 millions qui figurent dans le rapport pour leurs investissements.

M. Kierans: C'est exact. Depuis quelques mois, leurs revenus sont supérieurs à leurs dépenses.

M. Mongrain: Alors, cela va disparaître du budget.

M. Kierans: Oui.

M. Mongrain: Merci.

M. Kierans: Ça va tout de même demeurer dans les prévisions budgétaires, mais la Société n'aura pas besoin d'un tel surplus.

The Chairman: I have taken this matter up with the House Leader and we will not be calling a vote on it. It will be just dropped from the Estimates when we report them back to the House.

Mr. Mongrain: Or transferred somewhere else?

The Chairman: No, it will be dropped because they do not need the money. This means the Government now has $5 million that they did not have before.

Mr. Kierans: See how we are co-operating with Mr. Benson.

Loan L. 5 refers to our domestic satellite communications system. The report of the Task Force under the Science Secretariat appointed in July 1967 led to the White Paper on a "domestic Satellite Communication System for Canada" (March 28, 1968). A Project Office was established by the Science Secretariat to make further studies and prepare plans for the implementation of a program for a satellite communication system. After carefully considering various alternatives it has been decided that a Canadian built satellite carrying 6 transponders would be most appropriate. Such a vehicle could be launched towards the end of 1971 and functioning by the beginning of 1972. It is expected that a minimum of 4 channels would be leased at the start of the operations in 1972 (2 to the CBC and 2 to the telecommunications common carriers). We plan to operate initially with one satellite until a second is added about the beginning of 1975. An earth station

[Interprétation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, excuse me for interrupting the minister, but could he give us some explanations. There is something here that seems odd. Two weeks ago when the officials of Overseas Telecommunications appeared before us they told us that this year they would not need the appropriation of $5 million that figures in their investment report.

Mr. Kierans: That's right. For the past few months their revenues have exceeded their expenditures.

Mr. Mongrain: So this will disappear from the budget.

Mr. Kierans: Yes.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

Mr. Kierans: This will remain in the estimates however, but the Corporation will not need that kind of surplus.

Le président: J'ai débattu cette question avec le leader du gouvernement à la Chambre. Nous allons tout simplement étudier les crédits et nous allons faire rapport à la Chambre.

M. Mongrain: Ou les transférer ailleurs?

Le président: Nous n'avons pas l'intention de conserver ce crédit, ce qui veut dire que le gouvernement hérite de 5 millions.

M. Kierans: Nous sommes à collaborer avec M. Benson.

Le crédit 5 intéresse notre propre réseau interne de télécommunications par satellites. Le rapport de l'équipe spéciale du Secrétariat des sciences mise sur pied au mois de juillet 1967 amena la publication du Livre blanc sur le système de télécommunications par satellites pour le Canada (le 28 mars 1968). Le Secrétariat des sciences a établi un Bureau des projets ayant pour fonction d'effectuer des études plus approfondies et de dresser des plans pour la mise sur pied d'un projet de réseau de télécommunications par satellites. Plusieurs possibilités furent analysées et on opta finalement en faveur d'un satellite fabriqué au Canada et portant 6 transpondeurs. Le lancement de ce satellite pourrait avoir lieu vers la fin de 1971 et son exploitation pourrait commencer dès le début de 1972. On s'attend à ce qu'un minimum de 4 canaux pourraient être loués au début de l'exploitation en 1972 (2 à Radio-Canada et 2 aux sociétés exploitantes des télécommunications).

network consisting of a master station, several regional type stations for multiple access, and a number of TV receive-only stations with capability to service TV on a regional basis and to remote regions is planned.

J'en annoncerai les détails aussitôt que les société exploitantes auront déterminé leurs besoins. On prévoit que les déboursés en argent comptant pour faire les frais des premières installations fournies de 1969 à 1972 seront de l'ordre de $65 millions.

Si l'on veut se conformer au plan prévu de lancement pour 1971 et si l'on veut que le système fonctionne en 1972, il est essentiel que l'on commence les démarches en vue d'obtenir un segment spatial et les stations terrestres vers le milieu de l'été de cette année. En conséquence, nous avons pris des dispositions afin de prévoir les fonds provisoires qui sont nécessaires au Ministère, soit $9,850,000 au crédit 15 des prévisions budgétaires de 1969-1970. La Société prendra ce financement à son compte aussitôt que possible. Le capital de la Société sera probablement composé de simples actions émises au Gouvernement, au public et aux entreprises exploitantes. Il est possible qu'une partie du capital consiste en une dette à terme.

On n'en a, cependant, pas encore établi la structure financière et les négociations sont en cours avec les différentes sociétés exploitantes. Des extrapolations financières fondées sur la tarification en cours de négociation indiquent que la Société pourra être un organisme viable et avantageux qu'elle pourra au besoin supporter le poids du financement de la dette et fournir un rapport sur la valeur nette de la participation au tout début de son fonctionnement.

Monsieur le président, je répondrai maintenant aux questions que vous voudrez me poser. Je vous remercie.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Could we limit our questions to matters of policy while Mr. Kierans is here. Then we could go into matters of detail with the departmental officials. I have first on my list Mr. Stewart, followed by Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Minister, I think everybody in Canada is very proud of the fact that we will

[Interpretation]

Nous avons l'intention au début d'utiliser un seul satellite jusqu'à ce qu'un second satellite soit placé en orbite vers le début de 1965. On projette aussi la mise sur pied d'un réseau de stations terrestres comprenant une station principale, plusieurs stations régionales, accès multiple ainsi qu'un certain nombre de stations de télévision uniquement à réception capables de desservir la région immédiate et les régions éloignées.

I will announce details as soon as requirements have been defined by the potential users. The cash outlay to cover the cost of the initial facility requirements which would be procured in 1969 through to 1972 is estimated to be in the order of 65.0 million dollars.

If the 1971 launch schedule is to be maintained and the system operative by the start of 1972, it is essential to initiate procurement of the space segment and earth stations by mid-summer of this year. Accordingly, steps have been taken to provide the Department with interim financing in the 1969-70 Estimates in the amount of $9,850,000 under Vote L5. This financing would be assumed by the Corporation at the earliest possible date. It is envisaged that the capitalization of the Corporation would consist of common shares which would be issued on a tripartite basis (Government, public and carriers). It is conceivable that some portion of the capitalization may consist of term debt.

The capital structure, however, is not yet established and is pending current negotiations with the various users. Financial projections based on a rate structure which is still under negotiation indicate that the Corporation could be a viable and profitable entity and that it could sustain the burden of debt financing, if necessary, and provide a return on equity at an early stage.

Mr. Chairman, I will now answer any questions you may have. Thank you.

Le président: Je vous remercie monsieur le ministre. Nous pourrions nous en tenir à des questions de politique aussi longtemps que M. Kierans sera ici. Nous pourrions ensuite étudier les crédits en détails avec les fonctionnaires du ministère. J'ai d'abord sur ma liste le nom de M. Stewart et celui de M. Macquarrie.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Monsieur le ministre, je crois que tout le monde au Canada est très fier, du fait que, nous aurons probabl robably have an excellent communications satellite. I think what concerns us most in this Committee—and I am sure it concerns you—is the cost of such a satellite and whether Canada can, in fact, afford such a sophisticated system. There are several things that we're going to want to ask about in specifics and I think the various costs are very important to this Committee.

Some of my information indicates that the United States consider it too expensive for them to do, and it makes one wonder if Canada feels that it is richer than the United States to be able to do it.

In addition to that, Time magazine very recently spoke about the problem of communications as being a communications explosion and they are concerned about communications becoming obsolete very quickly. I am wondering, for one thing, if our communications satellite would become obsolete in a very short time and whether we would, in fact, be wasting a great deal of money. I am wondering also about something I heard—that the cost of such a system would be in the vicinity of $200,000,000 a year. If this is true, I would like to know how it would compare with the extension of our present ground stations because as I understand it, if we were transmitting from Ottawa it would have to go over the equator because the satellite is fixed over the equator.

I am wondering how many ground stations are necessary to put it through the equator and bring it back across Canada and if the cost of joining up those ground stations in the first place would not be more advantageous to Canada than to have to go through the expense of the satellite for what we are going to get out of it.

This is one of the aspects, and rather than to go into all of the aspects, Mr. Minister, would you mind commenting on just that line?

Mr. Kierans: Yes, a satellite communications system is certainly not too rich for the blood of the United States. But they feel, or at least the communications companies feel—the common carriers there—that they adequately cover the communications needs by their terrestrial systems. We cannot do that. The easiest way for us to provide communications and television from one part of Canada to another would be by satellite, if we want to cover all of Canada. If we want to provide television in both languages from one corner to any other corner of Canada, the easiest and the best way, the way of the future, is certainly going to be a satellite system.

[Interprétation]

ment un excellent satellite de communication. Ce qui nous préoccupe au Comité, qui vous préoccupe sans doute, c'est le coût d'un tel satellite. Le Canada peut-il se payer un programme aussi complexe? Il y a plusieurs questions que nous voulons poser afin d'obtenir des détails et je pense que les frais préoccupent beaucoup ce Comité.

Je crois comprendre que les États-Unis jugent ce programme trop coûteux et on peut se demander si le Canada se sent plus riche que les États-Unis.

De plus, j'ai vu dans le magazine Time, un article sur le problème des communications; on assiste à une explosion des communications, déclare le Time, et semble-t-il les moyens de communications sont périmés en très peu de temps. Je me demande si notre satellite de communications deviendrait inutile en très peu de temps, ce qui nous aurait fait gaspiller une somme considérable d'argent. Je me demande également si ce que j'ai entendu dire au sujet du coût de ce système, qui serait de 200 millions de dollars par année est exact? Si c'est vrai, je me demande comment ceci pourrait se comparer à l'expansion de notre réseau actuel. Tel que je comprends la chose, si nous transmettons à partir d'Ottawa, il faudrait envoyer le message à l'équateur, puisque le satellite est stationnaire au-dessus de l'équateur.

Je me demande combien il nous faudra de postes au sol pour envoyer les messages et les recevoir, et je me demande également si le coût de liaison de ces postes au sol ne serait pas moindre pour le Canada que de procéder par satellite, considérant les avantages que nous en retirons.

Ce n'est qu'un des aspects de la question, mais plutôt que de voir tous les aspects à la fois, pourriez-vous, monsieur le ministre, nous parler de cela?

M. Kierans: Un système de satellites ne coûterait certainement pas trop cher pour les Américains, mais ils pensent, ou du moins les sociétés de communications pensent que les moyens de communications sont déjà servis largement par les postes au sol. Nous ne pouvons en dire autant. La façon la plus facile de communiquer entre les diverses parties du Canada, c'est de se servir de satellites. Si nous voulons desservir tout le Canada. Si nous voulons offrir des émissions de télévision dans les deux langues, dans tous les coins du Canada, la meilleure façon de le faire, la façon la plus prometteuse pour l'avenir, c'est de mettre sur pied un système de satellites.

[Text]

I do not know what Time said; I did not read their article. We consider that this is an ideal new explosion, if you want to put it that way; that this is the communications system of the future. The cost of it is certainly not going to be $200,000,000 a year. As I have already said, the actual cost of building it, putting it up there and getting it launched will be $65,000,000 or perhaps a little less. The cost per year will not be $200,000,000. We feel that this can break even; that it can show a profit and that the actual revenue that the new corporation gains will be of the order of $20,000,000 a year.

• 0955

There you see all of the advantages as the satellite covers every square inch of Canada, provides live, instant, real television and provides telephone service to all the Northern parts of this country which are not served at present. The building of terrestrial systems up there would not be justified economically. This is a national project and of national interest.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): But are not terrestrial services required in any case?

Mr. Kierans: Oh, yes, certainly they are required in any case.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Very many?

Mr. Kierans: The existing terrestrial systems are certainly going to continue.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): No, but when the satellite transmits to Canada, these transmissions must be received by a number of ground stations which the present ones cannot accept.

Mr. Kierans: Included in the costs here are your master station, your regional earth stations and about 40 ground stations that would cover the North; these are all included in the cost. And that, incidentally, will probably be located above Winnipeg and the signals will be coming from the satellite directly there.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): You say that this will handle telephone lines as well. Is there also a facility in the satellite that will handle a local or national emergency, which is something that is of interest to us of the federal government. In the event of any kind of national emergency—floods, landslides, an uprising or anything of this nature—in the future, would the provincial police in Saskat-

[Interpretation]

Je n'ai pas lu ce que disait Time, je ne voulais pas lire leur article. Nous estimons qu'il s'agit d'une explosion qui est très favorable si vous voulez l'exprimer ainsi; c'est le moyen de communication de l'avenir. Le coût ne s'établira certainement pas à 200 millions de dollars par année. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, le coût de construction et de lancement devrait se situer à 65 millions de dollars ou peut-être un peu moins. Le coût, par année, ne s'établira pas à 200 millions de dollars. Nous croyons que nous pouvons équilibrer le budget et même réaliser des bénéfices. Le revenu de la nouvelle Société sera de l'ordre de 20 millions de dollars par année.

Vous voyez donc tous les avantages, les satellites peuvent desservir chaque pouce de territoire et transmettre en direct les émissions de télévision ainsi que les conversations téléphoniques à destination des régions du Nord qui ne sont pas desservies à l'heure actuelle. L'établissement d'un réseau terrestre dans ces régions ne se ferait pas car il n'en serait pas rentable. C'est donc un projet d'intérêt national.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Mais est-ce qu'il n'y a pas de toute façon des installations au sol?

M. Kierans: Oui bien sûr.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Beaucoup?

M. Kierans: Les systèmes terrestres actuels vont certainement continuer à fonctionner.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Non, mais lorsqu'on utilise le satellite pour transmettre des émissions pour le Canada, ces transmissions devront être captées par les postes terrestres, or les postes actuels ne conviennent pas.

M. Kierans: Les frais mentionnés, comprennent la construction d'une station principale, des stations régionales et les 40 stations qui desserviront le Nord; tout cela est inclus dans le coût. Mentionnons que ces stations seront probablement situées au nord de Winnipeg et qu'elles recevront leurs signaux directement du satellite.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Vous avez dit que ceci va également permettre les communications par téléphone. Est-il possible qu'on puisse se servir de ces satellites en cas d'urgence nationale. S'il y a par exemple, un tremblement de terre, des inondations, des glissements de terrain, une émeute ou toute autre perturbation, est-ce que la police provinciale de Saskatchewan, par exemple, ewan, for example, be able to make use of it?

Mr. Kierans: You can put any message over what you want, Ralph.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): You can put anything like that that you want.

Mr. Kierans: Yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): What about military use?

Mr. Kierans: You can put it to military use. It is a communications system for whatever purpose you want.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): You are assuming that all these uses are compatible. A military use incorporated in it would not be incompatible with the other uses?

Mr. Kierans: There is no reason why it could.

The Chairman: It is a question of the number of channels, I believe.

Mr. Kierans: That is right. I would expect that the common carriers—that would be your telephone company across this country—would have two channels. They would not use those for television; they would use those for the carrying of messages, data transmission for telephone lines, and this would be a back-up to all of their other facilities as well as giving them coverage in areas where they do not go at present.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I understand there is a question of space up there; that there is not all that space available. People think you can shoot up a satellite but that is not the case. Do we have a place up there to put this satellite?

Mr. Kierans: I will let Mr. Gotlieb answer that. We do have a place, but you have to work this out in concert with all of the other nations of the world or you would have chaos. Mr. Gotlieb has just come back from Washington where a great many of these discussions are going on.

Mr. A. E. Gotlieb (Deputy Minister): I think it is true that the amount of space is limited. However, I think the whole history of the development of the use of the radio frequency spectrum, for example, has shown that as technology increases there are a greater flexibility and more possibilities of use as you get to more refined uses.

At the present time, I think that there would not be any difficulty at all in Canada's obtaining, through the appropriate interna-pourrait se servir de ce système de communications?

M. Kierans: Vous pouvez envoyer tous les messages que vous voulez.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Tous les messages que l'on veut?

M. Kierans: Oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Du point de vue militaire?

M. Kierans: Il est certain qu'on peut s'en servir à des fins militaires, c'est un système de communications qui sert à toutes fins.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Et vous croyez que ces usages sont compatibles? Vous ne pensez pas qu'une utilisation militaire est incompatible avec les autres utilisations?

M. Kierans: Je vois pas pourquoi?

Le président: C'est une question de nombre de canaux je suppose.

M. Kierans: C'est exact. Je crois que les compagnies de téléphone, par exemple, auraient deux canaux. Elles n'utiliseraient pas les canaux des émissions de télévision, mais plutôt ceux réservés aux messages, aux transmissions des données et aux lignes téléphoniques. Ceci leur permettra d'appuyer tout ce qu'ils ont déjà et de s'installer dans des régions où ils ne sont pas actuellement.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Il y a également la question de l'espace. On ne peut pas simplement envoyer un satellite comme cela. Est-ce que nous avons la portion d'espace dont nous avons besoin?

M. Kierans: Je vais laisser M. Gotlieb répondre à cette question. Nous avons une place, mais il faut, toutefois, collaborer avec tous les autres pays du monde, sinon ce sera le chaos. M. Gotlieb, revient de Washington où il y a eu des pourparlers là-dessus.

M. A. E. Gotlieb (sous-ministre désigné): Je crois qu'il est exact de dire que la quantité d'espace disponible en orbite est limitée. Cependant, je crois que l'histoire du développement et de l'utilisation des ondes réservées à la radio et à la télévision a prouvée que les progrès de la technologie permettent une plus grande souplesse et plus de possibilités à mesure que l'emploi s'améliore.

À l'heure actuelle, je crois qu'il ne devrait pas y avoir de difficulté pour que le Canada tional procedures of registration with the ITU, a parking spot for our satellite. In future years, if one were to delay that type of thing, say ten years or so, then it is possible that if technology does not develop new methods for exploiting this area of space one could get into a crowded situation, but at the present time we are one of the first countries to feel that our national needs require this and consequently we are early in the game. We do not expect any difficulty in getting other nations of the international community to accept that we utilize appropriate procedures through the ITU for obtaining this parking space and frequency allocations. We do not see this to be a problem.

The Chairman: I wonder if I might give Mr. Macquarrie the floor now for a question of policy and then Mr. Mongrain on a question of policy, after which the Minister could go and we could get down to the details. I could return then to Mr. Stewart. Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I will not take much of the time of the Committee nor intervene often, noting that the Minister has to go to Cabinet and I would not want to delay him. Something like NATO might be on the agenda and it would be a frightful thing to have him away.

I appreciate getting the statement here. I might say I got it only this morning and I am sure this is not the fault of the mail.

Mr. Kierans: No.

Mr. Macquarrie: It is just one of those things that often happen, sir.

Mr. Kierans: We try not to repeat ourselves—what we have said last week.

Mr. Macquarrie: I do not wish to repeat myself either and I have been talking a good deal about this whole question. I have been asking a good many questions, usually in vain.

Mr. Kierans: You are not alone.

Mr. Macquarrie: I do not want to be pessimistic but I was thinking this morning that not much has changed since the Minister was before us with the last Blue Book Estimates.

I am wondering how much advance has, in fact, been made in his department. It was announced seven months ago. We have discussed this field and he has discussed it in a most interesting way. Sometimes I think of obtienne de l'UTI l'allocation d'une orbite spatiale. Dans les années à venir, il est possible que si la technologie ne se poursuit pas au rythme actuel, il faudra craindre une certaine pénurie d'espace. Actuellement nous sommes un des premiers pays à reconnaître que les besoins nationaux exigent un satellite et étaler les premiers, nous serons les premiers servis. Nous ne pensons pas rencontrer de difficultés à obtenir des autres nations de la communauté internationale, par l'intermédiaire de l'UTI, l'allocation d'une orbite et de fréquences. Nous ne pensons pas qu'il y aura de problème.

Le président: Je me demande si je pourrais donner la parole à monsieur MacQuarrie, sur une question de politique, après quoi je reviendrai à M. Mongrain. Ensuite le Ministre pourra reparrer des détails, puis nous reviendrons à M. Stewart. M. Macquarrie.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président, je ne veux pas abuser du temps du Comité ni intervenir trop souvent étant donné que le ministre doit s'en aller à une réunion du cabinet, je ne veux pas le retarder. Je reviens à l'ordre du jour qui comprend quelque chose comme l'OTAN, c'est une chose qui doit être discutée quand même. Je suis heureux d'avoir reçu la déclaration du Ministre, je devrais dire que je ne l'ai reçue que ce matin, mais je ne pense pas que ce soit de la faute des postes.

M. Kierans: Non.

M. Macquarrie: C'est seulement quelque chose qui se produit souvent.

M. Kierans: Nous tentons de ne pas nous répéter. Nous l'avons déjà dit la semaine dernière.

M. Macquarrie: Je ne veux pas me répéter, j'ai déjà parlé beaucoup de la question. J'ai demandé un tas de questions ordinairement en vain.

M. Kierans: Vous n'êtes pas le seul.

M. Macquarrie: Je me demande quel progrès a été réalisé dans ce ministère. La chose a été annoncée il y a sept mois. Nous avons étudié ce domaine et il en avait parlé de façon très intéressante. Quand il parle, il me fait parfois penser à Marshall McLuhan, parfois à George Orwell. C'est très bien. Ces hommes sont excellents. Mais dans les sept mois écoulés depuis que l'annonce a été faite, nous en

Marshall McLuhan and sometimes I think of George Orwell when he speaks. This is fine. They are very excellent men. But in the seven months since the announcement was made we have just now reached the stage where the department is being set up.

There are many questions that have gone through my mind and which I have asked publicly. I still wonder why the MacIntosh report is hidden, and why we have not had any publication of what we call the Whitehead mission to Europe which went over with a flourish of trumpets and came back with ruffled drums, as far as the public is concerned. I wonder if there has yet been any discussion with the technicians of the Province of Quebec who, even the most lay of the laymen knows, is interested in and is in fact participating in the field of telecommunications. This is a very, very important matter. We are interested in when, in fact, the Corporation will be getting under way. I have read about what progress has been made and that it is coming very, very soon.

I would be more assured if we had something more definite on our part in space. I am aware of the international procedures involved.

I would like to know something about the personnel of the legislation task force.

I would be interested in where the whole realm of cable TV comes into this new communications field.

Generally, we have been very happy to cut it with the Minister while this was under way, and now I would invite him to start singing and we would be delighted to see what happens.

Mr. Kierans: The department is just in the process of being made legitimate, as you now. I imagine that the debate on our part of the re-organization Bill will continue this afternoon. So that, we are making considerable progress.

With respect to the satellite corporation, we expect this legislation will be brought down in or about April 15 and, of course, we have to do that, Mr. Macquarrie, because, as I mentioned in my opening remarks, our corporation will have to start giving out contracts early this summer.

With respect to the MacIntosh Report, I have inquired into it. It was a private report made to the government, and it cannot be made public because the basis on which Dr. MacIntosh carried out his investigation and made his recommendations was the understanding that a great deal of confidential information was given to him by common carsommes seulement arrivés maintenant au stade de la mise en place du ministère.

Plusieurs questions m'ont traversé l'esprit et je les ai posées publiquement. Je me demande encore si le rapport MacIntosh est caché et pourquoi rien n'a été publié sur ce que nous appelons la mission Whitehead, en Europe, qui s'est rendue là au son des trompettes et qui, pour ce qui est du public, en est revenue bouche bée. Je me demande si jusqu'à maintenant il y a des discussions quelconques avec les techniciens du Québec qui, comme le sait le plus profane des profanes, est intéressé et, en fait, participe à des travaux dans le domaine des télécommunications. Cette question est des plus importantes. Nous sommes intéressés à savoir, en fait, quand la société constituée sera en mesure de démarrer. J'ai lu que ce serait très bientôt.

Je serais plus rassuré si nous avions quelque chose de plus précis en ce qui a trait à la part que nous prendrons dans le domaine de l'espace. Je suis au courant des procédures internationales que cela comporte. J'aimerais avoir des renseignements sur le personnel qui compose la commission juridique. Je serais intéressé de savoir où se situe toute la question de la télévision par câble dans ce champ nouveau des communications. Nous avons bien aimé partager l'appât avec le ministre pendant la période de préparation, maintenant, je l'inviterais à lancer l'hameçon et nous serions des plus heureux de voir les résultats.

M. Kierans: Le ministère est en train d'être institué officiellement, comme vous le savez, et je suppose que notre débat sur la réorganisation se poursuivra cet après-midi. Nous avons fait des progrès considérables concernant la Société elle-même. Nous espérons que cette législation sera soumise aux environs du 15 avril. Nous devons faire cela, monsieur Macquarrie, je l'ai mentionné dans mes remarques préliminaires; il faut commencer à donner des contrats au début de l'été.

A propos du rapport MacIntosh, c'était un rapport privé fait au gouvernement; il ne peut être rendu public par la base sur laquelle le docteur MacIntosh s'est fondé pour son enquête et, ses recommandations, ses propositions, c'était qu'il y a une grande quantité de renseignements confidentiels, qui lui ont été donnés par les utilisateurs ordinaires des riers, by a whole host of institutions, and he, therefore, was able to draft his report on the basis of this information. A good deal of this information, if it were made public, would seriously prejudice or jeopardize some of the activities of the very people who co-operated most with us.

Now, with respect to Quebec, the Assistant Deputy Minister here, Mr. Gilles Bergeron, comes from there, has been an Assistant Deputy Minister down there, knows them and in fact is meeting with them again on Monday of next week.

With respect to the cable TV, I think we are going to leave that to Mr. Juneau and the CRTC mainly because they are quite interested in this satellite and what it will do. It will be providing additional facilities for them and for their clients and the people that the control. Beyond that, I think the problem of cable TV and the integration of the cable system into the whole communications spectrum will be a matter of national telecommunications policy. We will come into it on that level and we will be co-operating with CRTC.

The Chairman: If I may interject here, I might inform Mr. Macquarrie that the Broadcasting Committee will probably be undertaking a thorough study of cable TV beginning in the fall. I am currently trying to wrestle with the appropriate terms of reference to present to the House. So, you will have a great opportunity, I would think, Mr. Macquarrie, to participate in that.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am actually interested in Mr. Kierans' participation in it in the future as this communications network develops. However, I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the information.

Did I understand the Minister to say that Dr. MacIntosh, when he undertook this task, laid down that his report would be confidential.

Mr. Kierans: No, he did not lay it down. It was a confidential report to the government to help the government by presenting recommendations and ideas to the government as to how they should go about establishing a satellite corporation. He received a great deal of assistance, advice and information from people already in the field and outside the field, and these people made available to him ondes et par des organismes, par toute une pléiade d'institutions, et, qu'en conséquence, il a pu rédiger ce rapport en s'appuyant sur ces renseignements. Si l'on devait publier, rendre publique, une grande partie de ces renseignements, cela pourrait causer un préjudice sérieux ou nuire à certaines activités de mêmes personnes qui ont le plus collaboré avec nous.

Quant au Québec, M. Bergeron, notre sous-ministre adjoint, a été sous-ministre adjoint dans cette province. Il connaît bien les dirigeants et il doit en fait les rencontrer de nouveau lundi de la semaine prochaine. En ce qui a trait à la télévision par câble, je crois que nous laisserons cela à M. Juneau et à la Commission canadienne de la radio et de la télévision principalement parce qu'ils sont très intéressés dans ce satellite et dans ce qui pourra être réalisé. Cela représentera de nouvelles installations pour eux pour leurs clients et pour les gens sur qui ils exercent un contrôle. Au-delà de cela, je crois que le problème de la transmission de la télévision par câbles et l'intégration des antennes collectives à l'ensemble du service des communications, c'est une question de politique nationale des télécommunications. Nous collaborerons avec le CCRT à ce sujet.

Le président: Si je peux intervenir ici, je voudrais dire à M. Macquarrie que le Comité de la radiodiffusion entreprendra probablement à l'automne une enquête approfondie de la transmission de la télévision par câbles. Je travaille présentement à formuler un mandat approprié en vue de le présenter à la Chambre. Je crois donc, monsieur Macquarrie, que vous aurez toute la latitude voulue pour participer.

M. Macquarrie: Je voudrais savoir surtout quelle sera la participation de M. Kierans dans cela dans l'avenir, à mesure que le réseau de communication se développera. Je vous remercie tout de même des renseignements, monsieur le président.

Ai-je bien entendu le ministre dire que M. MacIntosh, au moment où il a entrepris cette tâche, avait établi que son rapport serait confidentiel?

M. Kierans: Non, il ne l'avait pas établi. C'était un rapport confidentiel au gouvernement, pour aider le gouvernement, en soumettant des avis et des idées au gouvernement sur les dispositions à prendre en vue de l'établissement d'une société de transmission d'émissions de télévision par satellite. Il reçut beaucoup d'aide, de conseils et de renseignements, de la part de gens qui sont déjà great deal of information that they would formally consider confidential.

Mr. Macquarrie: The reason I asked is that some weeks ago, when I asked about this, you indicated that you would have to consult with your colleagues.

Mr. Kierans: Yes, I did, and I consulted with the President of the Treasury Board for whom the report was prepared, when he was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and he explained this to me.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have a feeling that in an area which is a most esoteric area, in which there is a good deal of mystique, that the addition of any elements of this kind would be somewhat disquieting to the public and I regret that this has launched out in this particular way.

Mr. Kierans: I think you will find a great deal of what Dr. MacIntosh has recommended will be incorporated in the Bill, establishing the corporation itself.

Mr. Macquarrie: But there is clearly a lot that I and other Canadians will not find out.

Mr. Kierans: You can raise questions at any time when we are discussing the Bill.

The Chairman: Is there a possibility of the report being made public in two or three years time, or even after the passage of the bill?

Mr. Kierans: I would not want to answer that one because I do not really know, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Macquarrie: Again, to go back to your reply, do I understand that there have been discussions between the Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada on the question of telecommunication satellites?

Mr. Kierans: There have been no, what I would call formal discussions. We, generally speaking, know what they have in mind and they, generally speaking, know what we have in mind.

Now that all of this is becoming legal and established and incorporated in legislation, we have a formal position, a legal position, and we will now be conducting conversations with them and negotiating with all provinces, not just Quebec. We will be making them aware of just what the satellite system will dans ce domaine, et d'autres personnes qui n'en font pas partie; ces gens-là nous ont donné beaucoup de renseignements que, normalement, ils considéraient comme confidentiels.

M. Macquarrie: J'ai posé la question parce que, il y a quelques semaines, lorsque j'ai demandé cela, vous avez dit qu'il vous fallait vérifier cela avec vos collègues.

M. Kierans: J'ai rencontré le président du Conseil du Trésor pour qui le rapport était préparé, alors qu'il était ministre de l'Industrie et du Commerce, et c'est lui qui m'a apporté l'explication.

M. Macquarrie: J'ai l'impression que, dans un domaine qui est un domaine assez ésotérique où il y a beaucoup de mystique, quoi, l'addition de tout élément de ce genre inquiéterait quelque peu le public; je regrette que l'affaire ait été lancée de cette façon particulière.

M. Kierans: Je crois qu'une bonne partie de ce que le docteur MacIntosh a recommandé sera compris dans le bill qui établira la Société elle-même.

M. Macquarrie: Mais, il y a une bonne partie de ses recommandations que moi-même et d'autres Canadiens ne connaîtront pas?

M. Kierans: Bien, vous pourrez soulever des questions quand nous étudierons le Bill.

Le président: Est-ce qu'il est possible que le rapport soit rendu public dans deux ou trois ans, ou même après l'adoption du bill, par exemple?

M. Kierans: Je ne voudrais pas répondre à cela parce que je ne connais pas vraiment la réponse.

M. Macquarrie: Encore une fois, pour revenir à votre réponse, est-ce que je comprends bien qu'il y a eu des discussions entre les gouvernements du Québec et du Canada sur la question des satellites de télécommunication?

M. Kierans: Il n'y a pas eu de discussions que je pourrais qualifier d'officielles. Nous savons en général ce qu'ils désirent réaliser et ils savent en général ce que nous avons à l'esprit.

Mais, maintenant que tout cela est en voie de devenir légal, établi et incorporé à la loi, nous avons une politique officielle et nous engagerons des conversations et des négociations avec toutes les provinces, non pas avec le Québec seulement. Nous les renseignerons exactement sur les possibilités offertes par les be able to do and how they can all use that system's facilities to the best advantage.

Mr. Macquarrie: Have you had discussions with the Minister in the Quebec Government who is interested in this field?

Mr. Kierans: Not yet.

Mr. Macquarrie: Do you plan to?

Mr. Kierans: Oh yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain?

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le ministre, je vois que ce sera une compagnie tripartite qui va exploiter ce système de satellites; quelle sorte de contrôle le gouvernement va-t-il vouloir exercer sur cette compagnie? Le gouvernement, apparemment, ne sera pas majoritaire au départ, alors, on adoptera sans doute une législation permettant de maintenir une certaine surveillance?

M. Kierans: Disons que la répartition possible des actions pourrait être tant pour cent pour le gouvernement, tant pour cent pour les compagnies déjà dans le domaine des télécommunications, et un autre 40 p. 100 pour le public, vous et moi, pas vous et moi, parce que nous sommes des députés ou je suis un ministre, mais pour le public. Cela veut dire qu'aucun groupe ne pourra exercer quelque contrôle que ce soit.

M. Mongrain: Même pas par le gouvernement?

M. Kierans: Même pas, mais ayant 30 p. 100 des actions et la possibilité de nommer un certain nombre des administrateurs et directeurs, ceci nous donne une influence assez considérable sur les activités.

The Chairman: It will also come under the regulatory control of the Federal Government of Canada.

Mr. Kierans: In effect, we will also be able to control them through the development of the telecommunications policy itself.

Mr. Mongrain: By the legislation.

Mr. Kierans: Yes.

Mr. Gotlieb: And for certain specific things perhaps, like international negotiation or something, if they are involved in international contracts.

satellites et sur la façon dont ils peuvent tirer du système le plus d'avantages possible.

M. Macquarrie: Avez-vous eu des discussions avec des ministres du gouvernement du Québec intéressés à ce domaine?

M. Kierans: Pas encore.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que vous vous proposez d'avoir des discussions avec ces gens?

M. Kierans: Oui.

Le président: Monsieur Mongrain?

Mr. Mongrain: Sir, I see that it will be tripartite corporation that will operate the satellite system. What kind of control will the government have over this corporation? Apparently, the government will not have the majority of the shares of this corporation, so I suppose that legislation will be adopted in order to maintain a certain control?

Mr. Kierans: Let us say that the possible allotment of shares could be in terms of given percentage for the government and given percentage for companies that are already in the telecommunications field, and another 40% would be held by the public, you and me—no, that's not right, since we are MPs and I am a Minister—I mean by the public. That means that no group will be able to exercise any control whatsoever.

Mr. Mongrain: Not even the government?

Mr. Kierans: Not even the government. But since we will have 30 per cent of the shares and also the possibility of naming a certain number of the administrators and directors, this will give us a fairly considerable influence over the operations.

Le président: Ce sera aussi soumis à la réglementation du gouvernement fédéral du Canada.

M. Kierans: En fait, nous serons aussi en mesure d'exercer un contrôle grâce à la mise au point de la politique à suivre en matière de télécommunications.

M. Mongrain: Au moyen de mesures législatives.

M. Kierans: Oui.

M. Gotlieb: Et pour certains cas particuliers, comme les négociations internationales, s'il s'agit de contrats internationaux.

[Texte]

M. Mongrain: Bon, mon autre question peut sembler naïve, mais elle se rattache à ce qu'a dit M. Macquarrie il y a un moment. La participation des provinces à ce système, car je comprends qu'il s'agit d'un satellite national, du point de vue technique, ce satellite pourrait-il transmettre de la France au Québec certains programmes éducatifs? Cette question peut paraître hypothétique, mais elle ne se peut-être pas tout à fait.

M. Gilles Bergeron (Sous-ministre adjoint désigné (opérations)): Non, pas du tout. Le satellite projeté sera situé de telle façon que la France ne pourra pas le voir, parce que la distance, du moins la coupure de la terre, l'empêchera.

M. Mongrain: Alors, ce sera purement canadien. Est-ce qu'aux États-Unis on pourra le voir?

M. Bergeron: Ah oui. Certaines parties des États-Unis qui pourront être...

M. Mongrain: Quelles parties?

M. Bergeron: La partie nord des États-Unis.

M. Mongrain: Bon, cela veut dire par exemple que si certaines émissions, produites au Québec, étaient relayées par ce satellite, tous les secteurs de la langue française du Canada et possiblement du Nord des États-Unis pourraient capter ces émissions-là?

M. Bergeron: Absolument.

The Chairman: Excuse me, Mr. Kierans now has to leave so I think we will excuse him and we will continue with the questioning on the more technical aspects of it.

Mr. Kierans: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: For those of you who have more policy questions, Mr. Kierans will be coming back tomorrow morning to finish up the Post Office and we will also finish up Communications if there are any outstanding questions.

Mr. Kierans: Or Mr. Gotlieb can perfectly well answer them.

Mr. Mongrain: I will stop questioning now so as to give a chance to my colleagues and I will come back later.

The Chairman: I promised to return to Mr. Stewart as soon as Mr. Kierans left. Mr. Stewart.

[Interprétation]

Mr. Mongrain: My other question may seem to be naïve, but it has to do with what Mr. Macquarrie said a short while ago. Concerning the participation of the provinces in that System, I understand this is a domestic satellite—from the technical point of view, could this satellite transmit certain educational programs from France to Quebec? This question may seem hypothetical, but it may not be entirely so.

Mr. Gilles Bergeron (Assistant Deputy Minister—appointed—Operations): No, it will not be used for that. The proposed satellite will be so situated that the French will not be able to see it, because the distance, at least the curvature of the earth will prevent them from doing so.

Mr. Mongrain: So, it will be purely Canadian. Will the United States be covered by it?

Mr. Bergeron: Yes. Some parts of the United States will be...

Mr. Mongrain: What parts?

Mr. Bergeron: The northern part of the United States.

Mr. Mongrain: This means, for instance, that if certain programs produced in Quebec were relayed by this satellite, all the French-speaking sectors of Canada and possibly of the north of the United States would be able to pick up these programs?

Mr. Bergeron: Yes, definitely.

Le président: Excusez-moi, M. Kierans doit maintenant s'en aller. Nous allons donc l'excuser, et poursuivre l'interrogatoire sur les aspects techniques.

M. Kierans: Merci beaucoup.

Le président: Pour ceux d'entre vous qui ont d'autres questions de politique à poser, M. Kierans reviendra demain matin. Nous terminerons alors l'étude du ministère des Postes, ainsi que des Communications, s'il reste des questions.

M. Kierans: M. Gotlieb peut fort bien répondre aux questions.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je vais cesser de poser des questions pour le moment, afin de donner une chance à mes collègues, et je recommencerai plus tard.

Le président: J'avais promis de redonner la parole à M. Stewart dès que M. Kierans s'en irait. Monsieur Stewart.

[Text]

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you. With regard to that last question, it is a question of frequency is it not? The United States could not transmit unless they were on the same frequency that had been assigned to us?

Mr. Bergeron: The United States could receive provided they establish a ground station which would receive on the frequency that the satellite would transmit, yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): But it is true that these frequencies are by international agreement, is that not so?

Mr. Bergeron: Yes.

The Chairman: By the same token, we can receive other satellite stations if we tune into their frequencies.

Mr. Gotlieb: Yes. We do now under the Intelsat system whereby we can use Mill Village or ground stations to receive emissions from the international satellite system which is in existence and which consists of a number of satellites that are used for international purposes and which can carry programs live from a number of countries in Europe and which can be received in Canada today and, as you know, they are received from time to time for important international events.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Gotlieb, forgive me if I sound as though I am pressing a few points, but I am very concerned that at times when technical people want to see something done, that they can, by technical language, sell a bill of goods in effect. I would not like to see the Government of Canada sold a bill of goods that was going to cost us too much money.

• 1015

Perhaps you do not have all the technical data, but could you tell me what the effects of radiation fall-out would be on the capability of the satellite to transmit? I believe the satellite is over the equator. Could we establish that? Is that correct?

Mr. Gotlieb: Yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): It is over the equator?

Mr. Gotlieb: Yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): All parts of the world go by it?

[Interpretation]

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Merci. Pour ce qui est de ma dernière question, le problème vient de la fréquence, n'est-ce pas? Les États-Unis ne pourraient pas transmettre à moins d'être sur la même fréquence que nous?

M. Bergeron: Ils pourraient recevoir, à condition d'établir une station terrestre qui recevrait sur la même fréquence que celle sur laquelle le satellite transmettrait.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Mais la fréquence est déterminée par des ententes internationales, n'est-ce pas?

M. Bergeron: En effet.

Le président: De même, nous pouvons recevoir d'autres stations à satellite si nous nous branchons à la même fréquence qu'elles.

M. Gotlieb: Oui, nous le faisons déjà, dans le cas du réseau Intelsat, où nous utilisons les installations de Mill Village ou des stations terrestres pour recevoir des émissions provenant du réseau international de satellites qui existe déjà, et qui consiste en un certain nombre de satellites qui servent à des fins internationales et qui peuvent transmettre des émissions provenant en direct de certains pays d'Europe, et que l'on peut recevoir au Canada à l'heure actuelle. Vous le savez, nous recevons ces émissions de temps à autre, lorsqu'il se produit des événements internationaux importants.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Monsieur Gotlieb excusez-moi si je semble vouloir aller un peu trop au fond des choses, mais je m'inquiète beaucoup de ce que parfois, lorsque les techniciens veulent réaliser quelque chose, ils peuvent, grâce au langage technique, vous vendre en fait leur marchandise en bloc. Je ne voudrais pas que le gouvernement du Canada achète ainsi en bloc des installations dont il n'a pas besoin, et que cela lui coûte trop cher.

Peut-être n'avez-vous pas toutes les données techniques nécessaires, mais pourriez-vous me dire quelles seraient les conséquences des retombées radioactives sur les possibilités de transmission du satellite? Je crois que le satellite est situé au-dessus de l'équateur. Est-ce exact?

M. Gotlieb: Oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Il est au-dessus de l'équateur?

M. Gotlieb: Oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Toutes les parties du monde en dépendent?

[Texte]

Mr. Gottlieb: Yes. The main problem there, Mr. Chapman, is with regard to interference and perhaps I could ask Dr. Chapman, who is our assistant deputy minister for research and development, to give you a fuller explanation.

Dr. John H. Chapman (Assistant Deputy Minister (research) (designate) Department of Communications): Just to make sure I understand the question, when you talk about radiation fall-out, to me that means fall-out from a nuclear bomb. Is that what you mean?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Right; whether it is a testing or whatever, in any part of the world, since that part of the world would pass under it.

Dr. Chapman: Are you worried about the effects on the satellite?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Of the transmission of the satellite. Would it have any effect?

Dr. Chapman: It could have effects on the satellite but they would be very minimal. We add exactly this kind of experience with Alouette I.

In July 1962 the United States set off a nuclear weapon over the Pacific which created an artificial radiation belt, and Alouette I, launched in September of that year, flew into it and we lost, in the first two weeks, as much capacity from our solar cells as we would have lost in the first year, by flying through this artificial radiation belt which is a belt of energetic electrons which has since decayed almost back to the natural background.

However, Alouette I was flying at 600 miles altitude. These satellites are all out at 2,000 miles altitudes and physics does not permit you to maintain an artificial radiation belt out there for anything more than a few minutes or hours because the earth's magnetic field is not regularly confined. So, in fact, that does not present a danger to the satellite.

It is, of course, possible to destroy any satellite with a nuclear weapon exploded close to it. But this would be practically an act of war.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes, oh yes.

Dr. Chapman: Does that answer your question?

[Interprétation]

M. Gottlieb: Oui. Le plus grand problème est celui de l'interférence, et nous pourrions peut-être demander au D<sup>r</sup> Chapman, qui est notre sous-ministre adjoint chargé de la recherche et de la mise au point, de vous donner une explication plus complète.

M. John H. Chapman (sous-ministre adjoint (recherche) désigné), ministère des Communications): J'aimerais m'assurer que je comprends bien la question. Lorsque vous parlez de retombées radioactives, pour moi, il s'agit des retombées d'une bombe nucléaire. Est-ce bien ce dont vous voulez parler?

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Oui, qu'il s'agisse d'essais ou de n'importe quoi, dans n'importe quelle partie du monde, puisque cette partie du monde serait atteinte.

M. Chapman: Vous inquiétez-vous des répercussions que cela aurait sur le satellite?

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Sur la transmission, par le satellite. Est-ce que cela aurait des répercussions?

M. Chapman: Cela pourrait avoir des répercussions sur le satellite, mais elles seraient minimes. C'est exactement ce qui s'est produit avec Alouette I.

En juillet 1962, les États-Unis ont fait exploser une bombe nucléaire dans le Pacifique; Alouette I, lancé en septembre de cette année-là, a traversé les radiations, et a perdu, au cours des deux premières semaines, autant d'énergie des cellules solaires qu'il n'en aurait perdu en toute une année, pour avoir traversé cette ceinture artificielle de radiations, ceinture d'électrons doués d'énergie qui s'est, depuis, décomposée pour en revenir presque à la normale.

Toutefois, Alouette I était à une altitude d'environ 600 milles. Tandis que tous ces satellites sont à environ 22,000 milles d'altitude, et la physique ne permet pas de maintenir une ceinture artificielle de radiations à cette hauteur-là pour plus que quelques minutes ou quelques heures, car le champ magnétique terrestre n'est pas limité de façon régulière. Cela ne présente donc pas de danger pour le satellite.

Bien sûr, il est possible de détruire n'importe quel satellite en faisant éclater une arme nucléaire à proximité de ce satellite, mais ce serait presque alors commettre un acte de guerre.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Oui, bien sûr.

M. Chapman: Cela répond-il à votre question?

[Text]

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes, that is fine. I did not realize the exact altitude of this.

I had been asking Mr. Kierans a while ago regarding these receiving stations.

I think that the Canadian public is not aware of the situation. They think we are going to send up a satellite, it is going to transmit and everybody will receive. Could we clarify that the transmission is made from here, goes to the satellite, and then what happens? It comes back to how many different stations? How is it transmitted then?

Dr. Chapman: The concept of everyone receiving that you are talking about is what we would call "direct broadcast", direct to the home. The White Paper made it quite clear that this system is not a direct broadcast system, which is something in the future.

It is necessary to have a very big station on the ground to receive signals from the satellite and, as satellite powers get larger, the size and the cost of the ground station will shrink. It has already shrunk from millions of dollars to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

As this process goes on, as technology develops, as we build bigger and more powerful satellites, then the cost of the ground stations will shrink until eventually, conceivably, if governments decide they want to do it, it would be possible to send signals directly to the home. But in the case of the domestic satellite system we are talking about, it is not of that nature. It is a relay station in the sky and relays to a station on the ground, which as I say will cost hundreds of thousands of dollars and therefore out of the reach of the individual and will have to serve communities.

The microwave frequencies cannot be received by your television set, and so it will have to be broadcast by some means or other, normally a conventional broadcasting transmitter operating in the television frequencies for television, or it will be distributed by the telephone lines for telephone service. It is converted from microwaves at the ground station and the different services distributed in the conventional way just as they are now.

• 1020

[Interpretation]

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Oui, merci. Je ne savais pas exactement à quelle altitude ces satellites étaient en orbite.

J'avais posé tout à l'heure une question à M. Kierans au sujet des stations réceptrices.

Je ne crois pas que le public canadien se rende bien compte de la situation. Il croit que l'on va envoyer un satellite en orbite, qu'il va transmettre, et que tout le monde pourra capter les émissions. Je voudrais avoir des éclaircissements là-dessus: la transmission se fait à partir de la Terre, elle va jusqu'au satellite, et à ce moment-là, qu'est-ce qui se produit? Le satellite retransmet les émissions à combien de stations différentes? Comment se fait alors la transmission?

M. Chapman: L'idée dont vous parlez, et selon laquelle tout le monde peut capter les émissions, c'est ce que nous appelons la diffusion directe—qui atteint directement les foyers. Mais on dit bien, dans le Livre blanc, que ce système n'est pas un système de diffusion directe, qui est une chose de l'avenir.

Il est nécessaire d'avoir une très grosse station terrestre pour recevoir les signaux des satellites, et, au fur et à mesure que la puissance des satellites augmentera, les dimensions et le coût des stations terrestres diminueront. Le chiffre a déjà diminué; il ne s'agit plus de millions de dollars, mais de centaines de milliers de dollars.

Au fur et à mesure que la technologie se développera, et que l'on construira des satellites plus grands et plus puissants, le coût des stations terrestres diminuera jusqu'à ce que, finalement, si les gouvernements le veulent, ainsi, il devienne possible de transmettre des signaux directement dans les foyers. Mais dans le cas du système de satellite dont nous parlons, ce n'est pas de cela qu'il s'agit. Il s'agit d'une station de relais dans le ciel; elle retransmet les émissions à une station terrestre qui, je l'ai dit, coûtera des centaines de milliers de dollars: elle ne sera donc pas à la portée du particulier, et devra desservir des collectivités.

Les hyperfréquences ne peuvent être captées par les téléviseurs, et la diffusion devra donc se faire par un autre moyen. Normalement, ce sera un émetteur ordinaire émettant dans les fréquences adaptées aux téléviseurs, ou, dans le cas du service téléphonique, la distribution se fera par les lignes de téléphone. On convertit les hyperfréquences à la station terrienne, et les divers services sont distribués de la façon ordinaire, comme cela se fait actuellement.

Texte]

The Chairman: Cable, then, will be an integral part of this distribution system?

Dr. Chapman: It could be. Once you have the signal on the ground you can distribute it any way you want to, and if cable is the cheapest, and you decide this is what you want to do, you distribute it by cable. If you want to distribute it by a broadcast station, and that is the best way of doing it, then that is the way you do it.

Mr. Gottlieb: Perhaps I could add a couple of points on that as a non-scientist. I think that we are some distance away from a direct broadcast system. It is technologically feasible in theory but as the study that was just conducted at the U.N., in which Canada and Sweden collaborated on a paper, has shown, we are some distance away from an economically feasible system. It is impossible to estimate how far away we are because that depends to some extent on the effort that various countries put into developing that technology. In turn, that depends on how important they regard developing that technology.

Now for certain countries, I think perhaps underdeveloped countries that have virtually no ground facilities, no microwave, no national system that a satellite can integrate, supplement, add to or correct, this direct broadcast system where all you have is a grapefruit in the sky and a receiver in your home obviously in the long run is going to create a very great deal of interest. Even to a country like India today, which has vast numbers of small communities, a sort of half-way house between a satellite in the sky and a community receiver where everybody can come into a hall and look at it has real interest, and there are some major bilateral efforts going on in the world to develop such a system.

As far as Canada is concerned it is quite clear that basically what can be achieved through a direct broadcast system some years hence can be achieved now in the foreseeable future. It can be achieved within two or three years, by a system based upon radio relay; that is to say, through an earth station which picks up the signal and then feeds it into a broadcast station or carries it onto a microwave system, or a cable system or whatever is there. This is a far cheaper system and its technology is here and present. It is, for example, fully exploited throughout the world, through the Intelsat international system; it is part of present technology.

If I could just expand, an interesting example is to compare what a direct broadcast sys-

[Interprétation]

Le président: La télévision à antenne collective sera alors partie intégrante de ce système de distribution?

M. Chapman: Cela se pourrait. Une fois que le signal est parvenu à la terre, on peut le distribuer comme on le veut, et si l'on estime que l'antenne collective est le moyen le plus économique, c'est celui-là que l'on choisit. Si l'on veut que la distribution se fasse par station de radiodiffusion, et que ce soit le meilleur moyen, on choisit ce moyen-là.

M. Gottlieb: Je pourrais ajouter quelques observations à ce sujet, en tant que profane. Je crains que nous sommes encore loin d'un réseau de diffusion en direct. C'est possible au point de vue technique mais comme le démontre l'étude menée aux Nations unies, pour laquelle le Canada et la Suède ont collaboré à une étude, nous sommes loin d'un système réalisable économiquement. Il est impossible d'évaluer combien de temps il faudra car tout dépend de l'effort que certains pays consacreront au développement de la technologie.

Dans certains pays, les pays en voie de développement qui n'ont pas les installations au sol, pas de réseau micro-onde ou de réseau national auquel le satellite viendrait s'ajouter, compléter ou intégrer, ce réseau de diffusion en direct qui ne consistera qu'un seul satellite en orbite et un appareil récepteur dans les foyers, pourrait, à la longue, susciter beaucoup d'intérêt. Même pour un pays, par exemple, comme l'Inde où il y a beaucoup de petites villes, une salle où les gens pourraient se rendre pour voir les émissions transmises directement du satellite, est très intéressante, et on fait beaucoup d'efforts bilatéraux dans le monde pour mettre au point ce genre de système.

Autant que le Canada est concerné, il est évident que, fondamentalement, ce qui sera réalisé par un réseau de diffusion en directe d'ici quelques années pourrait l'être dans un avenir rapproché, d'ici deux ou trois ans. Il faudrait installer des relais radiophoniques par un satellite terrestre qui capterait les signaux et les retransmettrait ensuite à une station radiophonique, un réseau micro-onde ou un réseau par câble, par exemple. Ce système est beaucoup plus économique et sa technologie est au point. Nous utilisons actuellement cette technologie dans toutes les parties du monde, dans le système international Intelsat; elle fait partie de la technologie actuelle.

Je voudrais m'attarder à un exemple intéressant, de voir ce que les diffusions directes tem could do with our present system in the North. As you know the concept of the present relay system is to put an earth station beside a small community in the North and we have reason to believe as technology is developing that these earth stations can be built at a very reasonable price.

We may be talking of between $100,000 and $200,000 for an earth receive station which can receive TV. Now, that station can be put right beside an isolated community of 400, 500 or 600 people, and with a broadcast link right there the signal can be fed right into the individual home receivers of this northern community. If a direct broadcast were here it would only reach these small communities or the Eskimo on an ice floe, or a very rural area separated from the community. It may well be very important for Canada to have that facility and it is something this new department and the research centre are going to be looking at very, very carefully, because we think we have reason to be in the very forefront of countries interested in the development of such a system, and because of its interest for the newer countries.

However, so far as the national purposes explained in the White Paper of bringing English and French programs to 98 or 99 per cent of the population, reaching the far North and providing telephone data links to the far North are concerned, this can be done now within a couple of years by our system. We actually do not think that technology will be obsolete; we think the full life of that system will be very, very valuable for this country. There will be improvements in technology, for example, through a direct broadcast system, but this advanced technology is really the kind of technology which is going to provide the maximum benefit for a communications system in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): How many of these earth stations you mentioned would be required in Canada? Do you have an idea?

Mr. Gotlieb: Mr. Kierans mentioned $65 million for a system under the present concept. Now we believe that system will provide a major station to establish control and link up with the major stations for the whole network. There will be certain regional stations and then there will be these TV receive stations only, which would be located in the far North. We are thinking—as the final costs come in which we should know very, very shortly—perhaps there will be between 30 and 40 of those to be built. Now you can keep on adding these smaller stations to communiajouteraient au système actuel dans le nord. Comme vous le savez le concept du système actuel de relais est de placer une station de relais au sol près des petites communautés dans le nord. Je crois que l'on pourrait y arriver au fur et à mesure que la technologie se développera à un coût raisonnable.

Il faut parler de $100,000 à $200,000 pour installer une station réceptrice au sol pour la télévision. En plaçant cette station près d'une collectivité de 400, 500 ou 600 personnes, on peut transmettre directement les émissions dans les foyers dans ces collectivités du grand nord. La diffusion directe à partir de satellites peut simplement rejoindre ces petites collectivités, ou un Esquimau à la dérive sur une banquise, ou les gens dans les régions très éloignées. Il se peut qu'il soit très important pour le Canada de pouvoir offrir ce service à ces gens et c'est quelque chose que le centre de recherche et le nouveau ministère étudieront soigneusement parce que nous avons des raisons d'être à l'avant-garde dans ce domaine. En effet, cela intéresse plutôt les pays neufs.

Selon les intérêts nationaux exposés dans le Livre blanc, visant à amener des émissions de langue française et de langue anglaise à 98 ou 99 p. 100 de la population, et dans le grand nord, ainsi que des liaisons téléphoniques avec le grand nord, on peut le faire d'ici deux ans grâce à un système actuel. Nous ne croyons pas que cette technologie deviendra désuète; mais je crois que le système que nous préconisons serait très utile pour le pays avec l'amélioration de la technologie, par un système de diffusion directe. Cette technologie nous fournira de plus grands avantages pour le système de communication dans un avenir prévisible.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Combien de ces stations au sol dont vous parlez faudra-t-il au Canada?

M. Gotlieb: Selon le concept actuel, M. Kierans a parlé de 65 millions de dollars. Nous croyons que ce système sera composé d'une station principale qui assurera le contrôle pour l'ensemble des stations du réseau. Il y aura ensuite des stations régionales et des stations réceptrices dans le grand nord. Nous aurons bientôt les coûts finals et nous constaterons qu'il faudra construire 30 ou 40 de ces stations. Si on continue ensuite d'ajouter ces petites stations à des collectivités, on peut facilement atteindre le chiffre de 100. Si chacune coûte $100,000, les frais de chaque coles, you can go up to 100. If it costs $100,000, or each community earth station then the carrying charges will be $20,000 or $25,000 a year—we use those figures although they may not be precise, in fact, they are not—however, or $25,000 or $35,000 a year you can feed any community.

So it depends largely and simply on the development of the system. As communities form you can build one of these earth stations and carry it for $25,000 or $35,000 a year, broadcasting right into the individual home receivers for that price. So the potential here is enormous as far as not only reaching individuals in the North is concerned but, in fact, opening up the North by making it essentially a more hospitable place where people will be willing to stay longer and will feel that it is part of Canada, that they are receiving live the same events, the same news, that is reaching all Canada at that very moment.

M. Mongrain: Je présume que vous prévoyez que ce système sera rentable, qu'il durera, sur période de X années, amortir le capital investi. Dans combien d'années prévoyez-vous que ce système rapportera des revenus suffisants à l'amortissement du capital annuel?

M. Gotlieb: Nous sommes certains que le système sera rentable, pas de doute. Mais peut-être puis-je demander à mon collègue, M. Bergeron, de vous donner des précisions sur ce point.

M. Bergeron: Pour le moment, d'après les études faites, nous présumons que les frais de développement du satellite, de la recherche, diminuent sur une période de dix années.

Quant au satellite lui-même, puisque nos prédictions ne peuvent pas aller au-delà de cinq années de son existence, sa dépréciation est fait sur une base de cinq ans, quitte à le remplacer après une première période de cinq ans. Le système terrestre, dont on a parlé tout d'abord, sera également déprécié sur une période de dix années, parce que, lorsque nous changerons la technologie pour le secteur spatial, il est fort possible que nous aurons à faire face à un grand nombre de changements dans le système terrestre.

M. Mongrain: Vous prévoyez que normalement, il faudra le remplacer au bout de cinq ans. Est-ce que cela veut dire que tout ce qu'il y a à l'intérieur sera inutilisable au bout de cinq ans, ou bien restera-t-il quelque chose d'utilisable?

lectivité seront de l'ordre de $20,000 ou de $25,000 par année. Ces chiffres ne sont pas très précis, mais pour $25,000 ou $35,000 on peut nourrir ces cultivateurs pendant une année.

Tout dépend donc dans une grande mesure de l'élaboration du système. A mesure que ces collectivités se développent, on peut construire ces stations au sol dont le coût d'entretien serait de $25,000 à $35,000 par année qui retransmettraient directement dans les foyers. Les possibilités sont donc énormes, non seulement d'atteindre les gens dans le nord mais également de participer au développement de cette région en la rendant plus hospitalière, de sorte que les gens seraient prêts à y habiter. Ils sentiraient davantage qu'ils font partie du Canada car ils recevraient en direct les mêmes nouvelles, les mêmes émissions en même temps que le reste du Canada.

Mr. Mongrain: I presume you must be expecting that this system will be profitable and that on a period of x years it will be able to recuperate the invested capital. How many years do you expect it will take before this system brings in enough revenue to amortize the annual capital investment?

Mr. Gotlieb: We are certain that the system will be profitable without a doubt. Mr. Bergeron could give you more details on that point.

Mr. Bergeron: Right now, the studies we have made lead us to believe that the development costs of satellite and research decrease over a period of ten years.

As far as the satellite itself is concerned, since our forecasts cannot go beyond a period of use of five years, its depreciation is calculated over a period of five years, and we will replace it after this original period of five years. The ground system to which we referred earlier, will also be depreciated over a ten year period, because when we shall modify the technology for the spatial sector it is quite likely that we will have to face a great number of changes in the system.

Mr. Mongrain: You foresee that, normally, it will have to be replaced at the end of five years. Does this mean that everything inside of it will be unusable after five years, or will there remain some usable parts?

[Text]

M. Bergeron: Au bout de cinq ans, une fois que les gaz que nous avons à notre disposition pour relocaliser le satellite lorsqu'il part à la dérive sont utilisés, on ne peut plus relocaliser le satellite. Ce n'est pas nécessairement que les fils, les contacts ou ces choses-là sont brûlés ou inutilisables. Mais lorsque le satellite part à la dérive et lorsque nous n'avons plus de gaz, il n'y a aucun moyen pour nous d'envoyer un agent pour remplacer le gaz.

M. Mongrain: Vous n'essaierez pas de le récupérer.

M. Bergeron: On est obligé d'abandonner le satellite, et c'est à ce moment-là qu'on doit le remplacer.

M. Mongrain: J'ai une dernière question, monsieur le président, qui découle de ce qui a été dit tantôt. Il y a une ambiguïté chez moi, monsieur Bergeron. Je ne sais pas si vous pouvez me donner la réponse. L'autre jour, quand nous avons interviewé les responsables de la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines, ils nous parlaient d'un satellite qui avait une possibilité, par exemple, de 250 circuits. Si j'ai bien compris, on nous a laissé entendre qu'il pourrait avoir une possibilité d'environ 2,000 circuits, et qu'éventuellement, on pourrait en avoir un de 10,000 circuits. Ici, je vois que vous avez quatre canaux. Pour les profanes comme moi, cela crée une situation ambiguë.

M. Bergeron: Le satellite dont on parle actuellement aura en fait six canaux de télévision. Chacun de ces canaux de télévision comporte 600 circuits téléphoniques. Si le satellite du Canada était entièrement utilisé pour la téléphonie, il aurait une possibilité de 3,600 circuits. Dans la série des satellites INTELSAT, on a toutes sortes de générations. INTELSAT-I avait 240 circuits, INTELSAT-II avait à peu près 1,200 circuits et deux canaux de télévision, INTELSAT-III...

M. Gotlieb: Je crois que INTELSAT-I et INTELSAT-II ont chacun 240. INTELSAT-III a 1,200 circuits et INTELSAT-IV aura 5,000 circuits.

The Chairman: On the same subject...

Mr. Portelance: Mr. Chairman, on the same subject.

The Chairman: Mr. Comeau on the same subject first, Mr. Portelance.

Mr. Comeau: I do not know if it is on the same subject, but did I understand Mr. Stewart to say that it is possible for all of Canada to capture these emissions? Also, on the question of cost, which was brought up by

[Interpretation]

Mr. Bergeron: At the end of five years, once the gases we have at our disposal to relocate the position of the satellite when it wanders off will be used up there is no way of relocating it. It is not necessarily that the wires, the connections or similar parts are burned or unusable. But when the satellite goes off course and when we run out of gas, there is no way for us to send an agent to replace the gas.

Mr. Mongrain: You won't try to recover it.

Mr. Bergeron: We are obliged to let the satellite wander off and that is when we must replace it.

Mr. Mongrain: One last question, Mr. Chairman. There is something I do not quite understand, and I do not know if you can give me an explanation. The other day, when we interviewed the officials of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Company, they spoke of the satellite that was capable of having about 250 circuits. If I understood correctly, we were told that it might be able to have about 2000 circuits and that eventually, we could even have a satellite with 10,000 circuits. Right now you have only four channels. For people like me who are not experts, this creates a bit of confusion.

Mr. Bergeron: The satellite we are speaking about will have six television channels. Each television channel will have 600 telephone circuits. If the Canadian satellite were used entirely for telephone purposes, it would have a possibility of 3,600 circuits. There are many types of satellites in the INTELSAT series. INTELSAT-I had 240 circuits, INTELSAT-II had about 1200 circuits and two television channels, and INTELSAT-III...

Mr. Gotlieb: I believe that INTELSAT-I and INTELSAT-II both have 240 circuits. INTELSAT-III has 1,200 and INTELSAT-IV will have 5000 circuits.

Le président: Sur le même sujet...

M. Portelance: Monsieur le président, sur le même sujet.

Le président: Monsieur Comeau sur le même sujet d'abord, monsieur Portelance.

M. Comeau: Je ne sais si c'est sur le même sujet, mais ai-je bien entendu monsieur Stewart dire que tout le Canada peut capter ces émissions? D'autre part, pour ce qui est de frais, question qui a été soulevée par M. Stew

Texte]

Mr. Stewart, has any thought been given to joining other nations in a project like this? For instance, I understand that France is going to come up with a satellite next year, in 1971, and they will be broadcasting in 8 languages and it will reach almost all of Canada as well. I was wondering about that.

Mr. Gotlieb: Perhaps I could try to answer that question. Under the present arrangement we have an international system, which is Intelsat, and it is being renegotiated at this very time. Fundamentally the concept which is embodied in the agreement and which is now being negotiated, is that there is a unified world system, a one-world commercial system, which is Intelsat and which any country can use for international purposes. In addition, countries can use that for domestic purposes if they wish, that is perfectly permissible. It can be used for domestic purposes. Under the new arrangement it is quite possible that Intelsat will be authorized to provide a domestic service to a country or even a domestic satellite.

There is a question as to whether or not regional systems will be authorized, and there are very few of them. Some countries feel that the creation of regional systems, is expensive, that they are going to add...

Mr. Comeau: Excuse me, what do you mean by regional?

Mr. Gotlieb: An international regional system would be a satellite that reaches a group of countries in a region; for example, South-east Asia, Latin America, Western Europe, Africa or, which is even broader, transatlantic regions. There are really three different views. On the one hand there is the view that these systems should not be authorized. That is the view of a number of the smaller countries on the ground that it is going to add to the total cost of telecommunication for these smaller countries.

There is also the view that such regional systems can be authorized provided they are compatible with the world system. In this way you may well get a situation in geographic areas where countries come together to serve their regional needs on an international basis.

A third view is that in this international system there should not be any implication whatsoever as to what these countries are entitled to do. They can simply go ahead and have regional systems if they wish. However, one thing is clear, that there is general agreement these countries can have domestic systems of their own. Other than on matters of technical compatibility for frequencies and art (Cochrane), est-ce qu'on a songé à s'unir à d'autres pays? Par exemple, je crois que la France va lancer des satellites pour l'année prochaine ou en 1971, je pense et ils comptent diffuser en 18 langues et ce satellite pourra également desservir presque tout le Canada.

M. Gotlieb: C'est assez difficile de répondre à cette question. En vertu des accords actuels, nous disposons d'un système international qui s'appelle Intelsat et qui fait l'objet de négociations à l'heure actuelle. En principe, le concept qui fait partie de l'accord et qui présentement fait l'objet de négociations se compose d'un système mondial unifié, c'est-à-dire un système commercial mondial appelé Intelsat dont peuvent se servir tous les pays à des fins internationales. De plus les pays peuvent s'en servir à des fins domestiques. En vertu des nouvelles dispositions il est tout à fait possible qu'Intelsat soit autorisé à fournir des services régionaux à un pays en particulier ou même un satellite régional. Toutefois, on se demande si les systèmes régionaux seront autorisés et il y en a si peu. Certains pays estiment que la création de système régionaux coûte trop cher, qu'ils ajouteront...

M. Comeau: Qu'entendez-vous par régionaux?

M. Gotlieb: Ce serait un satellite qui desservirait un groupe de pays dans une région. Par exemple le Sud-est asiatique, l'Amérique Latine, L'Afrique, L'Europe occidentale ou des régions outre-atlantique plus étendues. Il y a trois points de vue différents. On estime, d'abord, qu'il ne faudrait pas permettre la création d'un tel système. C'est ce que pensent certains petits pays, qui estiment que cela va ajouter au coût total des télécommunications pour ces pays-là. Il y a également le point de vue selon lequel ces systèmes régionaux peuvent être autorisés à la condition qu'ils soient compatibles avec le système mondial. De cette façon, il y aura des cas, dans certaines régions géographiques, où les pays s'uniront pour pourvoir à leurs propres besoins sur une base internationale.

Un troisième point de vue est que ce système international ne devrait pas limiter le droit de ces pays de choisir ce qu'ils veulent. Ils peuvent, s'ils le veulent, avoir un système régional. On s'entend toutefois pour admettre que ces pays peuvent avoir leurs propres systèmes locaux. Exception faite des considérations de compatibilité technique en ce qui concerne les fréquences et l'orbite, la commuorbiting it is accepted by the world community that a country can have a domestic satellite of its own. We feel that Canada with its expanse of geography and by the nature of the country does have a need for that satellite. There is no other practical way for us to reach the North.

For smaller countries and for countries that are grouped together, and where the range of the satellite would naturally reach the whole area and not just one country, it may make certain economic sense—and certain sense for other reasons—for them to come together, because in that way they would really be achieving what a large country like Canada, Australia, Brazil or the United States would be doing in their own region. The question on the regional satellites—because these are international systems that tie up a number of countries—will have to be worked out in these international negotiations to see to what extent it is compatible with the world system and the viability of the economic health of the world system.

For domestic satellites there is no problem internationally other than getting these frequencies, and if the international community fundamentally accepts the right of countries to do this type of thing and if in fact you are a region, as Canada is, then you essentially follow the dictates of your requirements. In this case there is no question in the minds of all those people who have been involved in the planning of the system that the Canadian region, including the North, is almost designed for satellite transmission.

The Chairman: Mr. Portelance?

M. Portelance: Monsieur le président, j'ai une question supplémentaire à celle de M. Mongrain au sujet du coût. Apparemment, Intelsat-IV, qui aura 12 canaux, sera construit pour $72 millions. On parle ici d'un satellite de 6 canaux qui va coûter $65 millions.

J'aimerais poser une deuxième question. On dit que présentement le prix de...

The Chairman: I think, Mr. Portelance, your figures are incorrect. It is a satellite of six channels.

Mr. Portelance: Ours is a six channel satellite and Intelsat IV will have 12 channels when it is built.

M. Gottlieb: En ce qui concerne le système canadien, le montant de $65 millions com-nauté mondiale semble admettre qu'un pays puisse disposer, dis-je de satellites. Nous croyons que le Canada de par son étendue géographique et sa nature est une région qui a besoin d'un satellite; nous ne disposons d'aucun autre moyen pratique pour atteindre les régions du Nord.

Dans le cas des petits pays qui sont groupés et que la portée du satellite couvrirait, cela serait justifiable du point de vue économique et constituerait une raison de plus pour que ces pays s'unissent, car ainsi, ils pourraient réellement accomplir ce que les grands pays comme le Canada, l'Australie, le Brésil ou les États-Unis feraient dans leurs propres régions. Les problèmes concernant les satellites régionaux, lesquels constituent des systèmes internationaux liant un certain nombre de pays, devront être réglés lors de ces négociations internationales, afin de voir jusqu'à quel point ces satellites sont compatibles avec le système mondial et la viabilité de la santé économique du système mondial.

Pour ce qui est des satellites nationaux, le seul problème, sur le plan international, est celui d'obtenir ces fréquences, et si la communauté internationale accepte, en principe, le droit des pays d'avoir recours à de tels moyens et s'il s'agit effectivement d'une région comme le Canada, vous agissez essentiellement en fonction de vos besoins. Dans ce cas, il n'y a aucun doute dans l'esprit de tous ceux qui se sont occupés de la planification du système, que le Canada y compris les régions du Nord se prête fort bien aux communications par satellites.

Le président: Monsieur Portelance?

Mr. Portelance: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a supplementary question to Mr. Mongrain's question, regarding cost. Apparently, INTELSAT-IV, that will have 12 channels, will be built for a cost of $72 million. And here we mention a satellite with 6 channels that will cost $65 million.

I would like to ask a second question. It is said that right now the price of...

Le président: Je crois, monsieur Portelance que vos chiffres ne sont pas exacts. C'est un satellite de six canaux.

M. Portelance: Le nôtre est un satellite de six canaux et une fois construit, Intelsat-IV aura douze canaux.

Mr. Gottlieb: As far as the Canadian system is concerned, this cost of $65 million includes rend le secteur terrien, en plus du secteur spatial. Le coût du secteur terrien est presque la moitié de celui du système entier du Canada.

[Texte]

M. Bergeron: Je peux ajouter aussi que le coût de $65 millions comprend le coût desancements, alors que le coût de $72 millions pour Intelsat-IV ne comprend que le contrat signé entre la Société Intelsat et Hughes Aircraft qui fabrique les satellites. Il faudra ajouter aux $72 millions, le coût des lanceurs et le coût des stations terriennes, si on doit construire des stations terriennes pour opérer Intelsat-IV.

M. Portelance: J'ai une deuxième question. Présentement, on dit que le prix de transmission d'une heure de télévision en couleur, entre Paris et New-York, varie, selon le jour de la semaine et l'heure de transmission, entre $11,500 et $18,600. Qui pourra se servir du satellite au Canada et quel sera le coût?

M. Bergeron: Dans le cas de Intelsat, le système n'a pas été conçu dans le but de transmettre des émissions de télévision. Actuellement, lorsque Intelsat transmet des émissions de télévision, on doit procéder longtemps à l'avance à l'arrêt des circuits téléphoniques et au groupement de 600 ou 700 circuits téléphoniques libres au moyen desquels on peut transmettre une heure de télévision. De plus, pour transmettre une émission de télévision de l'Europe à l'Amérique, on doit utiliser deux stations terriennes qui appartiennent, dans le système de Intelsat, aux pays membres.

Par exemple, lorsqu'on doit transmettre de la France au Canada, il faut signer un contrat avec la France pour avoir accès à la station terrienne, un contrat avec Intelsat pour avoir accès aux satellites, et un contrat avec la société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines pour avoir accès à Mill Village. Chacun des pays membres peut demander le prix qu'il veut en ce qui concerne une station terrienne. Actuellement, les coûts horaires pour une station terrienne en Europe sont à peu près de $4,500 à $4,800, alors que, pour la station de Mill Village, ils sont autour de $1,000 à $1,500. Nous ne pouvons rien sur le fonctionnement de la station terrienne européenne, sauf accepter leurs prix.

Dans le cas du satellite domestique, il est véritablement conçu pour répondre à nos besoins. Nous aurons des satellites qui seront entièrement dédiés aux émissions de télévision. Nous n'aurons pas alors le problème que the ground sector in addition to the spatial sector. The cost of the ground sector is almost half of that of the entire system in Canada.

Mr. Bergeron: Moreover, this sum of $65 million includes the cost of launching, whereas the cost of $72 million for the Intelsat-IV includes only the contract that has been signed between the Intelsat Company and Hughes Aircraft who make satellites. We have to add to this cost of $72 million, the cost of launching the cost of ground stations, if they have to be built to operate Intelsat-IV.

Mr. Portelance: A second question. Right now it is said that the cost of transmission for one hour of colour television between Paris and New York varies depending on the day of the week and the time of transmitting, between $11,500 and $18,000. Who will be able to use the satellite in Canada, and what will be the cost?

Mr. Bergeron: As far as Intelsat is concerned, the system has not been built to transmit television programs. Right now, when Intelsat transmits television programs we have to proceed a long time in advance to stop the telephone circuits and see to it that 600 or 800 free telephone circuits are grouped together and in this way we can transmit one hour of television programs. Furthermore, in order to transmit a television program from Europe to America, two ground stations have to be used which belong within the Intelsat system, to the member countries.

For instance, if a program is to be broadcast from France to Canada, a contract has to be signed with France for the use of the ground station, a contract must be signed with Intelsat for the use of the satellites, and another contract must be signed with the C.O.T.C. for the use of Mill Village. Each member country can charge whatever price it wishes for the rental of ground stations.

In Europe, the hourly costs, right now, are about $4,500 to $4,860 whereas at the Mill Village Station they are about $1,000 to $1,500. We cannot do anything about the operation of the European ground station, except to accept their prices.

In the case of the domestic satellite, it is truly built to cater to our own needs. We will have satellites which will be used entirely for television programs. Therefore, we will not have the problem mentioned earlier of having je soulevais tantôt au sujet de l'arrêt long-temps à l'avance des circuits téléphoniques, car ceci est assez complexe.

Nous allons, de toute façon, contrôler le système en entier, c'est-à-dire les stations terrestres comme le secteur spatial. Nous pourrions suggérer des prix à Radio-Canada ou à n'importe quel autre réseau national de télévision, pour qu'ils puissent utiliser économiquement le satellite.

M. Portelance: Justement, les prix seront-ils moindres que ceux qu'on a présentement?

M. Bergeron: Beaucoup moindres. Kierans disait que, dans un système qui nous coûterait $65 millions, nous envisageons un besoin de revenu de l'ordre de $20 millions. Pour ces $20 millions, nous aurons 4 circuits équivalents de télévision, qui pourront fonctionner pendant une année entière. Vous pouvez facilement calculer le coût théorique d'une heure, bien que la Corporation qui opérera le système canadien n'a pas l'intention de louer les services sur une base horaire. Son intention est plutôt de louer des canaux de télévision sur une base mensuelle ou annuelle à un réseau national de télévision.

M. Mongrain: J'ai une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président. Devons-nous comprendre que le Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines va continuer à administrer les stations terrestres et que la nouvelle compagnie va s'occuper du satellite comme tel?

M. Bergeron: Non. La Société va continuer à s'occuper des communications internationales, et le système domestique sera opéré entièrement par la Corporation qui sera éventuellement créée.

M. Mongrain: Et qui devra passer un contrat avec la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines.

M. Bergeron: Si cette corporation-là doit faire des communications vers l'extérieur du Canada. Tant et aussi longtemps que les communications seront domestiques ou nationales, la compagnie sera complètement autonome.

M. Mongrain: Merci.

M. Portelance: J'ai une question supplémentaire. Pour fonder la Corporation en question, on demande présentement au gouvernement canadien d'investir 65 millions de dollars. Il doit y avoir trois partenaires. Est-ce possible? Les deux autres partenaires vont-ils aussi investir 65 millions de dollars?

[Interpretation]

to stop the telephone circuits a long time in advance, because this is a rather complex matter.

Anyway, we will be able to control the whole system, i.e. the ground station and the spatial sector. We will be able to charge rates to the CBC and to any other national television network so that they may use the satellite in an economical manner.

Mr. Portelance: Will the prices be lower than those we have right now?

Mr. Bergeron: Much lower. Mr. Kierans said that, in a system that would cost us $65 million, we would need a revenue of about $20 million. For these $20 million we would have four equivalent circuits for television that will be able to function for a whole year. You can easily calculate what the hourly cost would be, even though the Corporation that will operate the Canadian system has no intention of renting services on an hourly basis. Its intention is rather to rent television channels on a monthly or a yearly basis to a national television network.

Mr. Mongrain: A supplementary, Mr. Chairman. Are we to understand the C.O.T.C. will continue to administer the ground stations and that the new company will look only after the satellite as such?

Mr. Bergeron: No. The C.O.T.C. will keep on looking after the international communications, but the domestic system will be entirely operated by the Corporation that will eventually be created.

Mr. Mongrain: And it will have to sign a contract with the C.O.T.C.

Mr. Bergeron: If that Corporation must broadcast outside of Canada. So long as communications are domestic or national, the company will be entirely autonomous.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

Mr. Portelance: A supplementary. The Canadian government is asked to invest $65 million in order to set up the Corporation. There are supposed to be three partners. Is that possible? The two other partners, will they also be investing $65 million?

[Texte]

M. Bergeron: Non, non; 65 millions de dollars, c'est le total. Donc les trois partenaires se partageront ce total.

M. Portelance: Présentement, ne demandez-vous pas au gouvernement canadien d'investir une somme de 65 millions de dollars?

M. Bergeron: Dans les budgets, au poste L-5, on mentionne seulement $9,850,000.

M. Portelance: Ce qui veut dire que nous devrons déboursier encore à peu près 20 millions de dollars, et le reste devra être divisé entre les deux autres partenaires.

M. Bergeron: Tout dépendra de la place que vous voudrez donner au gouvernement dans ce programme.

M. Portelance: Il serait peut-être bon d'avoir 51 p. 100 des parts, par exemple.

The Chairman: Then you are contemplating an expenditure by the federal government of around $20 million to $25 million as their share of the cost, given your estimates are not rising spectacularly above this figure of $65 million.

M. Bergeron: Il est assez difficile de répondre à cette question-là, parce qu'on pourrait y trouver une part de capital-action, et une part de capital d'emprunt. La part du gouvernement fédéral peut être n'importe quoi pour le moment, tant et aussi longtemps que la structure financière n'aura pas été établie et que la législation créant la Corporation n'aura pas été approuvée.

The Chairman: Will there be a possibility of the provinces sharing in the financing of this satellite?

Mr. Gotlieb: I think that Mr. Kierans mentioned that the legislation would look to a tripartite type of ownership. One part would be the Government of Canada, one part would be the public and a third part would be the common carriers. The exact ratio of these parts and the further details on the kind of companies or interests and how much of the costs they can obtain or what percentage of the toll they can get I expect will be dealt with in the legislation, but it will depend to some extent on the attitude, the interest of the public and of the common carriers and others in this ownership pattern.

• 1045

I think there will be certain possibilities of ownership by the provinces. The ownership pattern will become better known. For exam-

[Interprétation]

Mr. Bergeron: No. Sixty-five million dollars is the total amount and the three partners will be sharing that amount.

Mr. Portelance: Is the Canadian government not being asked right now to invest a sum of $65 million?

Mr. Bergeron: The appropriations under votes L-5 only mention $9,850,000.

Mr. Portelance: Which means that we shall still have to spend about $20 million, and that the rest will have to be divided among the two other partners?

Mr. Bergeron: It will all depend on the share you want to let the government have in this program.

Mr. Portelance: It might be wise to have 51 per cent of the shares for instance.

Le président: Ainsi vous vous attendez à des dépenses de l'ordre de 20 à 25 millions de dollars de la part du gouvernement fédéral couvrant leur participation au coût, pourvu que votre budget ne dépasse pas d'une façon spectaculaire le plafond de 65 millions de dollars.

Mr. Bergeron: It is quite difficult to answer that question, because there may be in part investment capital and also borrowed capital. The share of the federal government is indeterminate right now, so long as the financial structure has not been established and an Act creating the Corporation has not been approved.

Le président: Y aurait-il une question de partage des frais pour les provinces au sujet de ce satellite?

M. Gotlieb: Monsieur Kierans a dit que la loi pourvoirait à une entente tripartite pour la question de la propriété. Une part relèverait du gouvernement du Canada, la deuxième part serait souscrite pour la population, le dernier tiers appartiendrait aux services publics. Il s'agirait de déterminer quelle proportion ces intérêts pourraient obtenir et c'est une question qui sera abordée dans la loi, mais ceci dépendra dans une certaine mesure de l'attitude de la population et des sociétés qui utiliseront ce système.

Il y aura des possibilités en ce qui concerne les investissements des provinces. Il y a dans le domaine privé et le domaine public certai-ple in both the common carrier context and the public context there will be certain possibilities for provincial institutions to be involved, but it is not the idea that there will be one specific ownership sector related to the provinces, or for the provinces to own. It will not be divided into four parts.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, M. Portelance me suggère une autre question supplémentaire. Peut-être M. Bergeron pourrait-il éclairer ma lanterne. J'ai un gros point d'interrogation, et il est possible que quelques-uns de mes collègues le partagent. Vous nous dites, monsieur Bergeron, que la corporation sera rentable, qu'on pourra en amortir le coût sur une période de 5 ans ou 10 ans, selon le cas, comme vous l'avez expliqué tantôt. Je me souviens que, l'an dernier, on nous a présenté un mémoire de l'entreprise privée disant qu'elle ne pouvait financer un satellite, parce que cela demandait un investissement trop considérable, et qu'il fallait absolument que le gouvernement intervienne. Là, il me semble y avoir une inconséquence. Le gouvernement doit-il intervenir, par exemple, dans le domaine de la recherche ou de l'expérimentation? Ou encore, tout simplement dans le domaine de la réalisation, de la fabrication, en somme, du lancement et des opérations? Il me semble y avoir une équivoque. Pourriez-vous tirer cela au clair?

M. Bergeron: Je ne sais pas exactement à quel texte vous faites allusion.

M. Mongrain: Un comité d'opérateurs de transmission, de télévision, enfin de choses semblables, nous avait fait parvenir ici un mémoire disant que l'entreprise privée au Canada ne pouvait pas s'attaquer à la question des satellites. Il y a peut-être deux ou trois ans de cela, par exemple.

M. Bergeron: Sans faire de référence à ce document que je ne connais pas, les études que nous avons effectuées depuis un an nous permettent de conclure qu'un système initial pourra être établi pour environ 65 millions de dollars. Dans ce cadre-là, afin d'assurer une certaine rentabilité, une rentrée équitable du capital et l'amortissement du capital, comme je l'expliquais plus tôt, sur une période de 10 ans ou 5 ans, selon le cas, nous devrons, au cours des premières années d'opération, obtenir des revenus de l'ordre de 20 millions de dollars. Si nous obtenons pendant la période allant de 1972 à 1975 environ 20 millions de dollars par année, après 1975, nous aurons probablement besoin de plus de canaux, nous devrons probablement lancer un deuxième satellite, et d'autres clients viendront s'ajounement des possibilités qui permettront aux institutions provinciales de participer au programme. Il n'y aura probablement pas un secteur précis qui appartiendront aux provinces, ce ne sera pas divisé en quatre parties égales.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, this is another supplementary question. Mr. Bergeron could perhaps give me some information. I am asking myself questions, and maybe some of my colleagues are doing so too. You tell us, Mr. Bergeron, that the Corporation will be profitable and that the cost will be amortized over a period of 5 to 10 years, depending on the case, as you explained earlier. I remember last year, when private enterprise gave us a brief stating that a satellite program could not be financed by private enterprise because the investment would be too high and that the government would definitely have to intervene. There seems to be an inconsistency here. Should the government intervene, for instance, in the field of research or experimentation? Or should it just simply intervene in the field of production, manufacture, launching and operations? There seems to be a misunderstanding here. Could you clear this up for us?

Mr. Bergeron: I do not know exactly to what text you are referring.

Mr. Mongrain: A Committee of enterprises which are involved in the field of transmitting, of television, and so forth, had submitted a brief to us stating that private enterprise in Canada could not handle the satellite question. This was about two or three years ago.

Mr. Bergeron: Without reference to this document which I have not seen, the studies which we have carried out over the past year lead us to believe that an initial system could be built for $65 million. And within this framework, in order to ensure a certain degree of profitability, a reasonable rate of revenues from the capital and the amortization of the capital, as I explained earlier, over a period of 10 or 5 years, depending on the case, we shall during the first years of operation have to obtain revenues of the order of about $20 million. If we obtain during the period from 1972 to 1975 about $20 million per year after 1975, we shall probably need more channels, we shall probably launch a second satellite, and we will get more customers. The cost per channel is thus due to r. Le coût par canal est donc appelé à diminuer, et l'utilisation du système sera toujours plus en plus grande.

M. Mongrain: Je pense bien que M. Gotlieb devrait répondre parce qu'il s'agit d'une question de politique générale. Pourquoi le gouvernement doit-il intervenir dans un projet comme celui-là? Si c'est rentable, pourquoi ne laissons-nous pas à l'entreprise privée? Ainsi, le gouvernement se contenterait-il de gîter pour contrôler les opérations, comme cela doit se faire quand il s'agit d'une chose semblable?

M. Gotlieb: Je vais essayer de répondre à votre question. Je crois que je suis mieux de vous répondre en anglais.

I think that essentially national telecommunications policy goes to the heart of a country's survivability and to a country's role; to its unity and to its character. I think we see this to a far greater extent in other countries; where, for example, communications are often owned by government.

We do not have that system here and we have a very good telecommunications system, but one of the key points about satellite systems resulting from this new technology is that a satellite system, although it is domestic so far as we refer to Canada, is in fact an international system because many of the basic factors that lead to the success or otherwise of that system involve factors outside that state's jurisdiction.

For example, this satellite is going to be in outer space. This satellite is not going to be sitting on Canadian territory. The ground stations will but not the satellite, and accordingly, the very nature of the system is one that involves to a major degree the responsibility of government. I think that is an important starting point for recognizing why governments regard satellites as so important a phenomenon for contemporary society.

I think that the other point, as explained in the White Paper, is that the attainment here is a very important national priority, namely the achievement of a system to some extent dedicated to the North; dedicated—not exclusively dedicated but partly dedicated—to bringing television to northern isolated communities and to be able to bring a telephone and all other kinds of transmissions to the North. This is essentially the only way in which you can do it.

So given these priorities and given the nature of the system, I think the government believes that it would be appropriate for it to decrease and the use of the system will be greater and greater with time.

Mr. Mongrain: I think I will ask this question to Mr. Gotlieb, as it is a question of general policy.

Why should the government intervene in a project like this? If it is profitable, why don't we let private enterprise go into this? Therefore, would the government be satisfied with passing laws to control the operations as is proper in a situation such as this?

Mr. Gotlieb: I will try to answer your question. I think I had better switch to English, if you do not mind.

Je crois qu'essentiellement la politique nationale des communications a une grande importance pour le rôle d'un pays, pour son unité, pour sa nature même. Dans le contexte actuel, il y a des pays où les réseaux de communication appartiennent souvent au gouvernement. Nous avons ici un excellent système privé, mais un des éléments les plus importants qui découlent de la nouvelle technologie c'est qu'un système de satellite même s'il est domestique est un système qui est tout de même international. Bien des facteurs qui peuvent entraîner le succès de cette opération relèvent de questions qui peuvent tomber sous la juridiction d'autres pays. Ce satellite sera placé dans l'espace, il ne sera pas dans le territoire canadien et le système, de par sa nature, suppose la responsabilité de plusieurs gouvernements. Je crois que c'est un point de départ important. C'est pourquoi les gouvernements estiment que les satellites sont un phénomène très important, de nos jours.

Je crois également, comme l'explique le Livre blanc, que l'objectif à atteindre est une priorité nationale très importante et que cet objectif consiste en l'établissement d'un système dédié, en quelque sorte, au Grand Nord. Le but est de mettre à la disposition de ces communautés isolées du Nord les services de la télévision et, éventuellement ceux du téléphone et des autres moyens de communications. C'est, essentiellement, la seule façon de procéder.

Si on tient compte de ces priorités et si on tient compte de la nature du système, le gouvernement estime qu'il convient qu'il possède be associated in an ownership pattern, but not with a monopoly or an exclusive ownership pattern, but participating in an ownership pattern which would ensure the national and international success of this system.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je m'excuse de ne pas être réceptif, mais je suis un de ceux qui sont allergiques, de façon chronique, aux entreprises gouvernementales où le gouvernement ne doit pas, pour aucune raison, s'ingérer. Évidemment ce que me dit M. Gotlieb a beaucoup de sens. Il faut que le gouvernement contrôle une telle entreprise. Je me dis que le gouvernement a tous les moyens, par ses relations internationales et par sa législation domestique, de contrôler l'entreprise.

Si effectivement, on forme une compagnie avec des capitaux privés et des capitaux publics, et si elle est rentable, pourquoi le gouvernement y investirait-il 30 millions de dollars? Pourquoi ne pas laisser le champ libre à l'entreprise privée? Il me semble qu'on a assez de problèmes sans celui-là, au gouvernement fédéral. On garderait tout de même le contrôle au moyen d'une législation ou d'ententes internationales.

Mr. Gotlieb: I think essentially, sir, the answer to your question is that the nature of the system and the high priorities that the government attaches to its success have led this government, as I think it has probably led governments in every other country in the world, to find it desirable in some way to be in a position to associate itself with such an enterprise in an ownership pattern to guarantee the success of the system. These priorities, such as the railways at one time, are such that the responsibilities of government fundamentally must be engaged and one of the important ways these can be engaged is in the kind of responsibility that comes through an ownership pattern. But the idea here was to provide a new type of approach, or a new type of mechanism, and I think in a way this is something new and important in terms of our legal forms, the idea being to create a society, a corporation where the government would have the kind of special responsibility that comes with being an owner, but it would share that with private enterprise in the form of the carriers and it would share that with the public.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Is it not true, though, on that very point, Mr. Gotlieb, that the United States does not in effect look at it in that way and that if any satellite goes up it will be by private enterprise and the government leases?

ce système ou du moins qu'il participe à l'établissement de ce système afin d'en assurer le succès à l'échelle nationale et internationale.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I apologize for not being very receptive but I have a chronic allergy to government enterprise wherein the government must not, for any reason, interfere. Naturally, what Mr. Gotlieb says makes a lot of sense. I think the government should control such an enterprise. The government has all the means through its international relations and through its domestic legislation to control this enterprise.

If in fact, a company is set up with private capital and public capital, and it is a profitable enterprise, why should the government invest $30 million? Why not leave this to private enterprise? We have enough problems as it is here in the federal government. We would keep control over it however, through specific legislation or international agreements.

M. Gotlieb: Je crois que la nature du système et l'importance que le gouvernement attache au succès de l'entreprise ont amené notre gouvernement, et ceux des autres pays, à conclure qu'il est souhaitable qu'il puisse s'associer lui-même à cette entreprise afin d'en assurer le succès. Ces priorités, comme ce fut le cas pour les chemins de fer, sont telles que le gouvernement doit s'en occuper et l'une des façons de s'en occuper réside dans la participation au financement. On a donc songé à l'établissement d'un nouveau mécanisme, la création d'une société dans laquelle le gouvernement aurait cette sorte de responsabilité spéciale qu'entraîne le droit de propriété mais qu'elle partagerait avec l'entreprise privée.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): N'est-il pas vrai sur ce point précis, monsieur Gotlieb, que la situation est différente aux États-Unis et qu'un tout satellite qui est lancé dans l'espace l'est par l'entreprise privée, et que le gouvernement le loue par la suite?

[Texte]

Mr. Gotlieb: I think, sir, that I should try to answer that in this way. The United States does have a chosen instrument for international participation, that is COMSAT, as you now, and COMSAT is in fact partly owned by the public generally and partly owned by the carriers, but the government has through legislation given itself a position on the board of directors and it does report to the President of the United States. Therefore it is true that the legal forms chosen by the United States are not precisely similar to that chosen in Canada.

But could I make a remark, sir, about one of the reasons why we think this desirable? Up to this moment the United States has not had a domestic system, and though it would be inappropriate for me to comment on the reasons for this or upon the domestic factors in the United States, it is true that there are many competing interests and views that are, I believe, making it difficult for a final decision to be made in this respect.

I think that in this country the decision of the government to say, "This is a national priority and in order to ensure its success we are not going to leave it entirely to a particular private enterprise or a combination of private enterprises or the public, or to the initiative of an imaginative new private group." We are going to say, "Yes, we want them in but we feel this is so important to achieve that we want to be able to ensure that these priorities are met." I think this is the reason for an ownership pattern and that the United States' experience, to my way of thinking in any case, justifies the Canadian position.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer, was your request a supplementary on this point?

Mr. Schreyer: Yes. I had other questions but I did have one supplementary on this point—to ask Mr. Gotlieb whether, to his knowledge, the ownership of COMSAT in the United States is a case of primarily private capital but that the government, the United States Government, does have a number of directors on the board. Do you have any idea what proportion of the capital subscribed is public, that is paid by government?

Mr. Gotlieb: The proportion of the capital subscribed is fifty-fifty, roughly. But they are having difficulties on that. It is fifty-fifty—fifty public, fifty common carriers—but I gather, and the situation is there, that there is difficulty in that particular arrangement in the United States in that at least some of the

[Interprétation]

M. Gotlieb: Je tenterai de répondre, à votre question, de cette façon. Les États-Unis possèdent un instrument choisi qui s'occupe de leur participation internationale. Il s'agit de Comsat. Comme vous le savez, Comsat appartient à la fois au public et à ceux qui l'exploitent mais le gouvernement s'est accordé un poste au conseil d'administration et la société répond, en fait, au Président des États-Unis. Il est donc vrai que la méthode choisie par les États-Unis n'est tout à fait identique à celle choisie au Canada.

Permettez-moi un commentaire sur l'une des raisons pour lesquelles nous croyons cette situation souhaitable. Jusqu'à ce jour, les États-Unis n'ont jamais possédé de système domestique, mais bien qu'il ne s'agisse pas pour moi de commenter cette situation, je dois admettre qu'il existe divers points de vue qui, je le crois, rendent difficile la prise d'une décision finale en ce domaine.

Le gouvernement de ce pays a déclaré: «Il s'agit d'une priorité nationale et afin d'en assurer le succès nous ne laisserons pas cette entreprise entièrement entre les mains d'une ou plusieurs sociétés privées. Nous voulons qu'elles y participent mais nous trouvons l'objectif à atteindre si important que nous voulons nous assurer que les priorités seront respectées.» Je crois que c'est là que nous pouvons trouver la raison d'être de ce système et je crois que l'expérience américaine justifie la prise de position canadienne.

Le président: Monsieur Schreyer, vous voulez poser une question supplémentaire là-dessus?

M. Schreyer: J'ai d'autres questions, mais j'ai également une question supplémentaire sur le présent sujet. Je voudrais demander à M. Gotlieb si, à sa connaissance, Comsat appartient surtout à l'entreprise privée même si le gouvernement américain compte certains représentants au conseil d'administration. Savez-vous dans quelle proportion les fonds de cette entreprise appartiennent au gouvernement?

M. Gotlieb: La proportion du capital souscrit est d'environ 50-50. Ils ont des problèmes avec ça. La moitié des fonds appartiennent au public en général, et l'autre moitié, aux compagnies qui exploitent le système, mais je crois savoir que ce système entraîne des difficultés aux États-Unis puisque certaines carriers are not enthusiastic. One of them, the IT&T, I believe, has not wanted to continue its ownership participation. The company, as you know, has sold off very, very large shares of its interests and it does relate to certain criticisms and comments that the United States carriers have been making. I do not think it is appropriate for me to go into them. But they are having difficulties there.

Mr. Schreyer: I am aware of the difficulties they are having but I thought it would be useful to know what proportion of the positions on the board of directors is allocated to the government.

Mr. Gotlieb: They have an allocation of three positions that are named by the President of the United States.

Mr. Schreyer: Out of how many?

Mr. Gotlieb: Out of 15. But in this case, they are named by the President of the United States. Consequently they are nominated by the government but they do not represent ownership in the organization. There is a difference there between power and economic responsibility.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler, do you have a supplementary on this point?

Mr. Osler: Yes. It seems to me that the discussion about American ownership on an essentially international service, which is what I understand we have been talking about, is not a direct parallel to what we are talking about here, which is a domestic service although it happens to be up in international air.

Mr. Gotlieb: That is so, yes.

Mr. Osler: I was wondering, in relationship to this ownership thing and the remarks you made a few moments ago, if you can give us an idea of the anticipated traffic east and west and the anticipated traffic north and south. You have been talking about the necessity of this thing for the North but surely it is not going to be anything like a paying proposition on a north-south basis. It has to have a lot of east-west traffic to carry the freight, does it not?

Mr. Gotlieb: Perhaps my colleagues will be able to supplement this answer. On an east-west basis I believe it will provide a vital role des compagnies qui exploitent le système ne sont pas des plus enthousiastes. L'une d'entre elles, la IT and T a décidé de vendre une très importante part de ses actions dans cette société. Je crois qu'il serait inopportun d'en dire davantage sur les commentaires et les critiques formulés par ces entreprises.

M. Schreyer: Je suis conscient des difficultés qu'ils rencontrent, mais je croyais qu'il serait utile de connaître le nombre de représentants du gouvernement au sein du conseil d'administration.

M. Gotlieb: Les titulaires de trois des postes sont nommés par le Président des États-Unis.

M. Schreyer: Combien y a-t-il de postes en tout?

M. Gotlieb: Il y en a 15. Ces trois personnes sont nommées par le Président même si elles ne représentent aucun intérêt monétaire dans cet organisme. Il y a une différence entre pouvoir et responsabilité économique.

Le président: Vous avez une question supplémentaire, monsieur Osler?

M. Osler: Oui. Il me semble que la discussion concernant la propriété américaine d'un service international, si je comprends bien, c'est ce dont nous parlons, n'est pas un bon exemple, puisque nous parlons ici d'un service national même si les satellites seront dans l'espace aérien international.

M. Gotlieb: C'est exact.

M. Osler: Je me demande, par rapport à cette question de propriété et des remarques que vous avez faites, si vous êtes en mesure de nous donner une idée de l'utilisation est-ouest et nord-sud prévue de ces installations. Vous avez parlé de desservir le Nord, mais cet aspect ne sera certes pas rentable. Il faudra nécessairement que l'utilisation est-ouest soit importante pour que le service soit rentable, n'est-ce pas?

M. Gotlieb: Mes collègues pourront peut-être compléter ma réponse. Dans l'axe est-ouest, ce système sera vital dans le domaine nitted from coast to coast, and it will be economically feasible and technically feasible to do it through the satellite system. This will be the best way to do it. In so far as its general relationship on east-west traffic is concerned it will supplement and we expect would be integrated into the services which the common carriers provide on an east-west basis and would become rentable, or economic, because it would be a part of the ways in which they would provide east-west traffic.

Mr. Perrault: In that connection, how will the quality control the present method of transmission? Certainly the satellite telecasts from Europe are not on a par with domestic microwave transmissions at the present time.

Mr. Gotlieb: I would like to ask my colleague, Dr. Chapman, to answer that. He will do it better than I.

Dr. Chapman: The reason why the transmissions from Europe are not of the same quality is because the satellites presently being used are an early generation of satellites and are not as powerful. As the satellites become more efficient and more powerful then—to use a technical term—the signal to noise ratio will improve.

Mr. Perrault: When will the technical breakthrough be achieved? Is this a fairly recent thing? What sophistication has occurred which will dramatically change this by 1972?

Dr. Chapman: It is simply an improvement and increase and the power that you can place in the satellite—transmitter power—so that you get a stronger signal on the ground and then there will be an improvement in the signals. As you know, the signals have generally been improving from Intelsat 1 to Intelsat 2 to Intelsat 3, but the technology really will reach its peak with the Intelsat 4 satellite and this will establish the level of technology which will give as good a signal from Europe as you get along the ground.

Mr. Perrault: When is this new Intelsat 4 going up? What is the launch date?

Dr. Chapman: In 1970-71.

Mr. Perrault: Will this provide a signal of comparable quality to ground techniques?

Dr. Chapman: We will be using the standards of ground technology for our domestic system.

[Interprétation]

l'autre. Ce sera possible économiquement et techniquement et ce sera le meilleur moyen de procéder. De plus, ce service s'ajoutera à ceux qui existent déjà et s'y intégrera. Il deviendra rentable puisqu'il sera partie intégrante d'un complexe de disponibilités techniques dans l'axe est-ouest.

M. Perrault: A ce sujet, comment la qualité contrôlera-t-elle les méthodes actuelles de transmission? Certainement, les émissions par satellites à partir de l'Europe ne sont pas de la même qualité que les transmissions par relais micro-ondes en ce moment.

M. Gotlieb: Je vais demander à M. Chapman de répondre à ça. Il le fera mieux que moi.

M. Chapman: La raison pour laquelle les transmissions d'Europe ne sont pas de la même qualité c'est que les satellites utilisés actuellement sont des premiers satellites et ne sont pas si puissants. A mesure que les satellites deviennent plus efficaces et plus puissants, le signal du niveau de bruit, pour employer des termes techniques, s'amélioreront.

M. Perrault: Quand ces améliorations techniques seront-elles réalisées? S'agit-il d'une chose récente? Quelle est la modernisation qui permettra ce changement dramatique d'ici 1972.

M. Chapman: Il s'agit simplement d'une amélioration et d'une augmentation et le pouvoir que vous pouvez placer dans le transmetteur du satellite, de sorte que le signal reçu au sol est plus fort, et alors il y aura une amélioration dans les signaux. Comme vous le savez, les signaux se sont généralement améliorés en passant de Intelsat 1 à Intelsat 2, et de là à Intelsat 3, mais la technologie atteindra réellement son sommet quand Intelsat 4 fonctionnera et ceci établira un niveau de technologie qui donnera un aussi bon signal de l'Europe que celui que vous recevez au sol.

M. Perrault: Quand cet Intelsat IV sera-t-il mis en orbite? Quand sera-t-il lancé?

M. Chapman: 1970 - 1971.

M. Perrault: Fournira-t-il un signal d'une qualité comparable à celle des techniques terrestres?

M. Chapman: Nous utiliserons les normes de la technologie terrestre pour notre système domestique.

Mr. Osler: Could I ask Mr. Gotlieb if he could supplement that information.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I have not finished my supplementary...

The Chairman: That is right; please continue, Mr. Nixon.

Mr. Nixon: I had the opportunity recently to witness in the United States the reception of the signals via the Intelsat 3 satellite which were distributed on the normal broadcast network covering President Nixon's visit to Europe. I think if you could have seen those broadcasts there—I do not think any of those transmissions were distributed in Canada—you would agree that they were every bit as good as the present Canadian TV distribution.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: What I am trying to get at, Mr. Chairman, is this business of public ownership versus private ownership and I have no philosophical feeling one way or the other. At present we have private land line companies but if this new gadget will cut down their earning capacity before their microwave lines are fully amortized, there could be great pressure to keep using the microwaves.

I am worried in case the satellite's earning power might be starved in order to protect the land lines with the result that it only would be used for the costly and nonprofitable north-south exchange. It would then lose a lot of money and the government, presumably, would have to subsidize it because the two private interests that are involved would not do so. I wonder, you know, whether you possibly might not be heading for a pretty bad sort of situation in the Canadian North.

Mr. Gotlieb: I can understand very well the concerns you have expressed. I do think, however, that by restricting ourselves to a $65 million capital cost and by expecting the corporation to be economical, it will be able to meet its amortization costs, and to meet its operational costs and will be able to achieve a profit on a revenue, let us say, roughly—this is very, very approximate—of $20 million a year on that kind of capital cost.

We expect that the various potential users in this country which would include at the present time the common carrier—the tradi-

[Interpretation]

Mr. Osler: Puis-je demander à M. Gotlieb s'il peut nous donner des renseignements supplémentaires à ce sujet?

M. Nixon: Monsieur le président, je n'ai pas terminé ma question supplémentaire...

Le président: C'est exact, veuillez continuer, monsieur Nixon.

M. Nixon: J'ai pu me rendre compte récemment aux États-Unis de la réception des signaux transmis par Intelsat 3 qui sont retransmis par le service ordinaire de télévision au sujet de la visite du Président Nixon en Europe. Je ne sais pas si on a vu ces émissions au Canada et vous devez être d'accord qu'elles sont presque aussi bonnes que les émissions que l'on voit actuellement sur nos écrans.

Le président: Monsieur Osler.

M. Osler: Ce que je voudrais savoir, monsieur le président, c'est que cette question de la propriété privée versus la propriété publique et je n'ai pas d'opinion philosophique disons, d'un point de vue ou d'un autre. Mais si vous avez des entreprises privées qui possèdent leurs propres lignes terrestres actuellement, il pourrait y avoir de grande pression si cette nouvelle invention coupe leur profit avant que le coût de leurs réseaux micro-ondes soit amorti. Il pourrait y avoir à ce moment-là une grande pression pour qu'on continue d'utiliser les réseaux micro-ondes actuels.

Je m'inquiète que les pouvoirs bénéficiaires des satellites sont entravés pour protéger les réseaux terrestres de sorte qu'ils ne seraient utilisés que pour les échanges dispendieux et sans profits nord-sud. Il y aura alors de fortes pertes et le gouvernement aura à fournir de subventions à ce sujet parce que les deux intérêts privés en cause ne le feront pas. Je me demande si, oui ou non, on s'acheminera vers une situation assez mauvaise concernant le nord du Canada.

M. Gotlieb: Je comprends votre inquiétude. Toutefois, je crois qu'en nous limitant à des frais d'immobilisation de 65 millions de dollars et en nous attendant à ce que la corporation soit économe, il lui sera possible de réduire ses frais d'amortissement. Et même soit en mesure d'obtenir un profit, disons vingt millions par année.

Nous nous attendons que les utilisateurs possibles au pays, ce qui comprend à l'heure actuelle, les utilisateurs ordinaires des ondes onal common carrier—would, in fact, contribute to that revenue expectation and would be the capacity that that system would provide to supplement, and as part of, their normal operation. Accordingly, we think it will be added and the revenue that will be produced will not compete, so to speak, with the pound, but in fact, will co-operate with the pound in providing effective telecommunications to everybody.

Mr. Osler: Then if you were a private company launching this satellite you would have memoranda of agreement or something with these people stating exactly what you have just said...

Mr. Gotlieb: That is so.

Mr. Osler: ...before you ever put your money up?

Mr. Gotlieb: That is so.

Mr. Osler: Do you have these?

Mr. Gotlieb: It is our expectation that we will have these basic understandings with all potential users as we go along and as they appear in respect of the system. The Corporation will have them when it comes into existence and the government will pave the way and obtain these understandings as part of the economic basis for the system.

Mr. Osler: Do you think you can get an actual undertaking from, say, Bell and (N-CP telecommunications—people like this—that they will guarantee to put in $20 million worth of business a year or whatever the figure is?

Mr. Gotlieb: It certainly would be the government's hope to have understandings worked out with all the potential users.

The Chairman: Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Macquarrie: All that is now apropos of my intended supplemental, Mr. Chairman, is the observation that if I were looking for an argument in favour of public ownership, considering the whole history of Canadian railways and not just recent history, I would not see railways as an example.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bane, is your supplementary on the same subject?

Mr. De Bane: Are you referring to the one mixed enterprise, public and private, or the whole question? I will try to say my first question in French.

aideront à obtenir ces revenus prévus et utiliseront la capacité que le système fournirait pour supplémenter et compléter leurs opérations ordinaires. Donc, nous croyons que ces installations seront utilisées et que le revenu qui en proviendra ne viendra pas en concurrence avec les revenus des services au sol. Ce serait simplement une extension qui fournira à tous des services de télécommunication plus efficaces.

M. Osler: Si vous étiez une entreprise privée et que vous lanciez ce satellite, vous auriez des mémos concernant des ententes avec ces gens disant exactement ce que vous venez de nous dire...

M. Gotlieb: C'est exact.

M. Osler: ...avant d'y placer des fonds?

M. Gotlieb: C'est exact.

M. Osler: Est-ce que vous avez de telles ententes?

M. Gotlieb: Nous espérons avoir de telles ententes de base avec tous les utilisateurs possibles au fur et à mesure que nous progressons. Le gouvernement préparera la voie à cela et préparera les ententes concernant les aspects économiques de ce système.

M. Osler: Pensez-vous que vous pouvez obtenir des accords réels, disons, de la Bell ou des Télécommunications CN/CP, ou de gens de ce genre, qu'ils garantiront de vous donner 20 millions d'affaires par année ou tout autre chiffre?

M. Gotlieb: Le gouvernement espère que nous aurons des ententes avec tous les utilisateurs possibles.

Le président: Monsieur Macquarrie.

M. Macquarrie: Tout ce qui est approprié à propos de ma question supplémentaire, monsieur le président, c'est que si je voulais en arriver à un argument en faveur de la propriété publique, considérant toute l'histoire des chemins de fer publics au Canada, pas seulement l'histoire récente, je ne prendrais le chemin de fer comme un exemple.

Le président: Monsieur De Bané, votre question supplémentaire porte-t-elle sur le même sujet?

M. De Bané: Parlez-vous des entreprises mixtes, publiques et privées, ou de toute la question? Je vais essayer de poser ma première question en français.

[Text]

Lors de la conférence de Washington, la délégation canadienne a-t-elle pris des engagements qui lient le Canada et dans l'affirmative, quelles sont-elles?

M. Gotlieb: Vous voulez dire le Canada, dans l'affirmative de...

Mr. De Bané: Did Canada agree to any policies in Washington and if the answer is yes, I would like to know if they are binding.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané, I do not think that really fits into the question.

Mr. De Bané: I will ask my question on mixed enterprise.

J'ai très bien compris que la raison pour laquelle le gouvernement nous soumet directement cette question, c'est parce qu'elle est d'un intérêt primordial et ceci est très simple à comprendre. Mais je me dis que si nous poussons ce raisonnement à la limite en disant que le téléphone est essentiel, que l'électricité est essentielle, etc, le gouvernement devra s'immiscer dans tout. Or, je remarque avec plaisir, depuis quelques années, qu'on essaye la formule des entreprises conjointes, comme par exemple la compagnie Panarctic.

Nous voyons qu'aux États-Unis l'entreprise américaine a ses actions à la bourse; le gouvernement, je pense, y est majoritaire, mais l'entreprise privée est aussi présente. Alors je voudrais savoir pourquoi vous avez décidé en vertu de l'importance primordiale des satellites, de vous lancer seuls dans cette affaire compte tenu de la rentabilité. Moi, si j'avais de l'argent, vu les chiffres que vous me donnez, j'investirais à cet endroit.

M. Gotlieb: Nous n'avons pas l'intention d'investir seuls dans ce système de satellites; nous voulons encourager la participation du secteur privé et même les compagnies de télécommunications. Le gouvernement veut donc que le public ait l'opportunité de participer à cette entreprise.

M. De Bané: Selon le même système que pour la compagnie Panarctic?

M. Gotlieb: Non. Ma position est un peu difficile, parce que le gouvernement va introduire une législation pour créer cette corporation, et je crois que la situation sera beaucoup plus claire après l'introduction de cette législation. Pour le moment, il est difficile pour moi d'anticiper le contenu de cette législation?

M. De Bané: Je comprends mais...

[Interpretation]

At the Washington Conference did the delegation of Canada take decisions that bind Canada, and what are these decisions if any were taken?

Mr. Gotlieb: You mean, if Canada did fact...

M. De Bané: Est-ce qu'il y a eu des décisions de politique à Washington et si oui, j'aimerais savoir si elles sont irrévocables.

Le président: Je ne pense pas que cela s'insère dans le cadre des questions actuelles.

M. De Bané: Je vais demander ma question au sujet des entreprises mixtes.

I understand very well that the reason why the government is putting that question directly to us is because it is of vital interest and this is very easy to understand. But I say to myself that if we push this reasoning to its limits, when saying that the telephone is essential, that electricity is essential, etc., we will bring the government to meddle in everything. Now, I am pleased to notice that since a number of years we try to set up joint enterprises, like the Panarctic Company, for instance.

We see that in the United States, American enterprise sells its shares on the stock exchange and I think that the government is a major shareholder in it, but private enterprise is also present. Therefore, I would like to know why you have decided, by virtue of the vital importance of satellites, to go alone in that field in view of its profitability. If I had money I would invest in that, on the basis of the figures you have mentioned.

Mr. Gotlieb: Our intention is not to invest on our own in this satellite system. We want to encourage participation of the private sector and even of telecommunications companies. Therefore, the government wants the public to have the opportunity to participate in this enterprise.

Mr. De Bané: Along the same lines as with the case with Panarctic?

Mr. Gotlieb: No. I am in a somewhat difficult position because the government is going to introduce legislation to create this Corporation and I believe that the situation will be much clearer after the introduction of this legislation. Right now though, it is difficult for me to foresee the substance of this legislation.

Mr. De Bané: I understand, but...

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. De Bane, that legislation will be referred to this Committee as soon as it is introduced so you will have an opportunity...

Mr. De Bane: May I switch to another subject?

• 1110

The Chairman: No, no, we are staying on this one subject. I have Mr. Schreyer on a supplementary on the same subject.

Mr. Schreyer: I have a whole line of questions.

The Chairman: Yes, that is fine. Mr. Comeau, do you have a supplementary on this subject...

Mr. Comeau: Yes.

The Chairman: ...of mixed enterprise?

Mr. Comeau: Yes, when you discussed the question of government versus private enterprise, you very strongly suggested or enunciated the priority of Canada, as I understood it. I can understand that as Deputy Minister of the Department of Communications you would feel that this is a priority, but I wonder if you know something that we do not know, that this is really a priority.

The Chairman: The only explanation to that, Mr. Comeau, is to read Mr. Drury's White Paper entitled "A Domestic Satellite Communications System for Canada" which the Department is engaged in implementing.

Mr. Gottlieb: Unfortunately, I am not allowed to have priorities; however, I do think it is a government priority and I have tried to explain it in terms of the way the government sees it and the reasons why they consider it to be a priority.

The Chairman: Mr. Perrault, on a new line of questioning?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a couple of questions. Soviet Russia has a similar land mass to that of Canada.

Mr. Gottlieb: Yes.

Mr. Perrault: Is there any Soviet experience that we are able to draw from in involving our policy in this area of communication satellites? They have small villages scattered all over Siberia.

[Interprétation]

Le président: Monsieur De Bané, cette législation sera soumise au Comité et à ce moment-là vous aurez la chance de l'étudier.

M. De Bané: Puis-je changer de sujet?

Le président: Non et non, nous allons rester sur le même sujet. J'avais M. Schreyer qui voulait poser une question supplémentaire sur le même sujet.

M. Schreyer: J'ai toute une série de questions.

Le président: Oui, c'est très bien. Monsieur Comeau, vous avez une question supplémentaire au sujet...

M. Comeau: Oui.

Le président: ...des entreprises mixtes?

M. Comeau: Oui, lorsque vous avez parlé de la part du gouvernement par rapport à celle de l'entreprise privée, vous avez suggéré fortement ou préconisé la priorité pour le Canada, si je comprends bien, et je puis comprendre qu'à titre de sous-ministre du ministère des Communications, que c'est là une priorité, mais je songeais que si vous savez quelque chose que nous ne savons pas, il y a vraiment une priorité.

Le président: La seule explication pour cela, monsieur Comeau, c'est de lire le Livre blanc de M. Drury intitulé: «Un système domestique de télécommunications par satellite pour le Canada.» Vous allez trouver là les explications du ministère.

M. Gottlieb: Malheureusement, je n'ai pas le droit d'établir les priorités, mais je crois que cela a une priorité du gouvernement. Je tente de l'expliquer et de voir comment le gouvernement comprend cela.

Le président: Monsieur Perrault, un nouveau genre de questions?

M. Perrault: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais poser deux questions. Je crois que la Russie a le même problème de communications immense que le Canada.

M. Gottlieb: Oui.

M. Perrault: Est-ce que des expériences réussies en URSS pourraient nous être utiles pour nous au Canada quant à l'élaboration de notre politique dans le domaine des satellites? Est-ce qu'ils ont beaucoup de petits villages disséminés en Sibérie, par exemple?

[Text]

Mr. Gotlieb: Yes, that is a very good question, sir. I believe the answer is that we can learn from Soviet experience. The Soviet Union does have a world system of their own. They have a very advanced technology as you know and they have put up a MOLNIYA system which is one where the satellites are not in synchronous orbit. They are in elliptical orbit and they go around the world at different heights and in different locations. The satellite could reach anywhere because it is not in synchronous orbit, but, in fact, the ground stations for this system are in the Soviet Union and they are therefore using it as a domestic system.

Although the satellite is in elliptical orbit—it goes around all the world—the function and the purpose of the system is primarily, I believe, to meet their domestic requirements. They are in fact making earth stations; they have made a number, they are putting them in isolated communities and in fact, they have been doing what we will be doing.

The basic difference is the synchronous orbit and I would like to ask my colleagues to explain that this does in fact greatly simplify the parameters of your earth station. With the Soviet system you have got to follow the satellite. You have got to have the kind of antenna at the earth station that follows and plots the movement of the satellite. I believe this can be done and the Soviet Union is doing it very, very well with extremely advanced technology.

Mr. Perrault: The second question I would like to ask relates to the financial viability of this whole project. We are all inclined to be enthusiastic about the project, I think, and rhapsodize over the possibilities of transmitting simultaneously to all parts of Canada certain program material. However, in actual fact from a standpoint of regional network programming as pursued now by CTV and CBC, is it not a fact that the five time zones in Canada make it extremely impractical to originate a program in Toronto at 8 o'clock at night which is going to be received in British Columbia at 5 o'clock, in the Atlantic provinces, at 10 o'clock and at 10.30 in Newfoundland? The process of delay in programming will still be necessary. You cannot do one simultaneous transmission.

Mr. Gotlieb: I think that is a very important point, sir. Perhaps I could ask Dr. Chapman to offer some comments on the time zone factor.

Dr. Chapman: Yes, you are quite right. The CBC would, of course, not be using only the

[Interpretation]

M. Gotlieb: Oui, c'est une excellente question, monsieur. La réponse est que je crois que nous en avons beaucoup à apprendre des expériences de l'Union soviétique. Ils ont leur propre réseau mondial. Ils ont une technologie très avancée dans ce domaine et ils ont installé un système en vertu duquel les satellites ne sont pas dans une orbite synchronisée, ils sont en orbite elliptique autour du monde. Ils sont en orbite à différents endroits et à différentes hauteurs.

Enfin, ils peuvent rejoindre n'importe quelle région du pays. En fait, les stations terrestres de ces systèmes sont en Union soviétique. Le système ne sert donc que pour les transmissions intérieures en Union soviétique.

Même si les satellites sont en orbite autour du monde, la sanction et les buts de ce service est surtout de répondre aux besoins intérieurs; ils ont fait des expériences et ils tentent de desservir la plupart de leurs collectivités même isolées. Ils ont fait ce que nous nous voulons faire.

La différence c'est que nous, nous voulons utiliser des satellites en orbite synchrone et je voudrais demander à mes collègues d'expliquer que ceci, de fait, simplifie de beaucoup les paramètres de votre station terrestre. Avec le système soviétique, vous devez suivre le satellite. Il vous faut trouver le genre d'antenne à la station terrestre qui suivra et tracera le satellite. Je crois que ceci peut se faire et l'Union soviétique le fait très bien étant donné sa technologie extrêmement avancée.

M. Perrault: La deuxième question c'est concernant les possibilités financières de ce projet. Tous actuellement font preuve de beaucoup d'enthousiasme à ce sujet, nous parlons des possibilités de transmettre des émissions partout au Canada. Mais, en fait, au point de vue des services régionaux de transmission, par exemple, ce que fait actuellement CTV et Radio-Canada n'est-il pas une réalisation du fait que 5 fuseaux horaires au Canada rend très difficile d'émettre une émission à Toronto à 8 heures du soir alors qu'elle arrivera à 5 heures en Colombie-Britannique et elle passera à 10 heures dans les Maritimes et à dix heures et demie à Terre-Neuve? Il faudra toujours avoir la retransmission d'émission en différé.

M. Gotlieb: C'est une question très importante et très intéressante. Je vais demander à M. Chapman de vous donner des renseignements sur la question des fuseaux horaires.

M. Chapman: Oui, vous avez raison. Radio-Canada n'utilisera pas uniquement les satelli-satellite. They would also be using for some regional distribution, for example, the terrestrial system which now exists.

Mr. Perrault: Yes. My question related to how much the satellite system can be used for the kind of program transmission that we undertake now.

Dr. Chapman: Let us take the French programs as an example of what might happen. I am not saying this is what will happen but what might happen. The eastern time zone covers the French community in the eastern part of Canada rather completely. For the West, you would want to provide for a delay of one, two or three hours.

Mr. Perrault: Would you still continue to tape it in Calgary, for example, for transmission to the western network?

Dr. Chapman: The trend is to tape it at Calgary or some point in the West, receive it, tape it, delay it one or two hours and transmit it around the region.

Mr. Perrault: So despite the satellite you will still have to use—because of these regional time differences—a considerable amount of microwave equipment to look after regional disparities.

Mr. Gotlieb: It would be taped right at the location probably and replayed at that location. It would be time delayed there but it would not be retransmitted by microwave for reasons of time delay, it would be for regional distribution.

Mr. Perrault: Yes, I know. However, if you tape in Vancouver, for example, for regional distribution in the Pacific net then you would have to use microwaves to send to the other stations on the Pacific net, from the Vancouver origination point at some later time would you not? You would not have taping facilities in five different community locations in British Columbia.

Dr. Chapman: The French program situation is a special one in that the French speaking communities in Western Canada are in the major centres.

Mr. Perrault: Let us talk about orthodox English, the CBC 11 o'clock news.

[Interprétation]

tes. Ils utiliseront aussi, pour certains secteurs de distribution, le système terrestre actuel.

M. Perrault: Oui, ma question se rapporte au degré d'utilisation du système de satellites pour notre présent programme de transmission.

M. Chapman: Si vous prenez, par exemple, les programmes de langue française, je ne dis pas que c'est ce qui va se produire, mais c'est une chose possible. Le fuseau de l'est couvre la collectivité française à l'est du Canada presque complètement. Tandis que dans l'Ouest, vous devez prévoir un délai de une, deux ou trois heures.

M. Perrault: Alors, est-ce qu'à ce moment-là, vous continuerez à mettre ces émissions sur bande magnétoscopique à Calgary, pour les transmettre en différé?

M. Chapman: Oui, c'est ce que nous ferons. Certaines régions de l'Ouest recevront l'émission en direct, la mettront sur bobine magnétoscopique et retransmettront plus tard, à une heure ou deux heures d'intervalle.

M. Perrault: Malgré les satellites, à cause des fuseaux horaires, vous aurez quand même des délais?

M. Gotlieb: L'émission sera enregistrée sur place probablement et nous la jouerons sur place. On n'aura pas besoin de la retransmettre par micro-onde pour la distribution régionale.

M. Perrault: Oui, je sais. Toutefois, si vous faites l'enregistrement à Vancouver, par exemple, pour distribution dans la région du Pacifique, alors à ce moment-là vous devez utiliser les micro-ondes pour transmettre ces émissions aux stations du réseau du Pacifique de leur point d'origine, Vancouver plus tard, n'est-ce pas? Vous n'auriez pas d'installations magnétoscopiques dans cinq différentes places en Colombie-Britannique.

M. Chapman: Oui. La situation est assez spéciale, parce que les communautés francophones de l'ouest du Canada sont pour la plupart dans les grands centres.

M. Perrault: Mais, parlons alors des émissions orthodoxes de télévision, celles des nouvelles de 23 heures de Radio-Canada en anglais?

[Text]

Dr. Chapman: The situation is quite different in English because the communities are in different time zones. The ones which are not now being served by the ground system would be served by the satellite system and then you have to deal with the time delay, the time difference problem.

There are several ways of getting around this. It depends on where the communities are located and where you make the transmission. It is this kind of consideration which would make the CBC, for example, say that they would rather have a larger number of channels by the satellite so they could transmit the programs with the appropriate delay to the different areas of the country.

Here it is a matter of economics and I think at the moment it is not appropriate to arrive at the final answer because the CBC is in the process of examining just exactly how they would do it and in what time zone they would transmit English programs to what area of the country.

Mr. Perrault: Have the CBC expressed any preference, relating the value of conventional transmission to satellite transmission, as far as their programming material is concerned? Has the technical department prepared any estimate?

Dr. Chapman: Oh yes, very much so. They are in the process of planning and have been for the last several years.

Mr. Perrault: They are enthusiastically in support of the satellite?

Mr. Gotlieb: There is no other way, sir, of getting live television to most remote communities, for example, in the North. There is no other way of doing it.

Mr. Perrault: In actual fact, on how many occasions in the past 12 months has it been a great national necessity to transmit live material to all parts of Canada simultaneously? You know I am a supporter of the satellite, but I am interested.

An hon. Member: The night of the election.

Mr. Perrault: That is one of the nights.

Mr. Gotlieb: I believe one question is great events of national importance, but another is the difference between a community which receives everything by tapes, let us say a few weeks later, looking at...

Mr. Perrault: The frontier package.

Mr. Gotlieb: The frontier package.

[Interpretation]

M. Chapman: En anglais, la situation est bien différente à cause de différences dans les fuseaux horaires. Il faudra se servir du satellite pour transmettre l'émission pour tenter d'éliminer les différences de temps. Il y a des méthodes assez faciles de contourner ce problème. Tout dépend où sont ces collectivités que vous voulez desservir. Pour savoir comment et quand on doit leur transmettre les émissions. C'est pour cette région, c'est pour ce genre de considération que Radio-Canada dira, par exemple, qu'ils auront un plus grand nombre de canaux par satellite pour pouvoir transmettre les émissions à différentes régions du pays. Mais c'est surtout au point de vue économique, c'est pas uniquement pour gagner du temps.

Actuellement, il n'est pas approprié d'essayer d'arriver à des réponses finales, parce que Radio-Canada étudie actuellement la question pour voir dans quel fuseau horaire ils transmettront directement, etc...

M. Perrault: Est-ce que Radio-Canada a exprimé des préférences concernant la valeur de la transmission en direct et la transmission par satellite en autant que les émissions sont concernées. Est-ce qu'il y a des estimations concernant les frais techniques?

M. Chapman: Oh oui, beaucoup. Ils sont en train de planifier et ils le font depuis plusieurs années.

M. Perrault: Ils supportent le satellite avec enthousiasme?

M. Gotlieb: Il n'y a pas d'autre moyen d'avoir des émissions en direct. Il y a certaines collectivités éloignées, par exemple, dans le Grand nord.

M. Perrault: En fait, combien de fois au cours des 12 derniers mois est-ce qu'il y a eu la nécessité, au point de vue national, de transmettre une émission simultanément dans tout le Canada? Vous savez que je suis en faveur de satellites, mais j'aimerais quand même avoir une réponse à cette question?

Une voix: Le soir des élections.

M. Perrault: C'est un des soirs.

M. Gotlieb: L'une des questions à ce sujet c'est de transmettre partout toutes les émissions d'une grande importance nationale. Mais entre une communauté qui reçoit tout sur enregistrement, disons, avec deux semaines de retard, cela améliorera la situation.

M. Perrault: Le paquet de la frontière?

M. Gotlieb: Le paquet de la frontière.

[Texte]

Mr. Perrault: How many people are we talking about in terms of this? How many people up North are being deprived now?

The Chairman: You are talking about 7 to 8 per cent of Canada's population.

Mr. Gotlieb: Sir, we are talking about an order of magnitude along these lines, but we're talking about a vast geographic area and we are talking about developing a very large part of Canada so that it will become a larger percentage. In other words, it is a way essentially of making that part of Canada more integrated into Canada and therefore, more receptive...

Mr. Perrault: You mean it is an incentive for people who move North that they can see program material simultaneously as in Toronto.

Mr. Gotlieb: It may be an incentive for them to stay there.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, this is my last comment, but some people go up North to get away from news broadcasts and alarms and wars and the rest. This is one of the reasons they go up North. They are not necessarily interested in direct immediate transmission to the world.

The Chairman: For supplementaries on these points, I have Mr. Schreyer, Mr. De Bané, Mr. Osler and Mr. Stafford.

Mr. Schreyer: I would like to ask Mr. Gotlieb if in the planning for the satellite you have reached the point where you are firmly committed to a synchronous orbit as opposed to a random low orbit or the Russian type, and so forth.

Mr. Gotlieb: Yes, sir, we are firmly committed to the synchronous orbit. We believe this is certainly the most practicable and the most desirable way of proceeding.

Mr. Schreyer: In your present planning have you reached the point where you are already committed to a system of reception that is dependent on ground receiving stations?

Mr. Gotlieb: Yes, sir, we are committed to the grand sector.

Mr. Schreyer: I ask that because I noticed in the White Paper and during your testimony

[Interprétation]

M. Perrault: Combien de gens dans le Nord recevront ces services? Combien de gens ceci comporte-t-il?

Le président: Une bonne partie de la population. De 7 à 8 p. 100 de la population du Canada.

M. Gotlieb: Je ne suis pas prêt à exprimer de tels chiffres, mais nous parlons d'une grande région géographique. Nous parlons d'atteindre le plus grand nombre de gens. Cette région du Canada doit être intégrée davantage au Canada et doit donc être plus réceptive...

M. Perrault: Les gens iront demeurer où ils auront des émissions simultanées, à Toronto, par exemple.

Mr. Gotlieb: Ce sera peut-être une raison pour qu'ils demeurent là.

M. Perrault: Monsieur le président, mon dernier commentaire, mais il y a des gens qui s'en vont dans le Nord justement pour éviter d'entendre les bulletins de nouvelles, les alarmes, les guerres, etc. c'est une des raisons qui justifie le fait qu'ils s'en vont dans le Nord. Ils ne sont pas nécessairement intéressés à voir plus de nouvelles et plus d'émissions de télévision et de télévision en direct.

Le président: Pour des questions supplémentaires à ce sujet, j'ai M. Schreyer, M. De Bané, M. Osler et M. Stafford.

M. Schreyer: Puis-je demander à M. Gotlieb, si dans ce que vous prévoyez pour le satellite, vous en êtes au point où vous êtes définitivement en faveur d'un satellite de synchrone au contraire d'un orbite bas ou du genre russe, etc.

M. Gotlieb: Oui. Nous avons décidé d'opter en faveur de l'orbite fixe. C'est certainement la façon la plus pratique et la plus souhaitable de procéder.

M. Schreyer: Vos préparatifs actuels en sont au point où vous avez déjà accepté un système de réception qui dépendra de stations réceptrices au sol?

M. Gotlieb: Oui, c'est exact, nous avons décidé d'accepter de telles stations situées au sol.

M. Schreyer: Je vous pose cette question parce que je m'aperçois dans le Livre blanc ny that you do stress the importance for the Canadian frontier northland of this facility.

[Text]

Mr. Gotlieb: Yes.

Mr. Schreyer: But it seems to me that if you are still having the system dependent on having ground receiving stations there are many remote areas, many frontier settlements, that will not derive any benefits. If it depends on having to construct a ground receiving station in each settlement, they will still be waiting a long time. For what reason are you not giving consideration now to a system that could be picked up by individual receiving sets? Is it the expense factor, the cost factor or what?

Mr. Gotlieb: This is a very important question. I believe that I mentioned earlier that we look at the demography and the population pattern of the North, that basically, communities over a certain size, like 300 or 400, can be reached economically and feasibly on an incremental cost basis through the radio relay system that we are putting up which is based on existing technology and which can be used now. We do not know exactly; we have not the final figures as they will come out in the course of the other contracts, but if we assume that a TV-receive-only ground station can be built, let us say, for $150,000, then for a carrying charge of 30% to cover amortization, operation and profit you could provide television, with a broadcasting link included, to that community of 300 or 400, given on the present radio relay system with present technology, for between $25,000 to $50,000 a year.

It is true that when you are getting the really isolated person, the person on a farm which is beyond a microwave link and you cannot pay for a station for one family, that you will have reached the limits, basically, of the social purpose that can be achieved by the use of that technology. But I believe that will enable Canada to reach 98 or 99% of its population. That does not mean in any sense that that 1% is less important.

Therefore, one of the priorities that the department of communications does have and will have is to try to develop and do research and further international arrangements that will pave the way for a direct broadcasting system. But the economic use of that technology is probably 7 or 8 years off at a minimum. It may be longer because it depends largely on the efforts countries are prepared to make to develop their systems.

Mr. Schreyer: Well I was not thinking of individual farmers, as you put it, beyond the fringe of settlement, but rather of small Northern communities of 200 or 300. It is not concernant le témoignage que vous avez fait, vous avez souligné l'importance concernant les facilités pour le Nord.

Mr. Gotlieb: Oui.

Mr. Schreyer: Il me semble que si vous comptez sur des stations terrestres de réception que de nombreuses régions éloignées n'en tireront aucun profit. S'il faut construire de telles stations à chaque endroit, ces régions attendront encore longtemps. Pourquoi ne pas songer à un système par lequel les ondes seraient captées directement par le téléviseur? Est-ce que le coût est prohibitif?

Mr. Gotlieb: Je crois avoir dit plus tôt qu'il est possible, techniquement et économiquement, de desservir les agglomérations de 300 ou 400 personnes grâce au système de relais radiophoniques que nous sommes à mettre sur pied. Nous ignorons pour l'instant quel en sera le coût final, mais si nous supposons que nous pouvons construire une station terrestre de réception d'émissions télévisées pour $150,000, alors, en tenant compte des frais d'amortissement et d'exploitation et des profits, il serait possible de desservir ces municipalités de 300 ou 400 personnes, grâce à la technique actuelle, pour une somme variant entre $25,000 et $50,000 par année.

Il est vrai que, dans le cas de la personne vraiment isolée, que les relais micro-ondes ne peuvent desservir et pour laquelle vous ne pouvez construire une station pour son seul usage, il est vrai, dis-je, que vous avez atteint les limites que vous pouvez atteindre grâce à la technologie. Mais je crois qu'il serait possible, ainsi, de rejoindre 98 ou 99 p. 100 de la population canadienne. Ce qui ne signifie pas que le 1 p. 100 qui reste est moins important.

Donc, l'une des priorités du ministère des Communications consiste à conclure des ententes internationales en vue de l'établissement d'un système direct de radiodiffusion. Mais la rentabilité de cette technique ne surviendra que dans 7 ou 8 ans, au minimum. Et ce pourrait être plus long, le tout dépendant des efforts que les pays sont prêts à consentir pour mettre leurs systèmes individuels au point.

Mr. Schreyer: Je ne songeais pas aux fermiers isolés mais à ces petites collectivités de deux ou trois cents personnes. Il est peu probable qu'elles soient dotées d'une station likely they would get a ground receiving station facility and therefore they would still be beyond the service of this...

Mr. Gotlieb: But we hope that they will be able to get a ground facility, as long as they are in sort of a community pattern. We expect on our first capital figure of $65 million to be able to reach between 30 and 40 frontier communities—all the larger ones. If the CBC, for example, reflecting national priorities and if the government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada decide that it is desirable to meet these other isolated communities, these can be reached on the incremental cost basis simply by parking one of these earth stations beside that community, and you can go down to two or three hundred and you know the cost. There may be $25,000, $30,000 or $40,000 a year to pay, which is not very great.

• 1125

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, two more supplementaries on this point. Is it primarily because of the cost factor or is it because the present state of engineering and technology in space communication satellites has not yet reached the point where we can think in terms of direct reception by individual home receiving sets?

Mr. Gotlieb: I think the basic thing is the development, on an economic basis, of that technology. That technology has not yet been developed on an economic basis by a country of the world. I doubt if there are any technological factors which one cannot overcome or cope with; it is simply a matter of being able to do it on an economic basis. I believe the general thinking in this field is that you need a very, very powerful satellite to properly operate in very high frequencies and that this could be a very expensive proposition, because you would need great power to do it. Also, the higher the frequency you use the more expensive becomes your ground equipment. If you work in a lower frequency you could produce a cheap receiver and it would not be too bad, but you would run into problems of interference in this type of thing. The international community will move in this direction I feel it is very likely there will be direct broadcasting. I do not think it will be less than 10 years from now, and it may be 10 to 20 years. Canada, I believe, should be one of the countries particularly interested in developing that technology.

Mr. Schreyer: Finally, Mr. Chairman, one is to understand, then, for reasons both of terrestre de sorte qu'elles seraient encore privées de service...

M. Gotlieb: Nous espérons qu'elles seront dotées de telles stations réceptrices. Nous espérons, grâce à un fonds initial de $65 millions, pouvoir desservir de 30 à 40 de ces municipalités éloignées, en commençant par les plus importantes. Si Radio-Canada, le gouvernement et le Parlement du Canada croient utiles de desservir les autres régions, il suffit de construire de telles stations à proximité de ces régions, au coût de $25,000, $30,000 ou $40,000 par année, ce qui n'est pas énorme.

M. Schreyer: J'aimerais savoir si c'est en raison du coût prohibitif ou si c'est parce qu'il est encore techniquement trop tôt qu'on ne peut songer, pour l'instant, à ce que les émissions transmises par satellite soient capées directement par le téléviseur?

M. Gotlieb: Il s'agit, d'abord, de la mise au point de cette technique, mais il faut que ce soit une aventure rentable. Aucun pays du monde n'a encore réussi à mettre un tel système au point. Je ne crois pas qu'il s'agisse de problèmes insurmontables; il s'agit uniquement d'en faire une aventure rentable. Je crois qu'il faudrait avoir recours à un satellite très puissant ce qui pourrait s'avérer coûteux. Plus la fréquence utilisée est élevée, plus il est coûteux d'aménager les stations terrestres. Si la fréquence est plus basse, les prix tombent, mais il y a risque d'interférence. Tous les pays travailleront en ce sens et je crois que d'ici 10 ou 20 ans, nous connaissons la télévision directe. Je crois que le Canada devrait être au nombre des pays à s'intéresser davantage à la mise au point de cette technique.

M. Schreyer: Pour ces raisons de technique et de coût, ce système national de télédiffucost and technology this domestic space communication satellite system will be dependent on ground receiving stations and my question is, in those small communities where you envisage hopefully that it will be possible to have a ground receiving facility, do you foresee this arrangement in terms of small community antenna systems setting up the ground receiver or do you see it in terms of a large private carrier corporation or the CBC or some government agency?

Mr. Gotlieb: In the small communities with the CBC there would be just a broadcast link which would be right beside the earth station, and it would feed it to the community in the normal way over the air waves or by cable, if necessary, or by—I do not think you need a microwave link. Dr. Chapman, could you supplement that?

Mr. Schreyer: Let us take for purposes of example a community of 300 or 400 in the frontier area of the country: it is necessary, to give that community this service, to have some kind of ground receiving station: who do you envisage would be responsible for the construction and operation of this ground facility?

Dr. Chapman: The white paper says that the corporation to be set up by special statute will own both the satellite and the earth stations of the system. Therefore, the ground station to receive those programs from the satellite will be owned by the corporation. Then the corporation will be a carrier, will be providing a service to another organization—the CBC for example—that uses the facilities of the satellite system and then distributes them in whichever way suits that corporation.

In most cases, if it is the CBC, it will probably find, depending upon the dispersion of the community, that a frontier package broadcasting station will be the appropriate way of making distribution. That, however, is not necessarily the only way. If it is a mining community and there is a mining company there, and the company sets up a cable system between the houses in the community, then, that is quite possible. There are no restrictions on how it can be distributed. It is simply a matter of economics as to which is the best way for that particular community.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I apologize: could I ask one more question? Would you sion par satellite nécessitera la présence de stations terrestres. Dans ces petites localités où vous entrevoyez la construction de telles stations, croyez-vous que ces stations devraient être aménagées par une compagnie qui exploite une antenne communautaire, par Radio-Canada, ou par quelqu'un d'autre?

M. Gotlieb: Dans les petites localités où se trouve Radio-Canada, il s'agirait de relier la station terrestre aux installations de Radio-Canada qui diffuserait ensuite les émissions dans la région. Peut-être que monsieur Chapman pourrait vous donner d'autres détails.

M. Schreyer: Prenons, à titre d'exemple, une municipalité de 300 à 400 habitants dans une région éloignée du pays. Pour desservir cette municipalité, il faut une station terrestre. Qui la construira et la fera fonctionner?

M. Chapman: Le Livre blanc prévoit que la société qui sera créée en vertu de la loi possédera et le satellite et les stations terrestres. Cette société fournira un service à une autre entreprise, par exemple, Radio-Canada, qui se servira du satellite et distribuera les émissions comme bon lui semble.

Dans la plupart des cas, s'il s'agit de Radio-Canada, cette société réalisera probablement qu'une station de retransmission située à proximité de cette municipalité ou de cette région serait l'idéal. Mais ce n'est pas la seule solution. S'il s'agit d'un village minier, la compagnie minière pourrait, par exemple, relier les maisons à un système d'antenne communautaire. Il n'y a pas de limites. Il s'agit tout simplement de trouver le système le plus économique pour une région donnée.

M. Schreyer: Je m'excuse, monsieur le président, mais j'aimerais poser une autre quesor non-master ground receiving stations to service a small community of 300 or 400?

Mr. Gotlieb: Roughly speaking, between $100,000 and $200,000.

Mr. Schreyer: What about a master station?

The Chairman: Mr. Bergeron?

Mr. Bergeron: A master station with full control of the satellite and positioning the satellite will be about $6,000,000 to $7,000,000.

Mr. Schreyer: One per major region of the country?

Mr. Bergeron: Oh no, there would only be one master for the whole system.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: Thank you. Getting on to this small community in the north or wherever it might be, Mr. Chairman, I would suspect this $100,000 to $200,000 figure, because it seems to me it would depend on what you need in there. I do not want to get into a technical argument and I certainly do not know much about the technical side of it, but a machine for delayed broadcasting—and they have banks of them in Winnipeg and Calgary—originally cost about $75,000. I think the price is down somewhat now. If that is one gadget that has to go into a remote station, then that will take quite a chunk of your $100,000.

Mr. Gotlieb: I believe, sir, in so far as the TV receive earth stations are concerned that they would not be time delayed at that spot. The time delay, if there were one, would basically depend upon how a corporation like the CBC would work out the time delay factor with their technicians, but I do not think there would be a time delay in an isolated community. The time delay would take place in one of the centres where there are now time delay facilities and you mentioned Winnipeg as an example.

Mr. Osler: No, but that is the very thing that worries me. You have one master sending station to the satellite and, presumably, several receiving stations. If you send from Montreal, Toronto or wherever this master sending station is located, the delay has to take place before you send or it is useless because once it gets to Winnipeg you have to pump it back through the lines to your send-off station and do the whole operation again.

Mr. Gotlieb: There will be regional stations, sir.

[Interprétation]

terrestres nécessaires pour desservir une localité d'environ 300 ou 400 personnes?

M. Gotlieb: De $100,000 à $200,000, je pense.

M. Schreyer: Et pour une station centrale?

Le président: Monsieur Bergeron?

M. Bergeron: La station centrale qui pourrait contrôler le satellite et sa position coûtera entre six et sept millions de dollars.

M. Schreyer: Et il en faudrait une dans chacune des régions principales du pays?

M. Bergeron: Il n'y en aurait qu'une pour tout le système.

Le président: Monsieur Osler.

M. Osler: Pour en revenir à ces petites localités du Grand Nord, ou des autres régions du pays, je crois, monsieur le président, que ce chiffre de 100 à 200 mille dollars dépend de ce dont vous avez besoin. Je ne veux pas, évidemment, argumenter au sujet des questions techniques car je n'y connais pas grand chose, mais si c'est un poste de radiodiffusion par relais, il faudra certainement retarder la diffusion d'émissions dans certains cas, mais c'est un système qui existe déjà et qui coûte $75,000. Je crois même que le prix a baissé depuis. Si c'est là le seul gadget nécessaire à une station isolée, cela prendra qu'une partie de votre $100,000.

M. Gotlieb: Je crois qu'en ce qui concerne les stations réceptrices au sol, elles ne seraient pas soumises à un délai. Ce délai s'il existe, dépendrait uniquement de la façon dont la Société Radio-Canada résoudrait avec ses techniciens le facteur du délai. Je ne crois pas qu'il y aurait des délais dans les centres isolés. Ces délais se produiraient dans les centres où il existe déjà de semblables installations, tels que Winnipeg.

M. Osler: Toutefois, ceci m'inquiète. Vous avez un poste émetteur central qui envoie les ondes jusqu'aux satellites, et plusieurs postes récepteurs. Ainsi, si vous produisez une émission à Montréal ou à Toronto, le délai doit se produire avant l'envoi des ondes, autrement c'est inutile, car lorsque l'émission arrive à Winnipeg il faut enregistrer à nouveau l'émission et la retransmettre par les canaux habituels.

M. Gotlieb: Il y aura des stations régionales.

[Text]

Mr. Osler: But the regional stations are not going to transmit, they are only going to receive.

Mr. Bergeron: The regional stations are going to transmit also. They are not of the $6 million to $7 million type, they will be in the price range of $2.5 million to $3 million and there will be three or four of these regional stations across Canada.

Mr. Osler: So it will become practical to deliver a signal to Frobisher Bay, as an example, which you could not do today because it would have to be a frontier package, for instance, which is a taped operation?

Mr. Gotlieb: Right.

Mr. Osler: You would probably still have to have the frontier package with everything except the tape at Frobisher Bay. In other words, you would have a receiver plus a small transmitter.

Mr. Gotlieb: A small transmitter would be required and we believe the cost of those would be perhaps $65,000 to $75,000. Your operating cost would be $8,000 or $10,000 a year which would have to be taken into account and you would have the earth station which may be between $100,000 and $150,000 plus your broadcast link, so it might make the total capital requirement for any given community, let us say, in the order of between $200,000 and $225,000.

Mr. Osler: The frontier package today sells for about $250,000 on an average and all you would be required to do would be to withdraw the taping facilities at that frontier package and substitute a receiving facility. So, unless the taping facility and the receiving facility are about the same cost, you are going to run higher than that.

Mr. Gotlieb: The receiving facility, sir, we expect will be cheaper than the taping facility. The frontier package figures that we are aware of indicate that whether you are on a four-hour, a six-hour or a ten-hour type of facility—I mean taping for that length of time—the economics of broadcasting favour the satellite system.

• 1135

Mr. Osler: Thank you. My next question, I think, is still a supplementary, Mr. Chairman, but if it is not, bounce it out. If you have the eager people at Frobisher Bay or Inuvik or somewhere getting the message, unless there is going to be input from somewhere other than Toronto, you are going to have more trouble than you have today. Believe me, this

[Interpretation]

M. Osler: Mais les postes régionaux ne vont pas transmettre, ils vont seulement recevoir.

M. Bergeron: Les postes régionaux transmettront aussi. Ce ne sont pas des postes à 5 ou 6 millions de dollars, mais les stations régionales coûtent environ 2 à 3 millions de dollars chacune. Il y en aura trois ou quatre d'un bout à l'autre du Canada.

M. Osler: Frobisher Bay, par exemple, pourra recevoir un signal au lieu de recevoir un paquet d'émissions pré-enregistrées comme on le fait actuellement.

M. Gotlieb: C'est ça.

M. Osler: Vous continuerez probablement à recevoir les programmes du Nord, mais plus par bande magnétique. En d'autres mots vous aurez un récepteur, plus un petit émetteur.

M. Gotlieb: Un petit appareil émetteur pourrait coûter entre 65,000 et 75,000 dollars, les frais d'exploitation s'élèveraient à 8,000 ou 10,000 dollars par année. La station réceptrice coûterait entre 100,000 et 150,000 dollars, plus votre raccordement au transmetteur. Je crois que le coût de ces installations s'élèverait entre 200,000 et 225,000 dollars.

M. Osler: Les groupes de programmes qui sont envoyés aux localités du Nord coûtent environ $250,000 en moyenne, et tout ce que vous avez à faire c'est d'enlever les installations de magnétophone et installer un récepteur. A moins que les deux installations coûtent le même prix, cela vous coûtera donc plus cher.

M. Gotlieb: Nous espérons que les récepteurs coûteraient moins cher que les magnétophones. Nous avons lieu de croire que si on enregistre des émissions pour une période de 4, de 6 ou de 10 heures, il vaut mieux tout de même procéder au moyen de satellites.

M. Osler: Une dernière question supplémentaire, monsieur le président. Si certaines personnes à Frobisher Bay ou à Inuvik peuvent capter le message, si vous ne recevez des émissions que de Toronto, vous allez avoir encore bien plus de problèmes. Ils auront l'impression à ce moment-là que le message a été envoyé par Dieu le père qui est bien something that the CBC will not face up to, but they have created real bad will. They feel that the message is coming from God who sits on top of the Toronto-Dominion Building in Toronto, and so much of the stuff that comes out is irrelevant to every region other than the Toronto region. The CBC will not mend its fences on that one by making Toronto a region; it makes it the head of the network and mixes the whole thing up together.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler, I think that would be an appropriate question for Mr. Davidson when he returns on Tuesday.

Mr. Osler: But I want to make sure that here is going to be an opportunity for other places to instal input because otherwise they will be getting the message from God in Toronto and that will be it.

The Chairman: And God does not live in Toronto.

Mr. Gotlieb: There will be opportunities for other places to instal input, yes.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, my question is along the same line. I would like to find out how this local input is going to be introduced. The satellite proposal seems to suggest that there is to be a basic programming service to be made available to the entire country, yet how can this be done in view of the time zone problem and the fact that we have been told that costs are too high to employ additional satellite channels for specific regional programming?

We have been told about the small mining community and we have held out to us the picture of an antenna on the roof of something in that community and then connecting cable to this isolated settlement in northern Canada. But the fact is, if that mining community is located in Newfoundland or in British Columbia or up in the Arctic, the programming which comes from Toronto, unless they instal tapping facilities of their own in that little mining community—what an enormous cost that would be—the programming which comes from Toronto is going to be about four hours out and the key programs will come through in that community when workers are still on the job.

Mr. Stafford: Why have a satellite? Why not fly it in?

Mr. Perrault: I think this is a valid problem. I cannot see, for example, how it is going to be possible to introduce local content installé au sommet du Toronto-Dominion Building à Toronto. Radio-Canada ne veut pas revenir en arrière et faire de Toronto une région. La Société veut perpétuer l'idée d'en faire la tête du réseau et mélange tout à nouveau.

Le président: Je crois que ce serait une question qu'il faudrait poser à M. Davidson lorsqu'il reviendra ici mardi.

M. Osler: Mais je voudrais que d'autres endroits puissent envoyer des messages, et non pas seulement pouvoir écouter les messages de Toronto.

Le président: Et Dieu n'habite pas Toronto.

M. Gotlieb: Il y aura possibilité pour les autres centres de produire des émissions.

M. Perrault: Monsieur le président, je vais poser une question qui est essentiellement semblable. Je vais tenter de voir comment on va permettre une production locale. Les propositions formulées dans le cas du programme de satellites permettent de conclure qu'un réseau de télévision sera mis à la disposition de tout le pays. On nous a dit que le prix était trop élevé pour se servir d'un canal qui émettrait des émissions particulières à l'intention de certaines régions.

On nous a parlé d'antennes et de câbles mais si cette communauté minière se trouve dans l'Arctique ou à Terre-Neuve ou en Colombie-Britannique, le programme qui est envoyé à Toronto, à moins que cette petite localité ne possède de moyens d'enregistrer le programme, ce programme sera diffusé au moment où les gens ne peuvent pas le regarder.

M. Stafford: Pourquoi un satellite? Pourquoi ne pas le faire voler?

M. Perrault: Je crois que c'est un problème véritable, je ne crois vraiment pas qu'il soit possible de fournir un certain contenu local without having some microwave link between that community and some regional production centre.

Mr. Osler: If the Northwest Territories cannot express themselves you will be in worse trouble than you are now.

Mr. Perrault: It seems to me that this is a very practical problem. We have been told that the satellite is too expensive to permit anything but a basic programming service across the country and obviously...

Mr. Bergeron: I will try to give an answer to your question. The basic problem is that in the beginning by feeding television with a satellite using two or three channels the programming is not going to be perfect, definitely, but we have to start with something.

Mr. Perrault: How will it start, though? Will it be 12 hours a day of basic programming from Toronto?

Mr. Bergeron: No, there are very many ways. Let us forget about the CBC, let us take a national network that would be using two channels, one for French and one for English. They could program these and this is being studied and discussed, mostly by the CBC, but also within the project office. One of these channels could be programmed with the Pacific time zone and then at that time this channel could supply programs, the four or five hours of national network programs, plus the rest of the six or seven hours they have of regional programs through that channel to all people in the Pacific time zone plus...

Mr. Perrault: What would happen to the people in the Atlantic time zone?

Mr. Bergeron: Wait a minute—plus the people who are in a zone one hour before and one hour after. So you are covering quite a span of Canada by doing this. If you have a second channel by doing the same thing in the eastern or the Atlantic time zones and then for the regional programs one hour before or one hour after, you could cover quite a span of Canada.

Mr. Perrault: Has the cost been worked out for this?

Mr. Bergeron: Yes, costs are being worked out and the cost benefits are being worked out for these things. At the beginning we will be using a lot of microwave and I think we will have to. There is a tremendous investment in our microwave system and there is no point in trying to build a satellite which s'il n'y a pas un lien avec un centre régional de production.

M. Osler: Je crois que vous allez avoir à ce moment-là des problèmes plus graves que ceux que vous avez à ce moment-ci.

M. Perrault: Je crois que c'est un problème très habituel, on nous a dit que les satellites sont trop dispendieux pour qu'on puisse fournir un service de base.

M. Bergeron: Je vais tenter de répondre à votre question, mais le problème fondamental est le suivant: Au début, lorsqu'on veut se servir de deux ou de trois canaux de télévision, ce n'est pas parfait mais c'est un commencement.

M. Perrault: Y aura-t-il douze heures de programmation à partir de Toronto?

M. Bergeron: Non. Il y a bien des façons de procéder, je pense. Nous n'avons pas à tenir compte de la Société Radio-Canada. Imaginons, par exemple, un réseau national qui diffuserait sur deux canaux, un canal de langue française, un canal de langue anglaise, ces possibilités sont étudiées à la Société Radio-Canada et ailleurs.

Un de ces canaux pourraient tenir compte des zones horaires et par exemple, la zone du Pacifique.

M. Perrault: Et les gens de la zone Atlantique?

M. Bergeron: Un instant ce réseau pourrait fournir des émissions à une certaine heure à toutes les personnes qui habitent la région, une région horaire précise, il y aura peut-être une différence d'une heure ou deux mais à ce moment-là, il y a déjà une portion considérable du Canada qui est couverte. Il y a également la zone de l'Atlantique, et ceci permet de desservir une autre portion de la population.

M. Perrault: A-t-on une idée du prix que cela va coûter?

M. Bergeron: On analyse les coûts à l'heure actuelle. Dès le début, nous allons avoir recours aux micro-ondes et je crois que c'est nécessaire. Les micro-ondes sont un élément très important et il est inutile de construire un satellite qui n'utilisera pas les micro-ondes.

[Texte]

Will take all traffic and leave the microwave system empty.

1140

Mr. Perrault: But if you are going to use quite a bit of microwave in the early months, is not going to help those remote communities, the 7 to 10 per cent...

Mr. Bergeron: The remote communities covered by the three time zones which are associated with the Pacific time zone and the northern communities covered by the three time zones associated with the Atlantic time zone will provide programming of local interest for all these remote communities.

Mr. Perrault: How are they going to get, for example, the regional programming service from Vancouver up to some isolated community which has no link except by satellite.

Mr. Gotlieb: I think, sir, that the programming can come from the Vancouver region, for example, and that you can have a program, whether it be CBC or a private network, which is designed for more remote communities. But I think, sir, that we are getting into the problem of programming, particularly as it affects the CBC.

Mr. Perrault: Surely the basic justification for the satellite is communication.

Mr. Bergeron: There is going to be twice as much by way of facilities from all the regional basic stations.

Mr. Osler: This is what we are getting at. Is the ability to put input going to be built into the system. This is what interests me because if there is no input, it is going to be a worse shambles than what you have now.

Mr. Gotlieb: I think really what you are getting into is the programming of the CBC, whether the CBC has a separate program or whether they have funds for more programming. But you can certainly have your programs designed for frontiers or for any other group.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, the only reason that I am concerned with this, and I am sure some of the others are, is that we want to make sure that this satellite operates at its maximum efficiency, in view of the investment involved in it, and that it is going to achieve maximum benefits for its given task of enlightening and informing Canadians.

Mr. Gotlieb: I fully agree with that.

[Interprétation]

M. Perrault: Si vous vous servez des micro-ondes, ceci n'aiderait guère les localités éloignées.

M. Bergeron: Les localités éloignées qui seront desservies par les émissions des trois zones horaires de l'Atlantique seront desservies...

M. Perrault: Comment, par exemple, va-t-on assurer de Vancouver, un service d'émissions régionales à une communauté isolée qui n'a aucun lien avec le reste du Canada, sauf par satellites?

M. Gotlieb: Je crois, monsieur, que les émissions peuvent venir de la région de Vancouver, par exemple, et qu'on peut avoir des émissions, que ce soit de Radio-Canada ou d'un poste privé, conçues pour les localités isolées. Mais je crois que nous touchons là au problème de la programmation, particulièrement en ce qui a trait à Radio-Canada.

M. Perrault: La raison qui justifie l'envoi d'un satellite, ce sont les communications.

M. Bergeron: Il y en aura deux fois plus grâce aux installations des stations régionales.

M. Osler: C'est là où nous en arrivons. Est-ce que le système permettra d'y présenter des émissions? C'est ce qui m'intéresse, car s'il n'y a pas d'émissions, ce sera pire que maintenant.

M. Gotlieb: Vous parlez alors de la programmation de Radio-Canada; il s'agit de déterminer si la société Radio-Canada a une programmation distincte, ou si elle a des fonds nécessaires pour une programmation importante. Mais certains programmes peuvent certainement être conçus à l'intention des localités isolées, ou autres groupes.

M. Perrault: Monsieur le président, la seule raison pour laquelle cela m'inquiète, et je suis sûr que d'autres s'inquiètent aussi, c'est que je veux m'assurer que ce satellite sera utilisé au maximum, si on tient compte des investissements, et qu'on va l'utiliser au maximum pour distraire et informer les Canadiens.

M. Gotlieb: Je suis parfaitement d'accord avec cela.

[Text]

The Chairman: Mr. Stafford, on the same subject.

Mr. Stafford: Mr. Perrault was speaking of time zones in Canada and direct transmission by satellite. An 8 p.m. program in Paris would reach Vancouver at 5 a.m. the next morning. Now if effective transmission of foreign programs is to take place, you could put it over the videotape just as quickly.

Mr. Gotlieb: This is true, sir. This is a dedicated system for domestic purposes. Right now, today, we do not need this satellite to get a program from Paris to Vancouver. It can be done today by INTELSAT.

Mr. Stafford: That is fine, but the Russian system he was talking about, with a highly elliptical orbit, gives Russia about 8 hours programs per day on one satellite. Now I was just figuring out here, under our circular synchronous system, $65 million per satellite. You would have about 43,800 hours in a year, if you have used up all you were allowed. Without any interest charges or a thing it would cost you $1,484 per hour for each one of the three up there. If you multiply that by three it is less than $5,000 an hour, 24 hours a day, with no interest, cost, employees or anything added, or taking account for anything going wrong. If you are going to use it this way and not take into consideration transmission of programs from Paris, Bonn, Moscow and other places, would the Russian system not be a lot easier, better, and give you all the transmission needed in Canada with the highly elliptical orbit?

Mr. Gotlieb: I will ask Dr. Chapman, but I think, as a general comment, that the Russian system is more expensive because the earth segment is much more complicated.

Mr. Stafford: In other words, does it cost more to put a Russian satellite up than it does three of ours?

The Chairman: Would it not be possible to use the Russian satellite when it is over us and not being utilized?

Mr. Gotlieb: It might not come at the hour of the day most desirable. Then you might find that in borrowing somebody else's system for your own domestic purposes they may not share entirely your views on how you use their system.

Mr. Stafford: I have one more question on this. If this is all that it is going to be used for, we can do this now on our microwave system. Why have a satellite?

[Interpretation]

Le président: Monsieur Stafford, sur la même question.

M. Stafford: M. Perrault a parlé des fuseaux horaires canadiens et de la transmission par satellites. Un programme émis à Paris, à 20 heures, arriverait à Vancouver à heures le lendemain matin. Si on doit transmettre des émissions étrangères, on pourrait tout aussi bien le faire par magnétoscope, ce qui serait aussi rapide.

M. Gotlieb: C'est vrai. C'est un système qui servirait à des fins intérieures. Nous n'avons pas besoin maintenant de ce satellite pour obtenir un programme français qui serait diffusé à Vancouver. On peut le faire aujourd'hui par Intelsat.

M. Stafford: Oui, mais la Russie, grâce à son système de satellites à orbite elliptique, peut diffuser environ huit heures d'émissions par jour au moyen d'un satellite. Je pensais à notre système circulaire synchrone dont chaque satellite coûte 65 millions. On disposerait d'environ 43,800 heures par an, en les utilisant au maximum. Sans tenir compte des intérêts, cela nous coûterait $1,484 l'heure pour chacun. Si on multiplie par trois, cela fait moins de $5,000 l'heure, 24 heures par jour, sans intérêts, sans frais, sans main-d'œuvre, etc., sans compter les imprévus. Si ce système doit être utilisé de cette façon, sans qu'on tienne compte de la transmission d'émissions de Paris, Bonn, Moscou, etc., le système russe ne vaudrait-il pas beaucoup mieux, car il pourrait nous transmettre toutes les émissions dont le Canada a besoin, grâce à son orbite elliptique?

M. Gotlieb: Je vais demander à M. Chapman, mais je crois que le système russe coûte plus cher, car il est beaucoup plus compliqué.

M. Stafford: Est-ce qu'il coûte plus cher d'envoyer un satellite russe que trois des nôtres?

Le président: Ne serait-il pas possible d'utiliser le satellite russe lorsqu'il passe au-dessus du Canada et qu'on ne l'utilise pas?

M. Gotlieb: Ceci dépendrait du moment, du jour où c'est possible. En utilisant le système d'un autre pays pour notre propre usage, on ne serait peut-être pas d'accord avec l'utilisation que vous voulez en faire.

M. Stafford: J'ai une autre question à poser à ce sujet. Si on ne veut l'utiliser qu'à cette fin, nous pourrions utiliser notre système de micro-ondes. Pourquoi un satellite?

[Texte]

Mr. Gotlieb: Sir, you cannot reach the North with a microwave system and we think this is the most feasible way to bring French across Canada as well.

Mr. Stafford: So actually this whole idea of the satellite system is to tape TV to the few people in the North where you just cannot put microwave stations in.

Mr. Gotlieb: Well in respect of TV, data and voice, essentially this is the only way of doing it up there, and it is the best way to bring the two languages into the various regions of Canada.

Mr. Chapman: Concerning the question on the Russian system. The Russian system is an earlier concept. Really there were three stages in the development of communication satellites. The first one was the TELSTAR concept in which there were a large number of satellites orbiting at 2,000 or 3,000 miles height—a large number being 40 or 50—with stations on the ground which pick up and follow a satellite, and when that one passes out the second antenna will pick up another one and follow it out. That was the first system and it was first tried out in 1962. The second system is the concept that the Russians have, with satellites in 12-hour orbits, which move more slowly, and you can achieve your objectives with a smaller number of satellites. I think the Russians have launched six or seven MOLNIYA satellites, and you need several satellites in orbit for it to work.

Mr. Stafford: In other words, the Russians have more than one satellite.

Mr. Chapman: Yes, they have six or seven satellites in orbit now. Then the third breakthrough in technology is the synchronous satellite which appears to be fixed in one spot in the sky. The Russian satellite is about the same distance from the earth as the synchronous satellite when it is over Russia and they are using it, and then it comes down close to earth on the other side of the earth. The main difference between these two systems is the kind of ground stations you have. The Russian station requires an antenna which tracks—it moves and follows the satellite. You have to have a computer to calculate where the satellite is going to be, you have to have people there to operate this equipment, and it involves a bigger, more costly ground facility.

Mr. Perrault: Are they going to change to this other system.

[Interprétation]

M. Gotlieb: On ne peut atteindre le Nord avec un système de micro-ondes, et je crois que c'est la meilleure façon de diffuser en français d'un bout à l'autre du pays.

M. Stafford: Vous voulez donc atteindre les quelques habitants du Nord qui ne sont pas accessibles par un réseau de micro-ondes.

M. Gotlieb: Pour ce qui est de la télévision, c'est la meilleure façon de le faire, et de faire connaître les deux langues dans toutes les régions du Canada.

M. Chapman: A propos de la question au sujet du système russe. Ce système a été établi plus tôt. Les communications par satellites se sont développées en trois étapes. Il y a d'abord eu le concept telstar où il y a un grand nombre de satellites, 40 ou 50, qui sont en orbite à une hauteur de 2,000 ou 3,000 milles, et il y a des antennes au sol qui reçoivent les signaux émis par les satellites. Ce premier système a été mis à l'essai en 1962. Le deuxième système, celui des Russes, prévoit des satellites dont l'orbite est de 12 heures. Ces satellites se déplacent plus lentement et il en faut moins. Je crois que les Russes ont lancé six ou sept satellites MOLNIYA, car il faut plusieurs satellites en orbite pour que le système fonctionne.

M. Stafford: Autrement dit, les Russes ont plus d'un satellite.

M. Chapman: Oui, ils en ont six ou sept. Le troisième progrès technique, c'est le satellite synchrone qui est fixé à un endroit dans le ciel. Le satellite russe est à peu près à la même distance de la terre que le satellite synchrone quand il est au-dessus de la Russie, et ils l'utilisent; puis il se rapproche de la terre, de l'autre côté. La grande différence entre ces deux systèmes, c'est le genre de stations au sol. Le système russe nécessite une antenne mobile, qui suit le satellite; il faut des opérateurs, et des installations au sol.

M. Perrault: Vont-ils changer de système?

[Text]

Mr. Chapman: The Russians have said that they are going to go into the synchronous satellite in due course of time. It is involved also in the international telecommunications conference which is going on now. However, when you consider whether to build a Russian system or a synchronous system, you have to calculate the cost of the whole thing—how many satellites you need, the ground stations and what they will cost. When one does this, one concludes that the cost of a synchronous satellite system is much less when you have a large number of ground stations. The large ground stations are perhaps more appropriate in the U.S.S.R. because their communities are larger. They have cities of 50,000 and 100,000 scattered through the North and these are being served by their present system. We have a much larger number of communities where there are 500 or 1,000 people, so that the cost that we can afford to put into a ground station is very much less, and we need a much larger number of them. These cost factors lead you to conclude that the most economical system is the synchronous system.

Mr. Stafford: So under this system then the CBC, for instance, would rent a channel for so much an hour, the government would pay for the satellite and the government would also pay the rent for the CBC. Is that right?

The Chairman: I have on a supplementary Mr. Mongrain, Mr. Schreyer and then Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, is this satellite going to be a 100 per cent Canadian venture? I am speaking of engineering, construction, component parts and launching.

Mr. Gotlieb: Je vais demander à M. Bergeron de vous répondre.

Mr. Bergeron: Nous prévoyons aujourd'hui, que le satellite canadien sera fabriqué et conçu autant que possible au Canada. Ceci ne veut pas nécessairement dire que tous les éléments du satellite seront fabriqués chez nous. Nous devons nous procurer certains éléments à l'étranger, soit aux États-Unis, soit en Europe. Mais, dans une proportion d'environ 60 à 70 p. 100, le contenu du satellite sera canadien.

Mr. Mongrain: Qu'en est-il du génie maintenant?

Mr. Bergeron: Le génie sera entièrement canadien.

Mr. Perrault: Will Canadian companies have full opportunity to bid on the components?

[Interpretation]

M. Chapman: Les Russes ont dit qu'ils songeaient à adopter le système du satellite synchrone en temps et lieu. Cela se dégage aussi de la conférence internationale sur les télécommunications actuellement en cours. Mais qu'on construise un système russe ou un système synchrone, il faut calculer le coût de l'ensemble, combien il faudra de satellites, le coût des stations au sol, combien il en faudra. Lorsqu'on fait ces calculs, il faut tenir compte du fait qu'un système de satellites synchrones coûte bien moins cher quand les stations au sol sont plus nombreuses. Les vastes stations au sol conviennent peut-être plus à la Russie où les localités sont plus vastes. Il y a des villes de 50,000 et de 100,000 habitants dispersées dans le Grand Nord et que le système actuel dessert. Nous avons beaucoup plus de localités de 500 ou 1,000 habitants, de sorte que le coût de nos stations au sol doit être bien moins élevé, mais leur nombre beaucoup plus élevé. Ces faits nous portent à croire que le système le plus économique est le système synchrone.

M. Stafford: En vertu de ce système, Radio-Canada, par exemple, louerait un canal pour tant l'heure, le gouvernement paierait pour le satellite et paierait aussi le loyer de la société Radio-Canada, n'est-ce pas?

Le président: MM. Mongrain, Schreyer et Macquarrie ont des questions supplémentaires à poser.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, ce satellite va-t-il être un projet entièrement canadien? Je parle du génie, de la construction des pièces, du lancement, etc.

Mr. Gotlieb: I will ask Mr. Bergeron to give you an answer to that.

Mr. Bergeron: Right now we expect the Canadian satellite to be designed and built in Canada as much as possible. This does not necessarily mean that all the components of the satellite will be built here. We will have to purchase certain components from either the United States or certain European countries. However, the content of the satellite will be about 60 to 70 per cent Canadian.

Mr. Mongrain: What about the engineering?

Mr. Bergeron: The engineering will entirely be Canadian.

M. Perrault: Les compagnies canadiennes auront-elles l'occasion de soumissionner pour les parties?

[Texte]

Mr. Mongrain: Is it going to be launched over here?

Mr. Gotlieb: No. One of the things that this country cannot provide is the kind of launcher that will get a satellite into orbit.

Mr. Mongrain: What is the cost of a launching operation for a satellite like that?

Mr. Gotlieb: It depends on the size of the satellite. For instance, if you were launching a 1150 an Intelsat IV satellite, a single launch would cost perhaps $13 or $14 million.

Mr. Perrault: What happens if it falls back on the pad? Will Lloyd's of London insure for such a disaster.

Mr. Gotlieb: There is another point on that, sir. With the bigger launches the risks are also higher. In respect of the 6 transponder satellite that we are planning to build, this would probably cost about $5 million for a launch, and so far as the cost of insurance is concerned one can pretty well determine what the chances are of a misfire. These do happen. INTELSAT III had a misfire. In your costing you can try to build in—and this will be part of the economic costing—a risk of error.

Mr. Perrault: There is no such thing as rocket insurance or satellite insurance, is there?

Mr. Gotlieb: Well there are two ways of writing rocket insurance. You can find it in your own cost basis, or you could try to get Lloyd's of London to give you a rocket insurance policy. My guess is that the better way would be to do it in your actual analysis of cost, by building in the error.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Gotlieb, you put forward a figure of about $5 million as being the launching cost. Is this based on any estimates you have received from the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration?

Mr. Gotlieb: It is based on our own knowledge, sir, of the kind of rockets that have launched Canadian and other satellites in the past. We have had three satellites, the Alouettes and ISIS, that have been launched by NASA in the United States and it is not difficult to get information on these figures. These are publicly available.

Mr. Perrault: Where will this satellite be launched from; Florida or from Vandenberg in California?

[Interprétation]

M. Mongrain: Va-t-on le lancer d'ici?

M. Gotlieb: Non, car nous ne pouvons pas fournir la fusée qui peut mettre le satellite en orbite.

M. Mongrain: Combien coûte la mise en orbite d'un tel satellite?

M. Gotlieb: Cela dépend de la dimension du satellite. Par exemple, si nous lançons un INTELSAT IV, cela coûterait peut-être 13 ou 14 millions de dollars.

M. Perrault: Qu'arrive-t-il si le satellite retombe après le décollage? Est-ce qu'on peut s'assurer auprès de la compagnie Lloyd's de Londres?

M. Gotlieb: J'ai une autre question à ce sujet, monsieur. Plus les satellites sont gros, plus les risques sont grands. Au sujet du satellite à six transmetteurs qu'on a l'intention de construire, cela coûterait environ 5 millions de dollars. Quant au coût de l'assurance, il est possible de déterminer quelles sont les possibilités d'un échec. Il y a un élément de risque. Lorsqu'on établit le coût il faut tenir compte de ces éléments.

M. Perrault: Il n'y a pas d'assurance-satellites, ou d'assurance-fusées, n'est-ce pas?

M. Gotlieb: Il y a deux façons de s'assurer. Vous pouvez toujours demander à Lloyd's de Londres de vous assurer ou de l'inclure dans vos propres calculs des coûts. Selon moi, cette dernière solution est préférable.

Le président: Monsieur Schreyer.

M. Schreyer: Vous avez dit qu'un lancement coûterait cinq millions de dollars. Est-ce que ce chiffre est fondé sur les évaluations établies par la NASA?

M. Gotlieb: Nous nous fondons sur nos propres connaissances, le coût des lancements des satellites canadiens et autres jusqu'ici. Il y a eu des satellites Alouette et ISIS qui ont été lancés par la NASA aux États-Unis et il n'est pas difficile d'obtenir des renseignements sur ces chiffres. Ils sont disponibles au public.

M. Perrault: D'où ce satellite sera-t-il lancé, de Floride ou de Californie?

[Text]

Mr. Gottlieb: I do not think I can give you that kind of detail now, sir.

Mr. Schreyer: That was not really my supplementary. I wanted to ask a supplementary regarding parking orbits. We are told that unless we move rather quickly there is a prospect that we may not be able to get a parking orbit allocated. I wanted ask for a frank opinion of whether this is not a bit farfetched, as there are only about 14 or 15 countries that have the capability for construction and launching of a satellite. Therefore, is there all that much crowding?

Mr. Gottlieb: I think it has to be looked at from a double aspect. On the one hand, prime parking space, for example—the kind of space that is going to give you maximum benefit for your cost. Now, there I do not think we can be too easy or too lax about our attitude towards obtaining that kind of parking space. The country is rooted in a certain place and that dictates largely, taking into account its efficiency and effectiveness, the relationship between your ground and your space segments.

Second, it is true that this technology today is not widely shared—and Dr. Chapman could do this much better than I—but I do not think one can assume that 15 or 20 years from now, or even less, this technology will be altogether rare. There may be a number of countries that will share it. We could project it now for countries like Japan, Germany, France, Italy, and as one goes on there will be more countries that have this technology.

Third, sir, I think that the INTELSAT system may well be a rapidly expanding system. It has been in the past. It has grown very, very greatly. Now they are planning to put up, as was mentioned earlier, for twelve transponder satellites. This is the fourth generation for INTELSAT. There will be a fifth generation, quite possibly. It will be based on a similar technology, but as the uses of satellites grow—and there will be a tremendous expansion, for example, in the field of data transmissions internationally, overseas, across the oceans, and in the Western hemisphere—there may be greatly increased requirements for INTELSAT to space and to locate satellites.

• 1155

Mr. Schreyer: But is it not true that in order to get maximum benefits for Canada, our satellite would have to be allocated an orbit parking somewhere between 95 and 100 degrees of longitude? In there you have about five or six different possible orbit parking places; therefore, there is quite a bit to choose from.

[Interpretation]

M. Gottlieb: Je ne puis vous fournir ces détails en ce moment.

M. Schreyer: Ce n'était pas ma question supplémentaire. Je voudrais simplement vous poser une question supplémentaire au sujet des orbites autorisées. On m'a laissé à entendre qu'à moins de procéder rapidement, nous ne pourrions pas obtenir une orbite. Je me demande si ce n'est pas aller un peu loin, puisqu'il n'y a que treize ou quatorze pays qui peuvent lancer des satellites. Est-ce qu'il y a vraiment un tel encombrement?

M. Gottlieb: Il faut le considérer à deux points de vue. D'abord il y a la meilleure orbite, celle qui vous donnera le plus d'avantages. Je ne crois pas que nous puissions nous permettre d'être trop relâchés lorsqu'il s'agit d'obtenir le meilleur espace possible. Notre pays est situé dans un endroit donné, et il faut pouvoir profiter au maximum, compte tenu de l'efficacité, du rapport entre la situation géographique et l'espace.

Il est vrai que de nos jours, la technologie n'est pas tellement partagée, mais je ne crois pas qu'on puisse en conclure que d'ici quinze ou vingt ans, ou plus tôt, cette technologie restera toujours introuvable. Je crois qu'il y aura d'autres pays qui seront prêts à partager; je pense à l'Allemagne, le Japon, la France, et ainsi, il y aura de plus en plus de pays qui disposeront des connaissances techniques nécessaires.

Je crois que le système Intelsat va se répandre rapidement, comme par le passé. On se propose à l'heure actuelle de mettre quatre satellites à douze transmetteurs. C'est la quatrième génération d'Intelsat. Il y aura probablement une cinquième génération fondée sur la même technique, mais plus on se servira de satellites, et il y aura certainement une expansion dans le domaine des transmissions de données sur le plan international, outre-mer ou dans l'hémisphère occidental. Les exigences d'Intelsat quant à l'allocation des orbites seront beaucoup plus sévères.

M. Schreyer: N'est-il pas vrai qu'afin d'obtenir le plus d'avantages pour le Canada, nos satellites devraient être localisés entre 95 et 100 degrés de longitude? Et que cet espace offre cinq ou six orbites distinctes de sorte qu'on a l'embaras du choix.

[Texte]

Mr. Gottlieb: There is the United States that would be interested in location. There is the possibility of a western hemisphere satellite systems, a Latin American satellite system provided by INTELSAT. I would not present this as an issue where there is a real danger in the immediate future, in the next few years, but I do think that if we do not move we cannot feel confident that it will be there.

There are estimates, for example, that by 1982 there may be as many as 130 synchronous satellites in orbit. Then there are uses of satellites for other systems. For example, there are uses of satellites for defence and there are uses of satellites for particular space applications which we will be developing such as meteorology, navigation and direct broadcasting.

The really fundamentally significant thing about space research I think is the potential applications of the use of telecommunications in space for terrestrial benefits. We are at the threshold now. This is a threshold situation. There is no problem at the moment if we move expeditiously, but 10 years from now it would take I think a lot of courage to say what the situation will be.

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Macquarrie?

Mr. Macquarrie: Assuming that the Americans will do the launching and considering too that some of the component parts will be U.S. manufacture, I draw attention to a statement made by Mr. Booth Matthews, the Vice President of COMSAT, a man of eminence in this. He has suggested that Canada would save millions and millions of dollars if its communications satellite was a project jointly with the United States. Do you have an estimate of how many millions we would be saving by a full-fledged co-operative venture with the United States?

Mr. Gottlieb: Perhaps I could just make a general remark and then ask Mr. Bergeron to add to it. We have looked at this question of cost very carefully and you have mentioned earlier, sir, that it has been eight months or so since government policy was announced. Perhaps I could say that we are really now in the very final stages of determining all the fundamental decisions, design, parameters, configuration of this system, and one of the things that we have gone into in the greatest possible detail has been the relative cost factors, taking into consideration where you get your satellite or parts of it, and this type of thing.

Basing ourselves on Canadian requirements—that is to say, on what our user require-

[Interprétation]

M. Gottlieb: Il y a les États-Unis qui sont intéressés. Il se peut également qu'on veuille établir un système de satellites pour l'hémisphère occidental ou qu'Intelsat veuille desservir l'Amérique latine. Je ne crois pas qu'il s'agisse d'un véritable danger pour l'immédiat. Mais je crois que si nous ne faisons rien, nous ne pouvons pas compter les obtenir.

Selon certaines prévisions, il se peut qu'en 1982, il y ait plus de 130 satellites synchronisés en orbite. Il y a les autres systèmes de satellites. On se sert parfois de satellites à des fins de défense, on se sert de satellites pour d'autres fins, la météorologie, la navigation, la diffusion en direct.

Je crois que le facteur le plus important dans la recherche spatiale, c'est l'application pratique des communications spatiales. Nous n'en sommes qu'au seuil. Il n'y a pas de problèmes pour l'instant, mais il est important d'agir rapidement. Je crois qu'il faudrait beaucoup de courage pour tenter de prédire quelle sera la situation dans les dix ans.

M. Schreyer: Merci.

Le président: Monsieur Macquarrie.

M. Macquarrie: Si les américains font le lancement du satellite, et je crois également que certaines pièces seront importées des États-Unis, je voudrais attirer votre attention à une déclaration de M. Booth Matthews, vice-président de CONSAT et qui s'y connaît.

Il a dit que le Canada épargnerait des millions de dollars, si son satellite de communication était un projet entrepris conjointement avec les États-Unis. Savez-vous combien de millions de dollars nous pourrions épargner en collaborant avec les États-Unis?

M. Gottlieb: Je vais faire un commentaire général et je demanderai à M. Bergeron de compléter. Nous avons étudié cette question très attentivement. Vous avez dit plus tôt qu'il s'est écoulé huit mois depuis qu'on a annoncé la politique gouvernementale. Je puis dire que nous en sommes maintenant à la dernière étape des décisions fondamentales, comme la conception, les paramètres et à la configuration du système. Une des questions que nous avons étudiées en détail c'est le facteur des coûts relatifs compte tenu de l'endroit où on se procure le satellite, les pièces et ainsi de suite.

A partir des besoins canadiens, c'est-à-dire des besoins des utilisateurs, et de la nécessité

ments are—and basing ourselves on the need to develop a full data system—that is to say a system where you can transmit data which means you are going to need two satellites, because there is a problem they call sun transit and for absolutely reliable data transmission you will need two satellites in different situations—and taking into consideration our needs, specifically our growth which is a different thing from the growth of the United States and their needs, and also taking into consideration our projected use of the system for data, we have determined that the economics favour the Canadian six transponder satellite system configuration. Perhaps I could ask Mr. Bergeron to add anything that seems necessary.

Mr. Bergeron: I do not think I can add anything very significant. We have costed these alternatives from the point of view of trying to point out what the cost to the Canadian economy would be with regard to procurement of spacecraft. Mr. Matthews of COMSAT is right if we needed a 12-channel satellite by 1972 and if we could use that satellite fully, but what we anticipate is that if we put a 12-channel satellite up there in 1972 probably we would use only 4, 5 or 6 channels and we would have "X" number of channels idle. Things do come cheaper by the dozen provided you need the dozen, and what we have realized is that we do not need the dozen.

• 1220

Mr. Gotlieb: At that moment of time, and then if you wanted to get your necessary reliability you need a second 12 so you have a capacity of 24 channels. Well, this country at present is operating on a long-haul capacity of four or five channels from coast to coast for the total telecommunication requirements of Canada.

Mr. Macquarrie: But what is so iniquitous or so unhealthful about the unused channels? I think if I wanted a six-room house and could get a fifteen-room one for a lower rate I would not be so upset.

Mr. Bergeron: It would not be a lower rent; it would be a higher rent but your price per room could look lower on paper.

Mr. Gotlieb: You would pay more for the house, sir—you would pay a higher rent.

Mr. Macquarrie: He seems to think that our needs would be met quite well at a cheaper de mettre au point un système complet de données, c'est-à-dire un système où l'on transmettrait des données au moyen de deux satellites, car il y a un problème du passage sur le disque du soleil qui fait que pour une transmission plus sûre il faut deux satellites en deux endroits différents, et donc, à partir de nos besoins, l'expansion du Canada qui est bien différente de celle des États-Unis et compte tenu du fait que nous utilisons ce système pour la transmission de données. Nous croyons qu'il vaut mieux, au point de vue économique, entreprendre la création d'un système canadien de satellites à six transmetteurs. Peut-être que M. Bergeron pourrait compléter.

M. Bergeron: Je ne vois pas ce que je pourrais ajouter d'important à ce qui vient d'être dit. Nous avons étudié les différentes possibilités afin de déterminer quel serait le coût pour l'économie du Canada d'obtenir une fusée pour mettre le satellite en orbite. Et M. Matthews a raison, si nous avions besoin d'un satellite à douze canaux dès 1972 et que nous pouvions l'utiliser à plein, mais nous prévoyons que si nous allons mettre un tel satellite en orbite en 1972, nous n'en utiliserons probablement que cinq ou six canaux; alors nous aurions un certain nombre de canaux qui ne seraient pas utilisés. Il est vrai que c'est moins cher à la douzaine mais nous avons constaté que nous n'avions pas besoin d'une douzaine de canaux.

M. Gotlieb: A ce moment-là, et afin d'assurer un système sûr, il faut un second satellite, de sorte qu'on se retrouve avec vingt-quatre canaux. Le Canada utilise présentement quatre ou cinq canaux pour l'ensemble des télécommunications d'un océan à l'autre.

M. Macquarrie: Mais qu'est-ce qu'il y a de si mauvais au fait d'avoir des canaux qui ne sont pas utilisés? Si je pouvais utiliser une maison à 15 pièces pour moins cher qu'une maison à six pièces, je ne m'en ferais pas tant.

M. Bergeron: Non, le prix serait plus élevé, en fait mais sur papier, le prix par chambre pourrait sembler inférieur.

M. Gotlieb: La maison vous coûterait plus cher, monsieur, votre loyer serait plus élevé.

M. Macquarrie: Il semble croire que nous pourrions bien satisfaire à nos besoins en cost. He seems to know our needs and, of course, here I cannot make an adjudication.

Mr. Bergeron: We could go into all the details of these costs.

Mr. Perrault: Building costs go up in two years, though, speaking of houses and satellites.

Mr. Gotlieb: We are trying to waste absolutely no time, sir, in getting this bill.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler, on a new subject.

Mr. Osler: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wish to ask Mr. Gotlieb to explain a little further his role as the head of planning.

I see that you are in charge in the area of planning in this new ministry, and one of your duties will be to look after regulations. How will this function, relative to the CRTC, and so on?

Mr. Gotlieb: I am very glad to have an opportunity to answer that. I will not be head of planning. Basically, Dr. Chapman is Assistant Deputy Minister for Research, and that means for research in new systems development on the technical, scientific side.

Then there is Mr. Bergeron who has, in fact, responsibility for a double sort of aspect. One is for regulation, that is to say, for the general environment in which the carrier telecommunications exist and flourish, and, more specifically, for the stage where you have decided to create a new system and you are implementing it, or are about to implement it, either through a form of government assistance or through encouraging private enterprise to do it. This is another aspect that he will be looking after.

Thirdly, there is the function which is called planning, which you have mentioned. This relates to the second function, called regulation of the environment, and it also relates planning to the fundamental research.

The fundamental purpose of planning is to have a small dedicated group of individuals, perhaps three or four, whose responsibility is not to relate themselves directly to current operational problems, but to think in the long-term—20, 30, 40 or 50 years ahead—and to determine what kind of systems Canada might want to encourage; what kind of social needs we should be trying to meet; what kinds of benefits we want to receive from systems; and what are the dangers in new systems development.

payant moins cher. Il semble naturellement connaître nos besoins; là je ne peux pas passer de jugement.

M. Bergeron: Nous pourrions aller dans les détails de ces frais.

M. Perrault: Mais le coût de la construction monte en deux ans, qu'il s'agisse de maisons ou de satellites.

M. Gotlieb: Nous ne voulons pas perdre de temps et nous voulons obtenir ce Bill.

Le président: Monsieur Osler, sur un nouveau sujet.

M. Osler: Je désire demander à M. Gotlieb de nous expliquer davantage son rôle en tant que chef de la planification. Je vois que vous êtes chargé de la planification au nouveau ministère et l'une de vos fonctions sera de voir aux règlements. Comment cela fonctionnera-t-il par rapport à la CRTC etc.?

M. Gotlieb: Je suis heureux d'avoir à répondre à cette question. Je ne serai pas chargé de la planification. Essentiellement, M. Chapman est sous-ministre adjoint de la recherche, c'est-à-dire de la recherche dans le développement des nouveaux systèmes du côté technique et scientifique. Il y aura ensuite M. Bergeron qui couvre deux aspects, soit par exemple la réglementation du milieu général dans lequel l'utilisateur des communications vit et prospère, et, plus précisément, la réglementation du champ d'action dans lequel on a décidé de créer un nouveau système, qui est en voie de réalisation ou sur le point d'être réalisé, soit avec l'aide du gouvernement, soit en encourageant l'entreprise privée à le faire. Ceci est l'autre aspect dont il aura à s'occuper.

Ensuite, il y a aussi une autre section qui s'appelle la planification, que vous avez mentionnée. Cela a trait à la deuxième fonction appelée la réglementation du milieu qui sert aussi à établir un rapport entre la planification et la recherche fondamentale. Le but principal de la planification, c'est d'obtenir un groupe d'individus déterminés, un groupe restreint, 3 ou 4, qui sera chargé non pas de s'attaquer à des problèmes actuels, mais de prévoir des programmes à long terme, 20, 30, 40 ou 50 ans d'avance pour déterminer quel genre de système le Canada voudrait-il à ce moment-là. De quel système le Canada aurait-il besoin? Quels seront les besoins sociaux auxquels il faudra satisfaire? Quels sont les avantages que nous voudrions retirer du système? Quels sont les dangers que comporte le développement de nouveaux systèmes?

[Text]

Their work, if it is successful, is going to have real implications, both on the responsibility of the Assistant Deputy Minister for telecommunication regulations and on the responsibility of telecommunication research. They may overlap, but that will not be a bad thing, as we see it, because these will be different functions.

One will be dedicated to thinking that far ahead, and if there is a state of conflict that will be all the better because we think we should have fundamental examination of all these different viewpoints within the framework of the department.

• 1205

Ultimately, whatever they come up with—whatever dimension is introduced—is going to have a major impact on telecommunication regulations.

The point that the Minister made a short while ago, about setting up a special group in the next 18 months to deal with regulations, is really to make a major and rapid start in reviewing the total telecommunication environment, including all the systems that exist, all that are likely to come about, and what will be the impact of those systems on the health and the development of telecommunications and the country. In that context, the method of transmitting anything by cable, whether it be television or by other methods, will certainly be a part of that study.

Mr. Osler: Cable television, if I remember correctly, now comes under CRTC?

Mr. Gotlieb: Yes, in terms of the licensing for the broadcasters concerned. Our interest in cable systems is on the extent to which they may become systems for carrying all kinds of material, not merely for picking up a broadcast and bringing it into a private house.

Ultimately, for example—this is just a case in point—if you felt that there was a danger of over-exploitation or loss of the resource of the radio frequency spectrum, and, looking at it scientifically and in terms of proper communications facilities you felt this was a danger—I want to make clear that I am not saying that I really believe this to be a problem in Canada, but it may be in other countries—you may develop, or you may see economic, or technological factors which may have an effect on the development of other

[Interpretation]

Leur travail, s'il a du succès, aura des incidences réelles à la fois sur la responsabilité du sous-ministre adjoint, en ce qui a trait aux règlements sur les télécommunications, et, sur celle se rapportant aux recherches sur les communications. Il y aura peut-être un certain chevauchement en ce domaine mais cela à notre point de vue, ne sera pas une mauvaise chose puisque les fonctions seront différentes.

L'une s'occupera de penser un certain nombre d'années à l'avance et s'il se présente un conflit, je crois que ce sera bénéfique, parce que nous croyons que nous devrions faire une étude fondamentale de tous ces divers points de vue dans les cadres du ministère.

Finalement, quelle que soit la mesure proposée et les dimensions apportées, tout cela aura une influence très grande sur les règlements des télécommunications. Je sais que le ministre a parlé plus tôt d'établir un groupe spécial qui pendant 18 mois, par exemple, s'occuperait des règlements et qu'il désire véritablement effectuer un démarrage rapide et important destiné à l'étude de l'ensemble du milieu des télécommunications, y compris les systèmes en existence, et tous les systèmes qui sont appelés à faire leur apparition, et de l'incidence que ces systèmes produiront sur l'état et le développement des télécommunications et de notre pays. Et dans ce contexte, la méthode de transmission de quoi que ce soit par câble, qu'il s'agisse de la télévision ou de toute autre méthode, fera certainement partie de cette étude.

M. Osler: Si je me rappelle bien, la télévision par câble relève maintenant de la CRTC.

M. Gotlieb: Oui, en ce qui concerne l'obtention de permis pour les radiodiffuseurs concernés. Notre intérêt dans les systèmes de câbles c'est de voir jusqu'à quel point ils peuvent devenir des systèmes aptes à transmettre des éléments très divers, non seulement pour capter une émission et la retransmettre dans un foyer.

Un jour, par exemple, c'est justement le cas que nous discutons, si on prévoyait qu'il y avait danger de surexploitation ou de la perte des ressources du spectre des fréquences radio, et que, du point de vue scientifique, et en termes de bonnes installations de communication, on considérerait que cela présente un danger; je veux dire clairement que je ne prétend pas croire véritablement que c'est un problème au Canada, mais cela peut le devenir dans d'autres pays. Il peut se produire des cas où vous verrez peut-être des facteurs éco-systems that do not use the radio frequency spectrum, or which should have an impact on other systems.

Mr. Osler: May I use a couple of examples that I hope will invite you to make further comment? Suppose, a few years from now, you have a complete gadget in your house—the kind of thing that Alphonse Ouimet used to be very fond of talking about—to give you instant information so that there is no need for advertising as we know it today, because you can press a button and get honest consumer gradings of every conceivable type of thing and make up your own mind by just asking the right question into the machine. Presumably you will then be able to order things for delivery to your home by a land-line system, and can have something transmitted to you from a central library if you are trying to study Shakespeare, or how to build bridges, and so on.

Are you going to be interested in whether or not some entrepreneur is allowed to have control of that system in a particular area and fill it with advertising to make money on the side, as a newspaper does today when it transmits its news, or is that going to be the job of the CRTC? You see the area I am in?

Mr. Gotlieb: Yes; and perhaps I cannot comment too precisely on this question. Clearly, one of the things we will be trying to do here will be to review the possibilities, and the future, of ownership of systems; for example, should there be a monopolistic situation in such systems, or should there be competition? should broadcasters be able to be carriers in general; or should they be in the business of carrying data, as well?

Many of these questions and problems will, directly or indirectly, come before present regulatory agencies, including the CRTC, CTC and others, and they will be guided, no doubt, by policy considerations in the decisions they will make. These will be their decisions, and it is all going to go forward and go on, but we are looking at this in the long-term. Whatever kind of material or data become relevant, in terms of reviewing the total telecommunication environment, we will be looking into. This will simply be basing ourselves on the kind of data, decisions nomiques ou technologiques qui pourraient avoir des effets sur le développement d'autres systèmes qui n'utilisent pas le spectre des fréquences de radio ou qui devraient avoir une incidence sur d'autres systèmes.

M. Osler: Puis-je vous donner un ou deux exemples qui, je l'espère, vous inciteront à faire d'autres observations. Supposons que dans quelques années vous ayez dans votre foyer un attirail complet—comme aimait en parler M. Alphonse Ouimet—vous permettant de recevoir instantanément l'information de telle sorte que la publicité comme nous la connaissons aujourd'hui n'aurait plus sa place étant donné que vous pourriez appuyer sur un bouton pour obtenir d'honnêtes renseignements aux consommateurs sur tout ce qu'on peut imaginer et de prendre une décision en posant la bonne question à la machine. Il est à prévoir que vous pourrez commander des articles qui vous seront livrés à domicile par un système au sol et vous pouvez vous faire transmettre des renseignements d'une bibliothèque centrale, si vous vous mettez à l'étude de Shakespeare ou si vous voulez savoir comment construire un pont. Est-ce que vous êtes intéressés à savoir si oui ou non certains entrepreneurs ont le droit d'avoir un contrôle de ce système dans ce domaine en particulier et de le bourrer de publicité pour en tirer des profits supplémentaires, comme le font aujourd'hui les journaux en même temps qu'ils publient l'information, ou sera-ce là le rôle du CRTC? Vous me suivez?

M. Gotlieb: Oui. Je ne peux pas faire d'observations précises sur la question, je crois qu'une des choses que nous allons essayer de faire, clairement, ici, c'est certainement d'étudier les possibilités et comment s'établira dans l'avenir la propriété des systèmes. Est-ce qu'il devrait y avoir une situation de monopole, par exemple dans de tels systèmes, ou bien est-ce qu'il devrait exister de la concurrence? Est-ce que les radiodiffuseurs devraient être des utilisateurs généraux ou bien devraient-ils s'occuper aussi de transmettre des données?

Bon nombre de ces problèmes seront soumis directement ou indirectement à des organismes régulateurs, y compris le CRTC et d'autres. Ils seront sans doute guidés par des directives dans leurs décisions. Ces décisions seront prises et tout progressera et continuera; mais c'est à long terme que nous considérons la question. Nous étudierons quelle sorte de ressources ou de données sont significatives pour l'étude de l'ensemble du champ des télécommunications. Nous nous fonderons simplement sur les décisions prises selon des données dans le passé et qui seront prises that have been made in the past and will be made, and ultimately will form part of the general background for our total review, which we would hope to carry out, and will carry out, in conjunction with all these agencies themselves.

Mr. Osler: I am sorry to seem a little dense on this, but let us take a specific place, such as Winnipeg.

If somebody wants to put in a cable system today they put in a cable system and presumably they go to CRTC. It is used exclusively for television although it could be used for almost anything. That type of thing will be used for almost anything in the future when receiving stations are in every home.

Where would your regulatory function be so different from the function that—

• 1210

Mr. Gotlieb: We will not have a regulatory function, sir. We are an arm of the government to develop policy. We will be developing and reviewing the legislation in terms of what appears to be its adequacy, but we will not be a regulator in most of these aspects, although perhaps in some; for example, in the management of the radio frequency spectrum we have a regulatory role.

Essentially, however, this is an arm of government which is concerned with the future development of policy which, when it is developed, may find expression in a number of ways through the existing regulatory agencies, or through a new regulatory agency. But we are policy-oriented, responsible to the government, and not applying existing laws and regulations as a regulatory agency, but simply looking forward in the long run, as the carriers are doing, as other interests are doing in this country, and as I think any government should be doing in determining what are the problems that are recurring.

For example, if you look at the kind of thing that was done in the United States in this Task Force which we have never seen—and it is a document that has not been brought forward—it is simply the kind of function, looking at the enormously quick changes in technology, and the implication of this technological change, or the kind of responsibility which says, "What are the implications?"; just review and search. Yet, ultimately, if this information is provided in appropriate form to the government, it may consider it and decide whether or not policy should be changed: whether you should have a commission to deal with it is another problem which has not even been dealt with; whether the radio frequency spectrum should be dealt with separately, or in a different ensuite, qui formeront éventuellement une partie des caractères généraux sur lesquels reposera l'ensemble de l'étude que nous pouvons faire et que nous ferons, en collaboration avec tous ces organismes eux-mêmes.

M. Osler: Je regrette d'être un peu lent à comprendre, mais prenons un endroit spécifique comme Winnipeg. Si quelqu'un veut installer un système de câbles, ils l'installent et ensuite ils vont voir le CRTC. Et cela est utilisé exclusivement pour la télévision, mais ça pourrait être utilisé pour pratiquement n'importe quoi. Ce genre d'installation servira à presque n'importe quoi dans l'avenir quand tous les foyers auront des postes récepteurs. Comment votre rôle régulateur sera-t-il tellement différent du rôle que...

M. Gotlieb: Nous n'avons pas de fonction régulatrice. Nous sommes un outil du gouvernement aux fins d'établir des politiques. Nous allons élaborer et réviser des lois sur ce que nous semble devoir être, mais nous ne serons pas un organisme régulateur concernant la plupart de ces aspects. Par exemple, dans la gestion du spectre des fréquences de radio nous avons un rôle régulateur. Essentiellement, nous sommes une branche de gouvernement qui s'intéresse à la mise au point d'une politique qui, lorsqu'elle sera définie, pourra s'exprimer de différentes façons, en fonction de règlements qui existent déjà, ou en fonction de règlements provenant d'un organisme qui pourrait être établi dans l'avenir. Mais notre travail est surtout orienté vers la politique, nous sommes responsables devant le gouvernement et nous n'appliquons pas des lois existantes ou des règlements établis; nous travaillons à long terme, comme le font les postiers et comme le font les autres intérêts de ce pays et comme chaque gouvernement devrait le faire pour connaître ses problèmes. Par exemple, si nous regardons les choses qui ont été faites aux États-Unis par ce service et que nous n'avons jamais vues, et c'est un document qui n'a pas reçu de publicité, c'est simplement le type de fonction, regarder les immenses changements de la technique et l'implication de ces changements technologiques, ou le genre de responsabilité qui dit «Quelles sont les implications?»; il faut simplement étudier et chercher. Enfin, si ces renseignements sont fournis au gouvernement sous une forme appropriée, il peut les étudier et décider s'il faut ou non changer la politique, s'il faut créer une commission en conséquence, c'est un autre problème qui n'a pas encore été étudié; si le spectre des fréquences radiophoniques doit être étudié séparément vay. There are any number of problems. But his is for the future, where they will be looking at problems, national and international, which may not even be thought about today.

Mr. Osler: I am not against regulation per se if there is a reason for it, but what I am worried about is that you could have a potential clash here, like you have had in the past which CBC and the BBG, for instance. You might have the CRTC say: "Yes, you can go ahead and do such and such" and you say, No, we have not got anything definite, but our boffins tell us that they think it looks as if this is going to be a poor thing to do because 10 years from now, we will be sorry we did it. When you get into that kind of bind, who blows the whistle?

Mr. Gotlieb: Their decisions are part of our data. We simply will be reviewing and studying the situation as it is and as it appears to be, and this will have, and can have no effect whatsoever on the proper exercise by existing regulatory commissions of their authority. I do not deny that it would be undesirable. I agree it would be undesirable to have this kind of conflict. I think it would be unwise. It is not anywhere remotely within our intention or wish that this should happen. We are not orientated towards the philosophy of regulation, and we are not orientated against it. We regard it as purely a functional exercise and I hope that it will stay that way. I am sure it will.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer on a supplementary.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, this is the last line of questioning for me. I would like to ask Mr. Gotlieb whether, of all the functions that our Department is taking over from the COT, there is included the function of regulating all users of electronic equipment in the communications industry?

Mr. Gotlieb: I would like to ask Mr. Nixon whether he would reply specifically to that question?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, sir, on all radio transmitting and receiving functions. When you use the term "electronic", of course, this becomes somewhat broader.

Mr. Schreyer: Well, I have the broader field in mind.

Mr. Nixon: The Radio Act is the source of the Minister's authority in this respect, and therefore he must, of course, remain within the confines of the Radio Act; and this deals with radio equipment.

[Interprétation]

ou d'une façon différente. Il y a de nombreux problèmes. Mais c'est pour l'avenir, lorsqu'on étudiera des problèmes, nationaux et internationaux, dont on a aucune idée aujourd'hui.

M. Osler: Je ne suis pas contre les règlements, en tant que tels, s'ils sont justifiés. Mais est-ce qu'il ne peut pas y avoir certains problèmes comme il y a eu, autrefois, avec Radio-Canada et le Bureau des gouverneurs. Il se pourrait que le CRTC dise: «Oui, allez-y, faites ceci et cela» et vous dites: «Non, nous n'ayons rien de définitif, mais nos experts nous disent qu'ils pensent qu'à leur avis, dans dix ans, cela ne vaudra plus rien et nous regretterons de l'avoir fait.» Lorsqu'on rencontre ce genre d'opposition, qui lance le signal d'alarme?

M. Gotlieb: Leurs décisions font partie de nos données. Nous étudions la situation telle qu'elle est ou semble être et cela n'aura, et ne peut avoir, aucun effet sur le fonctionnement des commissions existantes et leur autorité. Je ne nie pas que ce ne serait pas souhaitable. Je pense qu'il ne serait pas souhaitable d'avoir ce genre de conflit. Je pense que ce ne serait pas adroit. Il n'est absolument pas dans nos intentions que cela arrive. Nous ne sommes pas orientés vers une philosophie de la réglementation. Nous ne la considérons que comme un exercice fonctionnel et j'espère que cela restera ainsi. Je suis sûr que ça le restera.

Le président: M. Schreyer, question supplémentaire.

M. Schreyer: J'aurais une dernière question à poser à M. Gotlieb. Est-ce que dans toutes les fonctions que votre ministère, prend au ministère des transports sont comprises les fonctions de réglementer tous les utilisateurs d'appareils électroniques dans le domaine des télécommunications?

M. Gotlieb: Je vais demander à M. Nixon s'il ne veut pas répondre lui-même à cette question.

M. Nixon: Tous les appareils de radio et de télévision tombent sous notre juridiction. Lorsque vous utilisez le mot «électronique», c'est plus général.

M. Schreyer: C'est le sens général qui m'intéresse.

M. Nixon: Eh bien, l'autorité du ministre émane de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion, il doit donc rester dans les limites de la Loi et cela comprend l'équipement radiophonique.

[Text]

Mr. Schreyer: I had in mind, sir, all users of broadcasting and telecommunication equipment. Will they be regulated now by this Department of Communications?

• 1215

Mr. Nixon: All of the technical aspects of broadcasting do fall under the Minister's jurisdiction pursuant to the Radio Act. For example...

Mr. Gotlieb: It is under federal jurisdiction. There may be areas which would be beyond federal jurisdiction, but to the extent that federal jurisdiction, which is based primarily on the Radio Act and on the emission of radio waves, and this method primarily, although not exclusively necessarily but based on this...

Mr. Schreyer: Allow me to be a little more specific. In the past 18 months I detect that in the United States there has been growing concern about the use of electronic equipment in the communications industry in so far as it has a potential effect on public health and safety. Will this new Department involve itself in detail with testing and licensing procedures to make sure that safety standards are tightened up so as to better protect public health and safety from possible damage by electronic equipment?

Mr. Gotlieb: If I could make a general comment and perhaps Dr. Chapman has something to add on this. We are responsible for systems development and for the regulation and it therefore follows that if there are aspects of such systems which are a danger to the public, whether from a health, social or any other point of view, we will be concerned about it.

It does not mean that we will be operationally involved in determining, let us say, health research, but it would be a concern, I believe, of my Minister and this Department and we would be concerned to ensure that that danger is taken into consideration in a systems development, and that if research needs to be done, that it is done either in the proper place in the Government of Canada, and the proper department, or that it is done somewhere else, but that it is done. So, we would be very much concerned about that.

Mr. Schreyer: Let me give you an even more specific example. During U.S. Senate committee hearings, it was stated by experts that in the field of electrical engineers et cetera, that the present safety standards which

[Interpretation]

M. Schreyer: Je pensais, monsieur, à tous les utilisateurs d'appareils de radiodiffusion et de télécommunication; est-ce qu'ils seront régis maintenant par le nouveau ministère de Télécommunication?

M. Nixon: Tous les aspects techniques de la radiodiffusion relèvent de la juridiction du ministre en vertu de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion. Par exemple...

M. Gotlieb: C'est sous la juridiction fédérale. Il y a peut-être des domaines qui échappent à la juridiction fédérale, mais celle-ci est basée surtout sur la Loi sur la radiodiffusion fédérale, peut-être pas exclusivement...

M. Schreyer: Permettez-moi d'être plus précis: Au cours des dix-huit derniers mois, je remarque qu'aux États-Unis, on s'inquiète de plus en plus de l'utilisation d'appareils électroniques dans l'industrie de la télécommunication, d'appareils qui ont des effets potentiels sur la sécurité et la santé du public. Je me demande si le nouveau ministère s'intéressera, se penchera en détail sur la vérification et la réglementation de ces appareils, pour s'assurer que des normes protégeront la santé et la sécurité du public des dangers possibles de notre équipement électronique.

M. Gotlieb: Je pourrais faire certains commentaires généraux auxquels le Dr. Chapman pourra peut-être ajouter quelque chose. Nous avons la responsabilité de l'élaboration du système de la réglementation. S'il y a des aspects d'un tel système qui sont dangereux pour le public, que ce soit au point de vue social, ou au point de vue de la santé, nous nous y intéresserons.

Cela ne veut pas dire que nous ferons de la recherche médicale sur le sujet, mais nous nous inquiéterons de cela. Le ministre et le ministère s'intéresseront à cette question, et nous verrons à ce que le danger soit éliminé. Nous veillerons à ce que la recherche soit faite par l'organisme intéressé. Nous nous intéressons énormément à cette question.

M. Schreyer: Je vais vous donner un exemple encore plus précis. Au cours d'une audience d'un comité du Sénat américain, des experts dans le domaine, des ingénieurs dans l'électricité, ont déclaré que les normes also apply in Canada, I understand, where 10 milliwatts per square centimetre for example, is the present standard used to determine whether or not a given level of energy is dangerous, is now about 10 or 15 years old and may very well be inadequate. It was also stated that microwave energy, as used in the communications industry, may have non-thermal ill effects on human tissue, animal tissue, but no-one knew with certainty and so they are undertaking almost a crash program of research. Will this Department be concerning itself with that same kind of thing?

Mr. Nixon: I think we would be very much concerned, of course. I must add that we certainly will be looking into those matters in conjunction with the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Gotlieb: You can develop a system and it can do wonderful things, but if the system is bad for human health, if the system is going to undermine man's mind, if it is going to destroy the fabric of our society, then you are going to want to know that. And if we do not do something about that, we are not doing our job.

Mr. Schreyer: Finally, could I ask this: do we have at the present time, in progress, a research program trying to determine the limits of microwave energy emission in its potential effect on public health and safety? For example, in the Soviet Union, we understand that the safety standard they have set for electromagnetic energy emission is 1/1000 of the standard set in North America, and I am wondering with the differential of this magnitude how we can afford to be complacent about our standards?

The Chairman: Dr. Chapman?

Dr. Chapman: We can practise what we have done in the past which has been to examine the situation that comes up when a particular frequency is going to be used at a certain power level for a particular purpose. We have examined the question of whether a particular use is dangerous and what the limitations might be.

In our communication research centre over the past 15 years we have examined each situation as it came up to find out what the dangers would be. There are dangers in dif-actuelles de sécurité, qui s'appliquent également au Canada, étaient de dix milliwatts par centimètre carré, cette norme actuellement utilisée pour déterminer si oui ou non un certain niveau d'énergie est dangereux ou non, existe maintenant depuis dix ou quinze ans, et elle pourrait bien être inadéquate. On a déclaré aussi que l'énergie micro-onde, utilisée dans l'énergie des télécommunications, peut avoir des effets non-thermiques nocifs, sur les tissus animaux et humains. Mais personne ne sait avec exactitude avant que ne soit entrepris un programme de recherche. Je me demande si le présent ministère ferait le même genre d'enquête.

M. Nixon: Évidemment, nous nous intéresserions énormément à cette question. Je pense que nous étudierions ces questions avec le ministère de la Santé et du Bien-être social, si cela se présente.

M. Gotlieb: Vous pouvez mettre au point un système qui peut faire de bonnes choses, mais si ce système est mauvais pour la santé mentale et physique des individus, ou détruire la société, eh bien, nous devrons, à ce moment-là, nous attaquer à la tâche de régler ce problème.

M. Schreyer: Pourrais-je demander, finalement, avons-nous, à l'heure actuelle, un programme de recherche qui vise à déterminer les limites de l'émission d'énergie micro-ondes dans ses effets sur la santé et la sécurité du public? Par exemple, en Union Soviétique, d'après ce que nous savons, les normes de sécurité qui ont été établies pour l'énergie électro-magnétique, c'est un millièème de ce qui a été établi comme norme ici. Alors, je me demande comment il se fait qu'il peut exister une différence de cette grandeur! Comment pouvons-nous être aussi négligent à propos de nos normes?

Le président: Monsieur Chapman?

M. Chapman: En fait, ce que nous avons fait dans le passé, c'est d'examiner, d'étudier les situations précises qui nous sont soumises lorsque l'on doit utiliser une certaine fréquence à un certain niveau de puissance pour une fin, ou un domaine particulier. Nous examinons pour voir si cette utilisation particulière sera dangereuse, quelles seront ses limitations.

Dans notre centre des recherches, au cours des quinze dernières années, nous avons étudié chacune des situations pour voir quels seraient les dangers. Les dangers à différents ferent respects. For example, you can detonate a dynamite cap at some distance from a radio transmitter and that represents another form of danger to health besides the one of radio frequency heating.

I am reasonably confident myself that in any of the uses of radio that we have in Canada at the present time, we have enough information to know if they are dangerous. We have done research, and we are aware of research which has been done elsewhere on any of the particular problems which come up.

But you cannot cover the complete waterfront and all possibilities, everything that might happen for any kind of application anywhere in the world. With our limited resources we have to deal with specific cases, and where there is a situation which might be a hazard, examine that situation and satisfy yourself as to what safety precautions are necessary to safeguard the Canadian public against that particular use. That we have done in the past, and will continue to do so. It is not only the responsibility of the Department of Communications in this respect but also National Health and Welfare and the two departments will work together in this area.

The Chairman: Mr. de Bané.

M. De Bané: Actuellement, quel est le nombre des fonctionnaires de ce nouveau ministère?

M. Gotlieb: Pour la fin de cette année, nous sommes autorisés à engager 1,307 années-hommes. Pour l'année prochaine, nous espérons avoir 1,339 années-hommes.

Le nombre autorisé pour cette année est 1307.

Mr. De Bané: I understand that today on the 6th of March the department...

M. Gotlieb: Ceci est le nombre d'années-hommes pour aujourd'hui, mais le nombre d'employés au 30 septembre, date que nous avons ici, était de 1,073. Actuellement, nous recherchons du personnel pour notre nouveau ministère.

We have 1,073 as of September 30, 1968. Do we have anything more recent than that? The latest figure I have with me is for the beginning of October when we had 1,073 employees.

Mr. De Bané: Have you hired any people since October.

Mr. Gotlieb: Yes, we have certainly hired since October. We are closer to the total points de vue. Par exemple: vous pouvez faire éclater un bâton de dynamite à distance grâce à un transmetteur radiophonique et c'est une autre forme de danger, en plus du problème calorifique causé par les émissions d'ondes radiophoniques.

Je sais que dans les utilisations de la radio que nous avons au Canada, à l'heure actuelle, nous avons assez de renseignements pour savoir où sont les dangers quelles sont les utilisations dangereuses. Nous sommes conscients, parce que nous avons fait des recherches et que nous savons ce qui se fait ailleurs, les différents problèmes particuliers.

Nous essayons d'étudier toutes les possibilités qui pourraient survenir concernant une application en particulier quel que soit l'endroit dans le monde. Avec nos ressources restreintes, nous étudions les cas particuliers et s'il y a des situations dangereuses, nous les étudions et nous voyons quelles sont les précautions qu'il faudrait prendre pour protéger le public canadien contre cette utilisation en particulier. C'est ce que nous avons fait dans le passé que nous continuons de faire. Ce n'est pas seulement la responsabilité du ministère des Communications, mais également du ministère de la Santé nationale et du Bien-être social qui y travailleront conjointement.

Le président: Monsieur De Bané.

Mr. De Bané: Right now, what is the size of the staff of this new Department?

Mr. Gotlieb: By the end of this year, we are authorized to hire 1,307 man-years. For next year, we hope to have 1,399 man-years.

The authorized number for this year is 1307.

M. De Bané: Aujourd'hui le 6 mars, si je comprends bien, le ministère...

Mr. Gotlieb: This is the present number of man-years, but the number of employees as of September 30th, which is the date we have here, was 1,073. Right now we are trying to find personnel for our new Department.

Nous avons 1,073 employés au 30 septembre 1968. Avez-vous des chiffres plus récents. Le chiffre le plus récent que j'ai ici, c'est du début d'octobre où nous avions 1,073 employés. Aujourd'hui, en mars...

M. De Bané: Avez-vous embauché des gens depuis octobre?

M. Gotlieb: Oui, nous sommes maintenant plus près du nombre total d'années-hommes nan years authorized but I do not have with ne the exact number of continuing employees in our strength as of today.

Mr. De Bané: And by December 1970, the staff of the new department is going to be ,440.

p 1225

Mr. Gottlieb: Around that. We expect the staff of the new department by March 1970 to be about 1,316 in terms of the maximum continuing employees.

Mr. De Bané: Would it be fair to forecast that when this new department is underway its staff will be about 1,500.

Mr. Gottlieb: That is so, sir. It will be less than that for the next year, 1,300.

Mr. De Bané: But it would not be exact to say it would be 1,500 new...

M. Gottlieb: Non, non. Vous avez tout à fait raison, ce sont des mutations du ministère des Transports et aussi du Centre de recherches sur les télécommunications de la défense, du ministère de la Défense nationale.

M. De Bané: Et comme ce nouveau ministère va essentiellement s'occuper de cette question de communication dans le pays, est-ce qu'à l'intérieur du ministère, les communications vont se faire dans les deux langues?

M. Gottlieb: Oui. Ma réponse à votre question est définitivement positive. Comme vous le voyez, nous avons deux sous-ministres adjoints: M. Bergeron dont la langue maternelle est le français, et M. Chapman qui parle couramment le français. Moi-même, j'essaie de parler français.

M. De Bané: Vous le parlez très bien. Lorsque nous regardons certains ministères qui sont strictement anglophones depuis de nombreuses années, il paraît irréaliste de vouloir changer le système en quelques jours. C'est pourquoi, si nous fondons un nouveau ministère, il serait bon que dès le début, la communication interne se fasse dans les deux langues.

M. Gottlieb: Vous avez tout à fait raison.

M. De Bané: Je vous remercie beaucoup. J'ai une dernière question, monsieur le sous-ministre. Est-ce que ce nouveau ministère a déjà pris des décisions à la conférence de Washington ou en Europe, qui seraient sujettes à l'approbation du Parlement et du Cabinet, etc.?

M. Gottlieb: En ce qui concerne les négociations internationales qui se déroulent à Washautorisées, mais je ne sais pas exactement combien nous avons d'employés dans notre ministère.

M. De Bané: Et en décembre 1970, le personnel du nouveau ministère sera d'environ 1,440.

M. Gottlieb: Environ. Le personnel du nouveau ministère en mars 1970 sera composé d'environ 1,316 employés permanents.

M. De Bané: Alors, serait-il juste de prédire que lorsque ce nouveau ministère sera en activité, il atteindra près de 1,500 employés?

M. Gottlieb: C'est exact. Il sera moins élevé l'année suivante, 1,305.

M. De Bané: Mais il ne serait pas juste de dire que ce serait 1,500 nouveaux...

Mr. Gottlieb: No. You are perfectly right, they are transfers from the Department of Transport and also the Defence Research Telecommunications Establishment of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. De Bané: As this new Department will essentially be concerned with the question of communications within the country, will communications be bilingual within the Department itself?

Mr. Gottlieb: Yes. My answer to your question is definitely positive. As you see here our two Assistant Deputy Ministers are bilingual. Mr. Bergeron is French-speaking and Dr. Chapman speaks good French.

Mr. De Bané: You speak it very well. I was asking this because then you look at certain Departments that are entirely English-speaking since a good many years, it is not very realistic to try to change the system in a few days. That is why, if we create a new Department, it would be a good idea to have from the outset internal communications in both languages.

Mr. Gottlieb: You are perfectly right.

Mr. De Bané: Thank you very much. One last question. Has this new Department already taken decisions at the Washington Conference or in Europe that are subject to approval by Parliament and the Cabinet, etc.?

Mr. Gottlieb: Concerning international negotiations which have been taking place in ington, la délégation a une certaine position au sujet de Intelsat. C'est la position du gouvernement du Canada qui a donné des instructions à la délégation canadienne. En général, je peux dire qu'on fera tout ce qu'on peut pour que Intelsat soit une organisation vraiment internationale et pour qu'il puisse continuer ses fonctions dans l'avenir sur une base très solide, sur une base acceptable à la communauté internationale.

M. De Bané: Merci, monsieur le président.

The Chairman: If there are no further questions, on your behalf I would like to thank Dr. Chapman, Mr. Gotlieb, Mr. Bergeron, and Mr. Nixon; also Mr. Walker and Mr. Kirkpatrick who did not have an opportunity to show their stuff today. We will look forward to having you when we have the communications satellite bill before us in this Committee later on. Thank you very much.

We shall adjourn until tonight at 8 o'clock, and then tomorrow morning at 9.30 a.m.

[Interpretation]

Washington, the delegation has adopted a certain position regarding INTELSAT, and this position is that of the Canadian government which has given instructions to the Canadian delegation. Generally, I can say that everything will be done to ensure that INTELSAT shall be a truly international organization and that it may continue to carry out its functions in the future on a very solid basis, and on a basis that is acceptable to the international community.

Mr. De Bané: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Le président: Comme il n'y a pas d'autres questions, je crois que je vais remercier, en votre nom, MM. Gotlieb, Chapman, Bergeron, et Nixon, de même que MM. Walker et Kirkpatrick qui n'ont pas eu à témoigner aujourd'hui. Nous aurons l'occasion de nous entendre lorsque nous étudierons le bill sur les satellites de communication. Merci, messieurs.

La séance est levée jusqu'à ce soir 20 h. et demain matin encore à 9 h. 30.

EVENING SITTING

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, March 6, 1969

• 2009

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see a quorum. Tonight we are honoured to have the representatives from the Canadian Library Association and the Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française to discuss Bill C-171, An Act respecting the National Library.

Immediately on my right is Miss Katharine Ball, President of the Canadian Library Association; next to Miss Ball is Mr. Maurice Auger, President of the Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française. To my right at the end table is Rev. Father Paul Drouin, O.M.I., Vice-Président of the Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française and next to him is Mr. Bruce Peel, Vice-President.

I would now ask Miss Ball and Mr. Auger to take over at this time and make their comments on the Bill. Then we will have open house with questions and answers.

Miss Katharine Ball (President, Canadian Library Association): Mr. Chairman, I have been asked by this deputation to open proceedings by speaking about the lack of attention given to the submission from our Association on the professional qualifications of senior personnel in the National Library.

Representations were made before the previous National Librarian was to retire, and as far as we are aware there was no attention given to these. This is in no way a criticism of the present National Librarian either personally or as to his qualifications to administer the National Library. We are very much in agreement with the action he has taken and the ideas he has put forward to make the National Library a centre for library service in Canada, but we hope that in subsequent appointments, such as that of the Associate National Librarian, there will be some attention paid to professional qualifications.

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le jeudi 6 mars 1969

Le président: Messieurs, nous avons le quorum. Ce soir, nous avons le plaisir d'accueillir les représentants de l'Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française et de la Canadian Library Association qui discuteront du projet de Loi C-171, Loi concernant la Bibliothèque nationale.

A ma droite, il y a M<sup>lle</sup> Katharine Ball, présidente de la Canadian Library Association, puis M. Maurice Auger, président de l'Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française.

A ma droite, au bout de la table, il y a le révérend Père Paul Drouin, O.M.I. vice-président de l'Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française, puis M. Bruce Peel, vice-président de la Canadian Library Association.

Je prierais M<sup>lle</sup> Ball et M. Auger de présenter maintenant leurs commentaires sur le projet de loi. Il y aura ensuite nombre de questions et de réponses.

Mlle Katharine Ball (présidente de la Canadian Library Association): Monsieur le président, on m'a demandé d'ouvrir le débat en mentionnant le peu d'attention qu'on a accordée au mémoire que nous avons présenté au sujet de la compétence professionnelle en bibliothéconomie du personnel supérieur de la Bibliothèque nationale.

Nous avons fait des représentations à l'ancien directeur général avant qu'il prenne sa retraite et, au meilleur de notre connaissance, on n'y a pas porté attention. Il ne s'agit pas ici d'une critique du présent directeur général, tant en ce qui concerne sa personne ou sa compétence pour administrer la Bibliothèque nationale. Nous sommes tout à fait d'accord avec les mesures qu'il y a prises et les idées qu'il a présentées pour que la Bibliothèque nationale devienne un centre de bibliothéconomie au Canada, mais nous espérons que, dans les nominations subséquentes, comme celle du bibliothécaire national adjoint, on porte une certaine attention aux titres de compétence.

[Text]

The National Library, as the present National Librarian plans it, should be a bibliographical centre for the whole of Canada. It needs the co-operation of librarians and librarians need its co-operation, and this co-operation can best be attained on a professional plane.

This is why we hope that in the appointment of the individuals—and not necessarily in the act—there will be some attention paid to professional qualifications. This is what the association has asked me to speak about first.

M. Maurice Auger (Président de l'Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française): C'est au sujet du paragraphe (2) de l'article 9 qui traite de la représentation sur le Conseil consultatif. Les deux associations sont d'accord. Elles comprennent très bien que le Conseil des Arts du Canada, les Musées, l'Association des universités et collèges du Canada soient intéressés à l'avenir de la Bibliothèque nationale, soient intéressés à donner leurs opinions sur son développement et sur son orientation. Nous comprenons très bien que ces associations, ces groupements aient des porte-parole au sein du Conseil consultatif.

Mais nous sommes d'avis également que les gens les plus intéressés, les groupes les plus intéressés à la Bibliothèque nationale, ceux qui vont collaborer avec elle de plus près, sont ceux qui appartiennent à la profession, c'est-à-dire l'ensemble des bibliothécaires qui sont regroupés sous deux associations reconnues sur le plan national, l'une anglophone, l'autre francophone. Or, l'opinion des quelque 4,000 membres est condensée, regroupée au sein de leur association respective. Nous reconnaissons que des groupements comme l'A.U.C.C. et tous les autres aient leur mot à dire; d'autre part, nous avons de la difficulté à admettre que les gens qui sont touchés de plus près et qui sont les plus intéressés à la Bibliothèque nationale ne puissent avoir leur porte-parole au sein de ce Conseil consultatif.

La Bibliothèque nationale est une direction pour l'ensemble des bibliothèques du Canada. Si ceux qui œuvrent dans ces bibliothèques n'ont pas de porte-parole officiel au sein du Conseil, nous voyons là une déficience. On peut répondre qu'il y aura au moins quatre bibliothécaires professionnels au sein du Conseil; mais ils y seront à titre personnel et non comme des représentants officiels des deux associations professionnelles.

[Interpretation]

La Bibliothèque nationale, selon les plans du présent directeur général, devrait être un centre de bibliothéconomie pour tout le Canada. Elle a besoin de la collaboration des bibliothécaires et les bibliothécaires ont besoin de sa collaboration, et cette collaboration se trouvera plus facilement au niveau professionnel.

C'est pourquoi nous espérons que dans la nomination de particuliers, et pas nécessairement dans la loi, on portera une certaine attention à la compétence professionnelle. C'est ce que l'association voulait que je vous dise d'abord.

Mr. Maurice Auger (President, Association Canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française): I wish to refer to clause 9 (2) dealing with representation on the Advisory Board. The two Associations agree. They understand quite well that the Canada Council, the museums and the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada are interested in the future of the National Library, and are interested in voicing their opinions on its development and orientation. We fully understand that these Associations or these groups have spokesmen on the Advisory Board.

But we also think that the most interested people or groups in the National Library, those who will be its closest co-operators, are those people who belong to the profession, that is the librarians who are grouped under two national associations, one English-speaking and one French-speaking. The opinion of this 4,000 member group is condensed and regrouped within their respective associations. We recognize that groups such as the AUCC and all other groups have their own say. But on the other hand, we find it difficult to admit that those who are the most concerned with the National Library should not have a spokesman on this Advisory Board.

The National Library is there to give direction to all libraries in Canada. If those people who are employed in these libraries do not have any spokesmen on the Board, then there is a short coming in this field. Although there will be at least four professional librarians on the Board, they will be there as individuals only and not as official spokesmen of the two professional associations.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Miss Ball and Mr. Auger. Your submission was, shall I say, commendably brief and to the point.

Miss Ball: We have one other point we would like to bring up, if we may.

The Chairman: By all means.

Miss Ball: It says in Clause 9, subclause (2), that:

(a) the National Librarian, who shall be the Chairman of the Board;
We feel that the Board and the National Librarian would be strengthened by having a chairman elected by the members of the Board. We feel that the National Librarian could be put in a very awkward position by arguing that the government increase services, budgets and staff for himself, really.

In other words, he could well be accused of empire building, and it would strengthen his and if this were the responsibility of a chairman of the Board who was selected by the Board.

The National Librarian, of course, must be on the Board and must be given complete freedom to make recommendations—as any Librarian is to this board—and he will initiate any of the ideas, but it seems to me he could be in a stronger position if these ideas were presented and supported by a Chairman who was in a more disinterested position than the National Librarian.

The other point that we spoke about today was that there is nothing in the which says that the Board need ever meet. There is no frequency of meeting at all. The previous act said that the Board must meet once a year. There is nothing at all in this act to suggest that meetings will be held at certain intervals. We had hoped that it might be twice a year rather than once a year. Those are all the points I wish to mention. I wonder if any of the other delegates have anything to add? I had forgotten about that point.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler will be the first questioner.

Mr. Osler: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask Miss Ball, if I may, why the Chairman should necessarily be a professional?

Miss Ball: Not the Chairman, no. The Librarian would be...

[Interprétation]

Le président: Merci beaucoup, mademoiselle Ball et monsieur Auger. Votre présentation a été, à mon avis, agréablement brève et précise.

Mlle Ball: Nous avons un autre point à souligner, si vous le permettez.

Le président: Mais oui, allez-y.

Mlle Ball: L'article 9, paragraphe (2) a) dit que:

(a) du directeur général de la Bibliothèque nationale, qui est président du Conseil;

Nous croyons que le Conseil et le directeur général de la Bibliothèque nationale seraient renforcés si le président était élu par les membres du Conseil. Nous croyons que le directeur général de la Bibliothèque nationale serait placé dans une position difficile s'il demandait au gouvernement d'accroître les services, le budget et le personnel, pour lui-même en quelque sorte.

En d'autres termes, il pourrait être accusé de vouloir construire son propre petit empire et ceci pourrait l'aider si c'était la responsabilité d'un président du Conseil élu par le Conseil.

Le directeur général de la Bibliothèque nationale doit bien entendu être membre du Conseil et doit avoir toute liberté de faire des recommandations comme tout autre bibliothécaire de fait à son conseil, et il prendra l'initiative de plusieurs idées, mais, à mon avis, il serait dans une meilleure position si ces idées étaient présentées et appuyées par un président moins intéressé que le directeur général de la Bibliothèque nationale.

Il y a un autre point. Il n'y a rien dans la Loi qui précise l'horaire des réunions du Conseil. La fréquence des réunions n'est pas mentionnée. La loi précédente disait que le Conseil devait se réunir une fois par année. Il n'y a rien du tout dans la présente loi qui suggère que les réunions seront tenues à certains intervalles. Nous avions espéré que ce serait deux fois par année plutôt qu'une.

C'est tout ce que j'ai à souligner. Je me demande si certains des autres délégués ont quelque chose à ajouter? J'avais oublié ce point.

Le président: M. Osler, sera le premier à poser des questions.

M. Osler: Merci monsieur le président. Je voudrais demander à M<sup>lle</sup> Ball, si vous le permettez, pourquoi le président devrait nécessairement être un professionnel?

Mlle Ball: Non, pas le président. Le président serait...

[Text]

Mr. Osler: I am sorry, the Chairman is the National Librarian, and that was my line of thought. The position of National Librarian is not really a detailed library job, it is an overall job, and it could possibly be—at least in my opinion—that the right qualifications might be found in someone who did not necessarily have library qualifications, and if we are writing an act you are then limiting this to a specific type of person which, over the long haul, many not serve your interest as well as you anticipate it will. Would you comment on that?

Miss Ball: I think I said that I realized this could not be written into the act. As I understand it, it is not the sort of thing that normally goes into an act.

The point we wish to make is that the senior officers, in what is essentially a professional service, are dealing with librarians all over the country and it is important that they not only understand the problems of the libraries from their own experience or education, or both, but that they are also able to maintain excellent relations with those librarians. It seems to me that this is a very interdependent situation between the libraries of the nation and the National Library, and the better they understand each other the better off we will be.

• 2020

Mr. Osler: My third point was your comment about the Chairman's appointment. It would seem to me that if we were able to accommodate you on your point about the Chairman's appointment, that the matter of whether or not the Chairman was actually a professional would then become academic.

Miss Ball: Yes, I think it would. I must say we did not discuss the topic of who the Chairman should be. I think our committee was well aware of the fact that it might be the representative Canada Council, for instance. The librarian is the person who is going to bring the information and make the recommendation to the committee. But the librarian is the chief executive officer of the library. Now do you know a board that is chaired by its chief executive officer?

Mr. Osler: Yes, government boards.

Miss Ball: Well they are outside my experience.

Mr. Osler: I do not know whether you will get anywhere but I certainly would be on

[Interpretation]

M. Osler: Je m'excuse, le président est le directeur général de la Bibliothèque nationale et c'est à ce que je pensais. Le poste de directeur général n'est pas, en réalité, un poste où il doit faire un travail détaillé de bibliothéconomie, c'est un travail global et, à mon avis, il est possible qu'on puisse trouver des compétences non nécessairement chez une personne qui a la compétence d'un bibliothécaire et on limite ici le poste à une personne en particulier et peut-être que vous n'obtiendrez pas le but que vous cherchez à atteindre. Avez-vous des commentaires?

Mlle Ball: J'ai dit, en effet, que si on pouvait l'inscrire dans la Loi, ce serait bien. Ce n'est pas ce qu'on met d'habitude dans une loi, d'après ce qu'on me dit. Mais ce que nous voulons faire entendre ici, c'est que le fonctionnaire supérieur dans un service professionnel traite avec les bibliothécaires dans tout le Canada et il est important qu'on comprenne non seulement les problèmes de bibliothéconomie, grâce à leur expérience et à leurs études, mais aussi qu'il soit capable de maintenir de très bonnes relations avec les bibliothécaires. C'est une situation de dépendance très étroite. Il y a beaucoup de dépendance entre la Bibliothèque nationale et les bibliothécaires du pays et mieux on s'entendra, meilleurs seront les résultats que nous obtiendrons.

M. Osler: Le troisième point, vous avez fait des commentaires au sujet de la nomination du président. Il me semble que si nous pouvions vous accommoder quant à la nomination du président, la question de savoir si le président doit être ou non un professionnel deviendrait académique.

Mlle Ball: Oui, je le crois. Je dois vous dire que nous n'avons pas discuté de la question, ... savoir qui devrait être le président. Je crois que notre comité était bien au courant du fait qu'il pourrait être un représentant du Conseil des arts du Canada, par exemple. Mais le bibliothécaire est une personne qui doit fournir des renseignements et faire des recommandations au comité. Mais le bibliothécaire est le directeur-général de la bibliothèque. Connaissez-vous un conseil dont le président est en même temps le directeur général?

M. Osler: Oui, les commissions du gouvernement.

Mlle Ball: Cela dépasse mon expérience.

M. Osler: Je ne sais pas si vous réussirez, mais je suis certainement de votre avis. Je dis your side. I say this because I was on the CBC board for three years. It is a much maligned board and, at the time, the chairman of the Board, who happened also to be the president, was much maligned. To my mind, the chairman of the board was an excellent person who was left far too much out in the cold and on his own because of the composition of the thing. And this is perpetuated in every darn government board that one sees. It seems to me that unless the chairman is answerable to his board there is simply no way of getting around the frustrations that develop—because if an ordinary board member is appointed by Governor in Council and the chairman is appointed by Governor in Council there is no one that can do anything unless he resigns from the board. That is the only thing he can do. And many things occur where it is not desirable to resign from the board.

Many times one wants to make a point without resigning from the board. I could not agree more with you about that comment. Now whether or not we can do anything about it, I do not know, but it seems to me that it should be on the recommendation of the board—the Governor in Council appoints on the recommendation of the board. He should not necessarily be bound to your first choice.

Miss Ball: Well my idea, when we were talking about it, was that the chairman of the board should be elected from among the board itself by the board. This is what is done in New Zealand in respect of their national library advisory committee. Actually their national librarian is not a member of the board. He is secretary of the board, with a voice but no vote. That I do not think is right.

I think the national librarian should have a vote but in respect of their advisory board, which is made up not unlike this, the appointees must be from among people recommended by the various organizations—the equivalent of The Canada Council and so on. Some of them are ex officio, as the parliamentary librarian is here and also the librarian of the National Science Library. But they elect their own chairman. I would feel that the hands of the national librarian are tied by being chairman of his own board.

The Chairman: Or will he have too much authority if he is chairman of his own board and also chief executive officer?

ceci parce que j'ai été membre du conseil de Radio-Canada pendant trois ans. C'est un conseil qu'on dénigre beaucoup et, à cette époque, le président du conseil, qui était aussi mal dénigré, était en même temps le président de la Société. A mon avis, le président du conseil était une excellente personne qui était laissée, si l'on veut, de côté à cause de la composition de la Société. Et c'est ce qui arrive dans la plupart des commissions du gouvernement. Il me semble que, à moins que le président soit responsable au conseil, il n'y a pas moyen de contourner les frustrations ou les désaccords qui se font jour, parce que, si un membre ordinaire du conseil est nommé par le gouverneur en conseil et que le président du conseil est nommé par le gouverneur en conseil, il n'y a personne qui peut faire quoi que ce soit, à moins que le président ne démissionne. C'est tout ce qu'il peut faire. Et dans bien des cas, il n'est pas désirable de démissionner du Conseil.

Il arrive souvent que quelqu'un veut faire valoir un argument sans démissionner. Et je suis tout à fait d'accord avec votre commentaire ici. Et il me semble que ce devrait être sur la recommandation du conseil que le gouverneur en conseil nomme quelqu'un. Il ne doit pas être lié par votre premier choix.

Mlle Ball: Mon idée c'était que nous parlions du président du conseil qui devait être élu parmi les membres du conseil, par le conseil lui-même. C'est ce qu'on fait en Nouvelle-Zélande à l'égard du Comité consultatif de la bibliothèque nationale. Et le directeur général de la bibliothèque n'est pas un membre du conseil. Il est secrétaire, il a la voix, mais non le vote. Je ne crois pas que ce soit bien.

Je pense que le directeur général doit avoir un droit de vote, mais s'il s'agit d'un conseil consultatif qui n'est pas constitué comme celui-ci, mais dont les membres doivent être choisis parmi les personnes recommandées par divers organismes, tel que le Conseil des arts, etc. Il y aurait des membres d'office comme le bibliothécaire du Parlement ici et aussi le bibliothécaire de la Bibliothèque nationale des sciences. Mais, ils élisent leur propre président. Je crois que les mains du directeur général de la Bibliothèque nationale sont liées par le fait qu'il est président de son propre conseil.

Le président: Ou aura-t-il peut-être trop de pouvoir s'il est président de son propre conseil ainsi qu'agent exécutif en chef?

[Text]

Miss Ball: It works both ways, I think.

Mr. Osler: But if you get down to a real crunch situation where honest people happen to disagree about something and you have to battle it out, there is no way of battling it out other than mass resignation of a board, which is not always the most helpful thing to do.

I would like to ask you specifically whether you think that appointment by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the board would help you in any way?

Miss Ball: Appointment of whom by the Governor in Council?

The Chairman: The chairman.

Miss Ball: Yes, I think that would do perfectly, would you not think so?

Mr. Osler: At least it is a half-way house for what you want.

Miss Ball: Yes, I think it would be perfectly acceptable. The thing that we feel very strongly about is that there are two dangers, as the chairman has said. There is a danger that the national librarian as chairman of the board has two functions which, combined, will practically monopolize a meeting. He is both the chairman, the reporter and the recommender of anything that goes on in the institution. On the other hand, from his point of view his hands are tied because he is recommending and will forward these recommendations as chairman of the board to whom ever they go to, instead of being an objective chairman who can recommend them on the advice of the national librarian. The end results may be the same but it seems to me he has a much stronger case if he can get somebody else to do this.

The Chairman: Miss Ball, do you really think the chairman has that much authority and power?

Miss Ball: Now if the chairman, in this case the national librarian, is both the expert on the national library and the chairman, what are the other people going to do? They are going to discuss the things he brings up. He has control of the agenda and he also knows what is doing in the national library. What is coming from the rest of the board?

Mr. Osler: That is a good question.

The Chairman: I must begin to apply that to this Committee.

[Interpretation]

Mlle Ball: La médaille a deux côtés, je crois.

M. Osler: Mais si vous en arrivez à une situation réellement sérieuse où des honnêtes gens ne sont pas d'accord et cherchent une solution à la dispute, il n'y a pas d'autre solution que la démission de tout le conseil, ce qui n'est pas toujours la meilleure des choses.

J'aimerais vous demander si la nomination par le gouverneur en conseil sur la recommandation du conseil vous aiderait de quel-que façon?

Mlle Ball: La nomination de qui par le gouverneur en conseil?

Le président: Du président.

Mlle Ball: Oui, je crois que ce serait parfait, n'est-ce pas?

M. Osler: Ce serait au moins la moitié de ce que vous voulez.

Mlle Ball: Oui, je pense que cela serait parfaitement acceptable. Nous croyons fermement qu'il y a deux dangers qu'on a mentionnés. D'abord que le directeur général de la Bibliothèque nationale comme président du Conseil ait deux fonctions qui puissent faire en sorte qu'il monopolisera les réunions du conseil. Il préside, il fait rapport et il fait des recommandations sur tout ce qui se passe dans son institution. Et, d'autre part, il y a le fait que le directeur général est lié puisqu'il recommande des améliorations, si l'on veut, à sa propre institution, qui est la Bibliothèque nationale. Et je pense que le résultat serait peut-être le même mais qu'il faudra demander à quelqu'un d'autre peut-être d'occuper cette fonction.

Le président: Mademoiselle Ball, croyez-vous réellement que le président ait autant d'autorité et de pouvoir?

Mlle Ball: Maintenant, si le président, dans ce cas, le directeur général de la Bibliothèque nationale, est à la fois l'expert sur la Bibliothèque nationale et le président, qu'est-ce que les gens vont faire? Ils vont discuter des choses qu'il présente. Il contrôle son ordre du jour au Conseil, et il sait ce qui se passe à la Bibliothèque. Qu'est-ce qui vient des autres membres du conseil?

M. Osler: C'est une bonne question.

Le président: C'est ce que je devrais faire ici en Comité.

[Texte]

Mr. Osler: A third question, Mr. Chairman, if I may.

The Chairman: Is it on the same subject?

Mr. Osler: Yes, it is on the membership of this board. Why do you feel that there is any necessity to have a member of The Canada Council as a member of this board? What is the relationship?

Miss Ball: This we have not taken action on, one way or another, but I am sure the idea in the framework of the act is that the National Library is the centre of bibliographical information for Canada and for anybody which is interested in scholarship in Canada, such as The Canada Council and the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, it is helpful to have recommendations because they know the fields in which scholars and materials are needed and where research is going, just as we want to have the national science librarian to coordinate the resources of the various libraries.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, could I raise a question of privilege?

The Chairman: By all means, sir.

Mr. Mongrain: You will notice that I was late and you are partly responsible.

The Chairman: Why, sir?

Mr. Mongrain: Would you kindly introduced to me that charming lady and the spokesmen who are here tonight.

The Chairman: By all means. Immediately to my right is Miss Katharine Ball, the President of the Canadian Library Association. Next to her is Mr. Maurice Auger, the Président of the Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française. Immediately to his right is Reverend Father Paul Drouin, the Vice President, and Mr. Bruce Peel, the Vice President of the Canadian Library Association.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler, have you completed your questioning.

Mr. Osler: Yes. Thank you.

The Chairman: Does anybody else have any questions on this particular point, the composition of the board?

[Interprétation]

M. Osler: Une troisième question, monsieur le président, si vous le permettez.

Le président: Sur le même sujet?

M. Osler: Oui, il s'agit de la composition du Conseil. Pourquoi pensez-vous qu'il faudrait y avoir des membres du Conseil des arts du Canada à ce Conseil? Quel est le rapport?

Mlle Ball: Nous devons prendre des mesures d'une façon ou d'une autre. Mais l'idée, j'en suis sûre, c'était que dans le cadre de la loi, la Bibliothèque nationale soit un centre d'information bibliothéconomique pour le Canada et que tous les organismes qui s'intéressent aux bourses au Canada, par exemple, le Conseil des arts ou l'Association des universités et collèges du Canada, puissent faire des recommandations lorsqu'ils ont accès à la documentation académique qui intéresse les étudiants et connaissent la recherche, de même que nous voulons un bibliothécaire national pour les séances pour coordonner les ressources des différentes bibliothèques.

M. Mongrain: Est-ce que je pourrais soulever une question sur un fait personnel, monsieur le président?

Le président: Évidemment.

M. Mongrain: Vous avez remarqué que je suis arrivé en retard.

Le président: Pourquoi? Vous êtes en partie responsable.

M. Mongrain: Voudriez-vous me présenter la dame qui est là, et les autres porte-parole qui sont ici ce soir?

Le président: A ma droite, M<sup>lle</sup> Katherine Ball, présidente de la Canadian Library Association, à sa droite, monsieur Maurice Auger, président de l'Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française; à sa droite, M. Paul Drouin, o.m.i., vice-président de cette association et à leur droite, M. Bruce Peel, vice-président de la Canadian Library Association.

M. Mongrain: Merci, monsieur le président.

Le président: Monsieur Osler, avez-vous terminé?

M. Osler: Oui, je vous remercie.

Le président: Est-ce que quelqu'un d'autre a des questions sur ce sujet, concernant la composition du Conseil?

[Text]

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Well I have a question on that but I would prefer to lead into it.

The Chairman: Are there further questions on this point?

• 2030

Mr. Stanbury: I think someone called your representatives porte-paroles. Do you mean that they would speak for your associations, or would they simply be nominated by your associations to judge the issues that appear before the board?

Mr. Auger: Well I assume that the representative of the AUCC will put forward the opinions of the AUCC.

Mr. Stanbury: I am really curious what your concept of the people you would nominate would be—whether they would be speaking for your association and expected to reflect the opinions of your association, or would they simply be nominated by your association?

Miss Ball: I think they would not necessarily speak for the association, they would be nominated by the association, and if there were points in which the association wished to make recommendations to the advisory board I think they would do it through those members that have been appointed from their membership.

But I do not think they will be official lobbyists on behalf of the association.

Rév. Père Paul Drouin, o.m.i. (Vice-président, Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française): Personnellement, je crois que ce serait une mauvaise politique pour le Comité de la Bibliothèque nationale que ses membres représentent des intérêts déjà engagés. Je crois qu'ils sont délégués par leurs association, mais une fois qu'ils sont nommés, ce qui doit les intéresser, c'est que la Bibliothèque nationale reçoive de bons conseils.

C'est simplement un comité consultatif qui n'a pas de pouvoirs, mais qui doit donner de bons conseils aux bibliothécaires, aux directeurs de bibliothèques. Et je crois qu'un représentant, premièrement n'engage pas l'Association qui le délègue, deuxièmement, qu'il doit faire son possible pour donner de bons conseils, tout simplement.

Mr. Stanbury: If your associations were added to Clause 9(2)(c) in Section 9(2), would you then reduce the number of persons in Clause (d) by two and reduce the number of

[Interpretation]

M. Stewart (Cochrane): J'aurais des questions mais je préférerais y arriver graduellement.

Le président: D'autres questions sur ce sujet?

M. Stanbury: Je crois que quelqu'un a appelé votre représentant un porte-parole. Est-ce que ces gens sont des porte-parole ou bien est-ce qu'ils sont uniquement nommés par l'Association pour venir devant le Conseil pour juger des questions posées au Conseil?

M. Auger: Eh bien, je suppose que le représentant de l'AUCC exprimera les opinions de l'AUCC.

M. Stanbury: Quand on vous a nommé, est-ce que l'on vous a dit que vous parleriez au nom de votre association? Est-ce que vous refléteriez à ce moment-là, l'opinion de votre Association ou bien est-ce que vous avez été nommés par votre Association à cette fin?

Mlle Ball: Je crois que nous pouvons dire que nous avons été nommés pour parler à cette fin. S'il y a des façons dont l'Association peut faire des recommandations, je crois le savoir par l'intermédiaire de ces membres qui ont été nommés par l'ensemble des membres.

Mais je ne pense pas que cela soit officiel.

Rev. Father Paul Drouin, o.m.i. (Vice president, Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française): Personally, I think it would not be a good policy for the Board of the National Library if its members represent interests that are already engaged. I believe that they are delegated by their associations, but once they are named, what must interest them is to see to it that the National Library receives sound advice.

It is simply an Advisory Board that does not have any powers, but which must give sound advice to the librarians and the directors of the libraries. And I believe that a representative does not, in the first place, engage the Association that delegates him and secondly, he must do his utmost to provide sound advice, and nothing else.

M. Stanbury: Si vos associations étaient inscrites à la clause c, 9-2c, 9-2, est-ce qu'à ce moment-là, vous réduiriez de deux le nombre de personnes incluses dans l'article (d), et de professional librarians mentioned in Clause (d) by two?

Miss Ball: Yes, I would think that the proportion of professional librarians in (2) (d) would remain the same. But necessarily there would be two extra appointees to the Board and so there would be six left if it was going to be the same size of board.

Mr. Stanbury: So your concern here, if I am stating it fairly—and I do not say it critically—your aim is not to have more representation for your profession on the Board, but to have direct representation from your two Associations.

Miss Ball: Yes. The representation of the profession at the moment, if you count, is eight librarians and seven non-librarians. There are the National Librarian, the Parliamentary Librarian, the librarian of the National Science Library, and perhaps the Archivist. Let us say seven librarians and the National Archivist who might be considered a supporter. And this I think is very fair representation. I think the committee would be quite satisfied with the same proportion.

Mr. Stanbury: So as you see it, the lack in the bill is not the lack of recognition of professional librarians on this Board, but rather recognition that your Association should be able to nominate to it. I have a recollection that your brief had not gone that far, that you had not suggested representation by your Association.

Miss Ball: Yes, I think we did.

Mr. Stanbury: I thought the recommendation in your brief was that two members should be appointed from lists of names submitted to the Secretary of State by the Council of the Canadian Library Association and the Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française.

Miss Ball: Yes, that is quite true and, of course, these would be recommendations. The associations, as I understand it, are not interested in nominating individuals, representatives, but they are interested in giving a list from which the representatives could be chosen, which ever way meets with the approval of the drawers of the Act.

deux le nombre de librairies, de bibliothécaires de profession mentionnés à l'article (d)?

Mlle Ball: Je crois que la proportion de bibliothécaires de profession dans 2-d demeurera la même. Mais il y aurait nécessairement deux nominations supplémentaires au Conseil et, par conséquent, il y resterait 6 membres, pourvu que la composition du Conseil demeure inchangée.

M. Stanbury: Vous vous intéressez ici si je ne me trompe, et je le dis sans aucune intention de critiquer, non pas à obtenir une représentation plus large pour votre profession, mais d'avoir des représentations directes de vos deux associations.

Mlle Ball: Oui. La représentation de la profession à l'heure actuelle, se compose de huit bibliothécaires et de sept non bibliothécaires. Ce sont: le bibliothécaire national, le bibliothécaire parlementaire, le bibliothécaire de la bibliothèque nationale des Sciences et peut-être l'archiviste. Disons sept bibliothécaires ainsi que l'archiviste national qui serait en quelque sorte un supporteur; ce qui à mon avis constitue une représentation assez raisonnable. Je crois que le comité sera satisfait de cette proportion.

M. Stanbury: Ainsi, comme vous le voyez, la carence dans le Bill, ne constitue pas une absence de reconnaissance des bibliothécaires diplômés dans ce Conseil, mais plutôt une reconnaissance que votre association devrait être en mesure de nommer ces gens. Je me rappelle que votre mémoire n'a pas été si loin, et que vous n'aviez pas suggéré la représentation de la part de votre association...

Mlle Ball: Je crois que nous l'avons fait, oui.

M. Stanbury: Je croyais que la recommandation de votre rapport voulait que deux membres soient nommés à partir d'une liste de noms soumise au Secrétariat d'État par les conseils de la Canadian Library Association, et l'Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française.

Mlle Ball: Oui, c'est tout à fait exact et, évidemment, il ne s'agit là que de propositions. Les associations, à mon avis, ne sont intéressées à nommer des personnes ou des représentants particuliers, mais ils sont intéressés à fournir une liste à partir de laquelle on pourra choisir les représentants, quelque soit la façon qui répond aux exigences de la loi.

[Text]

Mr. Stanbury: Your intention, I guess, from what has been said here, is that there should be one from each of your Associations.

Miss Ball: That is right. And each Association would submit names.

Mr. Stanbury: Would it meet your wishes, as well as what you have suggested tonight, to go back to your recommendations in your brief and to make provision for such nominations under sub-section (d) of Section 9 (2)?

Miss Ball: No, the committee seems quite satisfied with that.

Mr. Stanbury: On the question of the chairmanship. Who has been the chairman of the National Library Advisory Council?

Miss Ball: The National Librarian.

Mr. Stanbury: And how long has that Council been in existence.

Miss Ball: It has been in existence since the first National Library Act which was 1952. And the committee, as I understand it, has really become inactive and I think part of it is for this reason.

Mr. Stanbury: I could not find in looking at the old Act any requirement that they meet once a year. Could you refer me to that?

Miss Ball: It is not well documented, I am afraid, for a librarian.

Mr. Stanbury: Section 8 of the old Act provides for an Advisory Council. I do not see anything in it about the required number of meetings.

Miss Ball: I think so. I looked that up. I was pretty sure there was...

Mr. Stanbury: But at any rate, it has not worked as well as you would have hoped.

Miss Ball: This is what has been reported to me.

Mr. Stanbury: Do you think that the provisions in the proposed Section 9 would achieve an improvement?

Miss Ball: I do. A great improvement. The old Act was based on geographic representation for one thing, and this should be, in our estimation, a secondary consideration. The people appointed are much more important than where they come from.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure this is directly on the point, but it is bound

[Interpretation]

M. Stanbury: Votre intention, d'après ce qui a été dit ici, c'est qu'il devrait y avoir un membre de chacune de vos associations de bibliothécaires...

Mlle Ball: C'est exact. Et chaque association soumettrait des noms.

M. Stanbury: Cela vous arrangerait-il aussi, que ce que vous avez laissé entendre ce soir, de revenir à vos propositions contenues dans votre mémoire et de prévoir des nominations en vertu de l'alinéa (d) de l'article 9 (2)?

Mlle Ball: Non, le comité semble satisfait de cela.

M. Stanbury: A propos de la question de la présidence, qui a été le président du conseil consultatif de la bibliothèque nationale?

Mlle Ball: Le bibliothécaire national.

M. Stanbury: Et depuis combien de temps ce conseil existe-t-il?

Mlle Ball: Le conseil existe depuis que la première loi sur la bibliothèque nationale a été adoptée, c'est-à-dire en 1952. Et le comité, tel que je comprends la situation, est devenu inactif, en partie pour cette raison.

M. Stanbury: En regardant l'ancienne loi, rien n'indique qu'ils doivent se réunir une fois l'an. Pouvez-vous me signaler cela dans l'ancienne loi, s'il-vous-plaît?

Mlle Ball: Nous ne sommes pas très bien documentés, comme bibliothécaires.

M. Stanbury: L'article 8 de l'ancienne loi parle d'un conseil consultatif. Or rien n'indique le nombre de réunions qui doivent se tenir.

Mlle Ball: J'étais presque certaine que si...

M. Stanbury: De toute façon, cela n'a pas marché selon vos désirs.

Mlle Ball: C'est ce qui m'a été rapporté.

M. Stanbury: Croyez-vous que les dispositions dans l'Article 9 proposé dans le Bill produiraient une amélioration?

Mlle Ball: Oui. C'est une grande amélioration. L'ancienne loi était fondée sur une représentation géographique ce qui d'après nous est secondaire. La compétence des personnes qui sont nommées est plus importante que l'endroit d'où elles viennent.

M. Stanbury: Je ne sais pas si c'est directement lié à ce que nous discutons, mais c'est up in what we have been discussing and I might as well ask it while I have the floor. You mentioned representations about the professionalism of appointees. Can you tell me when such a representation was made and ignored?

Miss Ball: It was first made, in February 1967, when a list of names of French-speaking and English-speaking librarians was submitted.

Mr. Stanbury: Has there been any representation with respect to an appointment since June, 1967?

Miss Ball: Yes, there have been resolutions from the Association and submissions to the Secretary of State and to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Stanbury: Up to what date?

Miss Ball: Up to June, 1968.

Mr. Stanbury: And none since then with respect to professional appointments.

Miss Ball: There was one in November, 1968, as well.

• 2040

Mr. Stanbury: And what was the burden of those representations?

Miss Ball: That the senior appointment, or the appointments to senior library positions in the government libraries should be for qualified professional staff.

Mr. Stanbury: So there were representations last June and last November. But no appointments of senior personnel have been made since then.

Miss Ball: No.

Mr. Stanbury: So they have not been ignored. Not yet. That is why you are here.

Miss Ball: Not yet. This is one of the things that we realized can probably not get into the Act. But when we have an audience of this kind we do not want to miss the opportunity because we have been working on this for a long time.

The Chairman: I think, unfortunately, the Library Association is becoming as protective as the Law Society of Upper Canada. On a supplementary, Mr. Mongrain.

dans le cadre de nos discussions. Je vais donc poser les autres questions pendant que j'ai la parole. Vous avez parlé de représentations que vous auriez faites à propos du caractère professionnel de ceux qui ont été désignés. Pouvez-vous me dire quand ces représentations ont été faites et ignorées?

Mlle Ball: Je crois qu'on en a fait en février 1967. A ce moment là on a présenté une liste des bibliothécaires de langue française et de langue anglaise.

M. Stanbury: Y a-t-il eu des représentations portant sur une nomination depuis juin 1967?

Mlle Ball: Oui, il y a eu des résolutions de la part de l'association qui ont été présentées au secrétariat d'état puis au Premier Ministre.

M. Stanbury: Jusqu'à quelle date?

Mlle Ball: Jusqu'en juin, 1968.

M. Stanbury: Et depuis lors aucune autre touchant les nominations de bibliothécaires diplômés?

Mlle Ball: Il y en a eu une. Et en novembre 1968 aussi.

M. Stanbury: Et à quel effet étaient ces instances?

Mlle Ball: On demandait que les nominations aux postes supérieurs de bibliothécaire dans les bibliothèques gouvernementales aillent à des professionnels compétents.

M. Stanbury: Alors vous avez fait des représentations en juin et en novembre dernier mais personne, depuis, n'a été nommé à un poste au niveau supérieur.

Mlle Ball: Non.

M. Stanbury: Ainsi, on ne les a pas ignorées. Pas encore. C'est la raison pour laquelle vous êtes ici.

Mlle Ball: Pas encore. Nous avons constaté que c'est une des choses qui probablement ne pouvait s'inscrire dans la loi. Mais lorsque nous disposons d'un auditoire de ce genre, nous ne voudrions pas rater l'occasion car ça fait longtemps que nous nous occupons de cette question.

Le président: Malheureusement, je crois que la Library Association devient aussi protectrice que la «Law Society of Upper Canada». Question supplémentaire, M. Mongrain.

[Text]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would like first to explain why I have a special interest in this library problem. Many years ago I organized in my home town a free public library when there were practically none in the Province of Quebec.

And also, in addition to that I organized courses given by the University of Montreal for librarians. These courses lasted two seasons and the summer months, of course.

I also had the exhilarating opportunity to be in the hall of the University of Montreal at graduation and hear that students from my home town were among those with the highest grades. Mgr. Moreau was presiding over this affair. I am recalling something that dates back several years.

With your kind permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be authorized to ask a question of Mr. Sylvestre which is, I think, supplementary to what we have been discussing here. Would Mr. Sylvestre tell me as briefly as possible why, in his opinion, he should be the chairman of the Board.

The Chairman: I do not think, Mr. Mongrain, that I can accept that.

Mr. Mongrain: I raise this question as a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. If we really want to understand what we are discussing here, I think we should have Mr. Sylvestre's opinion. I appeal to the opinion of my fellow colleagues here.

The Chairman: The present hearing is designed to provide a forum for the library associations. We will be having the Minister and senior officials before us at a different time, within a week or two, I believe.

Mr. Mongrain: I am not trying to get the opinion of the Minister. I know the opinion of the Minister because he is the one responsible for this document. I want to have the opinion of specialists. I know that Mr. Sylvestre and these gentlemen and this charming lady can be objective. I have some questions for them, and I want to appeal your ruling, Mr. Chairman. If the majority of my colleagues here think I am out of order, I will submit. But I would like to have their point of view on that. I want to have a brief statement from Mr. Sylvestre why in his opinion he should be the Chairman of the Board.

[Interpretation]

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais d'abord expliquer pourquoi je m'intéresse particulièrement à cette question des bibliothécaires. Il y a un certain nombre d'années, j'ai organisé dans ma ville natale une bibliothèque publique gratuite alors qu'il n'en existait pratiquement aucune au Québec.

J'ai aussi organisé des cours qui ont été donnés à l'Université de Montréal pour former des bibliothécaires spécialisés. Ces cours duraient deux ans et évidemment les mois d'été.

J'ai eu l'occasion unique d'être dans le hall de l'Université de Montréal, lorsque les diplômes ont été distribués, et je me suis aperçu que les gens de ma ville natale étaient ceux qui avaient obtenu les plus hautes notes. C'est M<sup>re</sup> Moreau qui présidait la cérémonie. Je vous parle, là, de quelque chose qui remonte à un grand nombre d'années.

Avec votre permission, monsieur le président, j'aimerais qu'on m'autorise à poser une question à M. Sylvestre. C'est une question dans le cadre de notre discussion. Est-ce que M. Sylvestre va me dire pourquoi, à son avis, il devrait être président du Conseil?

Le président: Je ne pense pas pouvoir accepter une telle question.

M. Mongrain: Je vais poser une question de privilège, monsieur le président. Vous devez comprendre ce que nous discutons, ici. Si vous voulez comprendre ce que nous discutons ici, je crois que nous devrions demander à M. Sylvestre, son opinion. Je demande l'opinion de mes collègues ici présents, à ce sujet.

Le président: La présente séance veut permettre aux associations de bibliothécaires de présenter leurs points de vue. Nous demanderons au ministre et au bibliothécaire national de paraître devant nous un peu plus tard, dans une semaine ou deux.

M. Mongrain: Je n'essaie pas d'avoir votre opinion ni d'avoir l'opinion du ministre. Je sais quelle est l'opinion du ministre, je la vois dans le document. J'aimerais avoir l'opinion des spécialistes. Et je sais que M. Sylvestre et ses gens, ici, de même que cette charmante dame, peuvent répondre à mes questions et j'aimerais, monsieur le président, que vous acceptiez que je pose des questions, si la plupart de mes collègues pensent que ma question est irrecevable, je me soumettrai. Je propose cela à mes collègues. J'aimerais avoir leur point de vue. J'aimerais avoir un bref exposé de la part de M. Sylvestre. Pourquoi à son avis, il devrait être le président du Conseil?

[Texte]

The Chairman: I do not think that you can ask Mr. Sylvestre to give an opinion on a matter of policy.

Mr. Mongrain: Could I appeal your decision and ask for a vote?

The Chairman: The man who is responsible for that is the Minister; it is not a question of coming to a vote. I do not think there is an appeal in this matter.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, this is a point of order, and I will have some other questions to the Minister.

The Chairman: It was a question of privilege, originally.

Mr. Mongrain: Yes. Well, it is both of them. You are taking upon yourself to rule that this is out of order. I would like you to quote me the rule that says I am out of order.

• 2045

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, the way to shorten the discussion is to vote on your decision and then get on with the matter.

The Chairman: I think if you look around you will see that we do not have a voting quorum. We have a quorum for the purpose of hearing a witness; we do not have a quorum for the purpose of carrying on that type of business.

Mr. Stanbury: To this point, Mr. Chairman, I think the question is very pertinent that a member should have the opportunity to question Mr. Sylvestre, but perhaps since in effect he is the Deputy Minister of this Department and will be appearing with the Minister, that would be the proper time to do it. I think you are quite right in wanting to ask his opinion. Perhaps when he and the Minister are witnesses before the Committee, he would probably be glad to deal with that.

Mr. Mongrain: May I present my point another way, Mr. Chairman. Let us put it this way. When I am through with the questions for these gentlemen and this lady, they will go away from there. Why do you not give us a five, ten or fifteen minute meeting in camera where we could ask questions of Mr. Sylvestre? Would you object to that?

We want to know what we are doing with this new setup. There are two sides to the question. If we wait another week or two or three weeks, I will be all mixed up. You

[Interprétation]

Le président: Je ne pense pas que vous puissiez demander à M. Sylvestre de donner une opinion en matière de politique.

Mr. Mongrain: Alors, est-ce que je peux en appeler de votre décision, et demander un vote?

Le président: La personne qui est responsable pour cela, c'est le ministre. Il n'est pas question de voter. Il n'y a pas de question d'appel.

Mr. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, j'invoque le Règlement. Et j'aurais d'autres questions pour le ministre.

Le président: C'était à l'origine une question de privilège, monsieur Mongrain.

Mr. Mongrain: C'est les deux à la fois! Vous prenez sur vous-même de décider que ce n'est pas conforme au Règlement. Pouvez-vous me citer le Règlement à ce sujet?

M. Perrault: M. le président le meilleur moyen d'en finir est de voter en ce qui concerne votre décision.

Le président: Je ne pense pas que nous soyons assez nombreux pour voter ce soir. Nous avons un quorum pour entendre les témoins, nous n'avons pas le quorum nécessaire pour prendre un vote.

M. Stanbury: Permettez, monsieur le président à l'heure actuelle, la question est très pertinente. Les membres du comité devraient avoir l'occasion de poser des questions à M. Sylvestre, étant donné, qu'il est sous-ministre de ce ministère et qu'il viendra témoigner avec le ministre? Je crois que c'est à ce moment-là qu'il sera approprié de lui poser des questions. Alors, nous lui poserons des questions lorsqu'il viendra devant nous comme témoin avec le ministre. Il sera heureux à ce moment-là, je suis certain, de répondre à vos questions.

Mr. Mongrain: Je vais m'y prendre d'une autre façon. Voici: ... Laissez-moi parler, je vous prie. J'aurais des questions à poser à ces messieurs et à cette dame. Quand nous aurons terminé cela, ils vont partir. Et pourquoi ne pas nous donner cinq, dix ou quinze minutes pour que nous nous réunissions à huis clos, pour que nous puissions poser des questions à M. Sylvestre? Est-ce que vous vous opposeriez à cela? J'aimerais savoir où nous nous en allons avec ces nouvelles organisations. Est-ce que nous devons attendre encore une, deux ou trois semaines pour avoir leur opinion. A know how many problems we have to study and discuss.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, surely there is an appropriate time for the hearing of Mr. Sylvestre's views, and I concur with the position taken by Mr. Stanbury. I think the position that Mr. Stanbury has taken is perfectly sound, that there is not attempt here to deny this material coming before the Committee.

The Chairman: Mr. Sylvestre will be appearing with the Minister a week Tuesday and there would then be an opportunity.

Mr. Mongrain: This coming Tuesday?

The Chairman: No, the CBC officials will be here this Tuesday; it will be a week from this coming Tuesday.

Mr. Mongrain: When this Tuesday comes up, Mr. Chairman, you and I will have studied so many questions, we will be mixed up with all the testimony we have heard tonight.

The Chairman: That is why we have written records, Mr. Mongrain.

Mr. Mongrain: We probably will not have by that time.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain, I guarantee it.

Mr. Mongrain: All right. Take a note of that, Mr. Sylvestre.

May I ask a few other questions of these witnesses, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. Mongrain: Je pose ma question à l'un des délégués de langue française. Si je comprends bien, le gouvernement devrait, selon vous, prévoir dans sa Loi que vous aurez le privilège de désigner ou un deux ou X nombre de délégués au Conseil consultatif de la Bibliothèque nationale. C'est bien ce que vous demandez, vous de l'Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française? Est-ce bien votre raison sociale?

M. Auger: Canadian Library Association

Mr. Mongrain: Canadian Library Association?

M. Auger: Qui est l'association des bibliothécaires de langue anglaise.

Mr. Mongrain: Seulement ceux de langue anglaise?

M. Auger: Oui.

[Interpretation]

ce moment-là, nous aurons déjà réussi à emmêler l'affaire.

M. Perrault: Je crois que le moment approprié pour entendre M. Sylvestre, c'est ce qu'a dit M. Stanbury. Je crois que la position de M. Stanbury est très logique. On ne peut pas nier cela. Étant donné que M. Sylvestre paraîtra devant le Comité, ce sera le temps de lui poser des questions.

Le président: M. Sylvestre paraîtra devant le Comité mardi dans une semaine.

M. Mongrain: Mardi prochain?

Le président: Non, mardi prochain nous recevons la direction de Radio-Canada, mardi en huit.

M. Mongrain: Lorsque ce mardi-là arrivera, monsieur le président, nous serons déjà tout mêlés au moment où nous entendrons M. Sylvestre.

Le président: Monsieur Mongrain, c'est pourquoi nous avons un compte rendu écrit.

M. Mongrain: Nous ne le recevrons probablement pas pour cette date.

Le président: Monsieur Mongrain, je vous le promets.

M. Mongrain: Prenez note de cela, monsieur Sylvestre.

Puis-je poser quelques autres questions?

Le président: Bien sûr.

Mr. Mongrain: I address this question to one of the French-speaking delegate. If I understand you well, the government should provide in the Act that you have the privilege to appoint one or two or x number of delegates to the Advisory Board of the National Library. Do I understand correctly that this is what the members of l'Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française are asking? By the way, this is the name of your Association?

Mr. Auger: To answer your first question: it is the Canadian Library Association.

Mr. Mongrain: The Canadian Library Association?

Mr. Auger: Which is the Association of the English-speaking librarians.

Mr. Mongrain: Only the English-speaking librarians?

Mr. Auger: Yes.

[Texte]

M. Mongrain: Et vous ne faites pas partie de cette association, vous autres? N'êtes-vous pas associés à eux.

M. Auger: Ce sont deux associations nationales.

M. Mongrain: Il y en a une de langue française et une de langue anglaise. Et, pourriez-vous nous donner une raison pourquoi vous ne pourriez pas réunir ces deux associations?

M. Drouin: Il existe des liens entre les deux. Cet avant-midi, nous avons eu une réunion du comité de liaison. Ainsi, les deux associations se réunissent...

M. Mongrain: Ce comité de liaison est composé de ceux qui représentent l'association de langue anglaise et celle de langue française.

M. Drouin: Les deux comités exécutifs se réunissent pour discuter des questions communes.

M. Mongrain: Les deux associations sont complètement indépendantes l'une de l'autre.

M. Drouin: A autres points de vue, oui.

M. Mongrain: Vos réclamations, ou vos représentations au gouvernement sont-elles absolument semblables? Êtes-vous d'accord ou y a-t-il des divergences?

M. Drouin: Jusqu'à date, il y a accord. Nous avons présenté un mémoire ensemble, en français et en anglais et signé par les deux associations. Et nous avons demandé cette entrevue, ce soir, en français et en anglais, au nom des deux associations.

M. Mongrain: Maintenant, monsieur l'abbé, je me demande, pourquoi il n'y aurait pas entre vos deux associations, une espèce de mariage de raison, pour que vous fussiez front commun devant le gouvernement. Vous comprenez que le gouvernement est le représentant des Canadiens de langue française et de langue anglaise et qu'il y a des Canadiens de langue française dans plusieurs provinces du pays.

Je ne comprends pas pourquoi vous tenez à conserver cette individualité entre vos deux associations. Vous contentez-vous de vous rencontrer accidentellement lorsqu'il s'agit d'obtenir les choses du gouvernement, sans jamais oser faire un mariage de raison pour obtenir une politique globale du gouvernement de façon à favoriser l'établissement des bibliothèques qui vous intéressent.

29860—23

[Interprétation]

Mr. Mongrain: You are not part of that Association? Are you not associated with them?

Mr. Auger: They are two different national associations.

Mr. Mongrain: One is English-speaking and the other is French-speaking. And could you give us the reason why you could not unite the two associations?

Mr. Drouin: There are links between the two associations. This morning we had a meeting of the Liaison Committee. Thus, the two associations meet...

Mr. Mongrain: This Liaison Committee is composed of members representing the English-speaking and the French-speaking Associations.

Mr. Drouin: The two Executive Committees meet to discuss questions of common interest.

Mr. Mongrain: The two associations are completely independent of each other.

Mr. Drouin: From the other viewpoints, yes.

Mr. Mongrain: Are your complaints or your representations to the government completely similar? Are you both agreed or are there divergences?

Mr. Drouin: No, up to this date we are agreed. We have jointly presented a brief in both French and English, and signed by the two associations. And we have asked this meeting, this evening, in French and English on behalf of the two associations.

Mr. Mongrain: Reverend Father, I wonder why there should not be a sort of marriage of reason between your two associations so that you could present a common front to the government. You are aware that the government represents French-speaking Canadians in several provinces of Canada.

I do not understand why you persist in preserving this individuality between the two associations. Are you satisfied with just meeting accidentally when it is a matter of obtaining things from the government, without ever daring to enter into a marriage of reason to obtain an overall government policy that would favour the establishment of libraries that are of interest to you?

[Text]

M. Drouin: Mais c'est ce que nous faisons. Nous discutons de la possibilité de tenir une réunion commune, un congrès commun, comme pour les associations de bibliothécaires. Si nous avions une seule association, j'y voudrais le bilinguisme.

Vous savez, lorsque nous tenons un congrès, nous présentons des travaux pendant trois, quatre ou cinq jours; et nous avons des réunions. Depuis très longtemps, les deux associations se réunissent à des endroits différents. Les membres peuvent être communs, moi, par exemple, je suis membre des deux associations.

M. Mongrain: Il n'y a pas de membre...

M. Drouin: Nous tenons des réunions, et, à l'association française, nous présentons des travaux en français.

M. Mongrain: Alors, si le gouvernement dit: «très bien, dans la loi...»

The Chairman: Order, please! Mr. Mongrain we are here to discuss Bill C-171. You are discussing internal affairs and promoting a shotgun marriage.

Mr. Mongrain: No, listen to my next question.

Tout à l'heure, M. Stanbury a proposé un amendement à l'article 2b qui permettrait à ces deux associations de bibliothécaires du Canada de suggérer une représentation au conseil. Supposons que vous recommandiez un membre de langue française et que l'autre association recommande un membre de langue anglaise...

M. Drouin: Ce serait normal.

M. Mongrain: Et si le projet de loi n'en prévoyait qu'un?

M. Drouin: Nous demandons un représentant pour chaque association.

M. Mongrain: Supposons que le projet de loi ne vous en donne qu'un?

M. Auger: Nous n'avons pas envisagé cette possibilité. Nous avons cru que le gouvernement ne ferait pas cela.

M. La Salle: Vous pensiez que le gouvernement comprendrait suffisamment bien pour accepter de nommer un représentant pour chaque association.

M. Mongrain: On parle d'hypothèse, monsieur le président, mais cela fait cent ans qu'on parle d'hypothèse au pays. Il est à peu près temps d'écrire des choses de façon à

[Interpretation]

Mr. Drouin: This is precisely what we do. We discuss the possibility of having a common meeting, a common convention, as in the case with other library associations. If we had only one association I would want it to be bilingual.

When we have a convention, we present briefs during three, four or five days, and we have meetings. Since quite a long time ago the two associations have been meeting at different places. Individuals can be members on both associations. I am a member of the two, for instance.

Mr. Mongrain: There is no member...

Mr. Drouin: We have meetings, and in the French association we present briefs in French.

Mr. Mongrain: Then, if the government says: Very well, according to the Act...

Le président: A l'ordre, s'il vous plaît! Monsieur Mongrain, nous sommes ici pour discuter du bill C-171. Vous parlez de problèmes internes, et vous favorisez un mariage forcé.

M. Mongrain: J'en viens à ma prochaine question.

A while ago, Mr. Stanbury moved an amendment regarding clause 2(b) that would allow these two associations of Canadian librarians to propose a representation on the Board. Now, suppose you recommended a French-speaking member and the other association recommended an English-speaker member...

Mr. Drouin: That would be normal.

Mr. Mongrain: And if the Act provides for one member only?

Mr. Drouin: We ask for one representative for each association.

Mr. Mongrain: Supposing that the Act makes provision for one only?

Mr. Auger: We did not take this possibility into consideration. We thought that the government would not do that.

Mr. La Salle: You thought that the government would show enough understanding to accept to name one representative for each association.

Mr. Mongrain: Those are hypotheses, Mr. Chairman. But we have been talking about hypotheses for the past hundred years. It is about time to put things in black and white savoir où on s'en va et il serait temps que de part et d'autre, chacun fasse son effort. Le gouvernement fait son effort depuis quelques années. Il faudrait que les associations qui demandent l'aide du gouvernement nous arrivent avec des demandes précises. S'il y a de la place pour deux représentants, un de langue française et un de langue anglaise, je n'ai pas d'objection. Ce n'est pas moi qui ai préparé le projet de loi, c'est le ministre. Il n'y a pas de représentant actuellement, monsieur le président, il n'y a rien de prévu. Si le ministre dit qu'il n'y a de la place que pour un, comment allez-vous le déléguer si vous continuez à former deux organisations absolument indépendantes l'une de l'autre?

[Texte]

Avez-vous des représentants dans les provinces de l'Ouest, monsieur l'abbé?

M. Drouin: Les deux associations sont nationales; nous avons des représentants partout.

M. Mongrain: Lorsque vous dites partout, cela signifie combien de provinces?

M. Drouin: Eh bien, nous avons des membres dans toutes les provinces, très peu nombreux dans l'Ouest, il est vrai. Nous en avons surtout dans le Québec, l'Ontario et les Maritimes.

M. Mongrain: Bon, alors je conclus pour le moment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like you to put me at the end of the list because I want to give my colleagues a chance to keep up the discussion. I have some other questions to ask.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané?

Mr. De Bané: Miss Ball: Do you understand French?

Miss Ball: Fairly well, so long as you do not speak too quickly.

M. De Bané: Je vais essayer de parler lentement. Je comprends que chacune de vos association désire avoir un membre au Conseil consultatif, mais cette personne-là qui sera nommée par vos membres ne parlera pas au nom de votre association. Le projet de loi dit bien que trois personnes vont représenter le Conseil des Arts, les Musées nationaux et les universités. Or, en droit, un représentant est une personne qui parle au nom d'autrui. Moi, si je représente M. Mongrain, je vais agir en son nom. Les conséquences juridiques retombent sur le représenté et non pas sur le représentant. Alors, il faudrait ajouter un paragraphe spécial, précisant qu'il y aura so as to know where we are going, and it is about time that all concerned should make an effort. The government has been making an effort these last few years. The associations which are asking for assistance from the government should present us with specific requests. I have no objections if there are two members, one English-speaking and one French-speaking. It is not I who drafted the bill, it is the Minister. There is no representative at the present time, Mr. Chairman, and no provision for this has been made. If the Minister says that there is room for one representative only, how will you go about choosing him if you remain as two completely independent organizations? Do you have representatives in Western Canada?

Mr. Drouin: The two associations are national and we have members all over Canada.

Mr. Mongrain: In how many provinces?

Mr. Drouin: We have members in all of the provinces of Canada. While they are very few in Western Canada, the majority are in Quebec, Ontario, and the Maritimes.

Mr. Mongrain: Fine. Now I shall conclude.

Monsieur le président, j'aimerais que vous inscririez mon nom à la fin de la liste. Je vais permettre à mes collègues de poursuivre le débat; mais j'ai d'autres questions à poser.

Le président: Monsieur De Bané?

M. De Bané: Mademoiselle Ball, comprenez-vous le français?

Mlle Ball: Assez bien, pourvu que vous ne parliez pas trop vite.

Mr. De Bané: I shall try to speak slowly. I understand that each of your associations would like to have a member on the Advisory Board but this person that would be named by your members will not speak on behalf of your association. The Bill does say that three persons will represent the Canada Council, National Museums and the universities. Now, legally speaking, a representative is a person who speaks on behalf of another person. If I were to represent Mr. Mongrain, I would act on his behalf. The juridical consequences have to be assumed by the person who is represented and not by the representative. So, there should be added a special subclause deux personnes nommées par vous mais qui ne parleront pas en votre nom.

• 2055

C'est tout à fait contraire à l'esprit du projet de loi. Vous vous rendez compte que nous ne pouvons pas ajouter cet amendement dans le même paragraphe. Vous comprenez?

We cannot put you in the same paragraph. . .

Miss Ball: No.

Mr. De Bané: . . . because in this paragraph those three people will speak on behalf of the Association, but in your case they will speak as individuals.

Miss Ball: Yes.

Mr. De Bané: All right. That is the first point. You cannot answer in this category.

Miss Ball: No. They go into paragraph (d) I think.

Mr. De Bané: All right; let us take paragraph (d) now. Your two associations do represent almost all the professional librarians in Canada. Is that not so?

Miss Ball: Yes, almost.

Mr. De Bané: All right. Paragraph (d) says that at least four people who are professional librarians are going to be named and as the professional librarians are members of your two associations, what are you complaining about?

Miss Ball: I wondered about this myself, but I think there is a difference between any four professional librarians, even if they are all members of one association or another being appointed, and members appointed that have been nominated from a list submitted by the associations, because if they are appointed as individuals who are professional librarians, they may be appointed for reasons that the professional associations might not approve, and they might not be people that the professional associations feel are the best librarians to be part of this very important advisory board.

Mr. De Bané: To project your reasoning to the limit, that means that private associations are more able to run national affairs than the government elected by the people, whether it be the National Library or anything else.

[Interpretation]

specifying that there will be two persons appointed by you but who will not speak on your behalf.

This is entirely contrary to the underlying purpose of the bill. We cannot add that amendment in this same subclause. Do you understand that?

Nous ne pouvons vous inclure dans le même alinéa. . .

Mlle Ball: Non.

Mr. De Bané: . . . parce que, selon cet alinéa, ces trois personnes vont parler au nom de l'Association; mais dans votre cas, elles vont parler en leur propre nom.

Mlle Ball: En effet.

Mr. De Bané: Bien. C'est le premier point que je voulais soulever. Vous ne pouvez répondre à ce sujet.

Mlle Ball: Non, cela fait partie de l'alinéa (d), je crois.

Mr. De Bané: Nous allons alors prendre l'alinéa (d). Est-ce que vos deux associations représentent presque tous les bibliothécaires diplômés du Canada?

Mlle Ball: Oui, presque tous.

Mr. De Bané: Bien. L'alinéa (d) dit que quatre personnes au moins sont des bibliothécaires diplômées et sont nommées; puisque tous les bibliothécaires diplômés sont membres de vos deux associations, de quoi vous plaignez-vous?

Mlle Ball: Je me le suis moi-même demandé, mais je crois qu'il y a une différence entre quatre bibliothécaires diplômés, même s'ils sont tous membres d'une association ou de l'autre et les membres nommés d'après une liste proposée par les associations, parce que s'ils sont nommés à titre individuel, comme bibliothécaires diplômés, ils peuvent être nommés pour des raisons que les associations professionnelles n'approuveront peut-être pas. Et ce ne serait peut-être pas les bibliothécaires qui, de l'avis des associations professionnelles, sont les mieux qualifiés pour être membres de cet important conseil consultatif.

Mr. De Bané: Pour pousser votre raisonnement à la limite, cela veut dire que les associations privées peuvent mieux mener les affaires nationales que le gouvernement élu par le peuple, qu'il s'agisse de la Bibliothèque nationale, ou d'autres choses.

[Texte]

Miss Ball: I would think that the professional associations are in a better position to judge the qualifications of librarians on a National Library Advisory Board than the government.

Mr. De Bané: Then we should also say that the Bar is also better able than the government to name judges.

Miss Ball: I do not enter into the legal end of it. I am speaking for librarians and this is as far as I can speak.

Mr. De Bané: Would you be satisfied with two members named by the government after consulting you?

Miss Ball: Yes, I think we would, if the government is going to consult us and accept our opinions. There is no use their consulting us if they do not pay any attention to what we say.

Mr. De Bané: There are many forms of consultation.

Miss Ball: Yes; I think if the government is willing to appoint some on the approval of the associations or by nomination from the associations...

Mr. De Bané: I understand your reasoning. You want to nominate two people who are going to speak in their names personally.

Mr. Mongrain: One French and one English.

Mr. De Bané: And that they are going to speak...

Miss Ball: As librarians.

Mr. De Bané: But not...

Miss Ball: But not in the interest of the associations, no.

Mr. De Bané: Why do you not want to have representatives on the Board?

Miss Ball: We do not think this is a power play. We think they are there as librarians. As I said at the beginning, if the Canadian Library Association felt there was something they wanted to put before the Board, it would be natural that they put it through their own representatives, but they are not there to forward the interests of the associations. They are there to forward the interests of librarians and we think the profession is a good judge of the people who will do this.

• 2100

Mr. Stanbury: May I ask a supplementary on this point before I forget it? How would

[Interprétation]

Mlle Ball: Je pense que les associations professionnelles sont plus en mesure que le gouvernement de juger des titres de compétence des bibliothécaires membres d'un conseil consultatif de la Bibliothèque nationale.

M. De Bané: Donc, on devrait dire aussi que le barreau est plus en mesure de nommer les juges que le gouvernement.

Mlle Ball: Je ne veux pas entrer dans des détails juridiques. Je parle au nom des bibliothécaires, et c'est tout ce que je peux faire.

M. De Bané: Alors, est-ce que vous accepteriez deux membres que le gouvernement nommera après avoir consulté votre association?

Mlle Ball: Oui, si le gouvernement nous consulte et tient compte de notre opinion, mais il est inutile de nous consulter si on ne tient pas compte de ce que l'on dit.

M. De Bané: Il y a plusieurs formes de consultations.

Mlle Ball: Oui. Je pense que si le gouvernement est disposé à nommer des gens qui sont approuvés, ou proposés par les associations...

M. De Bané: Je comprends votre raisonnement. Vous voulez nommer deux personnes qui pourront parler en leur propre nom.

M. Mongrain: Un Français et un Anglais.

M. De Bané: Et ils vont parler...

Mlle Ball: A titre de bibliothécaires.

M. De Bané: Mais non pas...

Mlle Ball: Mais non pas pour les associations.

M. De Bané: Pourquoi ne voulez-vous pas être représentés au Conseil?

Mlle Ball: Nous pensons qu'il s'agit d'un travail de bibliothécaire, et non pas d'une épreuve de force. Comme je l'ai dit, si la Canadian Library Association estime qu'il faut présenter certaines choses au Conseil, il serait normal qu'elle le fasse par l'intermédiaire de ses représentants, mais elle n'est pas là pour défendre les intérêts des associations, mais pour défendre les intérêts des bibliothécaires, et la profession peut bien juger les gens qui le feront.

M. Stanbury: Puis-je poser une question supplémentaire à ce sujet, avant de l'oublier?

[Text]

you propose to prepare the list that you would submit to the Governor in Council?

Miss Ball: I think the council of the two associations would do this.

Mr. Stanbury: That is to say, the executives of each association.

Miss Ball: Well, no; we have in the CLA, and I think this is true in the ACBLF, an executive composed of officers of the Association, but we have a council which represents the membership much more widely.

Mr. Stanbury: It is more democratic.

Miss Ball: It is more democratic and the council would be, I would say, the appointing board. It is the policy board of the Association.

Mr. Stanbury: Each association has one. How many people would be on that?

Miss Ball: We have about 20 on the Council.

Mr. Stanbury: There would not be an association membership...

Miss Ball: At large? This is a little clumsy, I think.

Mr. Stanbury: Yes, I would think so, too. What it amounts to, then, is 15 or 20 people from each association choosing the elect.

Miss Ball: The Council, of course, has been chosen by the membership, elected by the membership.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané, have you finished?

Mr. De Bané: You admit anyway that those four professional librarians are going to be members of your two associations.

Miss Ball: They are most likely to be.

Mr. De Bané: You feel that you are more able than the Cabinet to nominate them. You feel that the Cabinet should not take responsibility for what is going on in such a public institution as the national library?

Miss Ball: No, I do not but I think there will be still at least six appointments that the Cabinet will make directly. This will not cover the whole Board but we do feel that there should be some representation of the membership chosen by the association, selected by the association.

[Interpretation]

Comment vous proposez-vous de préparer la liste de candidats que vous présenterez au gouverneur en conseil?

Mlle Ball: Je pense que ce sera le Conseil des deux associations qui fera cela.

M. Stanbury: C'est-à-dire le bureau de chaque association.

Mlle Ball: Non. Les deux associations ont chacune un bureau composé des directeurs de l'association, mais nous avons aussi un conseil qui représente les membres d'une façon beaucoup plus large.

M. Stanbury: C'est plus démocratique.

Mlle Ball: Oui, et le conseil serait, disons, un conseil de nomination. C'est là la politique de l'association.

M. Stanbury: Chaque association nomme un membre. Combien y a-t-il de personnes?

Mlle Ball: Il y en a 20 au Conseil.

M. Stanbury: Ce ne serait pas des membres de l'Association générale...

Mlle Ball: Ce serait des membres, si l'on veut, spéciaux.

M. Stanbury: 15 ou vingt personnes choisiraient le candidat, si l'on veut.

Mlle Ball: Mais ils sont élus parmi les membres de l'Association.

Le président: M. de Bané, avez-vous terminé?

M. De Bané: Vous reconnaissez quand même que ces quatre bibliothécaires diplômés seront des membres de vos deux associations?

Mlle Ball: Ils le seront certainement.

M. De Bané: Vous prétendez que vous êtes plus en mesure que le Cabinet de nommer ces personnes et vous estimez toujours que le Cabinet ne devrait pas prendre la responsabilité de voir ce qui se fait dans un secteur comme celui de la Bibliothèque nationale.

Mlle Ball: Non, je pense qu'il y aurait en tout cas six nominations directement faites par le Cabinet et nous estimons qu'il devrait y avoir une certaine représentation qui serait choisie par l'Association.

[Texte]

Mr. De Bané: But your members do vote at the general elections for the government.

Miss Ball: Oh, yes.

Mr. De Bané: They can do that.

M. Drouin: Il ne s'agit pas de dénier au Cabinet sa capacité de nommer de bons membres; ceci est un aspect très négatif. Ce qui nous intéresse, c'est de pouvoir suggérer au moins deux membres.

M. De Bané: Suggérer?

M. Drouin: Oui, parce qu'on veut présenter une liste dans laquelle vous choisirez. Cela ne veut pas dire que le Cabinet est incapable de nommer de bons membres; mais, nous voulons nous assurer qu'au moins deux bons membres soient nommés.

M. Mongrain: Quand vous dites bons, vous voulez dire bons en bibliothéconomie?

M. Drouin: Nous voulons dire quelqu'un que nous connaissons, parce qu'il est dans l'Association, qu'il y a travaillé. Nous connaissons nos membres.

M. De Bané: Monsieur l'Abbé, vous seriez satisfaits si on ajoutait:

«...après consultation avec les deux associations.»

M. Drouin: Si c'est absolument nécessaire. On a suggéré de présenter des noms. Personnellement, j'aimerais mieux que l'Association nomme un membre qui soit accepté ensuite par le gouvernement. Mais si cela est contraire aux coutumes des nominations par Conseil ou par le gouvernement, nous pourrions suggérer des membres parmi lesquels le gouvernement choisirait.

M. De Bané: Actuellement, par exemple, pour nommer les juges, on demande l'avis des juges, de l'Association des avocats, du Barreau, etc. Le gouvernement prend ensuite ses responsabilités. Mais, il est évident qu'il ne nommera pas quelqu'un qui serait mal vu par le Barreau.

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Miss Ball, I think I should perhaps ask your forgiveness for snickering a while ago when you were making your remarks. It was because you mentioned empire building, the possibility of empire building, and it struck me funny because I think that in the public service today empire building is rather fair

[Interprétation]

M. De Bané: Mais vos membres votent aux élections pour le gouvernement?

Mlle Ball: Bien sûr.

M. De Bané: Ils peuvent faire cela.

Mr. Drouin: It is not a matter of denying the Cabinet the capacity to appoint good members. This would be most negative. What we are interested in, is to be entitled to suggest at least two members.

Mr. De Bané: Suggest?

Mr. Drouin: Yes, because we want to present a list from which you will choose. This does not mean that the Cabinet will not be able to appoint good members, but we want to be sure that at least two good members are named.

Mr. Mongrain: When you say good, do you mean good in library science?

Mr. Drouin: We mean people that we know, who are in the association. We know our members.

Mr. De Bané: Reverend Father, would you be satisfied if we were to add:

«...after consultation with the two associations.»?

Mr. Drouin: If this were absolutely necessary. It has been suggested that names should be proposed. Personally, I would prefer it if the Association were to propose one member who would then be accepted by the government. But if this is contrary to the customs dealing with appointment by Governor in Council or by the government, we could suggest a list from which the government would choose.

Mr. De Bané: At the present time, for instance, when appointing judges, the opinion of the judges, of the Bar Association, and so forth, is sought. The government then assumes its responsibilities. But it is obvious that it would not appoint someone to whom the Bar objects.

Le président: M. Stewart.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Mademoiselle Ball, je crois devoir m'excuser peut-être, vous avez mentionné le fait qu'il pouvait se construire un empire dans la Fonction publique à l'heure actuelle, la construction d'un empire est tout à fait une bonne chose, mais je me demande si cela ne devient pas une dictature. Au fait, qui est le directeur général? Est-ce le docteur Lamb? Qui est le directeur actuel?

game. Indeed it is perhaps an exercise in one upmanship. Just to put things clearly so that everyone knows, I believe Dr. Lamb is the present National Librarian. Is this correct? No? Who is the present Librarian?

The Chairman: Mr. Sylvestre.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I see. Mr. Sylvestre has been the Librarian since when?

Miss Ball: Last June, I would say.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): His predecessor was Dr. Lamb. Is that correct?

Miss Ball: Yes.

• 2105

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): When you were speaking about qualifications of people on the Board generally, you were not concerned necessarily about the qualifications of future appointments of the Librarian, were you?

Miss Ball: Yes, we were.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): It is possible, then, that in the future a National Librarian could be appointed who you think would perhaps not be properly qualified. Is this so?

Miss Ball: Yes, or the Associate National Librarian—the two senior positions.

The Chairman: It is possible to get inadequate people from the profession, too, I would expect.

Miss Ball: Yes, quite.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): If, as you suggest, the Chairman of the Board is selected or at least elected by the members of the Board, is it not highly likely that the National Librarian would be elected?

Miss Ball: It is possible, yes. I would not think it highly likely.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I see. Do you think that bilingualism is an important consideration in choosing a National Librarian?

Miss Ball: I do.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): J'aimerais poser quelques questions à M. Auger, au sujet du Conseil consultatif. Vous avez suggéré qu'il y ait deux membres, un de chaque Association. Avez-vous d'autres recommandations à faire en plus de celle que nous avons ici?

[Interpretation]

Le président: C'est M. Sylvestre.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Depuis quand?

Mlle Ball: Depuis juin.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Et son prédécesseur était le docteur Lamb.

Mlle Ball: C'est ça.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Alors quand vous parlez des titres de compétence des membres du Conseil, vous ne parlez pas de la qualification des personnes qui pourraient être nommées plus tard à titre de bibliothécaire?

Mlle Ball: Oui, oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Est-il possible alors qu'à l'avenir, un bibliothécaire national soit nommé et que cette personne, selon vous, n'aurait pas les qualifications adéquates? C'est cela?

Mlle Ball: C'est ça. Et même le Bibliothécaire adjoint; les deux postes principaux.

Le président: Je suppose que l'on peut trouver aussi des incapables au sein même de la profession.

Mlle Ball: C'est vrai.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Si comme vous l'avez proposé, le président du Conseil est choisi, ou au moins élu par les membres du Conseil, est-ce, n'est-il pas très vraisemblable que le directeur général sera élu?

Mlle Ball: C'est une possibilité, en effet, mais pas très vraisemblable.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Pensez-vous que le bilinguisme est un facteur important dans le choix du directeur général de la Bibliothèque nationale?

Mlle Ball: Oui, je le pense.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I would like to put a few questions to Mr. Auger concerning the Advisory Board.

You suggested that there should be two members, one from each association. Do you have other recommendations to make in addition to the one we have here?

[Texte]

M. Auger: Nous nous sommes interrogés aujourd'hui, au sujet de la présence d'un représentant des Musées nationaux. Nous aurions aimé connaître la raison, si quelqu'un peut nous répondre.

M. Mongrain: Ce sont les questions que nous poserons au ministre.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Pensez-vous qu'un député, qui représente les citoyens et qui est responsable des sommes dépensées pour une bibliothèque, devrait siéger au sein du Conseil consultatif?

Do you think that an elected member should be on the Advisory Board?

Miss Ball: Elected member of the House?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes.

Miss Ball: Yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I am asking this question because I have a thesis that since the people of Canada expect us to answer to them for all expenditures, they expect that we should have greater control, or a greater look-in, on what goes on in Crown agencies, Crown corporations and so on, and I have suggested that an elected representative of the House be on each of these boards.

I am wondering if there would be any objection to that from the point of view of librarians. I am not talking about a haphazard selection. I am talking about a qualified person.

M. Drouin: Si je comprends bien le système de mon gouvernement, un député doit critiquer ces dépenses à la Chambre. Il me semble que le directeur de la Bibliothèque nationale ait un rapport annuel de ses dépenses. A ce moment-là, non pas seulement un député, mais tous les députés doivent étudier le rapport et critiquer, si c'est nécessaire. Pourquoi faudrait-il un député au moment où la dépense se fait? A moins que ce soit un député qui est réellement au courant des dépenses d'une bibliothèque.

M. Mongrain: C'est déjà trop tard quand la dépense est faite.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): C'est un peu tardivement. Je vous donne un exemple bien simple: nous avons le Centre national des arts; il y a des députés ici qui sont aussi bien qualifiés que n'importe qui au sein du Bureau

[Interprétation]

Mr. Auger: We were wondering today about the presence here of a representative from the National Museums. We would like to know why he is here and whether someone could answer this question.

Mr. Mongrain: We shall put these questions to the Minister.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Do you think that a Member of Parliament, who represents citizens and who is responsible for the sum of money spent for a library, should sit on the Advisory Board?

Est-ce qu'il devrait y avoir un membre élu au Conseil consultatif de la Bibliothèque nationale?

Mlle Ball: Un député?

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Oui.

Mlle Ball: Oui.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Je pose cette question parce que je crois que les gens du Canada s'attendent à ce que nous répondions à leurs yeux de toutes les dépenses que nous faisons. Ils croient aussi que nous devrions avoir un certain contrôle ou un plus grand contrôle à ce qui se passe dans les sociétés de la Couronne, dans les organismes de la Couronne, etc. . . . C'est pourquoi je soutiens qu'un représentant de la Chambre, devrait être membre de ces conseils.

Est-ce que les bibliothécaires s'opposeraient à cela? Je parle de la nomination d'une personne compétente.

Mr. Drouin: If I understand our government's system properly, a Member of Parliament must criticize these expenditures in the House. I think that the Director of the National Library makes an annual report on his expenses. It is at this moment that not only one member but all the members of the House must study the report and make criticisms, if necessary. Why should we have a Member of Parliament here at the time that the expenditure is being made? Unless it be a member who really knows about the expenses in connection with a library.

Mr. Mongrain: It is already too late when the expenditure has been made.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I agree. I will give you a very simple example: the National Arts Centre. We have members here that are here that are as qualified as anyone on the Board of Management. If a member were on that de direction. Si un député faisait partie de ce Bureau, il n'y aurait certainement pas une dépense de 46 millions. C'est pourquoi je pose la question.

M. Drouin: Je n'aurais aucune objection. Il y a quatre membres qui ne sont pas des bibliothécaires et qui sont nommés par le gouvernement. Le gouvernement est entièrement libre de nommer un député.

Miss Ball: I think we would even let the House choose its own representative.

An hon. Member: That would be unfortunate.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): That is all. Thank you.

Mr. Mongrain: Could I ask the lady how many libraries she represents in her association? Jest give me an average; I do not need an exact figure.

Miss Ball: I would think about 700, perhaps.

Mr. Mongrain: About 700; and distributed over how many provinces?

Miss Ball: Ten.

Mr. Mongrain: And what about the French organization. How many libraries do you represent?

Mr. Auger: I do not know.

M. Mongrain: Dites-le en français.

M. Auger: Je ne sais combien de bibliothèques, mais je sais combien de bibliothécaires. L'Association comprend à peu près 900 membres.

M. Mongrain: 900 membres; et, distribués dans combien de provinces?

M. Auger: Dans cinq provinces.

M. Mongrain: Dans cinq provinces. Et ces bibliothécaires peuvent s'occuper de combien de volumes, approximativement?

Do you have an answer to that? You do not seem to keep a national index of the books in your libraries.

Mr. B. Peel (Vice-President, Canadian Library Association): There is a catalogue of all the holdings in Canada in the National Library. That is why we are so interested...

[Interpretation]

Board, expenditures would certainly not reach the $46 million mark. That is why I ask the question.

Mr. Drouin: I would have no objection. There are four members that are not librarians that are named by the government. If the government wants to name a member, it is entirely free to do so.

Mlle Ball: Je pense que nous laisserions à la Chambre le soin de choisir ses représentants.

Une voix: Cela serait malheureux.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Ce sont toutes les questions que j'avais à poser, merci.

M. Mongrain: Est-ce que je pourrais demander à M<sup>lle</sup> Ball combien de bibliothèques représente son association?

Donnez-moi une moyenne, un chiffre approximatif.

Mlle Ball: Environ 700 peut-être.

M. Mongrain: Dans combien de provinces?

Mlle Ball: Dans les dix provinces.

M. Mongrain: Et combien de bibliothèques l'organisation française représente-t-elle?

M. Auger: Je ne sais pas.

Mr. Mongrain: Give me that in French.

Mr. Auger: I do not know how many libraries there are, but I know how many librarians there are. The Association has about 900 members.

Mr. Mongrain: 900 members in how many provinces?

Mr. Auger: In five provinces.

Mr. Mongrain: In five provinces. And approximately how many volumes can these librarians handle?

Est-ce que vous avez une réponse à cela? Vous ne semblez pas avoir d'index national des livres que vous avez dans vos bibliothèques.

M. B. Peel (Vice-président, Canadian Library Association): Il existe un catalogue de toutes les acquisitions de la Bibliothèque nationale. C'est pourquoi nous sommes si intéressés...

[Texte]

Mr. Mongrain: And all the books in your libraries are registered in this national catalogue?

Mr. Peel: That is correct.

Mr. Mongrain: That is the answer.

Mr. Peel: I would point out one thing, relative to membership in the two associations. Many of the libraries, or several of the libraries, would be members of both associations; and the same is true of some of the individual members.

M. Mongrain: Les bibliothèques ont-elles toutes le même système de classification?

M. Auger: Il y a deux systèmes.

M. Mongrain: Alors, j'aimerais que vous m'expliquiez votre manière de procéder.

M. Auger: Il y a le système Dewey, et il y a le système de la bibliothèque du Congrès. Ce sont les deux principaux.

M. Mongrain: Alors, dans vos bibliothèques, il n'y a pas de système uniforme. Y en a-t-il plus de deux?

M. Auger: Oui.

M. Mongrain: Combien? Trois, quatre, cinq?

M. Drouin: Il y a des systèmes particuliers. Le droit, très souvent, va prendre la classification de Los Angeles.

M. Mongrain: Ne croyez-vous pas qu'il y aurait avantage à uniformiser ce système de classification. Si, par exemple, on décide de faire l'inventaire des ressources en bibliothéconomie à travers le pays, et s'il y a cinq ou six systèmes de classification différents, ne voyez-vous pas une objection sérieuse à uniformité?

Miss Ball: One thing we are hoping to do or the National Library—and I know Mr. Sylvestre is, also—is to establish a centralized cataloguing centre for, at least to start with, Canadian books. This will give some uniformity.

Mr. Mongrain: And would all your members be willing to adhere to a federal...

Miss Ball: They are coming around to it.

Mr. Mongrain: A guide line like this?

Miss Ball: I think a great many of them would welcome it.

[Interprétation]

M. Mongrain: Et tous les livres de vos bibliothèques sont enregistrés dans ce catalogue national?

M. Peel: Oui.

M. Mongrain: Voilà la réponse.

M. Peel: Puis-je vous faire remarquer quelque chose au sujet du nombre de membres des deux associations. Plusieurs des bibliothèques seraient membres des deux associations, de même que certains membres.

Mr. Mongrain: Do all the libraries have the same indexing system?

Mr. Auger: There are two systems.

Mr. Mongrain: Will you explain that to me?

Mr. Auger: There is the Dewey System and then there is the Library of Congress system. These are the two main systems.

Mr. Mongrain: There is no uniform system then in your libraries? Are there more than two systems?

Mr. Auger: Yes.

Mr. Mongrain: How many? Three, four, or five?

Mr. Drouin: There are some specific systems. The legal profession often uses the Los Angeles classification.

Mr. Mongrain: Don't you think that it would be useful to standardize that indexing system? If for instance, you want to draw up an inventory of the library resources throughout the country, and if they have five or six different indexing systems, don't you think this constitutes a serious hindrance to establishing uniformity?

Mlle Ball: Une chose que nous espérons faire à la Bibliothèque nationale, et je sais que M. Sylvestre y travaille, c'est installer un centre de catalogue national de tous les livres canadiens, du moins au début. Ce qui nous donnera une certaine uniformité.

M. Mongrain: Est-ce que tous les membres vont vouloir se conformer aux normes fédérales?

Mlle Ball: De plus en plus, oui.

M. Mongrain: Pour un système comme celui-là?

Mlle Ball: Je crois qu'un grand nombre d'entre eux voient d'un bon œil l'établissement d'un tel système.

[Text]

M. Mongrain: Je pose la même question à nos délégués de langue française. Vos membres seraient-ils disposés à accepter une directive fédérale de ce genre-là?

M. Drouin: Sûrement.

M. Mongrain: Alors, je vous amène à une autre question un peu plus délicate.

Avez-vous eu l'occasion déjà de vous pencher sur l'aspect constitutionnel de la culture? Sur le conflit des deux responsabilités qui s'affrontent, celle du Québec qui soutient, qu'elle est dépositaire de la culture française, et celle du reste du pays qui soutient qu'il est le dépositaire d'une culture plus diversifiée.

Vous n'avez jamais eu d'accrochages à ce sujet.

The Chairman: I think this is a way off beam at the present time.

Mr. Mongrain: No, Mr. Chairman; because I know where I am going. Perhaps you do not know. Give me a chance to make my argument.

• 2115

M. Drouin: Les deux classifications sont anglaises.

M. Mongrain: N'avez-vous jamais eu d'accrochages à ce sujet? On pourrait, par exemple, vous reprocher de venir à Ottawa, pour demander à être représentés sur un organisme fédéral. Vous espérez bien sûr avoir des subventions, éventuellement n'est-ce pas?

M. Drouin: Nous recevons des subventions provinciales.

M. Mongrain: Et du gouvernement fédéral, n'en recevez-vous pas?

M. Drouin: Probablement, par l'intermédiaire de la province.

M. Mongrain: Voici mon point de vue: Si vous voulez être représentés au Conseil, j'imagine que personne ne rêve c'est parce que vous espérez en tirer quelque chose.

La question ne s'est-elle jamais posée entre vous à savoir s'il n'y a pas un aspect constitutionnel à ce que vous veniez à Ottawa demander à être représentés à un organisme fédéral, pour pouvoir ensuite bénéficier des octrois qui éventuellement seront distribués.

M. Drouin: Je ne vois pas du tout où vous voulez en venir. L'association française est nationale, moi, je suis de l'Ontario. Il n'est pas du tout question d'une association québécoise-française. Nous représentons une asso-

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: I shall put the same question to our French-speaking delegates. Would your members be disposed to accept a federal guideline of that nature?

Mr. Drouin: Definitely.

Mr. Mongrain: Then, I have another question which is somewhat more intricate.

Have you had the opportunity to study the constitutional aspect of culture? I am referring to the conflict between the two responsibilities that confront each other, that of Quebec that says that it is the seat of French culture, and that of the rest of the country which claims to be the seat of a more diversified culture.

You never had any problems on that subject?

Le président: C'est vraiment à côté de la question, pour le moment.

M. Mongrain: Non, monsieur le président. Je sais, moi, où je m'en vais. Vous ne voyez peut-être pas où je m'en vais, mais laissez-moi une chance d'exprimer mon point de vue.

Mr. Drouin: Both classifications are English.

Mr. Mongrain: Have you ever had any problems on this subject? For instance, it could be held against you that you come to Ottawa to ask to be represented in a federal agency. Surely, you hope to obtain grants, in the future, don't you?

Mr. Drouin: We receive provincial grants.

Mr. Mongrain: And don't you receive any from the federal government?

Mr. Drouin: Probably, through the province.

Mr. Mongrain: Here is my viewpoint. If you want to be represented on the Board—and nobody wants to dream, I imagine—it is because you want to obtain something.

Have you never asked yourselves whether there is not a constitutional aspect to you coming to Ottawa to ask to be represented or a federal agency benefit from grants that will be made in the future.

Mr. Drouin: I don't see what you are getting at. The French association is national, I am from Ontario, and there is absolutely no question of a Quebec French association. We represent an association, i.e. l'Association de

[Texte]

Association, l'Association des bibliothécaires de langue française du Canada.

M. Mongrain: Je suis heureux de vous l'entendre dire, monsieur l'abbé. C'est ce que je voulais vous faire dire d'ailleurs.

That is all for the time being, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. La Salle?

M. La Salle: Je voudrais, à mon tour, faire quelques réflexions sur les nominations que l'Association voudrait non seulement suggérer, mais plus ou moins exiger du gouvernement.

Je partage entièrement l'opinion de l'Association. Je pense que le gouvernement, comme responsable de la nomination de la majorité du groupe, devrait aussi respecter les suggestions de l'Association, à l'effet que ces deux personnes soient l'un, anglophone et l'autre francophone. Lorsqu'on parle de culture, je pense que nous avons tout intérêt, de notre côté, à ce qu'il y ait un francophone et un anglophone. L'objectivité serait ainsi sûrement plus respectée.

On a parlé plus tôt des nominations de juges qui, étant faites par le gouvernement, étaient pas nécessairement approuvées par le Barreau.

Nous avons suffisamment parlé de qualification, et je ne doute absolument pas de l'objectivité des nominations que l'Association pourrait faire. La représentation, considérant les cultures française et anglaise en ce pays, peut être mieux assurée par une délégation distincte.

Je pense qu'un anglophone est mieux placé pour comprendre la culture anglaise et qu'un francophone est aussi mieux placé pour comprendre la culture française. On ne peut pas demander à l'un et à l'autre de comprendre les deux de la même façon.

Quant à la présence d'un député au Comité, j'en serais d'accord. Nous avons des preuves qu'un député ici pourrait inviter les gens à la modération. Du côté culture, je reste profondément convaincu que, l'Association ayant eu l'accord du gouvernement pour la nomination de deux personnes, nous serions assurés que ces deux cultures qui doivent s'épanouir au Canada seraient protégées.

Quant aux problèmes qui pourraient se poser avec le Québec, il est sûr que le gouvernement fédéral entend respecter les juridictions provinciales, et comme monsieur l'abbé l'a mentionné plus tôt, il s'agit d'une bibliothécaires de langue française du Canada, Canada.

Mr. Mongrain: I am happy to hear you say that. Moreover, that is what I wanted you to say.

C'est tout pour le moment, monsieur le président.

Le président: Monsieur La Salle?

Mr. La Salle: I, in turn, would like to make some observations concerning the appointments that the Association would not only like to suggest to but more or less demand from the government.

I fully agree with the Association. I think that the government which is responsible for the appointment of the group, should also respect the suggestions that are made by the Association to the effect that these two persons should be on the one hand, French-speaking. When dealing with culture, I think that is so far as outside is concerned it is our interest to have one French-speaking and one English-speaking person. Objectivity would thus be more adequately respected.

Earlier we also talked about the appointment of judges by the government, and which is not necessarily approved by the Bar. We have had enough discussions about qualifications, and I have absolutely no doubts regarding the objectivity of the appointments that the Association might make. The representation, keeping in mind the French and English cultures, would certainly be more adequately ensured through a specific delegation.

I think that an English-speaking person is in a better position to understand the English culture and a French-speaking person is in a better position to understand the French culture. We cannot ask one or the other to understand both cultures in the same way.

I would agree to the presence of one MP on the Board. We have proof that an MP here might encourage people to practice moderation.

From the viewpoint of culture, I am still deeply convinced that with the Association having received the government's agreement concerning the appointment of two persons, we would be assured that the two cultures that must develop in Canada would be protected.

Regarding the problems that might arise with Quebec, it is certain that the federal government intends to respect the provincial jurisdictions, and as was mentioned a few minutes ago by the Reverend Father, we are association française à l'échelle du pays, alors le problème «québécois» ne se pose pas.

C'est ce que je voulais signaler.

The Chairman: As you know, Mr. La Salle, this Committee is the master of its own fate and makes recommendations as it sees fit.

On your other point about the representation on the Board, I have never known a federal board that did not take this into consideration. Federal boards are always put together with a great deal of precision. I do not think you have to worry about it on that account.

Are there any further questions? Mr. Guilbault?

M. Guilbault: Monsieur le président, je voudrais poser à l'un des représentants une question pour sonder le fond de leurs pensées.

Il me semble qu'en demandant seulement deux représentants comme vous le faites, que vous êtes un peu timides. Étant donné que cette loi prévoit un conseil consultatif qui fera des recommandations concernant la Bibliothèque nationale et toutes les bibliothèques du Canada, il me semble que vous n'y allez pas tellement fort.

Ne sentez-vous pas qu'il vous faudrait une représentation plus forte, parce que même si ce corps était plus démocratique il reste que les recommandations qu'il fera, devront être filtrées et que le gouvernement en fera, en définitive, ce qu'il voudra.

Est-ce par timidité ou parce que vous voulez demander moins pour avoir des chances que ce soit accepté? Quel est le fond de votre pensée?

The Chairman: Mr. Guilbault, the point, which was made previously, was that the four professional librarians on the Board would inevitably come from among the Associations, as they do now, but what they are asking for, I believe, is permission to submit a list of names from each association, from which the government would choose one from each association, as a minimum, but without any restraint at all; and the government may choose to use this list for the whole of the representation from the professional side on the Board.

Mr. Guilbault: That presents no problem, Mr. Chairman. I got all that, I was here. The only thing is that I realize that any other people, except those two, would be named by the government in what could not be termed dealing with a French organization on a nationwide scale, so there is really no "Quebec" problem.

This is what I wanted to point out.

Le président: Comme vous le savez, monsieur La Salle, le Comité est maître de son destin et fait les recommandations qu'il croit justes.

Quant à la représentation au Conseil, je n'ai jamais vu de conseil fédéral qui ne tenait pas compte de cela. Les conseils fédéraux sont toujours réunis avec une grande précision. Je ne crois pas que vous devez vous inquiéter à ce sujet.

Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Monsieur Guilbault?

Mr. Guilbault: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask any one of the representatives if they want to answer a question to see what they think.

It seems to me that by asking to have two representatives only, as you do, you are being a bit timid. Seeing as this Act makes provision for an Advisory Board that will make recommendation concerning the National Library and all the libraries of Canada, I think that you are not pressing your case very energetically.

Don't you think that you should be more adequately presented because even if that body were more democratic, it remains that the representations that it will make will be sifted and, in the final analysis, the government will do with them what it thinks good.

Is this the result of timidity or because you want to ask a less to have a chance that it be accepted? What do you really think?

Le président: Monsieur Guilbault, on a dit antérieurement que les quatre bibliothécaires diplômés, membres du Conseil, viendraient inévitablement des associations de bibliothécaires, comme à l'heure actuelle, mais ce qu'on demande, je crois, c'est la permission de soumettre une liste de noms de membres de chaque association parmi lesquels le gouvernement, sans aucune restriction, pourra choisir les personnes qui représenteront les associations professionnelles au conseil.

M. Guilbault: Il n'y a pas de problème à ce sujet, j'ai bien entendu cela. La chose dont je me rends compte c'est que tous les autres membres à part ces deux-là, seront nommés par le gouvernement. Est-ce que cela ser a democratic way. Do you not feel that you should be represented to a greater extent? Would this be entirely satisfactory? Or is it that you just ask for a little in order to get something?

Miss Ball: I think if we got this it would be quite satisfactory.

M. Auger: Si on nous offrait que les quatre professionnels soient choisis à partir des listes fournies par les associations, ce serait l'idéal.

M. Guilbault: La question n'est pas de vous offrir quelque chose pour le moment, mais bien plutôt de vous demander ce que vous désirez. Vous venez témoigner ici, et ensuite, nous faisons les recommandations qui s'imposent à la Chambre des communes.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président pour appuyer mon ami, M. Guilbault, je dirai: «Écoutez ne vous faites pas d'illusion car à Ottawa, pour avoir quelque chose, il faut l'arracher; on ne vous le donnera pas gratuitement. Donc convainquez-nous de votre besoin d'une représentation autrement, vous n'aurez rien. Vous allez retourner chez vous et vous reviendrez l'année prochaine, dans deux ans ou dans trois ans.» Ce n'est pas parce qu'on a un gouvernement libéral ou conservateur, c'est parce que le gouvernement fédéral c'est une grosse machine.

The Chairman: The government at Ottawa, s any government.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, if you will allow me, I wish to make a remark supplementary to what my colleague has just said.

Pour votre consolation peut-être, moi ou un autre, nous avons l'intention, au sein de ce comité, de présenter au ministre un amendement. Nous proposerons que l'alinéa qui traite des trois autres personnes représentant respectivement le Conseil des Arts du Canada, les Musées nationaux du Canada et l'Association des universités et collèges du Canada et respectivement désignées par ces organismes, soit amendé afin de remplacer les représentants du Conseil des Arts du Canada et des Musées nationaux par deux autres représentants, l'un de votre Association de langue française, et l'autre de votre Association de langue anglaise. Personnellement, je ne vois pas la raison de présence du Conseil des Arts et des Musées nationaux. Vous êtes beaucoup plus qualifiés pour représenter le public canadien lecteur au sein du Conseil consultatif de démocratique à ce moment-là? Et je vous pose la question: ne croyez-vous pas que vous devriez être représentés d'une façon plus importante? Ou est-ce que cela vous semble satisfaisant, ou est-ce que vous demandez juste un petit peu afin d'obtenir quelque chose?

Mlle Ball: Je pense que si nous obtenons cela, nous serions satisfaits.

Mr. Auger: If we were offered that these four professionals be nominated from lists presented by the associations we would surely agree. We would be very happy.

Mr. Guilbault: The point is not to offer you something at the moment, but to ask you what you want. You come here as a witness and then we make the necessary recommendations to the House of Commons.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I want to second my friend, Mr. Guilbault, and I say: "Do not have any illusions, because, in Ottawa, if you want something you will not have it freely, you must fight for it. So prove it to us that you need representation or else you will have absolutely nothing. You will return and come back next year, or in two or three years, and it is not because we have a Liberal or Conservative government, it is because the government is a big mechanism."

Le président: Le gouvernement d'Ottawa ou n'importe quel gouvernement.

M. Mongrain: Tout gouvernement oui. Monsieur le président, si vous me permettez de faire une remarque supplémentaire à ce qu'a dit mon collègue.

For your consolation I or another person intend within this Committee, to present to the Minister an amendment. We will move that the paragraph dealing with the three persons representing respectively the National Arts Council of Canada, the National Museums of Canada and the Association of Colleges and Universities of Canada, and respectively designated by these agencies, be amended in that the representatives of the National Arts Council of Canada and the National Museums would be replaced by two others, one from the French Language Association and the other from the English Language Association. Personally, I do not see why the National Arts Council or the National Museums are there. They are much better qualified to represent the Canadian readers within the National Library Advisory la Bibliothèque nationale. Éventuellement, ce sera un des amendements que l'on suggérera. Vous n'avez pas d'objection, j'espère.

[Text]

M. Auger: Non.

M. Mongrain: Si vous en avez, c'est le temps de le dire.

The Chairman: Mr. Guilbault?

Mr. Guilbault: Mr. Chairman, another aspect that worries me is the fact that these representatives to be named by the government would not be representing your association.

Mr. Mongrain: Why not?

Mr. Guilbault: I do not see why this would be good. It would be effective, in my mind, if a mechanism could be set up. Your organization is a democratic one. It groups all the librarians and it elects a council. If the council were officially represented on this advisory board it would convey the complaints, or the grievances, or the suggestions, of your people throughout the country. If the person named acts only for herself you break the link. If we are to democratize our organization, I do not see that your recommendation would be good. Could you answer that?

• 2125

Mr. Mongrain: Supplementary to what my colleague is saying, you represent 1,600 libraries in Canada in at least ten provinces in the case of the English and five in the other case. Therefore, you are quite representative.

M. Auger: L'intervention que j'ai faite au début allait dans le sens de celle que monsieur vient de faire.

M. Mongrain: C'est M. Guilbault, député de Saint-Jacques.

M. Auger: Merci. Mes collègues s'en sont éloignés par la suite. Mais, mon idée était vraiment dans le sens de l'intervention de M. Guilbault. Le Conseil des Arts a un représentant, l'AUCC et les Musées nationaux également. Alors, pourquoi les deux Associations n'auraient-elles pas un représentant?

M. De Bané: Vous ne voulez pas de représentant.

M. Auger: Oui. Au début, quand j'ai fait ma première intervention, c'est ce que j'avais

[Interpretation]

Board. At an opportune time, it will be one of the amendments I will propose. You do not object to that I hope?

Mr. Auger: No.

Mr. Mongrain: If you have any, now is the time to state them.

Le président: M. Guilbault.

M. Guilbault: Monsieur le président, il y a une autre question que je voudrais souligner. Le fait que ces représentants devraient être nommés par le gouvernement, à ce moment-là, ils ne représenteraient pas l'Association.

M. Mongrain: Pourquoi pas!

M. Guilbault: Je ne vois pas pourquoi cela serait bon. Il serait efficace, pour moi, si on peut mettre sur pied un mécanisme. Il faudrait que votre organisme, en tant qu'organisme démocratique, représentant les bibliothécaires si le conseil est officiellement représenté au Conseil consultatif, c'est d'eux que devraient parvenir les recommandations, les plaintes, etc., de tous vos membres à la grandeur du Canada. Si la personne nommée n'agit que pour elle-même, vous enfreignez les règles. Si nous voulons démocratiser notre organisation, je ne vois pas en quoi votre recommandation pourrait être utile. Pouvez-vous me répondre?

M. Mongrain: Je veux souligner ce qu'a dit mon collègue. Vous représentez 1,600 bibliothécaires du Canada dans au moins dix provinces, dans le cas de l'association anglophone, et dans cinq dans le cas de l'association francophone. Alors, vous êtes assez représentatifs, si l'on peut dire.

Mr. Auger: The intervention I made at the beginning was related to the one the gentleman has just made.

Mr. Mongrain: It is Mr. Guilbault, member for Saint-Jacques.

Mr. Auger: Thank you, my colleagues went a little bit away from that, but in my idea I wanted to go in the same way as Mr. Guilbault suggests. The National Arts Council has one representative and the NACC and the National Museums also have one. Why then should the two associations not have one representative?

Mr. De Bané: You do not want a representative.

Mr. Auger: In my first intervention I had this in mind, that there may be two represenà l'esprit, c'est-à-dire qu'ils soient des vrais représentants, selon le sens de l'alinéa c).

Mr. Guilbault: I have a supplementary, Mr. Chairman. As Miss Ball seems to object to that kind of real representation, could she explain what might be the idea behind the objection?

Miss Ball: When we were first considering this we felt that it was possible that it might be the president of each association. We then realized that this would not give sufficient continuity, because we have new officers each year. We preferred to have someone who would have a longer term on the National Library Advisory Board.

I think the concern of the profession, as represented by the two associations, is not that they want representation as associations but as good librarians.

As I said before, I have no doubt that if the associations had something that they wished submitted to the National Library Advisory Board they would submit it through their own representative.

Perhaps I am misinterpreting this, but I really think, on the average, they will act as librarians and not as representatives.

Mr. Mongrain: Do you not think that if we ask them to suggest names they will suggest those that will be sympathetic to the aims of the two associations?

Miss Ball: Yes, I would think so, because the aims of the two associations are to forward librarianship in Canada. This is what we expect from the National Library and the National Library Advisory Board.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur Sylvestre, prenez des notes, parce que j'aurai des questions à vous poser quand vous viendrez témoigner devant nous.

The Chairman: Are there any farther further questions? Mr. Osler?

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask a couple of questions but, I am not sure to whom I should direct them.

The tenure of the librarian is not laid down here. Is the library business peculiar, or, like other businesses, does it consider it to be a fairly good idea to have a routine look at the person every so often? Many boards would say seven years, or something like that. Can you give me any particular reason for there being no tenure laid down for the librarian?

[Interprétation]

tatives in the sense that we give paragraph (c).

M. Guilbault: Une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président. Si M<sup>lle</sup> Ball semble s'opposer à ce genre de représentation réelle, peut-elle nous expliquer la raison de cette objection?

Mlle Ball: D'abord, nous avons pensé qu'il était possible, par exemple, que le président de chaque association soit nommé. Ensuite, nous nous sommes dit que cela n'assurerait pas une continuité suffisante, car nous avons de nouveaux présidents chaque année et ce serait mieux d'avoir quelqu'un qui aurait un mandat plus long, comme représentant au sein du Conseil consultatif de la Bibliothèque nationale.

Je pense que nous nous sommes surtout intéressés au fait que les deux associations ne voulaient pas avoir de représentants au titre des associations, au titre de bibliothécaires professionnels capables. Et comme je l'ai dit plus tôt, je ne doute pas que si les Associations ont quelque chose à présenter au Conseil consultatif elles le feront par l'entremise de ses propres représentants. J'interprète peut-être mal, mais je pense vraiment que normalement ils agiront comme bibliothécaires et non pas comme nos représentants.

M. Mongrain: Vous ne croyez pas que les noms que vos associations vont suggérer seraient sympathiques aux buts des deux associations.

Mlle Ball: Oui, bien sûr. Je pense que les buts de ces deux associations sont de promouvoir la profession de bibliothécaire au Canada. Et c'est ce qu'on peut attendre de la Bibliothèque nationale et du Conseil consultatif de la Bibliothèque nationale.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Sylvestre, you should take notes, because I will have questions to ask you when you come back before us later on.

Le président: D'autres questions? Monsieur Osler.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, je voudrais poser quelques questions, mais je ne sais pas trop à qui elles s'adressent. D'abord, les dix ans d'emploi du directeur général ne sont pas précisés ici, et je me demande s'il s'agit d'un cas particulier à la Bibliothèque nationale ou si cette disposition est courante. Est-ce que ce serait bon de faire un contrôle sur la personne en poste aussi souvent? Plusieurs conseils le font tous les sept ans, ou à peu près. Est-ce qu'il y a des raisons particu-

[Text]

Miss Ball: He holds office during pleasure. This is the government.

Mr. Osler: That means for ever and ever, so long as he is a good boy, does it?

Miss Ball: I guess so.

Mr. Osler: I am not being personal.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Are there any deputies.

Mr. Osler: And the same applies to deputies, does it?

The Chairman: There would almost have to be a recommendation from the Advisory Board to turf him out if he was inadequate.

Mr. Osler: You would have a terrible time getting rid of somebody if he happened to take to drink, or dope, or run off with another librarian, or something like this, and he might still be a first class librarian. I do not know. I wonder if there is a peculiar reason for this being left out of this particular bill.

• 2130

The Chairman: I think this is standard procedure and identical to what is in the National Museums Act and the National Arts Centre Act.

Mr. Osler: Then, I think they all should be reviewed.

The Chairman: This is the Committee in which to do it.

Mr. Osler: Without labouring the point too much, could someone tell me what Section 52 of the Copyright Act is that we are asked to rescind?

Miss Ball: It is the deposit regulation which is now covered by Clause 11, is it not?

Clause 11—New Publications. These are the requirements for deposits in the National Library, which were previously in the Copyright Act and now have been incorporated in the national Library Act.

Mr. Osler: To maintain copyright one does not have to deposit anything anywhere in Canada.

Miss Ball: Oh yes.

Mr. Osler: I do not know but I have written three books and it was not until after each one was out that I was asked by the Library to see that the books got there.

lières quant au manque de terme fixe pour le directeur général?

Mlle Ball: Il détient son poste au gré du gouvernement.

M. Osler: Cela vaut en autant qu'il reste un bon garçon?

Mlle Ball: Je pense bien.

M. Osler: Je ne deviens pas indiscret.

M. Stewart (Cochrane): Je me demande s'il y a des adjoints présents?

M. Osler: La même chose s'applique-t-elle aux adjoints?

Le président: Je pense qu'il faut au moins avoir une recommandation du Conseil consultatif pour le renvoyer s'il est incapable d'assumer ses fonctions.

M. Osler: Je pense que vous aurez toutes les difficultés du monde à le renvoyer pour des raisons telles que l'alcoolisme, la narcomanie ou l'adultère, etc... Il n'en reste pas moins un bibliothécaire de premier ordre. Je ne sais pas s'il y a une raison particulière pour laisser ce problème en dehors de la Loi.

Le président: Je pense que c'est une question de procédure et ceci est inclus dans la Loi du Conseil des Arts du Canada et la loi des Musées nationaux du Canada.

M. Osler: Il faudrait alors toutes les réviser.

Le président: Le Comité est là pour ça.

M. Osler: Est-ce que quelqu'un pourrait élaborer sur la question de l'article 62 ou 52 de la Loi sur les droits d'auteur.

Mlle Ball: Ils sont maintenant englobés par un règlement. C'est l'article 11. Autrefois cette disposition figurait dans la Loi sur les droits d'auteur et maintenant elle est inscrite dans la Loi de la bibliothèque nationale.

M. Osler: Et pour maintenir un droit d'auteur ne faut-il pas le faire enregistrer quelque part au Canada?

Mlle Ball: Oui, bien sûr.

M. Osler: J'ai écrit trois livres et ce n'est qu'après la publication de chaque livre que la bibliothèque m'a demandé de voir à ce que les livres soient rendus.

[Texte]

Miss Ball: Your publisher should have seen to that.

Mr. Osler: My publisher told me, in one case when something came up, that in Canada the onus of proving copyright was upon the one who wanted to use the copyright, in other words the copyright was mine unless somebody could prove it was not, which is diametrically opposed to the United States. In the United States you have to deposit something in Congress or it is not copyright.

Miss Ball: Yes.

The Chairman: Under the Copyright Act, if I recall correctly, it was an automatic procedure on the part of the publisher, not on the part of the author, and this provision, as I understand it, has been taken right out of the Copyright Act and is in the process of being revised and put in this particular Act as a function of the National Library.

Miss Ball: And it is still the publisher, if you notice Section 11, who has to deposit this.

The Chairman: I would suggest that as an author you get in touch with your publisher and find out.

Mr. Osler: I agree. This has quite intrigued me. It is the publisher who has to do this, and the publisher gets fined if he does not. But surely if the Copyright Act were another way around, he would not have to get fined for anything because it would be in his interest to do it anyway.

The Chairman: Your books are probably such good sellers that he did not want to spare the extra copy.

Mr. Osler: Right, I see the point of that.

Mr. Peel: Mr. Osler, if you look at Clause 11, New Publications, I understand that that Clause or a similar one was originally in the Copyright Act and it has been removed from here and placed in here.

The Chairman: Further questions?

Mr. Osler: That is an onus on the publisher but it has not been used properly.

The Chairman: If there are no further questions I would thank the representatives

[Interprétation]

Mlle Ball: C'était à votre éditeur d'y voir.

M. Osler: Mon éditeur m'a dit que quand quelque chose se produit au Canada, la responsabilité de prouver le droit d'auteur, incombait à celui qui voulait se servir du droit d'auteur, en d'autres termes, le droit d'auteur m'appartenait jusqu'à preuve du contraire, ce qui est tout à fait à l'opposé de ce qui se passe aux États-Unis. Aux États-Unis, il faut que quelqu'un fasse valoir ces droits d'auteur au Congrès.

Mlle Ball: Oui.

Le président: Si je me souviens bien, en vertu de la Loi sur les droits d'auteur, les formalités en vue d'obtenir ces droits devaient être remplies automatiquement par l'éditeur et non par l'auteur, et cette disposition, telle que je la conçois a été soustraite à la Loi sur les droits d'auteur et est en voie de révision pour être ajoutée à cette loi-ci comme étant une des conditions qui régissent la Bibliothèque nationale.

Mlle Ball: Et c'est encore l'éditeur qui, conformément à l'article 11, doit faire valoir ces droits.

Le président: Je propose qu'en votre qualité d'auteur, vous vous mettiez en rapport avec votre éditeur pour savoir ce qu'il en est.

M. Osler: Oui, je suis d'accord. Cela m'a bien intrigué. C'est l'éditeur qui paie une amende s'il ne se conforme pas. Mais si la Loi sur les droits d'auteur était autrement conçue, il n'aurait pas à payer d'amende car, de toute façon, ce serait dans son propre intérêt de faire les formalités.

Le président: Vos livres se vendent probablement tellement bien qu'il n'a pas voulu se dispenser d'un exemplaire supplémentaire.

M. Osler: Exact. Je comprends ce que vous voulez dire.

M. Peel: Au sujet de l'article 11, «les nouvelles publications», si je comprends bien, il y avait une disposition similaire se rapportant aux droits d'auteur, qui a été enlevée de là et incluse ici.

Le président: Est-ce qu'il y a d'autres questions?

M. Osler: C'est l'éditeur qui doit faire valoir les droits, mais ça n'a pas été fait convenablement.

Le président: S'il n'y a pas d'autres questions, je pense que les représentants des deux from the two associations for their good humour and giving answers to our questions.

You can be assured that the Committee will very seriously consider the representations which you have made. I think some members are prepared to do their best to impose them upon the Minister when he comes before us.

Mr. Mongrain: Maybe I should apologize, Mr. Chairman, but I was not through with my questioning. Could I risk another question or two?

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Mongrain, I called for further questions.

Mr. Mongrain: Est-ce que vos associations reçoivent des subventions des provinces qu'elles représentent?

Do you have any help from the provinces?

Miss Ball: Yes, we have.

Mr. Mongrain: Do you receive any grants from municipalities?

Miss Ball: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. Mongrain: Your individual libraries probably do, but...

Miss Ball: Oh yes.

Mr. Mongrain: ...the national organizations you represent do not receive any?

Miss Ball: No.

Mr. Mongrain: Do you receive any gifts or grants from private organizations such as foundations or things like that?

Miss Ball: Occasionally, but usually for some specific purpose such as a scholarship.

Mr. Mongrain: Do you get anything from some of the American organizations?

Miss Ball: Occasionally but, again, for specific purposes.

Mr. Mongrain: Et l'Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française?

Mr. Auger: Non.

Mr. Mongrain: Mais, en avez-vous ici au Canada?

Mr. Auger: On en reçoit au moins d'une province.

Mr. Mongrain: De la province de Québec?

Mr. Auger: De la province de Québec.

associations ont magnifiquement répondu à nos questions et il paraîtrait certain que le Comité étudiera très certainement leurs instances.

Et en ce qui me concerne, je suis disposé imposer ces idées au ministre quand il viendra devant nous.

Mr. Mongrain: Puis-je encore poser une ou deux questions?

Le président: Je regrette, monsieur Mongrain, mais j'ai déjà demandé s'il y avait d'autres questions à poser.

Mr. Mongrain: Do your associations receive grants from the provinces they represent?

Recevez-vous l'aide des provinces?

Mlle Ball: Oui, nous avons des subventions.

Mr. Mongrain: Recevez-vous des subventions des municipalités?

Mlle Ball: Pas que je sache.

Mr. Mongrain: Mais les bibliothèques privées en reçoivent probablement, mais...

Mlle Ball: Oui certes.

Mr. Mongrain: Les organismes nationaux que vous représentez, ne reçoivent-ils rien?

Mlle Ball: Non.

Mr. Mongrain: Avez-vous des dons d'organismes privés, comme des fondations et autres?

Mlle Ball: Nous en recevons à l'occasion, mais pour certains buts précis, comme les bourses d'étude.

Mr. Mongrain: En recevez-vous des organisations américaines?

Mlle Ball: A l'occasion, mais toujours pour des buts précis.

Mr. Mongrain: And the Association canadienne des bibliothécaires de langue française?

Mr. Auger: No.

Mr. Mongrain: But do you get any here in Canada?

Mr. Auger: We receive some at least from one province.

Mr. Mongrain: From the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Auger: From the Province of Quebec.

[Texte]

M. Mongrain: Vous n'en recevez pas des autres provinces?

M. Auger: Pas à ma connaissance.

M. Mongrain: En recevez-vous de certains individus?

M. Auger: Non, mais de certaines organisations, comme celle des éditeurs, par exemple, qui vont payer une bourse.

M. Mongrain: Comme Association des bibliothécaires de langue française, vous avez probablement un budget pour vos activités. Quel est approximativement le montant annuel de votre budget?

Could I ask the same question in English.

M. Auger: Je pense que c'est à peu près $60,000.

Mr. Mongrain: And your English organization would be what, approximately? We will allow you a thousand dollars difference.

The Chairman: This is your national organization.

Mr. Peel thinks it is $40,000 to $50,000.

Miss Ball: No; it is about $90,000.

Mr. Mongrain: $100,000.

Miss Ball: Between $90,000 and $100,000.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you, that will be all, Mr. Chairman.

Miss Ball: Mostly from the members' fees.

The Chairman: I thank you again. Perhaps when we again have an act to revise the National Library you will come back.

[Interprétation]

Mr. Mongrain: You do not receive any from the other provinces?

Mr. Auger: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Mongrain: Do you receive some from certain individuals?

Mr. Auger: No, but from certain organizations, such as that of the publishers for a scholarship.

Mr. Mongrain: As the Association des bibliothécaires de langue française you probably have a budget for your activities. What is the approximate figure of your annual budget?

Puis-je poser la même question en anglais?

Mr. Auger: I think $60,000.

M. Mongrain: Et dans votre association de langue anglaise? Quel serait à peu près le chiffre? A mille dollars près.

Le président: Il s'agit de votre association nationale. Monsieur Peel croit que le montant se situe entre $40,000 et $50,000.

Mlle Ball: Non, ce ne serait pas... Ce serait à peu près $90,000.

M. Mongrain: $100,000.

Mlle Ball: Entre $90,000 et $100,00.

M. Mongrain: Merci, ce sera tout, monsieur le président.

Mlle Ball: Les fonds proviennent surtout des cotisations des membres.

Le président: Ce sera tout. J'espère que vous reviendrez parmi nous quand la Loi de la bibliothèque nationale sera révisée. Je pense que vous reviendrez.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic apparatus)

Friday, March 7, 1969

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see a quorum. When we adjourned our last meeting on Tuesday on consideration of the estimates, Mr. Macquarrie had the floor. There were a number of questions that he wanted to ask the Minister, so I will recognize Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Macquarrie: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A question of continuing concern to me and, I notice, to many members of the House, is the whole problem of the worker's morale. The statement from the Council of Postal Unions is a most disturbing one. It is difficult to reconcile the seeming complacency of the Minister in the face of what seems to me to be obvious unrest or worse among the postal workers—the letter carriers in particular.

Yesterday we had reports from Vancouver which were discomfiting. I heard this morning that District 7 is out on a wildcat strike. There will be no mail moving today and, of course, not much will move tomorrow since it is the sixth day of the week on which, like the Lord, the Post Office rests and none will move on Sunday.

I wonder whether the Minister could tell us just what the situation is? I hope it is as good as he has often seemed to make it appear, but I would like to have some details.

Hon. Eric Kierans (Postmaster General): First of all, the Post Office does not rest on Saturdays and Sundays. The sorting of the mail and the forwarding of the mail to the various points across Canada goes on—all of that keeps on going.

With respect to the changes, there are two parties involved, let us say, the unions and the management of the Post Office. One party demands that the letter carriers punch in the morning; come back at noon and punch in again; punch out again at one o'clock and also come back at four o'clock or when their day is over to punch in again.

The other side says, "No, you have to punch in in the morning, of course, but from then on there is no need to come back to the Post Office. You can go straight on through to the end of your day and then you can go home".

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le vendredi 7 mars 1969

Le président: Messieurs, nous avons quorum. Lorsque le Comité s'est ajourné, mardi, monsieur Macquarrie avait la parole. Il désirait poser plusieurs questions au ministre. Je lui cède donc la parole.

M. Macquarrie: Une question qui m'intéresse, et qui intéresse plusieurs députés, c'est celle du moral des employés. La déclaration du Conseil des unions des postes est très inquiétante. Et il est assez difficile de comprendre l'attitude du ministre devant la situation qui existe actuellement chez les employés des postes.

Hier, les nouvelles qui nous parvenaient de Vancouver n'étaient pas encourageantes. J'apprends aujourd'hui que les employés du district numéro 7 se sont mis en grève. Le courrier demeurera sur place aujourd'hui et la situation ne sera guère meilleure, demain, puisque c'est la sixième journée de la semaine, et qu'en ce jour les Postes se reposent. Dimanche, rien ne se fera.

Le ministre pourrait-il nous dire quelle est la situation? J'espère qu'elle est aussi bonne qu'il le laisse entendre, mais j'aimerais obtenir des détails.

L'hon. Eric Kierans (ministre des Postes): Je dirai d'abord que le bureau de poste ne se repose pas le samedi et le dimanche. Le courrier est trié et expédié aux quatre coins du pays.

Pour ce qui est des changements, il y a deux parties en cause, le Syndicat et la Direction du ministère des postes. L'une exige que les facteurs enregistrent l'heure de leur arrivée sur l'horloge-poinçon, le matin; qu'ils reviennent à midi poinçonner à nouveau; et qu'ils fassent de même à une heure ainsi qu'à la fin de leur journée de travail.

L'autre partie déclare: «Non. Vous poinçonnez le matin puis vous n'avez plus besoin de revenir au bureau de poste. Vous accomplissez votre journée de travail et rentrez chez-vous».

One would expect that it would be the management or the Post Office itself that is demanding all of these returns to the Post Office, but curiously enough it is not, it is the union. The union is demanding that its letter carriers do all of this. They are the Simon Legree, let us say, in the situation. The management of the Post Office appears to have more confidence in the work and dedication of the letter carriers than their own union leaders have.

We said to the letter carriers that from now on after the sorting you are to go on about your job; you are to deliver the mail along your route and along that route there will be relay boxes at which bundles will be deposited at various times during the day prior to your reaching these particular points on the route. I think this will be much more efficient, there will be much less pressure on the letter carrier and they are gradually coming to realize this.

In response to the directive which the unions sent out which they did not have a right to send out because they are not management, to the 12,000 letter carriers, they got about 800 in the first instance to obey their directive at the beginning of the week, but by the end of the week that figure down to less than 200. Obviously the unions were not very happy. They were not very happy with this so they sent out another directive reiterating their demands and it went up, again, to something between 600 and 700. Again by the end of the week the letter carriers realized that this was not necessary and out of 12,000 something less, again, than 200—a hard core—obeyed the union directive.

I think this really is a struggle for the management and direction of the Post Office. We insist on the right to meange and to administer the Post Office and that is all there is to it.

Mr. Macquarrie: You referred to the carriers as being Simon Legree. Are there not, perhaps, other reasons why they might wish to return to the Post Office?

Mr. Kierans: Perhaps you could suggest some. I do not know of any.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have heard it suggested that they like to have access to a washroom.

Mr. Kierans: We have not prevented them from returning; we simply said it was not necessary. The letter carriers have a choice. We are really very good bosses, if you will. The letter carriers have a choice at noon, as far as we are concerned, but far as the unions are concerned, they have no choice. They have to return to the local Post Office. We said to the letter carriers, "You can return to the Post Office if you want"—so we are even with the unions—on the other hand, if you want to go to a restaurant you can do that: on the other hand, if you want to go home, you can do that. So the letter carriers have much more freedom under our system than they had under the old system or

[Interpretation]

On pourrait s'attendre à ce que ce soit la direction qui exige tous ces retours au bureau de poste alors que ces exigences sont celles du syndicat. Il semble que la direction a plus confiance en ses employés que le syndicat qui les représente.

Nous avons tout simplement dit aux facteurs qu'après avoir trié le courrier ils n'avaient qu'à aller livrer. Tout le long de la route qu'emprunte le facteur sont disposées des boîtes de relais. Des paquets de lettres sont déposés dans ces boîtes à divers moments de la journée, avant que le facteur n'atteigne cet endroit précis. Je crois que cette méthode est beaucoup plus efficace, que la pression est moins forte sur les facteurs et que ces derniers commencent à le réaliser.

Les dirigeants syndicaux ont fait parvenir des directives aux 12,000 facteurs, ce qu'ils n'avaient pas le droit de faire puisqu'ils ne font pas partie de la Direction des postes. Environ 800 employés ont obéi à ces directives au début de la semaine, mais vers la fin de la semaine leur nombre était passé à moins de 200. Évidemment, le syndicat était très peu heureux. De nouvelles directives ont été expédiées et le nombre de ceux qui les ont respectées est passé à environ 600 ou 700. Mais les facteurs ont réalisé que ces directives étaient inutiles et vers la fin de la semaine ceux qui les respectaient étaient moins de 200.

C'est, en fait, une lutte pour l'obtention des pouvoirs de direction au ministère des Postes. Nous insistons sur le fait que ces pouvoirs nous appartiennent. C'est tout.

M. Macquarrie: N'y aurait-il pas d'autres raisons pour lesquelles les facteurs voudraient pouvoir retourner au bureau de poste?

M. Kierans: Vous pourriez peut-être m'en citer une; j'en connais aucune.

M. Macquarrie: Je me suis laissé dire qu'ils aimeraient avoir accès à une salle de toilette.

M. Kierans: Nous ne les empêchons pas de retourner au bureau de poste. Nous leur disons qu'ils ne sont pas obligés d'y retourner. Ils ont le choix. En somme nous sommes de bons patrons, quoi! Avec nous, les facteurs ont le choix, à midi. Avec le syndicat, non: ils doivent retourner au bureau de poste. Nous disons aux facteurs qu'ils peuvent retourner au bureau de poste s'ils le désirent, ou, s'ils préfèrent, qu'ils peuvent aller au restaurant ou chez eux. Le choix que nous leur offrons est bien meilleur. Ils ont plus de liberté.

under the directives that are presently being distributed by the union. A letter carrier has the freedom of choice, he can do what he likes.

At one time that would not have meant all that much, but now it does. We have eliminated, for example, one of the archaic customs in the Post Office which said that a letter carrier could not handle the route on which he lived. In other words, if you were a letter carrier and lived in the east end of Montreal, you could probably wind up with a route in the west end of Montreal. This is no longer true. We have said to letter carriers—of course, we have to take into account the claims of seniority here—that they can work on the route in which they live and can get as close to that route as can be worked out with the unions, having regard for seniority. Obviously if five or six letter carriers live on a given route only one of them can handle that particular route.

So I think there is a great deal more flexibility in the attitude of the Post Office than there is in the attitude of the union leaders.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would be interested in hearing someone who is a letter carrier speak in such enthusiastic terms about it.

Mr. Kierans: I can give you figures. When I said that out of about 12,000 there are less than 200 who are following these directives, you have an idea of the reaction of the rank and file.

Mr. Macquarrie: Is the nonactivity in District 7 today not supported by the letter carriers in general?

Mr. Kierans: You suggested that there must be some other reasons. You did not suggest what these other reasons might be. In the continual juggling between unions and management there may be these reasons. I would like to know what they are and perhaps this is another ploy. I am getting a full report on the reasons why there should have been these wildcat strikes this morning, but I do not have it yet.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, it is very disturbing. I suppose you know of no particular imposition upon the workers in District 7 that does not prevail in all the other districts?

Mr. Kierans: That is right.

Mr. Macquarrie: Therefore, the working conditions against which they are taking action is prevalent across the whole country and conceivably the same kind of response as is occurring in District 7 could be upon us in other parts of the country?

[Interprétation]

qu'autrefois ou qu'ils en auraient en suivant les directives de leur syndicat.

Il était un temps où cela n'aurait pas voulu dire grand-chose mais cela veut dire beaucoup maintenant. Nous avons éliminé certaines des coutumes archaïques en vigueur au ministère et selon lesquelles un facteur ne pouvait livrer le courrier dans la rue dans laquelle il habitait. Un facteur de l'est de Montréal pouvait facilement être appelé à travailler dans l'ouest de la ville. Aujourd'hui, cela ne se fait plus. Nous disons aux facteurs, compte tenu de la séniorité, qu'ils peuvent travailler dans le district qu'ils habitent. Il est évident que si cinq ou six facteurs habitent le long d'un même parcours, un seul pourra distribuer le courrier sur ce parcours. Nous croyons faire preuve de plus de flexibilité que le syndicat.

M. Macquarrie: J'aimerais trouver un facteur qui soit aussi enthousiaste, à ce sujet, que vous l'êtes.

M. Kierans: Je puis vous citer certains chiffres. En vous disant que des quelque 12,000 facteurs, moins de 200 ont suivi les directives syndicales, vous pouvez vous faire une idée de l'enthousiasme des facteurs.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que l'arrêt de travail survenu dans le district numéro 7 ne reçoit pas l'appui de l'ensemble des facteurs?

M. Kierans: Vous avez dit qu'il doit y avoir d'autres raisons mais vous n'avez pas dit quelles étaient ces raisons. J'aimerais les connaître. Je dois recevoir, ce matin, un rapport sur les raisons qui ont entraîné ces grèves, mais je ne l'ai pas encore en main.

M. Macquarrie: Je suppose que vous n'êtes au courant d'aucune obligation qui aurait été imposée aux employés du district numéro 7 et qui ne l'aurait pas été ailleurs?

M. Kierans: C'est exact.

M. Macquarrie: Donc, les conditions de travail contre lesquelles ils s'élèvent, prévalent dans l'ensemble du pays et les réactions enregistrées dans le district numéro 7 pourraient se vérifier ailleurs au pays.

[Text]

Mr. Kierans: The unions there may be more militant or they may want to make a point. As I said, I still do not have the information or report on the reasons why.

Mr. Macquarrie: Some of the workers involved maintain publicly that the imposition of new regulations require them to work until six and seven o'clock in the evening. This may be flexible but it does not look too appealing.

Mr. Kierans: I would like to see them prove the statement. Of course, there are letter carriers who have worked overtime and have been paid for it. There is no question of not paying people who have to work overtime.

Mr. Macquarrie: Do you have people looking into this matter and discussing it with the—

Mr. Kierans: No.

Mr. Macquarrie: —district workers?

Mr. Kierans: Every day and all day.

Mr. Macquarrie: Do you feel you are making any progress at all in convincing the letter carriers that these new regulations are not deleterious to their interests?

Mr. Kierans: I have received very many reports from the members that they are quite happy with them; that they feel there is a new look in the post office. I would not make the same claim for the national executive. They probably would have felt it would have been better to institute such changes at the time of renegotiation of contracts, and so on, and they probably would have wanted to bargain one situation against another, but as far as I am concerned management has the right to take such decisions.

We have taken a decision to eliminate a wasteful period—that is, a second sortation in the afternoon—and, as I said in the House yesterday, if the national executive wants to grieve this issue they can go ahead. We will waive the second and third steps in such a grievance and go as quickly as possible to the fourth and final level, an adjudication by a third party. We are quite confident of the results. I do not think any grievance has been filed yet and we are the ones who are anxious for them to file a grievance.

Mr. Macquarrie: It is clear that a definite form of industrial action has been taken in District No. 7. Is it the case that in many parts of the Post Office Department a deterioration in service—as Mr. Houle and Mr. Decarie have mentioned—is a form of reaction against this? Can we relate the very, very obvious deterioration in mail delivery, such as we are getting in the

[Interpretation]

M. Kierans: Les syndiqués sont peut-être plus militants à cet endroit. Comme je l'ai dit plus tôt, je n'ai pas encore reçu de rapport sur les raisons du débrayage.

M. Macquarrie: Certains de ces employés soutiennent publiquement que la mise en œuvre des nouveaux règlements les force à travailler jusqu'à 6 heures ou 7 heures le soir. C'est peut-être variable, mais cela ne semble pas très attirant pour le facteur.

M. Kierans: J'aimerais bien voir la preuve de ce qu'ils vous avancent. Il y a peut-être des facteurs qui ont travaillé en surtemps mais ils ont été payés pour cela. Nous payons les gens qui travaillent en surtemps.

M. Macquarrie: Avez-vous étudié cette question et en avez-vous parlé avec... ?

M. Kierans: Non.

M. Macquarrie: ... les dirigeants dans les districts et la cause?

M. Kierans: Oui, continuellement.

M. Macquarrie: Pensez-vous que vous faites un progrès quand il s'agit de convaincre les facteurs que les nouveaux règlements ne nuisent pas à leurs intérêts?

M. Kierans: J'ai entendu plusieurs rapports de membres même qu'ils sont très satisfaits des nouveaux règlements. Ils s'aperçoivent que le Bureau de poste prend une allure plus jeune, plus dynamique. Je ne pourrais pas dire la même chose des directeurs nationaux. Je suppose qu'ils pensent qu'il aurait été mieux d'instituer ces changements au moment de la re-négociation du contrat, ils auraient voulu probablement négocier plusieurs autres points mais en attendant que je suis concerné la direction avait le droit de prendre les décisions que nous avons prises.

Nous avons pris une décision d'éliminer une période qui faisait perdre du temps, le second tri au cours de l'après-midi mais comme je l'ai dit en Chambre hier, les dirigeants nationaux veulent soulever un grief sur cette question, qu'ils le fassent. Nous allons passer par les deuxième et troisième étapes des griefs et le faire aussi rapidement que possible pour en arriver à l'arbitrage de façon à régler le problème de façon satisfaisante pour les deux parties. Je ne pense pas qu'il y ait eu de griefs de soumis jusqu'ici. Nous sommes anxieux de voir ces griefs pour savoir ce qu'ils veulent.

M. Macquarrie: Il y a eu des mesures de prises dans le district numéro 7. Est-ce le cas où dans plusieurs départements du ministère des Postes, il y a une détérioration du service comme Monsieur Houle et Monsieur Décarie l'ont mentionné? Est-ce une forme de réaction contre les nouveaux règlements? Est-ce que nous pouvons relier la détérioration évidente, par ouse and elsewhere, to a form of reaction against this position?

Mr. Kierans: That would imply disloyalty on the part of the employees of the post office, and I certainly do not believe that.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Houle and Mr. Decarie said:

Inefficiency is fast becoming the new guide to operations.

the word "guide"—

Mr. Kierans: They are criticizing their own members. It is not the Postmaster General who is criticizing them.

0955

Mr. Macquarrie: I am not concerned about whether or not they are criticizing their own members. I am interested in whether or not they are clearly revealing an attitude among your employees?

Mr. Kierans: I maintain that attitude does not exist among the vast, vast majority of the employees of the post office.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary, Mr. Chairman. Would the slowdown be attributable to working to rule?

Mr. Kierans: No, I do not think so. We have no evidence that they are working to rule.

Mr. Macquarrie: Are you satisfied there is evidence that service has in fact deteriorated and that the mails are not moving as rapidly as they could, should and did before this rule was imposed?

Mr. Kierans: What I will suggest is that the delivery of mail and service must be improved a great deal.

Mr. Macquarrie: Would you say that the delivery of mail has deteriorated since the new rule in reference to arbitration was imposed?

Mr. Kierans: No, I am not saying that at all. I do not think that you could prove such a statement without a comparison between the two periods of time; today and whatever other period of time you choose to compare it with. I would say that the public generally is very much more sensitive to the efficiency, or lack of it, in the post office than they have ever been before. The reason for this is that there has been a tremendous increase in rates in all classes of mail and therefore, now that the public have to pay more for it, they are evaluating the service they are getting much more than they have been accustomed to doing.

[Interprétation]

exemple nous nous apercevons que la livraison du courrier à la Chambre et partout ailleurs, à une réaction contre cette imposition?

M. Kierans: Cela voudrait dire qu'il y a un manque de loyauté de la part des employés du ministère des Postes et je ne crois pas que cela existe.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur Houle et Monsieur Décarie disent que l'inefficacité devient le nouveau guide de fonctionnement.

M. Kierans: C'est une critique qu'ils font de leurs propres membres, ce n'est pas le ministre qui les critique.

M. Macquarrie: Je ne me demande pas s'ils critiquent ou non leurs membres mais j'aimerais savoir si oui ou non ils révèlent une attitude qui existe actuellement chez vos employés.

M. Kierans: Moi je soutiens que cette attitude n'existe pas chez la grande majorité de nos employés.

M. Dinsdale: Une question supplémentaire, M. le président. Est-ce que le ralentissement est dû au fait que les employés travaillent en s'en tenant uniquement aux règlements?

M. Kierans: Je ne pense pas.

M. Macquarrie: Croyez-vous qu'il y a des preuves que le service s'est en fait détérioré, que le courrier n'est pas acheminé aussi rapidement que l'on pouvait, qu'on le peut et que cela se faisait auparavant.

M. Kierans: Quand je vous ai écrit et qu'il y a une livraison du courrier, eh bien oui, il est possible que le courrier se soit amélioré.

M. Macquarrie: Je crois que la situation s'est détériorée depuis que les nouveaux règlements concernant le tri ont été imposés.

M. Kierans: Non, je ne veux pas dire cela du tout. Je ne pense pas que vous puissiez prouver une telle chose sans faire une comparaison entre les deux périodes de temps entre aujourd'hui et l'autre période que vous voudriez utiliser comme base de comparaison. Je dirais que, en général, le public est plus sensible au manque d'efficacité du ministère des Postes qu'il ne l'était autrefois. La raison pour cela c'est qu'il y a eu une grande augmentation dans les tarifs postaux, dans toutes les catégories de courrier et le public ayant à payer plus pour son service postal surveille de plus près la qualité du service qu'il reçoit aujourd'hui par rapport à ce qu'il recevait.

[Text]

In other words, people are paying very much more attention to the postmarks and the dates on which letters were mailed than they were, let us say, last winter. The service then might have been about on the same level as it is today but they would not have realized it.

Mr. Macquarrie: They are paying more for it and they have been receiving suggestions from certain people that service was in fact going to improve, and now they are looking for the fruits of these predictions.

Mr. Kierans: That is right.

Mr. Macquarrie: You forecast improvements and made the new regulations; surely you are assessing this very carefully and by now you must have some evidence as to whether or not the system is working. You quarrel with Mr. Houle and Mr. Decarie. Are you affirming that the service is as satisfactory as it was before your new regulations?

Mr. Kierans: No, I am not affirming that at all because we have task forces which are very much concerned with the operations in the three major distribution centres, Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal, and we are going through the operations with a fine-tooth comb to see how we can improve them; how we can get 75,000 letters out half an hour faster, which cuts off a day in transit, how we can better adjust the sorting periods to the transportation services, whether they are train, truck or air line schedules or whatever they may be, and we are coming up with some reasonable improvements.

Mr. Macquarrie: Are you still maintaining or developing an open mind on the general question as to whether this new regulation is an improvement or the reverse?

Mr. Kierans: I think a regulation that eliminates approximately 8,000 hours a day of wasted effort is a good regulation, and we are sticking with that.

Mr. Macquarrie: But you have not yet seen the evidence to verify your prejudgment that it is a good one.

Mr. Kierans: I think eliminating 8,000 wasted hours a day is a good regulation.

Mr. Macquarrie: Even at the price of poorer service, slower delivery?

Mr. Kierans: This still has to be proved.

Mr. Macquarrie: Does not the improvement in service also have to be proven?

Mr. Kierans: Oh yes.

[Interpretation]

Les gens paient beaucoup plus d'attention aux dates auxquelles les lettres sont reçues par rapport aux dates où les lettres ont été expédiées. Je sais que l'hiver dernier le service était à un niveau semblable à celui d'aujourd'hui mais les gens ne s'en rendent pas compte.

M. Macquarrie: Ils paient plus mais est-ce que nous n'avons pas entendu des gens dire que le service devait s'améliorer, qu'ils attendent de voir le fruit de vos prédictions se réaliser. Avez-vous prédit des améliorations dans le service?

M. Kierans: C'est vrai.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce qu'en vertu des nouveaux règlements, vous vous attendez à avoir de nouvelles améliorations? Si oui, vous avez étudié certainement la situation à fond. Est-ce que vous, vous affirmez contrairement à monsieur Décarie et monsieur Houle que le service est aussi satisfaisant qu'il l'était avant que les règlements nouveaux soient instaurés?

M. Kierans: Non je n'affirme pas cela du tout. Nous avons des équipes d'experts qui s'intéressent particulièrement au travail dans les trois grands centres de distribution, entre autre: Ottawa, Toronto et Montréal. Nous étudions les opérations, nous étudions fond toutes les opérations pour voir comment nous pouvons expédier plus rapidement les lettres, gagner une demi-heure ici ou là, sauver ainsi une journée dans le transit, raccourcir la période de tri, améliorer la rapidité du transport en utilisant par exemple des avions ou d'autres moyens. Nous avons donc des améliorations importantes qui s'en viennent.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que vous soutenez toujours est-ce que vous avez toujours un esprit assez ouvert quant à la question de savoir si oui ou non les nouveaux règlements sont une amélioration.

M. Kierans: Eh bien ces règlements éliminent environ 9,000 heures par jour d'efforts inutiles. Je crains donc que ce sont de bons règlements.

M. Macquarrie: Mais vous n'avez pas encore des preuves pour vérifier votre assertion?

M. Kierans: Je crois qu'un règlement qui élimine 8,000 heures inutiles par jour est un bon règlement.

M. Macquarrie: Même si cela amène un ralentissement du service et de la livraison du courrier?

M. Kierans: Cela est loin d'être prouvé.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que l'amélioration ne doit pas être prouvée?

M. Kierans: Oh oui.

[texte]

[Interprétation]

Mr. Macquarrie: I am reminded of a certain visceral theological question that Cromwell once asked, whether or not perhaps you were wrong in this prediction.

M. Macquarrie: Eh bien toute cette question ne revient-elle pas à savoir si vous avez raison oui ou non quant à cette prédiction?

1000

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on the general subject of union problems and working conditions?

Le président: Avez-vous encore des questions au sujet des syndicats et des conditions de travail?

Mr. Kierans: I would like to make one remark, Mr. Chairman. Professors can give lectures on the need for improving productivity. The Economic Council can devote several chapters in each of its annual reports to the need for increasing productivity in Canada. We subscribe to all of these objectives. The actual carrying out and improving of productivity is a bit more difficult than those who claim this as an objective sometimes realize.

M. Kierans: J'aimerais faire une observation, monsieur le président. Il y a eu des causeries sur les besoins d'améliorer la productivité et le Conseil économique a consacré plusieurs chapitres de son rapport annuel à la nécessité d'accroître la productivité au Canada. Nous souscrivons à tous ces objectifs. L'exécution et l'accélération de la productivité est actuellement un peu plus difficile que ceux qui disent que c'est objectif facile à réaliser.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move into the area of the problems created for the periodical press as a result of the increases in rates.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais parler maintenant des problèmes qui affligent la presse et les périodiques depuis l'augmentation des tarifs postaux.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, we went through that fairly thoroughly before, so I think perhaps we had better find out if there are any members who have any other subjects to bring up before we go back to that.

Le président: Nous en avons parlé suffisamment auparavant pour y revenir. Nous devrions continuer sur le même sujet. Est-ce qu'il y a d'autres questions à poser? Y aurait-il d'autres questions des députés? Allez-y.

Does any other member have another subject he would like to bring up before going back?

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the Minister is aware that certain segments of the periodical press are facing considerable financial distress, anxiety and concern as a result of the drastic increase in mail costs, and in the way the costs are being implemented. I think most concerned in this regard is the farm press, the country press, the weekly press and the ethnic press of Canada, which occupies a unique role and plays a very special part in communication amongst the various ethnic groups in Canada. Now I see the Royal Canadian Legion has found it has a special problem as well because of the rate increases. Several publications have already gone out of print or gone into bankruptcy, I suppose, such as, the Family Herald, the Farmer's Advocate, and the Country Guide, papers which have played a very influential and useful role in communication amongst the farm community, some of them almost since confederation.

M. Dinsdale: Je crois que le ministre est conscient que certains secteurs de périodiques font face à des troubles financiers considérables, et sont troublés et inquiétés à la suite de l'augmentation formidable des frais postaux et aussi de la mise en exécution des nouveaux tarifs. Je crois que les plus inquiétés à cet égard sont la presse agricole, la presse rurale, la presse hebdomadaire et la presse ethnique au Canada, laquelle joue un rôle unique et très spécial dans la communication entre les différents groupes ethniques au Canada. Et je vois maintenant que la Légion royale canadienne a aussi des problèmes particuliers, à cause de l'augmentation des tarifs postaux. Beaucoup de publications ne seront plus publiées pour cause de banqueroute, par exemple le Family Herald, le Farmer's Advocate et le Country Guide qui auraient une vocation tout à fait influente parmi la collectivité agricole. Plusieurs de ces journaux servaient depuis la Confédération.

I presume that the Minister has received recommendations and representations from some of the periodical press whereby the problem might be partially resolved. I am wondering if he has given careful consideration to the recommendation that some of the stress might be eased by spreading the rate adjustments over a long period of time. I know in the House was indicated that this would be so but, in actual fact, it would appear that this is not taking place.

Je suppose que le ministre a entendu des avis et des instances de certains représentants de ces journaux, disant comment on pourrait résoudre partiellement le problème. Je me demande s'il a songé sérieusement à ces recommandations afin d'alléger la situation en répartissant les taux sur une période de temps. Je sais qu'en Chambre, on a dit que cela se produirait, mais, en fait cela ne semble pas s'être produit.

[Text]

My colleague, Mr. Macquarrie, when dealing with this problem in the House referred to the cutting off of the dog's tail bit by bit to ease the pain. I think at the moment it is a process of cutting off the dog's tail with one foul sweep.

The main problem is the per pound increase from 1.5 cents to 4 cents per pound and particularly the 2 cent per copy increase. What action is contemplated to ease the pain and assist in the adjustment process of some of these farm periodicals, the ethnic press, and so on, which operate on a limited budget in order to make it possible for them gradually to adjust and survive rate increases that go up as high as 2,000 per cent?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, I think we have been through this on a number of occasions. As a matter of fact I am seeing the farm press again this afternoon at 2.30. The Bill has been adopted, it has been proclaimed and it is in effect. Every group has a special cause to plead.

● 1005

Mr. Macquarrie the other day was mentioning some of the scientific and learned journals, for example, the Queen's Quarterly. The cost of their postal rates has gone up, for example, from $329 to $419. Mr. Macquarrie as a subscriber to the Queen's Quarterly will now have to pay exactly 4 cents a year more for the Queen's Quarterly, if they choose to charge him. However, one can make a lot of speeches about how badly hit the Queen's Quarterly is, how badly hit the Canadian Medical Association Journal is and how badly hit the farm publications are.

I know that a number of the farm publications, for example, have a nominal subscription rate, let us say of $1 per year. Their real subscription rate is about 10 cents a year or 25 cents a year, because they have group rates that they give to co-operatives or to their members. In the majority of these cases an increase in the rate from 10 cents a year or 25 cents a year to 50 cents a year would cover the whole increase in the postal rates. So I do not think the general public of Canada should be expected to pay for that.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is not the question I posed.

Mr. Kierans: You mentioned also that the Family Herald for example went out of business. This is right, but the Family Herald went out of business long before the postal rates were increased, several months before I became Postmaster General. I do not object to being tagged with the blame for all of these things but I think we had better observe the facts of the situation.

Mr. Dinsdale: The question I propounded was: is there to be a gradual implementation of the rate in-

[Interpretation]

Mon collègue, M. Macquarrie, à la chambre, a parlé de couper la queue du chien morceau par morceau. À l'heure actuelle, je crois qu'on coupe la queue du chien en un seul coup.

Mais le principal problème c'est l'accroissement de 1.5 cents la livre à 4 cents et, particulièrement l'augmentation de 2 cents par exemplaires. Quelle mesure envisage-t-on pour atténuer le problème, pour avoir certains ajustements au problème de la presse ethnique, de la presse agricole, etc., qui opèrent sur un budget limité, afin de leur permettre de s'ajuster graduellement et de survivre à ces tarifs postaux qui ont augmenté de près de 2,000 pour cent dans certains cas.

M. Kierans: M. le président, je crois que nous avons parlé, à maintes reprises, de la presse agricole. Après-midi, le bill a été adopté et même sanctionné, est maintenant en vigueur. Chaque groupe a une cause à plaider.

M. Macquarrie a mentionné l'autre jour certaines revues scientifiques comme le Queen's Quarterly qui a augmenté de $329 à $419. M. Macquarrie souscrit le Queen's Quarterly il doit maintenant payer 4 cents de plus chaque année pour ce journal, s'ils veulent le continuer. On peut toutefois faire beaucoup de discours à ce sujet, à propos des souffrances du Queen's Quarterly, du Canadian Medical Association Journal et des publications agricoles.

Je sais qu'un certain nombre de publications agricoles, par exemple, ont un taux de souscriptions nominal par an, soit, disons, de $1 par année. Leur taux réel de souscriptions est de $0.10 ou de $0.25 par an parce qu'ils ont des tarifs collectifs que l'on donne aux co-opératives ou à leurs membres. Dans la plupart des cas un accroissement du tarif de $0.10 ou $0.25 par an, de $0.50 par an couvrirait l'augmentation des tarifs postaux. Et je ne crois pas que le grand public devra acquitter ces frais.

M. Dinsdale: Ce n'est pas la question que je voulais soulever.

M. Kierans: Vous avez parlé du Family Herald devenant en banqueroute, mais il avait des difficultés financières bien avant l'augmentation des tarifs postaux et même avant que je devienne ministre des Postes. Cela ne me fait rien de prendre le blâme, mais je crois qu'on devrait considérer les faits.

M. Dinsdale: Je ne veux pas pousser la chose trop loin, mais je crois qu'il faut tenir compte de ce fait cases to help some publications? I shall be giving you in a moment to indicate, for example, that the ethnic press costs will go up astronomically because of their limited circulation and the Royal Canadian Legion distribution costs now will be higher than the costs of printing.

Mr. Kierans: I have met with Judge Lindal, Charlie Dojack and all of the others of the ethnic press on several occasions.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is there going to be an abrupt implementation on April 1, or is there going to be a reasonable approach as in the States where the rate increases were not as extreme, yet it was recognized that they had to be implemented over a period of time to make a reasonable adjustment to the changed financial circumstances possible. Is this suddenly going to be implemented on April 1, or is there going to be a gradual implementation?

Mr. Kierans: That is the way the Bill reads, Mr. Dinsdale, you know that, and I am bound to act in accordance with the law and the legislation. The minimum charge of 2 cents is being implemented on April 1 and there is no way I could change it even if I wanted to and I do not want to.

There is an extension for the increased cost above that to which the minimum applies of a year—two six-month periods—for any costs in excess of the 2 cents minimum per copy. Do you see how competitors of anybody at all, for instance, you or I going into business, could price services at less than 2 cents a call for delivering newspapers, whether they are ethnic newspapers, farm newspapers, weekly newspapers or daily newspapers?

Mr. Dinsdale: Not under the formula adopted by the Minister which suddenly has imposed the theory that all publications should be on a self-sustaining basis and the Post Office Department should be on a pay-as-

[Interprétation]

Va-t-il y avoir une mise en exécution progressive de l'augmentation des tarifs postaux pour aider certaines publications? Je vous donnerai des faits dans quelques instants. Par exemple, pour la presse ethnique, les coûts ont monté d'une façon astronomique à cause de leur tirage limité, et les frais de distribution de la Légion royale canadienne seront plus élevés que ses frais d'impression.

M. Kierans: J'ai rencontré le juge Lindal, Charlie Dojack et tous les autres de la presse ethnique à différentes occasions.

M. Dinsdale: Y aura-t-il une mise en vigueur soudaine le 1<sup>er</sup> avril ou est-ce que l'approche sera raisonnable comme aux États-Unis? Là, les augmentations du taux n'ont pas été formidables, mais il a été reconnu qu'elles devraient être mises en vigueur graduellement pour permettre le meilleur ajustement possible dans les circonstances financières. Est-ce que cela sera mis en vigueur soudainement le 1<sup>er</sup> avril, ou la mise en vigueur sera-t-elle graduelle?

M. Kierans: Vous savez ce qui est dit dans le bill M. Dinsdale, et je suis tenu à observer la loi et mettre en vigueur les frais minimums de $0.02 qui sont mis en vigueur le 1<sup>er</sup> avril. Il n'y a aucun moyen pour moi de changer tout cela. Même si je le voulais, mais je ne le veux pas.

Il y a une prorogation au delà de ce minimum appliqué, une prorogation d'un an. C'est-à-dire deux périodes de six mois pour toute augmentation dépassant $0.02 l'exemplaire. Mais vous voyez déjà des concurrents, vous et moi, qui partons en affaires, qui chargeraient moins de $0.02 l'exemplaire pour une publication agricole, un journal hebdomadaire ou quotidien?

M. Dinsdale: Non, au titre formel adopté par le ministre qui soudainement impose la théorie que toutes les publications devraient se suffire à elles-mêmes et que le ministère des Postes devrait refaire ses on a go basis. We have been through this before. this is a complete reversal of the long-standing approach to the Post Office service, that it is basic to the democratic process because it is the fundamental form of communication, particularly in the rural area.

I know it is not so important in the urban communities because they have all the other means of communication, but it is still fundamental in the rural communities and the outlying areas. The Minister is lying in the face of this fact by making it the only government-sponsored communication system which must operate in the black. I do not agree with that thesis and I do not think many of the people of Canada do. It is a reversal.

frais. Nous avons déjà passé par là, c'est tout à fait le contraire du mode d'approche d'un service postal qui est fondamental à notre démocratie, parce que c'est un mode fondamental de communications, particulièrement dans les régions rurales.

Je sais que c'est moins important en ville, car il y a d'autres moyens de communications, mais c'est toujours indispensable pour la collectivité rurale, surtout dans les régions isolées. Le ministre se fait fi de ces faits en faisant des Postes le seul système de communications sous les auspices du gouvernement qui doit être rentable. Je ne suis pas d'accord avec cette thèse et je ne crois pas que beaucoup le sont au Canada. C'est un renversement.

[Text]

Mr. Kierans: All right, but that particular area is not operating in the black, Mr. Dinsdale. There happens to be a subsidy and there will be a deficit of $40 million in that area next year.

Now that is a subsidy that the people of Canada are presently giving to the publishing industry, to the farm newspapers in particular, but many other groups too. All that the Department is doing at the moment is limiting that subsidy to about $40 million; we think that is enough. We are operating at a deficit in that area, which the general taxpayer is paying. So we are not operating in the black.

Mr. Perrault: I have a supplementary, Mr. Chairman. Had these reforms not been introduced what kind of deficit would we be looking at?

Mr. Kierans: $130 million.

Mr. Dinsdale: In the report it states that these deficit figures are partially related to changes in accounting systems, and we are not going to go into that. There has been a change in the accounting system of the Department which has resulted in the rather astronomical deficits that have been reported in the past year.

Mr. Kierans: I would argue for the changes in that accounting system because they now present a much more realistic picture of the actual cost of the Post Office than has ever been presented to members of Parliament before. In other words, I think that we should pay rent on all of the facilities and post offices that we have across the country. We should take into account, the rental or the depreciation on our equipment or the financial services that we purchase or which are made available to us by other departments of the government.

Mr. Dinsdale: We can argue this point ad infinitum. Just returning to the rural periodicals, you say they are subsidized to the tune of some $40 million?

Mr. Kierans: The publishing industry of Canada.

Mr. Dinsdale: For the rural periodicals there is a minimum of handling, they are handled in bulk, there is no house-to-house delivery, they are picked up at the post office, and so on and you could argue this point ad infinitum and get nowhere. The fact is that while there might have been a need for increases in rates because there had not been any change in rates, the new rates are geared to the new philosophy that the Post Office Department, which is more important than the CBC, for example, in basic communication, must now operate in the black.

However let us get to the special problem of the ethnic press. It is a small press. It is one of the means for providing linguistic rights to the various ethnic communities which predominate, perhaps, in Western

[Interpretation]

M. Kierans: Dans ce domaine, le ministère des postes n'est pas rentable. Il y a des subventions, et il y aura un déficit de 40 millions l'an prochain.

C'est une subvention que le Canada donne actuellement à l'industrie de la publication, aux publications agricoles en particulier, mais à beaucoup d'autres groupes également. Tout ce que le ministère fait en ce moment c'est de restreindre cette subvention à 40 millions. Nous avons un déficit dans ce domaine, en ce moment, qui est acquitté par les contribuables. Notre exploitation n'est pas rentable en ce moment.

M. Perrault: Si ces réformes n'avaient pas été introduites, quel serait l'ordre du déficit actuellement?

M. Kierans: Un déficit de $130 millions.

M. Dinsdale: Dans le rapport, on dit que les chiffres déficitaires sont partiellement dus aux modifications du système de comptabilité, et on n'en parle pas ici. Les modifications du système de comptabilité du ministère ont entraîné les déficits astronomiques qu'on a signalés l'année dernière.

M. Kierans: Je suis en faveur des modifications de ce système car elles donnent une idée beaucoup plus réaliste des coûts réels du ministère des Postes. Autrement dit, je crois que nous devrions payer pour nos installations dans toutes les parties du pays et aussi tenir compte des frais de location et d'amortisation de notre matériel et des services financiers que nous retenons ou qui nous sont fournis par d'autres ministères.

M. Dinsdale: On pourrait arguer longtemps sur ce point. Mais pour ce qui est des publications périodiques agricoles, vous dites qu'elles sont subventionnées pour environ $40 millions?

M. Kierans: L'industrie canadienne des publications.

M. Dinsdale: Ces publications agricoles exigent un minimum de manutention car elles ne sont pas distribuées de porte en porte. Mais le fait est que bien qu'il était peut-être nécessaire d'accroître les tarifs, parce qu'il n'y en avait pas depuis longtemps, le nouveau tarif est fondé sur la nouvelle philosophie du ministère des Postes, qui est plus important que Radio-Canada, par exemple. Selon laquelle, dans le domaine des communications de base, il faudrait être rentables.

Pour revenir au problème particulier de la presse ethnique, qui est un des moyens d'assurer les droits linguistiques des diverses collectivités, et surtout, peut-être, dans l'Ouest du Canada, plus que partout

Canada more than they do in other parts of Canada and which are a part of the Canadian mosaic that we talk about. These publications operate on low budgets; their advertising revenues are limited; their circulation is limited by reason of the relatively small population they serve and they are going to be forced out of business. The main function of the ethnic press is to help newcomers in the process of integration into Canadian society, which I think is a fundamental service to Canada.

We will just look at one or two of the results of these postal increases on the ethnic press. The Novy Domov, which is a Czechoslovakian weekly, weighs .6 issues to the pound. The present per pound rate is 1.5 cents, but the new rate will be 16 times 2 cents, which is 32 cents a pound, for an increase of 2,000 per cent.

p 1015

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman may I ask a question? What is the annual subscription rate for this Czech language publication and how many issues are there per year? I would like to find out how much money the subscribers pay towards the support of this journal. I think it is a relevant consideration here.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have not that information here, you can write to the editor of the press.

Mr. Perrault: I think it is an important consideration. For example, if they are paying $2 a year for a subscription of twelve issues or some unrealistically low figure of that kind . . .

Mr. Dinsdale: I am just pointing out that this discriminates against a minority group in Canada and if the member wants to support that discrimination he can.

Mr. Perrault: No it is not a matter of discrimination.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is a 2000 per cent increase in the rate, which is a drastic increase.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, the reason for my question is this: it could be that in the existing situation, if we had maintained the status quo, it could have been an unrealistically low rate. Perhaps we are correcting a situation which has existed for a considerable period of time.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman is the honourable member the witness or—

Mr. Perrault: No, I am asking you a question because I think it is relevant.

Mr. Dinsdale: —am I the witness?

ailleurs au pays, qui font partie de la mosaïque canadienne dont nous parlions. Ces publications ont un budget limité, leur tirage est limité, leurs recettes publicitaires sont aussi limitées; à cause de la faible population à laquelle elles s'adressent. Elles seront forcées d'abandonner. Le principal rôle de la presse ethnique est d'aider les nouveaux venus à s'intégrer dans la société canadienne. Je crois que c'est un service essentiel pour le Canada.

Voyons une ou deux conséquences de l'accroissement des tarifs postaux, sur la presse ethnique.

16 numéros de l'hebdomadaire en langue tchèque, le Navy Domov, pèsent une livre. Le tarif actuel est de 1.5 cent la livre, mais le nouveau tarif sera 16 fois 2 cents, soit 32 cents la livre, ce qui fait une augmentation de 2,000 p. 100.

M. Perrault: Combien est l'abonnement annuel de cette publication? Combien y a-t-il de numéros par année? Autrement dit, combien est-ce que les abonnés fournissent-ils à cette publication. Je crois qu'il est important de le savoir.

M. Dinsdale: Je n'ai pas ces renseignements. Vous pourriez vous adresser au rédacteur de la publication.

M. Perrault: Je crois que c'est très important. S'ils versent deux dollars par année pour douze numéros ou quelque chose de ce genre . . .

M. Dinsdale: Je dis que c'est de la discrimination à l'égard des minorités ethniques, et si mon collègue veut encourager cette attitude, il est libre de le faire.

M. Perrault: Ce n'est pas de la discrimination.

M. Dinsdale: Pour moi, une augmentation de 2,000 p. 100 c'est un peu fort.

M. Perrault: Le but de ma question est d'évaluer la situation actuelle; si nous avions maintenu le statu quo, le tarif aurait été vraiment trop bas. Nous rectifions peut-être une situation qui existait depuis quelque temps.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, est-ce que le député est le témoin ou . . .

M. Perrault: Non, je vous pose une question, car je crois qu'elle est pertinente.

M. Dinsdale: . . . Est-ce que c'est moi?

[Text]

The Chairman: I believe he is asking you to give the full range of information on which your question is based.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am just dealing with the rate increases. If the hon. member wants to subscribe to this magazine, I suggest that he write to the editor and I am sure they would be glad to put him on the mailing list.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Dinsdale has made a charge of discrimination Mr. Chairman, which is completely false. I would like him to retract that statement because we are not discriminating against any newspaper in Canada. We are charging every newspaper in Canada exactly the same kind of rate. Now it varies, of course, depending on the size of the publication and so on. There is no discrimination against any German or Czech or Ukrainian newspaper whatsoever; they are paying exactly the same rates that any other Canadian newspaper would pay for an equivalent publication.

Mr. Perrault's remark is a quite valid one. Exactly what are the subscribers, the Czech people in the example you have outlined, paying for that newspaper? How much more would they have to pay to absorb the increase in cost?

Mr. Dinsdale: I will give you that right now, if you will give me a chance, Mr. Chairman. I used the word "Discrimination" in reference to Mr. Perrault who was making the point and not in reference to the Minister. I said: "If he wants to discriminate that is his privilege".

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, there is no suggestion that I was advocating discrimination. I simply would like to find out what the subscribers are paying and how much more per copy it would cost them to maintain their subscription to this publication.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that to encourage the process of integration in this country the paper might be distributed free. We know that our services to newcomers in Canada are minimal at the best; we have been through this in discussing citizenship and so forth. It is a very difficult process for newcomers to be integrated into the Canadian way of life. I think fundamental to the process of integration is adequate communication in their own language in the initial stages and this has been the function of the ethnic press.

Mr. Kierans: I agree with that. I think the honourable member should probably place a bill in his name seeking to achieve that objective. He could then designate a department, whether it would be Manpower and Immigration or the Secretary of State or whatever department, as the department that must contribute a subsidy to a private business operating such a paper. He could then state how much that subsidy should be. I think he should do it.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Je crois qu'il vous demande de donner tous les renseignements sur lesquels vous vous fondez.

M. Dinsdale: Je parle de l'augmentation des tarifs postaux. Si le député veut s'abonner à cette revue, qu'il écrive au rédacteur qui sera heureux de l'inscrire.

M. Kierans: M. Dinsdale a porté une accusation de discrimination qui est tout à fait fausse. J'aimerais qu'il rétracte cette accusation parce que nous ne faisons pas de discrimination à l'égard d'aucune publication au Canada. Nous voulons traiter tous les périodiques du pays sur le même pied. Les tarifs sont les mêmes pour tous. Nous tenons compte, évidemment, du tirage. Mais il n'y a aucune discrimination contre les publications en langue tchèque, allemande, ukrainienne, et autres. Les mêmes tarifs s'appliquent à tous les journaux canadiens de la même catégorie.

La remarque de M. Perrault est très valable. Combien est-ce que les abonnés, les tchécoslovaques eux-mêmes paient pour leur journal? Combien devront-ils payer de plus pour absorber l'augmentation des frais?

M. Dinsdale: Je pourrai vous le dire à l'instant, si vous me donnez l'occasion, monsieur le président. Je parlais de discrimination à l'égard de la remarque de M. Perrault, et non à l'égard du ministre. J'ai dit que s'il veut discriminer, c'est son privilège.

M. Perrault: Il n'y a pas lieu de croire que je suis en faveur de la discrimination. Je veux simplement savoir ce que les abonnés doivent payer et combien de plus ils devront payer par numéro pour garder leur abonnement.

M. Dinsdale: Je dirais, monsieur le président, que pour encourager l'intégration dans ce pays, on pourrait distribuer cette publication gratuitement. On sait que nos services offerts aux nouveaux venus sont minimaux en ce moment. Nous en avons parlé lorsque nous avons étudié la citoyenneté, et ainsi de suite. C'est assez difficile pour les nouveaux venus de s'intégrer au milieu canadien. Mais je crois qu'il est indispensable d'avoir des communications appropriées au départ dans leur propre langue, ce qui est le rôle essentiel de la presse ethnique.

M. Kierans: J'en conviens. Je crois que le député pourrait présenter un bill en son nom en vue de réaliser cet objectif. Il pourrait ensuite désigner le ministère, le Secrétariat d'État ou la Main-d'œuvre et l'Immigration, ou tout autre ministère, qui verserait une subvention à l'entreprise privée qui prépare une telle publication. Il devrait préciser le montant de la subvention.

[Texte]

I object to the fact that these subsidies, as I have said before many times, should be hidden subsidies; that is, in the granting of special privileged rates to one class of paper as against another.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is specious argument, Mr. Chairman, because this subsidy, as the Minister calls it, has been handled under the general policy and function and role of the Post Office Department in providing the best possible communication by means of the printed word to all Canadians. Now that we are going to move to individual subsidies for individual presses it is going to be confused and confounded. You might as well tell me to advocate that instead of the CBC subsidizing private stations across the country, we could have separate subsidies to each individual private station on the CBC network. It is the principle that is going to cause great confusion in Canadian communication policy.

My friend was asking about the specific cost to this Czechoslovakian paper. The Novy Domov has 16 copies per pound and the present postage on 16 copies 1.5 cents.

Mr. Kierans: May I ask a question of the honourable member? Do you think this is an economic effort to distribute 16 copies of a newspaper for 1.5 cents, to tell at 16 doors for 1.5 cents?

Mr. Dinsdale: Let me finish this particular point. Each subscriber gets 52 copies per year so that the postage paid at the present time per year per subscriber is 52 times 1.5 cents divided by 16, approximately 5 cents.

Mr. Perrault: Is that per year?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. Under the new rate, the annual postage per subscriber is 52 times 2 which is $1.04 so this is where they get their 2,000 per cent increase. Now an increase is in order but not an astronomical increase.

Mr. Kierans: If the paper is of value to the Czech community, by your own figures they only have to increase the annual subscription rate for this weekly newspaper by 99 cents a year.

Mr. Dinsdale: For all I know, the paper might be distributed free of charge. It is published mainly as a voluntary service among the ethnic communities. They are not professionals in the field. The reason they have the ethnic press is to provide a service to the newcomers in their particular ethnic category to help them in the integration process, but this new philosophy, this new policy of the Post Office, of course, removes

[Interprétation]

Mais je m'oppose à ce qu'une telle subvention soit cachée en ce sens qu'on accorde des tarifs spéciaux à une catégorie de journaux plutôt qu'à une autre.

M. Dinsdale: L'argument me semble spécieux, monsieur le président, parce que cette subvention, comme le ministre l'appelle, tombe sous le coup de la politique générale et du rôle du ministère des Postes, qui est de fournir le meilleur service de communication possible à tous les canadiens grâce à la presse. Et nous allons maintenant offrir des subventions individuelles à des journaux en particulier, ce qui sera confus et embrouillé. Aussi bien me dire qu'au lieu que Radio-Canada subventionne les stations privées de tout le pays il faudrait avoir des subventions séparées pour les stations privées de tout le réseau. Ce principe serait cause de beaucoup de confusion dans la politique canadienne des communications.

Mon ami a demandé quel est le coût de cette publication en langue tchèque. Le poids de Navy Donovan est de seize exemplaires la livre et le tarif actuel est de 1.5 cent la livre.

M. Kierans: Puis-je poser une question au député? Croit-il que c'est un effort économique que de distribuer seize exemplaires d'un journal à 1.5 cent, de frapper à seize portes pour 1.5 cent?

M. Dinsdale: Permettez-moi de préciser ma pensée à ce sujet. Chacun des abonnés reçoit 52 numéros par année de sorte que l'on paie 52 fois 1.5 cent divisé par seize ce qui veut dire qu'il paie 5 cents.

M. Perrault: C'est par année?

M. Dinsdale: Oui. Selon le nouveau tarif, l'affranchissement annuel par abonné, est de 52 fois 2 cents, c'est-à-dire $1.04; c'est donc là que ressort l'augmentation de 2,000 p. 100. Je suis d'accord, pour une augmentation, mais pas une augmentation astronomique.

M. Kierans: Si les gens de la collectivité tchèque désirent recevoir leur journal, qu'ils accroissent le tarif d'abonnement annuel de 99 cents.

M. Dinsdale: Quant à moi, il pourrait être distribué gratuitement. Il s'agit, en fait, d'un service bénévole offert aux groupes ethniques. Le travail n'est pas l'oeuvre de professionnels. Le but de ces journaux est d'aider les nouveaux arrivants à s'intégrer à la communauté canadienne, mais cette nouvelle politique du ministère des Postes met un terme à cette aide. Le ministre suggère que nous présentions des bills pour this assistance. The Minister has recommended that we proceed by way of a Private Members' Resolution to encourage a subsidy in this respect which, I think, is complicating the problem beyond reason.

[Text]

Now, as the other ethnic press are in the same category—

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, do they not list the cost of 52 copies per year per subscriber?

The Chairman: Yes, it was 5 cents.

An hon. Member: Mr. Dinsdale said under the old rate.

Mr. Perrault: I meant the subscription rate.

The Chairman: No, that was for a year. Oh, the subscription rate?

Mr. Perrault: I am not talking about the postal rate. Am I to believe that the Post Office Department has been delivering until the present time 52 copies of a publication for 5 cents a year?

Mr. Dinsdale: That is right.

Mr. Perrault: I think it is an incredibly low figure.

Mr. Comeau: May I ask a supplementary?

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer on a supplementary on this subject, first, and then you, Mr. Comeau.

Mr. Schreyer: I do not have the tables here, but perhaps Mr. Kierans could tell us what percentage of the cost of distribution under the new rates will be borne by let us say, the ethnic press or the farm press? I recall that your Department did circulate tabular information showing this, but I do not have a copy here. I would think that you would know this offhand.

Mr. Kierans: Would you be more specific? Exactly what is it that you are asking?

Mr. Schreyer: Information that would indicate what proportion of the cost of postal delivery is borne by the ethnic press under the new rates.

Mr. Kierans: As I recall, they are being subsidized to a considerable extent. As they would be in the weekly newspaper class, which includes the ethnic press, they pay approximately 9.7 per cent of the total cost. This whole class of weekly newspapers is actually going up to the point where the Post Office is going to recover, not 9.7 per cent of its cost, but 13.2 per cent of the total cost of carrying them. In other words, the subsidy is still 87 per cent.

[Interpretation]

obtenir que des subventions soient accordées à cette fin mais je crois cette méthode inutile.

Puisque les autres journaux ethniques sont dans la même situation...

M. Perrault: Combien en coûte-t-il pour 52 exemplaires, par année, à chaque abonné?

Le président: Cinq cents.

Une voix: D'après l'ancien tarif.

M. Perrault: Je parle du tarif d'abonnement.

Le président: Vous parlez du tarif d'abonnement.

M. Perrault: Je ne parle pas du tarif postal. Dois-je comprendre que jusqu'à ce jour le ministère des Postes livrait 52 exemplaires de cette publication pour 5 cents par année.

M. Dinsdale: C'est bien cela.

M. Perrault: Je trouve ce chiffre ridiculement bas.

M. Comeau: Puis-je poser une question supplémentaire?

Le président: Vous le pourrez après celle de monsieur Schreyer, monsieur Comeau.

M. Schreyer: Je n'ai pas les chiffres à portée de main, mais monsieur Kierans peut-être nous dire quelle proportion des frais de distribution, en vertu des nouveaux tarifs, sera absorbée par la presse ethnique ou agricole. Je me souviens que votre ministère a publié ces chiffres mais je ne les possède pas en ce moment. Je suis convaincu que vous les connaissez de mémoire.

M. Kierans: Pourriez-vous être plus précis et dire exactement ce que vous désirez savoir?

M. Schreyer: Je désire des détails sur cette portion des frais de livraison postale que la presse ethnique devra déboursier en vertu des nouveaux tarifs.

M. Kierans: En autant que je me souviens, elle est subventionnée dans une large proportion. Pour ce qui est de la presse hebdomadaire, c'est dans cette catégorie que se trouve la presse ethnique, elle débourse environ 9.7 p. 100 du coût total. Les frais, dans cette catégorie des hebdomadaires, augmentent présentement de sorte que le ministère des Postes pourra recevoir non plus 9.7 p. 100 des frais encourus mais 13.2 p. 100. En d'autres mots, il s'agit d'une subvention de l'ordre de 87 p. 100.

[Texte]

Mr. Schreyer: I find it difficult to reconcile the fact that according to that data, the increase is from 9 to 13 per cent.

1025

Mr. Kierans: Yes, 50 per cent.

Mr. Schreyer: Yes, but Mr. Dinsdale made reference to rates increasing in the order of 2,000 per cent.

Mr. Kierans: That is right. However, these were the special situations and anomalies that crept into the rate-making process in the Post Office, most of which have been eliminated by the 2 cent minimum now, but in total this did not affect all newspapers to the same extent. The general increase in revenue that we are going to get from this—from all of them in the class—is in the order of 50 per cent. They are still the most favoured element in the whole second-class spectrum.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, speaking of degrees of favoured treatment under postal rates, I would like to ask the Minister for a very blunt and frank expression of why the new rates that will be applied to Time and Reader's Digest could not be such that the same level of subsidy would apply to them as is the case with Canadian newspapers or magazines?

Mr. Kierans: We really are subsidizing every class. The daily newspapers are going to pay about 80 per cent of their cost instead of 30 per cent of their cost,—

Mr. Schreyer: Right.

Mr. Kierans:—but the magazine industry as a whole, of which Reader's Digest and Time magazine are two publications, are going to pay about 33 per cent of the total cost of carrying magazines. Now, we are not discriminating either for or against Reader's Digest or Time magazine. Together they average in the class the 33 per cent that is general for the whole magazine industry. If you want me to discriminate against these two publications and demand that two magazines in the magazine industry pay, let us say, twice as much as all of the other magazines in the magazine industry, then I suggest that you present a Private Bill in the House. At the present time we are taking the magazine industry as a class and all magazines that fall into that class are subject to the general policy of paying roughly one-third of the cost of carrying them. It is a subsidy of two-thirds to the magazine industry.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I have just one more question.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is the Minister not aware of what happens to Private Members' Resolutions in the House of Commons?

[Interprétation]

Mr. Schreyer: Je comprends difficilement que les frais passent de 9 à 13 p. 100.

Mr. Kierans: Il s'agit d'une augmentation de 50 p. 100.

Mr. Schreyer: Oui, mais monsieur Dinsdale parle d'une augmentation de 2,000 p. 100.

Mr. Kierans: C'est exact. Toutefois, il s'agit là de cas spéciaux et d'anomalies qui se sont glissées en cours de route. La plupart ont été éliminées par l'instauration du minimum de deux cents, mais ceci n'a pas touché tous les journaux de la même façon. L'augmentation globale de revenus que nous allons percevoir dans cette catégorie est de l'ordre de 50 p. 100. Ils n'en demeurent pas moins les plus privilégiés de toute la catégorie de deuxième classe.

Mr. Schreyer: Puisqu'on parle de traitement de faveur, j'aimerais demander au ministre de nous dire franchement pourquoi les nouveaux taux qui s'appliquent dans le cas de Time et de Reader's Digest ne représentent pas un taux de subvention identique à ce qui est accordé aux journaux ou aux magazines canadiens?

Mr. Kierans: A toute fin pratique, nous subventionnons toutes les classes de publications. Les quotidiens paieront dorénavant 80 p. 100 du coût total au lieu de 30 p. 100 seulement.

Mr. Schreyer: D'accord.

Mr. Kierans: Mais pour ce qui est des magazines, et Time et Reader's Digest font partie de cette catégorie, ils paieront environ 33 p. 100 du coût total de livraison de leurs produits. Et nous ne faisons aucune discrimination dans le cas de Times ou de Reader's Digest puisqu'ils paient à peu près ce 33 p. 100 commun à tout ce secteur. Mais si vous voulez qu'il y ait discrimination contre ces deux magazines et qu'ils paient, disons, deux fois plus que les autres, il suffirait de présenter un bill privé, en ce sens, à la Chambre. Il a été décidé que toutes les publications qui tombent dans cette catégorie seraient considérées de façon identique et paieraient à peu près 33 p. 100 du coût d'expédition. L'industrie du magazine est donc subventionnée dans une proportion de 66 p. 100.

Mr. Schreyer: J'ai une autre question, monsieur le président.

Mr. Dinsdale: Peut-être que le ministre ne sait pas ce qu'il arrive aux bills que les députés déposent en Chambre.

[Text]

Mr. Kierans: You can at least make your point.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Kierans has confirmed some of the impressions I had in mind. For example, I thought I recalled seeing in the document that was circulated by the Department that Canadian newspapers would be paying about 80 per cent of the cost of delivery and that Time and Reader's Digest would be paying about one-third. Mr. Kierans has suggested that this one-third, the cost that is to be paid by Time and Reader's Digest, is about the same as will be paid by any other magazine. I seem to recall that the percentage of the cost that will be borne by certain kinds of magazines like Maclean's for example, will be somewhat higher; the figure 45 per cent to 50 per cent seems to come to mind.

Mr. Kierans: Well, let us say that we make a class of the entire magazine industry and that class pays about 33 per cent—roughly 33-1/3 per cent—of the total cost to the Post Office of delivering their magazines. Each magazine within that class will pay a different rate, depending on its size, the number of issues published, the weight of the issue and so on. Even between Reader's Digest and Time magazine there will be a difference as one is going to pay 31.3 per cent and that is Reader's Digest, and Time magazine actually is going to pay 34.7 per cent of the total cost, but this is related to the physical qualities or aspects of the magazine itself. So it quite easily could be that Maclean's might pay less than 33-1/3 per cent or it might pay more. The point is that the industry as a whole pays 33-1/3 per cent.

• 1030

Mr. Schreyer: Finally, Mr. Chairman, would Mr. Kierans state generally speaking why a differential exists between the treatment of newspapers and magazines?

Mr. Kierans: I suppose the general philosophy is that the magazine industry needs more help than the daily newspapers need, for example, and the weekly newspapers need more help than the magazine industry needs. The daily newspapers, by and large, have a monopoly in their areas even where there are two or three different newspapers, such as in Ottawa or in Montreal. A daily newspaper does not have the same kind of competition from American publications as a magazine does. One can say, possibly, that traditionally we have given more help to the magazines than we have given to the daily newspapers.

The Chairman: Mr. Comeau then Mr. Perrault.

Mr. Comeau: My question is a new subject.

[Interpretation]

M. Kierans: Ça permet tout au moins de faire connaître votre point de vue.

Le président: Monsieur Schreyer?

M. Schreyer: Monsieur Kierans a confirmé certaines impressions que j'avais. Ainsi, il me semblait avoir remarqué dans ce document du ministère des Postes que les quotidiens paieraient environ 80 p. 100 du coût de livraison et Time et Reader's Digest environ 33 p. 100. Monsieur Kierans a déclaré que cette proposition qui s'applique à ces deux magazines est à peu près identique à celle qui s'applique dans le cas de tous les autres magazines. Je crois pourtant me souvenir que Maclean's, par exemple, devra déboursier de 45 à 50 p. 100.

M. Kierans: Pour ce qui est des magazines, ils tombent tous dans la même catégorie et ils devront payer environ un tiers de ce qu'il en coûte au ministère des Postes pour livrer ces publications. Chaque magazine paiera un taux différent, selon ses dimensions, le nombre de fois qu'il est publié et la pesanteur de chaque exemplaire. Il y aura même une différence entre Time et Reader's Digest puisque le dernier paiera 31.3 p. 100 et le premier 34.7 p. 100 du coût total. Il est donc possible que dans le cas de Maclean's le pourcentage soit inférieur ou supérieur à 33 p. 100.

M. Schreyer: Monsieur Kierans pourrait-il nous dire enfin, pourquoi cette différence entre les quotidiens et les magazines?

M. Kierans: Je suppose que c'est parce que les magazines ont besoin de plus d'aide que les quotidiens et que les hebdomadaires ont besoin de plus d'aide que les magazines. Règle générale, les quotidiens détiennent un certain monopole dans leur région même s'il y a deux ou trois quotidiens différents, comme, par exemple, Ottawa et à Montréal. Le quotidien n'a pas à faire face à la même concurrence, en provenance des publications américaines, que les magazines. Disons aussi que nous semblons avoir davantage aidé les magazines que les quotidiens, par le passé.

Le président: Monsieur Comeau, puis monsieur Perrault.

M. Comeau: Ma question n'est pas sur le même sujet.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Oh, you have a new subject? Do you have supplementary on this subject, Mr. Perrault? You will be next, Mr. McCutcheon.

Mr. Perrault: Yes, I have a supplementary on the matter of rationalizing the operations of the Post Office. As I understand it, Mr. Minister, you do not believe that in the process of making the Post office operation more efficient and rationalizing the operation that, in effect, the Department should be placed in the position of providing cultural subsidies to various ethnic groups in Canada. Would it be appropriate to have the Department of the Secretary of State, for example, shepherd a program of that kind? Is this what you are suggesting to us?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Perrault, in my view that would be much more appropriate than having the Postmaster General make such judgment?

Mr. Perrault: But it is more in the area then of the Department?

Mr. Kierans: That is right.

Mr. Perrault: That was my supplementary, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask further questions later.

The Chairman: Mr. McCutcheon.

Mr. McCutcheon: My question is just for clarification. The newspapers are to pay 80 per cent of their cost. Now I am concerned about what you have done about that unwanted and undesirable magazine section that is in those daily newspapers. Are they going to pay at the 80 per cent rate or are they going to get preferential treatment at this 33 per cent rate, as other magazines do.

Mr. Kierans: It is the same rate as the daily newspapers.

Mr. McCutcheon: All the way through?

Mr. Kierans: Yes.

The Chairman: Is your question on the same subject, Mr. Nesbitt?

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a couple of questions I would like to put to the Minister, and one certainly is a supplementary. I will put that first and come to the other one later.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a question regarding the monthly magazine put out by the Royal Canadian Legion, which I am sure has already been brought to the Minister's attention. To make it brief, I will read a direct quotation from the editorial of this month's Legion:

[Interprétation]

Le président: Un sujet différent? Vous avez une question sur ce sujet, monsieur Perrault? Vous pourrez poser votre question ensuite, monsieur McCutcheon.

M. Perrault: Oui, il s'agit d'une question supplémentaire sur la rationalisation des opérations au ministère des Postes. Si je comprends bien, monsieur le ministre, vous ne croyez pas que tout en rendant plus efficace les opérations de votre ministère vous devriez subventionner les divers groupes ethniques du Canada. Est-ce qu'il ne serait pas approprié que le ministère du Secrétariat d'État pilote un programme de ce genre. Est-ce là ce que vous nous proposez.

M. Kierans: M. Perrault, cela sera certainement plus approprié d'après moi, que de voir le ministre des Postes poser un tel jugement.

M. Perrault: Mais alors, c'est davantage du domaine du ministère.

M. Kierans: C'est exact.

M. Perrault: C'était ma question supplémentaire M. le président. J'aimerais poser d'autres questions plus tard.

Le président: M. McCutcheon.

M. McCutcheon: Je voudrais clarifier un point. Les journaux devront payer 80 p. 100 de leur coût de manutention. Moi je me demande ce qui a été fait concernant cette question du magazine rotogravure indésirable qui est encartée dans ces quotidiens. Est-ce qu'ils vont payer un taux de 80 p. 100 ou bien est-ce qu'ils auront un taux préférentiel de 33 p. 100 comme c'est le cas pour les autres magazines.

M. Kierans: Non, ils doivent payer le taux des quotidiens.

M. McCutcheon: Toute cette catégorie?

M. Kierans: Oui.

Le président: Votre question porte-t-elle sur le même sujet?

M. Nesbitt: J'aurais deux questions à poser. L'une est certainement une question supplémentaire. Je la poserai d'abord et je reviendrai à l'autre plus tard.

Le président: Très bien.

M. Nesbitt: Ma question concerne la revue qui est publiée par la Légion canadienne qui, je suppose, a été portée à l'attention du ministre. Pour être bref, je vous lirai directement une citation de la page éditoriale de la Légion de ce mois-ci.

[Text]

Since copies of legion Magazine weigh slightly more than three ounces, the cost of mailing it after April 1 will be seven cents a copy or a monthly mailing expenditure of more than $19,000 or $228,000 a year! These new rates will put many fraternal and trade publications out of business.

In view of what the Minister has already indicated in reply to a number of questions, would the Minister consider, in order to continue the publication of this magazine which is a magazine of great interest to most veterans, the Department of Veterans Affairs providing some sort of subsidy to keep the legion magazine up to the normal standards it has enjoyed for many years; or, on the other hand, would the Minister think that reconsideration should be given by him to place the legion magazine back in the same category that it had previously come under? As was pointed out in this same editorial, and I quote briefly:

The Legion had prepared for the increase in second-class rates, roughly from half-a-cent a copy to two cents a copy, and had adjusted its 1969 budget to meet a monthly increase in mailing costs of from $1,300 to $5,000.

But the magazine certainly would never have expected an increase from $1,300 to $19,000. Then it goes on to say—I am paraphrasing now—that it has become quite evident that under the new set of rules in the postal act the legion does not qualify for second-class rates. I was wondering if some reconsideration or review could either be given to the situation the Legion faces, or would the Minister recommend perhaps to his colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, that some subsidy might be given to the magazine.

• 1035

The subject of subsidies is certainly not a new one, Mr. Chairman. Practically everything in Canada has a subsidy one way or another, and we all know that I was wondering which of these two means the Minister might give consideration to to help alleviate the situation faced by the Legion

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, we handle almost 3 million copies of The Legionary a year. Last year it was 2,944,200 copies, that meant we made 3 million calls. For that amount of work we got exactly $12,528. Under the new rates we are going to get—and the member's figures are correct—$206,000, therefore it is a considerable increase. But I do not think there is any way in which you can justify economically making 3 million calls for the amount of $12,000.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, the Legion granted that.

Mr. Kierans: All right. Now the annual subscription price of The Legionary at the moment is $1.50 per

[Interpretation]

Étant donné que les exemplaires de la Légion canadienne pèsent un peu plus de 3 onces, les frais de poste après le 1<sup>er</sup> avril seront de $0.07 par numéro, soit un déboursé en frais de poste de plus de $19,000 par mois ou $228,000 par année. Ces nouveaux taux feront que plusieurs publications d'associations amicales et publications d'affaires seront forcées d'abandonner.

Étant donné ce que le ministre a dit en réponse à de nombreuses questions, le ministre songerait-il, afin qu'il se poursuive la publication de cette revue, qui intéresse beaucoup la plupart des anciens combattants que le ministère des anciens combattants devrait une espèce de subvention pour permettre au magazine de la Légion de continuer à offrir l'excellent service qu'il a offert depuis de nombreuses années? Ou est-ce que, d'autre part, le ministre croit que l'on ne devrait pas réétudier le cas du magazine de la Légion afin de le reclasser dans la même catégorie qu'il occupait auparavant? Comme cela a été indiqué dans le même éditorial:

La Légion s'était préparée une augmentation de environ ½ cent à deux cents le numéro dans le tarif de deuxième classe. Elle avait préparé son budget de 1969 en vue de faire face à une augmentation mensuelle des frais postaux pouvant varier entre $1,300 et $5,000.

Le magazine ne croyait jamais devoir faire face à une augmentation passant de $1,300 à $19,000. L'article continue en disant qu'il est devenu assez évident que, en vertu des nouveaux règlements de la Loi sur les postes la Légion n'est pas admise elle au tarif de deuxième classe. Je me demande s'il ne serait pas possible d'examiner ou de réexaminer la situation à laquelle la Légion doit faire face, ou encore, le ministre pourrait-il recommander à son collègue, le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants, qu'une sorte de subvention soit accordée à la revue?

La question des subventions ne constitue pas un fait nouveau, monsieur le président. Presque tout au Canada est subventionné sous une forme ou sous une autre, ça nous le savons tous. Je me demandais lequel de deux moyens le ministre pourrait appuyer pour aider à alléger la situation à laquelle la Légion doit faire face.

M. Kierans: M. le président, nous acheminons environ 3 millions de magazines de la Légion chaque année. L'an dernier c'était 2,944,200 exemplaires. Cela veut dire 3 millions de livraisons. Selon le nouveau tarif, les chiffres du député sont exacts, nous allons réaliser $206,000, ce qui représente donc une augmentation considérable. Je ne vois pas comment vous pourriez économiquement justifier 3 millions de livraisons au coût de $12,000.

M. Nesbitt: M. le président, ceci la Légion le concède.

M. Kierans: Bien. Le prix de l'abonnement annuel est de $1.50, pour le magazine de la Légion. La modification ear. The effect of this change in rates means that very subscriber to The Legionary would have to pay 9 cents a year more. Now if they do not want to pay 19 cents a year more, than I suppose they can go looking to an appropriate government department for a subsidy—but I will neither recommend their going to the Department of Veterans Affairs nor object to their going to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Nesbitt: There would be no question then that the Minister might reconsider the classification?

Mr. Kierans: If I gave a reconsideration to The Legionary, I would have to give reconsideration to about 2,000 other publications. I would have to give reconsideration to the paper put out by the Liberal Party, The New Democratic Party, or the Conservative Party, if it puts out a paper, or the Royal Bank, because they put out a monthly letter, or the CBC Times. But how do you make an exception without opening the door to 2,000 other publications, all of whom have valid claims.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, since the Minister has it a question to me I would be very glad to answer it. Since it has always been the custom of all governments since the end of World War I to give some slight preference to veterans who engaged in public service at risk which the public service does not entail at the present time,—

The Chairman: The ministry entails that risk though.

Mr. Nesbitt: I was not making reference to the Minister. I said it was a type of public service that involved certain risks that were not ordinarily involved in the public service. It has always been a custom to give some preference, and I think that the Legionary magazine comes under a slightly different category than perhaps some publications by political parties—or indeed the Royal Bank.

Mr. McCutcheon: Or the CBC Times.

The Chairman: Mr. Comeau has a supplementary question on the same point.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Kierans, you stated, for example, that you received $12,000 for 3 million calls.

Mr. Kierans: That is right.

Mr. Comeau: This is quite true, but surely they are not only delivering the legion magazine.

Mr. Kierans: This is quite correct.

Mr. Comeau: There may be 3 million calls but—des tarifs exigerait que chaque abonné au magazine de la Légion devrait payer $0.79 de plus. S'ils ne veulent pas payer $0.79 par année, et bien, qu'ils aillent demander au ministère approprié du gouvernement de leur accorder subvention. Mais je ne recommanderai pas ni ne m'opposerai à leur visite au ministère des Affaires des Anciens combattants.

M. Nesbitt: Il ne serait donc pas question que le ministre puisse réviser la classification?

M. Kierans: Si je reconsidère le cas du magazine le «Légionnaire» je devrais aussi considérer la reclassification de 2,000 autres publications. Par exemple, les magazines publiés par le parti libéral ou par le parti conservateur, ou par le NPd ou par la banque royale, vu qu'ils publient des bulletins mensuels, ou le CBC Times. Comment pouvez-vous faire une exception sans ouvrir la porte à 2,000 autres publications qui elles ont de bons arguments à présenter.

M. Nesbitt: M. le président, puisque le Ministre m'a posé une question, c'est avec plaisir que je lui répondrai— Étant donné que tous les gouvernements depuis la fin de la première Guerre mondiale ont toujours conservé l'habitude de donner une légère préférence aux anciens combattants qui entraient au service de la Fonction publique, ce qui comportait certains risques que l'on ne rencontre plus dans la fonction publique aujourd'hui . . .

Le président: La fonction de ministre comporte cependant des risques.

M. Nesbitt: Je ne parlais pas du Ministre. J'ai dit que c'était une sorte de fonction publique qui comportait certains risques que l'on ne rencontre pas habituellement au sein de la fonction publique. La coutume a toujours été d'accorder une préférence. La Légion fait partie d'une catégorie légèrement différente que, peut-être, les publications des partis politiques ou celles de la Banque Royale.

M. McCutcheon: Ou le CBC Times.

Le président: M. Comeau a une question supplémentaire à poser à ce sujet.

M. Comeau: M. Kierans, vous avez déclaré par exemple que vous receviez $12,000 pour 3 millions de livraisons.

M. Kierans: C'est exact.

M. Comeau: C'est bien exact, mais sûrement, vous ne livrez pas seulement la revue La Légion.

M. Kierans: C'est assez juste.

M. Comeau: Il peut y avoir 3 millions de livraisons mais . . .

[Text]

Mr. Kierans: This is quite correct, but all I am asking is that they pay their share of that call.

Mr. Comeau: An increase is valid, as far as I am concerned, but it is the very large amount that concerns me.

The Chairman: Mr. Barrett.

● 1040

Mr. Barrett: In connection with the Legion, I think their editorial indicated also that they are going to change the size of The Legionary. If this is so, would this make a difference in the rate they would be paying?

Mr. Kierans: They can adapt to it, yes. There is a challenge to each one of these publications to change their format, the number of issues and so on.

Mr. Barrett: So I would suggest that in spite of the prevailing antipathy and all this sadness exhibited by the hon. member the Legion will be able to look after themselves, as they always have and always shall do.

Mr. Kierans: Yes.

Mr. Barrett: I would like to suggest that I also, talking from memory of that particular situation, would be willing and happy as a Legion member to pay the additional rate without any sob stories or any sadness at all.

Mr. Nesbitt: Well the veteran is lucky to be so affluent.

The Chairman: Mr. Comeau, on a new subject.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have a supplementary.

The Chairman: A supplementary?

Mr. Macquarrie: I know the Minister is an obvious expert in calculating the amount of new subscriptions as a result of his imposition, but have you had indications from any existing publications in Canada, such as labour publications, that because of the new rates they are giving consideration to having their membership receive an American publication with an insert of four pages or so of Canadian news which your Department would distribute, the postage of which would be received by the United States. You have not heard of this?

Mr. Kierans: Oh, yes, there have been all kinds of suggestions or threats of going out of business and of having their publication printed in the United States and mailed from there. Let me say that we have

[Interpretation]

Mr. Kierans: C'est assez juste, mais tout ce que j demande c'est que la Légion paye sa part de la livraison.

Mr. Comeau: Une hausse du tarif est justifiée pour ma part, mais c'est l'importance du montant qui m'inquiète.

Le président: M. Barrett.

Mr. Barrett: Pour continuer dans ce même sujet j pense que la page éditoriale disait qu'on allait modifier la présentation du Légionnaire en le réduisant. Si c'est le cas pourrait-il y avoir une différence dans le prix à payer?

Mr. Kierans: Oui, il est possible de s'adapter aux circonstances. Cela représente un défi pour chacune de ces publications qui pourront changer leur présentation, le nombre de numéros, etc.

Mr. Barrett: Alors j'espère qu'en dépit de l'antipathie et toute cette tristesse manifestées par M. le député, la Légion pourra trouver des solutions à ses problèmes comme elle l'a fait dans le passé et réussira toujours à le faire dans l'avenir.

Mr. Kierans: Oui.

Mr. Barrett: Je crois que moi aussi, parlant de mémoire de cette situation, je serais consentant et heureux à titre de membre de la Légion, de payer le tarif supplémentaire sans histoire à faire pleurer et sans tristesse aucune.

Mr. Nesbitt: Les anciens combattants sont bien chanceux d'être riches.

Le président: M. Comeau, sur un sujet nouveau.

Mr. Macquarrie: J'ai une question supplémentaire.

Le président: Une question supplémentaire?

Mr. Macquarrie: Je sais que le ministre est un spécialiste dans le calcul du nombre des nouveaux abonnements à la suite de l'imposition qu'il a faite, mais avez-vous eu quelque indication de la part de publications existantes au Canada, comme les publications ouvrières, qu'en raison des nouveaux tarifs elles songent à ce que leurs membres reçoivent une publication américaine encartée d'une insertion canadienne?

Mr. Kierans: Oui, il y a eu toutes sortes de propositions et de menaces dans ce domaine, d'avoir la publication imprimée aux États-Unis et postée là. Nous avons écouté toutes ces propositions mais, ex stened to all of these suggestions. But, you know, we ave rather said to them, "Well do you think that the tuation is really that bad?" For example, the nited Automobile Workers suggested that their publi- cation would go out of business, and I said, "Well, the crease in the subscription rate to your members will e approximately 35 cents a year. Do you mean to say at the members of that very rich and powerful union annot afford an additional 35 cents a year!" But on e technical aspects of actually going ahead and aveing it printed in the United States and then mailed ack, I would ask Mr. Pageau to deal with this.

Mr. F. Pageau (Director Postal Rates and Classification, Post Office Department): We already have two nions mailing from the States to Canada, and we have o carry this free. On the other hand, we have another nion publishing their paper in the States but mailing o Canada. Under the new legislation they cannot do is. They cannot go and print in the States and mail o their Canadian subscribers because one cannot go to ither country and mail from that country to Cana- a. This is forbidden under the International Postal onvention. Otherwise mailers would go to countries here postage is cheap and mail from there to the untry of destination. But what they can do now is tablish in the States, as some are. For instance, the nited steel or autoworkers publish nine original itions and one is for Canada. It is in fact an Ameri- n publication with a Canadian content, and without y publicity—because if they carried any publicity for unada they would be barred under the tariff customs.

Mr. Macquarrie: But there is nothing to stop a our group from abandoning its Canadian publica- on and having its members become subscribers to the merican publication which would contain, although ublished in the United States, a section of Canadian ws and that publication the Canadian Post Office partment would have to carry.

Now I am wondering if this sort of thing was con- sidered when you were applying, Mr. Minister, your isk businesslike measures. It is quite conceivable that e labour unions, although you describe them as so eluent, may also be applying brisk businesslike asures and will end up with a situation not at all ilpful to your struggle for a financial surplus.

Mr. Kierans: Oh, they might do that, Mr. Macquar- ie, but I doubt if the publication would be as satis- fying or as appealing to their members—that is, an merican publication with an American editorial int of view, even if it is slanted towards Canadian vies. But they have to make this decision them- selves.

The Chairman: I wonder if I might interrupt at this nt. We have about 15 minutes to go and I have Mr. Cneau and Mr. Perrault on new subjects. If they were fait, nous leur avons répondu: «vous pensez que la situation est si mauvaise?» Par exemple, les Travail- leurs Unis de l'automobile ont prétendu que la publi- cation fera faillite à cause de l'augmentation du tarif d'abonnement, qui serait d'environ $0.35 par an. Vous dites que ces syndiqués ne peuvent se permettre une telle augmentation par année, mais pour ce qui est de l'aspect technique, d'imprimer ces publications aux États-Unis et de les poster là, je vais demander à M. Pageau d'étudier l'affaire.

M. F. Pageau (Directeur-Tarifs et classification, ministère des Postes): Il y a déjà deux syndicats qui font imprimer la publication au Canada et nous devons garantir l'affranchissement gratuit. Mais au titre de la nouvelle loi, il est impossible de le faire. Ils ne peuvent faire imprimer leur publication au Canada et la poster à leurs abonnés canadiens, car on ne peut aller dans un autre pays pour envoyer par la poste au Canada, parce que cela va à l'encontre de la Convention postale internationale. Autrement, les usagers de la poste iraient poster leur courrier dans les pays où les tarifs sont moins élevés. Ce qu'on peut faire maintenant, c'est de les publier aux États-Unis, comme certains le font, tels que les Travailleurs Unis de l'acier ou de l'automobile, qui publient neuf éditions originales, dont une au Canada. C'est une publication américaine avec un contenu canadien, mais sans publicité. S'il y a de la publicité pour le Canada, elle est interdite par le Tarif des douanes.

M. Macquarrie: Mais il n'y a rien qui empêche un groupe ouvrier d'abandonner sa publication cana- dienne et de permettre à ses abonnés de souscrire aux publications américaines qui renfermeraient, bien qu'elles soient publiées aux États-Unis, des nouvelles canadiennes, cette publication devant être transmise par le ministère des Postes.

A-t-on envisagé une telle chose lorsque vous avez mis en vigueur vos méthodes efficaces, monsieur le minis- tre? Il se peut que ces syndicats prennent aussi des mesures efficaces. Ce qui provoquera une situation pouvant nuire à vos efforts visant à un excédent budgétaire.

M. Kierans: Bien sûr, qu'ils peuvent le faire, mon- sieur Macquarrie, mais je doute fort que la publication soit satisfaisante pour les abonnés s'il y a des édi- toriaux américains et des points de vue américains, même si on tient compte des valeurs canadiennes. Mais c'est à eux de prendre cette décision.

Le président: Puis-je vous interrompre sur ce point? Il reste environ quinze minutes et MM. Comeau et Perrault veulent aborder de nouveaux sujets. Nous to both have an opportunity to vent these subjects, then we could come back to this subject, which has really been the dominant factor of the two meetings we have had so far.

Mr. Nesbitt: I hope that you had me down on this same subject.

The Chairman: On periodicals?

Mr. Nesbitt: Yes.

The Chairman: Well that is what we are discussing now. I would like to cut that off. I have you down for a supplementary on that. I have Mr. Ritchie, Mr. Perrault, Mr. Nesbitt and Mr. Osler. Now Mr. Comeau, on a new subject.

Mr. Comeau: The council of Postal Unions—Mr. Houle and Mr. Décarie—make this statement in their press release:

The Postmaster General on the pretext of saving $3 million has imposed a system of mail delivery that changes the conditions of employment during the life of the contract. The cost of supervision of this system (approximately 500 new supervisors) runs close to $4 million.

They say you are saving $3 million but it is costing you $4 million. Mr. Kierans, you say that you are saving $13 million. Who is right in this? Can you explain why they feel that you will be saving $3 million?

Mr. Kierans: When I say we are saving $13 million I am not referring solely to the single mail processing. We are saving—and Mr. Houle and Mr. Décarie are right in that—$3 million. Just to consider that aspect of it, they say that we are employing 500 supervisors to make sure that the new system works and that these 500 supervisors will cost $4 million. I say that we are not employing a single new supervisor to supervise the single mail processing. So that their $4 million figure does not obtain. I know whom we have hired and I am saying to you that we have not hired, let alone 500, an additional supervisor solely for the purpose of surveying and handling the new single mail processing delivery system—not a single one!

Mr. Comeau: Well Mr. Kierans, I have no reason not to believe you but, yet, I have no reason not to believe these people either, and I am just wondering.

Mr. Kierans: Well get them to repeat the statement and to point to the hiring of the 500 people—to name the names and to point out when it was done.

Mr. Comeau: Was this discussed with them.

[Interpretation]

pourrions ensuite revenir à ce sujet-ci qui a surtout fait l'objet des deux dernières séances.

M. Nesbitt: J'espère que je pourrai y revenir.

Le président: Sur les périodiques?

M. Nesbitt: Oui.

Le président: Voilà justement de quoi nous parlons maintenant. J'aimerais qu'on cesse maintenant. MM. Ritchie, Perrault, Nesbitt et Osler ont des questions supplémentaires à poser. Monsieur Comeau, à propos d'un nouveau sujet.

M. Comeau: Le Conseil des unions des Postes, M. Houle et M. Décarie, ont fait la déclaration suivante dans un communiqué:

Sous prétexte d'économiser $3 millions, le Ministère des Postes impose un système de livraison de courrier qui est contraire aux conditions de travail telles que prescrites dans le contrat. Le coût pour surveiller ce système (environ 500 nouveaux surveillants) s'élève à presque $4 millions.

Donc, on épargne 3 millions de dollars, mais on en dépense 4 millions.

Monsieur Kierans, vous dites que vous épargnez 13 millions. Qui a tort, qui a raison? Pouvez-vous expliquer pourquoi on croit que vous pourrez économiser 3 millions?

M. Kierans: Lorsque je dis qu'on épargnera 13 millions, je ne parle pas simplement du courrier. Nous économisons 3 millions,—et MM. Houle et Décarie ont raison sur ce point. Pour en considérer cet aspect, ils disent que nous employons 500 surveillants pour que le système soit efficace, et que ces surveillants coûteront 4 millions. Et moi, je dis qu'on n'emploiera pas un seul surveillant pour surveiller le traitement du courrier. De sorte que ce chiffre de 4 millions n'est pas exact. Je sais qui on embauche, je dis qu'on n'a pas embauché,—certainement pas 500,—même pas un seul surveillant pour surveiller le nouveau système de traitement et de livraison de courrier, pas un seul!

M. Comeau: Monsieur Kierans, je n'ai aucune raison de douter de votre parole, mais je n'ai aussi aucune raison de douter de cette déclaration, et je n'en demande...

M. Kierans: Je voudrais qu'on nomme ces 500 surveillants, s'ils existent.

M. Comeau: Est-ce que vous en avez discuté avec eux?

[Texte]

Mr. Kierans: We have discussed single mail processing with them.

Mr. Comeau: Did you hire any then?

Mr. Kierans: I have not presented in the budget requirements a request for the addition of new supervisors at all to Treasury Board or to Cabinet, or indeed to the government.

Mr. Comeau: Therefore, their calculation that the cost of supervision runs close to $4 million is absolutely false, according to you?

Mr. Kierans: The last time that any additional supervisors were budgeted for was well over a year ago, I think, and prior to my entering the Department. And besides that, as Mr. Sinclair has just pointed out, to reach a figure of $4 million would mean that the cost of what we were giving each one of the 500 supervisors would be roughly about $20,000 per year.

Mr. Comeau: Well it could be if you had office space and all that, Mr. Kierans. Therefore you say that that statement is absolutely false.

Mr. Kierans: I say that the last time a request went forward to the Treasury Board for supervisors was well before my time.

Mr. Comeau: Are you saying, Mr. Kierans, that that statement is false—that the cost of supervision runs close to $4 million according to what they say?

Mr. Kierans: They say that I have engaged or am in the process of hiring 500 supervisors to make the single mail processing system work. I deny that.

Mr. Comeau: Then let us forget about the supervisors. If you do not want to call it supervision, then all the cost of putting your system into operation runs in the vicinity of $4 million, as they state?

1050

Mr. Kierans: I say what I have said before and that is that the net benefit of that system to the taxpayers of Canada will be a reduction in cost of $3 million per year—the net.

The Chairman: That is not gross?

Mr. Kierans: The net benefit.

Mr. Comeau: All right.

The Chairman: Mr. Perrault, on a new subject.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the cost picture in the magazine industry and I wonder if the Minister has any estimate of the cost increases in

[Interprétation]

M. Kierans: Nous avons discuté du traitement du courrier avec eux.

M. Comeau: Est-ce que vous en avez embauché alors?

M. Kierans: Non, je n'ai pas présenté, dans le budget des dépenses, une demande relative à de nouveaux surveillants, soit au Conseil du Trésor, soit au Cabinet, soit au gouvernement.

M. Comeau: Par conséquent, leur calcul selon lequel le système de surveillance coûterait près de 4 millions de dollars est absolument faux, selon vous?

M. Kierans: La dernière fois que des surveillants supplémentaires ont été embauchés, c'est il y a plus d'un an, c'est avant mon entrée au ministère, je crois. Et, comme M. Sinclair vient de le dire, pour en arriver au chiffre de 4 millions, il faudrait donner à chaque surveillant environ $20,000 par an.

M. Comeau: Mais il y a aussi le coût des locaux, etc., monsieur Kierans. Vous dites donc que cette déclaration est absolument fautive?

M. Kierans: Je dis que la dernière fois qu'on a demandé au Conseil du Trésor des fonds pour des surveillants, c'était bien avant mon arrivée au ministère.

M. Comeau: Vous dites donc, monsieur Kierans, que cette déclaration est fautive, à savoir que le coût de la surveillance se chiffre à près de 4 millions?

M. Kierans: On dit que j'ai embauché ou que je vais embaucher 500 surveillants pour le nouveau système de traitement du courrier. Je le nie absolument.

M. Comeau: Il n'y aurait pas besoin de surveillant, alors. Mais, est-ce que le coût de mise en vigueur du système sera environ de 4 millions?

M. Kierans: Je le répète, le bénéfice net de ce nouveau système, pour les contribuables canadiens, sera une réduction des coûts de 3 millions par an. Il s'agit d'une réduction nette.

Le président: Non pas brut?

M. Kierans: Le bénéfice net.

M. Comeau: Bien.

Le président: Monsieur Perrault, un nouveau sujet.

M. Perrault: Monsieur le président, je m'intéresse aux coûts des revues et je me demande si le ministre a une idée de l'augmentation des coûts, depuis 10 ans, that industry over the past 10 years, or since the last adjustment was made in mailing rates? I would like to know, additionally, whether any subscription increases resulted from these production increases, if in fact these production increases have occurred, or have all of these magazines held the line on their subscription rates during the past 10-year period? I would like to relate it to the general cost picture in the magazine industry.

Mr. Kierans: I do not think I can make that relationship, Mr. Perrault. The last time the government made any change at all in the costs to the magazine industry was in 1951, and at that time it was a very, very modest increase. Since 1952 the principal elements of cost in the publishing industry are paper and wages. The average hourly labour rate in the magazine industry has more than doubled, just slightly more than doubled. It has gone from $1.46 an hour to $2.93 an hour. The cost of paper has gone up considerably, but I do not have the figures on the amount by which it has gone up.

Mr. Perrault: Would it be fair, then, to say that in the total production and distribution costs of magazines, there has been a marked decline over the past ten years in the percentage attributable to costs other than paper and labour?

Mr. Kierans: Absolutely, because the proportion of postage as an element of cost in the production of a magazine is a very small percentage.

Mr. Perrault: This is why I find it difficult to follow the argument that somehow increasing postage rates for some of these publications will deal a death blow to many of them, when other costs have soared beyond all comparison to any increase in postal rates.

Mr. Kierans: Well, as I say, we take most of these criticisms and most of these claims with a grain of salt, Mr. Perrault.

The Chairman: Mr. Ritchie on the same subject.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Postmaster General and his staff if, in calculating the increase in revenue under the new rates, they had considered that under the new increase there would be fewer publications?

Mr. Kierans: Well, in a general way we took into account our projected revenues for the next year, and of course our projected costs. But as to how many magazines might stay in business or how many might go out, I would say we did not make an evaluation of that. But in a general way we projected an increase in revenues for the next year of  $x$  per cent.

Mr. Ritchie: In the Canadian Medical Association Journal of March 8, there is an editorial explaining how they plan to meet this. They had been paying dans cette industrie, ou depuis le dernier rajustement des tarifs postaux? J'aimerais aussi savoir si vous avez eu des augmentations d'abonnements à la suite de ces hausses de production, si ces hausses de production ont vraiment eu lieu, ou si ces revues ont pu maintenir leurs tarifs d'abonnement ces dix dernières années. J'aimerais le relier à l'ensemble des coûts de l'industrie des publications.

M. Kierans: Je ne crois pas qu'il me soit possible de faire ce rapprochement, M. Perrault. La dernière fois que le gouvernement a fait quelques modifications dans l'industrie des revues, ce fut en 1951 et à cette époque, il s'agissait d'une hausse très modeste et depuis 1952, l'élément principal des coûts dans l'industrie est le papier, la main-d'oeuvre. Le coût de la main-d'oeuvre a plus que doublé, il a passé de $1.46 à $2.93 de l'heure. Le coût du papier a aussi renchéri considérablement mais je n'ai pas les chiffres exacts.

M. Perrault: Par conséquent, dans la proportion des coûts dans la situation de l'industrie, il y a eu un déclin marqué dans les frais autres que ceux du papier et de la main-d'oeuvre depuis dix ans, n'est-ce pas?

M. Kierans: Absolument, car le coût actuel des frais postaux dans la production d'une revue est très faible.

M. Perrault: C'est pourquoi, je trouve difficile de suivre l'argument d'une manière quelconque. La hausse des tarifs postaux pour ces publications leur fera grand tort.

M. Kierans: Nous absorbons plusieurs de ces critiques et de ces déclarations, nous les prenons avec un grain de sel.

Le président: M. Ritchie, sur le même sujet.

M. Ritchie: Monsieur le président, puis-je demander au ministre des Postes et à son personnel, lorsqu'ils ont calculé l'accroissement des revenus au titre des nouveaux tarifs, s'ils ont tenu compte qu'à cause de cette hausse il y aurait une diminution du nombre de revues.

M. Kierans: Nous avons tenu compte en général des revenus prévus pour l'an prochain et aussi de nos coûts futurs mais pour ce qui est des revues à savoir combien resteront en affaire ou combien disparaîtront, nous avons fait aucune prévision à ce sujet-là. Mais nous avons prévu  $X$  p. 100 d'accroissement des revenus pour l'an prochain.

M. Ritchie: Dans le Canadian Medical Association Journal un éditorial du 8 mars explique comment le journal va s'y prendre quant à la hausse du tarif. Il 18,500 for postage: it has now gone to $140,000, estimated. However, they are reducing to 26 issues instead of 52 a year. On this basis their postal rate will now be $70,000 instead of $140,000. I assume the $140,000 is their estimate. Because their postal cost will be $70,000 less, will you save that much in staff and so on handling the fewer issues? Will you have a saving of $70,000?

Mr. Kierans: Well, I would not say that would be so for the handling of The Canadian Medical Association journal in particular. But I would say that generally speaking we are budgeting for an increase in total volume next year. You have to take them all put together, and the total volume that we expect to handle next year is about 5,765,000,000 pieces of mail as against 5,200,000,000 pieces this year.

Mr. Ritchie: In this area then, you have carried out no studies to find out. . .

Mr. Kierans: We have the general answers.

Mr. Ritchie: The assumption is that they will all remain at the same number of issues?

Mr. Kierans: Some will go up. Some will reduce their circulation, and some will expand.

Mr. Ritchie: My second question has to do with the Western Producer, and the suggestion that last year, August 1, 1967, to July 31, 1968, they had 88 pages of material from federal government sources alone. I assume it is the usual scientific and agricultural material, none of which they pay for. I think most people agree that a farm paper such as this is the best means of disseminating agricultural knowledge.

Would you suggest that the government departments concerned who wished to disseminate this should hire space in these periodicals and newspapers rather than have the Post Office subsidizing them?

Mr. Kierans: I would leave that to the judgment of each Minister concerned.

Mr. Ritchie: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Nesbitt.

Mr. Nesbitt: The question of publications—farm publications, labour publications and the like—has been brought up, and it is quite clear, I think even the Minister would agree, that the increased rates are going to have some effect on them. Of course it is a matter of policy as to whether something should be done to assist this very important form of dissemination of news, particularly technical information to farmers.

I have some very specific figures here for three farm publications, showing the effect of the increase in the payent 18,500 dollars pour la poste. Maintenant cela coûterait 140,000 dollars environ. Au lieu d'avoir 52 publications par année, ils ont diminué à 26 et sur cette base, ils paieraient 70,000 dollars au lieu de 140,000 dollars selon les prévisions. Est-ce que cela vous paraîtra une proportion correspondante de travail, de personnel, etc. . . qui équivaldrait à $70,000?

M. Kierans: Pour ce qui est de ce journal, je ne peut pas dire, mais en général, nous prévoyons un accroissement total du volume l'an prochain. Nous nous attendons d'avoir l'an prochain environ 5,765,000,000 pièces de courrier, contre 5,200,000,000, cette année.

M. Ritchie: Alors, dans ce secteur, vous n'avez fait aucune étude.

M. Kierans: Non, seulement des estimations globales.

M. Ritchie: En supposant le même nombre de publication.

M. Kierans: Non, certaines vont augmenter et certaines vont réduire leur nombre de publication.

M. Ritchie: Pour ce qui est du Western Producer, je dirais que du 1<sup>er</sup> août 1967 au 31 juillet 1968, il y avait un certain nombre de documents du gouvernement fédéral, 88 pages en tout. Je suppose qu'il s'agit de documents scientifiques et agricoles qui ne sont pas payés. Je crois qu'il faut convenir qu'en temps que publication agricole, c'est le meilleur moyen de distribuer des renseignements au cultivateur.

Diriez-vous que le ministère intéressé qui a diffusé ces renseignements, devrait louer de l'espace dans cette publication plutôt, que être subventionné par le ministère des postes.

M. Kierans: Je laisse cela au jugement de chaque ministre intéressé.

M. Ritchie: Merci beaucoup.

Le président: M. Nesbitt.

M. Nesbitt: Dans la question des publications agricoles et ouvrières, il est très clair et les ministres en conviendront, je crois, que l'augmentation des tarifs postaux aura une certaine influence sur les publications agricoles. C'est une question de principe de dire qu'on devrait faire quelque chose quand il s'agit de la diffusion de tels renseignements techniques au cultivateur.

J'ai des chiffres ici pour trois publications agricoles montrant l'influence des nouveaux tarifs postaux. Je rates, and because we are short of time I was going to ask permission, if I might Mr. Chairman, to table the figures and have them printed in the Minutes of the Committee so that the Minister and his officials would have a chance to look at them at their leisure. I might say the figures concern three magazines, The Canadian Fruitgrower, The Canadian Tobacco Grower, and Cash Crop Farming. The new rates will have very deleterious effects, if not disastrous effects, for these three particular publications, and I have the information in detail here.

Mr. Chairman: That would be fine, Mr. Nesbitt. I am sure the Minister would undertake to answer you in due course.

I wonder if we can complete the questioning today with Mr. Osler and Mr. De Bané? We have a schedule of hearing that goes up until the Easter recess, and when we come back after Easter we will have two pieces of legislation plus the other agencies which we must hear. We have already had something like 11 hours with the Minister.

Mr. Macquarrie: It is unusual to predetermine that the examination of the estimates has been . . .

The Chairman: Well, no, but I want to complete today the questions that are on the list. The Steering Committee can always decide whether the Committee shall hear the Minister again or not. But there is a limit to our time, and we do have a certain workload.

Mr. Macquarrie: But when you complete these questions, the estimates will still be before us?

The Chairman: Oh, definitely. There is no intention to call a vote. We cannot call a vote in a meeting held for the purpose of hearing testimony. Mr. Osler.

• 1100

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister if postal rates have had or will have in the future anything whatsoever to do with the problem of distributing Canadian magazines in the United States. It seems to me that the flow of magazines is all one way. The magazine industry is in trouble regardless of postal rates. It is in trouble in the United States as well as in Canada.

The fact remains, however, that we have many American magazines here, and we have very few Canadian magazines in the United States. Has this anything to do with postal operations in either country, or is it the lack of initiative on the part of Canadian publishers?

Mr. Kierans: I do not think that we are hampering the creation and continuance of a viable magazine industry. I would like to repeat that the postage element in the total cost of a magazine is a very minor element.

suppose qu'on pourrait déposer ces documents ou le inclure dans le compte rendu du Comité pour que les autres députés puissent l'étudier. Les chiffres de la question visent les trois revues, Canadian Fruitgrower, Canadian Tobacco Grower et Cash Crop Farming, si on me le permet, je déposerai ces documents. Les nouveaux tarifs auront des effets défavorables sinon désastreux sur ces publications. J'ai l'information détaillée ici devant moi.

Le président: Je suis sûr que le ministre prendra soin de vous répondre. Monsieur Osler, M. De Bané; je me demande si on ne pourrait pas terminer ces questions avec monsieur Osler.

M. Macquarrie: Mais il est inusité de prédéterminer . . .

Le président: Non, je veux finir les questions aujourd'hui qui sont sur la liste. Le Comité peut toujours établir s'il entendra le ministre ou non, mais il y a une limite de temps à respecter.

M. Macquarrie: Quand vous terminerez ces questions, le budget sera-t-il encore devant nous?

Le président: Oui, certainement. Je n'ai pas l'intention de demander un vote tant que l'audience des témoignages ne sera pas terminée. Monsieur Osler?

M. Osler: J'aimerais demander au ministre si les tarifs postaux ont ou auront quelque chose à voir sur la diffusion des magazines canadiens aux États-Unis. Il me semble que le flot des magazines est à sens unique, qu'il y a des ennuis aux États-Unis comme au Canada. Il y a beaucoup de revues américaines ici mais peu de revues canadiennes aux États-Unis. Est-ce que cela a quelque chose à voir à l'activité postale dans chacun de ces deux pays, ou au manque de savoir-faire des éditeurs canadiens?

M. Kierans: Je ne crois pas que nous nuisons à la création d'un magazine viable au Canada. Je veux répéter que l'élément du courrier, de l'affranchissement n'est qu'une infime partie du coût du magazine.

[texte]

[Interprétation]

Mr. Osler: The subject was raised a few moments ago about the contents of farm magazines being composed largely of useful information, some of which comes from government sources, and it was suggested that therefore some sort of subsidy would be a good thing. It seems to me that the argument can go the other way just as easily. If you take handouts and publish them, you have cut down your costs in other directions so much that the government might even consider charging for these handouts.

Mr. Kierans: A two-way street, Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: That is right. If you took away the government handouts, many of these magazines would not have anything to publish and they would have no basis for getting their advertising.

Mr. Kierans: That is right; and neither would they be very appealing to their readers.

Mr. Osler: I think that an industry must carry its own weight, and the same applies to the Legion, or anything else. Veterans in Canada have been looked after better than those of practically any other country in the world—and I speak as a veteran. If they want to take a poke at me, let it be at me as a veteran rather than as a politician.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané.

Mr. De Bané: La seule réflexion que je voulais faire, c'est que, selon moi, ce n'est pas une bonne politique de retarder la solution d'un problème d'une vingtaine d'années pour ensuite le solutionner.

Il est manifeste, et vous avez donné des chiffres exacts que, depuis une vingtaine d'années, on n'a pas changé le prix du courrier de deuxième classe et que le salaire a augmenté. Mais cela amène des problèmes. Dans mon comté, il y a des hebdomadaires qui appartiennent à une personne qui en retire un revenu annuel à peine suffisant pour vivre. Et du jour au lendemain, les tarifs postaux augmentent, au point de dire que ça va lui en coûter deux ou trois mille dollars de plus. Eh bien! c'est fatal.

C'est pourquoi je me demande si on ne devrait pas décider, comme aux États-Unis, de décider tout de suite que les tarifs postaux augmenteront chaque année, par exemple de 0.2 p. cent.

Mr. Kierans: Tout ça, monsieur De Bané, était déjà décidé quand la Chambre a adopté le Bill. Vous parlez, j'imagine, des hebdomadaires de votre région. Je peux vous dire que c'est là le secteur le plus privilégié de tous les secteurs, parce qu'à l'heure actuelle, il ne coûte que 13.2 ou 13.4 p. 100 des coûts d'expédition. Cela veut dire qu'il y a une subvention de 86.8 p. 100 à peu près, ce qui est déjà énorme.

M. Osler: Quant au contenu des magazines agricoles, il est composé surtout de renseignements utiles provenant de sources gouvernementales, alors à ce moment-là, pouvez-vous obtenir des subventions? On peut inverser l'argument. Si vous publiez ces renseignements, vos frais sont déjà de beaucoup diminués. Le gouvernement pourrait alors songer à vendre ces renseignements.

M. Kierans: C'est une arme à deux tranchants, monsieur Osler.

M. Osler: C'est exact. Si vous ne distribuez plus de documentation, beaucoup de ces magazines n'auront plus rien à publier et plus de moyen d'obtenir de la publicité.

M. Kierans: C'est exact; et ils n'auront plus guère d'intérêt pour leurs lecteurs.

M. Osler: Je pense qu'une industrie doit assurer son propre soutien et cela s'applique aussi bien à la Légion qu'à autre chose. Les anciens combattants du Canada ont été mieux traités que ceux de n'importe quel autre pays et j'en parle en tant qu'ancien combattant. S'ils veulent m'attaquer, qu'ils m'attaquent en tant qu'ancien combattant plutôt qu'en tant que politicien.

Le président: M. De Bané.

Mr. De Bané: The only reflection I wanted to make is that I think it is not a good policy to delay the solution of a problem for 20 years, and then to try and find a solution.

It is obvious that you gave us exact figures showing that the second rate postage was not touched for twenty years and that salaries increased. But this raises problems. In my county, there are a few periodicals owned by a person who gets a yearly revenue that barely permits him to live. And overnight, the postal rates increase to such an extent that it will cost him $2,000 or $3,000 more. This will be fatal.

This is why I wonder if it would not be better to decide right away, as in the United States, that the postal rates will increase every year by, for instance, 0.2%.

Mr. Kierans: This, Mr. De Bané, had already been decided when the House of Commons adopted the Bill. You are talking, I presume, about the weeklies in your area. I can tell you that they are in the most privileged of all the areas, because, at the moment we recover only 13.2 or 13.4 per cent of the shipping costs. This means a subsidy of about 86 per cent. It is a tremendous aid that we give them.

[Text]

M. De Bané: Je reconnais ce point mais je me demande s'il ne serait pas mieux au lieu d'augmenter les tarifs seulement une fois tous les vingt ans, d'avoir, comme aux États-Unis, une loi stipulant qu'automatiquement en 1970, les taux augmenteront de tant, et de même en 1971, pour ne pas recommencer la même chose en 1980. Ne pensez-vous pas que ce serait une bonne idée?

M. Kierans: Oui, mais le gouvernement a essayé, à trois reprises, de légiférer dans ce domaine, en 1964 et en 1967 aussi. Il a retiré le bill à ces deux occasions. La dernière fois qu'une telle loi était adoptée, c'était en 1951. Et vous avez raison de dire que l'augmentation était assez énorme.

M. De Bané: Parce qu'il n'y en a pas eu depuis vingt ans.

M. Kierans: C'est exact, mais elle était attendue par tous les propriétaires d'hebdomadaires tout de même. Hier, M. Pageau a rencontré les propriétaires, les représentants de l'Association des hebdomadaires.

● 1105

M. De Bané: Comme vous, monsieur le ministre, qui aimez prévoir l'avenir, ne pensez-vous pas qu'il serait temps de penser à établir une échelle graduelle pour que tout le monde sache à quoi s'attendre pour les prochaines années, comme aux États-Unis.

M. Kierans: Oui, mais nous étions en face d'une perte énorme, et nous devons faire vite.

The Chairman: Mr. McCutcheon?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, if I may . . .

Mr. McCutcheon: I am late for the House now.

Mr. Dinsdale: My question relates to the problem faced by the Legion whereby its magazine is threatened with discontinuation because of the astronomical increase from $19,000 to $228,000 a year on distribution costs. Mr. Osler says he agrees with this drastic increase on the basis that the Legion should be able to pay its own way.

Would he apply the same formula to the subsidies granted under the CBC to private broadcasting stations? Must they pay their own way, too?

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that this is very close to the point, but I know something about the CBC. I refuse, in the first place, to recognize the word "subsidy". The CBC is a service that is paid for by the government. It is not an enterprise that is supposed to be a profit-making institution that is subsidiz-

[Interpretation]

Mr. De Bané: I recognize that, but I ask myself instead of increasing the tariffs once every 20 years should we not have a law that would say, for instance that, in 1970, the rates will increase by so much, and the same in 1971, so as not to do the same thing again in 1980. Don't you think this would be a good idea?

Mr. Kierans: Yes, but the government tried to legislate in that area on three instances, in 1964 and in 1967. The bill was withdrawn both times. The last time such a bill was passed was in 1951. And you are right when you say that the increase was quite considerable.

Mr. De Bané: We did not have any increase for 20 years.

Mr. Kierans: That's right, but it was expected by all the weekly owners, just the same. Mr. Pageau met yesterday the owners and the representatives of the Association of Weeklies.

Mr. De Bané: You, as minister, Mr. Kierans, who likes to plan in advance, do you not think you should establish a graduated scale so that all will know what to expect for the coming years, as in the United States.

Mr. Kierans: We had to face a big deficit, so we had to take measures.

Le président: M. McCutcheon?

M. Dinsdale: M. le président, si je peux . . .

M. McCutcheon: Je suis en retard pour la Chambre maintenant.

M. Dinsdale: Ma question se rapporte au problème de la Légion dont le magazine risque de disparaître à cause de l'augmentation astronomique de 19,000 à 228,000 dollars par année du coût de distribution du magazine. M. Osler a déclaré ici qu'il était d'accord avec cette augmentation considérable et que la Légion devait payer sa part.

Est-ce qu'il applique la même formule aux subside qui sont versés en vertu de Radio-Canada aux radiodiffuseurs privés? Est-ce qu'ils ne devraient pas payer leur part eux aussi?

M. Osler: Je ne sais pas si cela fait partie de la question monsieur le président mais je connais quelque chose au sujet de Radio-Canada. En premier lieu, j'ai refusé le mot subside. Radio-Canada est un service qui est payé par le gouvernement. Ce n'est pas une entreprise qui est supposée faire des profits, elle reçoit

[texte]

Quite the reverse is true. It is a service paid for by the government and it has a qualification that 20 per cent, or $30 million, has to be earned which is what runs the whole service, if you do not mind my saying it is private broadcasters you are talking about, presumably—affiliated stations?

Mr. Dinsdale: That is right.

Mr. Osler: The CBC, in a way, simply rents time on these stations because it is cheaper to get its message across that way than to build its own station.

The Chairman: I hate to interrupt, but Mr. Kierans has to go to the House. Have you a further question of the Postmaster General. You can take that up when we meet the CBC next Tuesday.

Mr. Osler: Thank you.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you.

Mr. McCutcheon: I do not want to delay the procedure at all, but did I overhear the Postmaster General, perhaps it was one of the witnesses, comment that without government handouts these farm magazines would not be very attractive to the general farming public? I think that statement was made this morning.

Mr. Kierans: The general sense of the remarks made at that time was that if they publish articles, or excerpts, or conclusions out of articles provided by the government, I imagine they do so because they are of great interest to their readers. In that case, if they decide all of a sudden to eliminate them I suggest that a great many of their readers who profit from reading such articles would find the paper, or the weekly, much less appealing.

Mr. McCutcheon: This is just exactly the point, Mr. Chairman. In the 1967-68 Estimates, franked mail for the Department of Agriculture was $273,500; in 1968-69 it is $389,600. Now it is $455,000, which is something like the tremendous increase that is being attributed to farm magazines, the Legion, and so on.

I do not suggest it will happen under this Minister, but what I fear could conceivably happen is that we would have only one disseminator of information, which would be the government—Big Brother.

Mr. Kierans: I would not look forward to, or welcome, that eventuality.

Mr. McCutcheon: I grant it . . .

des subventions, c'est un service qui est payé par le gouvernement, qui doit rapporter une certaine somme, 20 pour cent soit $30 millions, ce qui ruine en partie les qualités du service. Mais vous parlez des stations affiliées quand vous parlez des radiodiffuseurs privés?

M. Dinsdale: C'est exact.

M. Osler: Eh bien, Radio-Canada, d'une certaine façon, loue un certain temps à ces stations, parce que c'est moins cher que de construire ses propres stations pour passer certains messages.

Le président: Je m'excuse de vous interrompre, mais M. Kierans doit se rendre à la Chambre. Avez-vous une dernière question à poser au ministre des Postes? Vous pourrez reprendre quand on parlera de Radio-Canada, mardi.

M. Osler: Merci.

M. Dinsdale: Merci.

M. McCutcheon: Je ne veux pas retarder la procédure, mais j'ai entendu l'un des témoins ou peut-être le ministre déclarer que sans les documents du gouvernement fédéral, les magazines agricoles seraient bien peu attrayant pour le public. Je pense que quelqu'un a dit cela ce matin.

M. Kierans: Le sens général des remarques faites à ce moment-là, était que s'ils publient des articles ou des conclusions fournies par le gouvernement, c'est parce que ce sont des articles qui intéressent les lecteurs. S'ils décident tout à coup d'éliminer cela, j'imagine qu'un grand nombre des lecteurs qui tirent des avantages de la lecture de ces articles trouveront que le journal ou l'hebdomadaire est moins intéressant.

M. McCutcheon: C'est exactement le point monsieur le président. Dans le budget 1967-1968, l'affranchissement du courrier du ministère de l'Agriculture, se montait à 273,500 dollars, en 1968, 389,600 dollars, et maintenant à 455,000 dollars, rien de comparable avec ce que doivent payer les magazines agricoles, de la Légion ou autres. Je ne dis pas que cela va se produire sous ce ministère, mais ce que je crains, c'est qu'à un moment donné, nous aurons plus qu'un seul magazine, qu'un seul organisme qui distribuera des renseignements et que ce sera le gouvernement.

M. Kierans: Je ne crois pas que cela se produira et je ne le souhaite pas.

M. McCutcheon: J'imagine . . .

Une voix: C'est ce qui arriverait.

[Text]

Mr. McCutcheon: But it could very well be the result if at sometime we did not have a Minister who, shall we say, is as effective as this one.

Mr. Dinsdale: Careful, careful!

Mr. McCutcheon: But is there not a danger here, Mr. Kierans?

Mr. Kierans: I do not think so.

The Chairman: On that note of disagreement in opinion, perhaps we could adjourn this meeting. We will reconvene at 9.30 on Tuesday morning, when we will be dealing with the other great agency that comes under this Committee, the CBC.

[Interpretation]

M. McCutcheon: Mais ça pourrait bien arriver si e même temps survenait un ministre moins efficace q l'actuel.

M. Dinsdale: Prudence, prudence!

M. McCutcheon: Eh bien, est-ce que ce n'est pas u réel danger, monsieur Kierans?

M. Kierans: Non, je ne le crois pas.

Le président: Sur cette note de désaccord, nous pourrions peut-être ajourner la séance. Nous nous réunirons à 9.30 heures mardi matin. Nous étudierons alors cette autre grande société qui relève de ce Comité, Radio-Canada.

EVIDENCE

Tuesday, March 11 1969

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see a quorum. Today we are discussing the estimates of the CBC which are to be found on page 347 of the Blue Book and the details are on page 355. In addition, on page 466 are indications of a loan to the CBC and the details of that loan are on pages 466 and 467. To begin discussion I will now call Item 30 on page 347.

30 Payment to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for operating expenditures in providing a broadcasting service—$166,000,000

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain has a point of order.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, j'invoque le Règlement pour apporter certains éclaircissements. J'ai lu les témoignages de la dernière réunion où nous avons eu l'occasion d'entendre M. Davidson. Je constate qu'il y a beaucoup d'équivoques. Je me dispense de lire les paroles de M. Davidson, mais je les ai ici. Il y a eu beaucoup d'équivoques dans les réponses de M. Davidson et je pense qu'il est important d'apporter des précisions.

Par exemple, monsieur Davidson, vous nous avez dit que vous n'êtes pas séparatiste.

M. George F. Davidson (Président, Société Radio-Canada): D'accord.

M. Mongrain: Mais, personne ne vous a demandé cela.

Dr. Davidson: On what page?

Mr. Mongrain: On page 533.

Personne ne vous a demandé cela; je pense que personne n'a pensé que vous étiez séparatiste. Vous nous avez dit ensuite que tous ceux qui vous accompagnaient n'étaient pas des séparatistes. Encore, je pense que vous répondiez à nos questions de biais, parce que

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le mardi 11 mars 1969

Le président: J'ai un quorum. Nous allons discuter aujourd'hui des estimations de la Société Radio-Canada que vous allez trouver sur la page 347 du livre bleu dont les détails se trouvent à la page 355. De plus à la page 466, il y a des détails d'un prêt consenti à la Société Radio-Canada et des détails figurant à la page 466 et 467. Pour entamer la discussion, je vais mettre en délibération le crédit 30 à la page 347.

30. Paiement à la Société Radio-Canada pour couvrir les frais d'exploitation de son service de radiodiffusion.

Le président: Monsieur Mongrain fait un appel au Règlement.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, point of order. I want to clarify a few things. I have read the minutes of the last meeting when we heard Mr. Davidson. I noticed that there are a lot of ambiguous statements. I do not have to read Mr. Davidson's comments, I have them here. There is much ambiguity in Mr. Davidson's replies and I think it is important that such things be cleared up. For instance, Mr. Davidson, you said that you are not a separatist.

Dr. George F. Davidson (President, CBC): That's right.

Mr. Mongrain: But no one asked you that.

M. Davidson: A quelle page?

M. Mongrain: Page 533.

Nobody asked you that, and I think that nobody suspected you of being a separatist. Then you said that the people that were with you were not separatists. There again, I think you were answering in a round-about way, because no one did suggest that your colpersonne n'a dit que vos collègues, qui sont ici, pouvaient être séparatistes. C'est à la page 533, monsieur le président.

[Text]

Ensuite, vous avez affirmé que M. Marc Thibault, qui est en charge des affaires publiques, n'est pas un séparatiste. On est encore prêt à vous donner le bénéfice du doute, mais ce n'était pas l'objet des questions que M. Comeau et moi-même avions soulevées.

Vous avez dit un peu plus loin, à la page 534, que vous n'aviez pas à enquêter sur les affiliations politiques des employés. Je ne pense pas qu'on vous ait demandé d'enquêter sur les affiliations politiques de vos employés.

On s'interrogeait sur le fait que certains de vos employés semblent trop souvent utiliser Radio-Canada comme une tribune pour des éléments subversifs. C'est ce contre quoi nous protestons.

Finalement vous avez dit que vous ne vous sentiez pas le droit de cuisiner la nouvelle; c'est aux pages 537 et 541. Aucun membre de ce Comité, aucun de mes collègues n'a eu la prétention de vous demander de cuisiner la nouvelle. Pour nous, une nouvelle est une nouvelle et elle doit être rapportée comme une nouvelle, peu importe sa source.

Je veux bien préciser que la raison des questions que nous posons, de cette espèce d'enquête que nous voulons mener, de cette espèce d'interrogatoire, c'est que nous avons l'impression très nette, après avoir observé les programmes de Radio-Canada, que certains de vos employés ont fait une sorte de noyautage et procurent des tribunes, dans une mesure injustifiée et irraisonnable, à des gens qui sont des séparatistes, des anarchistes, des athées, etc.

The Chairman: I think, Mr. Mongrain, that the line of argument you are following in this point of order could be better pursued when you have the floor to ask questions. You are disagreeing with the way in which Mr. Davidson answered those questions and I am sure Mr. Davidson will be happy to respond when you ask question on that. However, I do not think it is a valid point of order at this time.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, avec tout le respect possible, je suis devant un compte rendu de délibérations qui laisse, selon moi, une impression qui n'est pas exacte. Je ne sais pas si M. Davidson aura des commentaires à faire.

Je veux simplement dire ceci pour préciser notre pensée. C'est important. Il faut se comprendre si on se réunit pour discuter. Et je veux aussi dire à M. Davidson: «De grâce, répondez objectivement à nos questions, ne répondez pas par le biais.»

leagues here, might be separatists. It's on page 533, Mr. Chairman.

Then you said that Mr. Marc Thibault who is responsible for public affairs is not a separatist. There we will also give you the benefit of the doubt, but there again this was not the point of the questions brought up by Mr. Comeau and myself.

On page 534, you also said that you did not have to investigate the political affiliations of employees. I do not think that anyone ever did ask you to investigate on the political affiliations of your employees.

The point of our questions was that certain of your employees seem too often to use the CBC as a platform for subversive individuals. That is what we were protesting.

Finally you said that you did not feel that you had the right to interpret the news. That is on pages 537 and 541. I do not think anyone on this Committee, none of my colleagues, contended that you should interpret the news. In so far as we are concerned, the news is the news. It should be given as such no matter what the source.

I wish to specify that the reason for these questions, for the type of inquiry we want to carry out, for this type of examination, is because we have the very definite impression, after having looked at the CBC programs that certain of your employees have formed into a core or some sort of cells and provided a platform, to an unjustified and unreasonable degree, for people who are separatists, anarchists, atheists, and so forth.

Le président: Je crois, monsieur Mongrain, que les explications que vous donnez dans le cadre du rappel au règlement pourraient s'expliquer davantage lorsqu'on arrivera aux questions.

Je suis certain que M. Davidson sera prêt à vous répondre à ces questions. Mais je ne pense pas que cela soit le moment d'un rappel au Règlement.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, with all possible deference, I am faced with minutes of proceedings which leave, in my opinion, an inaccurate impression. I do not know if Mr. Davidson will have any comments to make.

I simply want to say this in order to specify and clarify our way of thinking. It is important. We have to understand one another if we are here to discuss. I also want to say to Mr. Davidson: "Please answer us objectively, and not in a round-about way."

[Texte]

Do you know what I mean when I say, «répondre par le biais?»—answer something else.» That is all. I am finished with my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The only comment I could make is that is a legitimate part of the political game as we play it in the House of Commons. Mr. McCleave?

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I object to what you are saying now. I am trying to be very objective in my line of questioning.

Mr. McCleave: The area I propose to explore, Mr. Chairman, is the expansion plans of the CBC. Perhaps before I ask the first question I might be permitted to thank the CBC for providing Atlantic Canada with the national news on television at 11 o'clock Atlantic time at night. It gives Mr. Burke a chance to perfect his mistakes with a greater audience an hour later. To be serious, we are very, very grateful that the CBC has done this.

Dr. Davidson, I think in the fall some time the Canadian Radio-Television Commission laid down some guidelines for expansion of services in Atlantic Canada that involved the pending of the CBC's money and I wondered whether there had been consultation with the CBC prior to the issuance of this guideline paper by the CRTC.

Dr. Davidson: I can perhaps answer that, Mr. McCleave, by recalling that the CRTC convened three meetings in a sequence for the purposes of discussing what they referred to as plans for alternative service in different parts of Canada. The first of these meetings was held in Moncton, at which time representations were made by a variety of organizations from the Maritimes and various broadcasting organizations, including the CBC, at which we put forth our views on how alternative service with quality programming could best be provided for the Maritimes.

To the extent that the CRTC held these public hearings and received briefs and discussed them publicly, and to some extent privately with us, it could be said that they were consultations. However, it would not be correct to go beyond that to the point of concluding that we were consulted with respect to the various points that the CRTC included in the declaration that it made after concluding these hearings. We were not informed in advance—I think I am correct in saying that, Mr. Fraser—of the various points that were included in that statement by the CRTC.

[Interprétation]

Vous comprenez ce que je veux dire lorsque je dis «répondre par le biais»? C'est tout. J'ai fini mon appel au Règlement, monsieur le président.

Le président: Je crois que c'est un aspect assez légitime du jeu de la politique, comme celui qui se pratique à la Chambre des communes. M. McCleave?

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je m'oppose à ce que vous dites. J'essaie d'être objectif dans mes questions.

M. McCleave: Le sujet que je veux aborder, ce sont les projets d'expansion de la société Radio-Canada. Avant de poser la première question, on me permettra peut-être de remercier la société Radio-Canada de fournir à la région de l'Atlantique les nouvelles nationales télévisées à 23h., heure de l'Atlantique. Ceci donne à M. Burke l'occasion de faire part de ses erreurs à un plus vaste public une heure plus tard. Pour être sérieux, et nous le sommes, nous sommes très reconnaissants envers Radio-Canada pour tout ceci, monsieur Davidson, je crois qu'à l'automne, le Conseil de la Radio et de la Télévision canadienne a établi des directives en vue de l'expansion des services dans la région atlantique, expansion qui supposait des dépenses des fonds de Radio-Canada, et je me demande s'il y a eu des consultations avec Radio-Canada avant la publication de ces directives du CRTC.

M. Davidson: Monsieur McCleave, je dois vous dire que le CRTC a tenu trois réunions de suite afin de discuter de ce qu'on a appelé le projet en vue de l'établissement d'un service supplémentaire dans diverses parties du Canada. La première réunion a eu lieu à Moncton. A ce moment-là, plusieurs organisations des Maritimes ont adressé des recommandations de même que plusieurs organismes de radiodiffusion, y compris la société Radio-Canada. Nous avons exposé alors notre point de vue au sujet de la meilleure façon d'offrir un service supplémentaire avec une programmation de qualité aux Maritimes.

Dans la mesure où la Commission a tenu ces audiences publiques, reçu des mémoires et discuté publiquement, et, dans une certaine mesure en privé avec nous, on pourrait dire qu'il y a eu consultation.

Dans la mesure où la Commission a tenu ces audiences publiques, reçu des mémoires et discuté publiquement, et, dans une certaine mesure en privé avec nous, on pourrait dire qu'il y a eu consultation. Toutefois, on ne peut pas aller plus loin et en conclure que nous avons été consultés sur les divers points de vue que le CRTC a présentés dans la

[Text]

Mr. McCleave: So the consultations had stopped at the point when they sat down and began to write out this declaration or to hold their own discussions about what should be in it.

Dr. Davidson: I think it is safe to say that is correct.

Mr. McCleave: After the statement was drawn up, but before it was made public, was there any consultation at that point?

• 0945

Dr. Davidson: No, sir. The statement, when it landed on my desk, was as much news to me and to my colleagues in the Corporation as it was to other broadcasting organizations and to the general public.

Mr. McCleave: In your expansion plans, Dr. Davidson, is it correct that it is $30 million for capital expenditure so the expansion item would be included in that?

Dr. Davidson: That is correct, sir.

Mr. McCleave: In your expansion plans, do you have to present this program to Treasury Board or to Cabinet for approval?

Dr. Davidson: Yes.

Mr. McCleave: Which one, or is it both?

Dr. Davidson: We submit our capital budget to the Treasury Board for approval first of all in preparation for the Blue Book of Estimates, and we also have to get Governor in Council approval of the capital budget.

Mr. McCleave: Does the program of expansion for Atlantic Canada proposed for this year follow the suggestions of the CRTC?

Mr. Davidson: Not at the stage at which it has now been submitted to the Treasury Board, because the requirement of the Treasury Board was that our operating and capital budget be in their hands by October 31, as I recall. That was the deadline for the submission of our capital and operating budget for 1969-70...

[Interpretation]

déclaration qu'elle a faite à la fin de ces audiences. Nous n'avons pas connu à l'avance—et je crois que je n'exagère pas en disant cela—nous n'avons pas connu quels étaient les points de vue qui étaient contenus dans la déclaration du CRTC.

M. McCleave: Les consultations se sont donc terminées au moment où ils se sont réunis pour rédiger cette déclaration ou pour discuter de son contenu.

M. Davidson: Oui, je crois que c'est assez juste.

M. McCleave: Après que la déclaration eût été rédigée, mais avant qu'elle ne soit rendue publique, est-ce qu'on vous a consulté?

M. Davidson: Non. La déclaration lorsqu'elle est arrivée sur mon bureau était inconnue aussi bien pour moi et pour mes collègues de la Société que pour les autres organisations de radiodiffusion et le grand public.

M. McCleave: Dans vos projets d'expansion, peut-on dire que vous dépenseriez trente millions de dollars pour vos immobilisations de sorte que le programme d'expansion serait inclus dans ce montant?

M. Davidson: C'est bien cela.

M. McCleave: Dans vos projets d'expansion, faut-il que vous présentiez votre programme au Cabinet ou au Conseil du Trésor qu'il soit approuvé?

M. Davidson: Oui.

M. McCleave: A l'un d'eux ou au deux?

M. Davidson: Nous présentons notre budget des immobilisations au Conseil du Trésor qui doit l'approuver pour la préparation du Livre bleu des prévisions budgétaires. Il nous faut également l'approbation du gouverneur en conseil pour le budget des immobilisations.

M. McCleave: Est-ce que le programme d'expansion pour la région de l'Atlantique proposé pour cette année suit les propositions du CRTC?

M. Davidson: Pas à l'étape où il a été présenté au Conseil du Trésor. Le Conseil du Trésor a exigé que nos budgets de frais d'administration et d'immobilisations leur soient remis le 31 octobre. C'était la date limite pour notre budget d'administration et d'immobilisation pour 1969-1970.

[Texte]

Mr. McCleave: This was before the declaration?

Dr. Davidson: At that stage the declaration of the Commission had not been received.

Mr. McCleave: Could you tell us some of the expansion plans, not only for Atlantic Canada but for other parts of Canada, proposed for this year?

Dr. Davidson: Would it be acceptable, Mr. Chairman, and Mr. McCleave, if I were to ask Mr. Fraser, our Vice-President of Corporate Affairs, to expand upon that at this stage and I can perhaps answer supplementary questions?

Mr. Ronald Fraser (Vice-President, Corporate Affairs Canadian Broadcasting Corporation): I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether it might not be easier and save the time of the Committee if we were to file with you a list of the places for which we will make application. There are a quite a number of them and I think, rather than take your time running through it province by province, it might be easier...

The Chairman: Would that be acceptable, Mr. McCleave?

Mr. McCleave: Yes, that would be acceptable.

The Chairman: I wonder whether the Committee would agree to having this printed as an appendix to today's Proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCleave: There was some stress in the CRTC declaration on the expansion of the French language service in Atlantic Canada. What plans has the CBC in this direction this year?

Mr. Fraser: We have taken the first step already, Mr. Chairman and Mr. McCleave, in that we have purchased a building in Moncton which will be developed into a production centre for the French language regional television service in the Maritimes. It will become the control point for French language television in the Maritimes in the same way that Halifax is the control point for English.

During the course of this year we will modify the building to television need, and at the moment we are hopeful to be in operation from that point with Maritime programming either very late this fall or very early next

[Interprétation]

M. McCleave: Était-ce avant la déclaration de la Commission?

M. Davidson: A ce moment-là, la déclaration de la Commission ne nous était pas encore parvenue.

M. McCleave: Pourriez-vous nous parler des projets d'expansion mis de l'avant pour cette année et concernant non seulement l'est du Canada, mais aussi les autres parties du pays?

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, monsieur McCleave, est-ce que je peux demander à M. Fraser, qui est notre vice-président aux affaires générales, d'élaborer sur ces questions. Peut-être sera-t-il plus en mesure de répondre à vos questions.

M. R. Fraser (Vice-président aux affaires générales, Société Radio-Canada): Monsieur le président, je me demande s'il ne serait pas plus facile et plus rapide de déposer la liste des demandes que nous avons l'intention de présenter. Nos demandes portent sur de nombreux endroits et, plutôt que d'y aller province par province, nous pourrions...

Le président: Est-ce acceptable, monsieur McCleave?

M. McCleave: Je crois que oui.

Le président: Je me demande si le Comité accepterait d'ajouter ceci en annexe aux délibérations d'aujourd'hui.

Des voix: D'accord.

M. McCleave: Dans la déclaration du CRTC, on a parlé assez longuement de l'expansion du service de télévision de langue française dans l'est du Canada. Quels sont les projets de la société Radio-Canada en ce sens pour cette année?

M. Fraser: Certaines dispositions ont déjà été prises, monsieur le président. Nous avons fait l'achat d'un édifice à Moncton, édifice qui sera transformé en centre de production pour les services régionaux de télévision en langue française. Cet édifice deviendra le centre de contrôle pour les émissions de langue française comme Halifax l'est dans le cas des émissions de langue anglaise.

Dans le cours de l'année, nous adapterons l'édifice aux besoins de la télévision. Nous espérons pouvoir produire des émissions régionales dans ces locaux, soit à l'automne ou au début du printemps prochain. L'horaire year. The time schedule is not specific yet; that is, so far as the production facilities are concerned. In addition to that, we plan to establish a news facility in the City of Fredericton, so far as New Brunswick is concerned, for both English and French.

In terms of rebroadcasting stations, at present we have an application in for a French language rebroadcasting station at Boisdale on Cape Breton Island near Sydney. We also are planning to make application for French rebroadcasters at Halifax and Yarmouth, and also at Saint John and Fredericton. The stations at Saint John and Fredericton are transmitters only and will be on the UHF band, not VHF, their being no VHF channels available.

All these rebroadcasters at the start will be fed the network programming of our French network from Montreal to a great extent, and this will be supplemented with Maritime-oriented programming which will be produced primarily in Moncton and supplemented with news items from the provincial capitals in French.

• 0950

Mr. McCleave: Are the feeds out of Moncton to Saint John and Fredericton into Cape Breton Island, and to Halifax and into Yarmouth by microwave?

Mr. Fraser: These will be by microwave, yes.

Mr. McCleave: You mentioned UHF broadcasting for Saint John and Fredericton. Would this not mean that anybody there who wished to listen to these broadcasts would have to make conversions to their television sets?

Mr. Fraser: Either conversions, Mr. McCleave, or purchase new sets. There has been some discussion with the manufacturers, who have expressed an interest in providing sets with this double capability of UHF and VHF to whatever areas are selected to carry UHF service. This is not ideal because, as you know, practically all of the sets today are VHF only but where there are no channels available there is no other choice.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, I thought all new sets had to have VHF and UHF.

Mr. Fraser: It is mandatory in the United States.

[Interpretation]

n'a pas encore été établi: du moins, en ce qui concerne les installations pour la production d'émissions. Nous voulons également établir un bureau de nouvelles pour le secteur français et le secteur anglais dans la ville de Fredericton, du moins, en ce qui concerne le Nouveau-Brunswick.

Pour ce qui est des postes de retransmission, nous avons à l'heure actuelle, une demande en vue de l'installation de postes de retransmission pour le secteur français à Boisdale, sur l'île du Cap-Breton, près de Sydney. Nous voulons également établir des postes de retransmission pour le secteur français à Halifax et à Yarmouth de même qu'à Saint-Jean et à Fredericton. A Saint-Jean et à Fredericton, il s'agira d'émetteurs, fonctionnant sur la bande UHF, car il n'y a plus de canaux THF disponibles.

Tous ces postes de retransmission recevront au début, dans une large mesure, le programmes du réseau français provenant de Montréal; à cela s'ajoutera une programmation centrée sur les Maritimes, qui sera réalisée à Moncton surtout et des nouvelles provenant des capitales provinciales compléteront la programmation.

M. McCleave: Est-ce que la transmission des programmes produits à Moncton et dirigés vers Saint-Jean, Fredericton, l'île du Cap-Breton, Halifax et Yarmouth se fera par micro-ondes?

M. Fraser: Oui, en effet.

M. McCleave: Le réseau UHF à St. John et à Fredericton ne signifie-t-il pas que ceux qui veulent écouter ces émissions devront faire transformer leurs postes?

M. Fraser: Ces personnes devront les convertir ou en acheter de nouveaux. Nous avons discuté avec les fabricants qui se sont dits intéressés à produire des postes comportant les deux éléments pour les régions desservies par les UHF. Ce n'est pas l'idéal car vous savez que la majorité des postes actuels ne sont équipés que pour les VHF, mais nous n'avons pas d'autre choix là où il n'y a pas de canaux de libres.

M. Perrault: Je croyais que tous les postes devaient être équipés pour les VHF et les UHF.

M. Fraser: C'est obligatoire aux États-Unis.

Texte]

The Chairman: I believe it is taking place in June or July of this year with new production runs.

Mr. Osler: In the opinion of the CBC would it be useful or necessary for government to intervene in this matter of UHF, or is it going to take care of itself without any help?

Dr. Davidson: Perhaps I can answer that by saying that it was not within my knowledge that any voluntary decision had been made by the manufacturers to switch over exclusively to the manufacture of the UHF-VHF sets as of the end of June of this year.

Mr. Osler: It has been made?

Dr. Davidson: I understood from the Chairman that this was the intention.

The Chairman: Yes. I understand this is the intention. Now whether anything has been done about it I am not sure.

Mr. Davidson: I know there has been under consideration for some time by the government the possibility that some order might be issued that would require this. Since this is the situation in the United States, I think this would probably be a desirable way of ensuring that we move over at a certain predetermined point in time to ensure that future sets are UHF as well as VHF capable.

Mr. Fraser: I have a supplementary comment. Apparently as an interim step Mr. Gilmore tells me that the manufacturers are leaving space for a plug-in unit whereby a set can utilize UHF.

Mr. McCleave: I suppose that the problem that in the New Brunswick channels, on the western side of New Brunswick with the Americans in there as well, the 13 spectrum filled in the VHF. Is this correct?

Mr. Fraser: Yes.

Mr. McCleave: This does not apply in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Fraser: No, in Nova Scotia there are still VHF channels available. There are two additional areas in the Maritimes at which we are looking. We do not have an answer for it yet. We had a very good meeting two weeks ago in Halifax to discuss this whole problem. And this is the problem of getting the French language service into Northeastern and Northwestern New Brunswick with a provincially oriented service. There appears to be a

[Interprétation]

Le président: Ce sera obligatoire en juin ou juillet de cette année.

M. Osler: Selon Radio-Canada, sera-t-il utile ou nécessaire que le gouvernement intervienne dans cette question des ondes UHF ou est-ce que cela va se régler tout seul?

M. Davidson: Je puis peut-être répondre. À ma connaissance, les fabricants ont décidé d'eux-mêmes de fabriquer des appareils UHF-VHF à partir de juin cette année.

M. Osler: La décision a été prise cette année?

M. Davidson: Je crois que c'est ce que les sociétés ont l'intention de faire.

Le président: Sauf erreur, c'est ce qu'elles ont l'intention de faire. Je ne sais pas s'il y a eu quelque chose de fait en réalité.

M. Davidson: Je sais que le gouvernement étudie depuis quelque temps la possibilité d'établir un décret à cet effet. Comme c'est la situation qui existe aux États-Unis, je crois que ce serait sans doute une bonne façon d'assurer que les appareils qui seront construits à l'avenir pourront capter les deux genres d'ondes.

M. Fraser: Monsieur Gilmore me dit que les fabricants laissent un espace pour y insérer un transformateur à ondes UHF. C'est une mesure temporaire.

M. McCleave: Je suppose que dans l'ouest du Nouveau-Brunswick, les treize canaux VHF sont déjà occupés à cause de la proximité des Américains.

M. Fraser: C'est exact.

M. McCleave: Cela n'est pas le cas en Nouvelle-Écosse?

M. Fraser: En Nouvelle-Écosse, il y a encore des canaux VHF non occupés. Il y a deux autres régions des Maritimes qui nous intéressent. Il y a eu une excellente réunion à Halifax il y a quelque temps pour discuter de la question. Le problème, c'est d'obtenir un service de langue française dans le nord-ouest et dans le nord-est du Nouveau-Brunswick, axé sur les besoins de la province. Il semble qu'il y ait une façon technique de procéder technical way of doing this but I have no details on it yet. We will develop this as rapidly as we can.

Mr. McCleave: To sum up, do you anticipate that this expansion of the French language broadcasting into these various areas you have mentioned will be complete by the end of next year, Mr. Fraser?

Mr. Fraser: I do not think we will be able to get all of them in by the end of next year, Mr. McCleave, but certainly I would expect by the following year, possibly with the exception of Northeastern and Northwestern New Brunswick, on which I cannot comment yet—and assuming the funds continue to be available.

The Chairman: Do you have a supplementary, Mr. Comeau?

Mr. Comeau: I was under the impression that we had had negotiations on the Yarmouth station, for example. This was expected in early 1969 but apparently it will not be in until late 1970.

Mr. Fraser: This will depend. I do not have the exact date at the moment. I can get it, Mr. Comeau, but it depends on the availability of the microwave service between Halifax and Yarmouth which we have now arranged for. We have entered into a contract for this but I do not have a completion date of that microwave service yet.

Mr. Comeau: Do you think it was October?

Mr. Fraser: That is October of this year.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury, and then Mr. Hymmen.

Mr. Stanbury: On a point of information, Mr. Chairman, there is a Governor in Council Order for all new television sets to include VHF and UHF capability but there was a period of several months given for manufacturers to adjust to this, as you said. May I ask if the list of applications for new television stations includes a French channel in Toronto?

Mr. Fraser: Yes. This is on our list, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stanbury: The application has been made?

Mr. Fraser: No. The application has not been made. The Toronto French station is tied in with the establishment of a new broadcasting tower in Toronto and until we mais je n'ai pas de détails à ce sujet. Nous voulons procéder aussi vite que possible.

M. McCleave: En un mot donc, vous croyez que cette expansion dans ces régions de la radiodiffusion d'expression française sera chose faite à la fin de l'année prochaine?

M. Fraser: Je ne crois pas que tous ces problèmes soient résolus à la fin de l'année prochaine mais je crois que l'année suivante, à condition de disposer des sommes nécessaires, cela devrait être assez avancé, à l'exception du nord-est et du nord-ouest du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Le président: Avez-vous d'autres questions, monsieur Comeau?

M. Comeau: Je croyais que des négociations étaient en cours dans la région de Yarmouth, cela était attendu pour le début de 1969, mais ne viendra pas avant la fin de 1970.

M. Fraser: Je n'ai pas la date exacte mais je puis l'obtenir. Tout dépendra de nombreux facteurs, à savoir si nous pourrions obtenir le service de micro-ondes entre Halifax et Yarmouth que nous avons demandé. Nous avons signé un contrat à cet effet, mais il n'y a pas eu de date fixée pour la fin des travaux.

M. Comeau: Était-ce en octobre?

M. Fraser: Octobre de la présente année.

Le président: Monsieur Stanbury, et ensuite monsieur Hymmen.

M. Stanbury: A titre de renseignement, il y a un décret du gouverneur en conseil qui exige que tous les nouveaux postes de télévision puissent recevoir des émissions VHF et

UHF. On a accordé aux fabricants quelques mois pour se préparer à cette transformation. Est-ce que dans la liste des demandes il y a un poste d'expression française?

M. Fraser: Oui, cela figure à notre liste, monsieur le président.

M. Stanbury: La demande a été faite?

M. Fraser: Non, elle n'a pas encore été faite. Le poste français de Toronto dépend de l'établissement d'une nouvelle tour de transmission à Toronto. Jusqu'à ce que nous ayons get a target date on that we will probably hold the application. At the moment the target date for that tower is the fall of 1970.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I should add that we have announced our intention to file application in the course of this present year.

Mr. Stanbury: Then is the tower location now settled?

Mr. Fraser: Not finally. We are now in the final throes of financial discussion with the people who are promoting the tower and when that is satisfactory, if that is satisfactory to us, we will conclude an agreement and proceed.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, is the site settled?

Mr. Fraser: The site is settled. As far as we are concerned the downtown site is the better site.

Mr. Givens: For the tower?

Mr. Fraser: For the tower.

Mr. Givens: Now when you say the target date is 1971...

Mr. Fraser: The fall of 1970 is the target date.

Mr. Givens: Is that the target date for commencement or completion?

Mr. Fraser: For the commencement of operation—for completion of the tower.

Mr. Givens: The completion of the tower by when?

Mr. Fraser: The fall of 1970.

Mr. Givens: The fall of 1970, so you can start transmitting then.

Mr. Fraser: Yes.

Mr. Givens: By the fall of 1970, and you have settled on a site downtown. The only thing that is in the way now, the only barrier, is the financial transaction.

Mr. Fraser: Yes. We have not signed the final tower agreement as yet, Mr. Givens.

Mr. Givens: Who do you intend to sign that with?

Mr. Fraser: This is with a subsidiary of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific.

Mr. Givens: CP. Pacific is down there.

une date de fixée à ce sujet, nous allons retenir la demande. C'est à l'automne 1970 que la tour de transmission doit être construite.

M. Davidson: Nous allons probablement présenter la demande au cours de l'année.

M. Stanbury: L'emplacement de la tour a-t-il été déterminé?

M. Fraser: Non. Nous sommes à discuter finances avec les promoteurs de la tour. Lorsque nous serons satisfaits, nous allons conclure une entente et procéder.

M. Givens: A-t-on décidé de l'emplacement?

M. Fraser: Oui. Selon nous, la basse ville constitue le meilleur emplacement.

M. Givens: Pour la tour?

M. Fraser: Oui.

M. Givens: Quand vous dites que la date limite est 1971...

M. Fraser: La date limite, c'est l'automne de 1970.

M. Givens: Est-ce la date de début ou de fin des travaux?

M. Fraser: C'est la date de fin des travaux, de début d'exploitation.

M. Givens: La tour sera terminée quand?

M. Fraser: A l'automne 1970.

M. Givens: C'est alors que vous allez commencer à diffuser?

M. Fraser: Oui.

M. Givens: A l'automne 1970 et vous avez décidé d'un emplacement dans la basse ville. Le seul obstacle, ce sont les transactions financières.

M. Fraser: Nous n'avons pas encore signé le contrat final.

M. Givens: Qui sera l'autre signataire?

M. Fraser: Nous voulons signer le contrat avec une filiale du National-Canadien et du Pacifique-Canadien.

M. Givens: Le CP est déjà là.

Mr. Fraser: CN and CP.

Dr. Davidson: This depends, Mr. Givens, on our arriving at a satisfactory financial arrangement with our prospective partners.

Mr. Givens: I understand they drive a hard bargain.

Mr. Fraser: I hope that is mutual, Mr. Givens.

Mr. Stanbury: There is an alternative, is there not?

Dr. Davidson: There is an alternative proposal involving a tower at the site of North York. We have indicated that in principle and on technical grounds as well as on other grounds, we prefer the downtown location.

Mr. Stanbury: But you are not willing to pay through the nose to get it.

Dr. Davidson: That is correct.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, this is very important back home.

The Chairman: We all have to look after our constituencies, Mr. Givens.

Mr. Givens: Dr. Davidson, when you talk about the tower—I want to make this clear because it is very unclear back in Toronto—are you talking simply of the tower, with no other facilities?

Dr. Davidson: That is correct.

Mr. Givens: Then is it possible that you would construct the tower in downtown Toronto but that the other facilities would be constructed elsewhere in Metro Toronto?

Dr. Davidson: That is possible. That is an option that we want to leave open to us until such time as we can arrive at satisfactory financial arrangements.

Mr. Givens: When you say that is possible, do you mean economically possible or technically possible and technically feasible?

Dr. Davidson: Both.

Mr. Givens: Well, just as it is more desirable, as you have just said, to have the tower downtown, is it similarly desirable that the other facilities be downtown as well?

Dr. Davidson: It would depend very largely, Mr. Givens, on the financial arrangements that we would be able to make and we are not prepared to give any hostages to fortune with respect to a commitment on the plant, as distinct from the tower, until we see clearly what the financial involvements are.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Fraser: Le CN et le CP.

M. Davidson: Nous allons essayer d'obtenir des dispositions financières satisfaisantes de nos associés éventuels.

M. Givens: Je crois qu'ils sont assez durs n'est-ce pas?

Mr. Fraser: Cela vaut des deux côtés.

M. Stanbury: N'y a-t-il pas une autre solution?

M. Davidson: Il y a une autre proposition en ce qui concerne l'érection d'une tour dans North York. Pour des raisons techniques et de principe, nous préférons l'emplacement en ville.

M. Stanbury: Vous n'êtes toutefois pas disposés à payer la forte somme pour l'obtenir?

M. Davidson: C'est exact.

M. Givens: Monsieur le président, ceci est très important dans nos circonscriptions.

Le président: Nous avons tous à penser à nos électeurs.

M. Givens: Monsieur Davidson, lorsque vous parlez de la tour de transmission—je veux que cela soit clair, parce que ça ne l'est pas à Toronto—parlez-vous simplement de la tour de transmission et d'aucun autre édifice?

M. Davidson: C'est exact.

M. Givens: Il est donc possible que vous construisiez la tour en plein centre de la ville et que les autres installations seront faites ailleurs?

M. Davidson: C'est une possibilité que nous voulons conserver jusqu'à ce que nous ayons obtenu des dispositions financières satisfaisantes.

M. Givens: Quand vous dites que c'est possible, parlez-vous du point de vue économique ou du point de vue technique?

M. Davidson: Oui, aux deux points de vue c'est possible.

M. Givens: Comme il est souhaitable de construire la tour en ville, est-il de même souhaitable, du point de vue technique, de grouper les autres installations en ville?

M. Davidson: Ceci dépendra des arrangements financiers que nous pourrions conclure. Nous ne sommes pas prêts à courir le risque d'engager quelque chose à l'égard des autres édifices, séparés de la tour, avant de connaître toutes les répercussions financières.

[Texte]

Mr. Givens: The vibrations—that is the word that I was groping for—the vibrations from the tracks as they are presently being operated, the bulk of the traffic having been taking out of there, will give you no technical problems down at the CP-CN lakefront property?

Mr. Fraser: This, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Givens, would have to be shown. This could not be tolerated. We see nothing actually in the way of this problem that cannot be solved—if there is a problem.

Mr. Givens: But you have made feasibility studies, I take it; engineering feasibility studies to indicate one way or another whether...

Mr. Fraser: We have not made them ourselves, Mr. Givens. There have been some preliminary studies made by the people interested in having us locate downtown.

Mr. Givens: How long do you think you can put off the decision, regardless of what the condition precedents? How long do you think you can put off the decision with respect to the site of the other facilities in addition to the tower?

Dr. Davidson: May I try to answer that. Our first concern is to settle the arrangements with respect to the tower. Once we get those arrangements finalized, if we know that we are going to be in partnership or any mutual arrangement with the CN-CP group in downtown Toronto, then we will be willing to sit down and examine with that same group what arrangements could be made with respect to site location.

But we have, as you know, a property up at Don Mills now owned by the Corporation and we had originally intended to build out here. We located up there because at that time the standing rules of the Department of Transport were that no tower in excess of 1,000 feet in height could be built; consequently we made a decision to move out of the downtown area to the Don Mills location. Since then, the Department of Transport has modified its ruling. The proposed tower on the CN-CP site is now to be of the order of 1,650 feet and this makes that site location favourable, whereas it was not favourable before.

Mr. Givens: You say it is to be 1,650 feet. The Toronto-Dominion centre is about 750 feet, so this is about double that.

Mr. Fraser: Correct.

[Interprétation]

M. Givens: Les vibrations des voies, après en avoir supprimé le gros de la circulation ne vous causeront aucun problème technique si près du CN-CP?

M. Fraser: Il faudra que ceci soit bien démontré, car nous ne pourrions le tolérer. Ce problème n'est pas impossible à résoudre, si problème il existe.

M. Givens: Sauf erreur il y a eu des études de génie afin de déterminer si cela va causer des problèmes.

M. Fraser: Il y a eu des études préliminaires qui ont été effectuées par les personnes intéressées à nous voir installés en ville.

M. Givens: Pendant combien de temps pourrez-vous remettre cette décision au sujet de l'emplacement des autres édifices de Radio-Canada en plus de la tour de transmission?

M. Davidson: Je vais tenter de répondre à cette question. Nous voulons d'abord régler certaines dispositions au sujet de la tour. Lorsque tout sera définitif, lorsque nous saurons si nous aurons le CN-CP comme associés ou autres, nous allons examiner avec le même groupe les dispositions possibles au sujet de l'emplacement de nos bureaux.

Nous avons toutefois une propriété à Don Mills où nous voulions au début nous établir. Nous nous sommes établis là-bas parce qu'à ce moment-là, le ministère des Transports avait décidé qu'aucune tour de plus de 1,000 pieds ne pouvait être construite. Et c'est la raison pour laquelle nous avons décidé de quitter la basse ville pour nous rendre dans la région de Don Mills.

Depuis lors, le ministère des Transports a modifié son jugement, et la tour, qui doit être construite sur le terrain du CN-CP va mesurer environ 1,650 pieds ce qui rend cet emplacement favorable tandis que ce n'était pas le cas avant.

M. Givens: Vous dites qu'elle sera 1,650 pieds de haut. Le Centre de la banque Toronto-Dominion mesure environ 750 pieds, ce sera alors à peu près le double?

M. Fraser: C'est juste.

[Text]

Mr. Givens: That is a tall tower.

Dr. Davidson: It is a tall tower.

Mr. Stanbury: I have no particular preference, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to see the thing built. The other questions I wanted to ask on this point had to do with the acquisition of a site, if you were to acquire another site. Have you had an offer from the municipal authorities in Toronto which is similar to the one you had in Montreal for your consolidation there?

Dr. Davidson: I do not quite understand your question.

Mr. Stanbury: I understand there was some assistance from the City of Montreal with respect to the acquisition of a site in Montreal to join together the various pieces...

Dr. Davidson: If we were to decide to locate our plant anywhere other than on the property that we now own, I think it would almost certainly be in conjunction with the CN-CP group. They are the ones who already have control of the property on which the buildings would be located. So far as I can foresee there would be no question of a special arrangement being made by the City of Toronto to assist us in acquiring a location of our own at anything less than commercial rates.

Mr. Stanbury: What was the arrangement in Montreal?

Dr. Davidson: I will have to call upon Mr. Gilmore to give us the detail on this, because it was before my time.

Mr. James Gilmore (Vice-President, Planning, and Assistant Chief Operating Officer, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation): Mr. Chairman, the arrangement in Montreal was a combination of a joint relocation between the federal and provincial governments of the residential and commercial operations in that area of Montreal to aid in the redevelopment of what I think is about a 25 acre site by the CBC, together with a partial suspension of tax payments for about 17 years. In other words, it was a very complex arrangement but the net result was that the Corporation acquired the property at a very desirable price, based on the encouragement of the provincial government, the City of Montreal and the redevelopment funds available through CMHC.

[Interpretation]

M. Givens: C'est une très haute tour, n'est-ce pas?

M. Davidson: C'est une très haute tour.

M. Stanbury: Je n'ai pas de préférence, je voudrais la voir construite.

L'autre question que je voudrais poser à cet égard se rapportait à l'acquisition d'un emplacement. S'il faut acheter un autre emplacement, est-ce que les autorités municipales de Toronto vous ont fait des offres semblables à ceux que vous avez obtenus de la ville de Montréal pour votre consolidation là-bas.

M. Davidson: Je ne comprends pas tout à fait votre question.

M. Stanbury: Je crois que la ville de Montréal prêterait son concours quant aux emplacements possibles à Montréal afin de réunir les divers éléments.

M. Davidson: S'il faudrait décider de situer ces installations ailleurs que sur la propriété que nous possédons déjà, je crois que ce serait sans doute de concert avec le CN-CP. Ce sont eux qui contrôlent déjà le terrain sur lequel les immeubles seraient situés.

Comme je peux le prévoir il n'y aurait pas de question d'un arrangement spécial avec la ville de Toronto, en vue de nous aider à acheter un emplacement à des taux moindres que les taux commerciaux.

M. Stanbury: Quels étaient les arrangements à Montréal?

M. Davidson: Il faudrait que je demande à M. Gilmore pour vous donner des précisions à ce sujet parce que je n'étais pas encore là en ce moment.

M. Gilmore (vice-président de la planification et chef adjoint de l'exploitation, Société Radio-Canada): Monsieur le président, les arrangements à Montréal étaient un ensemble d'une relocalisation entre le gouvernement fédéral et les gouvernements provinciaux des opérations résidentielles et commerciales dans cette région de Montréal, pour aider au réaménagement de, je crois, 25 acres par Radio-Canada, ainsi qu'une suspension temporaire d'impôt pendant une période de 17 ans. En d'autres mots, c'était un arrangement assez complexe, ayant pour résultat que la Société a pu acheter le terrain à un prix très convenable, moyennant l'encouragement du gouvernement provincial, de la ville de Montréal et de fonds de réaménagement par l'intermédiaire de la Société Centrale d'hypothèques et de logements.

[Texte]

Mr. Stanbury: What would you estimate to be the subsidization of your site by the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal?

• 1005

Mr. Gilmore: I am afraid I would have to get that figure. It has been calculated but I do not remember it, and it would be too dangerous for me to estimate it.

Mr. Stanbury: You could not make any estimate of it?

Mr. Gilmore: Yes, we have an estimate on file. I would rather not give a figure, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stanbury: It is very substantial.

Mr. Gilmore: It is substantial.

Mr. Stanbury: In the millions?

Mr. Gilmore: Yes.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, I would like to see those figures. My understanding is that the Montreal site was made possible because it was treated as an area of urban renewal and CMHC picked up a substantial part of the action. This is why it was possible.

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Givens: Also, the Province of Quebec had to enact special legislation with respect to its partial tax suspension. If I may, Mr. Chairman, and with great respect, I would like to ask for a complete report as to the financing of this project—I do not mean a report running to 10, 15 or 20 pages, and I have seen such reports that were very voluminous—as to what part was played by each of the three levels of government in the acquisition of that site in Montreal.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, we would be very glad to file a memorandum that could be attached as an appendix to today's proceedings, if that is acceptable to the Committee.

The Chairman: That is acceptable.

Mr. Hymmen: Mr. Chairman, we are considering Item 30, are we not?

The Chairman: Yes, but we are utilizing it as a springboard more than anything else. You are dealing with a supplementary to Mr. McCleave's question, so you are permitted at this time to ask questions concerning further construction and perhaps even the CBC's relationship with the CN-CP.

[Interprétation]

M. Stanbury: Quel serait le montant de la subvention accordée par la province de Québec et par la ville de Montréal?

M. Gilmore: Je crois qu'il faudrait que j'obtienne ces chiffres. Le calcul a été fait, mais je ne m'en souviens plus, et ce serait trop risqué pour moi de faire une estimation.

M. Stanbury: Pouvez-vous nous donner une idée?

M. Gilmore: Oui, nous avons des estimations dans nos dossiers, mais j'aimerais mieux ne pas me hasarder, monsieur le président.

M. Stanbury: C'est un chiffre assez élevé, je suppose.

M. Gilmore: En effet.

M. Stanbury: Dans des millions?

M. Gilmore: Oui, c'est cela.

M. Givens: M. le président, j'aimerais avoir ces chiffres. Si j'ai bien compris, l'emplacement de Montréal a été rendu possible parce que c'était une région de réaménagement urbaine, et la SCHL y a contribué pour une grande partie. C'est la raison pour laquelle la chose a été rendue possible.

Le président: C'est juste.

M. Givens: La province de Québec a aussi dû décréter des mesures législatives spéciales à l'égard de cette suspension partielle d'impôt. Si possible, j'aimerais obtenir une étude assez approfondie quant au financement de ce projet. Je n'entends pas un document de 10, 15 ou 20 pages. J'ai vu de ces études qui sont très volumineuses, quant au rôle qui a été joué par les trois paliers du gouvernement lors de l'achat de cet emplacement à Montréal.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, nous avons justement un mémoire que nous pourrions annexer au procès-verbal d'aujourd'hui, si cela convient au Comité.

Le président: Ou, c'est acceptable.

M. Gilmore: Un mémoire d'une page.

M. Hymmen: Monsieur le président, nous sommes à l'étude du crédit 30, n'est-ce pas?

Le président: Oui, mais nous le considérons plutôt comme un tremplin qu'autre chose. Vous avez affaire à une question supplémentaire à celles qu'on a posées à M. McCleave, alors nous vous permettons de demander des questions se rapportant à la construction et aux rapports entre la Société Radio-Canada et CN-CP.

[Text]

Mr. Hymmen: That is exactly what I was going to say, that we are on supplementaries to a previous question and I will withdraw until a later time.

The Chairman: All right. Are there any more questions dealing with further CBC construction or even with the CBC's relationships with the CRTC?

Mr. Comeau: I have heard that a French program in the Yarmouth area was given priority to another English station. Is this correct?

Mr. Fraser: In Yarmouth?

Mr. Comeau: Yes.

Mr. Fraser: I suppose this would be up to the CRTC. As you know, we have our own English language outfit there and we certainly will be applying for one. We are in accord with the CRTC, that so far as we are concerned the next need is a French outlet. It could only be a decision by the CRTC if it were decided to put a second English service in there.

Mr. McCleave: I have a couple of short questions I would like to ask about this expansion in the CRTC relationship, if I may, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. McCleave: Dr. Davidson, in connection with expansion plans, does the CBC have its own researchers who look into the question of where next to develop?

Dr. Davidson: Up until the present time we have accepted the responsibility for developing our own plans, setting our own priorities—the Board makes the final decisions as to what the priority should be—and submitting our capital budget to the Treasury Board on that basis. We have the facilities and the resources to continue to do so.

Mr. McCleave: Does this involve a staff devoted entirely to these objectives, Dr. Davidson?

Dr. Davidson: In the planning department we have a staff that is responsible for developing our future plans. Station by station, area by area, in some detail and with the help of the engineering department they test out the site location, the power requirements and other technical aspects of any location where we propose to make an application. As you know, we have to file a substantial plan with the CRTC. It is not just a request to install a station in some location.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Hymmen: C'est ce que je voulais dire. Ce sont des questions supplémentaires aux questions précédentes. Alors, je me retire pour le moment.

Le président: D'accord, y a-t-il d'autres questions se rapportant aux constructions de Radio-Canada ou des rapports de Radio-Canada avec le CRTC?

Mr. Comeau: J'ai entendu dire, en ce qui a trait à la région de Yarmouth, que la programmation francophone a un droit prioritaire quant aux postes anglophones? Est-ce juste?

Mr. Fraser: A Yarmouth?

Mr. Comeau: Oui.

Mr. Fraser: Je crois que cela dépend du CRTC. Comme vous savez, nous avons nos propres installations en langue anglaise et nous en demanderons certainement. Nous nous sommes mis d'accord avec le CRTC. Quant à nous, il faudrait peut-être établir un service francophone. Seul le CRTC décidera d'installer une deuxième station anglophone.

Mr. McCleave: Est-ce que je peux poser encore quelques questions au sujet de l'expansion des rapports du CRTC?

Le président: D'accord.

Mr. McCleave: Monsieur Davidson, quant à l'expansion est-ce que le CRTC a ses propres chercheurs qui décident où le développement doit être fait?

Mr. Davidson: Jusqu'à présent, nous avons accepté la responsabilité de mettre au point nos propres plans et d'établir nos propres priorités. La Commission prend les décisions définitives en ce qui concerne les priorités. Elle soumet le budget d'immobilisation au Conseil du Trésor. Nous avons les moyens et les ressources de le faire.

Mr. McCleave: Monsieur Davidson, est-ce que cela implique un personnel à plein temps qui s'occupe de ces objectifs?

Mr. Davidson: Oui, nous avons un personnel de planification chargé de mettre au point nos plans à venir. Station par station, région par région, en détail, et à l'aide du Service du génie, ils étudient l'emplacement, les besoins de puissance et d'autres aspects techniques de tout emplacement où nous proposons de faire une demande. Comme vous savez, nous devons présenter un projet important au CRTC. Il ne s'agit pas seulement de présenter une demande pour l'installation d'une station à n'importe quel emplacement.

[Texte]

Mr. McCleave: You have to justify your request?

Dr. Davidson: Correct.

Mr. McCleave: Does the CRTC have a staff to deal with expansion of services across Canada?

Dr. Davidson: I could not answer for the CRTC in detail. However, I think perhaps Mr. Fraser could indicate his understanding of the way in which the CRTC approaches a problem such as is presented by the alternative service question.

• 1010

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman and Mr. McCleave, I do not know the details of this but I understand they have a planning group. For example, in connection with the decision relative to the Maritimes I believe the planning group did do some field work, especially in New Brunswick and, I believe, in Prince Edward Island. I was told that they were down there studying the situation. I have no personal knowledge of how this group operates.

Dr. Davidson: Could I just add, Mr. McCleave, that our planning group of course deals only with the Corporation's own plans and priorities, and I would assume that the CRTC would have to take into account not only any plans we might have but any plans that the private broadcasting agencies might have.

Mr. McCleave: But you would be pretty well above in expanding into certain areas that could not otherwise be served except with the help of public moneys, would you not?

Dr. Davidson: I think so, yes.

Mr. McCleave: My final question here, Mr. Chairman, arises again out of the statement of the CRTC which came out after the CBC had presented its capital budget for this fiscal year.

Did you find different priorities in the suggestions of the CRTC as opposed to your own projection of a program of capital development for Atlantic Canada?

Dr. Davidson: Yes, sir.

Mr. McCleave: Are you going to change our own projection of plans as a result of the CRTC approach? How are you going to solve the difference?

Dr. Davidson: I have already had a number of discussions with the chairman of the CRTC.

[Interprétation]

M. McCleave: Faut-il justifier votre demande?

M. Davidson: Oui, c'est cela.

M. McCleave: Est-ce que le CRTC a un personnel qui doit étudier l'expansion des services au Canada?

M. Davidson: Je ne peux vous répondre en détail pour le CRTC, mais M. Fraser va peut-être répondre pour expliquer comment le CRTC traite le problème tel qu'il est présenté par la contrepartie.

M. Fraser: Monsieur le président, monsieur McCleave, je ne connais pas les détails mais je crois qu'ils ont un groupe de planification. Par exemple, à l'égard de la décision concernant les Maritimes, je pense que l'équipe de planification a fait du travail sur place, particulièrement au Nouveau-Brunswick et sur l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard. On m'a dit qu'ils étaient là-bas pour étudier la situation. Je ne sais pas comment ils travaillent.

M. Davidson: Est-ce que je peux juste ajouter, monsieur McCleave, que notre équipe de planification n'étudie que nos propres plans en priorité, et je crois que le CRTC devrait tenir compte non seulement de nos plans, mais aussi des plans des organismes privés de radiodiffusion.

M. McCleave: Mais, il serait indiqué de s'entendre à certaines régions qui ne pourraient pas être servies autrement sauf à l'aide des fonds publics.

M. Davidson: Je pense que oui.

M. McCleave: Ma dernière question, monsieur le président, provient de la déclaration du CRTC. Après que Radio-Canada eût soumis ses prévisions budgétaires d'immobilisation pour cette année financière. Avez-vous trouvé un différent ordre de priorités dans les propositions du CRTC à comparer avec votre propre projet d'un programme de développement d'immobilisation pour les provinces de l'Atlantique.

M. Davidson: Oui, monsieur.

M. McCleave: Alors, allez-vous changer vos propres extrapolations en conséquence? Comment allez-vous résoudre cette différence?

M. Davidson: Nous nous sommes déjà entretenus avec le président du CRTC. Au

[Text]

In at least one of these discussions we were joined by the Chairman of the executive board of the CTV, which is also involved in the same area and is directly involved in some of the switches and rearrangements that are proposed by the CRTC.

I have no doubt that in some respects our plans would be revised to take account of the indications that the CRTC has given as to what they consider to be desirable priorities. I do not anticipate that we will have any serious difficulty in reaching an understanding with the CRTC as to the relative ordering of the priority in which different proposals of theirs should be tackled. We have discussed with the chairman of the CRTC and reached agreement on the establishment of a consultative committee made up of officers of the CRTC and of ourselves to work on ways and means of reconciling any differences that there may be in the priorities that we had previously established.

Mr. McCleave: Would CTV be asked in on this discussion, if only to be there as an informal presence, Dr. Davidson?

Dr. Davidson: They would certainly be welcome. We have not yet gone beyond the point of agreeing in principle that there should be a consultative committee established.

Mr. McCleave: Is it not true that a large part of the change that will happen in Atlantic Canada is due to the fact that the CRTC has altered the situation as far as the private network is concerned, that they are now to go into places that previously they resisted going into? I have in mind such places as Moncton.

Dr. Davidson: I could not answer that question from my own knowledge.

Mr. McCleave: I see.

Mr. Dinsdale: Could Dr. Davidson indicate whether the planning resources of the CBC in combination with the CRTC will be called upon in implementing the proposed ETV service.

Dr. Davidson: All I can say on that, Mr. Chairman, is that there has been established a task force, which I am sure you are familiar with, to advise the government on the working out of arrangements with the provinces which will make possible the establishment of an ETV agency to be made available for provincial use. I understand that task force includes a representative of the CRTC. The terms of reference of that task force include a reference to the fact that technical advisory services are to be obtained from the cours du moins un de ces entretiens, nous avions parmi nous le président de CTV, qui est aussi impliqué dans le même secteur et dans certains changements et réorganisations proposés par le CRTC. Je suis certain qu'à certains égards nos plans seront révisés pour tenir compte des indices donnés par le CRTC, en ce qui a trait aux priorités souhaitables à leur avis. Je ne crois pas que nous ayons aucune difficulté quant à établir l'ordre des priorités de diverses propositions. Nous nous sommes entretenus avec le président du CRTC et nous sommes tombés d'accord pour établir un comité consultatif composé de leurs fonctionnaires qui travailleront avec nous pour établir des voies et des moyens pour réconcilier les différences de l'ordre prioritaire que nous avons établi auparavant.

M. McCleave: M. Davidson, est-ce que la CTV sera appelée à participer à cette discussion en tant que présence officielle?

M. Davidson: Ils seraient les bienvenus. Nous n'avons pas encore avancé au-delà de l'accord en principe qu'il devrait y avoir un comité consultatif.

M. McCleave: N'est-ce pas vrai qu'un bon nombre de changements dans les provinces résultent du fait que le CRTC a changé la situation, en ce qui concerne les réseaux privés, et qu'ils s'établissent maintenant dans les endroits auparavant rejetés. Je pense à Moncton, par exemple?

M. Davidson: Je ne peux répondre à cette question à ma propre connaissance.

M. McCleave: Je vois.

M. Dinsdale: Une question supplémentaire. Je me demande si M. Davidson peut dire si des ressources de planification de Radio-Canada, de concert avec ceux du CRTC, seront utilisées pour mettre en opération des services ATV?

M. Davidson: Tout ce que je peux dire à cet égard, c'est qu'on établit une équipe de travail. Vous êtes sans doute au courant de sa constitution. Cette équipe doit conseiller le gouvernement quant au fonctionnement des ententes avec les provinces qui rendront possible l'établissement des services ATV à l'utilisation des provinces. Je crois que cette équipe de travail est composée d'un représentant du CRTC. Ses attributions consistent d'obtenir des services techniques consultatifs de Radio-Canada. La CBC ne figure pas au

Mr. Dinsdale: At the moment then the relationship between CBC and ETV is merely of an advisory capacity. For example, CBC would not be asked to operate these facilities?

Dr. Davidson: I think the government has already tabled its legislation.

The Chairman: Yes.

Dr. Davidson: I have not seen that but my understanding is that it is proposed that a separate ETV agency be established.

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Dinsdale: We will know more about that in due course.

The Chairman: Mr. Comeau.

Mr. Comeau: I am on a new subject.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on this particular item?

Mr. Osler: Is this the time to talk about satellites, or should I wait?

The Chairman: I think you had better wait.

Mr. Perrault: This is the construction of the new studios, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Yes, we are talking about the extension of CBC services and the relationship between the CRTC and the CBC.

Mr. Perrault: May I ask a question.

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. Perrault: How is the critical path of construction of new facilities in Vancouver proceeding? Is everything on schedule?

Mr. Davidson: We have, as you may know, a commitment to begin construction in Vancouver not later than December 1971. We have retained the services of a firm of consultant architects who have furnished us with the design for the plant. We have accepted that design as being in accordance with what we would like to see developed on the site. As you know, we have the site already acquired.

We are now in the process of setting aside a sum of money, the amount of which I can-nombre des membres de l'équipe de travail, mais il est à leur service, lorsqu'ils en ont besoin pour les conseils ou services techniques.

M. Dinsdale: Donc, Radio-Canada, à l'heure actuelle, la fonction de Radio-Canada et de l'ATV n'est que consultative. Par exemple, ne pourrait-on pas demander à Radio-Canada d'exploiter ces services?

M. Davidson: Je crois que le gouvernement a déjà déposé ces mesures législatives.

Le président: Oui.

M. Davidson: Je ne l'ai pas vu personnellement, mais je crois qu'un organisme ATV distinct sera établi.

Le président: C'est bien cela.

M. Dinsdale: Alors, nous en saurons plus long plus tard.

Le président: Monsieur Comeau.

M. Comeau: Entamons un nouveau sujet.

Le président: Un nouveau sujet: Y a-t-il d'autres questions au sujet de ce poste?

M. Osler: Je me demande si c'est le moment de parler de satellites. Faudrait-il attendre?

Le président: Il vaut mieux attendre.

M. Perrault: Nous parlons d'étendre les studios, M. le président.

M. le président: Oui, nous parlons d'étendre les services de Radio-Canada et les rapports entre le CRTC et Radio-Canada.

M. Perrault: Puis-je poser une question, alors?

M. le président: Mais certainement.

M. Perrault: Où en est la construction du nouveau projet à Vancouver?

M. Davidson: Vous savez, nous nous sommes engagés à commencer la construction à Vancouver, au plus tard, en décembre 1971. Nous avons engagé des services d'architectes-conseils qui nous ont donné le plan pour cette installation. Ce dessin a été approuvé en étant conforme à nos idées sur la réalisation. Nous avons déjà acheté l'emplacement.

Et, à l'heure actuelle, nous mettons une certaine somme de côté, dont je ne puis vous not give you at this point in time, out of our 1969-70 capital budget, which will permit us to move from the design stage to the stage of developing detail plans and specifications. And between April 1969—that is next month, when we will be in a position to move into that phase—and December 1971 we will have to plan the development of floor plans and specifications and decide on the method of financing the cost of the construction.

Mr. Perrault: Do you have an approximate idea of the cost based on these new designs?

Dr. Davidson: Yes.

Mr. Perrault: What will it run in the order of?

Mr. Davidson: I am told that the cost will run to an estimated $20 million inclusive of all the electronic equipment.

Mr. Perrault: Is that in today's dollars.

Mr. Davidson: That is in today's dollars.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on this subject?

Mr. Mongrain: My question does not relate to construction. You are a member of the CRTC board, Dr. Davidson?

Dr. Davidson: No.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain, on a new subject.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je pense qu'après mon préambule il ne serait pas mal venu de préciser certaines choses. Pour le bénéfice de M. Davidson et de ses collègues, je voudrais d'abord préciser ma position vis-à-vis de Radio-Canada. Je suis un admirateur de Radio-Canada; je crois que c'est un organe dont le Canada peut être fier, et je suis convaincu qu'il y a là des hommes de grande valeur, des techniciens de compétence indiscutable.

Je veux que cela soit bien entendu. Cet espèce d'interrogatoire que je vous fais subir, monsieur Davidson, ne tend pas du tout à détruire Radio-Canada. La limite extrême où j'irais peut-être, s'il était impossible de nous entendre, serait de demander au gouvernement de vendre la Société à l'entreprise privée. Mais je crois quand même à Radio-Canada. J'ai aussi confiance en la nouvelle direction, et le but de mes questions, est d'aider la nouvelle direction à crever certains abcès que dénonce le public.

Vous savez, monsieur Davidson, qu'il y a quatre ans, des femmes canadiennes ont fait donner le chiffre pour le moment. Cela provient de notre budget d'immobilisation de 1969-1970. Ce qui nous permettrait de passer de la conception à la planification de plans détaillés et aux devis prévus. Et, entre avril 1969, c.-à-d. le mois prochain, au mois décembre 1971, il faudrait mettre au point les devis nécessaires et décider sur la méthode de financer les coûts de la construction en question.

M. Perrault: Avez-vous une idée des coûts?

M. Davidson: Oui.

M. Perrault: Quels sont-ils?

M. Davidson: On me dit que les coûts s'élevaient à environ 20 millions de dollars y compris tout l'équipement électronique.

M. Perrault: S'agit-il de la valeur actuelle des dollars?

M. Davidson: Oui, c'est cela.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions à cet égard?

M. Mongrain: Une petite question qui n'a pas trait à la construction. Mais, vous êtes membre de la commission du CRTC, ou non?

M. Davidson: Non.

Le président: Monsieur Mongrain, pour une nouvelle question.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I think that after the preamble I made it might be a good idea to explain a few things. For the benefit of Dr. Davidson and his colleagues; I want first of all, to specify my personal position with regard to the CBC. I admire the CBC. I think that it is an organization of which Canada can be proud, and I am convinced that it has people of great value, and technicians whose competence is beyond doubt.

I want this to be clearly understood. This questioning that I am putting you through, Mr. Davidson, is not to destroy the CBC. The extreme limits I might go to if it were impossible for us to reach an understanding, would be to ask the government to sell the Corporation to private enterprise. But I want it understood that I have faith in the CBC. I also have faith in the new management, and the purpose of my questions is to help the new management clear up certain ills denounced by the public.

You know Mr. Davidson, that four years ago Canadian women signed a petition and signer une requête par environ 75,000 ou 85,000 personnes. Cette requête exprimait des griefs à l'endroit de Radio-Canada. Mon impression est qu'on n'a pas tellement corrigé les maux qui ont amené ces griefs.

Des types d'émissions sont disparus, des physionomies sont disparues, mais le fond du problème semble encore subsister. Je crois que 75,000 ou 85,000 signatures, cela commence à être important. Nous, les députés, recevons régulièrement du courrier. Une partie, évidemment, est écrite par des gens mesquins ou étroits d'esprit, mais enfin, nous sommes quand même obligés d'en tenir compte.

Voici ce que je vous reproche: l'affaire des anarchistes, des athées, tout ce que vous savez. Je vous reproche dans certains cas aussi le fait de donner toute liberté à vos réalisateurs, parce que d'après une partie de votre témoignage, d'après un témoignage que M. Thibault a fait l'an dernier devant ce Comité, et devant certaines déclarations que j'ai glanées ici et là...

M. Davidson: L'an dernier?

The Chairman: Is it about the program "Seven Days"?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes. Mr. Thibault gave us a very long report.

M. Davidson: Il y a trois ans.

The Chairman: In 1966.

Mr. Mongrain: You know what it is all about. It is not the date that is important.

J'en déduis que vos réalisateurs ont une liberté à peu près complète, et je ne vois aucun organisme, au sein de Radio-Canada, qui établisse des normes pour diriger le travail des réalisateurs ou pour juger si ce que produisent certains réalisateurs est correct, et ensuite leur donner des directives, comme: "Telle chose, ce n'est pas conforme aux règles" tacites ou écrites qui devraient régir Radio-Canada.

Y a-t-il un tel organisme qui juge de ces choses-là et qui contrôle le travail des réalisateurs?

Dr. Davidson: There are, Mr. Chairman, a series of what we call policy papers dealing with controversial broadcasting, dealing with questions of good taste, and a series of guides that have been developed by the Corporation over the years, which the French network and the English network use in administering their respective operations. How those guidelines are applied in detail would be something about which I think I would have to call upon the Vice-Presidents of the two networks to give further indications.

[Interprétation]

got some 75,000 or 85,000 signatures. The petition was about grievances against the CBC. And I get the feeling that these grievances have not been heeded very much. Certain types of programs have disappeared, some faces have disappeared, but the basic problem still subsists. I think 75,000 or 85,000 signatures are important. We, the Members of Parliament get mail regularly. Of course, some of this mail is written by people who are pretty or narrow minded, but nevertheless we are obliged to take it into account.

What I criticize you for is this question of anarchists and atheists. You know all about this matter. I reproach you in some respects also for the fact of giving complete freedom to your producers, because according to part of your own evidence, according to the evidence Mr. Thibault gave last year before this Committee, and according to certain information we got here and there...

Mr. Davidson: Last year?

Le président: Au sujet de "Seven Days"?

M. Mongrain: Oui. Monsieur Thibault avait déposé un très long rapport.

Mr. Davidson: Three years ago.

Le président: En 1966.

M. Mongrain: Vous savez de quoi il s'agit. Ce n'est pas la date qui est importante.

So, I deduce that your producers have almost complete freedom, and I see no body within the CBC, to set up standards to direct the work of the producers or to judge whether what some producers are producing is correct, and then give them some guidelines, such as: "this is not in agreement with the regulations", whether written or unwritten, that ought to govern the CBC.

Is there any control agency of this type?

M. Davidson: Il existe en fait une série de documents sur les émissions controversables et sur ce qui est acceptable ou non, il existe également une série de directives établies par Radio-Canada, que les réseaux français et anglais suivent dans l'administration de leurs postes respectifs. Je ne sais pas comment ces principes directeurs sont appliqués: les vice-présidents des deux réseaux vous donneront d'autres précisions à ce sujet.

[Text]

Mr. Mongrain: What I would like to know is who is the judge to decide that the guidelines have been...?

Dr. Davidson: The responsible Vice-Presidents of the English, the French, and the regional broadcasting entities are the ones who are responsible to the Executive Vice-President and to myself for carrying on the affairs of the network in the way that is contemplated by the Corporation.

Mr. Mongrain: Would you care to give us the names of those gentlemen?

Dr. Davidson: The Vice-President of the French network is Mr. Raymond David whom you know. Of the English network it is Mr. Eugene Hallman whom you know, I think. And the Vice-President of regional broadcasting is Mr. Charles Jennings, who is responsible for the regional centres of production.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur Davidson, dans votre dernier témoignage vous avez dit, je crois, quelque chose comme ceci: «ce n'est pas précisément notre rôle de bâtir l'unité nationale du Canada.»

Or je vois ici dans les projets de budget pour 1969-1970 des directives du gouvernement. Il y en a quatre, et la quatrième dit:

contribuer au développement de l'unité nationale et assurer l'expression constante de l'identité canadienne

Et puis je retrouve ici, dans le rapport Fowler, ce n'est qu'une recommandation au gouvernement mais tout de même c'est une recommandation dont le gouvernement s'inspire le plus possible. Je vois ici, à la page 138 de la version française, au paragraphe B:

Facteur d'unité nationale: Radio-Canada doit servir de trait d'union entre les diverses régions du pays, et cela de deux façons:

(i) Son programme doit porter sur une grande variété d'émissions d'intérêt commun, et de portée nationale;

(ii) ses ressources matérielles doivent servir à mettre son programme à la portée du plus grand nombre possible de Canadiens, compte tenu de ses ressources financières. Il n'est que juste que la radio-télévision nationale soit aussi adéquatement et équitablement que possible au service de tous, qu'ils vivent dans les régions éloignées ou les centres urbains.

et à l'item C—

Canadianisme authentique

Radio-Canada doit, par la teneur et le caractère canadien de ces émissions,

[Interpretation]

M. Mongrain: Je voudrais savoir qui peut dire que ces principes directeurs ont été...

M. Davidson: Les vice-présidents des réseaux français et anglais et de la radiodiffusion régionale sont responsables au vice-président et à moi-même dès qu'il s'agit d'administrer les réseaux conformément aux vœux de la Société.

M. Mongrain: Pourriez-vous nous donner leurs noms?

M. Davidson: Le vice-président du réseau français est M. Raymond David, que vous connaissez; celui du réseau anglais est M. Eugene Hallman, que vous devez également connaître, et le vice-président de la radiodiffusion régionale est M. Jennings, qui est responsable des centres régionaux de production.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Davidson, in your last evidence given you said, I believe, something like this:

"It is not precisely our role to build national unity in Canada."

The 1969-70 Estimates for the Department of the Secretary of State lists four program objectives, the fourth one of which reads as follows:

To contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity.

And then here I find in the Fowler Report that it is only a recommendation to the government but it is nonetheless a recommendation on which the government bases itself as much as possible. I see here, on page 138, of the French version, that according to subsection (b), the mandate that the CBC conceives it has received from the Parliament is:

(b) to link all parts of the country in two ways

(1) through the inclusion of a wide variety of national and common interests in its program services;

(2) by using its physical resources to bring the national program service to as many Canadians as finances allow. Whether Canadians live in remote or heavily populated areas the national system should serve them as adequately and equitably as possible.

And according to subsection (c):

to be predominantly Canadian in content and character. It should serve Canadian needs and bring Canadians in widely separated parts of the country closer répondre aux besoins du pays, favoriser le rapprochement entre les Canadiens séparés par l'immensité du territoire, contribuer à la sauvegarde et au progrès de l'unité nationale et toujours permettre au canadianisme authentique de s'exprimer.

[Texte]

Et cela continue, Caractère biculturel.

Ce serait peut-être une réponse à ceux qui disent, comme par exemple M. Thibault dans son témoignage, que Radio-Canada n'est pas là pour bâtir l'unité nationale. Non, mais la Société n'est pas là pour la débâter non plus, n'est-ce pas? Il vous faudrait peut-être le rappeler à vos responsables des affaires publiques.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Mongrain, are you suggesting that I have said anywhere that it is not the responsibility of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to contribute...?

M. Mongrain: J'ai dit tout à l'heure que l'on pouvait déduire de vos remarques un peu la même idée que M. Thibault lui, a exprimée bien clairement dans le rapport qu'il a déposé à ce Comité il y a 3 ou 4 ans.

Dr. Davidson: In order to remove any doubt that may be in your mind or that of any of the members of the Committee, I refer you not to the Fowler Committee report but to the Broadcasting Act that was passed by the last Parliament in April, 1968, in which it is clearly stated that:

...the national broadcasting service should

(i) be a balanced service of information, enlightenment and entertainment for people of different ages, interests and tastes covering the whole range of programming in fair proportion,

(ii) be extended to all parts of Canada, as public funds become available,

(iii) be in English and French, serving the special needs of geographic regions, and actively contributing to the flow and exchange of cultural and regional information and entertainment, and

(iv) contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity;...

Now, I accept that.

Mr. Mongrain: Good.

Dr. Davidson: I have no alternative but to accept it, and I have always accepted it, and together, contributing to the development and preservation of a sense of national unity. It must provide for a continuing self-expression of the Canadian identity.

And so it goes, stressing bilingualism.

This might be an answer to those who say, as Mr. Thibault did for instance in his evidence, that the CBC is not there to build Canadian unity. No, but the Corporation is not there to break it down either. You might perhaps remind your public affairs officials of this.

M. Davidson: Voulez-vous dire, monsieur Mongrain, que j'aurais prétendu qu'il n'incombait pas à la Société Radio-Canada de contribuer...

Mr. Mongrain: I said a while ago that we could deduce from your comments somewhat the same idea that Mr. Thibault expressed quite clearly in his report that was tabled in this Committee some three or four years ago.

M. Davidson: Pour enlever tout doute qui pourrait subsister dans votre esprit ou dans celui des membres du Comité, je vous renvoie non pas au rapport Fowler, mais à la Loi sur la radiodiffusion adoptée en avril 1968, qui dit clairement que:

...le service national de radiodiffusion devrait

(i) être un service équilibré qui renseigne, éclaire et divertisse des personnes de tous âges, aux intérêts et aux goûts divers, et qui offre une répartition équitable de toute la gamme de la programmation

(ii) être étendu à toutes les régions du Canada, au fur et à mesure que des fonds publics deviennent disponibles

(iii) être de langue anglaise et de langue française, répondre aux besoins particuliers des diverses régions et contribuer activement à la fourniture et à l'échange d'informations et de divertissements d'ordre culturel et régional, et

(iv) contribuer au développement de l'unité nationale et exprimer constamment la réalité canadienne;...

Ce sont des directives que j'accepte.

M. Mongrain: Bon.

M. Davidson: Je n'ai pas le choix, je les ai toujours acceptées, et tout élément de la every element of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is obligated under the law to accept what is the law of land and the mandate of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Mongrain: Good.

Dr. Davidson: So let there be no doubt about that in anyone's mind.

M. Mongrain: Bon, nous nous comprenons. A partir de là, monsieur Davidson, si vous voulez nous faire la même concession, nous allons vous demander de surveiller...

M. Davidson: Ce n'est pas une concession, monsieur.

M. Mongrain: Vous venez de concéder que nous nous comprenons. Nous avions l'impression de ne pas nous comprendre avant!

Do you see what I mean? Good.

Nous avons l'impression qu'il y a beaucoup de vos employés, au service des nouvelles qui ne comprennent pas cela. Peut-être y a-t-il des choses qui vous échappent, monsieur Davidson, mais nous savons par exemple qu'il y a des reporters ou des gens qui, sans nécessairement travailler à l'émission de nouvelles elle-même, mais aux émissions d'affaires publiques, de commentaires sur les nouvelles se vantent d'être séparatistes! Nous avons des noms! Je ne voudrais pas les jeter sur la table ici parce que ces gens-là ont des familles, mais vienne une enquête, que ce soit une «enquête maison» ou une enquête royale, nous vous donnerons des noms et des faits.

Je peux vous citer des paroles d'un interviewé (ce n'était pas à Radio-Canada)—il a dit: «Le Canada n'est pas mon pays» et «Je hais le Canada». Et il était payé avec les fonds de Radio-Canada. Il est passé depuis à une autre compagnie de la Couronne. Il est payé à même les taxes des Canadiens.

Il y a plus que cela. Je comprends que ce n'est pas de votre faute, mais un président ou un agent d'affaires d'un syndicat qui représente des employés de Radio-Canada est un organisateur notoire de M. Bourgault. Ça doit ressembler à un séparatiste, un tel personnage. Je cite tout cela pour vous montrer que nous pouvons avoir raison de nous inquiéter. Et je pourrais vous signaler d'autres cas semblables.

Je continue, monsieur le président, à vous faire part de certains griefs qui nous sont transmis, soit dans des témoignages à ce Comité, soit dans notre correspondance. On reproche à Radio-Canada, à cause de ce manque de contrôle sur les réalisateurs, de produire à l'occasion ce que je pourrais appeler Société est contraint de se conformer à la loi d'accepter le mandat de Radio-Canada.

M. Mongrain: Bon.

M. Davidson: Tout est donc très clair.

Mr. Mongrain: Good, we understand each other. In view of this, Mr. Davidson, if you would make the same concession to us, we are going to ask you to control...

Mr. Davidson: That is not a concession, sir.

Mr. Mongrain: You just conceded that we are in agreement. We felt that we were not understanding on another before!

Vous voyez ce que je veux dire? Parfait.

We are under the impression that many of your people in the news service do not understand that. Perhaps there are things of which you are not aware, Mr. Davidson, but we know for instance, that you have reporters or people who, without necessarily working on the news programs themselves, but on public affairs programs and programs that comment on the news, who boast of being separatists! We have names! I am not going to mention them here though, because these people have families, but should an investigation be carried out, whether by the Corporation itself or through a Royal Commission, we shall give you names and facts.

I can quote someone who said in an interview it was not on the CBC: "Canada is not my country", and "I hate Canada". And he was paid with CBC funds. And now he is working in another Crown Corporation and he is being paid from taxes paid by Canadians.

There is more than that. I understand that this is not your fault, but there is a president or a business agent for an union representing CBC employees who is a well-known organizer for Mr. Bourgault. This sort of person must be a separatist. I refer to these matters to show you that perhaps we are right to be concerned. And I could mention other similar cases.

I shall go on, Mr. Chairman, expressing certain grievances that we receive either through evidence given in this Committee, or in our correspondence. The CBC is criticized, due to this lack of control over its producers, for producing what I might call duds that really should not happen at the CBC, which «des navets», «navets» qui n'ont pas leur place à Radio-Canada, qui seraient peut-être tolérables d'ailleurs, mais pas d'un organisme de l'envergure et du prestige de Radio-Canada.

J'ai presque envie de vous citer un exemple de navet. Il n'y a pas très longtemps au cours d'une émission, on a saigné un porc et quelqu'un se badigeonnait avec le sang du porc, et puis tandis qu'une petite gonze se promenait avec une croix! Vous auriez dû voir la réaction du public canadien. Pour de telles raisons, je vous dis: Y a-t-il un contrôle quelque part pour juger de l'acceptabilité de ces choses-là?

On reproche aussi à Radio-Canada d'être prodigue avec les deniers publics. Et je vous avouerai qu'il y a bien des cas où l'on est porté à penser que c'est vrai.

J'ai ici par exemple, la liste du personnel de Radio-Canada qui voyage depuis février et qui va continuer pendant quelques mois, et le détail des voyages que ces gens feront. Je constate que dans la plupart des cas, ces gens-là voyagent avec leur épouse, quelquefois avec leur secrétaire, alors que les députés ne voyagent pas avec leur épouse aux frais de la Couronne. Vous le saviez? Les députés n'ont pas le droit de voyager avec leur épouse aux frais de la Couronne! Pas même avec leur secrétaire! Imaginez, la mienne a 74 ans et on ne me permet pas de voyager avec elle! Ou du moins aux frais de la princesse!

● 1030

Je vous ferai grâce de tout le détail, mais pour quelques mois seulement, il y en a pour un million ou un million et demi de dollars.

Évidemment, je comprends que vous ayez décidé que Radio-Canada «would be the best in the world»! Et là, par fierté nationale, nous sommes normalement avec vous. Mais il ne faudrait pas oublier que nous vivons dans un contexte d'austérité financière où le gouvernement est obligé de faire des coupures extrêmement douloureuses dans bien des domaines. On se demande si Radio-Canada joue véritablement le même jeu.

Je sais que vous aviez demandé à peu près 18 ou 30 millions de dollars d'augmentation et qu'on l'a coupé à $14,500,000. D'accord, c'est déjà une coupure impressionnante. Mais je ne demande si vous n'en avez pas demandé plus pour en avoir moins.

Il me semble, à voir tous ces détails qu'il y a véritablement de la prodigalité, que dans le contexte de 1969 vous devriez être les premiers à vous dire: «nous allons nous serrer la ceinture nous aussi».

might be tolerated in another agency, but not in an organization with the CBC's prestige and size.

I almost feel like quoting you an example. Not so long ago, during a program, someone bled a pig and someone sprinkled himself with this blood while a little walked around with a cross! You should have seen the reaction of the Canadian public. So that is why I say to you: Is there some kind of control somewhere to judge whether these things are acceptable or not?

The CBC is also criticized for spending the taxpayer's money rather freely. And I must confess that in a good many cases one is inclined to think that this is true.

I have a list here, for instance, of the CBC staff travelling since February and that will continue doing so for the next few months, and the details of the places they are going to visit. I see that in most cases these people travel with their wives, sometimes with their secretaries, while the Members of Parliament do not travel with their wives at the cost of the Crown. Did you know that? Members of Parliament are not entitled to travel with their wives at the cost of the Crown! Not even with their secretaries! Just imagine, I have a secretary whose age is 74 and I am not allowed to travel with her! Or at least at the expense of the state!

So I will spare you all the details, although a million and a half is going to be spent in the span of a few months only. Naturally, I understand that you have decided that the CBC would be the best in the world. And of course, we normally agree with this out of national pride. But we must not overlook the fact that we live in a time of financial austerity where the government has to make extremely drastic cuts in many fields. One wonders though whether the CBC is really pulling in the same direction.

I know that you had asked for about $28 or $30 million increase and this was cut to $14,500,000. I agree that this is already quite an impressive reduction. But I am wondering if you did not just ask for more, thinking you were going to get less. It seems to me, when I see all these details, that there really is wastefulness, and that in the context of 1969 you should be the first to tell yourselves: "We also are going to tighten our belts."

[Text]

Would you insist on my reading the whole thing...

Mr. Davidson: I have no idea what it is.

Mr. Mongrain: It goes all around the world. I will give you an idea. Let us read part of it. It is entitled "CBC Personnel and Crews Abroad"—and, by the way, I see that most of your vice-presidents will be going overseas with their wives and that one or two of them have already been there. Mind you, I am not blaming them—I am not saying it is wrong—but I am saying that when one looks at the whole picture it seems to be out of line with the policy of the government to cut to the bone...

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask Mr. Mongrain if he is saying that some of our vice-presidents have been overseas with their wives at CBC expense, or will be?

Mr. Mongrain: Will be, at CBC expense.

Mr. Davidson: That is not correct.

Mr. Mongrain: All right; if that is not correct, I will apologize. That is the information I received, and I got it from the inside.

Mr. Davidson: You got it from the wrong side, if I may say so.

Mr. Mongrain: That may be; but it is printed on your paper, with your equipment.

Mr. Davidson: But it is not signed by anybody but the person who...

Mr. Mongrain: No; I have a name, but you will understand...

Mr. Davidson: But I want to make it quite clear that there is no provision in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the wives of vice-presidents, or, for that matter, those of any other members of the staff, to travel at CBC expense.

Mr. Mongrain: Let me read part of it and you will better understand, I think, what I am saying.

Leo Rampan and film crew to Auschwitz, Poland end of May. Sports crews from Winnipeg and Toronto—15 people...

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. If a document is going to be read from we should know what it is, where it comes from, and it should be available to all members of the Committee.

[Interpretation]

Voulez-vous que je vous lise tout?

M. Davidson: Je n'ai aucune idée de ce que cela peut être.

M. Mongrain: Je vais vous donner une idée. C'est intitulé: Personnel de la Société Radio-Canada à l'étranger. La plupart des vice-présidents vont aller à l'étranger avec leurs épouses et deux d'entre eux y sont déjà. Je ne m'oppose pas à cela. Je ne dis pas que c'est une erreur mais toutefois, lorsque l'on jette un coup d'œil à l'ensemble du tableau ça ne semble pas être conforme à la politique du gouvernement qui veut limiter les dépenses au minimum.

M. Davidson: Vous dites que certains vice-présidents sont allés ou iront à l'étranger avec leurs épouses aux frais de la Société Radio-Canada?

M. Mongrain: Ce sont les renseignements que j'ai reçus.

M. Davidson: Je pense que vous avez reçu ces renseignements d'une mauvaise source.

M. Mongrain: Très bien, si mes renseignements sont faux, je vais m'excuser. Ce sont les renseignements que j'ai reçus de bonne source.

M. Davidson: Vos sources sont mal informées.

M. Mongrain: Peut-être, mais c'est imprimé sur votre papier, avec votre équipement.

M. Davidson: Ce n'est pas signé par personne mais...

M. Mongrain: Non, j'ai un nom mais vous comprendrez...

M. Davidson: Je veux vous dire qu'au sein de la Société Radio-Canada, on ne prévoit pas que les épouses des employés de la société, et même celles des vice-présidents puissent voyager aux frais de la Société Radio-Canada.

M. Mongrain: Permettez-moi de vous lire un bref extrait qui vous permettra sans doute de comprendre ce que je dis:

Léo Rampan et équipe cinématographique à Auschwitz (Pologne) fin mai, commentateur sportif de Winnipeg et Toronto, 15 personnes.

M. Stanbury: Si ce document doit être lu, nous devons savoir ce que c'est, d'où il vient et en avoir tous une copie.

[Texte]

Mr. Mongrain: I did not insist on reading it. It was a question that was proposed to me. It is not something I was considering as a substantial document, but apparently...

Mr. Stanbury: I have no objection to your reading it, Mr. Mongrain. I simply say that I think we all should know what it is.

Mr. Mongrain: I am reading it, and you will know what it is.

The Chairman: I believe the...

Mr. Stanbury: If you inform us what it is we can then all judge it for what it is.

Mr. Mongrain: I am reading it.

The Chairman: I think, properly, the document has to be identified so that we know its source.

Mr. Mongrain: You will understand, Mr. Chairman, that I am not going to give the name of the gentleman who supplied me with this and other information unless there is a royal commission somewhere. If you were in my place you would do the same.

All right; I will not read the document.

Let me come back to what I was saying at the beginning, Mr. Davidson.

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, if Mr. Mongrain, is not going to read the document, I want to make it quite clear on the record that the rules of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation do not permit any employee of the Corporation to travel with his wife or anybody else at the expense of the Corporation.

There is nothing to prevent me from taking my own wife overseas, as I did last year, and paying the expense of her transportation out of my own pocket; and there is nothing to prevent Mr. Picard from doing the same. But I can assure you that the rules of the Corporation do not permit wives to travel at the expense of the Corporation.

Mr. Mongrain: Voulez-vous répondre à une autre question, monsieur Davidson? N'est-il pas exact qu'un réalisateur de Radio-Canada aurait voyagé en dehors du pays avec sa petite amie, et que, Radio-Canada ayant réclamé remboursement des frais, la chose aurait été portée devant la cour et que le réalisateur aurait gagné sa cause?

Mr. Davidson: I cannot identify it. In my experience, no such event has happened.

[Interprétation]

M. Mongrain: Je n'ai pas insisté pour lire le document. C'est une question qui m'a été posée. Je ne considère pas cela comme un document important, mais il semble...

M. Stanbury: Je n'ai pas d'objection à ce que vous lisiez le document. Je crois seulement que nous devrions tous savoir ce que c'est.

M. Mongrain: Je vais vous le lire et vous allez savoir ce que c'est.

Le président: Je crois...

M. Stanbury: Dites-nous ce que c'est et nous pourrions alors juger.

M. Mongrain: Je vais le lire.

Le président: Je crois que le document doit être identifié afin que nous en connaissions la source.

M. Mongrain: Vous comprendrez que je n'ai pas l'intention de donner le nom de la personne qui m'a remis ces renseignements à moins qu'il y ait une commission royale d'enquête à ce sujet. Si vous étiez à ma place, vous feriez de même. Très bien, je ne lirai pas le document. Revenons donc à ce que je disais au début.

M. Davidson: Si M. Mongrain ne veut pas lire le document, je veux que ce que je vais dire figure clairement au compte-rendu de la présente séance: les règlements de la Société Radio-Canada ne permettent pas à un employé de la Société de voyager avec son épouse ou avec quelqu'un d'autre aux frais de la Société.

Rien ne m'empêche d'emmener ma femme à l'étranger avec moi—c'est ce que j'ai fait l'année dernière—mais je dois défrayer ses dépenses moi-même. Rien n'empêche M. Picard de faire de même. Je puis vous assurer que les règlements de la Société Radio-Canada ne permettent pas aux épouses de voyager aux frais de la Société.

Mr. Mongrain: Do you wish to answer another question, Mr. Davidson? Is it not true that a producer at the CBC travelled outside the country with his girl friend and when the CBC claimed to be reimbursed for expenses the matter was brought to the courts and the producer won his case?

M. Davidson: A ma connaissance rien de semblable ne s'est produit.

[Text]

M. Mongrain: Aucun de vos officiers n'en aurait eu connaissance?

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Mongrain has put a very vague question. With all due respect, I think it should be put in more precise detail.

Mr. Mongrain: I will identify the case, and I will discuss it with you personally.

Je reviens à ce que je disais au début, monsieur le président: pour une foule de raisons, la plus flagrante étant qu'on demande 14.5 millions de dollars de plus sur un budget de 165 millions de dollars, le public canadien a l'impression que Radio-Canada fait preuve de prodigalité.

En tenant compte du contexte dont je vous ai parlé tout à l'heure, monsieur le président, la Société Radio-Canada ne pourrait-elle pas diminuer ses demandes d'augmentation de budget pour cette année?

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Mongrain, you are asking me the same question you asked me on February 18 and I am going to give you the same answer. The Corporation considers that the budget it has requested from the Parliament of Canada is the one that we require in order to carry out the responsibilities that are ours for 1969-70. We do not consider that we can, without sacrifice to the objectives of our program for 1969-70, accept any reduction of that amount.

M. Mongrain: Tous les ministères nous font la même réponse lorsque nous leur demandons une réduction, vous l'imaginez bien. Cela n'avance pas la compression du budget.

Monsieur le président, je passe à une autre plainte à l'endroit de Radio-Canada. Celle-là a son origine à l'intérieur de ce comité-ci. Les artistes reprochent à Radio-Canada de retenir trop souvent les services d'artistes étrangers et ils prétendent que cela porte préjudice à nos artistes canadiens.

Mr. Davidson: Is this suggested by the Corporation as a whole, Mr. Mongrain?

Mr. Mongrain: It has been told here, in this Committee.

Mr. Davidson: I would be most reluctant, in the first place, to establish within the Corporation a policy which would involve elements of discrimination as between people who are Canadian citizens by birth and those who are by naturalization, or even persons who are legally landed immigrants and who are making their livelihood and living their lives in Canada. If we are going to have a policy of

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: None of your officials would have heard about this?

M. Davidson: C'est là une question excessivement vague, monsieur le président. M. Mongrain se doit d'être plus précis.

M. Mongrain: Je vous donnerai tous les détails pertinents et j'en discuterai avec vous en particulier.

Coming back to what I said at the outset, Mr. Chairman: for a multitude of reasons, the most flagrant one being that $14.5 million more is being asked on a budget of $165 millions, and the Canadian public feels that the CBC is wasteful. Taking into account the context that I mentioned earlier, Mr. Chairman, could the CBC not reduce its requests for an increase in its budget for this year?

M. Davidson: Monsieur Mongrain, vous me posez les mêmes questions que vous m'avez posées le 18 février et je vais vous donner les mêmes réponses. La Société estime que le budget qu'elle a demandé au gouvernement canadien est un budget essentiel pour s'acquitter de ses responsabilités en 1969-1970. Nous ne croyons pas pouvoir, sans sacrifier les effectifs de notre programme de 1969-1970, accepter une réduction de ce montant.

Mr. Mongrain: All Departments give us the same answer when we ask them to make cuts. This does not help in reducing the budget.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to deal with another complaint about the CBC. And this complaint originated within this very Committee. As far as the artists or actors are concerned, it seems that the CBC uses too many foreign actors at the expense of Canadian actors.

M. Davidson: Est-ce que c'est suggéré par l'ensemble de la Société, monsieur Mongrain?

M. Mongrain: Cela s'est dit ici, au Comité.

M. Davidson: Je voudrais d'abord dire que j'hésiterais à établir au sein de la Société, une politique qui donnerait lieu à de la discrimination entre les Canadiens de naissance et les Canadiens qui sont d'origine étrangère et de ceux qui viennent d'obtenir leur statut d'immigrants. Si nous voulons une politique d'emploi juste, il nous faut embaucher les gens d'après leurs talents.

[Texte]

fair employment practices we have an obligation to employ people on the basis of merit, and, as far as I am concerned, we should not be establishing, in the hierarchy any discrimination in favour of, or against, certain classes of Canadian residents.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, les artistes se plaignent que, par exemple, les artistes canadiens ne peuvent pas facilement aller travailler disons, aux États-Unis, tandis que les artistes américains, eux, peuvent très facilement venir travailler à Radio-Canada. Ils sont même invités, enfin c'est ce que disent ces gens-là, moi, je ne juge pas, plus souvent qu'à leur tour, ces artistes étrangers qu'ils soient américains ou qu'ils soient français ou anglais.

Mr. Davidson: I am sorry; I misunderstood your question previously. My reply was not appropriate to your question—and I am not repeating what you suspect me of having done on the first day of my testimony, which was of giving answers to questions you had not asked.

May I ask Mr. Picard to comment on the question you have raised?

Mr. Mongrain: That will be fine.

M. Laurent Picard (vice-président exécutif): Monsieur Mongrain, je ne peux pas vous donner de chiffres exacts là-dessus. Cette question, nous l'avons discutée avec les représentants d'ACTRA et avec les représentants de FAAC. Le problème des revenus des comédiens au Canada est un problème extrêmement grave. Ils nous en ont fait part, et nous avons même convenu d'une entente avec eux cette année. Maintenant, il reste toujours le fait que marginalement il y a un certain nombre d'artistes étrangers qui sont intégrés dans des programmes canadiens. L'objectif poursuivi la plupart du temps, est d'amener un grand artiste étranger et de lui donner le support d'artistes canadiens, soit des acteurs, des chœurs, des chanteurs et ainsi de suite.

Cette question n'a jamais été absolument clarifiée avec ACTRA et FAAC mais il est intéressant de voir que les positions des deux parties sont souvent différentes, et que, par exemple, certains groupes d'artistes insistent pour qu'on amène des acteurs étrangers pourvu qu'on en amène peu, qu'ils ne monopolisent pas le spectacle, qu'ils soient supportés par des artistes canadiens et qu'ils aident les artistes canadiens.

D'autres artistes canadiens s'opposent à cette politique, mais je pense qu'en réalité, le problème est beaucoup moins grave que le prétendent certains groupes. A ce sujet, nous

[Interprétation]

Il ne faut pas tenter de faire, dans la hiérarchie, de la discrimination à l'endroit de certains groupes ou en faveur d'autres.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, artists complain that, for instance, Canadian artists cannot go to work in the United States easily, whereas American actors can come and work at the CBC quite easily. It seems they are even invited more often than they should be, these foreign artists or actors whether they be American, French or English. Mind you, I am not judging them.

M. Davidson: Je suis désolé, j'avais mal compris votre question. Je ne veux pas répondre à côté de la question comme on m'a déjà accusé de l'avoir fait. Je vais demander à M. Picard de vous répondre.

M. Mongrain: Très bien.

Mr. Laurent Picard (Executive Vice-President): Mr. Mongrain, I cannot give you precise figures on that. We have discussed this with representatives of ACTRA and FAAC. The problem of incomes of actors in Canada is very serious. They have informed us of this and we have even reached an agreement with them this year. But nevertheless, the fact remains that, marginally, there are certain foreign artists who are integrated into certain Canadian programs. The objective that is followed most of the time is to bring in a major foreign artist and he is given a Canadian supporting cast either actors, choirs, singers and so forth.

This question has never been completely cleared up with ACTRA and FAAC, but it is interesting to notice that the positions of the two parties are often different, and that, for instance, certain groups of actors insist that we bring in foreign actors, providing this be only in small numbers, and that they do not monopolize the show, that they be supported by Canadian actors and that they assist Canadian actors.

Other Canadian actors object to such a policy, however, I think that actually, the problem is far less serious than certain groups claim. We have reached a certain sommes arrivés à une certaine entente avec l'ACTRA et FAAC, entente qui ne les satisfaisait pas complètement et qui ne nous satisfaisait pas complètement non plus. Mais c'est là un aspect très marginal des opérations de Radio-Canada. Notre position et la position des groupes d'artistes ne divergeaient que quant à la quantité. C'était qu'il faut amener des artistes étrangers, justement pour donner à la production canadienne une certaine couleur, et dans certains cas, une certaine valeur.

M. Mongrain: Ils ne semblent pas satisfaits parce que quand ils ont comparu devant nous récemment, c'est l'un des griefs qu'ils ont mentionnés.

M. Picard: Je ne pense pas pouvoir dire qu'ils sont absolument satisfaits. Ils reviennent encore sur la question. Mais nous étions parvenus à une certaine entente qui avait été acceptée par les deux groupes, l'an dernier, et à partir de laquelle nous devons discuter. Je pense, monsieur Mongrain, que ce qui les préoccupe plus que la présence de l'artiste américain ou français, c'est le problème des gains totaux des artistes canadiens à la télévision, à la radio, au théâtre, ou en spectacle.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur Picard, les gens de cinéma eux aussi prétendent que Radio-Canada leur fait une concurrence ruineuse qui empêche l'industrie cinématographique canadienne de se développer.

M. Picard: Je ne peux pas voir comment nous leur faisons une compétition ruineuse: Ils oeuvrent dans un domaine qui, au fond, est différent du nôtre. Certains aspects se ressemblent, et je pense que le réseau français a acheté un certain nombre de productions des cinéastes privés, ou de l'ONF; c'est vrai aussi du réseau anglais. Je ne pense pas qu'il y ait concurrence ruineuse.

M. Mongrain: Remarquez qu'ils reprochent la même chose à l'Office national du film.

M. Picard: C'est vrai.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I have a distinct impression that the figure we were given by some of the film groups concerning the amount of business they do with CBC was not accurate. The President of the CBC will probably remember what I am talking about and he might have some figures that will be useful.

Mr. Picard: The money spent on ACTRA is more than $6 million a year. The money spent on FAAC is more than $3 million a year, and agreement on this subject with ACTRA and FAAC. It is an agreement that does not satisfy them completely and does not satisfy us entirely either. But this is a very marginal aspect of the operations of the CBC. Our position and that of the groups of actors differed only in so far as quantity was concerned. It is a matter of having to bring in foreign actors to give a certain flavour, and in some cases, a certain value to Canadian productions.

Mr. Mongrain: They do not seem to be satisfied because when they appeared before us recently, this was one of the complaints they made.

Mr. Picard: I really cannot say that they are entirely satisfied. They have brought the question up again. But we had reached some kind of an agreement that had been accepted by the two groups, last year, and on the basis of which we have to negotiate. However, Mr. Mongrain, I think that what worries them more than the presence of the American actors or the French actors, is the total salary received by Canadian actors in television, radio, theatre or in show business.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Picard, it is the same problem with film producers. They claim that the CBC competes ruinously with them to the point of preventing the Canadian film industry from developing.

Mr. Picard: I do not see how we can compete ruinously with them. They are in a different field, which is fundamentally different from ours. There are certain similar aspects, and I believe that the French network has bought a few films produced either by NFB or certain private film makers. This is also true of the English network. I do not think that there is any ruinous competition.

Mr. Mongrain: It is a fact they criticize the National Film Board for the same thing.

Mr. Picard: That's true.

M. Osler: Il me semble que les chiffres que certains groupes cinématographiques nous ont donnés ne sont pas tout à fait justes. Le Président de Radio-Canada se souvient probablement de ce que je veux dire et il a peut-être des chiffres qui nous seraient utiles.

M. Picard: L'argent dépensé pour l'ACTRA est de plus de 6 millions de dollars par année. On dépense environ 3 millions de dollars par the money spent on all kinds of artists, writers and so on is close to $25 million a year.

M. Mongrain: Savez-vous combien vous avez payé aux membres de l'Union des artistes?

M. Picard: Il s'agit de FAAC, n'est-ce pas.

M. Mongrain: Ah bon.

M. Picard: Plus de 3.6 millions de dollars ou environ, je ne peux pas vous donner le chiffre exact: plus de trois millions de dollars.

Mr. Osler: But there was something that had to do with film companies, if I remember correctly.

Dr. Davidson: The brief presented to the Committee—I am not certain about the time—by the Society of Cinematographers, the Montreal section, stated on page 19:

We might now mention that the CBC's policy of producing the large majority of its program requirements within its own facilities has also constituted a great loss for the private Canadian film industry.

This statement is not correct in relation to the CBC's present or past practices. For about the first 10 years of television production the CBC spent about 80 per cent of its film production dollar in private industry. That ratio has changed over the past few years because the demands of production and programming and the relating of our requirements to private industry are becoming increasingly complex. During the past three or four years the ratio of expenditure in private industry to CBC's own internal expenses for film production has been 55 to 45. It appears likely that the proportion will remain about where it is.

Mr. Osler: Is that for both networks, one network, or what?

1045

Mr. Picard: I think the French is about 0-50 now and the English is about the same.

Mr. Osler: Thank you, very much.

Dr. Davidson: It would be correct to state that at no time since the beginning of television has our share of film production exannée pour la FAAC, et l'argent dépensé pour l'ensemble des artistes, auteurs et autres s'élève à près de 25 millions de dollars par année.

Mr. Mongrain: Do you know how much you have paid the members of the Union des Artistes?

Mr. Picard: You mean FAAC, don't you?

Mr. Mongrain: Right.

Mr. Picard: More than $3.6 million or thereabouts. I cannot give you the exact figure: over $3 million.

Mr. Osler: Il y avait quelque chose à voir avec les sociétés cinématographiques, n'est-ce pas?

M. Davidson: Je crois que le mémoire qui a été présenté au Comité, je ne sais pas exactement quand, par la société des cinématographes, groupe de Montréal, mentionnait à la page 19:

«Il serait bon de mentionner que la politique de Radio-Canada de réaliser la grande majorité de ses émissions grâce à ses propres installations a également constitué une grande perte pour l'industrie cinématographique privée au Canada».

Cette assertion n'est pas juste en ce qui concerne les pratiques présentes ou passées de Radio-Canada. Pendant les dix premières années de son réseau de télévision, la Société Radio-Canada a consacré environ 80 p. 100 de son budget pour la réalisation de films à l'industrie privée. Cette proportion a changé depuis quelques années à cause des demandes de production et de programmation et que nos besoins correspondent de moins en moins à l'industrie privée. Au cours des trois ou quatre dernières années, le rapport des achats auprès de l'industrie privée aux dépenses de Radio-Canada pour la production de films est de 55 à 45. Il semble que la proportion restera à ce niveau.

M. Osler: Est-ce que vous parlez de tous les réseaux?

M. Picard: Je crois que pour le réseau français, c'est à présent un rapport de 50 à 50, et à peu près la même chose pour le réseau anglais.

M. Osler: Merci.

M. Davidson: Il est juste de dire qu'en aucun moment depuis le début des émissions à la télévision, notre part des dépenses engapenditures placed with the private sector of the industry been less than 50 per cent.

Mr. Osler: Just to be perfectly fair to these people, I wonder whether the ratio of videotape work and that sort of thing has gone up to the point where your film production has gone down and therefore your ratios are meaningless, if you see what I am getting at.

Mr. Davidson: I have no doubt that our video tape production has gone up over these years, but to give you some indication of the relative health of the film industry, it is stated in the memoranda I have that in the last five or six years the compound rate of growth of the Canadian film industry has been 50 per cent higher than the rate of increase of the gross national product.

There is clear evidence in the statistics that the private film industry is a growing industry in Canada. It is growing at a rate in excess of the rate of growth of the economy as a whole and the share that we place with private industry is in excess of one half of our total film production requirements.

Mr. Osler: That does not quite answer what I am asking, Mr. Chairman. Have your film requirements, in absolute footage, gone down or up?

Dr. Davidson: In dollars, you mean?

Mr. Osler: In footage. I always say "footage" because it is a constant and dollars are not.

Mr. Picard: It has gone up.

Mr. Osler: So your videotape has not replaced your film, or anything like that.

Mr. Picard: Videotape has increased because operations have increased, but the film has gone up.

Mr. Osler: Thank you.

The Chairman: Where does the additional commercial material come from? Has the Canadian film industry been providing the commercial film that is used for commercials?

Dr. Davidson: I have been informed by the people in our Commercial Policy Division that the proportion of television commercials manufactured by Canadian film manufacturers has been increasing over the years. I cannot give you the exact percentages, but that is the information I have been given.

The Chairman: Do you have a supplementary, Mr. Perrault? Is it on the same subject?

Mr. Perrault: Yes; I want to ask Mr. Davidson just how they allocate these producgées pour la réalisation de films par le secteur privé a été inférieure à 50 p. 100.

M. Osler: Pour être tout à fait juste, je me demande si le rapport des émissions préparées au magnétoscope a augmenté au point que la production de films a baissé et que vos rapports ne signifient rien, si vous voyez ce que je veux dire.

M. Davidson: Il est certain que les réalisations au magnétoscope se sont accrues depuis quelques années, mais pour vous donner une idée de l'état dans lequel se trouve l'industrie cinématographique, il est dit dans ce mémoire que le taux de croissance de l'industrie cinématographique a été de 50 p. 100 plus élevé que le taux moyen de croissance du Produit national brut.

Les statistiques prouvent que l'industrie cinématographique privée connaît un essor considérable au Canada. Elle croît à un rythme plus rapide que l'ensemble de l'économie et la part de travail que nous confions à l'industrie privée représente plus de la moitié de nos besoins cinématographiques.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, cela ne répond pas tellement à la question. Est-ce que vous avez besoin de plus de films, en métrage absolu, qu'avant?

M. Davidson: En termes de dollars?

M. Osler: En métrage. Je parle toujours de «métrage» car c'est une valeur constante tandis que le dollar ne l'est pas.

M. Picard: Ils ont augmenté.

M. Osler: De sorte que vos bandes magnétoscopiques n'ont pas remplacé les films.

M. Picard: L'usage de magnétoscopes a augmenté parce que notre exploitation a augmenté, mais le nombre de films a augmenté aussi.

M. Osler: Merci.

Le président: D'où vient le matériel publicitaire commercial supplémentaire? De l'industrie cinématographique canadienne?

M. Davidson: Les gens de la Division de la politique commerciale m'ont dit que la proportion des annonces commerciales préparées et réalisées par l'industrie cinématographique canadienne s'est accrue depuis quelques années. Je ne peux pas vous fournir les chiffres exacts, mais c'est ce qu'on m'a dit.

Le président: Monsieur Perrault, vous avez une question supplémentaire à ce sujet?

M. Perrault: Je voudrais demander à M. Davidson comment les dollars consacrés à la tion dollars. There is a feeling on the West Coast that perhaps they are not originating as much live program or film production as was the case 10 or 15 years ago, and that more and more we see a centralization of this production in Toronto and Montreal.

One of the objects of the Corporation, we feel, should be to develop talents all across the country. What I am going to say now is not directly germane to film production, but we have local news broadcasts at eight o'clock in the morning and six o'clock at night. These have been taken out of the hands of Western producers and are now produced in Toronto, and they lace in some items relating to B.C. regional news and that is our prime morning broadcast on the CBC.

Dr. Davidson: This is the National News?

Mr. Perrault: Yes; I want to ask the Corporation, when we are looking at this budget, how many dollars are going to be allocated for film production in the major population centres of this country. I am very interested as well in knowing how many production dollars are going to be assigned to Vancouver, Winnipeg, Montreal and Toronto, because if we are going to develop unity, then we want a fair share out on the West Coast, for one place.

Dr. Davidson: We can give you those figures, Mr. Perrault. It may take a little while to get them, but may I just remind you that a factor affecting our ability to produce, certainly in our own Vancouver studio, is our facilities. As you well know from, I am sure, having visited the facility, we are operating in a garage, a converted bus terminal, as I recall, the maximum height of which is 12 feet. You can imagine trying to mount anything like a worth-while television film drama if you are working in a studio where the roof gives you only 12 feet in terms of setting up your sets.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, I quite understand that. I think the facilities on the West Coast are totally primitive and this new facility is badly required. This is the reason I ask the question. I fully support it, but at the same time I would express the hope that that new facility will result in far more programs originating from the West Coast. I think Dr. Davidson must agree that B.C. Regional has contributed more than its share of award-winning series in the past to the Canadian and we concern out there about this continuing departure of productions and talent to Eastern Canada.

réalisation sont répartis. On croit parfois, sur la côte ouest, que nous ne réalisons pas autant d'émissions en direct ou de films qu'il y a 10 ou 15 ans, et que de plus en plus, les réalisations semblent être centralisées à Toronto ou à Montréal.

Alors, en réalité, un des buts de la Société devrait être d'encourager les articles d'un bout à l'autre du pays. Il y a une émission de nouvelles locales à 8h. le matin et à 18h. le soir, on en a maintenant retiré la réalisation des mains des réalisateurs de l'ouest pour la faire préparer à Toronto; ils y glissent quelques nouvelles d'intérêt local pour la Colombie-Britannique, et c'est la principale émission du matin à Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson: Il s'agit des Nouvelles Nationales?

M. Perrault: Oui. Je voudrais demander à la Société, alors que nous étudions son budget, quelles sommes d'argent seront consacrées à la réalisation de films dans les principales villes du pays. Je voudrais également savoir quelles sommes d'argent destinées à la réalisation de films seront accordées à Vancouver, Winnipeg, Montréal et Toronto, car si vous voulez encourager l'unité, il faudrait qu'on en envoie une part équitable sur la côte ouest.

M. Davidson: Nous pourrions vous donner ces chiffres. Mais permettez-moi de vous dire que les installations sont un facteur qui influe sur notre production; à Vancouver, nous sommes installés dans un ancien terminus d'autobus dont le plafond est à une hauteur de 12 pieds. Il est très difficile de travailler dans un studio où on ne dispose que de 12 pieds de plafond.

M. Perrault: Je crois que les installations de la côte ouest sont tout à fait primitives et je crois qu'on devrait améliorer la situation. J'espère aussi que ces nouvelles installations permettront de réaliser beaucoup plus de programmes sur la côte ouest. M. Davidson conviendra que la région de la Colombie-Britannique a fourni d'excellents programmes à Radio-Canada par le passé, et on s'inquiète beaucoup là-bas du départ des artistes et des productions pour l'est du Canada.

[Interpretation]

Dr. Davidson: May I ask Mr. Hallman to put himself on the spot and comment on that? He is the Vice-President of the "Hog Town" network.

Mr. E. Hallman (Vice-President and General Manager, English Networks, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation): Mr. Chairman, I think this is the kind of question that we hear not only from the west coast but from Winnipeg, Halifax and other points as well. I think one of the difficulties we have is this. It is not just a question of facilities as far as the other areas are concerned. We ourselves are experiencing in the network centre a talent drain to the United States: You have an award winning series, you have a major production series which all Canadians enjoy, and immediately your writers, your producers and your performers are frequently attracted to London, New York or Hollywood.

Obviously the west coast has provided over the years a great many talented people to national broadcasting and we really want to have access to those people for major productions not just in Vancouver but across the whole system.

Mr. Perrault: Why should the nation's productions originate primarily in Toronto? Why could not Vancouver or Winnipeg be a major production centre? Why is the percentage lower now than it was 10 years ago—and I believe that that can be substantiated?

Mr. Hallman: I do not really think it is lower than it was 10 years ago.

Mr. Perrault: I am referring to network programming, not record shows.

The Chairman: There is no live network programming anymore.

Mr. Hallman: I do not think it is radically reduced. Of course, there is a good deal of local and regional production going in out there as well.

Mr. Perrault: Yes, there is a fair amount. But, Mr. Chairman, the question still has not been answered. For example, why should a group of newsmen in Toronto produce the B.C. regional news from Toronto, pay expensive land line costs across this country to get the news from Toronto to the people of British Columbia every morning at eight o'clock? Why could not at least a section of that program be originated by our highly talented news people out on the west coast. I must say that I listen to it every morning.

M. Davidson: Je vais demander à M. Hallman de vous répondre.

M. E. Hallman (vice-président et directeur général de la radiodiffusion (réseau anglais)): Cette question se pose non seulement dans le cas de la côte Ouest, mais ailleurs également. Il ne s'agit pas simplement des installations, nous avons dans des centres de production le problème des artistes qui s'en vont aux États-Unis. Lorsqu'il y a un bon programme, dans bien des cas, les réalisateurs, les écrivains et les artistes s'en vont ensuite aux États-Unis ou en Angleterre. Nous voulons pouvoir avoir accès aux artistes de Vancouver non seulement dans leur ville, mais à travers tout le Canada.

M. Perrault: Comment se fait-il que bien des programmes sont réalisés à Toronto au lieu d'être réalisés à Vancouver, ou à Winnipeg. Pourquoi le pourcentage est-il plus faible qu'il y a dix ans.

M. Hallman: Je ne crois pas qu'il soit moins élevé qu'il ne l'était il y a dix ans.

M. Perrault: Je parle des programmes du réseau, non des enregistrements.

Le président: Les programmes en direct du réseau n'existent plus.

M. Hallman: Je ne crois pas que la production ait beaucoup baissé. Il y a également beaucoup de production locale.

M. Perrault: C'est une question qui n'a pas reçu une réponse, comment se fait-il qu'on prépare des bulletins de nouvelles régionales de la Colombie-Britannique à Toronto? On paye des frais très importants de location de ligne à travers le pays de Toronto à Vancouver pour les nouvelles de 8 heures du matin. Pourquoi ne pas en laisser la responsabilité aux reporters et aux journalistes de la côte Ouest.

[Texte]

Mr. Hallman: Is this "The World at Eight"?

Mr. Perrault: Yes, and I think it is a fine production.

Mr. Hallman: I would hope that it is really a world view rather than just a Toronto view, and this is why it has been systematized on the basis that we can collect news from across the country and around the world to provide the country with a shared experience of that kind of first class news service.

Mr. Perrault: I think we could still send through the international tapes to the regional production centres in Winnipeg and Vancouver and still have a far more comprehensive service to the respective regions by having regional news people doing the local part of it.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, if I understand Mr. Perrault, what he is talking about here is the national news broadcast.

Mr. Perrault: I am talking about the national news broadcast on the radio at eight in the morning and in the evening at six o'clock.

Dr. Davidson: Yes.

Mr. Perrault: I am attempting to make the case, Dr. Davidson, that there is a high competence in Winnipeg and Vancouver and other high population centres.

Dr. Davidson: I know that because I come from Vancouver myself.

Mr. Perrault: In my view we do not have to have the people of Toronto write and produce the regional B.C. newscast which is fed from Toronto to Vancouver every morning at eight o'clock for the consumption of the people in Vancouver.

Dr. Davidson: Are you talking about the regional newscast?

Mr. Perrault: I am talking about the regional newscast at eight o'clock, which is produced in Toronto for the people of Vancouver.

Dr. Davidson: The national news.

Mr. Perrault: The national news.

Dr. Davidson: How can you have the national news...

Mr. Perrault: No, no, Dr. Davidson. I hope you have listened to the broadcast. It is a tailor made broadcast for B.C. regional which was written and produced in Toronto and

M. Hallman: Est-ce l'émission «The World at Eight»?

M. Perrault: Oui, et c'est une très bonne émission.

M. Hallman: Je pense qu'il s'agit d'une revue mondiale plutôt qu'une revue torontoise de l'actualité. C'est pourquoi cette revue a été systématisée afin de pouvoir recueillir plus facilement les nouvelles du monde entier et de tout le pays afin de faire partager à tout le monde ces services de premier ordre.

M. Perrault: Il est certain que vous pourriez envoyer ces renseignements à Winnipeg et à Vancouver et offrir un service beaucoup plus complet à chaque région en laissant les gens de chaque région préparer la partie qui leur revient.

M. Davidson: On parle à l'heure actuelle des nouvelles nationales.

M. Perrault: Je parle des nouvelles nationales de huit heures du matin et de six heures le soir.

M. Davidson: Oui.

M. Perrault: Je crois qu'à Winnipeg et à Vancouver, il y a amplement de personnes compétentes là-bas. Nous ne voulons pas...

M. Davidson: Je viens de Vancouver moi-même.

M. Perrault: Nous n'avons pas besoin des gens de Toronto pour rédiger et lire les nouvelles régionales qui sont envoyées chaque matin à huit heures de Toronto à Vancouver.

M. Davidson: Parlez-vous des nouvelles régionales?

M. Perrault: Je parle des nouvelles régionales de huit heures qui sont produites à Toronto pour les gens de Vancouver.

M. Davidson: Les nouvelles nationales?

M. Perrault: Les nouvelles nationales.

M. Davidson: Comment peut-il s'agir...

M. Perrault: C'est un programme destiné à la Colombie-Britannique, c'est réalisé à Toronto mais diffusé en Colombie-Britannique; la même chose se produit dans le cas des sent out to British Columbia—just as they do now for the people in the Maritimes. I have listened to the Maritimes and there is a Maritime edition of the same news broadcast.

I am simply suggesting, and I think the CBC does excellent work in news coverage, that perhaps it is carrying the concept of centralization too far to have Toronto produce and write a newscast primarily designed for British Columbia. It is written in Toronto and every morning it is exported out to the west coast for the enlightenment of the west coast natives. I think that at some point your CBC people out there, who have demonstrated high competence should be given a chance to produce all or part of that production.

Mr. Davidson: You are talking about a regional broadcast?

Mr. Perrault: I am talking about a nationally-produced regional broadcast for British Columbia which comes out every morning at eight o'clock in the morning and at six in the evening. They even have the Vancouver weather forecast read by the Toronto announcer sent 3,000 miles across the country on your microwaves for the enlightenment of the people out in British Columbia.

Mr. Davidson: I will certainly take a look at this. I am trying to make the point that if we are going to have a national news broadcast...

Mr. Perrault: Dr. Davidson, this is not the same as your 11 o'clock CBC national news broadcast at night. This is a tailor-made broadcast for British Columbia which is put together in Toronto—a special production for us—and sent out to us every morning at eight o'clock. I think the people in Toronto have great competence, but I just happen to think the people in western Canada have some competence in this area as well.

Mr. Hallman: Could I say, Mr. Chairman, that there are five editions of "The World at Eight" and as many for "The World at Six". It is, as you say, Mr. Perrault, tailored for the B.C. consumption but with a national and international base that is shared by the country as a whole. I think radio has been neglected so far as local news is concerned. One of the motives for this whole operation is that we can release reporters in each of the regions to do a better job at the local and regional base, and I think this is on the way to that point.

Mr. Perrault: But I tell you as someone with some knowledge of the industry, that you are being scooped by the other radio broadcasters in the area who are on the spot Maritimes, il semble qu'il y ait une édition du même programme pour les Maritimes. Je crois que la Société Radio-Canada fait un excellent travail dans ce domaine mais je crois qu'on centralise un peu trop lorsqu'on demande à Toronto de réaliser un programme qui est destiné à la Colombie-Britannique, ce programme est relayé vers la Colombie-Britannique à tous les matins. Je crois que les gens de la Société Radio-Canada à Vancouver devraient pouvoir réaliser leurs propres programmes.

M. Davidson: Vous parlez d'une émission régionale?

M. Perrault: Je parle d'une émission de nouvelles régionales qui est diffusée à dix heures le soir et à huit heures le matin, il y a même les pronostics de la température qui sont lues à Toronto et qui sont envoyées dans l'Ouest...

M. Davidson: Il est certain que je vais étudier la question. J'essaie de démontrer que si nous avons un service de nouvelles nationales...

M. Perrault: Si nous devons avoir une émission nationale, ce n'est pas la même chose monsieur Davidson. Ceci n'est pas l'émission de onze heures le soir, il s'agit d'une émission de nouvelles qui est destinée particulièrement à la Colombie-Britannique et qui nous est envoyée à huit heures tous les matins. Je crois que les gens de Toronto sont très compétents mais je crois que les gens de l'Ouest sont tout aussi compétents.

M. Hallman: Comme vous l'avez dit monsieur Perrault, ces nouvelles sont destinées à tout le pays mais avec un élément qui intéresse particulièrement l'Ouest. Nous croyons qu'on peut faire un meilleur travail à l'échelon national, mais je vous dis que les autres réalisateurs de la région font un bien meilleur travail sur le plan local.

M. Perrault: Si vous avez une connaissance suffisante du métier, vous reconnaîtrez que les radiodiffuseurs vous prennent vos «scoops». Lorsque j'entends une nouvelle de and get far better local news coverage. When I hear an item from the preceding evening put on "The World at Eight" in the morning, obviously having been teletyped down there, churned through three rewrite desks and then fed back to us like Pablum at eight o'clock in the morning, I must tell you that there are patterns of resentment which merge within my soul.

The Chairman: You are a good separatist, Mr. Perrault.

Mr. Perrault: I am not a separatist. I am just saying that there is competence in Winnipeg, there is competence in the Maritimes, and there is competence on the west coast. I think these national news broadcasts are fine, but if we are going to have "The World at Eight" push it to one-half hour and have a quarter hour produced by the competent people in Manitoba, Vancouver and other centres across the country.

The Chairman: Mr. Picard has a reply to an earlier question of Mr. Perrault.

Mr. Picard: I just wanted to give the breakdown, as requested, between French and English on the regional network. The English is about $59 million, the French $54 million and the regional network about $36 million. Obviously the production of the regional network cannot be as high as the network, the English and French networks, but we feel there is a good relationship between the three.

The Chairman: Mr. Comeau.

M. Comeau: Seulement une question sur l'émission de nouvelles, National News.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, j'invoque le Règlement. Je crois que nous nous entendons pour traiter d'un sujet, et près seulement passer à un autre. J'avais commencé à énoncer un grief contre Radio-Canada, et sur une remarque incidente que j'ai faite, on commence à discuter d'autre chose.

If you would be willing to allow me another two minutes I will complete my remarks. I will even leave about three-quarters of the remarks I had to make in my files so as to give time to my colleagues. However, it will not make any sense if I do not conclude now.

The Chairman: You introduced this particular topic in the course of your remarks.

[Interprétation]

la veille à l'émission «The World at Eight», transmise à Toronto, délayée par les scripteurs et retransmise le matin comme un bol de céréales, la moutarde me monte au nez.

Le président: Vous êtes un bon séparatiste, monsieur Perrault.

M. Perrault: Je ne suis pas séparatiste. Je veux simplement dire qu'il y a des gens compétents à Winnipeg, dans les Maritimes, comme il y en a aussi sur la côte Ouest. Je pense que ces nouvelles nationales sont bien conçues, mais si nous devons écouter l'émission «The World at Eight» durant une demi-heure, nous pourrions avoir un quart d'heure de l'émission qui pourrait être réalisée par les employés compétents de Winnipeg, de Vancouver et des autres centres répartis à travers le pays.

Le président: M. Picard veut répondre à une des questions précédentes de M. Perrault.

M. Picard: Je veux juste vous donner la répartition des montants alloués aux réseaux français et anglais et au réseau régional. Le réseau anglais reçoit $59 millions environ, le réseau français $54 millions et le réseau régional environ $36 millions. Il est évident que la production du réseau régional ne peut pas être aussi importante que celle du réseau national anglais ou français. Mais nous pensons qu'il existe une relation heureuse entre ces trois chiffres.

Le président: Monsieur Comeau.

Mr. Comeau: Only a question regarding the news program National News...

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I believe that we had agreed to deal with one subject and to deal with another only afterwards. I had started explaining a complaint made against the CBC, and thanks to an incidental remark I made, the discussion has veered to another topic.

Si vous voulez bien m'accorder encore deux minutes, j'en terminerai avec mes remarques. Je laisserai même tomber les trois quarts des commentaires que j'ai dans mes dossiers afin de laisser du temps à mes collègues. Cependant, cela n'aurait aucun sens si je ne les termine pas maintenant.

Le président: Vous avez parlé de ce sujet particulier au cours de vos commentaires.

[Text]

Mr. Mongrain: No, I did not. I introduced grievances against the CBC. I am perfectly willing to relinquish the floor but please allow me another minute or two to conclude.

The Chairman: I think there would be general agreement to give you about two minutes to conclude. Then we will go on to Mr. Comeau and Mr. Dinsdale on supplementaries.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, could I just say to Mr. Perrault, before Mr. Mongrain commences, that I get the message loud and clear, and we will look at it. That is all I will say at the moment. I get your point and I would want to re-examine this with our colleagues.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, could I ask one supplementary on that very point.

The Chairman: No, we are going to recognize Mr. Mongrain. You can come back after Mr. Comeau and Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Osler: But in Ottawa and Winnipeg and other places you have local news at 8.30 which follows "The World at Eight", which is completed at 8.15. I do not know how much local news you need.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je vais essayer de conclure très vite, pour ensuite, laisser la parole à mes collègues.

• 1100

Monsieur le président, voici un autre grief: on nous affirme qu'il y a du favoritisme dans l'embauchage et dans l'octroi de certains contrats à Radio-Canada. Voici ma position: à cette séance des Comité, je me proposais de recommander qu'on fasse rapport à la Chambre pour demander une enquête sur la régie interne de Radio-Canada. Je ne désire pas une enquête dans le genre de l'enquête Fowler, sur les structures, mais sur l'administration interne de la Société.

Je me proposais aussi de demander à la Chambre de couper de quelques millions votre augmentation de 14 millions de dollars. Et finalement, je me proposais de demander qu'on étudie la possibilité de confier Radio-Canada à une entreprise mixte, contrôlée par des individus conjointement avec le Gouvernement. Mais, d'abord, il y a un nouveau bureau de direction; la direction générale est rajeunie et j'ai confiance aux hommes qui sont là, les nouveaux comme les anciens.

[Interpretation]

M. Mongrain: Non, je ne l'ai pas fait. J'ai seulement parlé de mes griefs envers Radio-Canada. Je veux volontiers céder la parole, mais j'aimerais quand même que l'on m'accorde une ou deux minutes pour conclure.

Le président: D'accord. Je pense que l'accord est général quant à vous laisser encore deux minutes; je passerai ensuite la parole à M. Comeau et à M. Dinsdale au sujet de questions supplémentaires.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, puis-je juste dire à M. Perrault, avant que M. Mongrain continue, que j'ai reçu le message distinctement et que nous examinerons la chose. C'est tout ce que je veux dire pour le moment. J'ai compris votre point de vue et je veux l'examiner avec mes collègues.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, puis-je poser une question supplémentaire au sujet de ce point particulier?

Le président: Non, car nous allons entendre M. Mongrain. Vous pourrez poser votre question après M. Comeau et M. Dinsdale.

M. Osler: Mais à Ottawa et à Winnipeg et en d'autres lieux, vous avez un bulletin de nouvelles locales à 8 h. 30, qui suit immédiatement l'émission «The World at Eight». Je ne sais pas de combien de nouvelles locales vous avez besoin.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I will try to conclude quickly in order to leave the floor to my colleagues.

Mr. Chairman, here is another complaint: it is claimed that favouritism is practiced in hiring and in the granting of certain contracts at the CBC. Here is my position: at this meeting of the Committee, I intended to recommend that we report to the House in order to request an inquiry into the internal administration at the CBC. I do not want an inquiry along the lines of the Fowler inquiry on structures, but rather on the internal administration of the Corporation.

I also intended to ask the House to cut off a few millions from your $14 million increase. And finally, I also intended to ask to study the possibility of entrusting the CBC to a joint company controlled by individuals jointly with the government. But as there is a new management office and that the general management is rejuvenated, and that I have faith in the men that are there, the new and the old ones alike.

[Texte]

Dernièrement les journaux ont écrit en manchette qu'il y aurait une réorganisation en ce qui concerne les programmes des affaires publiques. Je s'père que ce sera une réorganisation en profondeur. Il y a des personnes qui disparaissent et qui ne sont pas nécessairement coupables de ce qu'on reproche à Radio-Canada. Mais, on vous fait confiance jusque-là.

Vu que vous faites face à une extension considérable de services au Canada, vu l'érection dispendieuse d'un siège social et vu la menace actuelle d'une grève ruineuse, je ne poursuivrai pas davantage. D'autres députés et moi-même, nous vous accorderons une trêve d'une autre année pour faire vos preuves. Seulement, je vous prévins que si l'année prochaine vous revenez et si les mêmes griefs existent encore, nous devons être très sévère. Et nos griefs, vous les comprenez, n'est-ce pas? Je n'ai pas besoin de répéter tout ce qu'on a dit jusqu'à maintenant.

Vous avez admis indirectement qu'il y avait tout de même un problème. Je pense, monsieur Davidson, que votre attitude de vouloir prendre tout le blâme et de vouloir exonérer tous vos collègues est une attitude honorable. Car, en somme, vous êtes président non seulement pour les honneurs, mais aussi pour rendre les blâmes.

J'aurais aimé tout de même voir comparaître M. Thibault. Comme je vous l'avais dit, j'ai un faible pour lui. Vous lui direz tout de même qu'il n'est pas objectif dans ses nouvelles, parce qu'il ne m'a pas invité à donner mon point de vue, alors que les autres réseaux m'ont invité à le faire. J'ai terminé, monsieur le président.

M. Picard: On va essayer de remédier à la situation.

M. Dinsdale: Is this a new subject?

The Chairman: No; this is a supplementary on the question of regional newspapers.

M. Dinsdale: I am a little uncertain about what topic we are now on. We have been floating rather freely.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain has been floating freely. The whole Committee has been floating freely.

An hon. Member: On general grievances.

The Chairman: Yes; and I think we are going to have to lay down some rules about general grievances and how to express them. Mr. Dinsdale?

[Interprétation]

Lately, the newspapers have said that there would be reorganization in the public affairs programs. I hope this will be a thorough reorganization. Some people disappear that are not necessarily guilty for what the CBC is criticized. But we'll give you the benefit of the doubt.

As you are faced with extending your services quite considerably in Canada, as you are setting up a head office which is expensive, and as you are threatened at the present time by a ruinous strike, I will not go any further. Other members along with myself will give you a truce of one more year to prove yourselves. But I am warning you that if next year you come back and the same grievances still exist, we shall have to be very strict. You understand our complaints, don't you? I do not have to repeat what has been said up to now.

You admitted, indirectly, that there was a problem. And I think, Mr. Davidson, that your attitude of wanting to take all the blame on yourself to exonerate all your colleagues is a very honourable attitude. Because, in fact, as the President you must not only reap the honours but also take the blame.

However, I would have liked to see Mr. Thibeault here; as I mentioned, I have a weakness for him. You can tell him that he is not objective in his news because he never asked me to give my point of view, whereas other networks did ask me to do so. I'm through, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Picard: We shall try to correct the situation.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce un nouveau sujet?

Le président: Mon, c'est une question supplémentaire, sur le problème des journaux régionaux.

M. Dinsdale: Je ne suis pas tout à fait sûr du sujet que nous discutons maintenant. Nous avons passablement divagué.

Le président: C'est M. Mongrain qui a divagué. Tout le Comité a divagué.

Une voix: A propos des griefs généraux.

Le président: Oui, et je crois qu'il faudra donner certaines directives quant à la façon d'exprimer les griefs. Monsieur Dinsdale?

[Text]

Mr. Dinsdale: My subject is programming. For a while I thought we were on programming.

The Chairman: No; we were on the news question. Perhaps I can go to Mr. Comeau, and then you can have the floor to deal with programming.

Mr. Dinsdale: All right.

M. Comeau: Monsieur le président, c'est au sujet des nouvelles de 11 heures à Radio-Canada. J'en ai déjà parlé à M. Davidson. Je vous ai envoyé une lettre à ce sujet. Selon moi, les nouvelles de 11 heures à Radio-Canada sont beaucoup trop régionales et pas assez nationales. Je dis cela, parce que, personnellement,...

M. Davidson: Sur le réseau français?

M. Comeau: Sur le réseau français, selon moi, les nouvelles ne sont pas nationales. Personnellement, je ne regarde pas ces nouvelles de 11 heures à Radio-Canada, tout simplement, parce qu'elles ne reflètent pas l'esprit ou l'idée du Canada. Avez-vous des commentaires là-dessus?

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Comeau or some other member of the Committee raised precisely the same point at the last meeting of the Committee. I believe it was Mr. Stanbury, in fact, who raised it, but perhaps not. In any event, I did point out in reply that one of the facts that we face in the French network is that although we refer to it as our French network, as though it extended from one end of Canada to the other, it is essentially a Quebec-based network with Ontario and New Brunswick making up the bulk of the listening audience and only rather faint tentacles reaching down into the other Maritime Provinces and out to the West.

Rightly or wrongly, this to some extent conditions the programming and the news selection, because these are geared to what are considered to be the requirements of the 90 per cent or the 95 per cent of the audience that is concentrated in the eastern provinces. This is not a good thing, and one of my real objects, in my view, is to see the French network extended across the country to include, on a general national network, all of the French Canadians in the different provinces of Canada.

I believe that that will enlarge the perspective and open the eyes of the persons responsible for French network programming to the fact that they have a nation-wide audience

[Interpretation]

M. Dinsdale: Moi, je parlais de la programmation. Pendant un moment, j'ai vu qu'il en était question.

Le président: Non. Nous parlons de l'information. Je donne d'abord la parole à M. Comeau, puis vous pourrez ensuite parler de programmation.

M. Dinsdale: Bien.

M. Comeau: Mr. Chairman, I wish to talk about the 11 o'clock news on the CBC. I have already mentioned this to Mr. Davidson. I have sent you a letter on this subject. In my opinion, the 11 p.m. news on the CBC is much too regional and not national enough. I say this, because, personally,...

Mr. Davidson: On the French network?

Mr. Comeau: On the French network according to me, the news is not national. Personally, I do not listen or look at the 11 o'clock CBC news simply because it does not reflect the spirit or idea of Canada. Do you have any comments about that?

M. Davidson: Je crois, monsieur le président, que M. Comeau, ou un autre député, a soulevé la même question déjà, lors de la dernière séance du Comité. Je crois que c'était M. Stanbury, mais peut-être que non. En tout cas, j'ai signalé, en réponse, que l'une des situations auxquelles nous sommes aux prises, en parlant de notre réseau français, c'est qu'il s'agit surtout d'un réseau québécois avec un rayonnement jusqu'en Ontario et au Nouveau-Brunswick, même si le réseau s'étend d'un bout à l'autre du Canada. Il n'y a qu'un faible rayonnement vers les provinces Maritimes et vers l'Ouest.

A tort ou à raison, cette situation-là influe sur la programmation et sur le choix des nouvelles, parce que celles-ci visent surtout les 90 ou 95 p. 100 de l'auditoire qui est concentré dans les trois provinces de l'Est. J'avoue que ce n'est pas une bonne chose, et mon but, c'est d'élargir les services du réseau français jusqu'à ce qu'il comprenne toute la collectivité canadienne-française.

Je crois que cela va ouvrir les perspectives et les yeux des responsables de la programmation du réseau français et les sensibiliser au fait qu'ils ont à desservir un auditoire à la rather than a regional audience to serve in their network programming—and that includes the news.

I have not made a detailed analysis of the content of the French network news compared with the English network news. It has been suggested to me on more than one occasion that the point you have made is a valid point, and it is one that I would be prepared to examine relative to the detail of what it is we put out over the news over a period of time.

M. Comeau: Monsieur le président, monsieur Davidson, si je suis du Nouveau-Brunswick ou de la Nouvelle-Écosse, les nouvelles sont rédigées pour cette région, mais je n'entends pas beaucoup parler, par exemple, de Vancouver. Il me semble que ce n'est pas là apporter les nouvelles de tout le Canada; c'est plutôt un rapport régional. C'est tout ce que je veux dire.

Dr. Davidson: Would you care to comment on that, Mr. David?

M. R. David (vice-président et directeur général de la radiodiffusion française): Monsieur le président, monsieur Comeau, il faut d'abord faire une distinction entre nos nouvelles à la radio et nos nouvelles à la télévision. Dans nos nouvelles à la radio, nous faisons une place beaucoup plus large à toutes les nouvelles venant du Canada, pour la simple raison que nous avons, comme le président le disait tantôt, des centres de production. Comme vous le savez, nous avons des bulletins de nouvelles à toutes les heures et ces bulletins viennent à la fois de Moncton, de Toronto et même de Vancouver. À ce moment-là, ce sont les centres de nouvelles qui alimentent les bulletins de nouvelles. C'est un reproche qui nous est fait depuis longtemps.

Mais je pense que depuis quelques années, malgré que plusieurs critiques ne soient pas encore satisfaits, nous avons élargi de beaucoup notre intérêt pour des nouvelles de l'extérieur de la province. Et ceci est dû au fait que depuis trois ans nous avons des correspondants, un à Moncton, un à Toronto, et un aussi à Winnipeg, pour couvrir les Prairies. Mais, comme le réseau ne fonctionne pas dans ces deux sens, il arrive que, un circuit n'étant pas toujours disponible, nous devons recevoir des nouvelles sur film. C'est pourquoi elles sont déjà en retard sur l'actualité, et que souvent, elles sont écartées.

Mais, vous remarquerez que, par exemple, à l'ouverture des législatures provinciales, il y a presque toujours un résumé de la nouvelle législation des diverses provinces. Il est bien largeur du Canada, et non un auditoire régional, tant pour la programmation que pour l'information.

Je n'ai pas fait l'analyse détaillée de la teneur des nouvelles du réseau français, comparativement à celle du réseau anglais, mais on m'a déjà dit, à plusieurs reprises, que ce que vous venez de dire est valable, et je suis disposé à étudier le contenu des nouvelles pendant une période donnée.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Davidson, if I am from New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, the news will be prepared for this area, but I will not hear much about Vancouver, for instance. I find that this is not reporting the news from Canada as a whole. It is rather a regional report. That is all I want to say.

M. Davidson: Monsieur David, avez-vous quelque chose à dire à cet égard?

Mr. R. David (Vice President and Director General of the French Network): Mr. Chairman and Mr. Comeau, I think first of all we have to establish a distinction between our radio news and our television news. In our radio news we have a much broader coverage for all news originating in Canada, for the simple reason that, as the President said earlier, we have production centres. As you know, we have news reports every hour, and these reports come from Moncton, Toronto and even Vancouver. In this case, it is the news that feed the newscasts. But people have been complaining about this since a long time.

But I think that since a number of years, in spite of the fact that several critics are not yet satisfied, we have significantly broadened our interest with regard to news from outside the province. And this is due to the fact that over the past three years we have had a correspondent in Moncton, one in Toronto and also one in Winnipeg to cover the Prairies. But as we do not have reversible network, it happens that a circuit over which we were to get this news film is not available. That is why this news lags behind current events, and is often dropped.

But you will notice that when, for instance, the various provincial legislatures are opened there is nearly always a summing up of the new legislation of the various provinces.

[Text]

sûr aussi que, le Québec comprenant 80 p. 100 de la population canadienne-française, très souvent des nouvelles qui sont d'une importance capitale pour la grande majorité des Canadiens français peuvent ne pas dire grand-chose à des Canadiens français demeurant très loin de la province. Et par conséquent, il peut y avoir une tendance à contester l'importance de certaines nouvelles provinciales par rapport à des nouvelles venant d'autres régions du pays. Je pense que l'on n'évitera jamais cela tout à fait.

Je pense que nos gens sont polarisés beaucoup plus par des nouvelles de législature québécoise qu'ils peuvent l'être par des nouvelles provenant de la Saskatchewan ou de la Nouvelle-Écosse. A un Canadien français qui habite dans une autre province, cela peut paraître assez provincial, et le fait est que ce l'est. Mais, je pense que c'est l'une des contraintes de la vie canadienne, et que, même en faisant l'effort qu'il faut, c'est inévitable. Quand nous aurons des salles de nouvelles bien équipées en dehors d'Ottawa, Québec et Montréal la situation sera meilleure.

Comme vous le savez, à Moncton, notre salle des nouvelles ne produit que pour la radio, parce que nous n'avons pas de centre de production de télévision.

Donc, le jour où nous pourrions recevoir des nouvelles ou des messages des correspondants directement de ces salles de nouvelles, je pense que notre bulletin de nouvelles sera plus complet.

Dr. Davidson: May I just say, Mr. Comeau, that, just as Mr. Perrault is unhappy because the news he gets in Vancouver is too national and you are concerned because the news you get is too regional, you have company, in the person of Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland, who wrote me recently to complain that "The World at Eight", which Mr. Perrault complains about going into Vancouver, was not going in its original, national form to the Newfoundland area but was being replaced by some regional news about Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and the other Atlantic Provinces.

Mr. Mongrain: You are not telling the whole story. He also said there are too many stories in the CBC.

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Mongrain, do not steal my French line, I was coming to that. I wanted Mr. McCleave, Mr. Comeau and Mr. Dinsdale to notice that we were honoured with the charge last week that the Newfoundland

[Interpretation]

Another thing is certain, as Quebec represents 80 per cent of the French Canadian population, it often happens that news which is of great importance to the great majority of the French Canadians is not of too much interest to those who live very far from the province. Consequently, there may be a tendency to contest the importance of some provincial news in relation to news from other regions of the country. I don't think that we shall ever completely avoid that.

I think our people are far more interested in news from the Quebec legislature than they could be in news from Saskatchewan or Nova Scotia. For a French Canadian living in another province this may appear rather provincial, and in fact that is what it is. I think though that this is one of the limitations of Canadian life, and that even though the required effort be made, it will remain inevitable. When we shall have well-equipped newsrooms outside of Ottawa, Quebec City and Montreal, the situation will improve.

As you know, in Moncton our newsroom produces for radio only because we have no television production centre.

Thus, the day we will be able to receive news and correspondents' reports directly from these newsrooms, then our newscasts will be much more complete.

M. Davidson: Je veux simplement dire, monsieur Comeau, que M. Perrault se plaint du fait que les nouvelles, à Vancouver, sont trop nationales, et vous, vous vous plaignez que les nouvelles sont trop régionales. Alors, j'aimerais vous dire aussi que le premier ministre Smallwood est d'accord avec vous; il m'a écrit récemment pour se plaindre que l'émission «The World at Eight», dont se plaint M. Perrault, n'est pas transmise dans sa forme originale à Terre-Neuve, mais est remplacée par des nouvelles régionales qui ont trait à la Nouvelle-Écosse, au Nouveau-Brunswick et aux autres provinces Maritimes.

M. Mongrain: Mais vous ne racontez pas toute l'histoire, il a dit également qu'il y avait trop de conservateurs à Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson: Justement, vous me volez la parole. J'y arrivais. Je voulais que M. McCleave, M. Comeau et M. Dinsdale remarquent que, la semaine dernière, nous avons été honorés de l'accusation que la station de broadcasting unit was nothing but a mess of stories. We have now been called everything that I can think of.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, the CBC put these news people into the other centres to gather news for the French network, and they had a great deal of difficulty in doing his except in certain spots. However, it is done and I would like to know if anybody has run a check on what percentage of items originate from these centres. I suspect that it is very difficult for the correspondent in Winnipeg to get on the French network because the news editor in Montreal does not appreciate the hierarchy of values that management is perhaps trying to incorporate, and that a news item from your correspondent in Manitoba or Vancouver may not reach the French network because it is so regionally oriented that it does not appear to be relevant to 80 per cent of the listening audience in Quebec.

M. David: Je n'ai pas la proportion du matériel utilisé. Il est bien certain que, là encore, on frappe le jugement éditorial du comité. Il est bien sûr que nous recevons moins de nouvelles des Prairies que, par exemple, de Moncton où l'alimentation est beaucoup plus courante; et je crois que nous en recevons plus de Toronto, ou du moins que nous en passons plus, en provenance de Toronto que des Prairies. Il est certain que si nous recevons une nouvelle qui sera importante pour les agriculteurs de l'Ouest, elle peut paraître, à Montréal, comme étant moins importante qu'une nouvelle qui touchera, par exemple, les chantiers maritimes de Lauzon, bien que dans l'économie canadienne la première nouvelle soit plus lourde de conséquences. Mais je ne peux pas vous donner la proportion actuellement.

Je sais que je reçois régulièrement des nouvelles de M. Sénéchal à Winnipeg ou de M. McAndrews à Toronto, mais de là à vous dire la proportion d'utilisation là, je serais bien en peine.

The Chairman: Mr. McCleave.

Mr. McCleave: I would like Dr. Davidson's comment on my brief comment which followed Mr. Perrault's remarks on the national broadcasts which are heard regionally, and I made it as a newsman of over 20 years and one who wrote news for the CBC, believe it or not, 16 years ago. I think the CBC should be encouraged in its use of regional reporters. I do not know how well they work on the West Coast, but I know that Mr. Curtis in Atlantic Canada does a superb job. Mr. Per-diffusion de Terre-Neuve n'était qu'un ramassis de conservateurs. On nous a traités de tous les noms imaginables.

M. Osler: Radio-Canada a mis ses correspondants dans d'autres centres pour recueillir de l'information pour le réseau français. Ils ont eu bien du mal à le faire, sauf à certains endroits. Cependant la chose a été faite. Alors, je me demande si quelqu'un a vérifié pour voir quel est le pourcentage d'informations provenant de ces centres. Je crois qu'il est très difficile pour le correspondant de Winnipeg d'avoir du temps d'antenne sur le réseau français parce que le rédacteur des informations à Montréal est conscient de la hiérarchie des valeurs que veut peut-être établir la direction et qu'une information en provenance du Manitoba ou de Vancouver pourrait ne pas parvenir au réseau français parce que son orientation est tellement régionale qu'elle pourrait ne pas paraître pertinente à 80 p. 100 de l'auditoire du Québec.

Mr. David: I do not have the proportion of news that is used. And there again we have to take into account the editorial judgment at the editor's desk. Of course, we get less news from the Prairies than we get from Moncton, for instance, where news is much more regular. And we get more from Toronto, I believe, or at least we handle more from Toronto than from the Prairies. And one thing is certain, if we receive news that will greatly concern the western farmers, it may appear in Montreal to be of lesser importance than news concerning the Lauzon Shipyards, for instance, although in the Canadian economy, the former is really more important. But I cannot give you the present proportion.

I know that I receive news regularly from Mr. Sénéchal in Winnipeg or from Mr. McAndrew in Toronto, but to tell you the proportion of use is something I cannot do.

Le président: Maintenant, c'est à monsieur McCleave.

M. McCleave: J'aimerais que le docteur Davidson commente l'opinion que j'ai exprimée à la suite des remarques de M. Perrault sur les émissions nationales entendues au plan régional, ce que j'ai fait à titre de nouvelliste ayant plus de 20 ans d'expérience et qui, croyez-le ou non, a rédigé des informations pour Radio-Canada, il y a de ça 16 ans. Je crois que Radio-Canada devrait être encouragée pour l'emploi qu'elle fait des reporters régionaux. Je ne connais pas le travail qu'ils rault remarks that people are getting scooped. This will happen to any newsman. The thing is to come up with your own share of the same. I would really take a long look at anything which would tend to weaken the use of the regional reporter system where, instead of the reporter being chained to an editorial room, he now has the right to get out with a camera or a tape recorder and do some honest to God footwork, and I just want to offer a note of appreciation in this respect. I think CBC news in that regard has improved tremendously in the last 10 years.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, on a new subject.

Mr. Dinsdale: Before I get on to a new subject, I have been trying to ask a supplementary and with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to comment on this discussion of the problems of regional, national and world news. I think part of the problem is that we are not differentiating between radio and TV and I think most of our discussion has revolved around radio. Radio seems to be coming more a news media and TV an entertainment media, and I will go into this when I get to the general question of programming. There is a regional news program—it appears in Manitoba over CBW at 9 o'clock—which is geared to the local area. The only complaint and criticism I have to make of that program is that it is very brief. It is not as comprehensive as what I believe is called "The News of the World".

Mr. Fraser: "The World at Eight".

Mr. Dinsdale: It is very brief and abrupt and we might partially deal with this problem by strengthening the 9 o'clock regional news. Radio seems to be geared more for the housewife than it is for the busy executive. If you could listen to CBC all day long you would get all sorts of regional comments that would broaden the national perspective. However, that is not the main subject that I am interested in at the moment.

I want to continue a line of questioning that began the last time Dr. Davidson was before the Committee, and I particularly like to refer to a comment he made with respect to the permissive aspects of television broad-font sur la côte ouest, mais je sais que M. Curtis d'Atlantic Canada fait un travail superbe. Lorsque M. Perrault dit «que les gens se font voler leurs informations» cela arrive à tout le monde. Ce qui importe c'est de remettre la monnaie à son tour. Je crois que j'étudierais longuement toute mesure qui pourrait affaiblir le système du reportage régional où le reporter, au lieu de rester enchaîné à son pupitre, a maintenant le droit de sortir muni de son magnétophone et de sa caméra et d'aller user ses semelles. Je voudrais seulement dire un mot d'appréciation à ce sujet. Je crois que dans ce domaine, Radio-Canada s'est amélioré considérablement au cours des dix dernières années.

Le président: Monsieur Dinsdale?

M. Dinsdale: Avant de passer à un autre sujet j'ai essayé de poser une question supplémentaire et, avec votre permission, monsieur le président, j'aimerais dire un mot à propos de cette discussion au sujet du problème des nouvelles régionales et nationales. Je crois qu'une partie du problème c'est que nous n'établissons pas la différence entre les nouvelles à la radio et à la télévision. La radio semble devenir davantage un organe d'information tandis que la télévision devient un organe de divertissements. Alors j'en reviens à la question générale de la programmation. Il y a un programme d'information qui passe au Manitoba sur les ondes de CBW, à 9 heures, qui est réalisé à l'intention de la région. La plainte et la critique que je désire faire au sujet de cette émission, c'est qu'elle est beaucoup trop brève. Elle n'est pas aussi globale que ce qu'on appelle, je crois, «Les nouvelles mondiales».

M. Fraser: «The World at Eight».

M. Dinsdale: C'est un programme court et précipité; nous pourrions peut-être remédier partiellement au problème en étoffant les nouvelles régionales de 9 heures. La radio semble s'adresser davantage à la maîtresse de maison, qu'à l'homme d'affaires pris par son travail. Si vous pouviez écouter Radio-Canada toute la journée vous entendriez un éventail d'informations régionales qui élargirait la perspective nationale. Toutefois, ce n'est pas le principal sujet qui m'occupe présentement.

Je voudrais continuer un enchaînement de questions qui a été commencé la dernière fois que M. Davidson s'est présenté devant le Comité et je voudrais en particulier me reporter à une remarque qu'il a faite au sujet casting. This arose from a comment I made that we need a Hyde Park corner more than we need access to the tremendous impact of CBC television. At that time Dr. Davidson suggested that the CBC might be regarded as fulfilling the function and the role of a Hyde Park corner.

The reason I raise the matter again is because I have had a substantial feedback from the public of Canada on this thesis propounded by Dr. Davidson which seems to suggest a permissive attitude in the role of TV programming. More especially, I made a statement to the effect that the tremendous visual and audio impact of television has helped to aggravate the proverbial generation gap. I even got a kickback from Rochdale College, that high rise hippydom in Toronto, which might be most typical of the problems of the generation gap.

Mr. Mongrain raised this subject in broad terms earlier, and I would like to pinpoint it by asking Dr. Davidson if there are no criteria, other than the dictates of the Broadcasting Act, which determine the programming emphasis on television? Is there no committee or no way of evaluating just how the CBC is going to carry out this very difficult role of promoting national unity and programming excellence other than by the general terms of the Broadcasting Act?

Dr. Davidson: First of all, Mr. Chairman, as Mr. Dinsdale knows, there is a board of directors of the Corporation which has the over-all responsibility for determining Corporation policy and the ways in which the Corporation is to endeavour to discharge its mandate. Within that board of directors there is a program committee of the board which spends at least half a day at each board meeting—and according to the law we have to meet six times a year—reviewing program questions. This is in the larger policy area rather than in the review of individual programs, although individual programs are discussed as they relate to the broad framework of policy within which the Corporation endeavours to operate.

Over the years there has also been built up—and I referred to this earlier—policy papers that the Corporation has developed on such matters as controversial broadcasting, good taste in broadcasting and a variety of other papers relating to such things as violence on children's programs, and these form the basis of the corporate position as they de l'indulgence de la télédiffusion. Cela émanait d'une remarque que j'avais faite que nous avions davantage besoin d'un plus grand nombre de Hyde Parks que nous avions besoin de l'impact énorme de la télévision de Radio-Canada. A ce moment-là, le docteur Davidson, avait dit que Radio-Canada pouvait être considéré comme remplissant le rôle de Hyde Park.

La raison pour laquelle je soulève de nouveau la question c'est que j'ai reçu beaucoup de commentaires du public au sujet de la thèse du docteur Davidson, qui semble indiquer une attitude assez indulgente quant à la programmation de la télévision. Et, entre autre, moi-même j'avais fait une déclaration à l'effet que l'effet visuel et auditif de la télévision avait aggravé l'écart entre les générations. J'ai même eu une réaction du collège Rochdale à Toronto, ce sanctuaire gratte-ciel du monde «hippie», qui pourrait servir d'exemple le plus typique des malaises de l'écart entre les générations.

M. Mongrain a abordé cette question en termes généraux précédemment et je voudrais la cerner en demandant au D<sup>r</sup> Davidson s'il existe des critères, autres que les directives de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion, qui régissent la programmation de la télévision. N'y a-t-il pas de comité ou un autre moyen d'évaluer comment Radio-Canada peut s'acquitter du rôle difficile de promouvoir l'unité nationale et maintenir l'excellence de sa programmation autrement qu'en appliquant les principes généraux de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion?

M. Davidson: Tout d'abord, monsieur le président, M. Dinsdale le sait déjà, qu'il y a un conseil d'administration de la société qui a la responsabilité d'ensemble de déterminer la ligne de conduite en vertu de laquelle la société peut remplir son mandat. Parmi ce conseil d'administration, il y a un Comité des programmes qui passe une demi-journée à chaque réunion du conseil, et nous devons nous réunir six fois l'an aux termes de la Loi, dans le but d'étudier les programmes, c'est-à-dire la politique d'ensemble plutôt qu'une révision d'émissions en particulier, bien que les émissions en particulier soient discutées en fonction de cadres plus généraux à l'intérieur desquels la société s'efforce d'exercer son action.

Au cours des années, j'en ai déjà parlé, des documents ont été rédigés par la Société quant à la politique à suivre en matière d'émissions controversées, de bon goût dans les émissions, de violence dans les émissions destinées aux enfants, et ces documents constituent la substance sur laquelle se fonde la Société en fonction du sujet traité dans des relate to the subject matter of these individual policy papers. Since Mr. Picard and I have become associated with the Corporation we have, with the Board's approval, initiated a review of all of the policy papers that have been developed over the years as guidelines for the Corporation.

We expect to present to the Board at the end of this month when it meets in Toronto, the first of these revised policy papers. This one happens to deal with the question of violence on television, the interest which was stimulated by the events of last summer when there was a great upsurge of concern, which has continued, in the U.S. and in Canada over the subject of violence on television arising out of the assassination of Senator Robert Kennedy.

We will successively review and update these policy papers and I would hope that as that review can be completed it will provide us really with the framework within which we can expect the networks to give direction to the supervisors and to the producers of the various programs which form a part of our total complex of programming.

Mr. Dinsdale: Are those policy papers available to members of the Committee, or are they for internal distribution only?

Dr. Davidson: There has been no distribution up to this date, Mr. Dinsdale—publicly, that is to say—with possibly one exception, and that is our policy paper on controversial broadcasting which was accepted by the former Board of Broadcast Governors and issued by them as their document, designed to provide guidance to broadcasters generally with respect to controversial broadcasting.

I would wish to consider, if you do not mind my putting it this way, the implications of making public policy papers of this kind. I think probably it would be well for me to discuss the matter with the Board of Directors before coming to any conclusion about what we should do.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well Mr. Mongrain has indicated that there will be a suspended action, and perhaps I could join him in supporting that viewpoint. Then we could at least discuss these matters when you have the privilege and pleasure of coming before this Committee again, Dr. Davidson.

Dr. Davidson. The sword of Damocles traditionally hangs over the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and I am quite willing to have it hang for another year, before I do.

documents de directives. Depuis que M. Picard et moi-même faisons partie de la société, nous avons entrepris, avec l'approbation du Conseil, une révision de tous les documents qui ont été établis au cours des années, comme étant les principes directeurs de la société.

Nous avons l'intention de présenter à la réunion du Conseil qui se tiendra à Toronto à la fin de ce mois-ci, la première tranche de ces documents révisés. Cette tranche porte sur la question de la violence à la télévision, c'est-à-dire sur l'intérêt qui a été stimulé par les événements de l'été dernier, lorsqu'on a constaté une recrudescence d'inquiétude aux États-Unis et au Canada à propos des programmes de violence à la télévision découlant de l'assassinat du sénateur Robert Kennedy. Nous allons successivement réviser et mettre à jour tous ces documents et ces directives, et j'espère qu'à la fin de ces travaux, nous disposerons d'une structure dans le cadre de laquelle les réseaux pourront donner les directives nécessaires aux superviseurs et réalisateurs des divers programmes qui forment une partie de tout le complexe de la programmation.

M. Dinsdale: Ces documents sont-ils mis à la disposition du Comité, ou sont-ils destinés uniquement à la distribution interne?

M. Davidson: On n'a pas fait de distribution jusqu'ici, monsieur Dinsdale, c'est-à-dire publiquement, sauf dans le cas de notre document de politique sur la radiodiffusion controversée qui a été accepté par l'ancien Bureau des gouverneurs de la radiodiffusion et qu'ils ont publié comme étant leur document avec l'intention de fournir des directives aux radiodiffuseurs en général concernant la radiodiffusion controversée. J'aimerais exposer l'effet que pourrait avoir la publication de documents de ce genre. Je pense qu'il vaudrait mieux que je discute de la question avec le conseil d'administration avant de décider de la marche à suivre.

M. Dinsdale: M. Mongrain a indiqué que l'on remettrait la question à plus tard, et je crois que je me joindrai à son point de vue. Nous pourrions alors discuter au moins de ces questions lorsque vous aurez le privilège et le plaisir de revenir devant ce comité, monsieur Davidson.

M. Davidson: L'épée de Damoclès pend traditionnellement sur la tête du président de Radio-Canada et je veux bien la laisser pendre encore un an avant que je ne me présente devant vous.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the details of such papers are none of our business. The simple thing is that the CBC either performs according to the wishes of the people of Canada or the people who are running the CBC get fired. I think if all members of the Committee, all members of Parliament and all members of the public start discussing the intricacies of their working papers we would do nothing but impede them.

The Chairman: I have a very vague recollection, and the Clerk has been confirming it, that some of these papers have already been circulated back in 1966 when we were having the "Seven Days" meetings. Perhaps those members who are interested might check into the past records. I think you will probably find most of the information which you require already has been before this Committee. They may not have been printed; they may only have been distributed. However, if you like I will look into this. There must be some available from the Clerk's office but we will have to look into it. Mr. Hymmen?

Mr. Hymmen: Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to get a question in for two hours, and I think I finally can under a supplementary.

The Chairman: Good.

Mr. Hymmen: I would like to explain that I arrived on this Committee on short notice and I have not the benefit of the background testimony, although I did serve on this Committee for quite some time in the last Parliament. I would like to ask Dr. Davidson a direct question: regardless of any papers that have been published, what is the present policy of the CBC on contentious broadcasts?

I admit that all the news media—and this includes the press, radio and television—seem to think that unless something is contentious no one is going to look at it. I could refer to the controversy in Algonquin Park on logging, or air pollution in the Dunville area, or strip mining out West. Some years ago, I recall, there was a program explaining a problem concerning accommodation for temporary help down in the tobacco harvesting area, in which whoever arranged the program gave a completely one-sided story. You know, there are two sides to every story.

[Interprétation]

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, il me semble que les détails de ces documents ne nous concernent pas.

Il s'agit simplement que Radio-Canada fonctionne selon la volonté du peuple canadien sinon ceux qui dirigent la société seront remerciés. J'ai l'impression que si tous les membres du Comité, tous les députés et tout le public commencent à discuter de la complexité des documents de travail, nous ne ferions qu'entraver leurs travaux.

Le président: Il me semble que certains de ces documents ont déjà été publiés en 1966, quand le Comité s'était réuni pour discuter du programme «This Week has Seven Days»; ceux dont ce cas intéresse peuvent trouver ces documents dans les dossiers passés. Je crois que probablement vous trouverez qu'une grande partie des renseignements que vous cherchez ont déjà passé devant ce Comité. Il se peut qu'ils n'aient pas été imprimés ou simplement distribués. Toutefois, si vous le voulez je m'en occuperai. Vous en trouverez peut-être dans le bureau du Greffier, mais nous verrons.

M. Hymmen: Monsieur le président, pour les deux dernières heures, j'essayais de poser une question et je crois que finalement je peux le faire.

Le président: C'est bien.

M. Hymmen: Je voudrais vous dire que j'ai rejoint ce comité à bref délai et par conséquent, je n'ai pu prendre connaissance des témoignages précédents bien que j'aie servi au sein de ce comité pendant un certain temps lors de la dernière législature.

J'aimerais poser au Dr Davidson une question directe: Sans parler des documents qui ont été publiés, quelle est la politique, actuelle, de Radio-Canada, à l'égard des émissions controversées?

Je reconnais que tous les moyens d'information c'est-à-dire la presse, la radio et la télévision semblent croire qu'un programme ne peut intéresser le public que s'il est controversé. Je peux mentionner la controverse de Algonquin Park au sujet de l'exploitation forestière, ou la pollution de l'air dans la région de Dunville, ou les exploitations minières dans l'Ouest.

Je me souviens d'un programme, voilà déjà quelques années, qui portait sur le logement du personnel à temps partiel dans les plantations de tabac où celui qui a organisé le programme n'a donné qu'un seul côté de l'affaire.

Vous devez savoir qu'une histoire comporte toujours deux versions.

[Text]

The Chairman: First, what is your definition of a contentious program?

Mr. Hymmen: "The Way It Is". I just wonder what the present policy is, because one of the directors of one of the programs of the CBC told a colleague of mine that he did not give a darn whether two sides of a viewpoint were shown at all as long as they presented his program. Now, if the object of the CBC is to promote national unity, unless you show all sides of a question you are creating disunity in the country instead of unity.

I think this is most important, because we have, for example, in the press editorial experts who know the answers to everything in that private operation and certainly the government does not subsidize the press. They are entitled to their opinion. However, the CBC, which is a wholly-owned corporation paid for with Canadian funds, in all fairness somehow has to show the various sides of a very contentious problem.

This is one thing that is bothering me. Perhaps there have been papers and perhaps there is a policy, but I would like to know what the policy is.

The Chairman: Mr. Hymmen, you might know that when Mr. Kierans appeared before the Broadcasting Committee on the postal estimates he indicated that the government was subsidizing the press on their mailing rates.

An hon. Member: As in the past.

An hon. Member: Still!

The Chairman: Dr. Davidson?

Dr. Davidson: I was just wondering if Mr. Givens was raising the same point.

Mr. Givens: No, not on this point.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hymmen has referred to contentious broadcasting, and contentious programming is part of our total programming. I think it is a part which, within reason, forms a proper part of the discharge of our mandate. I would be wrong if I left the impression—and I am sure Mr. Hymmen did not intend to leave this impression—that we do nothing but contentious broadcasting. The bulk of our programming is non-contentious. There are certain program periods...

An hon. Member: They are pretty dull.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Comment définissez-vous un programme controversé?

M. Hymmen: Le programme «The Way It Is». Je me demande en quoi consiste la politique actuelle, parce que le directeur d'un des programmes de Radio-Canada avait dit à un de mes collègues qu'il s'en fichait pas mal si les deux versions de l'histoire étaient publiées pourvu que l'on présente son programme. A présent, si l'objectif de Radio-Canada consiste à promouvoir l'unité nationale, à moins que vous ne diffusiez les deux versions d'une affaire, vous êtes en train de désunir le pays au lieu de l'unir.

Ceci, à mon avis, est très important, parce qu'il y a dans les journaux des éditorialistes-experts qui connaissent tous les dessous de l'opération et il est certain que le gouvernement ne subventionne pas la presse. Ils ont droit à leur propre opinion. Toutefois, la Société Radio-Canada qui est une société de la Couronne, les fonds lui viennent de l'État et par conséquent elle se doit de montrer les divers aspects d'un problème qui prête à controverse. Voilà ce qui me préoccupe. Il y a eu peut-être des documents et peut-être une politique, mais j'aimerais savoir en quoi consiste cette politique.

Le président: Monsieur Hummen, pour votre information, M. Kierans a comparu devant le comité de la radiodiffusion chargé d'étudier les prévisions budgétaires postales. Il a indiqué que le gouvernement subventionnait la presse pour le tarif postal d'envoi des journaux.

Une voix: Comme dans le passé.

Une autre voix: Silence.

Le président: Monsieur Davidson?

M. Davidson: Je me demande si M. Givens soulevait la même question?

M. Givens: Non, pas cette question.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, M. Hymmen a parlé de la radiodiffusion controversée, et la programmation controversée fait partie de l'ensemble de la programmation. Je crois que c'est une partie qui constitue, dans les limites raisonnables, une bonne part de l'exécution de notre mandat. J'aurais tort de donner l'impression tout comme monsieur Hymmen d'ailleurs, que tous nos programmes prêtent à controverse. La plupart de nos programmes ne prêtent pas à controverse. Il y a toutefois des programmes...

Une voix: Qui sont ennuyeux.

[Texte]

Dr. Davidson: I hope that remark does not get on the record, Mr. Chairman, because I would have to challenge the suggestion that some of our programs are dull.

Certain programs are designed to be controversial and where they are in the area of contentious programming, or controversial broadcasting, the policy paper that I have referred to on controversial broadcasting is the guideline that we endeavour to follow.

Coming to the point, we recognize that we have a responsibility to provide for the airing of all sides of a controversial story and we have our choice—and I touched upon this in reply to some questions by Mr. Givens at the last meeting—at a variety of ways and means of trying to maintain or establish balance in the broadcasting of a certain program subject.

The simplest way to do it, of course, is to include within an individual program two points of view, either by having a confrontation of the parties representing two differing viewpoints or in a sequence, one side presented after another. The simplest and most direct way is to provide for both sides of a controversial subject to be dealt with in the same program. That is not always possible because of the length of time we can devote to an individual subject and we may have to endeavour to achieve balance in programming a controversial topic over a series of programs by stating that one side is going to be given on one occasion and the other side on a later occasion.

The third way in which we endeavour to achieve balance in broadcasting may be to achieve balance over a period of time, and more and more it is becoming necessary to think of these other alternatives because, quite frankly, if you limit yourself to the fairly rigid framework of a single broadcast in which you endeavour to present the pros and the cons it becomes increasingly difficult to make an interesting and lively program.

These are various ways in which we attempt to achieve a balance in the presentation of views on controversial subjects and I indicated in my reply to Mr. Givens that there was also what I call a "compensatory" kind of programming where, after having done an unbalanced job, we endeavour to rectify what we have done by coming back with the other side of the story. I referred precisely to the Algonquin Park presentation on "The Way It Is" as an example of that kind of rectification of imbalance that may have been created by our initial program.

[Interpretation]

M. Davidson: J'espère que cette remarque n'est pas enregistrée, monsieur le président, car autrement je me verrais dans l'obligation de contester la déclaration selon laquelle certains de nos programmes sont ennuyeux. Certains programmes sont spécialement conçus pour prêter à controverse et si tel est le cas les directives dont je faisais allusion, constituent la ligne de conduite que nous nous efforçons de suivre.

A ce sujet, nous admettons être chargés de faire entendre toutes les versions en cause, lorsqu'une question prête à controverse, et nous avons le choix—ceci est pour répondre à certaines questions posées par M. Givens lors de la dernière réunion—de plusieurs moyens pour essayer de maintenir ou d'établir un équilibre dans la diffusion d'un certain sujet. Le plus simple serait d'inclure au programme individuel deux points de vue en confrontant les deux parties dont les vues sont différentes, ou en une séquence présentant les deux versions l'une après l'autre.

Le moyen le plus simple et le plus direct serait de permettre aux deux parties en cause d'exposer leurs points de vue au cours du même programme. Ce n'est pas toujours possible à cause du temps qui peut être consacré à chaque question.

On peut parfois être obligé de tenter d'établir l'équilibre dans la programmation d'un sujet controversable en une série d'émissions en déclarant qu'on traitera aujourd'hui d'un aspect et que l'autre partie exposera sa thèse la prochaine fois.

Le troisième façon de procéder, pour arriver à un équilibre sur une certaine période de temps, et il est de plus en plus nécessaire de songer à ces solutions car il est vrai que, si on se limite au cadre rigide d'une seule émission, pour présenter les arguments pour ou contre, il est de plus en plus difficile d'offrir une émission qui soit intéressante et vivante.

Voilà donc des façons de présenter divers points de vue sur des questions qui prêtent à controverse. Et j'ai dit, monsieur Givens, qu'il y a également un élément «compensatoire» quand, après avoir fait un programme qui n'est pas très équilibré, nous tentons de rectifier ce qui a été fait et de présenter d'autres aspects de la question. Je songe, par exemple, à l'émission sur le parc Algonquin, dans The way it is. On a tenté de rectifier une certaine impression fautive qui aurait pu avoir été créée à la suite de la première émission.

[Text]

Mr. Hymmen: I agree, Dr. Davidson. The latter method you mentioned is wrong; only after public reaction are you forced to do this. I think your initial suggestion of a series in which you show all angles and let the public reach its own conclusion is a very proper way to do it. Not having seen nor read the papers which the Chairman referred to, I just wanted to make sure that this was present policy. Mr. Chairman, are we still on programming?

The Chairman: That is what I understood the question was about.

Mr. Hymmen: No, no; I have a direct question that I would like to ask. I do not know whether it is allowed or not.

The Chairman: Well, ask it and find out.

Mr. Hymmen: Mr. Mongrain suggested something that has been bothering some of us, regardless of Dr. Davidson's many years of experience in the Treasury Board and has substantiation of the estimates as presented. I would like to know, if possible, what is the average weekly cost of operation of "The Way It Is"—the Sunday night program. The only reason I ask this is because most of us watch this program and we watch a program on another network which has no open-ended budget, and I had some information, which I can get again, that there was quite a disparity between the budgets of these two programs.

I am wondering again whether the austerity program we are supposed to be undertaking in order to give some leadership is taking place in the CBC or not. I do not expect someone to pull these figures out of a hat, but I would certainly like to get them.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I have to say I would be somewhat concerned about producing figures for individual programs. If we embark on this course we are going to be led down a trail that I think would present us with very considerable difficulties. We are not only in production ourselves, but we are in competition with other broadcasting agencies operating in the private field, and I think it would not be sound in principle that we should be required to give detailed figures of cost on individual programs if there is any way of avoiding it.

• 1135

Mr. Hymmen: The only reason I asked the question is because I notice in the estimates a

[Interpretation]

M. Hymmen: Je suis de votre avis, monsieur Davidson, mais je trouve que la dernière méthode dont vous parlez est fausse car vous ne réagissez que lorsque l'opinion publique vous force à le faire.

Je crois qu'une série dans laquelle vous exposez tous les angles et laissez au public le soin de tirer ses propres conclusions me semble être la vraie solution.

Je n'ai pas lu les documents que le président a mentionnés, mais je voulais m'assurer que c'était bien la politique que vous suiviez.

Sommes-nous toujours à parler de la programmation?

Le président: Je le crois.

M. Hymmen: Il y a une question que j'aimerais vous poser. Je ne sais pas si elle est acceptable ou non.

Le président: Allez-y, nous verrons bien.

M. Hymmen: M. Mongrain a dit quelque chose qui nous inquiète un peu, quelle que soit l'expérience de M. Davidson au Conseil du Trésor et de la valeur des prévisions budgétaires qu'il a soumises. Je voudrais savoir quel est le coût moyen de la production hebdomadaire de l'émission The Way It Is, qui passe en onde le dimanche soir.

La plupart d'entre nous regardons cette émission et nous regardons également des émissions qui ne jouissent pas d'un budget illimité et il semble qu'il y ait une grande différence dans le budget réservé aux deux émissions. Je me demande encore si le programme d'austérité que nous sommes censés appliquer, est en vigueur à la Société Radio-Canada? Je ne crois pas que vous pourriez donner magiquement ces chiffres, mais j'aimerais les connaître.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, je suis quelque peu mal à l'aise de présenter des chiffres au sujet d'un programme en particulier. Ceci pourrait nous créer des problèmes assez considérables. Il ne s'agit pas seulement de production. Nous devons faire concurrence avec trop d'agences de radiodiffusion du secteur privé et je crois qu'il ne serait pas bon de donner des détails sur le coût de chaque programme.

M. Hymmen: La seule raison pour laquelle j'ai posé cette question, c'est que j'ai noté

[Texte]

$20 million increase under programs, and I understand also from the other type of estimates we have that in Centennial Year the 1967 provision for Expo and Centennial programming amounted to $11 million, and I do not know whether that was the total or whether it was a supplementary.

The Chairman: That question was dealt with at the last meeting we held with the CBC. It is in Issue No. 13 of our Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence.

Mr. Hymmen: I will read the proceedings.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Hymmen: I have one final question.

Dr. Davidson: We are not continuing "The Way It Is" next year.

The Chairman: Is it on this subject?

Mr. Hymmen: It is on programming.

The Chairman: I think we should go back to Mr. Dinsdale because the supplementaries are designed to clear up a point, not to permit you to go on to your own independent line of questioning. You will have to wait your turn.

Mr. Hymmen: I am new on this Committee which operates considerably different from other committees that I have been on and...

The Chairman: We try to provide freedom for you to find out what you want to know.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I was asking a question concerning a specific aspect of programming and that is the problem of the aggravation of the "generation gap" by reason of the exposure of children to the television eye. It has been said that TV has become the baby sitter and the parental substitute, and so forth. Before I move to another aspect of this line of questioning I would like Dr. Davidson to indicate whether he really believes—this was reported in the press and I think he can clarify it—that television is a sort of electronic Hyde Park?

Dr. Davidson: I would not want to be taken as literally as all that, Mr. Dinsdale. The point I was trying to make is that Hyde Park served in a certain era, and still does to some extent, as a place where different points of view are freely aired, and it seems to me that in accordance with our mandate that corresponds to an interesting degree to the mandate that has been given to the Corporation by Parliament.

[Interprétation]

dans les prévisions budgétaires il y a une augmentation de $20 millions sous la rubrique «Programmation», et au cours de l'année du centenaire, les programmes du centenaire et les émissions de l'expo se sont chiffrés à $11 millions. Je ne sais pas s'il s'agit du total ou d'une écriture complémentaire.

Le président: La question a été traitée lors du dernier comité tenu avec la Société Radio-Canada. Cela se trouve à la Question 13 du procès-verbal.

M. Hymmen: Je lirai le procès-verbal.

Le président: Bien.

M. Hymmen: Une dernière question.

M. Davidson: L'émission The Way It Is se termine cette année.

Le président: Est-ce à ce sujet?

M. Hymmen: C'est au sujet de la programmation.

Le président: Je crois qu'il faudrait revenir à M. Dinsdale. Les questions supplémentaires ont pour but d'éclaircir la question et non pas de servir les propres fins de la personne qui interroge. Il vous faudra attendre votre tour.

M. Hymmen: Le comité ne fonctionne pas comme les autres comités. Il semble que certains membres aient le monopole.

Le président: Nous essayons de vous donner la chance de trouver ce que vous voulez savoir.

M. Dinsdale: Je vous ai posé une question concernant un aspect particulier de la programmation, l'écart entre les générations. Les enfants sont de plus en plus exposés à la télévision. On dit parfois que la télévision est devenue un substitut aux parents, une sorte de gardienne. Avant d'en venir à un autre aspect de la question, je voudrais demander au Dr Davidson s'il croit vraiment que la télévision est une sorte de Hyde-Park électronique.

M. Davidson: Je ne voudrais pas que vous me preniez au pied de la lettre, monsieur Dinsdale. Hyde-Park a servi à une certaine époque et encore aujourd'hui dans une certaine mesure, en tant qu'endroit où on expose librement divers points de vue, et il me semble que conformément à notre mandat, ceci correspond dans une certaine mesure au mandat qui a été accordé à la Société Radio-Canada par le Parlement.

[Text]

If I may just read you will see why I have tried to make this allusion connecting the process of television broadcasting, not in a literal sense but metaphorically, with the process that you referred to as the Hyde Park soap box. Section 2(c) of the Broadcasting Act reads:

It is hereby declared that

2 (c) all persons licensed to carry on broadcasting undertakings have a responsibility for programs they broadcast but the right to freedom of expression and the right of persons to receive programs, subject only to generally applicable statutes and regulations, is unquestioned; (d) the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should be varied and comprehensive and should provide reasonable, balanced opportunity for the expression of differing views on matters of public concern, and the programming provided by each broadcaster should be of high standard, using predominantly Canadian creative and other resources;...

There is another reference here, which I will read:

(g) the national broadcasting service...

this is the CBC as distinct from the Canadian broadcasting system which includes both the public and private.

(g) the national broadcasting service should

(i) be a balanced service of information, enlightenment and entertainment for people of different ages, interests and tastes covering the whole range of programming in fair proportion,

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps the use of the phrase "Hyde Park" is an unhappy one. Hyde Park, as you know, features all the crackpots that have bees in their bonnets.

The Chairman: Not only crackpots.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well...

Dr. Davidson: It is a sort of CBC. I did not create the story but I hear it from time to time.

Mr. Dinsdale: Let me proceed with this problem of the generation gap. There was a meeting in Ottawa recently of the Citizens' Committee on Children. It was reported:

Claude Caron of Montreal, supervisor of youth programming for the French

[Interpretation]

Permettez-moi de vous lire ceci et vous comprendrez la raison pour laquelle nous avons tenté de rattacher les émissions de télévision au concept de Hyde-park.

L'article 2. c) de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion prévoit:

Il est, par les présentes, déclaré

2c) que toutes les personnes autorisées à faire exploiter des entreprises de radiodiffusion sont responsables des émissions qu'elles diffusent, mais que le droit à la liberté d'expression et le droit des personnes de capter les émissions, sous la seule réserve des lois et règlements généralement applicables, est incontesté; d) que la programmation offerte par le système de la radiodiffusion canadienne devrait être variée et compréhensive et qu'elle devrait fournir la possibilité raisonnable et équilibrée d'exprimer des vues différentes sur des sujets qui préoccupent le public et que la programmation de chaque radiodiffuseur devrait être de haute qualité et utiliser principalement des ressources canadiennes créatrices et autres;

Voici un autre point de référence:

g) que le service national de radiodiffusion...

C'est la Société Radio-Canada, en tant que réseau de radiodiffusion canadienne qui compte à la fois le secteur privé et public.

g) que le service national de radiodiffusion devrait

(i) être un service équilibré qui renseigne, éclaire et divertisse des personnes de tous âges, aux intérêts et aux goûts divers, et qui offre une répartition équitable de toute la gamme de la programmation.

M. Dinsdale: L'emploi de l'expression Hyde-Park est peut-être mal choisie. Les gens de Hyde-Park sont souvent considérés comme étant un peu fous.

Le président: Pas seulement des fous.

M. Dinsdale: Enfin...

M. Davidson: C'est une sorte de Société Radio-Canada. Je n'ai pas inventé l'histoire de toutes pièces mais j'en ai entendu parler de temps en temps.

M. Dinsdale: Laissez-moi préciser le problème de l'écart entre les générations. Il y a eu à Ottawa dernièrement une réunion du comité des citoyens sur l'enfance. On a rapporté que monsieur Claude Caron, directeur de la programmation pour les jeunes, à Mont-

...Father of two children under 12, Mr. Caron said he, like other supervisors, can't do anything about this.

"But I think you can," he told the parents. "If you feel things, you should yell them."

Obviously the public is yelling in very loud terms today.

Dr. Davidson: Are they?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, there was quite a response from the public over this general problem.

The other day Dr. Davidson indicated that CBC is being tied to the commercial aspects of broadcasting, particularly in the evening hours, which does not necessarily conform to the policy laid down by the Act which says we promote Canadianism and national unity. This subject has been under discussion in the United States since the assassination of Robert Kennedy and Martin Luther King and so forth. There has been an assessment of the quality of the programs that have the highest ratings from the standpoint of entertainment value and they have been listed in The Christian Science Monitor as the following: Felony Squad, Daniel Boone, Mission: Impossible, Big Valley, Star Trek, Gunsmoke, Mod Squad, Guns of Will Sonnett, Name of the Game, and N.Y.P.D., whatever that is.

How many of these programs is the CBC carrying?

Mr. Davidson: Three: Name of the Game, Mission: Impossible, and, locally only, Felony Squad.

Mr. Dinsdale: Does the CBC carry "The Avengers"?

Dr. Davidson: No. Do you want to know who does? It is carried on the French network.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is an amazing phenomenon. I do not want to draw any conclusions from it but these are all the top-rated programs and they are all saturated with violence. Interesting enough "Bonanza" comes under the rather critical scrutiny of the FCC which has been investigating the problem of the impact that the mass media, television in particular, are making on the younger generation.

[Interprétation]

réel, a dit pour le réseau français, qu'étant donné que le budget de la Société Radio-Canada dépendait de plus en plus des annonces publicitaires, la qualité diminuera de plus en plus. Monsieur Caron est père de deux enfants de moins de 12 ans et, tout comme d'autres directeurs, il ne peut rien faire à ce sujet. Il a dit aux parents «Vous pouvez faire quelque chose. Si vous sentez quelque chose, vous devriez le crier». Il est évident que la population proteste en termes très forts aujourd'hui.

M. Davidson: Le fait-elle?

M. Dinsdale: Oui, c'est certain. La population s'inquiète beaucoup de ce problème.

L'autre jour, le Dr Davidson a dit que la société Radio-Canada était liée par l'aspect commercial de la radiodiffusion, surtout le soir, ce qui n'est pas nécessairement conforme à la politique établie par la Loi de la radiodiffusion, qui vise à promouvoir l'unité nationale. Cette question a fait l'objet de discussions aux États-Unis depuis l'assassinat de Robert Kennedy et de Martin Luther King. On a tenté d'évaluer la qualité des émissions qui avaient le taux d'écoute le plus élevé et voici la liste publiée par «The Christian Science Monitor»: Felony Squad, Daniel Boone, Mission Impossible, Big Valley, Star Trek, Gunsmoke, Mod Squad, Guns of Will Sonnett, Name of the Game et N.Y.P.D. si quelqu'un sait ce que c'est.

Combien de ces programmes sont diffusés par la Société Radio-Canada?

M. Davidson: Trois: «Name of the Game», «Mission Impossible» et localement «Felony Squad».

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que Radio-Canada diffuse «The Avengers» (les Incorruptibles)?

M. Davidson: Non. Du moins pas sur le réseau anglais. Cette émission est diffusée sur le réseau français.

M. Dinsdale: Je ne veux pas tirer de conclusion de cela, mais il s'agit des programmes les plus écoutés et ce sont tous des programmes où la violence abonde. Il est assez intéressant de noter que «Bonanza» a été plutôt critiqué par la FCC qui a étudié le problème des répercussions qu'ont les moyens de communications, et notamment la télévision, sur la jeune génération.

[Text]

Coming back to the comments of Mr. Caron, he pointed out to the Citizens' Committee on Children's Programming that the only way you can really make public opinion or parental opinion felt is through direct protest on the part of the parents. He used the phrase "if you yell loud enough". Is this true, or is there not some internal control of the quality of programs?

Dr. Davidson: This is not correct. Mr. Caron is indulging in the privilege of all Hyde Park orators who get up on a soap box in public to express their views. Frankly I was surprised to read this because this viewpoint has never been expressed in my presence within the Corporation. But there certainly is no truth in the suggestion that the management of the Corporation is not quite open to receive representations either from parents or from within the Corporation. If those responsible for the children's programming on the two networks feel as they do, they are perfectly free, without any embarrassment to themselves, to express themselves forcibly within the Corporation and, of course, to accept ultimately the decision of the management of the Corporation as to the adjustments, if any, that are made in the program.

Mr. Osler: With Mr. Dinsdale's permission may I ask a question to clarify this? Are we talking here so much about the content? I was on the board of the CBC—it bothers one and so on. Are we talking so much about the content as the graphic way in which some of these particular shows are produced? If we are talking about the content, it becomes very difficult because The Boys' Own Annual took the place of what the children are now looking at on TV and it was fairly gory. The old testament is about as gory a thing as you can get and there are a lot of people who have been brought up on it.

• 1145

I think what we are talking about may be something far more difficult, which is the way in which the modern producer deals with violence, which may be a much more valid point, and the same applies in the movies.

The Chairman: This is a point that Mr. Dinsdale has not made quite clear, as to whether he is dealing with content or production values. Perhaps that is a question that Mr. Dinsdale might answer.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am dealing with program content, as I indicated.

[Interpretation]

Pour en revenir aux remarques de M. Caron, il a dit au Comité des citoyens sur les programmes pour enfants que la seule façon de faire sentir le poids de l'opinion publique ou des parents, c'est de protester. Il a dit «Si vous criez assez fort». Est-ce que c'est exact? N'y a-t-il pas un contrôle interne de la qualité des programmes?

M. Davidson: Ceci n'est pas juste. M. Caron s'arroge le droit des orateurs de Hyde Park qui montent sur leur boîte à savon et expriment leur point de vue à l'assistance. J'ai été quelque peu étonné de lire ce point de vue car il n'a jamais été exposé en ma présence au sein de la Société Radio-Canada. Cette suggestion que la direction de la Société Radio-Canada n'est pas prête à accepter des représentations des parents ou des personnes qui travaillent à la Société n'est absolument pas vraie. Si ceux qui sont responsables des programmes pour enfants sur les deux réseaux désirent faire des recommandations, ils sont absolument libres de le faire; ils peuvent, sans se mettre dans une situation délicate, exprimer leur point de vue. Bien entendu, ils devront accepter ensuite les décisions de la direction de la Société en ce qui concerne les modifications apportées au programme.

M. Osler: Pourrais-je, avec la permission de M. Dinsdale, poser une autre question? Est-ce que nous parlons ici du contenu? Par-lons-nous du contenu ou de la façon dont le programme est réalisé? Si nous parlons du contenu, cela devient très difficile, parce que «The Boys' Own Annual» a remplacé ce que les enfants regardaient à la télévision et c'était plutôt violent. L'ancien testament est une histoire à peu près aussi violente et beaucoup ont été élevés selon ses principes.

Je crois que nous parlons d'une question qui est encore beaucoup plus délicate et c'est la façon dont les auteurs modernes présentent la violence.

Le président: C'est quelque chose que M. Dinsdale n'a pas exposé très clairement. C'est peut-être une question à laquelle M. Dinsdale pourrait répondre.

M. Dinsdale: Comme je l'ai indiqué, je parle du contenu du programme.

[Texte]

The Chairman: You are dealing with violence per se and not the presentations of violence?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am dealing with content and the criteria whereby those responsible at the managerial level for determining content evaluate the type of program which carries out the broad terms of reference of the Broadcasting Act, that is promoting national unity, discussion and so forth, and generally presenting a communications service with educational overtones to the people of Canada.

This is a problem in the United States as well as in Canada. It is a problem of the private network, as you intimated, as well as of the CBC. Is it true that CBC is geared in its programming to the demands of commercialism? If this is so, then you are a prisoner of criteria that are at odds with those laid down in the Broadcasting Act—if, in order to compete in the mass media at this stage, you have to consider the programs that will have the greatest response in terms of the commercial dollar.

Dr. Davidson: May I point out Mr. Dinsdale, that in the Broadcasting Act where our mandate is laid down there is no reference to a requirement of the Corporation to obtain commercial revenues. I have made it quite clear in my discussions within the Corporation that in so far as commercial policy of the Corporation is concerned, it is subordinate to the mandate of the Corporation as laid down in the Broadcasting Act. Therefore, corporate policy in respect of commercial advertising must be subordinated to the corporate policy laid down by Parliament in terms of programming. That is the basic position on which we have to start operating.

Having said that, it is also true that successive commissions of inquiry and committees of inquiry, most of which begin with the name Fowler, have stressed very heavily the importance of the Corporation's being aggressive in the field of commercial revenue acquisition. We have been criticized by the Fowler Commission, the first Fowler Commission—I think the second one is called the Fowler Committee—for not having been aggressive enough. It has been suggested, in fact, that we should set as an objective of corporate policy a constant percentage of the total advertising dollar devoted to the broadcasting media. This I instance as evidence of how far we have been pushed by certain commissions and committees of inquiry and also by government positions and by parliamentary attitudes, to relying considerably on our ability to obtain commercial revenues for the pur-

[Interprétation]

Le président: C'est la violence en soi dont vous parlez, non pas de la présentation de la violence.

M. Dinsdale: Je parle du contenu des programmes et des critères selon lesquels ceux qui sont responsables de la question ont à évaluer le contenu des programmes. Ces programmes qui ont pour but de favoriser l'unité nationale, la discussion des questions à controverse, et d'assurer un service de communication éducatif à l'intention de la population canadienne. C'est un problème qui se pose aux États-Unis autant qu'au Canada. C'est un problème pour les réseaux privés aussi bien que pour la Société Radio-Canada. Est-il vrai que Radio-Canada doit satisfaire à des impératifs commerciaux? S'il en est ainsi, vous êtes prisonnier de critères qui sont opposés aux objectifs de la Loi sur la radiodiffusion, en ce sens que si vous voulez concurrencer les autres réseaux, vous devez tenir compte du volume d'auditeurs afin de satisfaire le point de vue commercial.

M. Davidson: Monsieur Dinsdale, je tiens à dire que dans la Loi sur la radiodiffusion où notre mandat est exposé, on ne parle pas des revenus commerciaux que doit obtenir la Société. Et j'ai dit bien clairement au sein de la Société qu'en ce qui concerne la politique commerciale de Radio-Canada, ces intérêts doivent être en accord avec le mandat de la Société Radio-Canada, tel qu'il est défini dans la Loi sur la radiodiffusion. En conséquence, la politique concernant la publicité doit être conforme au règlement émis par le gouvernement du Canada. C'est la politique de base.

Ceci dit toutefois, il est également vrai que plusieurs comités d'enquêtes contenant généralement le nom Fowler, ont souligné l'importance pour la Société des revenus commerciaux. La première Commission Fowler nous a critiqués parce que nous n'étions pas assez agressifs. On a même dit que nous devrions nous fixer comme objectifs, l'attribution de certains revenus commerciaux. Ceci vous montre à quel point ces commissions et comités d'enquête, certaines attitudes parlementaires et certaines positions du gouvernement nous ont obligés à tirer une partie de nos revenus du secteur commercial ceci, comme je l'ai mentionné la dernière fois, jusqu'à concurrence d'un cinquième de notre budget. Cette somme ne serait pas tellement difficile à obtenir, si elle pouvait provenir de tous les secteurs de la radio et de la télévision.

pose of financing our total operations—to the point where, as I said in the last Committee meeting, approximately one dollar out of five in our gross budget comes to us by way of commercial revenues. Now if this one dollar out of five could be spread over the entire complex of CBC operations, both radio and television, over all hours of the day, one dollar in five might not present any very serious burden or problem to us so far as its effect on programming is concerned.

But the fact is that nearly all of the $40 million gross that we earn by way of commercial revenues has to be earned on television in the prime time period: that is the period between six o'clock at night and eleven o'clock at night. When you take account of the fact that certain programs in that prime time period, such as the news at 6.30 p.m. and any public affairs program during that period, are by corporate policy exempt from commercial advertising, you find yourself getting down into narrower and narrower corridor and eventually you arrive at a position where you have to rely upon light entertainment programming, and essentially American entertainment programming in order to achieve the commercial revenue requirement.

Mr. Dinsdale: And your problem is going to be aggravated with the advent of ETV, because ETV, which is apparently going to be separate from the CBC, will move into this educational area—promotion of Canadianism, and so forth—which was the original function of the CBC.

I know we cannot come to any conclusions, but my point is that CBC is moving into the entertainment field and away from the original functions and role that were laid down for it when it became a public corporation for broadcasting purposes. With the changing circumstances CBC is going to become less important.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, if you have looked at the Bill you will have noticed that the criteria for the new educational television agency are very strict. There will be no general broadcasting, per se, using the euphemism "adult education". It will have to be done for specific purposes, for courses; there must be a way of checking progress; and the new system will not go into the general broadcasting field as was suggested when the Broadcasting Committee was holding hearings on the matter of educational television.

Mais en fait, la quasi totalité de cette somme de $40 millions que nous obtenons doit être recueillie pendant les heures d'écoute maximum à la télévision, à savoir entre six heures et onze heures du soir. Lors que vous considérez qu'il faut inclure dans cette période, les nouvelles à 6 h. 30 et les émissions d'affaires publiques, qui, suivant la Loi ne doivent pas être patronnées, vous voyez que le corridor devient de plus en plus étroit et finalement, vous vous trouvez dans une position telle que vous devez vous en remettre aux émissions de variétés et aux programmes essentiellement américains pour assurer vos revenus de publicité.

M. Dinsdale: Et la situation ne fera qu'empirer avec l'arrivée de la télévision éducative qui, distincte de Radio-Canada, entrera dans ce domaine qui était le but original de Radio-Canada.

Il est impossible de tirer des conclusions, mais je crois que Radio-Canada se dirige de plus en plus vers le domaine du divertissement tout en s'éloignant du rôle qui lui avait d'abord été confié. Ainsi Radio-Canada deviendra moins importante.

Le président: Les critères qui s'appliquent à la nouvelle agence de télévision sont très sévères. Il y aura des programmes orientés des fins précises. Il faudra pouvoir vérifier le progrès accomplis. Ce nouveau système ne s'engagera pas dans le domaine de la radiodiffusion comme on l'avait laissé entendre lorsque le Comité de la radiodiffusion a étudié ce problème de la télévision éducative.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, on a point of information. We were talking about good taste in programming, and I wanted to ask a supplementary on that.

The Chairman: No; we are not dealing with good taste in programming.

Mr. Perrault: We are talking about violence and good taste, and I have a supplementary.

The Chairman: I have you on the list. You can follow that up after Mr. Dinsdale has finished.

Mr. Dinsdale: My suggestion is that the whole concept of public broadcasting is changing because of changing circumstances.

Dr. Davidson: I think you are quite correct in suggesting that the removal of all school broadcasting from CBC programs would affect our program schedules. I use the expression "school broadcasting" rather than "educational television" to make it clear that what I am talking about is the broadcasting of programs into the classroom. It is a much more limited term than "educational television".

That would certainly force some adjustment of our program schedule, because it would open up periods of time, especially in the morning and early afternoon, that are now dedicated to school broadcasting.

I would not go so far to say that that would affect our basic mandate, Mr. Dinsdale, because the basic mandate of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has never been one that relied heavily on school broadcasting. Rather it has been the purpose of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to provide a balanced fare of programming, as the Broadcasting Act still requires it to do. And I would not think that in terms of the total range of broadcast materials, or subjects—music, drama, public affairs, sports, religious broadcasting, and so on—a decision to remove school broadcasting, as such, from the responsibilities of the Corporation would have any major effect on the total program responsibilities of the Corporation.

• 1155

Mr. Dinsdale: We have yet to debate ETV and decide what the character of the service will be, but we are moving into a period when education will be regarded as a continuous process and leisure time and all that sort of thing will, I think, require a much broader definition of ETV broadcasting than we are discussing here; but that is something that we cannot come to any conclusions about.

[Interprétation]

M. Perrault: Nous avons parlé de bon goût dans les émissions. J'aimerais poser une question supplémentaire sur ce sujet.

Le président: Nous ne parlons pas présentement de cet aspect.

M. Perrault: Nous parlons de violence et de bon goût et j'aimerais poser une question.

Le président: J'ai déjà inscrit votre nom. Vous pourrez poser votre question lorsque monsieur Dinsdale aura terminé.

M. Dinsdale: Tout ce concept de la radiodiffusion publique se transforme à cause des circonstances.

M. Davidson: Oui, vous avez raison de dire que si la télévision scolaire devait être enlevée de la Société Radio-Canada, ceci modifierait nos horaires. Je parle de la télévision scolaire par opposition à la télévision éducative, car je parle, en l'occurrence, de la diffusion d'émissions qui sont présentées dans les écoles. Ceci va nous forcer à modifier nos horaires, car ceci va nous permettre de disposer de certaines périodes qui sont consacrées à l'heure actuelle à la télévision scolaire.

Je ne crois pas que ceci affecte notre mandat, car le mandat de la Société Radio-Canada n'a jamais été de présenter surtout des émissions destinées aux écoles. Nous devons présenter une programmation équilibrée. Et je ne crois pas que, dans le cadre de l'ensemble de la radiodiffusion, émissions musicales, dramatiques, de divertissement, une décision d'enlever à la Société la télédiffusion scolaire aurait un effet majeur sur l'ensemble des responsabilités de la Société.

M. Dinsdale: Il faut encore discuter de la télévision éducative et déterminer quelle sera la nature des services offerts. Mais nous nous acheminons vers une époque où l'éducation sera considérée comme un processus continu. Je crois qu'il faudra en venir à une nouvelle définition de la télévision éducative différente de celle que nous discutons présentement. Mais nous ne pouvons en arriver à des conclusions à ce sujet.

[Text]

Dr. Davidson: I agree with you that if Parliament's ultimate decision on the education and television agency is that more and more types of broadcasting are moved over from the area of responsibility of the CBC to the area of responsibility of the provinces to program on to this new facility, this would raise increasingly the question of whether we are operating two rival networks, both supported from public funds, or just what the relative distinctions are to be between these two broadcasting entities.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have one final question. It was suggested, Mr. Chairman, that it might be helpful if at some time we could hear from people in the CBC who are directly associated with programming in the day-to-day operation, such as Mr. Claude Caron, for example, who has made statements before the Citizens' Committee on Children. We tend to make vague charges here, which receive publicity, but we never come to the real root of the matter because we have not before us the people...

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, we have the vice-presidents of the networks here and...

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes; at the managerial level, but not at the operational level.

The Chairman: I believe they are in charge of operations.

Mr. Dinsdale: When I say operational...

The Chairman: This is the managerial level here, and the operational level is over there.

Mr. Perrault: They are in opposition, are they, all the time?

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, the president, the executive vice-president and the vice-presidents of the Corporation are those who are responsible to Parliament—they are answerable. We are answerable for what our employees do. It seems to me, with great respect, that we are the ones who must take the responsibility before parliamentary committees and before Parliament.

Mr. Mongrain: Perhaps Mr. Dinsdale would allow a short supplementary. It may appear hypothetical, but I will cite you an actual case.

You establish policies. I will come back to my pet CBC man, Mr. Marc Thibault, who, four years ago, tabled a report which made absolutely obvious that he was in complete disagreement with the president of CBC.

[Interpretation]

M. Davidson: Si le gouvernement décide que des aspects de plus en plus nombreux de la diffusion doivent passer de Radio-Canada aux provinces dans ce domaine de l'éducation, il est évident que la question se posera à savoir si les deniers publics financent deux réseaux concurrents ou, tout au moins, quelles doivent être les distinctions entre ces deux services.

M. Dinsdale: Il a déjà été dit, monsieur le président, qu'il serait peut-être utile d'entendre ce qu'ont à dire ces personnes qui sont associées de très près à la programmation, monsieur Claude Caron, par exemple, qui a fait une déclaration devant le Citizens' Committee on Children. Nous pouvons lancer de vagues accusations mais il me semble que nous n'arrivons jamais jusqu'au cœur du problème parce que n'apparaissent pas devant nous ces personnes qui...

Le président: Monsieur Dinsdale, nous avons avec nous les vice-présidents des réseaux.

M. Dinsdale: Au niveau de la direction, oui, mais pas au niveau des opérations.

Le président: Je crois que ces personnes sont responsables des opérations.

M. Dinsdale: Lorsque je parle d'opérations...

Le président: Voici ceux qui sont au niveau de la direction et ceux qui sont au niveau des opérations.

M. Perrault: Ils sont toujours opposés les uns aux autres?

M. Davidson: Le président, les vice-présidents et le vice-président exécutif sont responsables devant le Parlement. Nous répondons de ce que font nos employés. Il me semble qu'il nous appartient, à nous, de prendre ces responsabilités devant les comités parlementaires et le Parlement.

M. Mongrain: Me permettrait-on de poser une question supplémentaire? Tout ceci peut paraître hypothétique, mais il s'agit d'un fait vécu.

Vous établissez les politiques. Je reviens à mon sujet favori, monsieur Marc Thibault qui, il y a quatre ans, a soumis un rapport qui prouvait hors de tout doute qu'il était en désaccord complet avec le président de la

When it was all over he said: "I think I have the feeling I should resign", but he was told, "No, do not resign".

Suppose that happens under your administration. What would you do? You told us a few minutes ago that you were going to establish a new policy. Suppose such a case arises.

Dr. Davidson: When it happens I will give you an answer to the question. I am not going to answer hypothetical questions of that kind.

Mr. Mongrain: It is not as hypothetical as it seems, because it did happen.

Dr. Davidson: I have read the testimony of Mr. Thibeault. Unless I am badly mistaken he said that he had considered whether or not he should resign but had decided he should not.

The Chairman: I think we had better move on. We have only an hour left and I will give the floor to Mr. Givens, who has the next major question. He will be followed by Mr. Perrault and then Mr. Osler, on a major.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise the subject...

The Chairman: Is it a new subject?

Mr. Givens: ...of programming. It is just programming. I am learning fast, Mr. Chairman. I may not be able to raise it at any other time, and the CBC officials are here.

● 1200

It is something that has been bothering me since September when we convened Parliament. Perhaps some of you can offer me some comfort in what is disturbing me about the function of Parliament and TV and radio programming.

As are all members of the House, I am always in the House for question period. This is when the sparks are struck and you hear the thrust-and-parry, such as it is in the House of Commons, take place. A Bill will be tabled, or a motion will be moved, or a statement will be made, with a few words, and that is the end of it. After the question period is over and the House literally flushes out—the PM, the cabinet ministers, the parties, the clerks, the media and everybody—like a washbasin with its plug pulled, then the theatre hour takes place in the lobby outside the House of Commons, where the "stars" of the House—members of the Cabinet, the Prime Minister and the leading members of the other parties—begin to perform before the Kleig lights.

Société. La crise passée, il a déclaré: «Je crois que je devrais démissionner». On lui a dit: «Ne fais pas cela».

Si un tel cas se produisait sous votre administration, que feriez-vous?

M. Davidson: Quand la chose arrivera, je vous donnerai ma réponse. Je ne veux pas répondre à une question aussi académique que celle-là.

M. Mongrain: Le cas n'est pas aussi hypothétique qu'il en a l'air. Il s'est produit.

M. Davidson: J'ai lu le témoignage de M. Thibault. Il a dit qu'il s'était demandé s'il devait donner sa démission et il a décidé de ne pas la donner.

Le président: Je crois que nous devrions aller de l'avant. Nous n'avons plus qu'une heure à notre disposition. La parole est à monsieur Givens. Il sera suivi de messieurs Perrault et Osler.

M. Givens: J'aimerais parler de...

Le président: Est-ce un nouveau sujet?

M. Givens: ...la programmation. Je ne pourrai peut-être pas soulever cette question à un autre moment. Les dirigeants de Radio-Canada sont ici, aujourd'hui. Cette question me tracasse depuis septembre. Certains d'entre vous pourront peut-être m'éclairer.

Comme tous les députés, je suis en Chambre au moment de la période des questions. C'est à ce moment-là que tout se passe. Un bill est déposé, une motion présentée, une déclaration faite. Quelques mots, puis tout est fini. Après la période des questions, la Chambre des communes se vide de tout. Puis la représentation théâtrale débute dans les couloirs alors que les étoiles de la Chambre, le premier ministre, les ministres, et les porte-parole des autres partis commencent à démontrer leur savoir-faire sous les projecteurs.

[Text]

Then we go on to our hotel rooms at 6:30 p.m. or 11:00 p.m. and see a performance which is entirely different from the one we saw in the House.

Sometimes it seems to me that we are perpetrating a sort of gigantic hoax on the people of Canada, because they seem to believe—and I have gleaned this from discussions they have had with me—that what they are seeing on the news is a repetition, or a capsule, or a copy, of the events that took place in the House of Commons that day. Quite often there is no relationship between what happens in that theatre hour out in the lobby and what happened in the House.

In other words, what I am saying is simply that the television news often does not seem to be an objective report of what has gone on in the House at all. And I feel, and this is what disturbs me, that within a year or two Parliament will become a complete anachronism, and that it is rapidly losing its relevance. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no answers. I do not know what the answer is, whether the answer should be that the TV cameras and the radio boys should be able to plug in their jacks in the House of Commons and get excerpts of what is said there and that should be broadcast, or whether the rules of Parliament should be changed to encompass the fact that the media today are fulfilling a function which the Fathers of Confederation could never have foreseen.

I find for instance that the newspapers seem to fulfill a more objective function in reporting the news of what goes on in the House than the TV and radio in this respect. And your television commentators, people like Mr. Collister and others, are the ones who are performing the real functions that elected parliamentary representatives should perform.

Mr. Chairman, with the greatest respect, I am not making these remarks for other than the most serious of reasons, and this is something that has bothered me greatly. I feel that I might just as well tune in at 6.30 and 11 o'clock at night and listen to the radio broadcast from hour to hour rather than attend in the House for all that I get out of it.

The Chairman shakes his head, but that is so. It is a very pathetic and serious thing. I think the media have come to the point today that they cannot just be considered as private separate entities, but they are performing a function of Parliament. Somehow this function has to be integrated in a realistic way so that when we play these events in the lobby,

[Interpretation]

Nous, nous nous retirons dans nos chambres d'hôtel à 18 heures 30 ou 23 heures et assistons alors à une représentation complètement différente de celle que nous avons pu voir en Chambre.

Il me semble que c'est toute une fumisterie que nous montons. Parce que le public croit que ce qu'il voit aux nouvelles est une répétition, en résumé, de ce qui s'est passé à la Chambre des communes ce jour-là, et, bien souvent, il n'y a aucun rapport entre ce qui s'est passé dans le couloir et ce qui se passe à la Chambre des communes.

Ce que je veux dire, c'est que les nouvelles à la télévision ne sont pas un rapport objectif de ce qui s'est passé à la Chambre des communes bien souvent. Et ce qui m'inquiète dans tout cela, c'est que, dans un an ou deux, le Parlement sera devenu tout à fait désuet. Il perd rapidement sa pertinence. Monsieur le président, je n'ai pas de réponse à vous offrir. Je n'ai pas de réponse. Je ne sais pas si la réponse est d'avoir les gens de la TV et de la radio se brancher directement à la Chambre et ainsi obtenir des extraits de ce qui est dit et de les publier directement ou bien si les règlements de la Chambre doivent être changés pour tenir compte du fait que les moyens d'expression, aujourd'hui, remplissent un rôle qu'on n'aurait jamais pu prévoir lors de la Confédération.

Je trouve, par exemple, que les journaux jouent un rôle beaucoup plus objectif à cet égard. Et les documentaires à la télévision, des gens tels que Collister et d'autres, sont ceux qui remplissent, en réalité, les fonctions d'un député élu.

Monsieur le président, mes commentaires sont très sérieux, ce sont des choses qui m'inquiètent beaucoup, et je crois qu'il serait aussi utile pour moi d'écouter la télévision à 6 h 30 et à 11 heures et d'écouter la radio à toutes les heures que d'assister moi-même à la Chambre.

Le président hoche la tête, et si la chose est valable, c'est une erreur grave. Alors je crois que les moyens d'expression ne doivent plus être considérés comme des entités privées, distinctes, mais ils jouent un rôle très important dans le gouvernement. Alors comment y a-t-il toutes ces manifestations dans le hall? Les gens ne doivent pas penser que c'est là la the people of Canada are not going to feel that this is what happened in the House of Commons that day, because it is not.

I know I will repeat myself again and say that it is something that I consider very serious and I hope that you can give me an answer.

1205

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Givens, first of all I think it is an unfair question to put to Mr. Davidson. The burden of that question should really be put to the House of Commons. It is the House of Commons that sets the rules under which the various aspects of the news media operate.

Mr. Givens: Well, I think that Mr. Davidson, from a technical standpoint, can submit suggestions as to the feasibility, the desirability, and the practicability, from his standpoint, of what we can do in order to alter the rules of the House to bring about the state of affairs that I have been suggesting.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, there is no question in my mind that there should be televising and radio broadcasting of full proceedings, or as much as radio and television wish to use. But I think the point that Mr. Givens is making, which is a valid one for the consideration of Dr. Davidson, is that television and radio news tends to concentrate on questions raised in the question period rather than on the substance of what Parliament is doing. Maybe it is because that is the opportunity to catch people for comments, and maybe it is more a matter of convenience than anything else that forces that kind of programming. But I think he has a very real point there, that the CBC might take a look at. You would not want your news of Parliament to be distorted by an unconscious concentration on isolated questions which happen to be controversial during the question period, to the exclusion of what is actually going on in Parliament.

Mr. Davidson: Would you agree, Mr. Givens and Mr. Stanbury, that the criticism you are voicing is more applicable to the television side of the House than the radio news reporting side?

Mr. Givens: Well, both. But I would say television more, because of personalities, and it is visual and there is that impact. You take one minute out of fifteen for national events, and the impact is tremendous. There is a huge gain that we discussed the last time, namely what is spectacular, what stands out in the mind of the public.

[Interprétation]

Chambre des communes parce que ce n'est pas le cas.

Je me répète ici. Je réitère que c'est une chose très grave. J'espère que vous pouvez me donner une réponse.

Le président: Monsieur Givens, tout d'abord, je crois que la question est une question injuste à poser à M. Davidson. C'est une chose qu'on pourrait peut-être soulever à la Chambre des communes parce que c'est la Chambre des communes qui fait le règlement qui influe sur les journalistes.

M. Givens: Mais je crois que M. Davidson, justement, du point de vue technique, peut nous offrir des suggestions sur la possibilité, les avantages et la praticabilité, à son point de vue, de ce que nous pouvons faire pour changer le règlement de la Chambre pour amener les résultats que j'ai suggérés.

M. Stanbury: Monsieur le président, à mon avis, je crois que toute la procédure à la Chambre doit être télévisée et radiodiffusée ou autant que la radio et la télévision veulent le faire. Mais la question soulevée par M. Givens, qui est valable, à mon avis, valable pour le Dr. Davidson, est que les nouvelles à la télévision et à la radio se concentrent sur les questions soulevées lors de la période des questions plutôt que la substance de ce qui se passe au Parlement. C'est peut-être parce que c'est l'occasion où on peut prendre, où on peut coincer les gens. C'est peut-être une question de convenance, mais je crois qu'il a raison de soulever cette question, et que Radio-Canada pourrait peut-être mettre cette question à l'étude. On ne veut pas que les nouvelles du Parlement soient traduites d'une façon erronée par une concentration sur les questions posées à l'heure des questions.

M. Davidson: Êtes-vous d'accord, monsieur Givens et monsieur Stanbury que les critiques que vous nous faites s'appliquent plus au côté télévision qu'au côté radio?

M. Givens: Aux deux. Je crois que surtout à la télévision parce que c'est là qu'il y a des personnalités visuelles. Il y a cet impact, cette répercussion. Le spectacle, ce qui ressort en public, c'est ce qui vraiment influe sur le public.

[Text]

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, are there not two things we are saying here? It seems to me that it is only the government people who have been making this observation, and it struck me that the question period by its very nature is the time when the Opposition shines, or at least has a chance to shine.

The Chairman: That is much better.

Mr. Osler: It therefore, I think, is annoying to people who are trying to work along a progression of legislation to find that the highlights are all on the protest side rather than on what we appear to think to be the constructive side. That is the problem. I think it is really technical more than anything else. It is allocation of time by the news people. But I think it is a very annoying thing, as Mr. Givens says, to feel that just because a particular line of questions happens to develop in the House that day, that this is given more attention than perhaps it should when later on in the afternoon the real rather humdrum work is being done on something constructive that is going to have some lasting meaning to the country one way or the other. That is one side of the question that I would like you people to think about.

The other side of it seems to me to be that again your man in Ottawa is a commentator. That is his profession, so he comments. And quite often the way he introduces and wraps up a question—I am not talking about Mr. Collister; I am talking about all commentators—can be very editorialized. The same thing happens perhaps in the newspapers, but it does not happen with the same impact. Are there not really two questions there?

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I recognize all the problems, and all the shades of all the problems. But what are the solutions? Is it suggested, for example, that we should just go on with a dead-pan news presentation and rule out the commentators, and do away with the setting-up of television cameras outside the House of Commons? Would this be providing a better service to the Canadian public because we tell them less about what is going on?

Mr. Osler: No, but perhaps the commentators could do more homework on the day-to-day affairs of the House and less on the momentary sensations, and therefore try to achieve a balance without making the news dull because no one is going to watch it if it is dull.

Mr. Perrault: But surely the solution lies with Parliament itself. If we are willing to allow TV cameras and tape recorders in the

[Interpretation]

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, les gens qui ont fait ce commentaire devraient penser que la période des questions est le moment où l'Opposition peut briller un peu.

Le président: C'est beaucoup mieux.

M. Osler: Et cela est difficile pour les gens qui veulent faire les lois de voir que c'est toujours le côté de l'Opposition qui est mis en lumière. Je crois que ce qui importe ici c'est l'allocation du temps. C'est une question de technique. Je sais que c'est fâcheux, comme l'a dit M. Givens, de voir que certaines questions qui sont posées à la Chambre reçoivent plus d'attention que le travail constructif mais plus ou moins brillant qui se fait plus tard à la Chambre, au cours de l'après-midi.

Un autre aspect de la question est celui-ci: votre représentant à Ottawa est un commentateur de sa profession. Alors sa façon de présenter une question, et je ne parle pas de Collister, je parle de tous les commentateurs, leur façon de présenter une question peut interpréter la nouvelle, peut être plus ou moins objective. Est-ce qu'il n'y a pas deux questions distinctes ici?

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, je connais tous les problèmes et toutes les nuances des problèmes. Mais quelles sont les solutions? Avez-vous proposé qu'il faut présenter les nouvelles d'une façon tout à fait anodine et ne pas installer des caméras à l'extérieur de la Chambre des communes? Fournirait-on un meilleur service au public canadien parce que nous leur moins de ce qui se passe?

M. Osler: Les commentateurs pourraient peut-être se documenter sur le travail réel qui se fait à la Chambre plutôt que de s'attacher au sensationnalisme, et ainsi essayer à trouver un juste milieu sans rendre les nouvelles ennuyeuses parce que personne ne les regardera si elles sont ennuyeuses.

M. Perrault: Si nous consentons à ce que les caméras, la télévision et les magnétophones soient admis à la Chambre des commu-

House, then the news media would be given an opportunity to provide a more balanced presentation of the debate that continues in the afternoon.

Mr. Davidson: Did anybody see Mr. Nixon on the television news last night, from the Ontario Legislature?

Mr. Osler: It was horribly dull, and terribly expensive.

An hon. Member: It was deadly, and this is the problem.

Mr. Givens: Have you ever seen the news from Metro Council in Toronto on television? We have had some choice and breezy stuff from there.

The Chairman: This is a very interesting problem, but it is not a question dealing with the CBC. It is a general principle dealing with the rights of Parliament. I think perhaps it ought to be...

1210

Mr. Osler: I think it is dealing with the CBC. In one respect I think the commentators are slightly off base in that they spend too much of their mental energy on the question period and not enough on the general business, which is dull reading that they would have to do by themselves to prepare themselves for it.

The Chairman: It is very easy for them to do it that way.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I think it was Mr. Osler who made the comment that only the government members are participating in the debate and the Chairman, abandoning his high position of objectivity, intimated that the opposition were less than effective during the question period.

Some hon. Members: No, no, no.

Mr. Osler: What I meant was that you could be more pleased with what comes out of CBC or CTV because it is entirely based on the question period, at which time you people are supposed to shine.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to continue?

Mr. Perrault: I am not attacking you. I just think we are wasting too much time.

The Chairman: We only have one hour left.

[Interprétation]

nes, nous aurons certainement une présentation mieux équilibrée des débats qui se poursuivront dans l'après-midi.

M. Davidson: Est-ce que quelqu'un a vu M. Nixon au spectacle de la télévision de la législature ontarienne hier?

M. Osler: C'était très moche, et très dispendieux.

Une voix: C'était très ennuyeux, et c'est là le problème.

M. Givens: Avez-vous déjà vu les nouvelles du Conseil métropolitain de Toronto à la télévision? Nous avons eu de cette source des émissions choisies et vivantes.

Le président: C'est un problème très intéressant, mais la question ne concerne pas Radio-Canada. Elle a trait aux droits du Parlement et je crois peut-être...

M. Osler: Je crois que la question concerne Radio-Canada. Sous un rapport, je crois que les commentateurs ont tort parce qu'ils passent trop de leur temps et de leur énergie à reproduire la période des questions, et pas assez au travail général, qui est une lecture ennuyeuse qu'ils auraient à faire eux-mêmes pour s'y préparer.

Le président: C'est plus facile pour eux de le faire ainsi.

M. Dinsdale: Je crois que M. Osler a dit que seuls les membres du gouvernement participent aux débats et le Président a dit que l'Opposition n'était pas trop efficace à la période des questions.

Des voix: Non, non, non.

M. Osler: J'ai dit que vous seriez plus satisfaits de la diffusion par Radio-Canada ou par le réseau CTV de la période des questions parce que c'est à ce moment-là qu'on vous permet de briller.

Une voix: C'est vrai.

M. Dinsdale: Pourrais-je continuer?

M. Perrault: Je crois que nous perdons trop de temps.

Le président: Il ne nous reste qu'une heure.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would like to make some observations, if I may be allowed to. Please do not cut off a member in the middle of a sentence. Let him complete the sentence before you interject.

The Chairman: The way some members operate here you have to cut them off in the middle or you will never catch up to them.

Mr. Dinsdale: Just one moment, please. Now I was just going to make the observation that it has been the Opposition that has been urging televising and the direct broadcasting of the question period, and what opposition there has been has come from the government side of the House.

The Chairman: I might say that I have run into a great deal of opposition to even allowing tape recorders into this Committee, as well as television cameras. We have presented this to the various sides of the House and we were told in no uncertain terms that the time was not ripe and not to proceed with it.

Mr. Stanbury: From both sides of the House?

The Chairman: From both sides of the House.

Mr. Perrault is next.

Mr. Perrault: One of Canada's outstanding swimming champions comes from the north shore of British Columbia's lower mainland. I represented her family in the B.C. legislature for a number of years. The young lady's name is Elaine Tanner, a very fine young Canadian. A few weeks ago Miss Tanner was subjected to a totally improper and inappropriate line of personal questioning by Mr. Gordon Sinclair on "Front Page Challenge". The questions were not only embarrassing to Miss Tanner and the viewers, but I received a great many letters of protest from my constituents. They were not petitions or mimeographed sheets. I also understand that the Corporation received many letters of protest.

I would like to ask Dr. Davidson whether any controls are exercised over people like Mr. Sinclair who, by the Corporation's own admission, overstepped the bounds of good taste on at least this occasion, and was Mr. Sinclair cautioned or disciplined in any way for this obvious breach of good taste? I suggest that surely the Corporation should take action to prevent a repetition. I know the entire question of freedom and licence emerges in the area of broadcasting and it is very difficult at times, for the Corporation to

[Interpretation]

M. Dinsdale: S'il vous plaît, auriez-vous l'obligeance de ne pas couper la parole à un député au beau milieu de sa phrase.

Le président: A voir la façon dont certains membres agissent, il faut bien souvent les arrêter en pleine envolée, autrement on ne peut jamais les rattraper.

M. Dinsdale: Un instant. Je voulais tout simplement dire que c'est l'opposition qui recommande que la période de questions soit télévisée en direct, et que c'est le gouvernement qui s'y est opposé.

Le président: J'ai eu à faire face à beaucoup d'opposition, même pour une question aussi simple que l'admission des magnétophones, dans la salle des comités. Nous avons présenté ce projet aux divers partis de la Chambre et l'idée générale est que le moment est mal venu pour mettre ce projet en marche.

M. Stanbury: Des deux côtés de la Chambre?

Le président: Des deux côtés de la Chambre. Monsieur Perrault, la parole est à vous.

M. Perrault: Une des championnes de natation du Canada vient de ma circonscription, c'est mademoiselle Elaine Tanner. Il y a quelques semaines, elle a été interviewée sur des questions personnelles de la part de Gord Sinclair, lors du programme «Front Page Challenge». Les questions n'étaient pas seulement impertinentes, mais j'ai reçu des commentaires de mes commettants. Alors, j'aimerais demander au docteur Davidson, est-ce qu'on exerce des contrôles sur les gens comme M. Sinclair, qui, aux yeux même de la Société, a fait preuve de mauvais goût. Est-ce que M. Sinclair a été réprimandé? Lui a-t-on fait la remarque quant à son manque de goût? Je sais qu'il est difficile pour la Société de décider, si, oui ou non, elle doit intervenir, mais j'ai eu des critiques, des protestations sans précédent de ma circonscription, et j'ai pensé qu'il fallait mieux signaler la chose à votre attention.

[Texte]

decide whether they should intervene. But I had an unprecedented number of protests from the area, which is really my home area, and I felt that I should bring this to your attention.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I can say that we have received an unprecedented number of letters of criticism, strongly expressed, of what I regard as being the deplorable lapse in good taste that characterized Gordon Sinclair's questioning of Elaine Tanner on this occasion. There was no excuse for it, it was in thoroughly bad taste, it is thoroughly deplorable, and I find it most regrettable and embarrassing to me as President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of Canada to have to admit that that example of bad taste went out over the CBC's airways.

This matter has been a subject of discussion with Gordon Sinclair. He has been made very much aware of the views of management at headquarters as well as management at Toronto headquarters. The question of course is what are you going to do about this particular lapse in bad taste, and what are you going to do to prevent any future occurrences? I can only say that we have decided, after careful consideration, that we have to accept this as an embarrassing and humiliating black spot on our broadcast on that occasion and that we will do everything in our power through direction to the producer and director of the program to ensure that this does not occur again.

Mr. Perrault: I appreciate Dr. Davidson's remarks and I would like to ask a short supplementary.

The program was fed to the western network at a later hour than the program was shown in Toronto. Would it not have been possible for one of the producers in western Canada to have clipped that segment?

Dr. Davidson: There would be no means, Mr. Perrault, by which anyone in western Canada could have controlled that in the way you mentioned. What happens as you know, is that the program, if it is a live one—is held at the Calgary delay centre, fed back to Winnipeg an hour later, fed back to Saskatchewan and Alberta two hours later, and then fed into British Columbia three hours later. Anyone at the Calgary delay centre is purely a technical person and would have no control over program content. But it should have been possible to have taken steps to prevent that from ever going out over the air in Toronto or anywhere else. It is an equally

[Interprétation]

M. Davidson: Je dois dire que, nous aussi, nous avons reçu un courrier abondant commentant justement cette preuve de mauvais goût de la part de M. Sinclair lors de ces questions posées à mademoiselle Tanner. Je crois que c'est tout à fait déplorable. Je trouve ça très gênant pour moi-même d'avoir à admettre que cet exemple de mauvais goût a été diffusé sur les ondes de Radio-Canada.

On a certainement attiré l'attention de M. Sinclair sur les opinions de la direction de Toronto et de Radio-Canada en général. La question est celle-ci. Qu'est-ce qu'on va faire à propos de cette émission disgracieuse? Qu'est-ce qu'on peut faire à l'avenir pour que ce genre d'émission ne se reproduise pas? Je ne puis que dire que nous avons décidé, après avoir étudié la question en profondeur, qu'il faut accepter la situation comme une chose déplorable, une mauvaise note pour la société et nous allons faire tout pour que le réalisateur du programme ne laisse plus passer de tels programmes.

M. Perrault: Je remercie M. Davidson de son commentaire, mais je vais ajouter qu'on a fait passer le programme dans l'Ouest à une heure plus tardive. Est-ce qu'on aurait pas pu, par exemple, est-ce qu'il n'aurait pas été possible pour un réalisateur de l'Ouest de retrancher justement ce secteur du programme?

M. Davidson: Il n'y avait aucun moyen pour quelqu'un de l'Ouest de faire cette censure. Comme vous le savez, si c'est un programme en direct, il est retardé au centre de Calgary et ensuite trois heures plus tard, il est retransmis à Vancouver. A Calgary, ce sont des techniciens qui s'occupent de la transmission et ils ne peuvent pas toucher à la teneur du programme, mais on aurait pu vraiment empêcher que ce programme soit diffusé soit à Toronto ou ailleurs. C'est une faute de goût et je crois que c'est regrettable autant à Toronto que dans l'Ouest.

bad lapse in good manners and good taste to have an item of that kind broadcast in Ontario just as much as in British Columbia.

Mr. Perrault: Thank you very much.

Dr. Davidson: I deplore it, I regret the incident, I have made my views known through the Vice President, and anything that we can do to ensure that a lapse of this kind does not recur will certainly be done.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury.

Mr. Stanbury: Have you written a letter to Miss Tanner apologizing on behalf of the Corporation?

Dr. Davidson: No, I have not written a letter. I think this would be appropriate, quite frankly, and I will undertake to do it.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: I wish I could squeeze in two subjects here, because it seems to me that this very problem came up not more than a couple of years ago in connection with the same person on the same sort of thing. The trouble is that a man like that is a professional buffoon in a loose way, that is what he is paid to be, and occasionally he goes over the mark. Now how the dickens one can control this, I do not know, unless one can put producers more on the line.

The Chairman: Well it is the producers fault for allowing this to go on.

Mr. Osler: Yes. This is an area that I think I spoke to you about privately once before. I wonder why almost all producers cannot be on annual or two-year contracts. It seems to me that if they are non-staff and on contracts that you then would have an ultimate disciplinary wand that you might not have otherwise to wave. A producer has to have so much freedom in order to be a good producer, but you can only discipline him after the fact. It is very, very difficult with your producers' agreements and everything else to get rid of a producer. It seems to me that the question would be eliminated if once every two years his contract came up and you just said, "Well for reasons that we do not have to state in any way, we do not need you any more."

Dr. Davidson: The experience of the universities of Canada with professors who are not on tenure, our own experience with producers who are on contract, does not confirm your suggestion, Mr. Osler, that it is a simple matter, without giving any reason

[Interpretation]

M. Perrault: Merci beaucoup.

M. Davidson: Je déplore l'incident, j'ai exprimé mon opinion au vice-président et je crois qu'il faut faire tout ce que est en notre pouvoir pour empêcher qu'un tel incident se reproduise.

Le président: M. Stanbury.

M. Stanbury: Avez-vous écrit une lettre d'excuses à mademoiselle Tanner?

M. Davidson: Non, mais je crois que ce serait une bonne chose de le faire, et je vais le faire.

Le président: M. Osler.

M. Osler: J'aimerais pouvoir intercaler deux sujets ici, parce que ce même problème a été soulevé il y a deux ans au sujet de cette même personne. Il semble qu'un homme comme celui-là est un pur cabotin. C'est pour ça qu'il est payé et parfois il passe les bornes. Alors, comment peut-on y remédier?

Le président: C'est de la faute du réalisateur qui permet l'enregistrement d'une telle émission.

M. Osler: Je pense qu'il s'agit là d'un problème dont je vous ai déjà parlé. Je me demande pourquoi les réalisateurs ne sont pas engagés par contrat pour une période d'un ou deux ans, car s'ils étaient à contrat, on pourrait avoir un certain contrôle disciplinaire sur eux. Parce qu'un réalisateur doit avoir assez de liberté afin d'être un bon réalisateur, mais vous ne pouvez le discipliner qu'après coup. Je sais que c'est très difficile de se défaire d'un réalisateur. Alors à mon avis ce système réglerait la question, si à tous les deux ans on peut ou non renouveler le contrat du réalisateur.

M. Davidson: Je crois que l'expérience des Universités canadiennes, vis-à-vis de professeurs qui ne sont pas à demeure, de nos propres expériences avec les réalisateurs à contrat ne donne pas raison à vos suggestions, M. Osler. On ne peut pas dire tout simple-for non-renewal of a contract, to simply say to a producer, "For reasons we are not going to tell you about, we have just decided that we are not going to renew your contract." The "Seven Days" affair arose in respect of producers who were told that their contracts were not going to be renewed.

Mr. Osler: They were told improperly. The only reason that they were able to launch a fight was that management boobed in the way they told them.

Do you mean to tell me that CTV cannot fire a producer, or NBC cannot fire a producer? I suggest that if we have a clean-cut method of doing it, it would be less likely that Parliament would get into any hanky-panky when you do fire a producer.

Dr. Davidson: I am simply saying that the suggestion that it is easy to notify producers in contract that you are not going to renew the contract and have the matter rest there, is not as simple as that. There is less and less difference between the position of a producer who is employed on a payroll and a producer who is on contract with respect to the question of severing his connection with the corporation.

• 1220

Mr. Osler: It would not be easy because I am sure they would raise hell with our Committee and with Parliament. This is the natural route for them to take. But I am suggesting that you take another good hard look at it in the hope that it will at least be easier than in the present circumstances.

Dr. Davidson: Since talking to you privately I have looked at the question of whether we should move in the direction of contracts with our producers or have them on the payroll as employees. The argument works both ways because while it is true that the producer is under contract, you do not have the same degree of responsibility for continuity of employment in his case as you do with a paid employee. By the same token, Mr. Osler, it should be logical to assume that if a producer is on our payroll we have a measure of control over his activities which we could not expect to have over the activities of free lance producers. I do not think there is any real difference, in terms of our ability to control the activities of a producer, whether he is on the corporate payroll or whether he is a free lance producer. I doubt if there is any essential difference. Our relationship with a producer is, in essence, dependent upon his professional integrity and it is just as ment à un réalisateur après deux ans de contrat que nous n'allons pas renouveler son contrat. La question de l'émission «Seven Days» en est un bon exemple.

M. Osler: C'est parce qu'ils n'ont pas été informés normalement. S'ils ont pu contrer cette décision, c'est parce que la direction n'a pas su manœuvrer. Voulez-vous dire que C.T.V. ou que la NBC ne peut pas congédier un réalisateur? Je crois que si nous avons une méthode assez directe pour le faire, il y aura moins de chichi quand la chose se produira.

M. Davidson: On peut très bien faire savoir au réalisateur que son contrat ne sera pas renouvelé, et les choses en resteront là. Mais ce n'est pas aussi simple que cela. Il y a de moins en moins de différence entre la situation d'un réalisateur qui fait partie du personnel et un autre qui n'est qu'à contrat.

M. Osler: J'ai la certitude que ce serait difficile, parce qu'ils exerceraient toutes sortes de pressions ici, au Parlement et ailleurs, mais nous devrions étudier toutes ces questions dans l'espoir de comprendre les choses plus facilement qu'à l'heure actuelle.

M. Davidson: J'ai déjà étudié la question, à savoir établir des contrats avec nos réalisateurs, ou les payer comme employés. Il y a du pour et du contre, parce qu'avec un réalisateur sous contrat, on n'a pas le même degré de responsabilité, quant à la continuité d'emploi, qu'avec un employé rémunéré. De même, monsieur Osler, il est logique de supposer que si un réalisateur fait partie de notre personnel, nous avons une mesure de contrôle sur ses activités, ce que nous ne pouvons avoir sur un réalisateur indépendant. Et je ne crois pas qu'il y ait de véritable différence, quant à notre capacité de contrôle des activités des réalisateurs, qu'ils soient employés, ou qu'ils soient réalisateurs indépendants. Je doute qu'il y ait une différence essentielle. Nos rapports avec eux sont dans la mesure de leur intégrité professionnelle et si son intégrité n'est pas à la hauteur, elle le sera d'autant moins, qu'il soit à contrat ou membre du personnel.

[Text]

likely that his professional integrity will be less than it should be if he is a paid employee as if he were a contract employee.

Mr. Osler: The problem remains under both guises as to how you are going to get rid of him?

Mr. Davidson: That is correct.

Mr. Osler: The main question, Mr. Chairman that I wanted to ask had to do with this matter of satellite networks. We were talking to the new satellite corporation people the other day and, of course, as a user you will be expecting to take a great part in any satellite developments that take place, and it was entirely unclear to us what the ratios were going to be between networks that were presently using existing facilities and the time when they would be using satellite facilities. We always got back to the thought that we need the satellite to get to the North. This is absolutely true, there is no doubt about that. However, I wonder if the net effect is going to be more costly or less costly to you, and you are going to have to carry a disproportionate amount of the load for the proposed Domestic Satellite Communicator System. As an example, it costs roughly $250,000 for a frontier coverage package. These people say it will cost roughly $250,000 for the same thing live. That is good enough, that is fine.

Dr. Davidson: That is the capital cost?

Mr. Osler: That is right.

Dr. Davidson: But the operating costs of a transmitting station taking the feed off a receiving station from a satellite are not anything like as great as the present costs of feeding our frontier coverage package.

Mr. Osler: That is fine. But your big bulk is always going to be the back and forth flow of things in the more inhabited parts of Canada. To what extent do you expect to use the satellite for that and what kind of rates are you going to have to pay for it?

Dr. Davidson: If the satellite materializes and if we make use of it is going to serve two essential purposes. First, it is going to make it possible for us to extend French language coverage coast to coast without having to acquire additional microwave facilities, which would cost us a considerable amount in annual service charges.

Second, it will enable us to cover the remote areas of the country, including the far north. Those are the two essential functions

[Interpretation]

M. Osler: Mais le problème demeure dans les deux cas, à savoir comment s'en débarrasser.

M. Davidson: En effet.

M. Osler: La question que je voulais poser monsieur le président, concerne ce réseau de satellites. Nous en discutons l'autre jour avec les gens de la nouvelle société chargée de l'exploitation du satellite; bien sûr, vous allez jouer un rôle assez considérable dans toute cette question du développement du satellite. Et nous n'avons pas considéré quelle serait la mesure ou le rapport entre les installations des services utilisés par les réseaux actuels parce qu'ils utiliseront les installations ou les services des satellites. On revient toujours à dire qu'il nous faudrait un satellite pour pouvoir rejoindre le Nord. Il n'y a aucun doute là-dessus. Mais je me demande si cela sera plus ou moins coûteux? Il faudra peut-être prévoir une somme disproportionnée pour le système canadien de communications par satellite. Cela coûte $250,000 environ pour un programme d'émissions destinées au Grand Nord. En direct, cela coûtera aussi environ $250,000, selon ces gens.

M. Davidson: Il s'agit du coût des immobilisations?

M. Osler: Oui.

M. Davidson: Mais les frais d'exploitation des stations de transmission diffusant à partir de stations reliées à un satellite ne sont pas aussi considérables que ce qu'il nous en coûte à l'heure actuelle pour nos émissions destinées au Grand Nord.

M. Osler: Bien. Mais ce qui va coûter le plus, c'est l'échange d'un bout à l'autre du Canada? Combien vous en coûtera-t-il pour le satellite, quel taux faudra-t-il charger compte tenu de l'utilisation du satellite?

M. Davidson: Si le satellite est utilisé à deux fins, cela va nous permettre d'étendre les programmes francophones d'un océan à l'autre, sans tenir d'autres services de micro-ondes, ou autres installations qui seraient très dispendieuses.

Deuxièmement, cela va nous permettre de nous rendre jusque dans des régions éloignées, y compris le Grand Nord, et ce sont là that we cannot achieve at the present time that we will be able to achieve through the use of the satellite. As we see it at the moment, it will not have any substantial effect on our present reliance on microwave facilities for coast to coast English network broadcasting. What this means, therefore, is that if it can be assumed, and we hope it can, that Parliament will progressively authorize and fund us over the next few years to extend French network broadcasting from coast to coast and provide a complete service to the peoples of the far north—if that can be assumed and money is to be provided for those purposes in any event in future years, money which is not now in our capital or operating budget—then in our opinion it will be possible to utilize the funds which would in any event be provided by Parliament to extend these two services and to provide broadcasting services through the use of a satellite rather than through traditional methods.

[Texte]

• 1225

The sums of money are essentially the same out in both cases these sums of money are in addition to what we are able to operate on at the present time, because we cannot extend the French language network across Canada without additional funds for the purpose of acquiring microwave facilities. We cannot extend, as we hope to do, some 30 or 40 additional frontier coverage packages to the far north by traditional broadcast patterns.

Mr. Osler: If you were given the green light tomorrow to put the French language network across the country you would know the day after tomorrow—and you probably know now—exactly what it would cost you to do so on a microwave basis, and you feel it is not going to cost you any more with the satellite?

Dr. Davidson: If you combine that with a rejection of our future plans for extending services into the northern part of Canada, the two things must be taken together.

Mr. Osler: Yes, but this is an area that—without further explaining—makes one a little nervous, because if you told me that it would cost you many millions of dollars to get television service up to Aklavik or Frobisher Bay, or somewhere like that, I would believe you. If the satellite service is going to be rationalized by saying that it would not cost any more to take the French network across, plus going north, I would like to know les deux fonctions essentielles que nous pourrions remplir avec le satellite et que nous ne pouvons faire à l'heure actuelle. Mais pour le moment, on ne peut pas prévoir un effet substantiel sur nos services, nos installations micro-ondes du réseau anglais. Ce qui veut dire que, et on peut le supposer, l'espérer, le Parlement, petit à petit, nous autorisera et nous financera pour étendre les services francophones d'un océan à l'autre, et fournir un service complet dans le Grand Nord, et que des fonds seront fournis à cette fin, fonds que nous n'avons pas à l'heure actuelle dans notre budget d'exploitation, ou dans notre budget d'immobilisations; alors, nous pourrions utiliser des fonds que le Parlement pourra mettre à notre disposition pour ces deux services, et les utiliser pour fournir les services de radiodiffusion d'un satellite plutôt que par des moyens traditionnels.

[Interprétation]

Nous croyons que ces sommes d'argent seront à peu près semblables. Mais elles seront supplémentaires aux fonds que nous utilisons à l'heure actuelle, parce que nous ne pouvons étendre les services aux francophones sans avoir plus d'argent pour acquérir des installations de réseau micro-onde. Nous ne pouvons, par exemple, rejoindre le Nord canadien sans d'autres fonds, pour lui transmettre des émissions par des moyens traditionnels.

M. Osler: Alors, si demain on vous donnait le feu vert pour étendre le réseau francophone d'un bout à l'autre du Canada, vous sauriez, dès le lendemain, ce qu'il vous en coûterait, même s'il s'agissait d'un réseau micro-onde? Et vous croyez qu'avec le satellite cela ne vous coûtera pas plus cher?

M. Davidson: Pourvu qu'on les réunisse avec le service que nous devons fournir au Nord canadien, les deux ensemble ne coûteront pas plus cher.

M. Osler: Mais c'est là un aspect qui nous rend un peu inquiets, parce que si vous me disiez que cela va vous coûter des millions de dollars pour assurer un service de télévision à Aklavik ou à Frobisher Bay, je vous croirais. Mais si le service de satellites doit être justifié en disant que cela ne coûtera pas davantage que d'étendre le réseau français, j'aimerais savoir de quels chiffres vous parlez au sujet du Grand Nord, car on peut avoir what kind of figures you are talking about when you are going north, because they could be frontier packages or they could be live lines, and live lines would be terribly expensive.

Dr. Davidson: No, we are talking about our plans which are now embraced in that five-year forecast of requirements as presented to Treasury Board. Our plans for the North in this five-year period would call for the addition of not more than 40 frontier coverage packages, each one of which would cost on the average a couple of hundred thousand dollars in capital funds—and I am looking at Mr. Hayes, the Vice-President, Engineering, behind you—to set up and it would cost somewhere in the neighbourhood of $50,000 a year to operate. I should add that the $50,000 figure I just gave you as the operating cost of the frontier coverage package assumes that we will continue to supply tapes and material for only four hours a day. We believe that it will not be possible to restrict our broadcasting in these remote areas through frontier coverage packages to four hours a day; we contemplate that eventually we will have to move that up to as much as ten hours a day.

Mr. Osler: Yes, but that is operating cost.

Dr. Davidson: Yes. The satellite charges to us would be operating as well.

Mr. Osler: Yes, but to begin with you are talking about 40 new stations at a couple of hundred thousand dollars apiece, so that is $8 million, and the amortization of that becomes an operating cost. You are saying that your cost of service to the North is going to be roughly the same as it would be on $8 million.

Mr. Picard: No, there is that plus the production of tape, the bisecting of tape, and all that, so it not really based on the $8 million, it is based on the full operating cost exceeding that. One indication of that is that with the same capital cost that you operate for four hours it costs you about $50,000 a year. If you operate for ten hours it costs you $110,000 with the same capital investment. It is capital investment plus, and I think the biggest share of it is bisecting tape, providing video tape, and all that. So it not a capital...

Mr. Osler: I think you have satisfied me that you are rationalizing it in relation to the cost of running a frontier package for the year.

[Interpretation]

des émissions enregistrées ou en direct, celles-ci coûtant terriblement cher.

M. Davidson: Nous parlons des plans qui sont déjà compris dans les prévisions de cinq ans que nous avons présentées au Conseil du Trésor. Nos projets pour le Nord ne prévoient pas plus de 40 émissions supplémentaires chacune coûtant en moyenne $200 en immobilisation et j'ai demandé à M. Hayes, vice-président au génie, de régler l'affaire pour qu'on puisse s'en tirer avec environ $50,000 par an. Le chiffre de $50,000 que je vous ai donné ce sont les frais d'exploitation, si nous continuons à émettre des émissions de télévision 4 heures par jour. Nous croyons qu'il ne serait pas possible de limiter nos émissions, dans ces régions éloignées, à quatre heures par jour; nous croyons devoir éventuellement offrir environ 10 heures par jour.

M. Osler: Oui, mais il s'agit là des frais d'exploitation.

M. Davidson: Oui. Les frais du satellite seraient aussi des frais d'exploitation.

M. Osler: Les frais d'exploitation par satellite seraient également des frais d'exploitation? Vous parlez de 40 nouvelles stations à $200,000, ce qui donne 8 millions de dollars, et l'amortissement de cette somme devient des frais d'exploitation. Vous dites que le coût du service pour le Nord serait à peu près le même que s'il s'agissait de 8 millions de dollars.

M. Picard: Non, il y a cela, plus la production de bandes, le découpage, etc..., alors, il ne s'agit pas vraiment de 8 millions, mais des frais d'exploitation en sus. Avec le même coût en capital de quatre heures, cela coûte environ $50,000 par an. Si on diffuse pendant dix heures, cela coûte $110,000, avec le même investissement. Il s'agit d'un surplus de capital, et je crois que la plus grande partie comprend le découpage, les magnétoscopes, etc. Alors, il ne s'agit pas d'un capital...

M. Osler: Je pense que vous avez dit que vous êtes à rationaliser cela en fonction du coût d'un réseau destiné au Nord canadien.

[Texte]

Dr. Davidson: In the French network.

Mr. Osler: Yes, you add the cost of the French network plus the cost of running your frontier package and it adds up to the same thing as...

Mr. Picard: More or less.

Mr. Osler: Yes.

Dr. Davidson: There are some offsets, but I come back to the point that if you are talking about our current budget of today, putting a satellite up and requiring us to make use of it on the scale which has been discussed, there would be relatively small amounts of saving out of our current operating budget.

We are required, as you know, to supply forecasts of our future five-year requirements. In our forecasts of the requirements, based on what we have put in there for our traditional methods of extending service—the French network and so on—plus some additional amounts that we had already put in for our contribution to satellite broadcasting, are included the amounts that would permit us to finance what is expected of us in the satellite broadcast area.

Now, we have made no commitments on this as yet.

Mr. Osler: It is a government decision whether or not there will be satellites and whether or not they want to draw some money from you or from somebody else, but I suggest that from the point of view at this committee we should know what we are doing. If they come to us and tell us it will cost us dollars and they think it will pay for itself, if the CBC is going to be the goat, well, that is fine. We want to know about it so we can judge the CBC accordingly.

The Chairman: One of the problems we face is that Mr. Kierans and his officials told us they require $20 million in annual revenue in order to justify the establishment of a satellite. We have, so far, been unable to be satisfied just where that $20 million is going to come from. Obviously some of it will come from the CN-CP, some of it from the interprovincial telephone systems but there seems to be a healthy amount that the CBC is going to be asked to contribute.

Dr. Davidson: You are putting me in a difficult position, Mr. Chairman, because I am not aware of what has been given in the way of evidence. I am aware of the fact that negotiations are going on now between the Department of Communications and us as well as the private carriers, and I think it would be

[Interprétation]

M. Davidson: Pour le réseau français.

M. Osler: Oui, vous ajoutez le coût du réseau de langue française et le coût d'exploitation du programme d'émissions destinées au Grand Nord, et cela atteint...

M. Picard: Plus ou moins.

M. Osler: Oui.

M. Davidson: Si vous parlez de notre actuel budget de dépenses courantes, nous demander de placer un satellite sur orbite et l'utiliser dans la proportion mentionnée, le montant épargné ne serait pas des plus importants.

Nous devons, vous le savez, indiquer ce dont nous pensons avoir besoin au cours des cinq prochaines années. Nos chiffres, basés sur ce dont nous avons besoin pour poursuivre notre expansion selon les méthodes habituelles ainsi que sur certains montants déjà prévus pour la diffusion par satellite, comprennent ces sommes dont nous aurons besoin pour financer notre participation à la diffusion par satellite.

Mais nous n'avons encore pris aucun engagement.

M. Osler: Il appartient au gouvernement de décider s'il y aura des satellites ou non et d'où proviendra l'argent nécessaire à cette fin. Mais nous voulons savoir où nous nous en allons. Si on nous dit que le projet coûtera X dollars, et qu'il sera rentable et si Radio-Canada doit être le bouc émissaire, c'est très bien. Tout ce que nous voulons, c'est d'être mis au courant afin de pouvoir juger Radio-Canada en toute connaissance de cause.

Le président: Monsieur Kierans et ses fonctionnaires nous ont dit que les revenus annuels devront être de l'ordre de $20 millions pour que le lancement du satellite soit justifié. Mais nous ne savons pas encore d'où viendront ces $20 millions. Une partie proviendra du CN-CP, une autre des compagnies de téléphone mais il semble que Radio-Canada sera invitée à fournir une part importante de ce montant.

M. Davidson: Vous me placez dans une situation délicate, monsieur le président, parce que j'ignore quels ont été les témoignages que vous avez déjà entendus. Je sais que des négociations sont en cours entre le ministère des Communications et Radio-Canada, de même qu'entre le ministère et les entreprises very unfortunate if I were to make any statement at this time on the question of costs or proposed charges which would in any way make more difficult the negotiations that the Department is undertaking with the common carriers.

Mr. Osler: If the satellite people were, a private business and they were coming for a licence, presumably we would look over their projections. This is the thing that bothers me. We would say this is either a commercially viable proposition or it is not, and perhaps if it is not we will let it go ahead for other reasons.

They tell us loosely that they will have lots of work from CN-CP and the telephone companies plus CBC, and yet there are no memoranda of agreement with these private concerns of any kind. The private concerns own land lines that they have to pay for and amortize, and we wonder if there is going to be a goat in this barnyard somewhere and if there is one, who the goat is before it starts.

Dr. Davidson: Well, do you not think I do too, Mr. Osler? Seriously, and with great respect, it seems to me that you are becoming interested in this just at a point in time when it would not be possible, certainly, for the Corporation to be too communicative. Presumably a bill will be presented to Parliament to create the satellite corporation. When that bill is before the House I assume it will be referred to a committee.

• 1235

The Chairman: It will be referred to this Committee.

Dr. Davidson: At that time I expect that this Committee would call the satellite people and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation back and say, "Now, get the cards out on the table and tell us what this is all about".

The Chairman: We shall probably also want to call CN-CP and Bell as well.

Dr. Davidson: Yes, but I ask you to believe that at this point in time anything that I might say concerning what I know about the amounts they are talking to us about would not be, I think, in the public interest.

Mr. Osler: I think Dr. Davidson has satisfied me that from his point of view the negotiations have to take place, and from his point of view it appears to be a practical thing he can make use of.

Dr. Davidson: Provided the costs to us are within reason...

privées. Je crois qu'il serait inapproprié pour moi de faire une déclaration à ce moment-ci parce que ça ne rendrait que plus difficiles les négociations que le ministère entreprend présentement avec l'entreprise privée.

M. Osler: Si les personnes impliquées dans ce projet de satellite représentaient une entreprise privée et qu'elles venaient nous demander un permis d'exploitation, nous étudierions certes l'aspect financier du projet. Nous pourrions discuter de la rentabilité du projet. Et même s'il ne l'était pas, nous pourrions permettre sa mise sur pied, pour d'autres raisons.

On nous dit que CN-CP, les compagnies de téléphone et Radio-Canada utiliseront le service mais aucun accord n'a encore été signé. Nous désirons savoir s'il doit y avoir un bouc émissaire dans toute cette affaire, et s'il y en a un nous voulons connaître son nom dès maintenant.

M. Davidson: Ne croyez-vous pas que j'ai hâte, moi aussi, de connaître la réponse à cette question? Toutefois il me semble qu'on s'intéresse au projet au moment précis où, en tout cas, Radio-Canada, ne peut pas dévoiler de détails. Un bill sera probablement déposé aux Communes en vue de la création de cette société qui sera chargée du satellite. Je suppose qu'il sera par la suite référé à un comité.

Le président: La question sera référée à ce Comité.

M. Davidson: Je suppose qu'à ce moment-là, votre Comité voudra convoquer les représentants de cette nouvelle société et ceux de Radio-Canada pour leur demander de faire la lumière sur toute la situation.

Le président: Nous voudrions probablement également entendre les représentants de CN-CP et de Bell Canada.

M. Davidson: Très bien. Mais veuillez me croire. Tout ce que je pourrais dire à ce moment-ci au sujet des tarifs dont on nous parle ne serait pas, à mon avis, dans l'intérêt public.

M. Osler: Je crois que monsieur Davidson a réussi à me prouver que de telles discussions doivent avoir lieu et qu'elles peuvent être utiles.

M. Davidson: Pourvu que les frais qu'on exigera de nous seront raisonnables...

[Texte]

Mr. Osler: Right.

Dr. Davidson: ...and provided we can get some kind of assurance that the additional funds we require for our extended services are going to be provided by Parliament and this, of course, is the real problem.

The Chairman: To be economical for the CBC, then, you must have a fairly extensive expansion of your facilities in order to require the additional capacity that the satellite will provide, which you may not be able to get at a reasonable cost with the existing system of landlines.

Dr. Davidson: We do not think the cost of extending the French network by microwave across Canada would be unreasonable. It might be regarded as being high in terms of per capita cost, considering the additional number of French-speaking Canadians who would be served by extension of the microwave network, but we do not consider that would be unreasonable if Parliament is serious in endeavouring to achieve the objective of providing coverage to all Canadians. However, it must be recognized that the problem of extending coverage to the last million Canadians—about 500,000—add persons of English language and about 400,000 of French language—is going to be a terribly expensive business.

May I give you some of the dimensions of this? Over 35 years, since the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation came into existence in its original form, if you look at our balance sheets you will find that our gross capital investment in facilities for the Corporation is $150 million, depreciated now to about $80 million. Our estimate of the additional capital costs for bringing radio to every community in Canada of 500 and over population television to every community in Canada of 2,000 and over population is $63 million.

That gives you some indication of the incremental costs of putting our signal into areas where it is not now receivable, if this continues to be the number one priority of Parliament as we read the Broadcasting Act which reads:

...be extended to all parts of Canada, as funds become available,...

This was laid down in the government White Paper as being the number one priority and we have to assume, until we receive direction to the contrary, that it is Parliament's will that the service of the national broadcasting service, the CBC, be extended to all parts of Canada as funds become available.

[Interprétation]

M. Osler: Oui.

M. Davidson: ... et pourvu que nous obtenions une certaine assurance que les fonds supplémentaires dont nous aurons besoin nous seront fournis par le Parlement.

Le président: Pour que le système soit économique pour Radio-Canada, il vous faudra vous lancer dans un vaste programme d'expansion de vos installations afin de pouvoir recourir à ce service que pourra vous offrir le satellite, ce que vous ne pourriez peut-être pas obtenir à un coût raisonnable avec le système actuel.

M. Davidson: Nous ne croyons pas que le coût d'expansion du réseau micro-ondes pour le réseau français soit insurmontable. Le montant peut paraître élevé s'il est calculé per capita d'après le nombre de nouveaux auditeurs que nous pourrions ainsi desservir. Nous ne croyons pas que ce soit irraisonnable si le Parlement est bel et bien décidé à ce que nous desservions la majeure partie de la population canadienne. Mais il ne faut pas perdre de vue le fait que pour desservir environ un million de Canadiens de plus, 500,000 de langue anglaise et 400,000 de langue française, il en coûtera passablement cher.

Depuis la création de la Société Radio-Canada, il y a 35 ans, si vous regardez au bilan, le total des investissements pour la Société Radio-Canada s'établit à $150 millions. La dépréciation a fait baisser cette somme à $80 millions. Nous prévoyons que pour offrir la télévision à chaque localité de 2000 personnes et la radio à chaque localité de 500 personnes, il en coûtera $63 millions.

Ceci vous donne une idée de l'augmentation des frais provoquée par une expansion du service dans ces régions qui ne captent pas encore notre signal, si le Parlement la maintient toujours en tête de sa liste de priorités. C'est du moins ce que signifie, à notre avis, ces mots qui se retrouvent dans la Loi sur la radiodiffusion

... le service national de radiodiffusion devrait être étendu à toutes les régions du Canada, au fur et à mesure que les fonds publics deviennent disponibles,

Le gouvernement en fait sa première priorité dans son Livre blanc et nous devons supposer, tant que nous ne recevrons pas d'avis

[Text]

Mr. Osler: May I ask another question which I think is completely relative, Mr. Chairman? Is this progression, this chart that you have, of all the places 500 and above for radio and 2,000 and above for television essentially an arithmetic one, and you then apply other factors to decide what priority there is?

Dr. Davidson: Except for Northern service.

Mr. Osler: Yes, all right. Now, in my own Province of Manitoba a very far-reaching economic survey has just been completed. I understand the same sort of thing has happened in the Maritimes. It will happen in all the places that are not obviously boom areas such as the area around Toronto, and that sort of thing, and the sum and substance of the Manitoba survey is that in one way or other there has to be an awful lot of small-scale regional development within the large regions.

Take the analogy of the railroad that was built with stations every nine miles so that farmers could drive in with their loads of hay—you do not need them closer than 50 or 75 miles now. Your market towns and all the rest of it, of course, are all drying up or have dried up. There has to be quite a lot of regional rationalization in deliberately allowing some of these places to close down, and this is going to be a tough political thing to do. However, it is going to happen one way or the other and it might as well be done with political leadership so that the people who remain in these small towns do not go right under but have a chance to move and have assistance.

If this is a trend which I believe it is—we are talking about long-term; 5, 10, 15 years—do your own planners consider this sort of thing? In other words, when we talk about this extra one million people in Canada are they really going to be easier to service than we think they are now? Are we in danger of building services that we are not going to need 10 years from now?

Dr. Davidson: If you are talking of 10 or 15 years from now you also have to take account of direct satellite-to-home broadcasting facilities; and one of the questions is whether you bypass the first phase, which is satellite-to-contraire, que c'est le désir du Parlement de voir Radio-Canada étendre son service à toutes les régions du pays au fur et à mesure que les fonds publics seront disponibles.

M. Osler: Est-ce que ce tableau que vous avez et où figurent toutes ces municipalités de plus de 500 âmes qui n'ont pas la radio et de plus de 2,000 âmes qui n'ont pas la télévision en est un essentiellement mathématique, auquel vous ajoutez d'autres facteurs avant d'établir votre liste de priorité?

M. Davidson: Sauf dans le cas du Service du Grand Nord.

M. Osler: Dans ma province du Manitoba, on a terminé une enquête économique assez complète. Une enquête du même genre aurait été menée dans les Maritimes et d'autres auront lieu dans les régions qui ne sont pas particulièrement prospères. L'enquête menée au Manitoba démontre que, d'une façon ou d'une autre, il faut de nombreuses améliorations dans des petits secteurs des grandes régions.

Prenons l'exemple du chemin de fer. Des gares ont été aménagées de 9 milles en 9 milles pour permettre aux fermiers d'y porter leur foin, mais, aujourd'hui les gares peuvent être éloignées les unes des autres de 50 à 75 milles. Les petits villages se meurent. Il faut planifier et permettre que certains de ces villages disparaissent, ce qui sera certes une décision difficile à prendre. Mais ce jour viendra et il faudra prendre des mesures pour aider ces gens qui habitent encore ces endroits.

S'il s'agit d'une tendance, personnellement je crois que c'en est une même si elle peut ne se manifester que dans 5, 10 ou 15 ans, est-ce que vous en tenez compte? Lorsque nous parlons de ce dernier million de Canadiens, est-ce que nous sommes à construire des services dont nous n'aurons pas besoin dans dix ans.

M. Davidson: Si vous parlez de dix à quinze ans d'ici, il vous faut aussi tenir compte des installations de radiodiffusion directe du satellite à la maison; et une des questions est de savoir si vous contournez la earth stations—to transmit stations—and wait out for the advent of the direct satellite-to-home broadcasting.

I am not an expert in these matters, but in my judgment it would be unwise to decide that we are simply going to stick with our existing technology until the direct satellite-to-home broadcasting becomes available. It does seem to me to be justifiable, if we are interested in having Canada put up a satellite. There are many other reasons, apart from the broadcasting requirement, for supporting that view.

It seems to me that it would be wise for us to move along with the developing technology and to support the development of the satellite that is now contemplated.

Mr. Osler: I just had a momentary nightmare of seeing the CBC arriving somewhere with a satellite station just at the time the last grain elevator closed down in that little village.

Dr. Davidson: If it were a frontier coverage package we could yank it out and put it somewhere else. That is one of the advantages of a frontier coverage package—it is movable.

The Chairman: Mr. Perrault?

Mr. Perrault: I have a supplementary on this satellite and the way Canada will be served by it.

We are told that this will make possible simultaneous live programming to all parts of Canada, but what concerns me is the difference in our time zones. We have the Maritimes four and a half hours ahead of the Pacific coast. In fact, is it possible to do useful and worthwhile programming that will meet all of the regional needs simultaneously from a certain point in Toronto and transmit to the satellite? That is my first question.

Dr. Davidson: May I answer that now?

Mr. Perrault: Yes.

Dr. Davidson: It is technically possible, of course, but Vancouver would get the programming at some of the most unearthly hours, to say nothing of Newfoundland and the Yukon Territory.

Mr. Perrault: How is that going to be overcome?

Dr. Davidson: The point really is that it could be wrong to assume that by putting up première étape, qui est du satellite aux stations au sol aux stations de transmission, et attendre l'arrivée de la transmission directe du satellite à la maison.

Je ne suis pas un expert en la matière, mais je crois qu'il ne serait pas sage de conserver la technologie actuelle jusqu'à ce que les satellites à radiodiffusion directe à la maison entreront en service. Cela me semble justifiable si nous sommes intéressés à voir le Canada lancer un satellite. Il y a plusieurs raisons, à part les besoins de la radiodiffusion, pour appuyer ce point de vue. Je crois qu'il serait sage de suivre le progrès et d'entreprendre l'exploitation d'un satellite.

M. Osler: J'imagine, par exemple, que la société Radio-Canada pourrait construire une antenne dans un village où le dernier éleveur à grain vient de disparaître.

M. Davidson: Si c'était une installation de frontière, nous pourrions déplacer le tout et l'installer quelque part ailleurs. C'est un des avantages de l'installation de frontière, elle est mobile.

Le président: Monsieur Perrault?

M. Perrault: Une dernière question au sujet de ce satellite, et les services que le Canada peut en attendre.

On nous a dit que ceci va rendre possible l'envoi direct d'émissions d'un bout à l'autre du Canada. Qu'est-ce que ceci va donner? Je m'inquiète des fuseaux horaires. Nous avons les Maritimes en avance de quatre heures et demie de la côte du Pacifique. En fait, est-il possible d'avoir une programmation utile et de valeur en direct de Toronto qui répondra aux besoins régionaux et qui sera transmise par satellite? C'est ma première question.

M. Davidson: Puis-je répondre à cette question maintenant?

M. Perrault: Oui.

M. Davidson: Du point de vue technique, c'est évidemment possible, mais les émissions seraient captées à des heures impossibles à Vancouver, par exemple, sans parler de Terre-Neuve et du Territoire du Yukon.

M. Perrault: Comment surmontera-t-on cette difficulté?

M. Davidson: En réalité, le point se résume à ceci. Il serait fautif de supposer qu'en plaa satellite you can wipe out all of our existing facilities for regional distribution through microwaves and for delay centres, and so on. We will have to have the same kind of regional distribution facilities within the region and also provision for delay centres where we could hold programs and release them at a later date.

Mr. Perrault: The delay facilities will have to be done by conventional means, will they not?

Dr. Davidson: Unless you had a satellite with so many channels on it that you could use separate channels to broadcast on real time into the region.

Mr. Perrault: It could be extremely costly, of course, to employ all the additional channels on the satellite, I suppose.

Are we to presume, then, that at least in the early stages a northern community, which is beyond the range of the present microwave network, or other lines, would be served by some sort of basic, central programming service regardless of the time zone difference?

Dr. Davidson: It would depend on whether you chose to serve that area from Toronto, or from some other centre. One of the alternatives that have been talked about has been the alternative of servicing the north from British Columbia.

Mr. Perrault: Via the satellite?

Dr. Davidson: Yes; but remember, if the English channel were, let us say, to be operated out of Vancouver and the French channel out of Montreal you would be operating on Pacific time, but your message would be carried to the earth stations that are located in the northern territories and it would be necessary to locate alongside of the earth receiving station a transmit station which would correspond to our frontier coverage package and which would serve the limited area around that earth station.

Mr. Perrault: Would the frontier station have delay facilities, as well?

Dr. Davidson: It would not in itself have delay facilities.

Mr. Perrault: Your answer probably serves to answer my second question which relates to the needs for regional programming in all of the provinces. How would Manitoba-content, for example, or B.C.-content, or Mari-çant en orbite un satellite, vous pouvez éliminer toutes les installations existantes pour la distribution régionale par réseaux micro-ondes et centres de rediffusion, et ainsi de suite. Il nous faudra avoir des installations de distribution régionale dans la région, ainsi que des centres de rediffusion où les émissions peuvent être retenues et diffusées plus tard.

M. Perrault: Les installations de rediffusion devront se servir de méthodes conventionnelles, n'est-ce pas?

M. Davidson: A moins d'avoir un satellite avec un nombre suffisant de canaux qui permettrait d'utiliser des canaux différents pour radiodiffuser à l'heure réelle dans la région.

M. Perrault: Je crois que cela coûterait très cher, de se servir des autres canaux, n'est-ce pas?

Les localités du Nord qui sont trop éloignées à l'heure actuelle seraient desservies par un système central qui émettrait des programmes sans tenir compte de fuseaux horaires. Du moins au début.

M. Davidson: Il s'agirait de déterminer si la région doit être desservie à partir de Toronto ou à partir d'un autre centre. On a parlé de la possibilité de desservir le Nord à partir de la Colombie-Britannique.

M. Perrault: Via les satellites.

M. Davidson: Oui, mais vous devez vous rappeler que si le réseau anglais devait être centré à Vancouver, et le réseau français centré à Montréal, le message serait communiqué aux Territoires du Nord-Ouest, il faut désigner un poste de transmission, un poste récepteur qui recevrait des émissions et qui desservirait la région qui entoure ces postes au sol.

M. Perrault: Les postes de frontières auraient-ils des installations de rediffusion?

M. Davidson: Pas en soi. Il n'y aurait pas de centres de retransmission.

M. Perrault: Qu'en est-il des programmes à contenu régional dans chaque province? Comment peut-on assurer que par satellite chaque région jouisse de programmes qui tiennent compte de ses intérêts particuliers?

[Texte]

time-content be fed into the satellite programming?

Dr. Davidson: Essentially it would be fed in the same way that it is fed in now. For example, our Winnipeg regional station receives a certain percentage of programming via microwave net from Toronto. It feeds into its own regional network a certain percentage from Winnipeg as the regional centre of production.

Mr. Perrault: The reason for any asking is that we had a technical discussion of the satellite the other day, and we were told that people in remote hamlets near the Arctic circle would be able to receive programming. Obviously, however, if you are transmitting your basic material via satellite to Winnipeg and then by conventional means they feed it to the regional networks, those remote communities are not going to be covered any more than they are today.

Dr. Davidson: But if you are producing program material, let us say, out of Winnipeg, or out of Toronto—it does not matter where you produce it—you beam that program up to the satellite. It is beamed back from the satellite to the earth station up at Aklavik or Inuvik or any place you want to name. That earth station is...

Mr. Perrault: In regional Manitoba, or wherever it is.

Dr. Davidson: Yes; it is part of what will go into the complex of the satellite corporations. We will then have to come along and put a transmitting unit alongside that to pick up the network and beam it to the home.

Mr. Perrault: Yes.

Mr. Osler: This input of programming is a little bothersome. If, for example, you have the facilities in the Northwest Territories, how are you going to have a vehicle for the Northwest Territories to discuss their own problems or even pass their own problems back to the rest of Canada to be seen or discussed? This is, of course, a real complaint now. In my region they say they get nothing but the gospel out of Toronto, at anytime anybody would look at it. You have all heard me on the subject many times. To a large extent I think this is true, because there are distinct regions and some of them are more complete in their growth than others, and it is in the ones that are not complete that a certain amount of give-and-take discussion has to be allowed to take place.

Our area is going through a complete change in everything. I do not think it is

[Interprétation]

M. Davidson: On procéderait essentiellement comme on procède à l'heure actuelle. Le poste de Winnipeg reçoit des programmes de Toronto par micro-ondes. Ce poste ajoute certains programmes qui viennent de Winnipeg.

M. Perrault: La raison pour laquelle je pose la question c'est que nous avons eu une discussion l'autre jour sur les satellites. On nous a dit que les gens qui habitent du Cercle arctique ne pourront pas recevoir ces programmes. Et si l'émission est captée à Winnipeg, il est certain que ces localités ne seront pas desservies.

M. Davidson: D'un autre côté, si ces programmes sont initiés à Winnipeg ou à Toronto, et si les programmes sont envoyés au satellite qui les retransmet à Aklavik ou Inuvik ou ailleurs.

M. Perrault: Au Manitoba ou n'importe où?

M. Davidson: Oui, ceci fait partie du contenu des programmes, et nous pourrions également insérer un appareil de transmission.

M. Perrault: Oui.

M. Osler: Ces programmes causent des problèmes, je pense. Si les Territoires du Nord-Ouest, par exemple recevaient des programmes, qui tiennent compte des installations là-bas, comment quelqu'un de ces régions discuterait-il de ses problèmes. C'est ce qui se produit à l'heure actuelle dans ma région. On se plaint dans ma région que nous ne recevons que des programmes de Toronto. Je crois que j'ai souvent parlé de ces questions par le passé, et c'est vrai dans une large mesure. Il y a des régions bien précises dont certaines qui croissent plus rapidement que d'autres.

Et notre région est en train de se transformer et je ne crois pas que ses points de vue getting its points of view across other than at Confederation conferences, when they may not be the points of view that are typical of the whole region.

But if the Northwest Territories, for example, get provincial autonomy, or some such device, it seems to me that there has to be a vehicle for them to air their ideas and have a little give-and-take within Confederation. How is this sort of thing going to be looked after? It cannot be looked after any better by satellites than it can be today, can it?

Dr. Davidson: It depends on how much money you are willing to spent to provide how much more facilities. If you want to have a production centre in the Northwest Territories and a means of transmitting those programs up to the satellite and beaming them back over the Northwest Territories, you can do it.

But it becomes unrealistic to think of a kind of completely sophisticated service. It is going to be expensive enough to provide even the Toronto gospel to the Northwest Territories.

The Chairman: We are not interested in that.

Dr. Davidson: Would you prefer that they did not have it at all?

• 1250

The Chairman: Perhaps from Manitoba, or British Columbia, or Montreal, but not Toronto

Dr. Davidson: I think I am right in saying—and the Vice-President may check it—that it is possible to produce programs in regional production centres and transmit them by microwave to the centre, from which the signal is transmitted to the satellite; and that even if you assume that the production centre for transmission to the satellite for distribution is located in any one place in Canada, let us say Winnipeg, you could have programs originating in Vancouver, sent to Winnipeg by microwave, sent up to the satellite, and then beamed to the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Osler: And if a big event took place in the Northwest Territories—it would be a slightly delayed thing—presumably you could put it on film and fly it down to Edmonton or Winnipeg and feed it into the network.

Dr. Davidson: Yes, that is true.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury on a new subject.

[Interpretation]

soient communiqués de façon suffisante, sauf lors peut-être des Conférences de la confédération. Et c'est assez typique de cette région.

Et il me semble qu'il faudra que ces gens disposent des moyens d'exposer leur propre point de vue. Comment cela va se produire, je n'en sais rien. Je ne crois pas que les satellites y changent quoi que ce soit.

M. Davidson: Ça va dépendre de la somme d'argent que vous êtes prêts à dépenser pour fournir ces services, s'il y a un centre de production dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest, et s'il y a un moyen de transmettre ces programmes jusqu'au satellite et de les retransmettre aux autres postes.

Cela est très intéressant, mais ce n'est pas très réaliste. Ça va coûter assez cher de leur faire parvenir des programmes qui viennent de Toronto.

Le président: Cela ne nous intéresse pas.

M. Davidson: Est-ce que vous aimeriez mieux que les gens n'aient rien du tout?

Le président: Peut-être au Manitoba, ou de la Colombie-Britannique, ou de Montréal, mais pas de Toronto!

M. Davidson: Il est possible de réaliser des programmes dans des centres régionaux, de les transmettre par micro-ondes, jusqu'au centre de communication avec les satellites, et ainsi le centre de production se trouve dans un poste affilié au Canada. Certains programmes réalisés à Vancouver pourraient être transmis par micro-ondes soient envoyés au satellite et retransmis dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest.

M. Osler: S'il se produisait un événement important dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest—il y aurait un léger retard de transmission—vous pourriez vraisemblablement le prendre sur film qui serait envoyé par avion à Edmonton ou Winnipeg d'où il pourrait être mis en onde.

M. Davidson: Oui, est-ce vrai?

Le président: Monsieur Stanbury, changement de sujet.

Texte]

Mr. Stanbury: I wanted to clarify a couple of things that came up. Mention was made of certain proportions of film production for the CBC done by private industry. I wondered if those figures included the National Film Board as private industry, in that it is outside our Corporation?

Dr. Davidson: The answer, according to Mr. Gilmore, is no.

Mr. Stanbury: Thank you. Another brief question is whether or not there is some kind of style book, as there would be in a newspaper or a news service, for the CBC news, both Radio-Canada and CBC. My particular question is whether this has been looked at in the French network with a view to allaying some of the objections which we have heard made about the news on the French network. I am thinking, for instance—whether it has been on the CBC or not—of complaints that the Prime Minister of Canada is referred to always as the Prime Minister of Canada or the federal Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister of Quebec very often is referred to as the Prime Minister. This is the kind of thing that would be dealt with in a style book in a newspaper. I am wondering if, in the general sense, there are such things for both networks and, in a particular sense, whether there has been any concern, from this standpoint, in dealing with the sensitivity of people about a separatist leaning in Radio-Canada news.

Mr. Marcel Ouimet (Vice-President, Programming, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation): Mr. Chairman and Mr. Stanbury, the style book of the news service dates back to the very earlier days, and it was adapted over the years on a number of occasions. I cannot say from memory that the particular examples to which you refer would be given in such a book. But certainly, I think, common sense should prevail in a case like this. When this does happen, editors are generally reminded of the differences or of the relative emphasis that should be given to titles and so forth. To my knowledge, the style book is in all newsrooms of the CBC. Work has been done on the French version on a number of occasions over the years. Whether it has been fully published, I would not be in a position to say. But it is definitely among those directives and policies which we intend to revise and which we are proceeding with at the moment.

[Interprétation]

M. Stanbury: Je veux obtenir des éclaircissements au sujet de choses qui ont été dites. On a mentionné qu'une certaine proportion de la production cinématographique de Radio-Canada est confiée à des entreprises privées. Je me demande si ces chiffres comprenaient les films réalisés par l'Office National du film, en tant qu'industrie privée, du fait que l'Office est détaché de votre Société.

M. Davidson: La réponse est non, d'après M. Gilmore.

M. Stanbury: Une autre question. Est-ce qu'il y a un certain code d'uniformité comme c'est le cas dans un journal ou un service d'information, pour les informations de Radio-Canada, sur les deux réseaux. Je me demande si on a étudié cette question, dans le cas du réseau français, en vue de remédier aux sujets des objections que nous avons entendues au sujet des informations au réseau français. Je me demande par exemple s'il y a eu des plaintes à l'effet que le Premier ministre du Canada était toujours appelé le Premier ministre fédéral alors que le premier ministre du Québec était appelé le Premier Ministre? Ce sont des cas semblables que règle un code d'uniformité dans un journal. Je me demande si, règle générale, un code semblable existe pour les deux réseaux, et, de façon particulière, si on s'est préoccupé, à ce point de vue là, de la réaction des gens en ce qui a trait à une tendance séparatiste.

M. Marcel Ouimet (Vice-président aux programmes): Monsieur le président, le cahier de directives à l'intention du service des nouvelles remontent très loin et il a été modifié à plusieurs reprises. Ce cahier prendrait soin des exemples que vous avez donnés. Je crois que le bon sens doit prévaloir en l'occurrence, et, lorsque ceci se produit, les rédacteurs se font rappeler qu'il existe une différence et qu'il y a une distinction relative à faire dans les titres, et ainsi de suite. Toutefois, à ce que je sais, ce texte se trouve dans toutes les salles de nouvelles de la Société Radio-Canada; la version française a été retouchée à plusieurs reprises au cours des années. Je ne saurais dire si elle a été publiée en entier, mais cette question fait nettement partie des directives et des recommandations que nous voulons reviser et que nous sommes à reviser à l'heure actuelle.

Mr. Stanbury: Would you agree that the example I gave of usage would be a proper subject for treatment in the style book?

Mr. Ouimet: It could be the subject of treatment in a style book, or it could be the subject of an internal memorandum pointing out...

Mr. Stanbury: It would be the subject of some kind of policy?

Mr. Ouimet: Oh, yes, indeed.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Stanbury, you might be interested to know that on the occasion of the announcement of my appointment as President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the French newsroom broadcast the news to the waiting world that I was a former Member of Parliament and a member of the Privy Council. This was based upon the fact that I had been a deputy minister, and the confusion was between deputy minister and député, and the fact that I had worked for the Bureau of Government Organization within the Privy Council Office. I agree with you that there is need for some care in designating what people have done and what they are, from time to time.

The Chairman: Was it a disappointment when they found out?

Dr. Davidson: It was a disappointment to me that I was not a member of the Privy Council.

Mr. Stanbury: I know another member wants to ask a question, so I will be brief. You did make a point, Dr. Davidson, of saying that the CBC did not want to discriminate against any class of Canadian residents. Of course, anyone who comes here to work, I suppose is a Canadian resident. So persons you can attract from other parts of the world to work for you become Canadian residents and it becomes a kind of cercle vicieux. You justify the fact that they are working for you because they are Canadian residents because they came here to work for you. But I am wondering if there is not a point at which the proportion of non-Canadians—and I refer to Canadian citizens when I use that term, people who intend to make this country their home and who have a stake in it—working in your organization becomes inconsistent with some of your objectives.

[Interpretation]

M. Stanbury: Ne croyez-vous pas que l'exemple que j'ai donné en serait un qui devrait être abordé dans le cahier de directives?

M. Ouimet: On pourrait traiter de la question dans le cahier ou rédiger une note de service interne soulignant que...

M. Stanbury: Ce point ferait l'objet de certaines directives?

M. Ouimet: Oui, certainement.

M. Davidson: Monsieur Stanbury, vous êtes peut-être intéressé de savoir que lorsqu'on a annoncé ma nomination, au titre de président de la Société Radio-Canada, une salle de nouvelles de langue française a dit à la population que j'avais été député et membre du Conseil privé. Ceci provenait du fait que j'avais été sous-ministre, confusion entre l'expression anglaise «deputy-minister» et le mot «député», et du fait que j'avais travaillé au Bureau de l'organisation du gouvernement au sein du Conseil privé. Je conviens avec vous qu'il faille apporter beaucoup d'attention quand il s'agit d'établir ce que des personnes ont fait et qui elles sont, à différentes périodes.

Le président: Ces gens ont-ils été déçus quand l'erreur a été découverte?

M. Davidson: La déception a été pour moi, de ne pas avoir été membre du Conseil privé.

M. Stanbury: Je sais qu'il y a d'autres députés qui veulent poser des questions et je ne m'attarderai pas longtemps. Vous avez dit, M. Davidson, que la Société Radio-Canada ne voulait pas faire preuve de discrimination à l'égard de quelque classe de la population que ce soit. Je crois que tous ceux qui viennent travailler ici sont nécessairement domiciliés au Canada, et les étrangers qui viennent travailler ici élisent domicile au Canada. Cela est une sorte de cercle vicieux. Vous justifiez le fait qu'ils travaillent pour vous parce qu'ils sont domiciliés au Canada, parce qu'ils sont venus ici dans le but de travailler pour vous. Mais je me demande s'il n'existe pas un moment où la proportion des non-Canadiens—et je parle des citoyens canadiens qu'en j'emploie cette expression, les personnes qui veulent faire du Canada leur pays et qui y ont investi des valeurs—des non-Canadiens, dis-je, travaillant dans votre organisation, en viennent à déroger de vos objectifs.

[Texte]

Dr. Davidson: That may very well be the case. I would not go so far as to say that we should not have regard to balance in our recruitment policy. But what I do emphasize is that I am not prepared to make a distinction between native-born Canadian citizens and naturalized Canadian citizens. I believe that where there are individuals who have come to Canada, who have become landed immigrants, who have spent a considerable portion of their lives in Canada, and their experience is such that it is appropriate for us to offer them employment—not to bring them to Canada for the purpose of adding them to the CBC payroll, but giving them employment when they have established themselves in Canada—I see no essential basis for discrimination, on individual-by-individual selection.

Mr. Stanbury: I think I would agree with you completely, and perhaps even go a step further and say that I do not see any reason why you should not attract talented people to come to Canada if they want to stay here. But one of the concerns, as you know, has been the use of what many people feel is excessive use of non-Canadians, not only in the public network but in other Canadian reduced shows and commercials.

Mr. Knight of ACTRA: when he was here, set forth a proposition on which I would appreciate your comments. He suggested that you probably could be a little more of the guiding hand in persuading producers to analyze each individual proposed importation of American talent, or non-Canadian talent—I think he may have mentioned American talent particularly—in the light of the availability of Canadian talent which could do the same job. I put forth the proposition, I believe, that in each case a producer should be expected to justify to his superiors the importation of talent as being necessary, where he was proposing to import talent rather than recruit it here.

Mr. Osler: It seems to me that is what happens in the States.

Mr. Stanbury: Well, perhaps that is a matter of immigration law in the States. He was proposing that as one of the Corporation's responsibilities it should try to ensure, all other things being equal, that Canadian talent is employed and that where it is proposed to hire American talent for any particular role, it should be a matter of justification in each case to the producer's superior.

[Interprétation]

M. Davidson: Cela se peut. Je n'irai pas jusqu'à dire que nous ne devrions pas tenir compte d'un sain équilibre dans nos politiques de recrutement. Mais je tiens à souligner que je ne suis pas prêt à établir une distinction entre les citoyens canadiens nés ici et ceux qui ont obtenu leur citoyenneté canadienne. Et lorsqu'il y a certaines personnes qui viennent du Canada, qui sont devenues immigrants reçus et qui ont passé une partie considérable de leur vie au Canada, et qui possèdent une expérience qui nous permette de leur offrir un emploi—il ne s'agit pas de les faire venir au Canada dans le but de les ajouter au bordereau des salaires de Radio-Canada, mais de leur fournir un emploi après qu'ils se sont établis au Canada. Je ne vois aucune raison de faire de la discrimination au moyen d'une sélection personnelle.

M. Stanbury: Je suis certainement d'accord avec vous. Je pourrais aller plus loin mais je ne vois pas pourquoi vous ne deviez pas attirer des personnes compétentes qui voudraient venir au Canada pour s'y établir. Mais ce qui nous occupe, comme vous le savez, c'est qu'on a trop souvent recours, vous le savez, à un nombre excessif de non-canadiens, non seulement sur le réseau de l'État, mais dans d'autres spectacles et commerciaux réalisés au Canada—M. Knight, de l'ACTRA, a mis de l'avant une proposition que j'aimerais vous entendre commenter. Il dit que vous pourriez guider davantage les réalisateurs, les convaincre d'analyser le cas de chaque importation d'artistes américains qui est proposée, ou d'artistes non-canadiens—je crois avoir mentionné les artistes américains en particulier—à la lumière du fait que des artistes canadiens pourraient être disponibles et faire le même travail. Je crois qu'il a proposé que dans chaque cas, on devrait demander au réalisateur d'établir que l'importation d'un artiste étranger est indispensable, dans le cas où il proposerait d'importer un artiste plutôt que de le choisir parmi les nôtres.

M. Osler: Il me semble que c'est ce qui est arrivé aux États-Unis.

M. Stanbury: Bien peut-être est-ce sujet à la loi de l'immigration, aux États-Unis. Il proposait que la Société Radio-Canada devrait tenter de s'assurer que, tous les autres facteurs s'équivalant, l'on ait recours surtout aux artistes canadiens et lorsqu'il est question de faire appel à des artistes américains pour jouer un rôle en particulier, que l'on justifie ce choix au supérieur du réalisateur.

[Text]

Dr. Davidson: I would not question the general desirability of the proposition that this can be stated in broad terms. I would not, however, wish to see us put in a position where individual justification in each case became a routine bureaucratic necessity because it seems to me that this would add rigidity to a situation which is in the interest of, I think, even Canadians to keep fairly flexible.

But as a general proposition I recognize that we should be more interested in showing first-class Canadian talent over the Canadian airwaves than replacing that first-class Canadian talent with talent from the U.S.A. or other countries that is no better than our own talent.

Mr. Stanbury: I think I can agree with you that it should not become a bureaucratic process to carry out that general purpose, but are you not saying when you suggest that it would be very complicated and bureaucratic to do what Mr. Knight suggests that there is a tremendous amount of importation now and that in other words it would be a problem of some magnitude to check each case with the producer's superior?

Dr. Davidson: No, I am not suggesting that but I am suggesting that it would be inadvisable in my opinion to issue, for example, a directive to all producers saying, "Any time you want to import an actor or a performer of any kind from outside, you must in that particular case send an individual memorandum of justification to your superior officer" and have it processed through the bureaucracy which some people think exists in the CBC.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a supplementary? I certainly think that Dr. Davidson has expressed his philosophy well and I certainly can agree with him. I think most of us feel that way about it. But I have also heard a number of complaints from Canadian actors who have been in little theatre and done some professional work. They say that it is probably natural that there are cliques all across the country of actors who get all of the work. They claim that an extremely high percentage of these people come from the United States and Great Britain and other centres. The suggestion is that a prophet is not honoured in his own land—if he is a Thespian, at least. Now perhaps they are bad actors.

[Interpretation]

M. Davidson: Je ne veux pas mettre en doute l'avantage à l'effet que cette proposition soit clairement définie. Toutefois, je ne voudrais pas que nous nous trouvions dans une situation où la justification individuelle dans chaque cas deviendrait une nécessité bureaucratique de routine car il me semble que cette proposition rendrait plus rigide une situation qui est dans l'intérêt, je dirais, même des Canadiens d'être raisonnablement flexibles.

Mais en général, je conçois que nous devrions nous intéresser beaucoup plus à présenter sur les ondes canadiennes, les excellents talents canadiens plutôt que de remplacer ce talent par un autre provenant des États-Unis et qui n'est pas meilleur que le nôtre.

M. Stanbury: Je crois être d'accord avec vous qu'il ne faudrait pas que cela devienne un processus bureaucratique pour atteindre l'objectif, mais, lorsque vous suggérez que cela serait trop complexe, et bureaucratique pour faire ce que monsieur Knight dit de faire, ne voulez-vous pas dire qu'il y a en ce moment une grosse importation et, qu'en d'autres termes, il serait quelque peu problématique de vérifier chaque cas avec le supérieur du réalisateur?

M. Davidson: Non, ce n'est pas ce que je veux dire. Je crois qu'il serait peu souhaitable, d'émettre des directives à tous les réalisateurs disant que chaque fois qu'on voudrait importer un acteur ou un artiste quelconque, justification individuelle à votre supérieur et il vous faudra dans chaque cas présenter une la faire étudier par les bureaucrates de Radio-Canada.

M. Perrault: Monsieur le président, permettez-moi de poser une question supplémentaire. Je crois que le docteur Davidson a assez bien exprimé son point de vue; je suis tout à fait d'accord avec lui, et nous sommes presque tous du même avis. Mais j'ai aussi entendu des plaintes de la part d'acteurs canadiens qui se sont produits dans de petits théâtres et ont fait un certain travail professionnel. Ce gens disent qu'il est naturel qu'il y ait des cliques d'un bout à l'autre du pays qui obtiennent tout le travail; ils estiment que beaucoup de ces acteurs viennent des États-Unis de la Grande Bretagne ou d'autres centres; nul n'est prophète dans son royaume, semble-t-il, du moins pour un thespien. Il y a peut-être de mauvais acteurs.

[texte]

My question is this, Mr. Chairman. As far as your producers are concerned are there any statistics to indicate the places of birth of those who act in CBC dramas?

I ask this not to suggest that we should adopt any arbitrary measures to reduce the percentages—I think your philosophy is fully supportable—but I just wonder whether or not these claims can even be supported from a statistical standpoint. In other words, how many have come from Britain and how many from the United States? Is there any way of discovering whether there is any statistical basis for these allegations?

Dr. Davidson: I could not begin to tell you, Mr. Perrault. I suspect that ACTRA would have statistics from its own records showing what percentage of its members are born outside of Canada.

Mr. Perrault: Yes. And the amount of work they are given by the Corporation. Presumably they would have that record as well.

Dr. Davidson: I think that information goes to ACTRA, does it not?

1305

Mr. Perrault: Perhaps it would be better to get that information from the other source.

The Chairman: That is right. They will be reading these reports with great attention, carefully, and perhaps they will forward us that information.

Mr. Stanbury: I think Dr. Davidson made a valid point, though, that it is not a question of the place of birth of people that is relevant. It is a question of whether they are making their life here in Canada or of whether they are being brought in, in fact, to replace unnecessarily others who are making their life in Canada.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, j'ai une dernière suggestion à faire, en vue de régler un problème laissé en suspens jusqu'à l'heure quand M. Givens a parlé de la publicité accordée aux délibérations de la Chambre des communes. Il a dit qu'elle n'était pas ce qu'elle devrait être, qu'on exploite plutôt un incident survenu durant la période des questions, incident qui ne reflète pas du tout les travaux de la Chambre pour l'après-midi et la soirée.

Ne pourriez-vous pas, monsieur Davidson, faire en sorte qu'un reporter s'y trouve en permanence, durant l'après-midi et la soirée. Il y sont occasionnellement, mais nous les

[Interprétation]

Voici une question, monsieur le président. En ce qui concerne vos réalisateurs, existe-t-il des statistiques qui indiqueraient les lieux de naissance de ceux qui tiennent des rôles dans les pièces théâtrales de Radio-Canada?

Si je pose cette question, ce n'est pas pour dire que nous devrions adopter des mesures arbitraires pour réduire les pourcentages—je suis tout à fait d'accord avec votre façon de penser—mais pour savoir si ces questions peuvent être justifiées—ne serait-ce que du point de vue de la statistique. En d'autres termes, combien d'acteurs sont venus de Grande-Bretagne et combien des États? Y a-t-il moyen de savoir s'il y avait des raisons valables qui justifieraient ces allégations?

M. Davidson: Je ne puis vous dire exactement, monsieur Perrault. Je crois que les dossiers d'ACTRA indiquent quelle proportion de ses membres sont nés à l'étranger.

M. Perrault: Oui. Ainsi que la quantité de travail que la société leur fournit. Ils auraient probablement ces détails aussi.

M. Davidson: Je crois que ces renseignements sont transmis à ACTRA, n'est-ce pas?

M. Perrault: Il serait préférable d'obtenir ces renseignements de l'autre source.

Le président: C'est exact. Ils liront ces rapports avec grand soin, sans doute et peut-être nous passeront-ils ces renseignements?

M. Stanbury: Je crois que l'argument de M. Davidson est valable. Il ne s'agit pas de déterminer à quel endroit ces gens là sont nés. Il s'agit plutôt de voir s'ils s'établissent au Canada, ou de voir si on les amène ici pour remplacer, sans raison, d'autres qui s'établissent au Canada, pour de bon.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I have a final question, in view of the problem that was left pending a while ago when Mr. Givens spoke about the publicity that is given to the proceedings of the House of Commons. He said that the publicity was not what it ought to be, and that it focussed on certain incidents that do not reflect at all the work of the House that is carried on during the afternoon and the evening.

Mr. Davidson, could you not always have in the House of Commons a reporter in the afternoon and in the evening? Reporters are there occasionally, but we see them leave the voyons partir après la période de questions. Je comprends que les délibérations ne soient pas toujours passionnantes, mais enfin, ils verront au moins où la Chambre s'en va. Vous avez des réalisateurs et des officiers qui font le tour du monde toute l'année, vous pourriez peut-être en avoir deux ou trois qui se tiennent à la Chambre des communes tout l'après-midi et toute la soirée, et qui pourraient envoyer de temps à autre des «communiqués» à vos commentateurs pour qu'eux, dans la soirée, puissent faire un commentaire objectif de ce qui s'est véritablement passé à la Chambre des communes.

Dr. Davidson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think our coverage of the House of Commons by our reporters and commentators here is really carried on in much the same way as the coverage by the other reporters of the Press Gallery. They are in for the question period. Everybody is excited by the question period and if you gentlemen did not perform so excitingly in the question period perhaps there would be more interest in the rest of the day's proceedings. But after that, if the CBC correspondent is not able to remain in the Chamber or does not choose to remain in the Chamber, he has access to the Blues and follows the debates of the House of Commons throughout the day just as any other reporter does. Why should he be imprisoned and forced to listen to everything you say?

Mr. Mongrain: Because it is part of their job. They blame us for not being there all the time, you see.

The Chairman: They themselves are never there.

Dr. Davidson: We do not blame you.

The Chairman: Mr. Perrault.

Mr. Perrault: A number of people concerned with the promotion of our Olympic athletes point out that the CBC spent several times the amount of money in covering the Olympics from Mexico City as we did in organizing and sending the team down there. Now I know that television broadcasting is very expensive but apart from those CBC commentators actually involved in the actuality telecasting—the commentators, cameramen and the rest—how many other CBC personnel went on that tour and what was the cost of the programming in which they were involved? I understand there were two or three program stories that originated from Mexico City during that week.

[Interpretation]

House after the question period. I know that the debates are not always terribly interesting, but at least they would know where the House is heading. You have producers and officials who travel around the world all year round. You might have one or two who would be in the House all afternoon and throughout the evening and who could send releases to your commentators who could make an objective comment during the evening about what has actually taken place in the House of Commons.

M. Davidson: Eh bien, monsieur le président, j'ai l'impression que les reportages effectués par nos journalistes et commentateurs sur la Chambre des communes se font essentiellement de la même façon que les reportages effectués par les journalistes de la presse. Ils sont à la Chambre pour la période des questions. Tout le monde s'y intéresse, et si vous, messieurs, ne donniez pas un aussi bon spectacle à la période des questions, il y aurait peut-être plus d'intérêt pour le restant des délibérations. Mais après cela, si le correspondant de Radio-Canada ne peut plus rester à la Chambre ou si par hasard il ne choisit pas d'y rester, il consulte les livres bleus et suit les débats de la Chambre toute la journée comme le ferait tout autre journaliste. Pourquoi s'emprisonnerait-il et se forcerait-il à écouter tout ce que vous dites?

M. Mongrain: Parce que cela fait partie de leur travail, et on nous blâme parce que nous n'y sommes pas tout le temps.

Le président: Ils n'y sont pourtant jamais eux-mêmes.

M. Davidson: Nous ne vous blâmons pas.

Le président: Monsieur Perrault.

M. Perrault: Plusieurs personnes qui encouragent nos athlètes olympiques ont soulevé le fait que la Société Radio-Canada avait dépensé beaucoup plus d'argent pour diffuser les jeux olympiques de Mexico que nous n'en avions dépensé pour y envoyer nos athlètes. Je sais que la télédiffusion coûte très cher, mais à part les commentateurs de la Société Radio-Canada participant aux émissions d'actualité, les commentateurs, les caméramen et le reste, combien d'autres employés de la Société Radio-Canada et quel a été le coût de la programmation des émissions auxquelles ils ont participé? Je crois parfaitement qu'il y a eu deux ou trois émissions en provenance de Mexico cette semaine-là.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. Perrault, you will find all that information in No. 13 of the Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence.

Mr. Perrault: I appreciate that, Mr. Chairman, I joined the Committee only a few days ago and I was not aware of that fact.

The Chairman: The next meeting of the Committee will be on Thursday at 11 o'clock. We will be meeting with the Montreal section of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers. You already have their briefs.

We will have two hours of questions and answers. It will be in Room 371, West Block.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, au sujet des programmes, à quelle association l'Union des artistes appartient-elle?

• 1310

M. Picard: A FAAC, la Fédération des auteurs et artistes du Canada.

M. Mongrain: Merci. L'Union des artistes de Montréal a exprimé le désir de comparaître devant le Comité après que l'ACTRA soit venue témoigner. Ne pourrions-nous pas leur réserver quelques minutes?

The Chairman: They have made no request.

Mr. Mongrain: No. They made it to me. They will be writing to you but it may be too late.

The Chairman: I think in this case, since we did hear ACTRA, that we will be able to arrange to hear them if they wish to appear.

Meeting adjourned.

[Interprétation]

Le président: Monsieur Perrault, vous allez trouver tous ces renseignements dans le procès-verbal du fascicule n° 13 du Comité de la radiodiffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts.

M. Perrault: Je vous remercie, monsieur le président. Je ne fais partie du Comité que depuis quelques jours et j'étais ignorant de ce fait.

Le président: La prochaine réunion aura lieu jeudi à onze heures, en compagnie de l'Association des cinéastes canadiens, section de Montréal dont vous avez déjà reçu les mémoires.

Il y aura deux heures de questions et réponses. Ceci aura lieu à la pièce 371 de l'Édifice de l'Ouest.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, regarding the program, what association do they belong to?

Mr. Picard: FAAC, the Fédération des auteurs et artistes du Canada.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you. The Union des artistes of Montreal has expressed the desire to appear before the Committee after ACTRA has testified. Could we not give them a few minutes of our time?

Le président: Ils n'ont présenté aucune demande.

M. Mongrain: Non, mais ils me l'ont présentée à moi. Ils vous écriront mais il sera peut-être trop tard.

Le président: Je crois, en l'occurrence, qu'étant donné que nous avons entendu les représentants de l'ACTRA, nous serons en mesure de les entendre s'ils veulent venir.

La séance est levée.

NOTE: The schedule shown for the projects is of a tentative nature and depends upon a number of variables. In the case of remote locations, on-site surveys may reveal elements not presently known. In the case of television development in Toronto, the schedule would be affected by the development of a common tower by private interests, in downtown Toronto. The operational dates of the various projects are directly related to the approval date by CRTC and by the magnitude and complexity of a given project.

La mise en service d'une tour commune, par le secteur privé, modifierait le calendrier des installations de télévision à Toronto. ## EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, March 13, 1969.

• 1110

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I think we can come to order.

We have with us today the witnesses from the Montreal Branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers. Appearing for the Montreal Branch, immediately to my right, is Mr. Wally Gentleman who is the Chairman of the Montreal Branch, Canadian Society of Cinematographers Brief Committee.

Next to him is Mr. Martin Bockner of Astral Films Ltd., next to him is Mr. Ronald Garrett; over to my right is Mr. Wilf Doucette of the Ottawa Chapter of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers and Mr. George Gorman from the Directors Guild of Canada.

As you know, this is the first in a series of hearings which we hope to hold on the film industry in Canada and we are presently having discussions with the Directors Guild in Toronto who have indicated an interest in appearing before this Committee on this particular subject.

I would now like to call on Mr. Gentleman to give us a summary of the two briefs which were filed with us some time ago.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le Président, j'invoque le règlement. L'autre jour, à Montréal, quand nous avons rencontré ces messieurs, il y avait aussi une organisation de langue française. Ces messieurs-ci vont-ils parler au nom de l'organisation de langue française, l'organisation de langue française va-t-elle être invitée ou si elle n'a pas demandé à l'être?

Mr. Wally Gentleman (Chairman, Canadian Society of Cinematographers Brief Committee): We are not representing the views of the French film-makers at this time. We have a letter from the APFQ with reference to their participation in things on a federal scale and at the moment they have not expressed a deep interest in this particular activity. However, the French group has been approached to sit with us on the advisory group of the CFDC and they also have been approached to work with us toward the formation of a Canadian film academy.

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le jeudi 13 mars 1969

Le président: Messieurs, je crois que nous pouvons commencer.

Nous allons entendre les témoins de la section Montréal de la Société canadienne des cinéastes. A ma droite, M. Wally Gentleman, président du Comité du mémoire de la section Montréal de la Société canadienne des cinéastes.

A côté de lui, M. Martin Bockner d'Astral Films Limited, ensuite M. Ronald Garrett, à ma droite, M. Wilf Doucette de la section Ottawa de la Société canadienne des cinéastes et M. George Gorman de la Directors Guild of Canada.

Comme vous le savez, c'est la première d'une série d'audiences que nous espérons tenir sur l'industrie cinématographique au Canada et nous tenons présentement des discussions avec la Directors Guild à Toronto qui ont indiqué leur intérêt à venir traiter de ce sujet au Comité.

Je demanderais à monsieur Gentleman de nous donner un résumé des deux mémoires qui ont été déposés.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The other day, in Montreal, when we met these gentlemen, there was also a French-language organization. Will these gentlemen talk on behalf of the French-language organization or is the French-language organization going to be invited to come, or has it not asked to be invited?

M. Wally Gentleman (président, Comité du mémoire de la Société canadienne des cinéastes): Nous ne représentons pas le point de vue des cinéastes de langue française. Nous avons une lettre de l'APFQ en ce qui concerne leur participation au niveau fédéral pour l'instant, ils ne sont pas particulièrement intéressés à cette activité. Néanmoins, nous avons approché les groupes français afin qu'ils participent aux séances du groupe consultatif de la SDICC et aussi pour travailler à la formation d'une académie du film canadien.

[Text]

Mr. Mongrain: Would you say they 100 per cent endorse your proposition?

Mr. Gentleman: Not at all. Jean Dansereau for the producers of Quebec has stated that he does not agree with the CSC brief as presented at this time, although he fully agrees with the intent of that brief.

Mr. Mongrain: Could I ask the Clerk, Mr. Chairman, if he received a request from this organization, either verbally or in writing to appear before this Committee?

The Clerk of the Committee: No.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

Mr. Gentleman: Specifically, the brief as set forth by the Canadian Society of Cinematographers is a protest against the continuation of government monopoly in film making. The proposals that it makes are swift proposals that were formulated to indicate that the industry can begin to think for itself if it is allowed to do so.

The proposition that is before this Committee today and which is before the industry and the country at large is whether a Canadian is a North American before he is a Canadian. If, indeed, we are Canadians before we are North Americans, then it is time we stopped the infiltration of American media into this country which is dumped on us continuously from the CBC and in the educational field. There is little opportunity for film-makers in this country to produce our own educational film material; there is little opportunity for private film producers to have films made which are distributed on the CBC networks. Similarly, we are crossed by the National Film Board's operation and this state of affairs has gone on since 1957.

In 1959 there was a brief set forth by the AMPPLC containing a series of objections which are still of importance today because the basic situation has not changed. I could read those objections which are contained in their brief, but I only will go on record at this time by saying that the CSC brief summarizes all the briefs that have ever been submitted by all the film organizations ever since 1957.

I think it would be wise to take the CSC brief in the context that it is an expression of general dissatisfaction with the state of the film-maker's industry in Canada today because the same problems that face us now are precisely those which faced us 10 years ago and there has been no change regardless

[Interpretation]

M. Mongrain: Est-ce qu'ils appuient votre proposition à 100 p. 100?

M. Gentleman: Non. Jean Dansereau, pour les réalisateurs du Québec, a dit qu'il n'était pas d'accord avec le mémoire du SCC bien qu'il soit d'accord avec l'intention à la base de ce mémoire.

M. Mongrain: Puis-je demander au secrétaire, monsieur le président, s'il a reçu une demande, écrite ou orale, de participer de la part de cette organisation?

Le secrétaire du comité: Non.

M. Mongrain: Merci.

M. Gentleman: Le mémoire, tel que présenté par la Société canadienne des cinéastes, proteste contre le monopole du gouvernement en matière de films. Les propositions qui sont faites sont des propositions qui ont été formulées pour indiquer que l'industrie pourrait commencer à penser par elle-même si on le lui permettait.

La proposition que le Comité a sous les yeux et qui est sous les yeux de l'industrie et de tout le pays en général, est à savoir si un Canadien est un Nord-Américain avant d'être un Canadien. Si nous sommes Canadiens avant d'être Nord-Américains, alors il est temps que nous arrêtions l'infiltration des moyens de communication américains au Canada que nous avons par l'intermédiaire de Radio-Canada et dans le domaine de l'éducation. Il y a peu de possibilités que les réalisateurs de films canadiens puissent produire nos propres films éducatifs; il y a aussi peu de possibilités pour que les producteurs indivi-duels fassent des films qui puissent être distribués sur les réseaux de Radio-Canada. En plus, nous sommes contrecarrés par l'Office national du film et ceci dure depuis 1957.

En 1959, un mémoire a été présenté par AMPPLC qui donnait quelques objections qui sont encore importantes parce que la situation n'a pas changé. Je pourrais lire les objections qui figurent dans leur mémoire, mais je vais me limiter à dire pour le moment que le mémoire de la Société canadienne des Cinéastes résume tous les mémoires qui ont été présentés depuis 1957.

Je pense qu'il serait sage de prendre ce mémoire comme étant l'expression d'un mécontentement général en ce qui concerne l'industrie du film aujourd'hui parce que les mêmes problèmes qui nous font face maintenant sont exactement les mêmes auxquels nous avons eu à faire face il y a dix ans et il of the fact that the CFDC has been formed. We regard the CFDC as being a government appointed committee which has been imposed on the industry. We have had no say in the structure of that organization and only by pressing very strongly have we recently been able to get them to agree to form an advisory group in order that industry opinion should be brought to their notice.

As President of the SFM, the Society of Film Makers, I objected to the course of CFDC activities as long ago as August last year with a manifesto that was circulated to them. Our offers of help and mutual understanding have been continuously disregarded and many of their deliberations have become suspect by professional film-makers. We feel that in asking for the ouster of Mr. Spencer and Mr. Lapalme we have brought attention to the fact that we are dissatisfied with the course of that organization. In particular, we object very much to the appointment of a chairman who has often declared himself to be a part-time chairman and who objects to coming into his office every day. We submit that the state of the industry at this time does not require this sort of personality.

We need someone who is resolute, vigorous and very staunchly Canadian at heart to see that the industry that we hope to enjoy will prosper in this country and become a means of acquiring dollars through the export of our products.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Gentleman. Would it be agreeable to the Committee if the two briefs which we have before us, Part I, dated January 10, 1969 and Part II, also dated January 10, 1969, as well as the speech that Mr. Gentleman gave to us when we were in Montreal on February 10 were printed as Appendices to our Minutes of Proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Would any other members of your delegation like to make any comments before we open the meeting to general questioning?

Mr. Gentleman: No.

The Chairman: That is fine; we now are open to general questioning. Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Gentleman has indicated the desire of the cinematographers to co-operate in an advisory capacity with the Canadian Film Development Corporation and that until the present time there has been no inclination on the part of the Corporation or the government to involve the n'y a pas eu de changement depuis la formation de la SDICC. Nous considérons la SDICC comme un comité nommé par le gouvernement qui a été imposé à l'industrie. Nous n'avons eu rien à dire en ce qui concerne la structure de cette organisation, et c'est seulement en insistant beaucoup récemment que nous avons pu obtenir la création d'un comité consultatif afin que l'on puisse tenir compte de l'opinion de l'industrie.

En tant que président de la Société des réalisateurs de films, je me suis objecté aux activités de la SDICC dès août dernier dans un manifeste qui a été distribué. Ils n'ont jamais tenu compte de nos suggestions et leurs délibérations sont considérées avec méfiance par les cinéastes. Nous pensons qu'en demandant que M. Spencer et M. Lapalme soient renvoyés, nous avons attiré l'attention sur le fait que nous ne sommes pas satisfaits de cette organisation. Surtout, nous avons des objections quant à la nomination d'un président qui a souvent dit qu'il est un président à temps partiel et qui refuse de venir dans son bureau tous les jours. Nous n'avons pas besoin de ce genre de personne.

En ce moment, il nous faut quelqu'un de vigoureux et très profondément canadien pour s'assurer que l'industrie puisse prospérer dans ce pays et devenir un moyen d'obtenir des dollars d'exportation.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Gentleman. Est-ce que le comité serait d'accord pour que les deux mémoires que nous avons sous les yeux, la première partie datée le 10 janvier 1969 et la deuxième partie de la même date, ainsi que le discours que M. Gentleman nous a fait à Montréal, soient inclus dans notre procès-verbal?

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: Est-ce que d'autres membres de votre délégation aimeraient faire des remarques avant que nous posions des questions?

M. Gentleman: Non.

Le président: Très bien; nous passons alors aux questions, monsieur Dinsdale?

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, M. Gentleman a indiqué que les cinéastes veulent collaborer, à titre consultatif, avec la société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne (Canadian Film Development Corporation) et qu'il n'y a pas eu de coopération de la part du gouvernement pour professional cinematographers in the activities of the CFDC. Mr. Gentleman also indicated that there is some suggestion now that the recommendation for the setting up of an advisory board or committee is under consideration by the government and the CFDC. Is there quite specific assurance on this point?

[Text]

• 1120

Mr. Gentleman: The assurance is not specific at this time. We held a meeting—the CSC in company with the representatives of approximately 13 other organizations. Some of the professional organizations were absent but in total we represented 17 professional film organizations across Canada.

We met the CFDC officials, Lapalme and Spenser, at the Holiday Inn in Montreal on February 28, and we called upon them to form the advisory group as quickly as possible because the general feeling amongst all professional organizations was that they were not informed enough to make the rather strange decisions they had been making.

We pressured them to accept nominations of two people from each society; one person to be nominated and the other to be an alternate, that would form the basis of the advisory group. They requested three names in each organization from us and we said, "Why do you need three names?", and they said, "Well, we must make a choice." When pressed on that issue they said that the Minister must make a choice from three names submitted from each society. We said: "As this is a democratic process surely the two people that we choose from our own society are the people we want and there should not be any room for a choice. Whereupon Michael Spenser for the CFDC said that our attitude would be conveyed to the board of governors, who would meet in a month's time, for a decision on whether this proposal would be accepted. Further, we asked at that meeting whether meetings of the advisory group would automatically require the recording of minutes and this was treated somewhat hesitantly. It was affirmed that if the Minister were to ask a question of the advisory group then there would be minutes recorded but any other questions need not necessarily be recorded. This also is an attitude which, speaking for all organizations who were at that meeting, is decidedly suspect.

Mr. Dinsdale: You refer to a board of governors. Are the cinematographers represented on this board of governors?

Mr. Gentleman: Unfortunately not.

Mr. Ronald Garrett (Member of Canadian Society of Cinematographers): Excuse me, impliquer les cinéastes professionnels dans les activités de la SDICC. M. Gentleman a aussi indiqué qu'il y avait eu des recommandations pour l'établissement d'un comité consultatif et cette question est étudiée par le gouvernement et la SDICC. Est-ce que nous avons des assurances précises à ce sujet?

M. Gentleman: Les assurances ne sont pas précises. Notre organisme a tenu des rencontres avec les représentants d'environ 13 autres organismes. Certains organismes n'étaient pas représentés mais, en fait, un total de 17 l'étaient.

Nous avons rencontré les responsables de la SDICC, Messieurs Lapalme et Spencer à Montréal, le 28 février. Nous leur avons demandé de former ce comité consultatif le plus tôt possible parce qu'en général, les organismes professionnels concernés croient que la Société n'est pas suffisamment bien renseignée pour prendre les décisions qui ont été prises.

Nous les avons priés d'accepter que chaque société désigne deux représentants, dont un substitut, pour former la base de ce comité consultatif. Ils nous ont demandé de soumettre les noms de trois membres de chaque organisme. Lorsque nous leur avons demandé pourquoi, ils ont répondu qu'ils voulaient pouvoir effectuer un choix. Ils ont ajouté par la suite que le ministre devait pouvoir faire ce choix. Nous avons ajouté: «Puisqu'il s'agit d'un processus démocratique, il nous semble que les deux personnes que nous allons choisir sont certainement celles que nous voulons.» Monsieur Spenser a alors répondu qu'il ferait part de notre attitude au conseil d'administration, qui devait se réunir un mois plus tard, et qu'il serait alors décidé si cette proposition pouvait être acceptée. Nous avons également demandé s'il serait nécessaire d'établir un procès-verbal des séances du comité consultatif, sujet sur lequel on a quelque peu hésité. On nous a répondu que si le ministre posait des questions à ce sujet qu'il y aurait procès-verbal mais qu'il était inutile de coucher le reste par écrit. Une telle attitude nous paraît décidément suspecte.

M. Dinsdale: Vous avez parlé du conseil d'administration. Y êtes-vous représenté?

M. Gentleman: Malheureusement, non.

M. Ronald Garrett (Membre de la Société canadienne des cinéastes): Aucun cinéaste there are no professional film people represented at the present time on the board of governors of the CFDC.

Mr. Dinsdale: How many are on the board?

Mr. Garrett: As a matter of fact, Mr. Dinsdale, I think it states in the Act that the people who make up the board of governors are not supposed to be connected in any way with the film industry.

Mr. Dinsdale: You do not happen to know the names of the members of the board?

Mr. Gentleman: I think George would probably know. They are people who according to the Act must have no pecuniary interest whatsoever in film production in Canada. This also seems to indicate that the do not have any qualifications or understanding of the film business which is more important to us. George, can you answer that?

Mr. George Gorman (Executive Secretary of Guild of Canada Directors): I cannot give you the names, no.

The Chairman: We can get those without difficulty. I will undertake to have those circulated before we have another meeting.

Mr. Gentleman: It is rather interesting to say that this is very much a closed body which has never met collectively with the industry so we have no understanding of its operation whatsoever.

Mr. Dinsdale: Was the industry consulted in the formative stage when the whole question of setting up the film corporation was under discussion? This was a long process from the time the announcement was originally made until the final implementation. Was there no consultation?

• 1125

Mr. Gorman: Many of the organizations were asked to submit briefs on the formation of the Canadian Film Development Corporation and how we interpreted the need for it. Certainly very little of our brief was ever incorporated into the Act. We tried very strenuously at the time of the debates when we finally had a look at Bill C-204 which was proposed but we were quite unsuccessful in getting any kind of amendment to it. I think we got one amendment, that the chairman would receive an honorarium. We felt he was going to have his work cut out for him and he should not be sort of a part-time dollar-a-year man who would meet periodically with professionnel ne fait partie, présentement, du conseil d'administration de la SDICC.

M. Dinsdale: Combien de membres compte ce conseil?

M. Garrett: Je crois, monsieur Dinsdale, que le texte de loi précise que les membres de ce conseil ne doivent avoir aucun lien avec l'industrie cinématographique.

M. Dinsdale: Connaissez-vous les noms des membres de ce conseil?

M. Gentleman: Je crois que George est au courant. Ces personnes ne doivent avoir aucun intérêt financier dans la production de films au Canada. Ce qui pourrait indiquer qu'ils ne sont pas qualifiés ou qu'ils n'entendent rien à ce domaine. George peux-tu répondre à la question?

M. George Gorman (Secrétaire exécutif de la Guild of Canada Directors): Je ne puis vous donner ces noms.

Le président: Nous pouvons les obtenir facilement. Je m'engage à vous en faire circuler la liste avant la prochaine séance.

M. Gentleman: Il est intéressant de remarquer que c'est un organe très serré qui, dans son ensemble, n'a jamais rencontré notre industrie, de sorte que nous ignorons complètement leur façon de procéder.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que l'industrie a été consultée lorsqu'il a été question de mettre la SDICC sur pied? Il s'est écoulé un long temps entre l'annonce de la création de la Société et sa mise sur pied définitive. N'y a-t-il pas eu consultation?

M. Gorman: On a demandé à beaucoup d'organismes de soumettre des mémoires et de dire si nous y voyions un besoin réel. Très rares sont les éléments qui ont été pris dans notre mémoire et incorporés au texte de loi. Nous avons multiplié nos efforts lorsque nous avons pris connaissance du Bill C-204 mais nous n'avons pas réussi à y faire apporter d'amendements, sauf un, qui précisait que le président recevrait certains honoraires. Nous savions qu'il aurait beaucoup de pain sur la planche et nous ne voulions pas qu'il s'agisse d'un individu payé un dollar par année, qui ne participerait que de temps à autre à des rencontres avec le conseil d'administration. Il the board. Certainly in the first year or two of the Corporation's activities he would be very much needed and should therefore be paid a sum relative to the position he was going to hold.

Mr. Dinsdale: This recommendation was accepted?

Mr. Gorman: It was; that was the one amendment we got through.

Mr. Dinsdale: It was announced that a new executive director—I think that is the title—had recently been appointed and I recall during our meeting in Montreal one of your recommendations in the brief was that cinematographers be consulted about who might occupy that important position. Was there any consultation?

Mr. Gentleman: There is a very sorry chapter of incidents which has stemmed from that situation. On behalf of the Society of Film Makers that originally proposed that Michael Spenser be considered for a role in the Canadian Film Development Corporation we wrote a letter. First of all, we produced a manifesto in August 1968—last year—protesting the course of the activities of the CFDC. Then I believe as recently as February 4, I wrote a letter to the Secretary of State suggesting that in view of the fact the advisory group was soon to be formed no confirmation of the executive director should be announced until that advisory group had been formed. In reply I had a letter of acknowledgement from the Secretary of State's office. Then four days after we met Michael Spenser and Lapalme in Montreal, it was very slyly announced in the press that Michael Spenser had been confirmed as the executive director. Up to this time, of course, there is no advisory group. We find this to be a most objectionable and undemocratic procedure.

Mr. Dinsdale: You would urge as one of the basic solutions to this problem that there be fairly close and continuous consultation between the profession and the Corporation?

Mr. Gentleman: Most definitely, but more than that we need to dovetail our activities with government itself because many of our problems occur at a level on which only government can help us. For instance, we have in Canada a system whereby revisions are made to American products. The actual commercial product is made in the United States and by photographing another packet of that particular substance and inserting it into the body of the American production it then becomes a Canadian product to be put out on the television circuit.

[Interpretation]

nous paraissait évident qu'il aurait beaucoup à faire au cours de la première ou des deux premières années d'existence de la Société et c'est pourquoi nous voulions qu'il soit payé.

M. Dinsdale: Cette recommandation a été acceptée?

M. Gorman: C'est le seul amendement que nous avons obtenu.

M. Dinsdale: On vient d'annoncer la nomination d'un nouveau directeur exécutif. Lors de notre rencontre à Montréal, l'une de vos recommandations voulait que vous soyez consultés avant que ce poste important ne soit comblé. L'avez-vous été?

M. Gentleman: Au nom de la Société des cinéastes, qui fut la première à suggérer que Michael Spenser obtienne un poste au sein de la SDICC, nous avons écrit une lettre. Nous avions d'abord préparé un manifeste en août 1968 pour protester contre la façon d'agir de la SDICC. Vers le 4 février dernier, j'ai écrit au Secrétaire d'État pour lui demander que, puisque le comité consultatif serait bientôt formé, aucune décision ne soit prise avant la formation de ce comité. Je n'ai reçu qu'un accusé de réception du bureau du Secrétaire d'État. Puis quatre jours après notre rencontre avec messieurs Spenser et Lapalme à Montréal, nous apprenions que Michael Spenser était confirmé dans le poste de directeur exécutif. Et le comité consultatif n'est toujours pas formé. Nous trouvons cette façon d'agir peu démocratique.

M. Dinsdale: Autrement dit, vous recommandez pour régler ce problème qu'il y ait consultation entre l'industrie que vous représentez et la Société?

M. Gentleman: Définitivement, et plus que cela encore, nous devons rejoindre, dans nos activités, le gouvernement puisque certains de nos problèmes ne peuvent être réglés que par le gouvernement. Il existe, au Canada, un système de revision des produits américains. Le film publicitaire est produit aux États-Unis. En photographiant un produit et en l'insérant à l'endroit où figure le produit original dans le film, vous obtenez un produit canadien qui apparaît sur les écrans de télévision.

their television or cinema; they must be produced in Australia. This, of course, provides work for the film people. This is one instance which demands government consideration.

We have problems in the labour relations field and I think probably Mr. Doucette can speak on this because he was agitating about it a long time ago. It concerns the control that the IATSE union exerts over the body of Canadian cinematographers.

We have an industry which is dominated by American money in the form of distribution of films and we also have the creeping paralysis of an IATSE union of which many Canadians are now members. The union in particular that I am concerned with, Local 644, New York exerts direct control over the operations of the Canadian cameramen in Toronto.

When I spoke to Michael Spenser on this he shrugged it off by saying that is the concern of the Canadian Labour Congress. In this he may be correct, but I do believe that it is vitally necessary for the Canadian Film Development Corporation to stop thinking in terms of just being a bank. They are not a bank in the estimation of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers. They are the means by which a viable Canadian industry can be built and they may even seek to extend the mandate under the Act, but they must be resolute and informed enough to do this and Michael Spenser is not that sort of person. He does not want to go beyond his mandate and shelters behind it.

I do not believe this is the sort of attitude that is going to help us win the war of markets by developing an industry in Canada.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Dinsdale, would you let me ask a supplementary for a moment?

Mr. Dinsdale: Certainly.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman. I would like to know what percentage of American scale the IATSE people demand in Canada?

Mr. Gentleman: I am not a member of IATSE and I have constantly resisted being a member because it is an American-dominated union, so my information on their activities is very limited.

Mr. Osler: Because our record has not been printed I would hesitate to say this in a definitive way, but my recollection is that the En Australie, le gouvernement a institué un système qui prohibe l'utilisation de commerciaux étrangers à la télévision ou dans les cinémas. Ils doivent être produits sur place. Ce qui donne du travail à l'industrie cinématographique. Voilà un domaine où il faut recourir au gouvernement.

Nous avons certains problèmes auxquels nous faisons face dans le domaine des relations de travail. Monsieur Doucette peut probablement parler de ce sujet qu'il connaît très bien. Il s'agit du contrôle qu'un syndicat, IATSE, exerce sur les cinéastes canadiens.

Notre industrie est dominée par les capitaux américains en ce qui concerne la distribution des films et nous avons également l'action paralysante d'un syndicat comme le IATSE dont beaucoup de Canadiens font partie. Et je pense particulièrement au local n° 644 de ce syndicat, qui exerce un contrôle direct sur les activités des caméramen de Toronto. Lorsque j'en ai parlé à Michael Spenser, il n'a pas voulu en entendre parler disant que ce devrait être au Conseil du Travail du Canada à s'en occuper. Il a peut-être raison. Mais, de toute façon, il est vital pour la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne d'arrêter de se prendre pour une banque. Ce n'est pas une banque du point de vue de l'Association des cinéastes professionnels canadiens. C'est en fait un moyen permettant d'établir une industrie canadienne rentable et parfois même la Société peut être amenée à élargir leur mandat. Mais elle doit être résolue à agir de cette façon, et Michael Spenser n'est pas une personne de cette trempe. Il ne veut pas aller au-delà de son mandat. Je ne pense pas, pour ma part, que ce soit là le genre d'attitude qu'il faut avoir si nous voulons notre place au soleil.

M. Osler: Monsieur Dinsdale, puis-je poser une question supplémentaire?

M. Dinsdale: Certainement.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais savoir le pourcentage de l'échelle de salaire américain que les employés de IATSE réclament au Canada?

M. Gentleman: Eh bien, je ne suis pas membre de IATSE parce que j'ai toujours refusé de faire partie d'un syndicat dominé par les Américains. Ainsi, je n'ai que peu de renseignements sur leurs activités.

M. Osler: Nos comptes rendus n'étant pas encore imprimés, j'hésiterai à l'affirmer, mais il me semble que la Société Radio-Canada

CBC told us that IATSE, and certainly most of the unions that they deal with, are running about 60 to 65 per cent of American scale. It would not seem to me...

Mr. Garrett: I can give you at least part of an answer to that question. I will tell you how much I pay IATSE scale to...

Mr. Osler: I am not interested in what you pay; I am only interested in the relationship between what you pay and what they pay in the States.

Mr. Garrett: I think it is approximately the same, because at present for an ordinary scale eight-hour day I am paying $125.00. For holiday overtime I am paying $200.00 to $250.00 for a professional cinematographer. For a sound man I am paying on an ordinary day $50.00 approximately, and on an overtime scale I am paying $100.00. This includes most of the class of technicians below cinematographer.

Mr. Osler: Would there be any hidden road-blocks that we would not see, such as your paying on a daily rate and their paying on a contract basis that would make a difference? They definitely said they were paying nowhere near American scale.

Mr. Garrett: I do not think you can hire IATSE people at anything but a daily rate. Most of them will not work for anything less than a daily rate. Certainly if you had a very long production that you were shooting you could probably work out some kind of contract with the local, but you would have to negotiate the contract with the local itself. According to the IATSE rules they cannot negotiate individually at any rate less than the going rate for the area. If you are shooting for two or three weeks you would probably end up paying the maximum scale rate for every day of shooting.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Osler, you will find on page 3 of the first brief a fairly elaborate presentation of wage rates and so on.

Mr. Osler: I see that, but I am not worried about the actual dollar values. I am worried about the percentage of American scale they are paying because I do not think they are paying anywhere near it.

The Chairman: Perhaps that is something the cinematographers might find out for us and then write a letter which we could later include in our Minutes.

[Interpretation]

nous a déjà dit que la plupart des syndicats affiliés à IATSE fonctionnent à environ 60 à 65 p. 100 de l'échelle américaine.

M. Garrett: Je peux vous répondre et donner au moins une partie de la réponse à cette question. Je veux dire combien paye...

M. Osler: Non, je ne veux pas savoir ce que vous payez, je veux savoir le rapport qu'il y a entre ce que vous payez et ce qu'ils payent aux États-Unis.

M. Garrett: Eh bien, je pense que c'est à peu près la même chose parce que actuellement je paie $125 par journée de huit heures. Pour les heures supplémentaires, et les jours fériés, de $200 à $250 par jour pour un cinéaste professionnel. Pour un technicien du son, je paie $50 par jour ouvrable et $100 par jour en ce qui concerne les heures supplémentaires. Ce qui comprend la plus grande partie des techniciens sous les ordres des cinéastes.

M. Osler: Cela cache-t-il des faits que nous ne connaissons pas, tels que des paiements au taux par contrats plutôt qu'au taux journalier? Ils disent que nous payons presque selon l'échelle américaine.

M. Garrett: Je ne pense pas qu'on puisse engager des syndiqués de IATSE à des taux autres que les taux journaliers. La plupart d'entre eux ne travailleraient pas pour moins que le taux journalier. Par contre, si vous avez une longue production, vous pouvez peut-être passer un contrat avec le local. Mais il faut que vous fassiez un contrat directement avec le local, car selon les règlements de IATSE, les membres ne peuvent pas négocier individuellement à des taux moindres que ceux fixés pour la région. Si vous tournez durant 3 ou 4 semaines, vous vous trouverez certainement à payer le taux maximum pour chaque jour de tournage.

Le président: Vous verrez à la page 3 du premier mémoire qu'il y a une présentation assez complète de ces taux de salaires.

M. Osler: Non, mais en fait ce n'est pas la valeur du dollar qui m'intéresse, c'est le pourcentage de l'échelle américaine qui est payé, car je ne pense pas qu'ils paient un montant plus ou moins équivalent.

Le président: Peut-être que l'Association pourra obtenir les renseignements pour nous et nous les envoyer; nous pourrions alors les inclure aux procès-verbaux.

[Texte]

Mr. Gorman: I might say a word on that. To the best of my knowledge the IATSE in the Toronto area have negotiated an agreement with CBC at a somewhat lower rate, so because they offer full-time employment there may be a differential.

Mr. Garrett: If I may add something to that too, the CBC has its own rate which it pays. It does not matter too much whether a man is a member of one union or another. He is offered a certain price and he can work for that price or not.

Mr. Osler: That is to you, but they are still paying union rates and they are bargaining with every individual union.

Mr. Garrett: I do not think...

Mr. Osler: I know they are.

Mr. Garrett: At least in the case of Montreal, I do not think they have any agreements with any film unions outside their own house union, which is CUPE in this case.

Mr. Osler: Well, I know they have an agreement with IATSE, for instance, in Toronto.

Mr. Garrett: I do not believe they have one in Montreal.

Mr. Osler: They have an agreement with somebody. Do you mean it is non-union in Montreal?

Mr. Garrett: In Montreal, there are certain number of CBC staff, I think about 15 cameramen, who come under the CUPE house contract. Outside that, the CBC producers are permitted to hire whom they wish as long as the man is an accredited, responsible cinematographer.

In the case of the CBC in Montreal he is offered a rate of $60 a day as a rule without equipment—that is, just standing up in his clothes, without equipment at all—and he can either work for that price or not work for that price. Sometimes the film department is apt to make deals, depending on their relative merits of one cinematographer over another.

For example, a man like Michel Brault can negotiate a higher rate even though he is not an IATSE member; if the budget is there for a program it is possible to pay him more. However, the general rule is that cinematographers are paid $60 a day whether they are IATSE or not.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale?

[Interprétation]

M. Gorman: Eh bien, autant que je le sache, dans la région de Toronto, l'IATSE a passé un accord avec la Société Radio-Canada à un tarif inférieur, pour la raison suivante: La Société Radio-Canada offre des emplois à temps plein. Par conséquent, il y a toute une différence.

M. Garrett: Je peux dire que Radio-Canada a son propre tarif. Et peu importe que l'on appartienne à un syndicat ou à un autre syndicat, la Société offre un certain salaire, et les personnes concernées sont libres d'accepter ou non les normes.

M. Osler: Oui, mais ça c'est ce que vous pensez. La Société n'en continue pas moins à payer selon les taux des syndicats et elle négocie avec chaque syndicat.

M. Garrett: Non, je ne pense pas...

M. Osler: Ils le font.

M. Garrett: Du moins pour Montréal. Je ne crois pas qu'ils aient des contrats avec des syndicats autres que leur propre syndicat, le CUPE.

M. Osler: Je sais que la Société a un contrat avec IATSE à Toronto.

M. Garrett: Je ne crois pas qu'il y en a un à Montréal.

M. Osler: Ils ont un contrat avec quelqu'un. Voulez-vous dire qu'il n'y a pas de syndicat à Montréal?

M. Garrett: A Montréal, il y a un certain nombre de caméramens à l'emploi de Radio-Canada, à peu près 15 caméramens, qui sont régis par le contrat du CUPE. En dehors de cela, Radio-Canada peut recruter qui elle veut, à condition que l'employé soit un cinéaste reconnu. Dans ce cas, à Montréal, on lui offre $60 par jour en général, sans matériel. Et il est libre ou non de travailler pour ce tarif.

Parfois, le cinéaste accepte des clauses particulières selon ses qualités.

Si on prend Michel Brault par exemple, il peut obtenir un tarif plus élevé bien qu'il ne fasse pas partie du syndicat IATSE mais on peut lui offrir, selon le cas, un tarif supérieur. Cependant la règle générale veut que le taux soit de $60 par jour, IATSE ou pas.

Le président: Monsieur Dinsdale.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Gentleman made several points in reply to my latest question. This labour problem was one. Are there any more questions relating to this?

The Chairman: We were dealing with the relationship with the CFDC and the various professional organizations. Perhaps we can clear that matter up first.

Mr. Stanbury, do you have questions on that?

Mr. Stanbury: I thought perhaps the Committee might get clear what these organizations are. Now, Mr. Gentleman is speaking today for what organization?

The Chairman: The Montreal Chapter of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers.

Mr. Gentleman: Well, rather the Chairman of the National Brief Committee of the CSC. In other words, I am representing the views of the head office in Toronto and the Montreal branch.

Mr. Stanbury: What is the membership of this organization?

Mr. Gentleman: We have approximately 75 to 80 members.

Mr. Stanbury: You are not sure of the number of members?

Mr. Gentleman: No, I am not.

Mr. Stanbury: Where are they located?

Mr. Gentleman: The preponderance are in Toronto and there are something like 12 members in Montreal, 15 in Ottawa and 3 out West.

Mr. Stanbury: What particular part of the film industry are these people interested in?

Mr. Gentleman: All aspects, because cinematographers are employed in all phases, from educational, industrial, television, feature film, all the way through.

Mr. Garrett: Mr. Stanbury, do you mean what does a cinematographer do?

Mr. Stanbury: For the uninitiated, what do your members do in the film industry?

Mr. Gentleman: Oh, I see; basically under the direction of the film director they are responsible for photographing a scene, to make up the visual part of a film production. They may also be their own directors. As director-cameramen they would not have a director telling them what to do. This is when

[Interpretation]

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur Gentleman a répondu à la plus grande partie de mes questions, justement à la question relative aux relations de travail.

Le président: Il y a d'autres questions? On parlait des rapport avec la SDICC et les autres organismes professionnels. Peut-être qu'on pourrait régler déjà cette question. Monsieur Stanbury, vous avez quelque chose à ajouter?

M. Stanbury: Je pense que le Comité devrait éclairer sur les organismes dont on traite. Monsieur Gentleman, vous êtes le porte-parole de quel organisme?

Le président: De la section montréalaise de l'Association canadienne des cinéastes professionnels.

M. Gentleman: Autrement dit, je représente le comité national sur le mémoire de notre Association. C'est-à-dire que je représente le siège de Toronto et la division de Montréal.

M. Stanbury: Combien de membres y a-t-il dans cet organisme?

M. Gentleman: Eh bien, environ 75 à 80 membres.

M. Stanbury: Vous ne savez pas exactement?

M. Gentleman: Non, je ne le sais pas.

M. Stanbury: Où se trouvent-ils?

M. Gentleman: Bien, ils se trouvent surtout à Toronto et il y a je crois 12 membres à Montréal, 15 à Ottawa et 3 dans l'Ouest.

M. Stanbury: Et qu'est-ce qui intéresse ces gens en général?

M. Gentleman: A peu près tout. Depuis les films éducatifs, jusqu'à la télévision, les longs métrages, etc. . .

M. Garrett: Vous voulez dire ce que font nos membres?

M. Stanbury: Pour le profane. Qu'est-ce que font vos membres?

M. Gentleman: Eh bien, en gros, ils sont chargés de filmer une scène sous la responsabilité du réalisateur qui fera partie du film. Parfois, même, ils peuvent être leur propre réalisateur. Comme cinéaste metteur en scène, ils n'ont personne pour les diriger. Cela se fait pour les prises à l'extérieur qui comportthey are on a location that involves either a small amount of equipment or a small number of personnel, in which case they assume the role of film directors as distinct from directors of photography.

Mr. Stanbury: So you are photographers primarily?

Mr. Gentleman: Primarily cinematographers.

Mr. Stanbury: That is to say, you handle cameras.

Mr. Gentleman: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: Would you be able to file a list of the names of your members with the Committee? I think that would be helpful.

Mr. Gentleman: Yes, I would like to.

Mr. Stanbury: There is another organization called the Society of Film Makers.

Mr. Gentleman: Right.

Mr. Stanbury: Since you are the President of that organization, perhaps you could explain what it is.

Mr. Gentleman: Yes. Within the Society of Film Makers we would have at this time approximately 87 members, the bulk of those, probably 65, being concentrated at the National Film Board of Canada.

As such, they represent, if you will, the distillation of the available talent in a concentrated pool within the confines of the National Film Board. They are not solely interested with the activities within the Film Board; they are vitally concerned with the growth of the industry outside. Within our ranks we would automatically include directors, editors and cameramen. It becomes not a trade organization but more of a fraternal organization which, in the first place, was created as a pressure group to try and organize the activities of the Film Board and, further, to come out of the Film Board and assist with associations like the Directors Guild to bring about conditions which would be beneficial to the growth of the film industry in Canada in general.

Mr. Stanbury: Now you accept into this society anyone who is connected with film-making.

Mr. Gentleman: Right.

Mr. Stanbury: And the membership at present includes the various disciplines that you mentioned within the industry.

tent un petit matériel et une petite équipe. Dans ce cas, ils assument le rôle de réalisateur et de directeur de la photographie.

M. Stanbury: Autrement dit, ce sont des photographes, surtout?

M. Gentleman: Avant tout des cinéastes.

M. Stanbury: Cela veut dire que vous utilisez vos caméras?

M. Gentleman: Oui.

M. Stanbury: Maintenant, est-ce que vous pourriez déposer la liste des membres devant le Comité? Je pense que cela serait utile au Comité.

M. Gentleman: Je le ferai.

M. Stanbury: Il y a un autre organisme qui s'appelle la Société des cinéastes.

M. Gentleman: Exact.

M. Stanbury: Puisque vous êtes le président de cet organisme, vous pourriez peut-être nous en parler?

M. Gentleman: Oui. La Société des réalisateurs de films comprend 87 membres dont 65 environ sont à l'Office national du film du Canada.

En gros, ils représentent disons l'éventail de tous les talents disponibles dans l'Office national du Film. Ils ne s'intéressent pas uniquement aux activités de l'Office du Film, ils s'occupent également du développement de l'industrie. Il y a donc parmi nous des réalisateurs, des metteurs en scène, des caméramen. Ce n'est pas une organisation professionnelle, mais plutôt une organisation fraternelle qui fut surtout créée comme groupe de pression pour essayer d'organiser les activités de l'Office du film et ensuite travailler à l'extérieur de l'Office avec les organismes comme la Guilde des metteurs en scène pour établir des conditions qui profitent à l'industrie cinématographique en général.

M. Stanbury: Dans cette société, vous acceptez toute personne qui a des rapports avec le cinéma?

M. Gentleman: Oui.

M. Stanbury: Et actuellement votre organisation comprend les différentes disciplines dont vous avez parlé?

[Text]

Mr. Gentleman: Quite a number of different disciplines, as does the APCQ.

Mr. Stanbury: Now would you explain what that is?

Mr. Gentleman: The APCQ is the French organization of cinéastes—"association professionnelle des cinéastes du Québec". They also include within their ranks a variety of personnel in various categories. There is a representative cross section the French disciplines, therefore in a sense the APCQ is rather similar to the SFM.

Mr. Stanbury: Would you be able to give us a list of the members of the Society of Film Makers?

Mr. Gentleman: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: Maybe you are not representing them here, but since you are the President of it it might give us an idea of what that organization is. You are not connected and no one here is connected with the French-language organization that you mentioned?

Mr. Gentleman: No.

Mr. Stanbury: Are you a member of the organization called "The Association of Motion Picture Producers and Laboratories of Canada"?

Mr. Gentleman: No, I am not a member of that.

Mr. Stanbury: Are they represented here?

Mr. Gentleman: No. There was to have been one gentleman here, Henri Michaud, but there is a standing committee meeting with the AMPPLC and he felt that he would rather sit with that body. He will be here this afternoon.

Mr. Stanbury: For the information of the Committee, can you tell us how that organization is constituted?

Mr. Gentleman: I think probably George Gorman could do that.

Mr. Stanbury: Could someone here who is a member of that organization do so?

Mr. Gorman: I am not a member.

Mr. Stanbury: Are none of you who are here a member of that association?

[Interpretation]

M. Gentleman: Oui, un certain nombre de disciplines, comme l'APCQ.

M. Stanbury: Pourriez-vous nous expliquer ce que c'est?

M. Gentleman: L'APCQ est l'organisation française des cinéastes: «Association professionnelle des cinéastes du Québec». Ils comprennent également du personnel de toutes les catégories et ils représentent un éventail complet dans les disciplines françaises. L'APCQ est donc similaire à la société de producteurs.

M. Stanbury: Maintenant, est-ce que vous pourriez également nous donner la liste des membres de cette société des producteurs?

M. Gentleman: Oui, bien sûr.

M. Stanbury: Vous ne les représentez pas tous ici, mais puisque vous êtes ici, il serait peut-être bon d'en profiter et savoir ce qu'est cette organisation. Vous n'avez aucun rapport avec l'organisme français dont vous avez parlé et personne n'en a ici?

M. Gentleman: Non.

M. Stanbury: Êtes-vous membres de l'association dite: «Association des producteurs de films et des laboratoires cinématographiques du Canada»?

M. Gentleman: Non, je ne suis pas membre de cette association.

M. Stanbury: Est-ce qu'ils ont des représentants ici?

M. Gentleman: Non, il y avait un représentant, M. Henri Michaud, mais il a un comité permanent avec l'APFLCC et il a préféré aller là. Il sera ici cet après-midi.

M. Stanbury: Est-ce que vous pourriez nous dire comment est constitué cette organisation?

M. Gentleman: Je pense que George Gorman pourrait le faire.

M. Stanbury: Quelqu'un de l'organisation pourrait-il le faire?

M. Gorman: Je ne suis pas membre.

M. Stanbury: Vous voulez dire qu'aucun d'entre vous n'appartient à cette organisation de producteurs de films?

[Texte]

Mr. Gorman: I do not think so. They are largely the producers in this country; they extend right across the country.

Mr. Stanbury: So you are the cameramen and they are the producers, and that is the basic distinction.

Mr. Gorman: We are directors. I am of the Directors Guild.

Mr. Stanbury: But you are not a member of the cinematographers organization.

Mr. Gorman: No.

Mr. Stanbury: We have two different groups here: Mr. Gentleman speaking basically for the cameramen and you are here representing the Directors Guild.

Now you were going to tell us about The Association of Motion Picture Producers and Laboratories of Canada. You say they are basically producers, but I gather since there's the word "laboratories" in their title that the organization also includes processors.

Mr. Gorman: That is right.

Mr. Stanbury: And special effects people.

Mr. Gentleman: Service organization.

Mr. Mongrain: How many professional cinematographers would you say there are in Canada now?

Mr. Gentleman: How many professional cinematographers?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, and in all disciplines. I understand there are cameramen, directors and producers. How many would you say there are?

Mr. Gentleman: The CSC represents the men who are recognized as being the top in their profession and they are members of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers. If you were to ask how many cinematographers there are across the nation—

Mr. Mongrain: Professional, I mean.

Mr. Gentleman: —professional, I would imagine there would be some 30 or 32 members who are outside the membership of the CSC.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury?

Mr. Stanbury: May I ask you, for instance, whether a person such as Dick Ballantyne

[Interprétation]

M. Gorman: Non, je ne crois pas. Ce sont les producteurs dans ce pays. Ils ont des représentants dans tout le pays.

M. Stanbury: Autrement dit, vous êtes les caméramen, ils sont les producteurs et c'est la différence.

M. Gorman: Nous sommes metteurs en scène. J'appartiens à la guilde des metteurs en scène.

M. Stanbury: Vous n'êtes pas membres de l'organisation des cinéastes professionnels.

M. Gorman: Non.

M. Stanbury: Il y a donc deux groupes: M. Gentleman parle pour les caméramen et vous, vous êtes ici pour représenter la guilde des metteurs en scène. Alors, vous allez nous parler de l'Association des producteurs de films et des laboratoires cinématographiques du Canada. Vous dites que ce sont surtout des producteurs, mais étant donné qu'il y a le mot «laboratoires» dans leur titre, ils parlent également pour les techniciens.

M. Gorman: C'est exact.

M. Stanbury: Et les techniciens en effets spéciaux.

M. Gentleman: L'organisation des services.

M. Mongrain: Combien de cinéastes professionnels y a-t-il au Canada?

M. Gentleman: Combien de cinéastes professionnels?

M. Mongrain: Oui, et dans toutes les spécialités. Caméramen, producteurs et metteurs en scène. Combien pensez-vous qu'il y en ait?

M. Gentleman: La Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels représente les gens qui sont au sommet de leur profession. Si vous voulez savoir combien il y a de cinéastes, je pense que...

M. Mongrain: Je veux dire professionnels.

M. Gentleman: Je pense qu'il y a environ 30 ou 32 membres, qui ne sont pas membres de la SCCP.

Le président: Monsieur Stanbury.

M. Stanbury: A titre d'exemple, disons, une personne comme Dick Ballantyne qui est à la who is both a cinematographer and a director, would be a member of your organization?

Mr. Gentleman: The Directors Guild of Canada.

Mr. Stanbury: He is a member of the Directors Guild but not of the Society of Cinematographers, although he is a cinematographer as well.

Mr. Gentleman: No, Dick Ballantyne is not.

Mr. Stanbury: Oh, he is not.

Mr. Gentleman: He is a pure director.

Mr. Stanbury: What about Paul Almond. Is he a member of the Directors Guild?

Mr. Gorman: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: But not of the Society of Cinematographers.

Mr. Gorman: No.

An hon. Member: Is he a member of the Producers Guild?

Mr. Gorman: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Hymmen: Mr. Chairman, a supplementary.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Hymmen.

Mr. Hymmen: What are the criteria for membership in the CSC?

Mr. Gentleman: I do not have the constitution here, but I believe to be a member of CSC you have to be professionally employed as a cinematographer in the capacity of a director of photography—that is, the man who carries the final responsibility for the image you see on the screen. And you have to be employed for ten years continuously.

Mr. Wilf Doucette (Member, Montreal Branch Canadian Society of Cinematographers): Excuse me, you can become an associate member with two years' professional employment.

Mr. Stanbury: Since there are only two organizations of those mentioned who are actually represented officially here this morning, I will ask you only about those. I am interested in knowing what written representations have been made to government, say within the last six months, on the subject of problems of labour relations, which you have mentioned, the problems of foreign commerfois cinéaste et metteur en scène, est-il membre de votre organisation?

M. Gentleman: La Guilde des metteurs en scène du Canada.

M. Stanbury: Il est membre de la guilde des metteurs en scène, mais pas de la Société des cinéastes professionnels bien qu'il soit aussi cinéaste.

M. Gentleman: Non, Dick Ballantyne ne l'est pas.

M. Stanbury: Il ne l'est pas?

M. Gentleman: Non, il est seulement metteur en scène.

M. Stanbury: Et Paul Almond? Est-ce qu'il fait partie de la Guilde des metteurs en scène?

M. Gorman: Oui.

M. Stanbury: Mais il n'appartient pas à la Société des cinéastes professionnels?

M. Gorman: Non.

Un député: Est-il membre de la guilde des producteurs?

M. Gorman: Pas que je sache.

M. Hymmen: Monsieur le président, question supplémentaire.

Le président: Oui, monsieur Hymmen.

M. Hymmen: Quels sont les critères pour adhérer à la SCCP.

M. Gentleman: Je n'ai pas la constitution ici, mais je pense que pour devenir membre, il faut être employé comme cinéaste professionnel en qualité de directeur de la photographie, c'est-à-dire celui qui a la responsabilité finale de l'image, et vous devez avoir été employé depuis dix ans.

M. Wilf Doucette (membre, Section mont-réalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels): Excusez-moi, on peut devenir membre-associé après deux années dans la profession.

M. Stanbury: Étant donné qu'il n'y a que deux organisations représentées ici officiellement ce matin, je vais simplement vous poser quelques questions sur ces organisations. Je voudrais savoir si des demandes officielles ont été faites par écrit auprès du gouvernement au cours des six derniers mois sur la question des relations de travail dont vous avez parlé ou des publicités cinématographiques étrangeials, or any of the other problems of your industry, by the Canadian Society of Cinematographers or by the Directors Guild.

Mr. Gentleman: Within the last six months the CSC has made no representations at all.

Mr. Stanbury: How about the Directors Guild?

Mr. Gentleman: Within the history of the last ten years the CSC has made no representation whatever. But there have been a deluge of briefs from all the other organizations.

Mr. Stanbury: As I say, you are speaking for one organization and presumably we will hear from others, but in so far as your organization is concerned it has been in existence for how long?

Mr. Gentleman: 1956.

Mr. Stanbury: Since 1956 and it has never made a written submission to the Government of Canada on any of these problems which you say have been so serious since that time?

Mr. Gentleman: It is correct to say they have made no submissions at all, because they work in concert, as we all do, with all the other organizations.

Mr. Stanbury: Could you tell me whether the Directors Guild has ever made any representations on any of these serious problems which have been gripping the industry for the last ten years?

Mr. Gorman: Yes, we have.

Mr. Stanbury: Have there been any within the last six months?

Mr. Gorman: No.

Mr. Gentleman: Wilf Doucette has just reminded me that in the charter of the CSC it is expressly stated that the CSC will involve itself in no political activity whatever.

Mr. Stanbury: I think you have been breaking your constitution lately.

Mr. Gentleman: Are we being political at this point?

The Chairman: Well you are not being political when you make your brief to government?

Mr. Stanbury: If one read your brief I think one could draw a different conclusion. However, the question I wanted to pursue res, etc... par cette Société canadienne de cinéastes professionnels ou par la Guilde des metteurs en scène.

M. Gentleman: Au cours des six derniers mois, il n'y a eu aucune représentation officielle de la Société des cinéastes.

M. Stanbury: Et de la Guilde des metteurs en scène?

M. Gentleman: Au cours des dix dernières années la SCCP n'a soumis aucun mémoire, mais il y a eu un déluge de mémoires d'autres organisations.

M. Stanbury: Comme je le disais, vous parlez au nom de votre organisation. Il y en aura d'autres que l'on entendra. Mais en ce qui concerne votre organisation, elle existe depuis combien de temps?

M. Gentleman: Depuis 1956.

M. Stanbury: 1956. Et jamais elle n'a soumis de mémoire au gouvernement canadien sur les problèmes qui, d'après vous, sont si sérieux depuis cette époque?

M. Gentleman: Il est exact de dire qu'ils n'ont soumis aucun mémoire, car, comme je l'ai dit ils travaillent avec les autres organisations.

M. Stanbury: Et, pour la Guilde des metteurs en scène, est-ce que vous pourriez nous dire si elle a soumis des mémoires sur les problèmes de l'industrie?

M. Gorman: Oui, nous en avons soumis.

M. Stanbury: Et, est-ce que vous en avez soumis au cours des six derniers mois?

M. Gorman: Non.

M. Gentleman: Wilf Doucette vient de me rappeler que dans la charte de la Société, il est prévu que la Société ne se mêle pas de politique du tout.

M. Stanbury: Je pense que vous avez enfreint votre constitution récemment?

M. Gentleman: Faisons-nous de la politique actuellement?

Le président: Vous ne faites pas de politique lorsque vous soumettez un mémoire au gouvernement.

M. Stanbury: Si quelqu'un lit votre mémoire, je pense qu'il peut être d'un avis différent. Mais la question que je voulais with the Directors Guild was that if there were other submissions to government by the Directors Guild, when were they made and on what subjects?

Mr. Gorman: In 1964 we presented this brief to the Inter-Departmental Committee on the possibility of a Feature Film Industry in Canada, then a supplementary brief in 1965.

The Chairman: Yes, I have a copy of the brief and a copy of the supplementary brief which I will file with the Clerk. Any member desiring to look at it will be able to obtain it from him.

Mr. Stanbury: Thank you. Were there any other briefs, Mr. Gorman?

Mr. Gorman: We had a brief to the CBC and the CRTC.

Mr. Stanbury: You have not made any submission to the government itself or to the Secretary of State within the last six months?

Mr. Gorman: No.

Mr. Gentleman: The Society of Film Makers has, with the manifesto that we put out last year regarding the activities of the CFDC.

Mr. Stanbury: That is when you issued certain charges against the CFDC?

Mr. Gentleman: That is correct.

The Chairman: We have a copy of that document dated August 1967 also filed with the Clerk and it is available to any member who wishes it.

Mr. Stanbury: Yes, we are familiar with that. I think that is all I want to ask following this line of questioning, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I have some other documents which Mr. Gentleman and his group have given me. I will read them off and they will all be filed with the Clerk.

A presentation to the Government of Canada by the Association of Motion Picture Producers and Laboratories of Canada, dated October 1959; a letter dated September 22, 1964, to Mr. R. M. Fowler, Chairman of the Committee on Broadcasting, submitted by the Motion Picture Producers and Laboratories of Canada; a brief concerning the state of television broadcasting in Canada, submitted to the Fowler Commission again by the Directors Guild of Canada, dated October 1964, and a submission to the Secretary of State on Feature Film Production Possibilities in Canada poser à la Guilde des metteurs en scène est de savoir s'il y avait eu d'autres représentations de faites au gouvernement, quand et sur quel sujet?

M. Gorman: En 1964, nous avons présenté ce mémoire au Comité interministériel sur les possibilités de la cinématographie au Canada.

Le président: Oui, j'ai un exemplaire du mémoire et du mémoire complémentaire que je vais donner au secrétaire du Comité. Tout membre désireux de l'avoir, pourra se le procurer.

M. Stanbury: Merci. Y a-t-il eu d'autres mémoires, monsieur Gorman?

M. Gorman: Nous avons eu un mémoire à Radio-Canada et à la SDICC.

M. Stanbury: Est-ce que vous avez fait des soumissions au gouvernement lui-même ou au Secrétaire d'État au cours des six derniers mois?

M. Gorman: Non.

M. Gentleman: La Société des cinéastes l'a fait, oui, par notre manifeste de l'an dernier au sujet des activités de la SDICC.

M. Stanbury: C'est alors que vous avez porté des accusations contre la SDICC?

M. Gentleman: Oui.

Le président: Nous avons un exemplaire de ce document daté août 1967. Il est également déposé auprès du secrétaire et est à la disposition des membres.

M. Stanbury: Oui, nous sommes au courant. Je crois que c'est tout ce que je voulais demander, monsieur le président.

Le président: Mais j'ai d'autres documents que M. Gentleman et son groupe m'ont donnés. Je vais en lire les titres et ils seront tous déposés auprès du secrétaire.

Are there any further questions?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, my question...

The Chairman: I just want to ask if there are any more questions concerning the CFDC relationships with the professional associations. Then we will go back to the labour question which Mr. Dinsdale...

Mr. Dinsdale: No, I did not raise the labour question. I was only...

Mr. Osler: Mr. Gentleman raised the labour question.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

Mr. Osler: I think it goes beyond the labour question.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, that came in as a result of a supplementary from Mr. Osler. I am pursuing this relationship between the government, the CFDC and the Cinematographers. If I may I will continue along those lines at his time.

In reference to the documents that have just been tabled, these would suggest that various branches of the industry have been almost constantly in touch with government or omissions of government with respect to the problems of the film industry in Canada.

Mr. Gentleman: That is true.

Mr. Dinsdale: Just to reconfirm a point that has already been made, you have always urged the closest consultation between your group and the government in these matters. I see this point as made quite specifically in the brief that we have before us dated August 1967. And again we are going over some points which were made earlier. You now have the assurance that an advisory board will be set up?

vue de la Société des cinéastes, sans date, et un mémoire supplémentaire au Comité inter-ministériel sur les possibilités de la cinématographie du Directors Guild of Canada, avril 1965.

Est-ce qu'il y a d'autres questions?

M. Dinsdale: Oui, je voudrais savoir...

Le président: Je veux simplement demander s'il y a d'autres questions concernant le rapport de la SDICC avec les associations professionnelles. Nous reviendrons alors à la question sur le travail que M. Dinsdale...

M. Dinsdale: Non, je n'ai pas soulevé une question de travail. Je voulais simplement...

M. Osler: M. Gentleman a soulevé la question de travail.

M. Dinsdale: Oui.

M. Osler: Je crois qu'il y a plus qu'une question de travail.

M. Dinsdale: Oui, ceci résulte d'une question supplémentaire de M. Osler. Je poursuis cette question des rapports du gouvernement, de la SDICC et des cinéastes. Et si vous le permettez, je pourrai continuer de poser mes questions?

Simplement pour ce qui est des documents que vous avez déposés, on a l'impression que certains services de l'industrie ont été en permanence en rapport avec le gouvernement ou avec les commissions du gouvernement en ce qui concerne les problèmes de l'industrie cinématographique au Canada.

M. Gentleman: C'est exact.

M. Dinsdale: Pour confirmer de nouveau mon point, vous avez toujours demandé que votre groupe ait des consultations très profondes avec le gouvernement à ce sujet. Je vois que cela est clairement indiqué dans le mémoire d'août 1967 dont nous sommes saisis.

Encore une fois, nous répétons certains points que nous avons mentionnés antérieurement. Vous avez maintenant l'assurance que ce conseil consultatif sera constitué?

M. Gentleman: S'il est appuyé par le Conseil d'administration de la SDICC, alors oui. Mais la SDICC a expliqué longuement qu'il pouvait aussi demander à d'autres personnes de participer dans une capacité consultative.

[Text]

Mr. Dinsdale: The CFDC has been set up specifically to assist in the development of a feature film industry in Canada. It is obvious that you do not feel that it has been helpful in this regard nor will it be too helpful in the future. Could you outline some of the reasons for your feelings in this regard?

Mr. Gentleman: Yes, I think the CFDC needs the closest co-operation with all professional groups, which they have thus far disdained. Furthermore, when Lapalme is pressed to make a statement on the biggest problem that we face today, he says our distribution—that is the $64,000 question. Well, it has been our question for the past 10 years.

There is no group more conversant with the situation than this semi-professional organization. Since the inception of the CFDC, there has been application by the SFM—the Society of Film Makers—for the possibility of allowing us to discuss industry problems with the representatives they have brought in from England, namely John Terry from the National Film Finance, and Claude Degand from France. The SFM were pressing for such a meeting because the CFDC are no spiritual champions of Canada. We do not believe they are motivated in the grass roots problems that we want to deal with, and the mere fact that we were excluded from preliminary consultations they were holding with qualified people indicated again that they had no interest, no basic interest, in what was really concerning our industry.

Mr. Dinsdale: So you are saying the CFDC cannot do the job that it has been authorized to do by Parliament through the Act that was passed because of two deficiencies: personnel of the CFDC and policies of the CFDC.

Mr. Garrett: May I add something. It is not only that you can build policies of the CFDC. I think it is probably the first time that the federal government has ever recognized the fact that the film industry is really an industry, in fact, but in this area all the problems that people have talked about, the problems of finance, the problems of sales and so forth and so on, all come under the general category of industry. For example, it is the only industry that has no protection at all in any area. Distributors have no protection; cinematographers have no protection; the talent has no protection and the final product has no protection either. This is what we are driving at.

[Interpretation]

M. Dinsdale: La SDICC a été créée pour développer l'industrie du film au Canada? A toute évidence, vous ne pensez pas qu'elle a été utile dans ce domaine ou qu'elle le sera à l'avenir? Est-ce que vous pourriez indiquer quelques-unes de vos raisons pour ces sentiments?

M. Gentleman: Oui. Je pense que la SDICC a besoin d'une collaboration étroite avec tous les groupes professionnels, qu'ils ont jusqu'à présent dédaignés. De plus, lorsqu'on insiste auprès de Lapalme pour qu'il fasse une déclaration sur le problème le plus important qui nous fait face aujourd'hui, c'est-à-dire la distribution, alors il dit: «Ah bien oui. C'est une question très difficile, c'est une question que nous avons eu à discuter depuis 10 ans».

Et ce sont les organisations professionnelles qui sont le plus au courant de la question. Depuis la création de la SDICC, des demandes ont été faites par la Société des producteurs de films pour que l'on puisse discuter des problèmes de l'industrie avec les représentants qui sont venus d'Angleterre, M. John Terry de la National Film Finance et Claude Degand de France. La SFM insistait pour une telle réunion parce que la SDICC n'est pas le champion spirituel du Canada. Nous ne pensons pas qu'ils sont motivés pour traiter des problèmes de base qui nous intéressent et le simple fait que nous ayons été exclus des consultations qu'ils tenaient avec des personnes qualifiées, prouvent qu'ils n'ont pas d'intérêt fondamental en ce qui concerne notre industrie.

M. Dinsdale: Vous dites que la SDICC ne peut pas faire ce travail? Travail qu'elle a été autorisé à faire par le Parlement dans le cadre de la loi votée à cause de déficience du personnel et aussi à cause de la politique de cet organisme?

M. Garrett: Non seulement les politiques de la SDICC. Je crois que c'est la première fois que le gouvernement a reconnu que l'industrie du film était une industrie en créant la SDICC. Mais en ce qui concerne les problèmes de finances, de ventes, tout cela tombe sous le coup de l'industrie. Par exemple, c'est la seule industrie qui n'a aucune protection. Les producteurs, les cinéastes, les distributeurs, les artistes, n'ont pas de protection; et le produit fini n'a aucune protection non plus. Et c'est ce que nous essayons de régler!

[Texte]

The CFDC may, for a very limited purpose, be worth while, but to really attack the problems and to provide the protection that a very young industry needs to grow, a much larger attack must be taken along much broader lines.

For example, it is forbidden to import certain manufactured items into Canada without paying a tariff. Well, it has never occurred to the government that a roll of film completed as much of a product as an automobile, a coconut or a banana or something like that. So the CFDC is far, far too limited in its scope in what it can do.

The Chairman: But this is not a fault of the CFDC; it is a fault of the Act.

Mr. Garrett: No, it is not a fault of the CFDC. There are limitations in the Act that I think probably could be corrected with a few relatively simple amendments. I say simple amendments, but very far reaching in their effect.

• 1200

Mr. Stanbury: This is very confusing, Mr. Chairman. We heard a few minutes ago that the CFDC was at fault and now another spokesman says it is not the fault of the CFDC.

The Chairman: I think in all justice that the same point applies.

Mr. Garrett: That is right. The CFDC, if I may say so, Mr. Stanbury, is the focus of the problems right at the moment, because it is possible really to solve the problems, the outstanding problems facing the Canadian film industry by tackling the CFDC Act and by expanding its outer limits. It would also be possible to correct the problems by eliminating the CFDC, if you like, and going about it in a completely different way because if you provide the kind of protection that should have been given in the CFDC Act, the CFDC becomes unnecessary.

Mr. Stanbury: You want the CFDC to be all things to all film-makers and that is not what the act says. Is that not true?

Mr. Garrett: No, I do not want it to be all things, and I do not think the CFDC wants it to be all things to all film-makers. All the film industry is asking for is the same kind of treatment that the automobile industry has, the agricultural industry has, or any other

[Interprétation]

La SDICC peut être utile à des fins très limitées, mais non pour faire face aux problèmes et pour donner la protection que cette jeune industrie a besoin pour croître; il faut qu'un effort bien plus vaste soit entrepris.

Par exemple, il est défendu d'importer certains produits fabriqués au Canada sans payer le tarif douanier. Il n'est jamais venu à l'esprit du gouvernement qu'une bobine de film est un produit tout aussi bien qu'une banane, une automobile ou une noix de coco. Donc, la SDICC est très limitée dans la portée de son action.

Le président: Ce n'est pas la faute de la SDICC, c'est la faute de la Loi!

M. Garrett: Non, ce n'est pas la faute de la SDICC. Il y a certaines limites dans la Loi qui pourraient être corrigées avec des amen-dements relativement simples, mais des amendements qui iraient très loin.

M. Stanbury: On nous a dit il y a quelques instants que la SDICC a été tenue responsable. Et notre témoin nous dit que ce n'est pas la SDICC.

Le président: Je crois, pour être juste, que les deux points s'appliquent.

M. Garrett: Je crois que les deux sont en cause. La SDICC, monsieur Stanbury, est le centre d'attention en ce moment. On pourrait régler les problèmes en abordant la Loi sur la SDICC et en la rendant plus efficace. Il serait également possible d'éliminer les problèmes en éliminant la SDICC et en regardant la situation d'un tout autre angle parce que si vous accordez la protection qui aurait dû être accordée dans le cadre de la loi créant la SDICC cet organisme devient inutile.

M. Stanbury: Vous voudriez que la SDICC fasse tout pour les cinéastes, ce qu'elle ne fait pas, n'est-ce pas?

M. Garrett: Non, je ne veux pas que la SDICC fasse tout et je ne crois pas que notre organisme le veuille non plus. Tout ce que l'industrie cinématographique demande c'est qu'on lui accorde un traitement semblable à celui qui est accordé à l'industrie de l'auto-kind of recognized industry has. But because it is a cultural thing it is an artistic thing...

Mr. Stanbury: But you do not want it all to be done through the CFDC.

Mr. Garrett: It would be a matter of government policy. It could be done through the CFDC or the CFDC could be eliminated and it could be done simply by passing legislation, and no agency of a similar type would be necessary at all.

Mr. Stanbury: I think we are all interested in knowing what additional legislation you want to recommend. You seem to have been spending most of your time complaining that the CFDC has not done things which it is not permitted to do under its act.

Mr. Hymmen: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question for clarification. I must admit that my questions are based on the fact that I have been away from this Committee for about a year. I am trying to draw a parallel in my own mind—I do not know whether the parallel has any merit whatsoever—between the CRTC, the CBC and the private sector in television and radio.

We have the National Film Board.

The Chairman: That is part of the problem.

Mr. Hymmen: No, no. We have the National Film Board which carries on their own operation. The brief mentioned that they do call on private operators to some extent but maybe not to the extent that they should. Has the CFDC a private identity? Have they any responsibility at all to the National Film Board?

The Chairman: No, they operate in water-tight separate compartments.

Mr. Hymmen: I am just wondering in my own mind.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I understand the Chairman of the National Film Board is a member of the Board of the CFDC.

The Chairman: I admit that, but what I was saying was that their responsibilities were quite specifically outlined in their various acts.

Mr. Hymmen: But my question, Mr. Chairman, is whether the National Film Board should or should not be given some similar responsibilities to the CRTC in encouraging bile, de l'agriculture ou à n'importe quelle autre industrie reconnue. Mais étant donné qu'il s'agit de quelque chose de culturel et d'artistique c'est différent.

M. Stanbury: Vous ne voulez pas que tout se fasse par l'entremise de la SDICC.

M. Garrett: C'est une question de politique gouvernementale. On pourrait procéder par la SDICC ou éliminer cette Société et procéder par voie de législation. Ainsi, toute agence de ce genre deviendrait inutile.

M. Stanbury: Je crois que nous voudrions tous savoir quelle législation vous voulez recommander. Mais vous semblez vous plaindre surtout de ce que la SDICC n'ait pas fait ce que la loi ne lui permet pas de faire.

M. Hymmen: J'aimerais obtenir un éclaircissement. Mes questions sont fondées sur le fait que je n'ai pas participé à ce Comité depuis un an. J'essaie d'établir un parallèle dans mon esprit, mais j'ignore si ce parallèle vaut quelque chose, entre le CRTC, Radio-Canada et le secteur privé dans le domaine de la radio et de la télévision.

Il y a l'Office National du Film.

Le président: Voilà une partie du problème.

M. Hymmen: Non, non. Il y a l'ONF qui fait son travail. Le mémoire signale le fait que cet organisme a recours aux producteurs privés, mais peut-être pas autant qu'il le devrait. Est-ce que la SDICC a une identité propre? Est-ce qu'elle a des responsabilités par rapport à l'Office National du Film?

Le président: Ce sont deux entités différentes.

M. Hymmen: Je me posais la question.

M. Stanbury: Je crois savoir que le président de l'ONF est membre du conseil d'administration de la SDICC.

Le président: Je sais. Je disais simplement que leurs responsabilités respectives sont délimitées dans les divers textes de loi qui les concernent.

M. Hymmen: Je me demande, monsieur le président, si l'ONF devrait avoir ou ne pas avoir des responsabilités semblables à celles du CRTC afin d'encourager le développement not only the development of our publicly produced films but also privately-produced films. Could anybody clarify my rather vague thinking on this whole matter?

The Chairman: The situation at the present time is that the Chairman of the National Film Board is also the Government Film Commissioner and one of the problems which these gentlemen have is that they claim the National Film Board has a monopoly on all government work and that the amount that the National Film Board contracts out is about 3 per cent.

Mr. Gentleman: It is minimal, very minimal.

The Chairman: What they would like to see is the National Film Board broken down to some extent and more of its work contracted out. So the analogy does not hold.

Mr. Mongrain: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Chairman.

I suppose you have some legal advisors. Why do not all the professional cinematographers, directors and producers—call them what you want—get together and try to agree on something, then come back here with very definite suggestions for amendments to the legislation? They could make as many suggestions as they want. I presume you would have some consensus from all national cinematographers and you could then come back here and tell us what you want, in legal terms.

Mr. Garrett: Mr. Chairman, may I answer that?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Garrett: The problem is that we feel very strongly that it is the government's role, the Cabinet's role to take the leadership in forming a national film policy. All of the things that all of the societies and all of these people had to complain about—the business about the CBC, the cost of labour, the monopoly of film making and so forth and so on by the NFB—are small problems. It is the government's responsibility to decide whether or not it wants to have a film industry. If it does decide in favour of a film industry then it is the government's responsibility to take the action to make it possible to have a film industry.

Mr. Mongrain: It is indeed. But you have been telling us that the government is doing it the wrong way. So why do you not come de l'industrie cinématographique privée. Quelqu'un pourrait-il m'éclairer?

Le président: La situation présente est la suivante: le président de l'ONF est en même temps Commissaire du gouvernement à la cinématographie. L'un des problèmes soulevé par ces messieurs vient de ce que, à leur avis, l'ONF détient le monopole sur tout le travail commandé par le gouvernement et que très peu de ce travail est affermé, en fait, environ 3 p. 100.

M. Gentleman: La proportion est très minime.

Le président: Ils voudraient que l'ONF soit quelque peu disséqué et qu'une plus grande partie du travail soit affermée. Le parallèle ne vaut pas.

M. Mongrain: J'aimerais poser une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président. Je suppose que vous avez des conseillers juridiques. Pourquoi les cinéastes professionnels, les directeurs, les producteurs, quels que soient leurs titres, ne se réunissent-ils pas pour tenter de s'entendre et ne nous reviennent-ils pas avec des suggestions précises d'amendements? Vous pourriez faire autant de suggestions que vous le voudriez. Vous pouvez certes vous entendre entre vous et revenir nous dire ce que vous désirez.

M. Garrett: Puis-je répondre?

Le président: Allez-y.

M. Garrett: Le problème vient de ce que nous croyons très fermement qu'il appartient au gouvernement, au cabinet de prendre les devants en vue de l'établissement d'une politique nationale pour l'industrie. Toutes ces choses dont tout le monde se plaint, Radio-Canada, le coût de la main-d'œuvre, le monopole de l'ONF et le reste, sont de bien petits problèmes. Il appartient au gouvernement de décider s'il veut ou non une industrie cinématographique. S'il dit oui, alors il lui appartient de prendre les mesures qui s'imposent.

M. Mongrain: Je suis d'accord. Mais vous nous dites que le gouvernement s'y prend de la mauvaise façon. Pourquoi ne pas soumettre with very precise and definite suggestions? You know your business better than we do.

Mr. Garrett: At the first meeting we had in the Windsor Hotel we discussed . .

Mr. Mongrain: All right, put your suggestions in writing. You have legal advisors that can do that for you.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, were not these hearings called so that this Committee might gain more precise knowledge of what the problems are?

The Chairman: Yes, that is correct. We are going to have over the next year a series of hearings so that we can hear all aspects of the business, and I expect that we will be calling the CBC, the CFDC, and the National Film Board to testify specifically on this. So that we will have an opportunity to educate ourselves as well as learn perhaps about all aspects of the film industry, the other components of it and their thinking.

Mr. Dinsdale: The problem I am trying to get in the line of questions I am pursuing is the inadequacies of the CFDC as it is now constituted. The question that Mr. Mongrain has proposed obviously is along the same line. I know when the CFDC was set up it was hailed as the solution to all these problems. There was tremendous publicity. Obviously it is not the solution because it is not getting to the root of the matter.

Mr. Garrett: No. This is a very important point. For example, say that I have a script I want to produce—and suppose it is a very good script; if I want to produce the script using CFDC money first I must go either to London or to New York, and I have to come back with a firm distribution contract. Gentlemen, for me this is impossible. It is impossible for, I dare say, 99 per cent of the people who are able to produce a film in Canada. This is forcing us into the American and the British orbit. We cannot produce a film without a firm distribution contract. The CFDC have made this part of their requirement.

Mr. Stanbury: What is the purpose of producing the film?

Mr. Garrett: The purpose of producing a film is to make more money.

Mr. Stanbury: And how do you make money with a film—by distributing it?

[Interpretation]

de suggestions bien précises? Vous connaissez certainement ce domaine beaucoup mieux que nous.

M. Garrett: Lors de notre première rencontre à l'Hôtel Windsor, il a été question . .

M. Mongrain: Très bien. Mettez tout cela par écrit. Vous avez certainement des conseillers juridiques qui peuvent le faire pour vous.

M. Dinsdale: Ces séances n'ont-elles pas été convoquées, monsieur le président, pour nous permettre de mieux apprécier les problèmes en cause?

Le président: Oui. Au cours de la prochaine année, nous tiendrons de nombreuses séances au cours desquelles nous pourrions nous familiariser avec tous les aspects de ce problème. Nous convoquerons probablement Radio-Canada, la SDICC, l'ONF, ce qui devrait nous permettre de parfaire nos connaissances et de connaître tous les rouages de cette industrie.

M. Dinsdale: Ce que je désire établir par mes questions, ce sont les imperfections, que l'on retrouve dans la SDICC telle qu'elle est présentement constituée. La question posée par Monsieur Mongrain a le même objectif. Je sais que lorsque la SDICC a été créée on a affirmé qu'on avait enfin trouvé la solution à tous les problèmes. On a entouré cette création de beaucoup de publicité. De toute évidence, ce n'est pas la solution.

M. Garrett: Non. Ceci est très important. Supposons que je possède un scénario et que je veux en faire un film. Si je veux réaliser mon film en utilisant l'argent de la SDICC, je dois d'abord me rendre à Londres ou à New-York et en revenir avec, en main, une entente définitive sur la distribution du film. Ceci, messieurs, m'est impossible. C'est également impossible, à mon avis, pour 99 p. 100 de ces personnes qui sont capables de produire des films au Canada. Ceci nous projette dans l'orbite des États-Unis ou de l'Angleterre. Il nous est impossible de produire un film si nous ne détenons pas un contrat pour sa distribution. La SDICC a inclus cette clause dans ses exigences.

M. Stanbury: Quel est votre objectif en produisant un film?

M. Garrett: L'objectif poursuivi: faire plus d'argent.

M. Stanbury: Comment pouvez-vous faire de l'argent avec un film, en le distribuant?

[Texte]

Mr. Garrett: That is right. But you do not realize how difficult it is for anyone to simply go to New York and come back from Columbia or others with a firm distribution contract?

Mr. Stanbury: What is an investor in a film most interested in?

Mr. Garrett: He is interested in the return.

Mr. Stanbury: And where does he get his return?

Mr. Garrett: He gets his return at the box office.

Mr. Stanbury: From distribution?

Mr. Garrett: Yes, from the distributor, basically speaking.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler has a question on this point.

Mr. Garrett: I am not denying the point that you do not have to have distribution; the only thing that I am objecting to is the fact that I have to go to New York to get it.

Mr. Stanbury: But you want to get it, do you not?

Mr. Garrett: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is not one of the deficiencies you are emphasizing here the fact that distribution is in the hands of foreign business.

Mr. Garrett: It is completely in the hands of foreigners.

Mr. Dinsdale: And the CFDC can do nothing to assist in the creation of a feature film industry until foreign control is dealt with.

Mr. Garrett: That is correct.

Mr. Dinsdale: The policy works against itself because the CFDC insists on having distribution assured before it will assist and you cannot get distribution assured because it is in the hands of foreigners.

Mr. Garrett: Precisely; that is exactly right.

Mr. Dinsdale: So the whole policy collapses.

Mr. Garrett: We have a case of this, if I can relate to you a personal story. About two years ago I had a script that I thought was quite good. I went to Toronto and I talked to Harvey Harnick at Columbia pictures, because Columbia pictures do the distribution for the National Film Board. I read him the outline that I had and we had a very, very

[Interprétation]

M. Garrett: Oui. Mais vous ne réalisez probablement pas combien difficile il est de se présenter chez Columbia, ou ailleurs, et d'en revenir avec un contrat pour la distribution.

M. Stanbury: Qu'est-ce qui intéresse le plus celui qui investit dans un film?

M. Garrett: L'argent qu'il en retirera.

M. Stanbury: Et d'où viennent ces profits?

M. Garrett: Des guichets.

M. Stanbury: De la distribution du film?

M. Garrett: Oui, en fait, du distributeur.

Le président: Monsieur Osler voudrait poser une question.

M. Garrett: Je ne nie pas la nécessité de la distribution mais je m'élève contre le fait que je doive me rendre à New-York pour obtenir un contrat de distribution.

M. Stanbury: Mais vous désirez toujours ce contrat?

M. Garrett: Oui.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que vous ne vous élevez pas, en fait, contre le fait que la distribution est entre les mains d'étrangers?

M. Garrett: Oui. Elle l'est complètement.

M. Dinsdale: Et la SDICC ne peut rien faire pour aider à la création d'une industrie du long métrage tant que ce problème du contrôle étranger n'aura pas été réglé.

M. Garrett: C'est exact.

M. Dinsdale: D'un côté, la SDICC exige un contrat de distribution avant de pouvoir vous aider, et de l'autre, vous ne pouvez obtenir ce contrat parce que la distribution est entre les mains d'étrangers.

M. Garrett: C'est exactement cela.

M. Dinsdale: Donc, toute cette politique s'écroule.

M. Garrett: Permettez que je vous raconte un fait personnel. Il y a environ deux ans, j'étais en possession d'un scénario que je croyais très bon. Je me suis rendu à Toronto et j'en ai parlé à Harvey Harnick, de Columbia Pictures, parce que cette société s'occupe de distribution pour l'ONF. Je lui ai communiqué le scénario, en résumé, puis nous avons long discussion into the night. He would not give me a penny to produce the film but he said "If you will produce the film I will distribute it". Do you know how much he was willing to give me back? Thirty per cent.

That film even at the low cost that I could produce it for, would have had to make over $3 million before I could make a nickel.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I think we must hark back to our meeting in Montreal. I am a little bewildered about what we are trying to do today, because my understanding was that having had a free and frank off-the-record discussion with these people they were going to come with some firm ideas that we could tentatively discuss with them. It seems to me that we are back to where we were in Montreal some weeks ago, and we are not really getting very far. One of the notes I wrote down at that time is "transactions need not be reported." I think that refers to the very point you have just brought up, for instance.

It would be a relatively simple thing for the government to consider the necessity of reporting transactions, at the same time looking into multi-national corporations and how we can make them operate best for Canada's interests which is one of the things that is on their plate. It could well be that from that aspect another committee entirely should be hearing your plea.

If we talk forever about the personalities involved in this Commission we will just go around in circles.

Mr. Dinsdale: We are talking about foreign ownership at the moment.

Mr. Garrett: We are talking about foreign ownership. In this brief...

Mr. Osler: That is right, but if you say, for instance, you cannot get a decent contract with somebody because you are in an untenable position and they can force you to the wall, that may be true. Assuming that it is true, you have no leverage to work against him.

Mr. Garrett: It is impossible to make money—you die.

Mr. Osler: Perhaps that situation can be changed, but it will be changed on a sort of restrictive trade basis and the whole approach to the distribution empires that exist in Canada will be changed that way. They will not be changed by criticizing the President of the CFDC.

discuté jusqu'à une heure avancée de la nuit. Il m'a déclaré qu'il ne pouvait m'aider à financer la production de ce film, mais a ajouté que si je le produisais qu'il le distribuerait. Vous savez quel pourcentage il était prêt à me verser? 30 p. 100.

Ce film, même si je pouvais le produire à un prix très bas, aurait dû rapporter plus de trois millions de dollars pour que je puisse réaliser cinq cents de profit.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, je crois qu'il faut revenir à notre réunion, à Montréal. Je suis un peu perdu quant à ce que nous voulons faire aujourd'hui, car je croyais qu'après une discussion très franche avec ces gens, on pourrait avoir des idées bien précises à discuter avec eux. Il me semble que nous en sommes au même point qu'à Montréal, il y a quelques semaines, et que nous n'avancions pas. Certaines des notes que j'ai prises à l'époque sont des transactions dont nous devons parler. Je crois que cela touche au point que vous venez de citer en exemple.

Ce serait assez simple pour le gouvernement de demander que les transactions soient enregistrées. On peut étudier ça comme on le fait dans le cadre des sociétés multi-nationales pour tenir compte des intérêts canadiens. Il se peut que dans cet aspect, un autre comité doive étudier cette question.

Si nous parlons des personnalités de cette Commission, nous n'allons que tourner en rond.

M. Dinsdale: Nous parlons des propriétés étrangères pour le moment.

M. Garrett: En effet. Dans le présent mémoire.

M. Osler: Oui, mais si vous dites que vous ne pouvez pas avoir un contrat honnête parce que vous êtes dans une situation intenable et qu'on vous met au pied du mur, cela peut être vrai. En supposant que cela est vrai, vous n'avez aucune prise sur lui.

M. Garrett: Vous ne pouvez pas faire de l'argent, vous mourez.

M. Osler: Peut-être qu'on pourra changer cette situation, mais seulement sur une base de limitation des produits, et cela met en cause tous les empires de distribution qui existent au Canada. On ne les changera pas en critiquant le président de la SDICC.

[Texte]

Mr. Garrett: No, but the second part of this brief—it is dated February 3—does suggest that the CFDC Act be enlarged to provide for the setup of a distribution company as an adjunct to the CFDC to solve this very problem.

Mr. Mongrain: Why do you not come here with very precise and definite suggestions for amendments to the legislation?

Mr. Garrett: Without having spent approximately $10,000 or $15,000 for the compilation of a brief, this Part II suggests some very hard lines to follow, some extremely hard lines to follow. It has been criticized ..

Mr. Mongrain: I doubt if there is one there. There should be an amendment providing some ways of helping you in your distribution problems. That would be one of your suggestions?

Mr. Garrett: That is right.

Mr. Mongrain: Good. Mr. Chairman, before we go on any longer on a supplementary about the personalities of this Society that have been criticized, I have heard those gentlemen say Mr. Spenser does not want to go beyond his mandate, and they are criticizing Mr. Spenser for that. I do not think he can.

Something else was said about Mr. Lapalme. I think it was Mr. Gentleman who said, we need a more resolute, vigorous and Canadian-at-heart man there. I resent that statement. I have known Mr. Lapalme for more than 18 years—perhaps 20—and I do not know a Canadian who is more resolute, vigorous or Canadians at heart.

I think after listening to you I understand better that those who prepared the legislation foresaw that there should not be anyone from the trade there, because you do not seem to agree together. What we want is not a technician; we want an administrator or a kind of arbitrator.

I will agree with you that the legislation is not complete; it can be improved. We are waiting for definite suggestions.

Mr. Garrett: May I interrupt you on this point? You realize that the distribution clause in the CFDC Act is insisting on is not part of the Act; that is a by-law.

Mr. Mongrain: Of course we do.

Mr. Garrett: I think that in itself shows a lack of grasp of the problems, to say the least.

[Interprétation]

M. Garrett: Non, mais la deuxième partie de ce mémoire, qui est daté du 3 février, suggère que la Loi sur la SDICC soit élargie pour prévoir la création d'une compagnie de distribution adjointe à la SDICC pour régler ce problème.

M. Mongrain: Pourquoi ne faites-vous pas des propositions très précises quant aux modifications à apporter à la loi?

M. Garrett: Sans avoir dépensé environ $10,000 ou $15,000 pour l'établissement d'un mémoire, cette deuxième partie nous indique des lignes très nettes à suivre. On a critiqué...

M. Mongrain: Je doute qu'il y en ait ici. Il devrait y avoir des moyens pour vous aider à régler votre problème de distribution. C'est là une de vos propositions?

M. Garrett: Oui.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, avant de procéder, en ce qui concerne la personnalité des personnes de cette Société qui ont été mises en cause, j'ai entendu dire que M. Spencer ne veut peut-être pas aller au-delà de son mandat, et on critique M. Spencer à cause de cela. Je ne pense pas qu'il puisse aller plus loin.

En ce qui concerne M. Lapalme, je crois que M. Gentleman a dit qu'il faut quelqu'un de plus vigoureux, un véritable Canadien dans l'âme, à ce poste. Je m'oppose à une telle affirmation. Je connais M. Lapalme depuis plus de 18 ans, peut-être 20, et je ne connais pas de Canadien plus décidé, plus vigoureux, plus profondément Canadien.

Après vous avoir écouté, vous ne semblez pas être d'accord entre vous, alors ce qu'il faut c'est un administrateur et non pas un technicien.

Je suis d'accord avec vous que les lois ne sont pas complètes, mais nous a-t-on fait des suggestions précises?

M. Garrett: Puis-je vous interrompre? Vous vous rendez compte que l'article sur la distribution que demande la SDICC ne fait pas partie de la loi, c'est un règlement.

M. Mongrain: Bien sûr.

M. Garrett: Cela démontre que l'on n'a pas compris le problème, pour ne pas dire plus.

Mr. Mongrain: That is why we ask you to come here with very, very clear and precise suggestions. We are willing to help you in your business. You realize it cannot be done in two or three months. It was a beginning when this Act was passed and we are ready to amend it any time, but we want to see where we are going. You are not telling us anything when you come here and say, "The Chairman of that Board is good for nothing, and the secretary is good for nothing; and they should be members of the trade". Then you tell us you cannot agree together.

Mr. Gentleman: May I read the suggestions that the Society of Film Makers made to the CFDC on their manifesto in August last year?

The SFM charges:

1. That the Canadian Film Development Corporation has made no substantial contribution to the establishment of a Canadian Film Industry in the first six months of its existence.

Mr. Osler: As artists, would you not think that you could find a better word than "charges" to start with?

Mr. Stanbury: You are certainly starting off on the right foot in dealing with the banking organization of your industry.

Mr. Gentleman: Be that as it may, but you must recognize that we have a history of this type of representation going back over 10 years.

Mr. Osler: Not with this Board, because it was not in being until recently.

Mr. Gentleman: Quite so, but our Chairman here has just suggested that we would have to listen to a series of hearings for another year.

Mr. Mongrain: Not this government, because this is the one that started the ball rolling.

Mr. Gentleman: Yes, but who knows when the government is going to be changed again, and then we are dealing with another...

Mr. Garrett: Mr. Mongrain, this is completely non-partisan, we are only saying what we think.

Mr. Mongrain: That is not what I am thinking about.

Mr. Stanbury: I am not sure that Mr. Lapalme and Mr. Spencer would agree with that statement.

[Interpretation]

M. Mongrain: Mais c'est pour ça que nous aimerions avoir des suggestions très précises. Nous voulons vous aider, mais on ne peut le faire en deux ou trois mois. C'est un début cette loi, et nous sommes prêt à l'amender mais on veut voir où nous allons. Mais vous nous dites rien sauf que le président est bon, rien, le secrétaire est bon à rien, et qu'ils devraient être des professionnels. Ensuite vous nous dites que vous n'êtes pas d'accord entre vous.

M. Gentleman: Puis-je lire la suggestion faite à la SDICC par la Société des cinéastes dans son manifeste, en août dernier? On prétend que:

1. la SDICC n'a pas fait de contribution importante à l'établissement d'une industrie cinématographique canadienne, au cours des six premiers mois de son existence.

M. Osler: En tant qu'artistes, est-ce que vous ne pourriez pas choisir un terme plus juste pour commencer?

M. Stanbury: Vous partez du bon pied en parlant de l'organisation bancaire de votre industrie.

M. Gentleman: Vous devez reconnaître que nous avons tout un contexte historique qui remonte à dix ans.

M. Osler: Mais non, cette organisation n'a été créée que récemment.

M. Gentleman: Notre président a dit qu'il faudrait tenir des audiences pendant une autre année.

M. Mongrain: C'est notre gouvernement qui a mis l'affaire en marche.

M. Gentleman: Oui, mais qui peut savoir quand le gouvernement va changer de nouveau? Nous devons alors traiter avec...

M. Garrett: Monsieur Mongrain, il ne s'agit pas de faire de la partisanerie, nous disons seulement ce que nous pensons.

M. Mongrain: Je ne pense pas à cela.

M. Stanbury: Je ne sais pas si M. Lapalme ou M. Spencer seraient d'accord avec cette déclaration.

Texte]

Mr. Garrett: Perhaps they are less interested in making movies than we are.

Mr. Gentleman: May I continue?

Mr. Stanbury: They are interested in investing in feature films.

The Chairman: Mr. Gentleman, will you continue reading that interesting statement?

Mr. Gentleman: It says:

2. That communication between the Corporation and the Canadian film organizations, including the Society of Film Makers, has been non-existent.

3. That opinions of film makers were almost entirely disregarded when the criteria for the general operation of the fund and for applications to the fund were drafted.

4. That CFDC does not concern itself with the most pressing problem in the Canadian film industry, namely distribution, but is demanding distribution safeguards identical with those which conventional money lenders would insist upon. If Canadian films had been able to secure such distribution guarantees, there would have been no need for the CFDC in the first place.

5. That conditions for fund application, as set out in Release No. 2, are pathetically conservative and do not reflect (a) the needs of the majority of Canadian film makers, (b) the peculiar situation of the Canadian film industry.

They made the following recommendations:

1. The Secretary of State should appoint an Executive Director at the earliest possible date, but only after consultation with professional film organizations.

2. These Canadian film organizations, including the SFM, should be consulted in the future to assure that the Fund's developments reflects the needs of active film makers in this country.

3. Active film makers should advise the Committee which determines the fate of film submissions.

4. Recommendations by film organizations have included the study of such policies as: A) a Canadian Film quota; B) anti-dumping regulation; C) production tax on distribution profits in Canada; D) labour relations in the film industries. If these points have been investigated, the CFDC should make public its policies on these most important matters.

[Interprétation]

M. Garrett: Peut-être que ça les intéresse moins de faire des films que nous.

M. Gentleman: Puis-je continuer?

M. Stanbury: Ils sont intéressés à investir dans la production de longs métrages.

Le président: Monsieur Gentleman, pouvez-vous continuer à lire ce texte?

M. Gentleman: On y dit que:

2. les communications entre la Société et les organisations de films au Canada sont non existentes.

3. Les opinions des cinéastes n'ont pas été entendues lorsqu'on a élaboré les critères de fonctionnement du fonds, et les méthodes de soumission des demandes.

4. La SDICC ne s'occupe pas des problèmes les plus urgents, notamment la distribution. Demandez des clauses de sauvegarde qui seront nécessaires et qui existent dans d'autres industries. Si on avait pu avoir ces garanties, ces assurances, on n'aurait pas eu besoin de SDICC au départ.

5. Les conditions pour les demandes de fonds telles qu'indiquées dans le règlement n° 2 sont très conservatrices et ne reflètent pas (a) les besoins de la majorité des cinéastes canadiens, (b) la situation particulière de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne.

On a recommandé ce qui suit:

1. Le secrétaire d'État devrait nommer un directeur général le plus tôt possible, mais après avoir consulté les organisations cinématographiques.

2. Ces organisations de films canadiens devraient être consultées à l'avenir afin de s'assurer que le développement du fonds reflète les besoins des cinéastes du pays.

3. Les cinéastes devraient informer le comité sur ce que l'on accorde à leurs soumissions concernant les films.

4. Les recommandations des organisations des films ont inclut les études de politiques comme: a) un contingentement des films canadiens; b) règlement anti-dumping; c) taxe de production sur les profits de la distribution au Canada; d) relations industrielles dans le domaine de l'industrie du film. La SDICC devrait rendre publiques ses politiques sur ces questions importantes.

[Text]

5. Special consideration should be given to properties, which may be difficult to distribute through the existing channels, which may be of unusual artistic or technical originality.

6. The Corporation should also carefully investigate the new audiences in this and other countries, and shape its attitude towards properties accordingly.

7. The Corporation should publish a record of its activity and provide Canadian film makers with other information of interest to them. Not only should the Corporation publish a list of completion bonding companies here and elsewhere, but also make available international agreements of co-productions already in existence.

8. The Corporation should invite members of the film industry to meet with authorities from other countries to explore the possibilities of mutual co-operation in the production of motion pictures.

9. The Corporation must remain in close contact with film organizations in this country to continually review the needs of the industry and to develop an atmosphere of mutual trust and understanding.

I submit that these are positive submissions we have made and they have been entirely disregarded.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, since I started this I would like to conclude it as quickly as possible.

J'admets qu'il y a des suggestions précises dans ce que vient de dire M. Gentleman, mais je vois ici dans une déclaration qu'il nous a lue à Montréal l'autre jour. J'y lis ceci:

Nous soutenons que Monsieur Georges Lapalme, président de la SDICC, et le secrétaire par intérim, Michael Spencer, ne se sont pas montrés à la hauteur de la tâche.

Nous alléguons qu'on ne peut confier le redressement de cette situation précaire à un président officiant à temps partiel, et par surcroît inexpérimenté, qui tient les membres de cette industrie à l'écart et qui, comme le secrétaire d'ailleurs, est convaincu que la SDICC n'est autre chose qu'une banque qui n'est pas tenue de rendre compte de ses transactions, pas même à la Chambre des communes.

Je dis que c'est une approche fautive et malhonnête. MM. Spencer et Lapalme se sont acquittés de leur mandat tel qu'il leur a été

[Interpretation]

5. Des considérations particulières devraient être données aux questions de propriétés qui devraient rendre plus difficile la distribution par les voies existantes qui peuvent avoir une certaine originalité artistique ou technique.

6. La Société devrait aussi étudier avec soin le public ici et dans d'autres pays.

7. La Société devrait publier un compte rendu sur son activité et fournir aux cinéastes canadiens des renseignements plus intéressants. La Société devrait non seulement publier la liste des compagnies de garantie ici et ailleurs, mais devrait aussi faire connaître les accords internationaux de co-production.

8. La Société devrait inviter les membres de l'industrie du film à rencontrer les autorités des autres pays pour explorer les possibilités de coopération dans la production de films.

9. La Société doit rester en contact étroit avec les organisations de films de ces pays et continuer à examiner les besoins de l'industrie dans une atmosphère de confiance mutuelle et de compréhension.

Ce sont les suggestions positives que nous avons faites, et on n'en a absolument pas tenu compte.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, comme j'ai soulevé cette question, j'aimerais conclure le plus rapidement possible.

I admit that you have specific suggestions in what Mr. Gentleman has just said but there was a statement he read in Montreal the other day in which he said:

We maintain that Mr. Georges Lapalme, President of CFDC, and Mr. Michael Spencer, Acting Secretary have not been up to the job. We hold that we cannot expect to have this precarious situation corrected by a president who operates part time and lacks experience, who keeps members of this industry out of the public views and who, along with the Secretary, is convinced that the CFDC is nothing but a bank which is not supposed to report its transactions, not even to the House of Commons.

I say that this is a false and dishonest approach. Messrs. Lapalme and Spencer have fulfilled their mandate as specified by précisé par la Chambre des Communes. Qu'il trait des améliorations à apporter à la loi, je le crois, et je crois que vous nous en avez suggéré. Mais c'est au gouvernement qu'il faut les adresser et non pas procéder en blâmant ceux qui ont été nommés pour remplir le mandat précis au nom du gouvernement.

Je crois que cette affirmation n'est pas exacte. D'ailleurs, ce que vous ajoutez est encore plus inexact: «que la SDICC... n'est tenue de rendre compte de ses transactions, pas même à la Chambre des communes.» Eh bien, ils seront convoqués ici et devront rendre compte de leurs transactions et de leur administration. Et c'est là, j pense, que votre approche est mauvaise.

Si vous vous en étiez tenu à faire des suggestions concrètes comme celles que vous venez de nous lire, vous trouveriez le Comité du gouvernement beaucoup mieux disposés à votre endroit parce que nous concédons que la Loi n'est pas parfaite. Ce n'est qu'un début, en particulier dans le secteur de la distribution qui ne concernera probablement pas directement notre Comité mais où tout de même il aura quelque chose à faire. Voilà ma réaction à votre apparition ici.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, it was your original question that led us into these byways.

Mr. Dinsdale: No, I am trying to keep on the straightaway. It is the supplementaries that lead us into the byways. The problem I am trying to pursue this morning is the inadequacies of the CFDC in assisting in the bringing about of a greatly desired feature in industry. We have been led into the byways because there are some who feel that there are political overtones in this matter.

The Chairman: I think there are some who argue that the Canadian Film Development Corporation is not doing what it can under its present Act and there are others who argue that it is doing all that it is permitted to do under the terms of its Act.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, this is what we are trying to discover.

The Chairman: You can make your argument one of two ways.

Mr. Mongrain: Personally I am ready to admit that the Act is not perfect, it is not adequate.

The Chairman: The Act is definitely limited as far as the CSC is concerned.

Mr. Garrett: There is a point here too. The Act is so unspecific in a lot of ways that it the House of Commons. I agree that some amendments to the Act ought to be made, and I believe that you have suggested some to us. These amendments must be addressed to the government rather than proceeding by blaming those who were named to fulfill a specific mandate on behalf of the government. I believe that this statement is not accurate and, moreover, what you have added is even more inaccurate, namely: "the CFDC does not have to report its transactions, not even to the House of Commons." Well, they will be summoned here and they will have to report on their transactions and their administration. And this is where I think your approach is bad. Had you limited yourself to making concrete suggestions like those you have just read, you would find the Committee and the government would be far better disposed towards you because we realize that the Act is not perfect. It is but a beginning, particularly regarding distribution which will probably not be of direct concern to our Committee but where it will nonetheless have something to do. This is my reaction to what you have said.

Le président: C'est votre question qui nous conduit si loin du sujet, monsieur Dinsdale.

M. Dinsdale: Non, j'essaie de m'en tenir au sujet, mais ce sont les questions supplémentaires qui nous en éloignent. Ce que j'essaie de faire ce matin, c'est de voir quelles sont les insuffisances de la SDICC de participer à la création d'une industrie du long métrage. Nous nous sommes écartés du sujet parce que certains pensent qu'il y a des aspects politiques à cette question.

Le président: Certains pensent que la SDICC ne fait pas tout ce qu'elle peut faire dans le cadre de la Loi actuelle; d'autres disent qu'elle fait tout ce qui lui est permis de faire aux termes de son mandat.

M. Dinsdale: C'est ce que nous tentons de découvrir, oui.

Le président: On peut argumenter pour et contre.

M. Mongrain: Nous admettons que la loi n'est pas parfaite.

Le président: La loi est certainement limitée en ce qui concerne la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels.

M. Garrett: La loi est tellement vague. Elle aurait pu être interprétée d'une façon beau-could have been interpreted a good deal more widely than it has been interpreted. As I pointed out before to Mr. Mongrain, a firm distribution contract from a respectable distributor, for example a U.S. or a British distributor, must be in hand before any funds will be available. However, that is not a part of the Act; that is strictly a bylaw that was made up. The very terms that Mr. Spencer and Mr. Lapalme used when speaking about the CFDC before this very Committee—for example, the term “bank” over and over and over again—were not a necessary interpretation of the Act. It is simply a matter of interpretation. The way they have set it up I am sure it is very safe but, Lord, it does not do very much for the film industry.

[Text]

The Chairman: I think if you were to go back and check the debates of the House of Commons you will agree that it was clearly the intent that...

Mr. Mongrain: Not distribution.

The Chairman: ... it was to act in the way of a bank and it was to provide funds. It was not necessarily to be the active agent in a government attempt to re-organize the film industry itself.

Mr. Mongrain: If we want to be practical we will have to do something about that part of it.

Mr. Bockner: Can I interrupt for one second on a question of distribution, if I may. I am an arm of the distribution monster.

If I were a painter who received a grant from the Canada Council to study for two years in Paris, the distribution situation in the CFDC would be the same as saying to a painter who gets his grant, “You must guarantee, before you get this money, that you will sell the paintings that you have not yet painted to an art gallery before we give you the money”. By insisting on distribution before anything happens the situation that occurs is: A. you force this gentleman to go to, let us say, Paramount or Columbia, or such and such in New York, or someone in England and arrange a distribution contract which first of all gives the foreign-owned company ownership of the film. I do not see how this helps a Canadian film industry. Secondly, it is almost impossible for him to do it. You make that your first point. I make it the secondary point. The insistence on distribution stops the production before it takes place. You cannot do it to any other person in the arts in granting him money, why do you do it to this particular area of work?

[Interpretation]

coup plus large. J’ai déjà mentionné à M. Mongrain que cette question d’un contrat de distribution ferme auprès d’un distributeur responsable, soit américain ou anglais, doit être conclu avant qu’on puisse avoir des fonds. Ceci ne fait pas partie de la Loi. Toutfois c’est un règlement qui a été établi. Monsieur Lapalme et monsieur Spencer ont utilisé le terme «banque» en parlant de la SDICC. Ce n’est pas une interprétation de la Loi non plus. Je suis certain que la façon dont ils l’ont mis sur pied est très sûre mais elle ne fait pas grand-chose pour l’industrie.

Le président: Si vous pouviez consulter les débats de la Chambre des communes, vous constaterez que l’intention était très nettement d’agir...

M. Mongrain: Pas de distribution.

Le président: ... en tant que banque et de fournir des fonds. Elle n’était pas destinée à devenir l’organisme actif dans une tentative, de la part de l’État, de réorganiser l’industrie cinématographique.

M. Mongrain: Si nous désirons qu’elle soit pratique, il faudra faire quelque chose à ce sujet.

M. Bockner: Est-ce que je pourrais vous interrompre un instant, sur une question de distribution? Je suis un des services de ce monstre de distribution.

Si j’étais, par exemple, peintre et que je bénéficiais d’une bourse du gouvernement pour étudier à Paris pendant deux ans, la situation de la distribution de la SDICC reviendrait à dire au peintre: «vous allez m’assurer que vous allez vendre les peintures que vous n’avez pas encore peintes à une galerie, avant que l’on puisse vous donner cet argent». En insistant sur la distribution avant de faire quoi que ce soit, il arrive que, d’une part vous forcez cet individu à aller à la société Paramount ou Columbia, à New York ou en Angleterre et signer un contrat de distribution qui accorde tous les droits sur le film à une société étrangère. Je ne vois pas en quoi cela profite à l’industrie cinématographique canadienne. Deuxièmement, il est presque impossible de le faire. Vous considérez cela comme le premier point, moi j’en fais le second. Le fait d’insister sur la distribution, arrête la production avant qu’elle ne commence. Vous ne pouvez pas le faire à une personne qui travaille dans les arts, lorsque vous lui accordez de l’argent, pourquoi le faire dans le cinéma?

[Texte]

Mr. Stanbury: I think we have reached the crunch right here, Mr. Chairman. This gentleman obviously has the impression that the Canadian Film Development Corporation makes grants to assist the film industry.

Mr. Bockner: To assist the development of the Canadian motion picture industry.

Mr. Stanbury: Right or wrong, if you assume that the Canadian Film Development Corporation is not the Canada Council of the film industry...

Mr. Bockner: I do.

Mr. Stanbury: ...if you accept that it is not the sugar daddy of the film makers, that it is not a patron of the arts, that it is more like an industrial development bank of the film industry, then how do you suggest that that industrial development bank of the film industry satisfy itself as to the security of its investment before making...

Mr. Bockner: The question you are raising is perfectly valid and what you are saying then is that perhaps what was raised here before is correct, that perhaps the CFDC as constituted and within the confines of its constitution, is not the area that can develop best a Canadian film industry.

Mr. Stanbury: By George, I think we are getting somewhere. Even the witnesses think so.

The Chairman: If I might read the relevant section of the Act, Section 10, dealing with the Objects, it says that the Corporation may:

(a) invest in individual Canadian feature film productions in return for a share in the proceeds from any such production;

(b) make loans to producers of individual Canadian feature film productions and charge interest thereon;

(c) make awards for outstanding accomplishments in the production of Canadian feature films;

(d) make grants to film-makers and film technicians resident in Canada to assist them in improving their craft; and

(e) advise and assist the producers of Canadian feature films in the distribution of such films and in the administrative functions of feature film production.

[Interprétation]

M. Stanbury: Je crois que nous avons trouvé ce qui ne va pas, monsieur le président. Ce monsieur a vraiment l'impression que la Société du développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne accorde des bourses pour aider l'industrie cinématographique.

M. Bockner: Pour aider à la création d'une industrie cinématographique canadienne.

M. Stanbury: A tort ou à raison, si vous pensez que la Société du développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne n'est pas le Conseil canadien de l'industrie cinématographique.

M. Bockner: Je le pense.

M. Stanbury: Si vous admettez qu'elle n'est pas le papa gâteau de l'industrie, ni le mécène des artistes, mais plutôt une banque de développement industriel pour l'industrie cinématographique, comment voulez-vous qu'elle garantisse ses investissements, avant de...

M. Bockner: En fait, la question que vous posez est parfaitement valable et ce que vous dites, en fait, c'est que peut-être ce qui a été dit précédemment était exact et que peut-être la SDICC telle qu'elle existe et dans les limites de sa constitution n'est pas le meilleur moyen de développer l'industrie cinématographique canadienne.

M. Stanbury: Doux Jésus, j'ai l'impression qu'on arrive à quelque chose. Même le témoin est d'accord.

Le président: Si vous voulez que je vous lise l'article 10 de la Loi. Il est dit que la Société peut:

a) faire des placements dans des productions de longs métrages canadiens réalisés individuellement, en contre-partie d'une participation aux bénéfices qui en découlent;

b) consentir des prêts aux producteurs de longs métrages canadiens réalisés individuellement et exiger un intérêt sur ces prêts;

c) accorder des récompenses pour les réussites remarquables dans la production de longs métrages canadiens;

d) accorder aux cinéastes et techniciens du film qui résident au Canada des subventions pour les aider à accroître leur compétence technique; et

e) conseiller et aider les producteurs de longs métrages canadiens en ce qui concerne la distribution de ces films et les tâches administratives liées à la production de longs métrages.

Mr. Stanbury: So you really want to achieve Canadian control of distribution. I think in your submission you suggest that might be done by a quota system.

Mr. Garrett: No, we suggest that it might be done by amending the Act to permit the CFDC to set up a separate "adjoint" distributor. That is part of it.

Mr. Mongrain: It would have to come up under Trade and Commerce and maybe Revenue.

Mr. Stanbury: Well you are suggesting a crown corporation with participation by private industry which would force its way into the movie houses of Canada?

Mr. Garrett: Yes, that is about it. Can I read this relevant part from the second section of the brief that has to do with that whole distribution matter?

Mr. Stanbury: Would you feel that this is a key part to the solution of your problem?

Mr. Garrett: Absolutely.

Mr. Dinsdale: We made that point one-half hour ago too.

Mr. Garrett: As stated elsewhere in the brief.

Mr. Osler: What page are you reading?

Mr. Garrett: I am reading page 11, Section (7F).

The Chairman: This is Part II.

Mr. Garrett: May I proceed.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Garrett:

(A) As stated elsewhere, an additional amendment or amendments to the Canadian Film Development Corp. Act would be required to permit the CFDC to establish a subsidiary distributing corporation.

(B) We envisage this corporation as being capitalized at five millions of dollars. Additional funds, and these would definitely be required, could be obtained from normal lending institutions at a favourable interest rate.

(C) The distributing company's prerogative would be to handle Canadian-

[Interpretation]

Mr. Stanbury: Autrement dit, si vous voulez véritablement contrôler la distribution au Canada, d'après vous, on pourrait y arriver par un système de contingentement.

Mr. Garrett: Non, nous proposons d'y arriver en modifiant la Loi afin de permettre à la SDICC de mettre sur pied un service adjoint de distribution. C'est un premier pas.

Mr. Mongrain: Mais cela relèverait alors du ministère du Commerce ou du Revenu national.

Mr. Stanbury: Vous possédez une société de la Couronne à laquelle participerait une industrie privée, qui se frayerait un chemin dans les salles de cinéma du Canada?

Mr. Garrett: Oui, c'est à peu près cela. Est-ce que je pourrais lire une partie du mémoire qui porte sur cet aspect de la distribution?

Mr. Stanbury: Est-ce que vous pensez que c'est un point essentiel pour résoudre vos problèmes?

Mr. Garrett: Absolument.

Mr. Dinsdale: Nous avons établi cela il y a une demi-heure.

Mr. Garrett: Comme je le cite plus loin.

Mr. Osler: Quelle page citez-vous?

Mr. Garrett: Je cite la page 11, article...

Le président: C'est dans la Partie II.

Mr. Garrett: Puis-je continuer?

Le président: Oui.

Mr. Garrett:

(A) Comme nous l'avons déjà mentionné, il serait nécessaire d'apporter un ou plusieurs amendements supplémentaires à la Loi sur la Société du développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne afin de permettre à cette Société de mettre sur pied une filiale de distribution.

(B) Dans notre conception, cette filiale aurait un capital social de cinq millions de dollars, et on pourrait obtenir d'autres capitaux, ce qui sera certainement nécessaire, des institutions ordinaires de prêts à un taux d'intérêt favorable.

(C) Les prérogatives de cette société de distribution seront d'assurer la distribuproduced films and television entertainment films on one of the following bases:

1. Purchase of negative rights in perpetuity;
2. Purchase of all negative rights for a period of years.
3. Or, it could function as a normal agent/distributor on a percentage basis, without asking the film producer to relinquish his rights at all.

(D) We recommend that this company be set up and run under normal business conditions; and that it be encouraged to establish foreign branches in the normal way, that is, not under the flag.

(7G) Generally, we would like to see a film production and distribution situation that is in nature highly competitive.

Quite naturally, we feel it must, from birth, be closely watched and protected in order that, in Canada, the Canadian film industry and its workers become the dominant force.

Mr. Stanbury: You would agree that Parliament has not given the CFDC that authority now.

Mr. Garrett: Definitely not in the Act but, as I said before—and I come back to this point again—it was unnecessary for the CFDC to require by its present by-law that a firm distribution contract be obtained that is going to pay them back.

Mr. Stanbury: Unnecessary if they do not care about getting their investment back.

Mr. Garrett: I am not quibbling with that at all, but I am sure they could. For example, Mr. Spencer and Mr. Lapalme could have gone to any number of Canadian distributors and put them together, or asked them to join together in some sort of co-operative distribution company that would make it easier for film producers in this country to produce films. We do not have to do War and Peace, or anything like that.

Mr. Stanbury: But your film industry organizations have never attempted to do that. You want the banking organization to do it.

[Interprétation]

tion des longs métrages de production canadienne et les films de spectacle destinés à la télévision selon une des méthodes suivantes:

1. L'achat des droits sur les négatifs à perpétuité;

2. L'achat des droits sur les négatifs pour un certain nombre d'années;

3. Ou, fonctionner à commission comme une agence de distribution privée, sans demander au producteur d'abandonner ses droits.

(D) Nous recommandons que cette société soit mise sur pied et exploitée comme une entreprise privée; et qu'elle soit encouragée à établir des filiales à l'étranger de la façon normale, c'est-à-dire en dehors des services de l'État.

(7G)—En général, nous aimerions que la production et la distribution de films se fassent de façon très concurrentielle.

Il nous paraît normal qu'elle soit, dès sa naissance, surveillée de près et protégée de sorte que, au Canada, ce soit l'industrie cinématographique canadienne et ses employés qui dominent.

M. Stanbury: Et vous reconnaissez que le gouvernement n'a pas accordé ce pouvoir, pour le moment, à la Société du développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne?

M. Garrett: Certainement pas dans la Loi. Mais, comme je l'ai dit précédemment, et j'y reviens, il n'était pas nécessaire que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne exige, par son règlement actuel, d'obtenir un contrat ferme de distribution afin de récupérer son argent.

M. Stanbury: Ce n'est pas nécessaire si elle ne se soucie pas de récupérer le placement qu'elle a fait.

M. Garrett: Je ne chicane absolument pas sur ce point, mais je suis certain que ce leur serait facile. Par exemple, M. Spencer et M. Lapalme auraient pu s'adresser à un certain nombre de distributeurs canadiens et les regrouper, ou ils auraient pu leur demander de se grouper en une sorte de société coopérative de distribution qui permettrait aux producteurs cinématographiques de ce pays de produire des films plus facilement. Nous n'avons pas à produire des films du genre de Guerre et Paix.

M. Stanbury: Mais vos associations d'industrie cinématographique n'ont jamais essayé de faire cela. Vous voulez que ce soit l'organisation bancaire qui le fasse.

[Text]

Mr. Garrett: Well, it is a tool to do it with.

Mr. Stanbury: But you have never attempted to do it in your organization.

Mr. Garrett: No, no. It has only been suggested now because this whole business has come up. It is perfectly apparent now that if we do not move within the next year or two years, there is not going to be any opportunity at all ever to have a Canadian film industry.

Mr. Stanbury: But you want to do it.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, may I pursue this point that I have been trying to get at for a little while? The whole problem with the CFDC, as I understand it, is that they have not listened to the advice of the people who are most familiar with the situation.

Mr. Garrett: They have not asked for any advice.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is a matter of communications and we are having difficulty with communications here this morning. The vital point is that the theatre chain which distributes feature films is in hands other than Canadian. Now, you have made recommendations how this difficulty might be overcome. You are saying to us that we shall never develop a feature-film industry so long as there is foreign domination of the theatre.

Mr. Garrett: That is right. As long as...

Mr. Dinsdale: This is largely British and American?

Mr. Garrett: And do not forget, there is another point. There is the cultural point, too, because Canadian films really are different from American films or British films. Canadian film makers have a different mentality, a different psychology, a different outlook altogether. If a very legitimate film maker in Canada—and let us come back to Michel Brault again—took his script to Columbia they would look at it and say "It looks great", and that sort of thing but, "Forget it man; it is not for us". So by their tastes and their estimate of the market in their own country, they are forcing him into their kind of format which also has a terribly inhibiting effect on the development of distinctively Canadian films. Distribution, it is a two-edged bad effect, if you know what I mean.

[Interpretation]

M. Garrett: C'est un moyen d'y parvenir.

M. Stanbury: Mais vous n'avez jamais cherché à le faire dans votre association.

M. Garrett: Non. Ce n'est que maintenant à cause de toute cette affaire, que cela a été proposé. Il est parfaitement évident maintenant que si nous ne faisons rien d'ici un an ou deux, l'occasion d'avoir une industrie cinématographique canadienne ne se présentera jamais.

M. Stanbury: Mais vous voulez que ce soient eux qui fassent le nécessaire.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, est-ce que je pourrais poursuivre un peu sur le sujet que j'essaie de soulever depuis tout à l'heure? Tout le problème de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, d'après ce que j'ai pu comprendre, c'est qu'elle n'a pas suivi les conseils de ceux qui connaissent le mieux la situation.

M. Garrett: Elle n'a pas demandé de conseils.

M. Dinsdale: C'est une question de communication, et nous avons de la difficulté à communiquer, ici, ce matin. Le plus important, c'est que la chaîne de cinémas qui distribue les longs métrages est entre des mains autres que des mains canadiennes. Vous avez fait des recommandations pour dire comment on pourrait surmonter cette difficulté. Vous nous dites que nous ne parviendrons jamais à mettre sur pied une industrie des longs métrages tant que les cinémas seront sous la domination étrangère.

M. Garrett: C'est exact. Tant que...

M. Dinsdale: Vous voulez surtout parler de la domination britannique et américaine?

M. Garrett: Il y a aussi un autre aspect. C'est l'aspect culturel, car les films canadiens sont très différents des films américains ou britanniques. Les producteurs de films canadiens ont une mentalité, une psychologie, un point de vue tout à fait différents. Si un producteur de films, typiquement canadiens—prenons de nouveau l'exemple de Michel Brault—présentait son scénario à la société Columbia, elle l'examinerait et dirait: «Cela a l'air excellent; mais nous regrettons, ce n'est pas ce qu'il nous faut.» Ainsi, par leurs goûts et par leur évaluation du marché de leur pays, les Américains forcent le producteur canadien à adopter le même style qu'eux, ce qui impose aussi une restriction très forte à la production de films typiquement canadiens. La distribution a un effet fâcheux dans deux sens, si vous voyez ce que je veux dire.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Is this not similar to the pressures put on American film makers by the people who advance them money, such as the banks and the distributing companies?

Mr. Garrett: I am sure it is. That is their problem, too.

Mr. Dinsdale: Are you recommending that Canada set up a Canadian corporation to compete with the foreign-owned distributors?

Mr. Bockner: There are Canadian distribution companies, I might add.

The Chairman: How many and how large?

Mr. Bockner: Ours is probably the only large one.

The Chairman: How large is large?

Mr. Bockner: Competitive with any distribution company.

The Chairman: Could you get Canadian feature films into these theatres?

Mr. Bockner: I am speaking now without consultation but so far as my company, Astral Films, is concerned and not as a part of any committee, our intention from a business point of view is to get very much into a co-production basis and not just be distributors.

The Chairman: You would want a piece of the action, there, of feature films that looked good.

Mr. Bockner: Absolutely.

Mr. Osler: If you are as big as...

Mr. Bockner: Do not make that mistake. I have heard that said. May I interrupt for one second? A technical mistake has been made. The theatre chain and the distribution company are two different things.

Mr. Mongrain: They are owned by the same people most of the time.

Mr. Bockner: I will not argue that point, although they are two different things.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, if I may pursue that, as a representative of a distribution company which you say is large and, I

[Interprétation]

Le président: Est-ce que ce n'est pas semblable à la pression qu'exercent sur les producteurs de films américains ceux qui leur avancent de l'argent, comme les banques ou les sociétés de distribution?

M. Garrett: Si, j'en suis certain. Mais c'est là un problème qui ne concerne qu'eux.

M. Dinsdale: Recommandez-vous que le Canada crée une société canadienne pour soutenir la concurrence des distributeurs étrangers?

M. Bockner: Je pourrais ajouter qu'il y a des sociétés de distribution canadiennes.

Le président: Combien y en a-t-il, et quelle est leur importance?

M. Bockner: La nôtre est sans doute la seule qui soit importante.

Le président: Est-elle très importante?

M. Bockner: Elle peut soutenir la concurrence de n'importe quelle société de distribution.

Le président: Est-ce que vous pourriez avoir des longs métrages canadiens dans ces cinémas?

M. Bockner: Je parle maintenant sans consultation préalable, mais pour ce qui est de la société à laquelle j'appartiens, l'Astral Films, et non à titre de comité, nous avons l'intention, du point de vue des affaires, de travailler dans la co-production, et pas seulement dans la distribution.

Le président: Autrement dit, vous voulez participer à la production des longs métrages qui semblent bons.

M. Bockner: C'est cela.

M. Osler: Si vous êtes aussi importants que...

M. Bockner: Ne faites pas cette erreur. J'ai déjà entendu dire cela. Puis-je vous interrompre un instant? Il y a eu une erreur technique. La chaîne de cinémas et la société de distribution sont deux choses tout à fait différentes.

M. Mongrain: La plupart du temps, elles appartiennent aux mêmes personnes.

M. Bockner: Je ne le nie pas, mais ce sont tout de même deux choses différentes.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, si vous me permettez de continuer sur cette lancée, en tant que représentant d'une société de distriassume, successful what is inhibiting your distributing Canadian films at present?

Mr. Bockner: Nothing at all. Nothing inhibits us from distributing Canadian films except the lack of Canadian films, which we feel as a private business are capable of being distributed at a profit.

Mr. Osler: Then if that is the case you would be willing to sign a distribution contract with somebody who had a film that you thought was a fitting film. Then they would be able to go to the the government bank, get what was required from them and away you go.

Mr. Bockner: Absolutely.

Mr. Osler: That is what we have been talking about. Why does this not happen?

Mr. Bockner: I do not know.

The Chairman: On the question of distribution—if I may ask one question just to be clear in my own mind—the CFDC will make loans to a producer up to the point where he has a script prepared without the necessity of a distribution contract. It is only when he has a script and is prepared to go on to the shooting stage that the CFDC requires a distribution contract. In other words, the CFDC will make loans up to the final point where the script is prepared, and then it demands a distribution contract from that point on. Is that correct? That clears up my question. Mr. Osler?

Mr. Osler: This is where I am, frankly, very bewildered. If I were a writer, or a producer who had got hold of a writer, and I came to you and I said, I think this is a hell of a good script and you looked at it and you agreed that it was a hell of a good script and that you would sign a distribution contract provided the film could be made, why have you not got a marriage right there?

Mr. Bockner: First of all, part of the rules and regulations incumbent upon me in signing such a distribution contract where it involves the CFDC requires the putting up of a good deal of money. I become a partner.

Mr. Osler: You just said you would like to become a partner.

[Interpretation]

bution qui, selon vous, est importante, et qui, je suppose, a du succès, qu'est-ce qui vous empêche, actuellement, de distribuer des films canadiens?

M. Bockner: Rien nous empêche de le faire, si ce n'est le fait qu'il n'y a pas de films canadiens qui, d'après nous, et du point de vue commercial, puissent être distribués à profit.

M. Osler: Autrement dit, si quelqu'un avait un film qui soit valable, vous accepteriez de signer un contrat de distribution avec les personnes en cause. Elles pourraient alors s'adresser à la banque du gouvernement et obtenir ce qu'elles voudraient.

M. Bockner: Absolument.

M. Osler: C'est bien ce dont nous parlons. Pourquoi cela ne se fait-il pas?

M. Bockner: Je ne sais pas.

Le président: Au sujet de la distribution, j'aimerais poser une question pour obtenir des éclaircissements. La Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique va accorder des prêts à un producteur jusqu'à ce que son scénario soit prêt sans exiger un contrat de distribution. Ce n'est que lorsque le scénario est terminé et que le producteur est prêt à tourner le film que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne exige un contrat de distribution. Autrement dit, la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne consent un prêt jusqu'au moment où le scénario est prêt, puis elle exige un contrat de distribution. Est-ce bien cela? Je comprends mieux maintenant. Monsieur Osler?

M. Osler: C'est, franchement, ce que j'ai peine à comprendre. Si j'étais scénariste, ou si j'étais producteur et que j'aie mis la main sur un scénariste, et que j'aie vous trouver pour vous dire qu'à mon avis, c'était un excellent scénario, et que vous reconnaissiez qu'il était en effet excellent, et que vous acceptiez de signer un contrat de distribution à condition que le film soit réalisable, pourquoi n'y aurait-il pas là un droit d'association?

M. Bockner: Tout d'abord une partie des règlements auxquels je dois me plier lorsque je signe un contrat de distribution et que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne est en cause m'oblige à investir pas mal d'argent. Je deviens alors associé.

M. Osler: Vous venez de dire que vous aimeriez devenir associé.

[Texte]

Mr. Bockner: That is correct, and if we see a script or something that we want to become a partner in, we will. But let us not make a general rule and assume that this particular private company is some avenue that is an answer to all the ills of the Canadian film industry.

Mr. Stanbury: No, no; but if you thought the film was going to be a good investment you would probably invest in it. . .

Mr. Bockner: That is correct.

Mr. Stanbury: . . . and make a distribution contract whether it was through the CFDC or not through the CFDC.

Mr. Osler: The CFDC might or might not be needed, but I am trying to establish whether or not it is true that at the moment the CFDC cannot function because it puts the cart before the horse; it insists on distribution, and yet you have said that you are ready, willing and able not only to sign a distribution contract, but to take a piece of the action of anything that might be produced you thought was good, which is all any businessman should be expected to do.

Mr. Garrett: May I make a statement, too, about this? Mr. Bockner could do all this, but his is a small company and he might not often have $500,000 to put up as 50 per cent of the financing. Therefore, the script would have to have very, very unusual properties in order for him to be able to float that much money himself and to get the other $500,000 from the CFDC, or whatever it happened to amount to. In the United States they produce far many more movies than we do and they have a far greater production and distribution capacity.

Mr. Osler: Yes, and the banker can spread his risk.

Mr. Garrett: That is right, and so it is much more likely that if you take a script to the United States you will find an opportunity to finance it and get distribution there. He has to be very much more careful than Columbia or Paramount would be.

Mr. Gentleman: My point is very close to Mr. Garrett's and my question is to Mr.

[Interprétation]

M. Bockner: C'est exact, et si nous voyons un scénario pour lequel nous aimerions participer, nous nous associons. Mais ne généralisez pas, et n'allez pas supposer que cette société privée particulière détient la solution de tous les problèmes de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne.

M. Stanbury: Non, bien sûr, mais si vous pensiez qu'un film était un bon placement, vous feriez sans doute un investissement dans ce film. . .

M. Bockner: C'est exact.

M. Stanbury: . . . et vous signeriez un contrat de distribution, que ce soit ou non par l'intermédiaire de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne.

M. Osler: On pourrait avoir ou ne pas avoir besoin de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, mais j'essaie de savoir si oui ou non il est exact qu'actuellement, la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne ne peut pas fonctionner parce qu'elle met la charrue avant les bœufs. Elle insiste sur la distribution, et pourtant vous avez dit être disposé non seulement à signer un contrat de distribution, mais aussi à participer à la production de tout film que vous jugez bon, et c'est tout ce que l'on attend d'un homme d'affaires.

M. Garrett: Puis-je aussi faire une déclaration à cet égard? M. Bockner pourrait faire toutes ces choses, mais la société à laquelle il appartient est une petite société, qui n'a pas souvent $500,000 à investir pour payer la moitié du financement. Par conséquent, il faudrait que le film ait un caractère vraiment inhabituel pour qu'il puisse réunir lui-même tant de fonds et obtenir l'autre moitié, $500,000 ou quelle que soit la somme, de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne. Aux États-Unis, on produit beaucoup plus de films qu'ici, et l'on a des possibilités de production et de distribution beaucoup plus grandes.

M. Osler: Oui, et le banquier peut ainsi répartir ses placements, et court moins de risques.

M. Garrett: C'est cela, et il y a donc beaucoup plus de chances de trouver des possibilités de financement et de distribution si l'on propose un scénario aux États-Unis. Mais il lui faut être beaucoup plus prudent que Paramount ou Columbia.

M. Gentleman: J'ai une observation qui se rattache de très près à celle de M. Garrett, et

[Text]

Bockner. How often could he afford to invest in Canadian film productions? How many $500,000 has he got?

Mr. Bockner: It is a very limited thing.

Mr. Gentleman: And his is the largest company.

• 1240

Mr. Osler: That is very true, but in that case he is no different from any other relatively small businessman bucking trends from outside. In our own company, for instance, we have had to get together with two other companies to consolidate in the general insurance business in order to have enough weight to deal with the consortiums of insurance companies that have got together in the last few years.

If your business is a sound one and you can show that it is an interesting investment, why cannot an underwriting house or some other person be interested in coming in with you and getting going? I suggest that is not a government problem; it is an ordinary business problem.

Mr. Bockner: I was going to suggest that if you would like to buy my business and do this it would be very nice.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, just from the line of questioning Mr. Osler has pursued, are you suggesting that there needs to be some sort of government control of the foreign ownership of distribution facilities to make it possible for the smaller Canadian companies to compete in this field? Specifically, should the government attempt some reciprocal distribution privileges in the American market for similar privileges in the Canadian market? Do you have any recommendations along these lines?

Obviously your problem is that you are up against a giant that you cannot compete with; the Canadian market is not large enough. Earlier Mr. Garrett suggested that films come in without any government restrictions whatsoever in terms of tariffs. They are not regarded as commodities in the normal way.

On the other hand, Canadian film distribution, I suppose, would be subject to all sorts of restrictions in the U.S.A., the U.K. and France or any other country where they are circulated. Are you suggesting that the government has not provided the necessary assistance in these matters?

Mr. Bockner: Are you asking me that?

[Interpretation]

ma question s'adresse à M. Bockner. Avec quelle fréquence pourrait-il se permettre d'investir de l'argent dans la réalisation de films canadiens? De combien de fois $500,000 dispose-t-il?

M. Bockner: Nos fonds sont très limités.

M. Gentleman: Et il a la société la plus importante.

M. Osler: C'est très vrai, mais en cela il ne se distingue pas des autres petits entrepreneurs qui vont chercher de l'aide à l'extérieur. Par exemple, dans notre société, nous avons dû fusionner avec deux autres sociétés, dans le domaine des assurances, afin de faire suffisamment poids pour pouvoir traiter avec les consortiums de compagnies d'assurances qui se sont constitués ces dernières années.

Si votre affaire marche bien, et que vous puissiez prouver que c'est un investissement intéressant, pourquoi une maison de garantie ou un particulier ne peuvent-ils pas s'associer à vous? Je pense que ce n'est pas un problème gouvernemental, mais un problème commercial ordinaire.

M. Bockner: J'allais dire que si vous vouliez racheter mon entreprise et faire cela, j'en serais fort heureux.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, à la suite des questions posées par M. Osler, est-ce que vous voulez dire qu'il faudrait qu'il y ait en quelque sorte un contrôle gouvernemental des réseaux de distribution appartenant à des étrangers pour permettre aux compagnies canadiennes de moindre importance d'entrer en concurrence dans ce domaine. En particulier, le gouvernement devrait-il tenter d'obtenir des privilèges réciproques sur le marché américain en échange de privilèges semblables sur le marché canadien? Avez-vous des recommandations à faire dans cet ordre d'idée? Évidemment votre problème est que vous avez à faire face à un géant que vous ne pouvez pas concurrencer. Le marché canadien n'est pas suffisamment vaste. Et plus tôt, M. Garrett a dit que les films entrent au pays sans aucune restriction, sans tarif; on ne les considère pas comme des produits ordinaires. Mais d'autre part, les films canadiens, eux, seraient soumis à toutes sortes de restrictions, aux États-Unis, au Royaume-Uni, en France ou dans tout autre pays où ils sont en circulation. Laissez-vous entendre que le gouvernement n'a pas fourni l'aide nécessaire sur ces questions?

M. Bockner: Est-ce à moi que vous le demandez?

[Texte]

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, sir, I am.

Mr. Bockner: I answer with a resounding "Yes"!

Mr. Gentleman: Quite definitely; this is the very interest that we need from the government. If we are to have any cultural expression at all in Canada it is vital that we get this support of government interest.

Mr. Stanbury: Will you be specific on the point that Mr. Dinsdale raised? Do you want restriction imposed against the operation of foreign distribution and exhibiting companies in Canada? For instance, do you want a quota established? Do you want, as I think you mentioned in your brief, a discouraging surtax on the exhibition of foreign films, both on television and in movie houses? Perhaps you could zone in on the specific examples that Mr. Dinsdale gave and give us other specific examples of what you think government might do to attack this problem of foreign control of distribution.

The Chairman: As a supplementary to that, you might also consider whether it is possible for a Canadian film to return its investment if it is exhibited solely in Canada, or must it be on the international circuit?

Mr. Gentleman: It must be on the international circuit. I do not think there is a hope in hell of ever recovering your moneys within Canada. What Canadians must be looking for is the production of films of a high artistic quality which will gain money by being exhibited in other countries. In other words, our market is an international market. If anyone is looking for a profit within Canada he is out of business immediately; you must look to the international market.

Mr. Stanbury: So you must deal with international distributing companies, U.S. and U.K.

Mr. Garrett: Not necessarily.

Mr. Gentleman: Well, yes and no. If we have the right sort of financial support there is a chance of persuading the international circuits to accept our films. Without their support we are lost.

Mr. Stanbury: But you do feel it is important to protect the Canadian market. Could we get back to some of the specific things Mr. Dinsdale mentioned. . .

[Interprétation]

M. Dinsdale: Oui, monsieur, c'est à vous.

M. Bockner: Je réponds «oui», très fort.

M. Gentleman: Absolument. C'est bien là l'intérêt dont nous avons besoin de la part du gouvernement.

M. Stanbury: Pouvez-vous être précis sur le point soulevé par M. Dinsdale? Voulez-vous qu'on impose des restrictions sur les distributions étrangères et les compagnies qui passent des films au Canada? Par exemple, désirez-vous que des contingencements soient établis? Voulez-vous, comme je crois vous l'avez mentionné dans votre mémoire, une surtaxe de découragement visant la projection de films étrangers autant à la télévision que dans les cinémas? Vous pourriez peut-être vous orienter sur les exemples spécifiques donnés par M. Dinsdale et nous apporter d'autres exemples spécifiques de ce que le gouvernement pourrait faire pour s'attaquer à ce problème du contrôle de la distribution par des intérêts étrangers.

Le président: En supplément de ceci, vous pourriez vous demander s'il est possible qu'un film canadien rapporte des bénéfices s'il est montré seulement au Canada. Vous devez aspirer au marché international.

M. Gentleman: Il doit entrer dans le circuit international. Je ne crois pas qu'il y ait un seul espoir de recouvrer vos frais au Canada. Ce que les Canadiens doivent viser à réaliser, ce sont des films ayant une grande qualité artistique qui rapporteront des bénéfices en étant montrés à l'étranger. En d'autres termes, notre marché est un marché international. Si quelqu'un cherche à réaliser des profits au Canada, mieux vaut qu'il se retire des affaires. C'est vers le marché international qu'il faut s'orienter.

M. Stanbury: Vous devez donc faire affaire avec des compagnies de distribution internationales des États-Unis ou du Royaume-Uni.

M. Garrett: Pas nécessairement.

M. Gentleman: Oui et non. Si nous disposons d'un bon appui financier, nous avons une chance de convaincre le circuit international d'accepter nos films. Sans leur appui, nous sommes perdus.

M. Stanbury: Mais vous pensez malgré tout qu'il est important de protéger le marché canadien? Est-ce qu'on peut revenir à des points précis, mentionnés par M. Dinsdale?

[Text]

Mr. Gentleman: Yes.

Mr. Bockner: May I make a comment so far as that is concerned? I think rather than take the negative approach of saying, "What can we sit on?", we should take a positive approach. In other words, I get the feeling that what we are doing is zeroing in on foreign distribution. Why do we not take a positive approach that says, "What are the ways that we can build, nurture and make grow a Canadian production industry?"

• 1245

Mr. Stanbury: You do not subscribe to the brief that has been presented by the Canadian Society of Cinematographers, then.

Mr. Bockner: I did not say that at all. I just say that the approach to the problem is not one of saying, "Do not do this"; It is one of saying, "Do this."

Mr. Stanbury: But what they are suggesting in their brief is a quota system, a state film corporation that would produce and distribute, a surtax on profits from cinemas and television stations exhibiting foreign made feature films—several quite restrictive measures—and are you saying you do not agree as individual with those recommendations?

Mr. Bockner: I would agree with some and not agree with others.

Mr. Stanbury: Which ones do you agree with?

Mr. Garrett: How can you refer to them as restrictive measures?

Mr. Stanbury: I make no judgment on them. I am trying to find out what your organizations are recommending.

The Chairman: Mr. Gentleman has a comment.

Mr. Gentleman: It will be obvious from the many things I have said here this morning that I do not consider the CSC has the whole-sale solution to the problem. This is ridiculous; it is far too complex. It involves too many other societies, other disciplines, government intervention—the whole thing is a complex problem and to insist that the CSC brief is presenting a clear-cut case for solving all the problems is incorrect.

[Interpretation]

M. Gentleman: Oui.

M. Bockner: Puis-je faire une remarque sur cette question. Je pense que plutôt que d'adopter une attitude négative en disant: «Sur quoi pouvons-nous nous appuyer?» nous devrions opter pour l'attitude positive. En d'autres mots, j'ai l'impression que nous braquons nos mirettes sur la distribution étrangère. Pourquoi ne pas prendre une attitude positive et dire: «Quels sont les moyens pour lesquels nous pourrions édifier, entretenir et faire progresser une industrie canadienne de la production».

M. Stanbury: N'approuvez-vous pas le mémoire qui a été présenté par la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels?

M. Bockner: Ce n'est pas du tout ce que j'ai dit. J'ai dit simplement que la manière d'aborder le problème n'est pas de dire: «Ne faites pas cela» mais de dire: «Faites ceci».

M. Stanbury: Mais ce qu'ils demandent dans leur mémoire, c'est un système de contingentement. Une société de production de l'État qui pourrait produire et distribuer une surtaxe sur les bénéfices prélevés des cinémas et des stations de télévision pour la projection de films étrangers sont plusieurs seraient des mesures restrictives, et êtes-vous en train de dire qu'en tant qu'individu vous n'approuvez pas ces recommandations?

M. Bockner: J'en approuve certaines, d'autres pas.

M. Stanbury: Alors, avec laquelle êtes-vous d'accord?

M. Garrett: Comment est-ce que vous pouvez parler de ces mesures comme étant restrictives?

M. Stanbury: Je ne porte pas de jugement à ce propos. J'essaie de découvrir ce que vos organismes proposent.

Le président: M. Gentleman veut faire une remarque.

M. Gentleman: Si vous vous reportez à ce que j'ai dit ici ce matin, il deviendra évident que je ne crois pas que la SCCP a une solution passe-partout à tout le problème. C'est ridicule. La question est beaucoup trop complexe. Cela touche un trop grand nombre d'autres sociétés, d'autres disciplines, l'intervention du gouvernement. Je trouve que cette question est complexe et que ce serait une faute de soutenir que la SCCP présente une solution bien nette.

[Texte]

Mr. Stanbury: I am only trying to find out what it is you are proposing, and apparently there is disagreement among members of the delegation.

Mr. Gentleman: It is a very popular attitude to say that there is division of opinion; therefore we cannot listen to what you are saying.

Mr. Stanbury: We are listening, but what is it you want?

Mr. Gentleman: What I am saying is that within the framework of all the organizations which could be crystallized within the CFDC, these solutions could be forthcoming if the CFDC were interpreting their Act in a way beneficial to the Canadian community. To go back, Section 10(1) under the Act reads:

The objects of the Corporation are to foster and promote the development of a feature film industry in Canada, and without limiting...

and I repeat, "without limiting".

...the generality of the foregoing, the Corporation may, in furtherance of its objects...

then we have all the financial creed, but the important thing to me is "foster and promote the development of a feature film industry" and in this regard it has to be more than a bank; it has to be the focus of industry suggestion and recommendation and the implementation of that through government, and that is the whole point of meeting.

Mr. Dinsdale: In other words, you see the Canadian Film Development Corporation as the agent that can gradually sort out some of these formidable problems.

Mr. Gentleman: Precisely.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, and it is not doing that because it will not consult or...

Mr. Gentleman: Precisely.

Mr. Osler: But in justice to the Corporation, Mr. Chairman, they have a certain amount of money, and if they shoot their wad they do not have any more money. Now, it is not an organization that I think the government has ever contemplated pouring more and more money into. It is a revolving bank that they have established so it is quite legitimate for the people who are running it to assume that if they have $10 million, or whatever the figure is, which they revolve in

[Interprétation]

M. Stanbury: J'essaie seulement de savoir ce que vous proposez et il semble qu'il y ait désaccord parmi les membres de votre délégation.

M. Gentleman: C'est très commode de dire qu'il y a divergences d'opinion. Donc, on ne peut pas attacher d'importance à ce qui se dit.

M. Stanbury: Nous écoutons, mais dites-nous ce que vous voulez.

M. Gentleman: Alors, eh bien, ce que je veux dire, c'est qu'à l'intérieur des organisations qui pourraient se cristalliser dans les cadres de la SDICC, ces choses pourraient se réaliser si la SDICC interprétait sa Loi d'une façon qui serait bénéfique pour la collectivité canadienne. Pour en revenir au paragraphe 1 de l'article 10, il est dit:

«Le but de la société est de favoriser le développement d'une société de longs métrages au Canada et sans limiter ce qui précède.»

Je répète «sans limiter»

...la généralité de ce qui précède, la société peut, dans la poursuite de ses buts, ...

Nous avons alors tout le credo financier, mais la chose importante pour moi c'est «favoriser et promouvoir l'épanouissement d'une industrie cinématographique du long métrage, et à cet égard ce doit être plus qu'une banque, ce doit être le point de convergence des propositions et des recommandations de l'industrie, et toute la raison d'être de la présente assemblée, c'est la réalisation de tout cela avec l'appui du gouvernement.

M. Dinsdale: En d'autres termes, vous entrevoyez la SDIICC comme l'agent qui peut graduellement débrouiller quelques-uns de ces formidables problèmes?

M. Gentleman: Précisément.

M. Dinsdale: Oui, et elle ne le fait pas parce qu'elle ne consulte pas...

M. Gentleman: Précisément.

M. Osler: Oui, mais en toute justice pour la Société, monsieur le président, elle possède un certain montant d'argent, et si elles y mettent le paquet, elles se retrouvent sans le sou. Maintenant, il s'agit là d'une organisation dans laquelle le gouvernement n'a pas songé à verser des sommes de plus en plus importantes. Ils ont établi une banque à fonds rotatifs et il est très justifiable que les personnes qui l'administrent se disent que s'ils ont $10 millions ou quelque montant que ce soit, qu'ils order to try to stimulate the industry, one of their duties is to protect the $10 million because they will not have any more; they would just be another government agency.

The Chairman: What is the breakdown in the Canadian film industry now between the feature film section, the educational section and the commercial section?

Mr. Gentleman: I would like to speak to that. When you foster and promote the development of a feature film industry in Canada, you are not solely developing feature films. You are developing an industry that is comprised of technicians in certain facilities who are able to tackle a variety of functions such as educational filming, documentary filming, what have you, and eventually you escalate to a point where you can now make a feature film.

The National Film Board is now attempting to make feature films. This is an area that it should not be in. If it has a subject that deserves a feature length that is fine, but it should not be making feature films for entertainment purposes. I do not see that it is a duty of government to entertain. It is to instruct—instruct and entertain, perhaps, but not just to entertain.

• 1250

The Chairman: We have been arguing that the House of Commons is the longest-running entertainment show on the Canadian scene.

Mr. Mongrain: I would like to ask another question, Mr. Chairman, on the distribution problem. Have you ever noticed monopolistic practices by American or British firms over here in the distribution of feature films in movie houses?

Mr. Bockner: I am in a very difficult position in terms of answering your question. As general manager of a film distribution company, I am a member of a group known as the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors Association. When I speak in respect of a question like that I could be taken as being a spokesman for such a group. And, brother, I cannot speak on the question at this point.

Mr. Mongrain: I do not think that you have to say any more. I think we guess what you would like to say.

The Chairman: I think that would be an unacceptable assumption but I would like to font tourner afin d'essayer de stimuler l'industrie, un de leur devoir est de protéger le $10 millions. Autrement ils n'auraient pas de fonds et deviendraient un autre organisme de l'État.

Le président: Mais dans la production cinématographique au Canada, est-ce que vous pouvez vous faire la répartition entre le long métrage, le film éducatif et le film commercial?

M. Gentleman: Je voudrais répondre à cette question. Lorsque vous favorisez et encouragez l'existence d'une industrie du long métrage au Canada, vous n'encouragez pas que les longs métrages. Vous encouragez une industrie qui comprend des techniciens, dans certaines installations, qui pourrait accomplir plusieurs tâches, depuis le film documentaire, le film éducatif, et ainsi de suite, et à un moment vous en arrivez au point où vous pouvez faire un long métrage.

L'Office national du film cherche actuellement à faire des longs métrages. Or, c'est un domaine où il n'a rien à voir. S'ils avaient un sujet qui pourrait justifier un long métrage, c'est très bien, mais ils ne devrait pas chercher à faire un long métrage uniquement de divertissement. Son but est d'instruire et peut-être de divertir mais pas uniquement de divertir.

Le président: On dit que la Chambre des communes est peut-être le vaudeville qui tient l'affiche depuis le plus longtemps au Canada.

M. Mongrain: Je voudrais poser une autre question sur la question de la distribution. Avez-vous déjà constaté des pratiques monopolistiques de la part des sociétés étrangères, britanniques ou américaines, au Canada, relativement à la distribution des longs métrages dans les salles de cinéma?

M. Bockner: Je suis gêné pour répondre à votre question parce que, en tant que directeur général d'une société de distribution, je fais partie de l'Association des distributeurs de film du Canada. Aussi, lorsque je traite de cette question, on pourrait considérer que je suis le porte-parole du groupe. Je vous assure que je ne peux pas me permettre de parler de ce sujet à ce moment-ci.

M. Mongrain: Je ne pense pas qu'il soit nécessaire d'élaborer: nous avons compris ce que vous aimeriez dire.

Le président: Je pense que c'est une supposition exagérée mais je voudrais vous demanask you if the Distributors Association would have any objection to appearing before this Committee at a later date.

[Texte]

Mr. Bockner: I doubt very much. I am actually sitting in for the President of the Distributors Association.

Mr. Mongrain: No, Mr. Chairman, I will do it the other way. I intend to ask this Committee to invite here as witnesses owners of movie houses who, I think, know a lot about what I am calling monopolistic practices here in Canada from American companies.

Mr. Osler: May I add for Mr. Mongrain's consideration to that suggestion that we have a second problem that I have been trying to bring up at the right time and I think it is very parallel at this point and that is this advertising tipping business that goes on. I think, frankly, that the American industry especially is getting away with murder in Canada.

Mr. Bockner: I did not understand what you said.

Mr. Osler: Concerning the American advertising that is brought in and Canadianized, and so on, this is where we get big flack from ACTRA, for instance. I think it is entirely justifiable. I mean, it is part of the building of your film industry. If you can make ads you can make feature films, and so on. I do not know who the people in the advertising industry are that we should see, but if we are seeing the film distributors part of the same problem is in the advertising business.

Mr. Dinsdale: Before we get off on this one, can I just come back to the moment of illumination where it seemed to me the essence of the complaint here is that the CFDC is not using the powers that have been granted to it in Section 10 of the Act in order to be the agent authorized by Parliament to sort out some of these complex problems that we are trying to sort out here in assisting in the establishment of a feature film industry in Canada.

The impression I get is that instead of cooperation between the industry and the Board here is hostility, which disturbs me. We thought that this would be the instrument of overcoming some of these problems and it looks as if this parliamentary committee is going to have to beat that.

Mr. Gentleman: In my address when you came to visit us in Montreal I said that the der si l'Association des distributeurs accepterait de se présenter à une prochaine réunion.

M. Bockner: J'en doute. Je remplace actuellement le président de l'Association des distributeurs.

M. Mongrain: Non, monsieur le président, je vais m'y prendre autrement. Je vais demander au Comité d'inviter ici, à titre de témoins, les propriétaires de salles de cinéma qui, je crois le savoir, connaissent très bien ce que j'appelle les pratiques monopolisantes des sociétés américaines au Canada.

M. Osler: A l'attention de M. Mongrain, je devrais dire également que nous avons un deuxième problème que j'ai essayé de soulever en temps opportun et qui, je crois, est très voisin de la question à l'étude: Il s'agit de cette question du déversement de publicité au Canada. Je crois véritablement que l'industrie américaine en particulier, se permet tout au Canada.

M. Bockner: Je n'ai pas compris ce que vous avez dit.

M. Osler: Je parle de la publicité américaine importée ici et canadianisée. C'est à ce moment-là que l'actua nous critique, par exemple. Je pense d'ailleurs que c'est justifié, parce que ça fait partie de l'édifice de notre industrie du film. Si vous pouvez faire de la publicité, vous pouvez faire des longs métrages, etc. Je ne connais pas les gens de l'industrie de la publicité que nous devrions rencontrer, mais si nous rencontrons les distributeurs de film, nous pourrions en profiter, car c'est en partie le même problème que dans l'industrie de la publicité.

M. Dinsdale: Avant de passer outre, je voudrais revenir peut-être à ce moment d'illumination, où il me semblait que l'essence de la question résidait dans le fait que la SDICC n'utilisait pas les pouvoirs qui lui ont été accordés dans l'article 10 de la loi pour faire fonction d'agent autorisé par le Parlement chargé de relever certains des problèmes complexes que nous étudions ici et d'aider à l'établissement d'une industrie du long métrage au Canada.

J'ai l'impression pour ma part, qu'au lieu d'y avoir une coopération entre l'industrie et la Société de développement, il y a plutôt de la rivalité, ce qui m'inquiète. Nous pensions que cette Société pourrait parvenir à régler certains problèmes, mais il semble au contraire que c'est le Comité qui devra s'en occuper.

M. Gentleman: Lorsque vous êtes venu nous voir à Montréal, je vous avais dit que la production of films of a transient nature, that is the individual financial support of a film which is made and then everybody disperses and goes home, will not build us an industry. The only way that you can begin to build your facilities and get your continuity flow in the training of workers is by producing one film after another. In other words you have to plan for a block of films to be made, not single films and money which is poured in from the top, to talk about the $10 million, is money wasted.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, following up the idea of Mr. Dinsdale, I would like to have the reaction of Mr. Gentleman on this. Speaking as a parliamentarian who wants to co-operate in helping you to build that business, suppose this Committee first advised the government or Parliament to legislate that this society le développement cinématographique be given an advisory board of people who are in the business, and secondly that we legislated so that l'Office national du film became a research or experimentation centre together with a higher school for training people of your trade; and then that we would try to legislate to control foreign distribution and promote domestic distribution, not only here but all over the world; and finally that you would be protected against Crown corporations competing with you. Would you be satisfied that your problem would be settled definitely?

• 1255

Mr. Gentleman: That is a very happy summation.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, it leaves out most of Part Two of the brief which we received, dated February 3, which Mr. Garrett, I think, indicated was the nub of the recommendations of the cinematographers. You are concerned about this as well, are you not?

Mr. Garrett: Yes, we are concerned about this. This is only one possible answer, though. There are many possible answers.

Mr. Stanbury: Yes. This is the first of a series of meetings at which we are going to try to find answers to help this industry. Are the suggestions in this Part Two of the cinematographers' brief dated February 3, 1969, the recommendations of your organizations which are appearing here this morning?

Mr. Garrett: They are.

production de films sur une base temporaire c'est-à-dire de films qui sont produits grâce à une aide financière particulière et où tout le personnel est renvoyé après le tournage, eh bien, ça ne donnera jamais une industrie véritable. La seule façon de créer une industrie du film et de former un personnel expérimenté est de produire un film après l'autre. Autrement dit, il faut prévoir toute une série de films, pas seulement un film à la fois; l'argent qui vient d'en haut, pour parler du $1 millions en question, c'est de l'argent gaspillé.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais avoir la réaction de M. Gentleman à ce sujet. Disons qu'en tant que parlementaire, j'aimerais vous aider à la création de cette industrie et supposons que, premièrement, le Comité demande au Parlement de passer une loi qui adjoindrait à la Société de Développement cinématographique un comité consultatif constitué de gens qui s'occupent de la question; deuxièmement qu'une loi soit passée de telle sorte que l'Office national du film devienne un centre de recherche et d'expérimentation additionné d'une école de formation pour les gens du cinéma; ensuite, qu'on nous cherchions à passer une loi pour limiter ou contrôler la distribution de films étrangers et favoriser la distribution de films canadiens non seulement au Canada mais à l'étranger et, enfin qu'on vous accorde la protection contre les sociétés de la Couronne qui vous font concurrence. Alors, pensez-vous que votre problème serait résolu?

M. Gentleman: Eh bien, voilà un beau résumé.

M. Mongrain: Merci.

M. Stanbury: Monsieur le président, cela élimine à peu près la deuxième partie du rapport que nous avons reçu le 3 février et que M. Garrett considérait comme le noyau des recommandations des cinéastes. Est-ce que cette partie du rapport ne vous préoccupe pas?

M. Garrett: Oui, cela nous préoccupe. Ce n'est qu'une des solutions possibles mais il y en a d'autres.

M. Stanbury: Bon. Cette réunion est la première d'une série au cours de laquelle nous chercherons à trouver des réponses pour aider l'industrie du film. Est-ce que les suggestions formulées dans la partie 2 du mémoire des cinéastes sont les recommandations de votre organisation qui nous sont présentées ce matin?

M. Garrett: Oui.

[Texte]

Mr. Stanbury: So that the legislative steps set out on pages 5 and 6 of that brief are the recommendations of all those people who are here this morning?

Mr. Bockner: I do not believe that is true.

Mr. Garrett: No, not necessarily. We are from the CSC and Mr. Doucette is from the Directors Guild of Canada. Where they would accept the spirit of the thing they would quibble about some of the methodology.

Mr. Stanbury: So that we can try to get specific lines of approach which Parliament might take to the problem, could we know then if the recommendations on pages 4 and 5 of that brief are still recommendations of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers?

Mr. Garrett: They are.

Mr. Stanbury: And they are fully behind those suggestions. Were those suggestions passed at any general meeting of the Society?

Mr. Gentleman: The executive. Approved by the executive.

Mr. Stanbury: And they have not been approved by the general meeting yet?

Mr. Gentleman: No.

Mr. Stanbury: Will they be submitted to a general meeting?

Mr. Gentleman: Yes, they will be.

Mr. Stanbury: Perhaps you could advise us of the outcome of that.

Mr. Gentleman: Absolutely.

Mr. Stanbury: And now the Directors Guild of Canada is represented here this morning.

Mr. Garrett: By Mr. Gorman.

Mr. Stanbury: Does the Directors Guild agree with those recommendations?

Mr. Gorman: No.

Mr. Stanbury: It does not agree. Does the Distributors' organization agree with them?

Mr. Bockner: To my knowledge this has never been submitted to the Distributors.

Mr. Stanbury: But you have seen them now.

[Interprétation]

M. Stanbury: Donc, les mesures législatives indiquées aux pages 5 et 6 du mémoire constituent les recommandations de tous ces gens qui sont ici présents ce matin?

M. Bockner: Pas nécessairement.

M. Garrett: Nous appartenons à la SCCP et M. Doucette appartient à la Guilde des metteurs en scène. Même s'ils acceptent l'esprit du mémoire, ils pourraient contester certaines méthodes utilisées.

M. Stanbury: Afin de préciser les lignes directrices que le Parlement pourrait utiliser pour aborder le problème, pourrait-on savoir si les recommandations contenues dans les pages 5 et 6 du mémoire sont encore des recommandations de la Société canadienne des cinéastes?

M. Garrett: Oui.

M. Stanbury: Et ils appuient totalement les recommandations. Est-ce qu'elles ont été adoptées à une assemblée générale de la Société?

M. Gentleman: C'est l'exécutif qui les a approuvées.

M. Stanbury: L'assemblée générale de la Société ne les a pas encore acceptées?

M. Gentleman: Non.

M. Stanbury: Est-ce qu'elles seront soumises à l'assemblée générale?

M. Gentleman: Oui.

M. Stanbury: Peut-être pourriez-vous nous donner une idée des résultats de cette discussion.

M. Gentleman: Certainement.

M. Stanbury: La Guilde des metteurs en scène est aussi représentée ici ce matin.

M. Garrett: C'est M. Gorman qui la représente.

M. Stanbury: Est-ce que le Directeur de la Guilde est d'accord avec ces recommandations?

M. Gorman: Non. Pas du tout.

M. Stanbury: La Guilde n'est pas d'accord. Est-ce que l'Association des distributeurs appuie les recommandations?

M. Bockner: A ma connaissance, on ne les a pas mis au courant des recommandations du mémoire.

M. Stanbury: Mais vous venez de les voir.

[Text]

Mr. Bockner: Just.

Mr. Stanbury: Do you agree with them?

Mr. Bockner: Only in part.

Mr. Stanbury: Well, which part?

Mr. Bockner: I have not really read it that thoroughly.

Mr. Stanbury: Well, I will read it:

(a) The imposition of a quota system through which Canadian made feature films would receive a fair share of screentime and admissions income in cinemas in Canada;

Would your organization be in favour of that?

Mr. Bockner: I cannot answer for my organization. It is made up of several different companies.

Mr. Stanbury: So it has never considered the question and you have no recommendation to make on that subject?

Mr. Bockner: No.

Mr. Stanbury: What about a state film producing and distributing company?

Mr. Bockner: Again, I could not comment for the organization at all.

Mr. Gentleman: May I make a comment at this point? It is directly in relation to what you are saying. On the front page of Part Two of the brief, it is written:

The aim of the present document is directed to considerations from which a National Film Policy can be structured. Its intent is shared by the majority of film organizations in Canada...

This intent is shared by the majority...

...and all of those are able and willing to assist in formulating a National Film Policy that will provide a healthy economic growth for the motion picture industry and the crafts of performing arts. All of this without recourse to perpetual appeals for government handouts.

This is saying, in effect, that we are willing, naturally, to share opinions with all the organizations and to this end the Society of Film Makers has proposed the formation of a national film academy wherein all these things will be centred.

[Interpretation]

M. Bockner: Je viens tout juste.

M. Stanbury: Êtes-vous d'accord avec ces recommandations?

M. Bockner: En partie.

M. Stanbury: Quelle partie?

M. Bockner: Je ne l'ai pas lu attentivement.

M. Stanbury: Nous le lirons donc maintenant.

(a) L'imposition d'un système de contingentement grâce auquel les longs métrages canadiens se verraient accorder une bonne part des heures de projection et des recettes des cinémas canadiens;

Est-ce que votre organisation est d'accord avec cette recommandation?

M. Bockner: Je ne peux répondre au nom de l'organisation, car elle est composée de plusieurs sociétés.

M. Stanbury: Ainsi, vous n'avez jamais étudié la question et vous n'avez pas de recommandations à faire?

M. Bockner: Non.

M. Stanbury: Maintenant, que pensez-vous d'une société d'État qui produirait et distribuerait les films?

M. Bockner: Encore une fois, je ne peux pas faire de commentaires au nom de l'organisation.

M. Gentleman: Puis-je faire un commentaire: C'est en rapport avec ce que nous disons sur la première page de la deuxième partie du mémoire, il est dit que:

Le présent document vise à étudier les structures éventuelles d'une politique cinématographique nationale, objectif partagé par la majorité des organismes cinématographiques canadiens...

Cet objectif est partagé par la majorité...

qui peuvent et veulent participer à l'élaboration d'une politique du film assurant une croissance économique saine à l'industrie cinématographique et aux arts du spectacle. Et ce, sans avoir continuellement recours aux subventions de l'État.

Nous sommes prêts à partager nos avis avec toutes les organisations et à cette fin, la Société des cinéastes a proposé la création d'une académie nationale du film.

[Texte]

Mr. Stanbury: What I am trying to find out is which of these organizations agree with the specific suggestions you are making, and I gather that none of these suggestions have been considered by the Distributors' organization and that they are not prepared to support them at the present time. Is that correct?

The Chairman: Mr. Bockner?

• 1300

Mr. Bockner: Well, I think that would be a fair statement.

Mr. Stanbury: The Distributors' organization is not prepared to support any of those recommendations at the present time. They may at some future date consider them and give us their opinion of them?

Mr. Bockner: I do not like the way you phrase it. I do not say that they are not prepared to support any; I would say that they have not considered any.

Mr. Stanbury: So you cannot express any support.

Mr. Bockner: That is correct.

Mr. Stanbury: Either you personally or your organization? I gather that the Directors Guild is in much the same position. Will you be studying the suggestions that have been made by the Canadian Society of Cinematographers and letting us have your opinion on them?

Mr. Gorman: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: Your two organizations?

Mr. Gorman: Yes.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Mongrain): I suppose it would be also appropriate that they have contact with the other organizations that are not here this morning.

Mr. Stanbury: I presume we will be hearing from all of them, but I think we should have the opinion of each on the specific suggestions that have been made. The Canadian Society of Cinematographers has thrown out these various suggestions and if we are going to come up with recommendations for the government and for Parliament we should know what each one of the professional organizations thinks of these suggestions and what other suggestions they have to make.

Mr. Gentleman: May I speak to that?

The Acting Chairman: Yes.

[Interprétation]

M. Stanbury: Je voudrais savoir quelles organisations sont d'accord avec les propositions précises que vous formulez. Et si je comprends bien aucune des suggestions n'ont été examinées par l'Association des distributeurs et qu'ils ne sont pas prêts à les appuyer à ce stade; est-ce bien cela?

Le président: M. Bockner.

M. Bockner: Oui, c'est une déclaration à peu près juste.

M. Stanbury: L'Association des distributeurs n'est prête à appuyer aucune de ces recommandations à ce stade. Peut-être qu'ils pourront l'examiner par la suite et nous donner leur avis.

M. Bockner: Je n'aime pas la façon dont vous l'exprimez. Je ne dis pas qu'ils ne sont pas prêts à l'appuyer, je dis qu'ils ne les ont pas examinées.

M. Stanbury: De sorte que vous ne pouvez appuyer aucune de ces recommandations.

M. Bockner: Exact.

M. Stanbury: Je crois comprendre que la Guilde des metteurs en scène est à peu près dans la même situation. Est-ce ce que vous allez étudier ces suggestions qui ont été faites par la société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels et nous mettre au courant de votre opinion?

M. Gorman: Oui.

M. Stanbury: Vous nous donnerez l'opinion des deux organisations.

M. Gorman: Oui.

Le vice-président: Il y a d'autres organisations qui ne sont pas représentées ici ce matin.

M. Stanbury: Je crois que nous aurons de leurs nouvelles, mais je pense que nous devrions connaître le point de vue de chacune d'elles sur les propositions spécifiques qui ont été faites. La Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels a lancé ces diverses propositions, et si nous voulons présenter des recommandations au nom du gouvernement et du parlement, nous devrions savoir ce que ces organisations professionnelles pensent de ces propositions et quelles autres propositions ils peuvent faire.

M. Gentleman: Puis-je y ajouter quelque chose?

Le président suppléant: Oui.

[Text]

Mr. Gentleman: There is an understandable reluctance on the part of the film-makers of the French discipline to cooperate fully with those of the English-speaking discipline. This is unfortunate but in light of the present political development it is understandable. Therefore there may be a division between French and English but I am very sure that amongst the English-speaking disciplines there will be accord. We cannot speak for the French at this time.

Mr. Stanbury: On these specific suggestions which you have made?

Mr. Gentleman: No, on the formulation of a national policy on which we can submit recommendations to you as a unified group. You must realize, too, that all of us in these organizations are not paid. It costs a lot of money and takes a lot of time.

Mr. Stanbury: But you will try to come up with specific recommendations of the kind that you made in the brief and that Mr. Garrett referred to. I do not make any judgment whether they are good or bad, I simply want to know which members of your industry support these recommendations and what other specific changes in legislation or specific actions of government you think are worth while.

Mr. Gentleman: I can clarify that immediately by saying that four organizations that I contacted who have read the brief say that they share the intent of the document, not the detail.

Mr. Stanbury: Well, they will be appearing here, presumably, and we can find out how much of the detail they agree with and how much they disagree with.

Mr. Garrett: May I just say that the intent of the document is to ask the government for a comprehensive and cohesive national film policy. That, you can say, is the intent. Now there are so many ways of going about it that you could probably interview everybody in the film business in Canada and they would all come up with a different thing. But...

Mr. Stanbury: That has been my experience so far.

Mr. Garrett: ...again I come back to what I said before. It is the responsibility of the government to take the leadership because only the government can do it, in the first place and, in the second place only the government has the facilities.

[Interpretation]

M. Gentleman: Il existe une réticence compréhensible de la part des cinéastes francophones de coopérer pleinement avec leurs collègues anglophones. C'est regrettable, mais à la lumière des développements politiques actuels, c'est compréhensible. Par conséquent il se peut qu'il y ait une division entre le français et les anglais, mais en ce qui concerne les anglophones je suis sûr qu'il y aura un accord. Nous ne pouvons pas parler pour les francophones.

M. Stanbury: Sur ces mêmes propositions que vous avez formulées?

M. Gentleman: Non. Sur la formulation d'une politique nationale, au sujet de laquelle nous pourrions vous soumettre des recommandations en tant que groupe unifié. Vous devez vous rendre compte aussi que dans ces organisations nos services sont bénévoles. Cela demande beaucoup de temps et d'argent.

M. Stanbury: Mais vous allez essayer de faire des recommandations précises du genre de celles qui figurent dans le mémoire et auxquelles M. Garrett faisait allusion. Je ne dis pas que c'est bon ou mauvais. Je veux simplement savoir quels sont les membres de votre industrie qui appuient ces recommandations et quelles autres modifications à la Loi ou mesures précises seront nécessaires de la part du gouvernement.

M. Gentleman: Je peux préciser en disant que quatre organisations avec lesquelles j'ai communiqué et qui ont lu le mémoire nous ont dit qu'ils partageaient l'intention du document mais non les détails.

M. Stanbury: Je suppose que nous allons les voir ici et nous verrons sur quels points de détails ils sont d'accord et sur quels autres ils ne le sont pas.

M. Garrett: Permettez-moi de dire que le document a pour objet de demander au gouvernement d'établir une politique nationale du film cohérente et de grande portée. Voilà ce que c'est que l'intention. Évidemment les façons de procéder sont tellement nombreuses que vous pourriez interviewer toutes les personnes qui s'occupent de cinéma au Canada, et chacun aura une idée différente. Mais...

M. Stanbury: C'est ce que j'ai remarqué jusqu'ici.

M. Garrett: Une fois de plus, je reviens sur ce que j'ai dit auparavant. C'est au gouvernement de faire preuve de leadership, car tout d'abord seul le gouvernement peut le faire et ensuite seul le gouvernement a les possibilités de le faire.

[Texte]

Mr. Stanbury: You have suggested that it do it on the basis of advice from the industry, you are the people best able to make specific suggestions how it could be done, and we are simply saying we would like specific suggestions.

Mr. Garrett: If the government went ahead with the attitude only—not necessarily the advice but the attitude that it was going to create a national film industry, that would be about as much as we could...

Mr. Stanbury: It is a hard matter of finding practical ways of doing that, Mr. Garrett, and you are the experts in the field to whom we look for advice on those specific...

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, when this Act was passed it was supposed to be the vehicle.

Mr. Stanbury: I think that if you read the debates you will find that no one said that it was going to answer all the problems.

An hon. Member: It was the vehicle.

The Acting Chairman: It was the beginning of the construction...

Mr. Osler: This is a corporation, as I understand it, to help the film industry. If the corporation has been remiss in consulting the film industry about how it should help it, that is one thing. But when we ask the film industry how we can help it, we do not get very clear indications that the film industry knows how we can help. I would submit that know even less about how to produce a film than I do about how to be a politician at this point, but we are submitting to you that we do not want to waste a lot of time and money if you could tell us how we can improve your industry, we would like to cooperate with you.

The Acting Chairman: Could I interrupt and ask the members and witnesses if it is our feeling that we should adjourn to some other time, or is the discussion completed?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, we have really only begun to scratch the surface. Another major point in the representations is that one of the problems in creating a feature film industry is the monopolistic competition of government agencies the NFB, and the CBC

[Interprétation]

M. Stanbury: Vous avez suggéré que le gouvernement le fasse en se fondant sur les conseils provenant de l'industrie, mais vous êtes les gens les mieux placés pour formuler des idées précises et nous avons dit que nous aimerions avoir ces suggestions précises.

M. Garrett: Si le gouvernement adoptait l'attitude selon laquelle il allait créer une industrie nationale du film, ce serait tout ce que nous pourrions...

M. Stanbury: C'est très difficile de trouver des moyens pratiques pour cela, monsieur Garrett, et c'est à vous, les experts dans le domaine, que nous nous adressons pour obtenir des conseils sur ces questions...

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, quand cette loi fut adoptée, elle était supposée être un instrument.

M. Stanbury: Si vous lisez les débats, vous verrez que personne n'a prétendu que cette loi serait la réponse à tous les problèmes.

Une voix: C'était l'instrument.

Le président suppléant: C'était le début de la construction.

M. Osler: C'est une société qui a été créée pour aider l'industrie du film. Si la société a manqué de consulter l'industrie cinématographique pour savoir comment il fallait l'aider, c'est une chose. Maintenant, quand nous demandons à l'industrie du film de nous dire en quoi nous leur pouvons être utiles, nous ne recevons pas des indications claires et nous avons l'impression que l'industrie elle-même ne sait pas comment nous pouvons l'aider. Et à ce point j'admets savoir moins en ce qui concerne la production d'un film que du métier de politicien. Mais nous ne voulons pas gaspiller du temps et de l'argent. Si vous pouvez nous dire comment on peut améliorer votre industrie, nous aimerions bien collaborer avec vous.

Le président suppléant: Puis-je interrompre un moment et demander aux membres et aux témoins si nous devons suspendre les travaux ou dois-je comprendre que la discussion est terminée.

M. Dinsdale: Nous ne faisons que commencer, nous n'avons fait qu'effleurer le problème. Une autre question d'importance en ce qui concerne les représentations en vue de la création d'une industrie de longs métrages est celle des problèmes que la concurrence des which seems to be working at cross-purposes with the Act.

Mr. Osler: By the way, I asked the CBC specifically and they say that they are taking in the order of 50 per cent of their film business outside, that it has decreased from 80 per cent and that it is standing firm at about 50 per cent.

The Acting Chairman: Could I have an answer to my request. Do we go on or do we adjourn and try to get permission to sit tonight?

Mr. Dinsdale: I have another Committee meeting at 8 o'clock tonight, Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The Acting Chairman: Where do we go from here?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I think these witnesses have certainly made their position clear on the point that Mr. Dinsdale underlined, both in their brief and in their conversations with us in Montreal. I think that they have come through to us loud and clear on that. I would not have any questions on it. I think they have made their point. I would have no further questions of them, if they want to be excused.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think these briefs are both going to be included in the records—at least they were authorized. I think all our questioning has done this morning is to clarify some of the points that have been raised in the brief. We could have an interesting discussion on the problem of government competition in the field, which would clarify the points, but I would conclude that as this is not going to be the only meeting with representatives of the industry we could pursue this in due course, as they say in Parliament.

Mr. Stanbury: Unless the visitors have something more they want to add I would not have any desire to question further.

The Acting Chairman: You realize that we will have to request permission to sit tonight. We have not been able to get hold of the responsible person yet.

Mr. Stanbury: I do not think there is any need unless the witnesses particularly want to say something.

The Acting Chairman: Do you feel that you will need another hour or two.

[Interpretation]

pratiques monopolisantes des organismes gouvernementaux, l'Office national du film et la Société Radio-Canada qui semblent agir à l'opposé de la loi.

M. Osler: A propos, j'ai demandé précisément à la Société Radio-Canada et ils disent qu'ils prennent environ 50 p. 100 de leurs films à l'extérieur de Radio-Canada, que cela a décliné de 80 p. 100 demeurant stationnaire à 50 p. 100.

Le président suppléant: Puis-je avoir une réponse à ma demande? Est-ce que nous poursuivons les travaux ou devons-nous les suspendre et obtenir la permission de siéger ce soir?

M. Dinsdale: J'ai une autre réunion à huit heures, les Affaires indiennes.

Le président suppléant: Que faisons-nous maintenant?

M. Stanbury: Je crois, monsieur le président, que les témoins ont expliqué leur position clairement au sujet de la question soulevée par M. Dinsdale, tant en ce qui concerne leur mémoire que lors des entretiens que nous avons eus à Montréal. Je crois que leurs points de vue nous ont été clairement exposés. Je n'ai pas d'autres questions à leur poser. Ils peuvent se retirer s'ils le veulent.

M. Dinsdale: Je crois que ces deux mémoires vont figurer au compte rendu, au procès verbal et les questions que nous avons posées ont éclairé la situation. Nous pourrions avoir une discussion très intéressante sur la question de la concurrence gouvernementale dans ce domaine et qui pourrait éclaircir la situation, mais je ferais remarquer qu'étant donné que cette réunion ne sera pas la seule réunion avec les représentants de l'industrie, nous pourrions poursuivre ces travaux en temps et lieu, comme cela se dit au Parlement.

M. Stanbury: A moins que les visiteurs n'aient quelque chose d'autre à ajouter. Je n'ai pas d'autres questions à poser.

Le président suppléant: Vous comprenez bien qu'il nous faudra demander une permission spéciale pour nous réunir ce soir. Nous n'avons pas encore pu communiquer avec la personne en charge.

M. Stanbury: Je pense que ce n'est pas nécessaire à moins que les témoins aient envie de revenir.

Le président suppléant: Croyez-vous avoir besoin d'une heure ou deux?

[Texte]

Mr. Gentleman: Well, we are terribly happy to bend your ear because the more we can communicate with you the safer we feel on the whole approach. But, at the same time, I think Mr. Stanbury's point is—and he knows that I hold the same view—that we do need a unified voice from all the professional organizations and we do need specific recommendations. I hesitate to endorse that and say we are going to do it because there is a whole history of recommendations contained in all those briefs.

Mr. Stanbury: Going off in different direction.

Mr. Gentleman: And many people have grown very tired of the whole thing. Many very good professional people are still leaving Canada because there is no point in staying here whatever. This is the unhappy side of the question. Beyond that I would like to assure you that you will get those recommendations, and I think George Gorman of the Directors Guild will offer the same comments. Other than that I would like to thank you very very much for listening to us. Thank you for your interest.

The Acting Chairman: Gentlemen, we will adjourn now. I want to thank our witnesses. Maybe the tone of this meeting has been hard at times but you may rest assured that we want to cooperate with you to help build, and very soundly build, this important business. We have taken a lot of notes and I think there will be some action. We will consult with other people too.

• 1310

We will have a meeting next Tuesday on Bill C-171, the Act respecting the National Library.

The meeting is adjourned.

[Interprétation]

M. Gentleman: Nous sommes très heureux de vous avoir tiré l'oreille, car plus nous pouvons communiquer avec vous, plus nous nous sentons sûrs de toute la question. Mais, en même temps, et M. Stanbury est d'accord avec moi, nous devons obtenir l'unanimité et les recommandations spécifiques de toutes les organisations. J'hésite d'accepter cela et de dire que nous le ferons, parce que tous ces mémoires contiennent un tas de recommandations.

M. Stanbury: Allant dans toutes les directions.

M. Gentleman: Nombreux sont ceux qui en ont assez. Un bon nombre d'excellents professionnels ne cessent de quitter le Canada, car ça ne vaut pas la peine d'y rester; voilà l'aspect malheureux du problème. Cependant, j'aimerais vous assurer que vous recevrez ces recommandations et que M. George Gorman de la Guilde des metteurs en scène, fera les mêmes commentaires. Il ne me reste que de vous exprimer tous mes remerciements pour avoir bien voulu nous entendre et pour l'intérêt que vous avez porté à ces problèmes.

Le président suppléant: Nous suspendons nos travaux. J'aimerais remercier nos témoins, la discussion a été dure par moment, le ton a été dur mais vous pouvez être sûrs de notre désir de collaborer avec vous pour l'établissement d'une solide et importante entreprise. Nous avons noté beaucoup de choses, et je crois que nous passerons à l'action. Nous consulterons d'autres personnes aussi. Nous devons nous réunir mardi prochain pour l'étude du Bill C-171, la Loi sur la bibliothèque nationale.

La séance est levée.

APPENDIX "L"

CANADIAN SOCIETY OF CINEMATOGRAPHERS

22 Front Street West—Toronto Ontario

Montréal office: 3040 Place de Chazel, Montréal 356, Québec.

January 10th, 1969

To: The Honourable Members of the Special Parliamentary Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

A statement dealing with certain matters vital to the interests of the Canadian film industry.

Presented by the Montréal branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers.

Roger Racine, CSC, President.

Allen Grayston, CSC, Sec't'y.

Is Canada ever to have a film industry of its own?

It is a question that might well be asked, particularly in the light of the action of Odeon Theatres of Canada Limited in banning from the screens of its theatres the Department of National Health & Welfare's short film "KING SIZE".

According to Frank Fisher, Vice-President and General Manager of the chain, KING SIZE was turned down because it was not considered "entertainment" by the screening committee.

"We're in the entertainment business and we try to entertain our customers", Mr. Fisher was quoted as having told the Canadian Press. That having been established, Odeon was off to a profitable start on the first day of yet another tremendously profitable year.

The attitudes of cinema chain operators such as Mr. Fisher are only one in a multitude of problems facing the Canadian film industry on every front. The following is a list of the nine most pressing in the private sector:

- (1)—High wage rates;
- (2)—Low profit potentials in every area except that of commercial exhibition;
- (3)—The consistent draining-off by the USA film industry and other countries of qualified film personnel, directors, cinematographers and performing artists;

APPENDICE «L»

ASSOCIATION CANADIENNE DES
CINÉMATOPHES

22 rue Front Ouest—Toronto, Ontario

Bureau de Montréal: 3040, Place de Chazel, Montréal 356, Québec.

Le 10 janvier 1969

Aux honorables membres du Comité permanent de la Radiodiffusion, des Films et de l'Assistance aux Arts.

Mémoire traitant de certaines questions d'intérêt vital pour l'industrie canadienne de la cinématographie.

Soumis par la Succursale de la Société canadienne des cinématographes.

Roger Racine, SCC, président

Allen Grayston, SCC, secrétaire

Le Canada aura-t-il jamais sa propre industrie du film?

C'est une question qui peut fort bien se poser, surtout si l'on sait que l'Odeon Theatres of Canada Limited interdit dans ses théâtres la projection sur ses écrans du film à court métrage KING SIZE du ministère de la Santé nationale et du Bien-être social.

Selon Frank Fisher, vice-président et administrateur général des succursales, KING SIZE a été refusé parce que ce film n'était pas considéré comme «spectacle» par le comité de projection.

«Nous sommes dans les affaires de spectacles et nous nous efforçons de divertir nos clients» aurait dit M. Fisher à la Presse canadienne. Cela ayant été établi, Odeon avait un beau départ dès le premier jour d'une autre année énormément profitable.

L'attitude d'exploitants de cinémas à succursales tel que M. Fisher n'est qu'un problème parmi une multitude d'autres auxquels l'industrie canadienne du film doit faire face sur tous les fronts. La liste qui suit en mentionne neuf des plus pressants dans le secteur privé:

- (1)—Taux élevés de salaires;
- (2)—Probabilité de profit minime dans tous les domaines sauf celui de la projection commerciale;
- (3)—Drainage constant, par l'industrie du film des États-Unis et d'autres pays, du personnel qualifié: directeurs, cinématographes et acteurs;

[Texte]

(4)—Competition between the interests of the federal government (i.e. the NFB) and the private sector;

(5)—The CBC's lack of a regular and intelligent policy in its relations with the private sector of the film industry;

(6)—The lack, at the National Film Board of a realistic attitude toward the private sector;

(7)—A restraining degree of self-protectionism by members in the private sector of the film industry;

(8)—The fact that the Canadian feature-film exhibition industry is completely dominated by foreign-owned companies which have historically used the Canadian market as a dumping-ground for foreign-produced films;

(9)—The fact that neither the independent television stations nor TV stations in the CTV group nor TV stations in the CBC network have purchased enough in the way of entertainment, public affairs, variety and other kinds of film programs from producers in the private sector.

WAGE RATES IN THE PRIVATE SECTION—1

The film industry in Canada is for its workers a highly seasonal occupation and has many of the same kinds of disadvantages as farming or fishing. Wage rates have therefore tended to be far higher than in other industries during the months of most intense activity. At the present, however, according to members of the Montreal branch of The Canadian Society of Cinematographers, who also own their own film production firms, wage rates paid to camera-operators, assistant cameramen, sound technicians, lightingmen, stage-assistants and others, have become so high that the cost of producing many types of films in Canada is now on about a level with that of the U.S.A.

For films in the general category of public affairs or "documentary", wage rates can account for budget percentages up to 50%. The cost of film stock, processing, printing, sound etc., usually accounts for most of the remainder of the budget while the smallest portion of it is given to talent fees.

The budget percentages paid out for wages in theatrical or "dramatic" productions, natu-

(4)—Concurrence entre le Gouvernement fédéral (c.-à-d. l'ONF) et le secteur privé;

(5)—Défaut d'une politique régulière et avisée de Radio-Canada dans ses relations avec le secteur privé de l'industrie du film;

(6)—Défaut d'une attitude réaliste de la part de l'Office national du Film à l'égard du secteur privé;

(7)—Une certaine restriction pratiquée pour leur propre protection par des membres du secteur privé de l'industrie du film;

(8)—Le fait que les distributeurs canadiens de films à long métrage sont entièrement sous la coupe de compagnies étrangères qui se sont toujours servi du marché canadien pour le dumping de films étrangers;

(9)—Le fait que ni les postes indépendants de télévision ni ceux du circuit CTV, pas plus que les postes du réseau de Radio-Canada, n'ont acheté suffisamment de films des réalisateurs du secteur privé pour des programmes de divertissement, d'affaires publiques, de variétés et autres.

SALAIRES DANS LE SECTEUR PRIVÉ—1

L'industrie canadienne du film offre à ses travailleurs une occupation très saisonnière et comporte des désavantages du même ordre que ceux dont souffrent les cultivateurs ou les pêcheurs. Les taux de salaires ont par conséquent tendance à être beaucoup plus élevés que dans d'autres industries pendant les mois de pointe. A l'heure actuelle, au dire de membres de la succursale montréalaise de l'Association canadienne des cinématographes qui sont aussi propriétaires de firmes productrices de films, les taux de salaires payés aux caméramen, aides-caméramen, techniciens du son, éclairagistes, aides-producteurs et autres ont pris de telles proportions que le coût de production de plusieurs genres de films a maintenant atteint au Canada à peu près le même niveau qu'aux États-Unis.

Pour ce qui est des films de la catégorie des affaires publiques ou «documentaires», les taux de salaires peuvent atteindre jusqu'à 50 p. 100 du budget de production. Le coût du matériel de prise de vues, du développement, de l'impression, de la prise de son, etc. forme la plus grande partie du reste du budget, tandis que la plus faible partie va aux artistes.

Les pourcentages du budget affectés aux artistes ou acteurs sont naturellement les plus rally, is lower; but still high enough to be extremely costly.

In Montreal, members of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees union (IATSE) are paid the following rates:

(a) Cameraman or camera operator—per day $100.00; Cameraman or camera operator—per overtime day $200.00.

(b) Assistant cameraman—per day $50.00; Assistant cameramen—per overtime day $100.00.

(c) Sound recordists—per day $100.00; Sound recordists—per overtime day $200.00.

(d) Sound men, in all other categories—per day $50.00; Sound men, in all other categories—per overtime day $100.00.

(e) Lightingmen, chief electricians—per day $100.00; Lightingmen, chief electricians—per overtime day $200.00.

(f) Lightingmen, all other categories—per day $50.00; Lightingmen, all other categories—per overtime day $100.00.

To shoot for eight hours, then, on a Sunday, scenes in a television or theatrical entertainment would cost $1,100.00 for the minimum number of essential crew members alone, not counting any of the other dozens of categories of costs incurred in such a project.

In film production situations in the private sector in which IATSE crews are not employed (as for example for CBC or CTV who refuse normally to employ IATSE men or pay IATSE rates) the cost of day-to-day wage payments is considerably lower but high enough to remain a major headache to most private film companies and a vital factor in competition with other firms.

(NOTE: The CBC has established a free-lance wage policy of paying cameramen $50.00, or $60.00 per day, depending on the area; and camera assistants $40.00 per day, or in some areas, $25.00 per day. In order to have such employment from the CBC, the cameraman must also have an entire roster of equipment, the total cost of which would not be lower than $15,000.00.)

Inexperienced junior technicians used to supplement an experienced cameraman or director of photography are, of course, paid less; but they produce much less and are faibles, mais ils sont quand même assez élevés pour être extrêmement onéreux.

A Montréal, les membres de l'Alliance internationale des machinistes de théâtre (IATSE) sont payés aux taux suivants:

a)—Caméraman ou opérateur de caméra, par jour $100.00; caméraman ou opérateur de caméra, par jour de surtemps $200.00.

b)—Caméraman adjoint, par jour $50.00; caméraman adjoint, par jour de surtemps $100.00.

c)—Préposés à l'enregistrement du son, par jour $100.00; préposés à l'enregistrement du son, par jour de surtemps $200.00.

d)—Prép. enreg. du son, toutes autres catégories, par jour $50.00; prép. enreg. du son, toutes autres catégories, par jour de surtemps $100.00.

e)—Éclairagistes, chefs électriciens, par jour $100.00; éclairagistes, chefs électriciens, par jour de surtemps $200.00.

f)—Éclairagistes, toutes autres catégories, par jour $50.00; éclairagistes, toutes autres catégories, par jour de surtemps $100.00.

Il faudrait donc déboursier, un dimanche, pour huit heures de projection de scènes de télévision ou de spectacle de théâtre, $1,100.00 pour une équipe minimale essentielle seulement, sans compter les douzaines d'autres catégories de frais encourus à cet égard.

Quand il s'agit de réalisation de films dans le secteur privé où des équipes de l'IATSE ne sont pas employées (comme par exemple pour Radio-Canada ou CTV qui refusent d'ordinaire d'employer des hommes de l'IATSE ou de payer les taux de l'IATSE), les taux de paye journaliers sont bien inférieurs, mais tout de même assez élevés pour rester une difficulté majeure pour la plupart des compagnies privées et un facteur vital de concurrence avec d'autres firmes.

(NOTE: Radio-Canada a adopté une politique de paye indépendante, soit $50.00 ou $60.00 par jour pour les caméramen selon la région, et $40.00 par jour pour les caméramen adjoints ou, dans certaines régions, $25.00 par jour. Pour obtenir de l'emploi de Radio-Canada, le caméraman doit aussi avoir un outillage complet dont le coût total n'est pas inférieur à $15,000.00.)

De jeunes techniciens inexpérimentés employés comme aides de caméramen d'expérience ou de directeurs de prises de vues sont évidemment moins bien payés, mais leur rensometimes a big factor in actually adding to the already tremendous production costs of a film.

We recognize that the problem of high wages in an industry that is by-and-large a seasonal one, is not an insurmountable problem; and we realize, as well, that if the seasonal aspect of the problem can be sufficiently reduced and higher annual incomes guaranteed to industry workers, then a great step in solving the sales-volume problem will have been achieved.

For the moment, however, the Montreal branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers believes that the most experienced type of film technician to be found in Canada who is also a member of IATSE, an international union, has wrongly sought to bring wage levels up to parity with that of their brotherhood of industry workers in the USA. We also believe that for the growth of any film industry in Canada, producers in the private sector urgently require a much more realistic union situation in which unions such as IATSE would be amenable to cutting wage rates in various areas, in order that the various film companies get started.

We point out a vital fact here in relation to the use of IATSE crews. Feature films shot and distributed without IATSE crews and an IATSE label have no chance for distribution in the USA, the largest and most profitable potential market, for the simple reason that IATSE projectionists in USA theatres will not show them.

LOW PROFIT POTENTIAL IN THE PRIVATE SECTOR—2

For various reasons, right up until the present time, few producers in the Canadian film industry have been able to make adequate profits.

The most apparent reasons for this are as follows:

- (1) Unusually high salary overheads;
- (2) Low volume of work;
- (3) High laboratory costs;
- (4) High degree of employee idleness;

(5) High degree of home-market resistance.

In most sectors of private industry in general, a profit margin of six percent is considered rock-bottom. In the film industry, however, six percent is a sometimes unattaindement est bien moindre, et il arrive parfois qu'ils ajoutent aux frais déjà énormes de production d'un film.

Nous reconnaissons que le problème que posent les hauts salaires dans une industrie généralement saisonnière n'est pas sans solution, et nous comprenons aussi que si l'aspect saisonnier du problème pouvait être suffisamment mitigé et que de plus importants revenus annuels pouvaient être garantis aux travailleurs de l'industrie, un grand progrès serait alors réalisé dans la solution du problème du volume des ventes.

Pour le moment, toutefois, la succursale montréalaise de l'Association canadienne de cinématographes est d'avis que le type le plus expérimenté de technicien du film que l'on puisse trouver au Canada et qui soit aussi membre du syndicat international IATSE, s'est efforcé à tort de porter les salaires aux mêmes niveaux que ceux de leurs confrères des États-Unis. Nous croyons aussi que, pour l'expansion de toute entreprise cinématographique au Canada, les réalisateurs du secteur privé ont un besoin urgent d'un régime syndical beaucoup plus réaliste dans lequel des groupements comme IATSE seraient disposés à réduire les taux de salaires dans diverses régions, en vue de donner un élan aux diverses compagnies cinématographiques.

Nous soulignons ici un fait vital relatif à l'emploi d'équipes de l'IATSE. Les films à long métrage réalisés et distribués sans équipes de l'IATSE et non étiquetés IATSE n'ont aucune chance de distribution aux États-Unis, marché potentiellement le plus vaste et le plus avantageux, tout simplement parce que les projectionnistes des théâtres américains ne les montreront pas.

PROFIT MINIME DANS LE SECTEUR PRIVÉ—2

Jusqu'ici et pour diverses raisons, peu de réalisateurs de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne ont pu obtenir des profits suffisants.

Les plus apparentes sont les suivantes:

- (1) Salaires extraordinairement élevés;
- (2) Faible volume de travail;
- (3) Frais élevés de laboratoire;
- (4) Haut degré de désœuvrement des employés;
- (5) Forte résistance du marché domestique.

Dans la plupart des secteurs de l'industrie privée, une marge de profits de 6 p. 100 est considérée comme niveau minimum. Cependant, dans l'industrie cinématographique, 6 p.

able ideal, and many firms are able to struggle on for years on a profit margin as low as one or two percent. One of the largest private production companies in the east, for example, has not shown more than an annual five percent profit on its books for the past ten years. That same firm which was able to provide over a period of 18 months services to the CBC billed at nearly one million dollars actually showed only a two and one-half percent profit at the completion of the job.

We believe most other film production companies in Canada, with the natural exception of processing laboratories, are in a very similar situation.

(NOTE: Low profit potential is the main reason why film industry executives are not paid a lot. One of the largest eastern film production companies pays its chief executive producer only a little more than $10,000 per year. This has not done much to attract to the industry the type of brains it needs.)

In some cases, extremely low annual profits are brought about through the pressures of intense competition, and in other cases by a combination of high overheads and the tendency of the home market to severely restrict the amount in dollars it is willing to pay to obtain training, sales and advertising films.

One of the most important factors in the area of profits is that there is simply an insufficient volume of work which accounts for a high level of employee idleness throughout the industry which, in turn, contributes to the further restriction of profit potential.

In discussing this, it should be pointed out that the heads of most film companies are film men and not "executives" per se. Most of them can turn out excellent films but few of them have much in the way of sales ability. At the same time, neither profit potential nor volume is usually high enough to justify the hiring of men who can "make a pitch" and sell a film idea.

There is also involved in this question of profit potential the unusual and peculiar policies followed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in its relations with film companies in the private sector. This will be mentioned in sub-section 5.

Low profit potential has restricted to a severe degree investment in the private sector of the Canadian film industry. This is the 100 est parfois un sommet inaccessible, et nombre de firmes peuvent subsister pendant des années avec une marge de profits aussi minime qu'un ou deux pour cent. L'une des plus importantes entreprises privées de production de l'Est, par exemple, n'a pas accusé dans sa comptabilité plus de cinq pour cent de profits annuels durant les dix dernières années. La même compagnie qui, au cours d'une période de 18 mois, a pu fournir à Radio-Canada des services facturés à près d'un million de dollars, n'a pu accuser, à l'achèvement de son contrat, qu'un profit de deux et demi pour cent.

Nous croyons que la plupart des compagnies canadiennes de production cinématographique se trouvent dans une situation à peu près semblable.

(NOTE: Un faible potentiel de profits est la principale raison pour laquelle les administrateurs de compagnies cinématographiques ne sont pas grassement rémunérés. L'une des plus importantes compagnies de production de l'Est verse à son chef de production un salaire annuel d'à peine plus de $10,000, ce qui n'est pas fait pour attirer à l'entreprise le genre de compétences dont elle a besoin.)

Des profits annuels extrêmement bas résultent, dans certains cas, de l'intensité de la concurrence et, dans d'autres, d'une combinaison de frais généraux variables élevés et de la tendance du marché domestique à restreindre sérieusement la somme que l'entreprise consent à payer pour l'obtention de films de formation, de vente et de publicité.

L'un des plus importants facteurs dans le domaine des profits est l'insuffisance de travail, cause d'un haut degré de désœuvrement chez les employés qui, à son tour, contribue à réduire la possibilité de profits.

Dans ces considérations, il faut tenir compte du fait que les dirigeants de la plupart des compagnies cinématographiques sont des réalisateurs et non essentiellement des administrateurs; ils peuvent produire d'excellents films, mais peu d'entre eux ont suffisamment d'habileté pour la vente de leurs produits. D'autre part, ni le profit ni le volume possibles sont suffisamment élevés pour justifier l'embauchage d'hommes capables d'avoir des idées neuves et de les faire adopter.

Entre aussi en ligne de compte dans cette question de profit potentiel la singularité et peu commune ligne de conduite suivie par Radio-Canada dans ses relations avec les compagnies cinématographiques du secteur privé. Il en sera question au paragraphe 5.

Le faible potentiel de profits a gravement fait obstacle aux investissements dans le secteur privé de l'industrie canadienne du film.

reason why, in Montreal, for example, there is not one large film studio suitable for the filming of feature productions; why, in Montreal there is not one commercial laboratory that can process 35mm. colour negative; (outside the NFB) and why there is not one large central and well-equipped production facility that would encourage investment from abroad.

The present adequacy of Montreal's local facilities tends to inhibit rather than encourage foreign film investment whether justifiably or not. Thus, the Canadian film industry and particularly that located in Montreal, is regarded by foreign film men largely as a "mickey mouse" type of operation.

Low profits have created and perpetuate this situation.

The Montreal branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers feels that if the federal government does not act quickly to aid producers in the private sector in eastern Canada, in a very short time there will not be any film industry to become concerned about.

THE CONSISTENT DRAINING-OFF OF QUALIFIED PERSONNEL—3

The emigration of qualified cinematographers, film technicians, laboratory technicians, directors, performing artists, writers, producers and all other whose participation is necessarily required in film production has severely weakened the entire Canadian film industry. This factor has, in many cases, accounted for the low quality of some Canadian film companies. It has in turn further restricted the earning ability and growth potential of the industry as a whole.

In the case of the CBC, for example, following the tremendous success of the WOJECK series, many of the key people involved were offered and accepted jobs in the USA.

Since then we have already noted a lowering of quality in other CBC filmed drama productions.

So many highly competent film and production personnel have already left the country that it is said Canadians are becoming the main strength of the USA film industry.

A list of the most "famous" Canadian-trained émigrés would include: Norman Jewison, producer of last year's Academy Award winner, IN THE HEAT OF THE NIGHT; Silvio Narizzano, the writer-director

Voilà pourquoi, à Montréal par exemple, il n'y a pas un seul grand et convenable studio pour la réalisation de films à grand métrage, pourquoi Montréal ne possède pas de laboratoire commercial capable de développer des clichés négatifs de films en couleurs de 35mm., et pourquoi (exception faite de l'ONF) il n'existe pas d'atelier central de production vaste et bien équipé qui attirerait les investissements étrangers.

L'insuffisance des présentes installations de Montréal tend à empêcher au lieu d'encourager les investissements étrangers dans l'industrie du film, que ce soit légitimement ou non. Ainsi, l'industrie canadienne, celle de Montréal, en particulier, est en somme considérée par les cinéastes étrangers comme un type d'entreprise à la «Mickey Mouse».

Cette situation a été créée et maintenue par les faibles profits.

La succursale montréalaise de l'Association canadienne des cinématographes est d'avis que, si le Gouvernement fédéral ne vient pas promptement en aide aux producteurs du secteur privé de l'Est du Canada, dans très peu de temps il n'y aura plus d'entreprise cinématographique qui en vaille la peine.

LE DRAINAGE CONSTANT DE PERSONNEL QUALIFIÉ—3

L'émigration de cinématographes qualifiés, techniciens du film et de laboratoire, administrateurs, interprètes, auteurs, réalisateurs et de tous ceux dont la participation est essentielle à la production cinématographique, a gravement affaibli toute l'industrie cinématographique canadienne. Dans bien des cas, c'est à ce facteur qu'est attribuable la pauvre qualité des réalisations de certaines compagnies canadiennes. Il a, en outre, restreint la faculté de gagner et la possibilité d'expansion de l'ensemble de l'industrie.

Dans le cas de Radio-Canada, par exemple, à la suite de l'immense succès de la série WOJECK, beaucoup des principaux collaborateurs se sont vu offrir et ont accepté des postes aux États-Unis.

Depuis, nous avons déjà noté une baisse de qualité des autres productions dramatiques filmées de Radio-Canada.

Le nombre de producteurs et de cinéastes très compétents qui ont quitté le pays est tel que l'on dit que les Canadiens sont la force principale de l'industrie cinématographique des États-Unis.

Parmi les plus célèbres de ces émigrés formés au Canada, on note: Norman Jewison, producteur de IN THE HEAT OF THE NIGHT qui a obtenu le prix de l'Académie de l'an dernier; Silvio Narizzano, metteur en of GEORGIE GIRL; Syd Furie, director of many commercially successful films, only one of them being the noted IPCRESS FILE; Tim Kotcheff; Harvey Nart; Stan Harris and many others. The list of actors and actresses who have left for fame and fortune in New York or London is even longer.

Canadian film producers, once their former co-workers have departed to greener pastures are not only denied the participation of their talented minds (which they can no longer afford), they are also cut off from the benefits of the experience gained by these personnel in more complex professional work situations.

In entertainment terms, then, Canadian films have tended to stagnate at a certain level of excellence.

COMPETITION BETWEEN THE NFB AND PRIVATE SECTOR—4

The federal government has in some important ways contributed heavily to the present severe limitations of the Canadian film industry.

Most importantly, it has removed from the private sector the production of the 400-odd films its departments and ministries purchase annually from the National Film Board. Secondly, it has by act of parliament limited the size, scope and activities of the NFB itself, so that organization cannot expand in response to national need, or expand, at least, at a rate that would be of benefit to the industry as a whole.

It is important to realize that the Montreal branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers is not advocating the breaking up of the National Film Board which we feel has contributed a great deal to Canadian film prestige. We do, however, question the government's wisdom in directing the total volume of its requirements to the National Film Board.

The Montreal branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers strongly recommends that at least 50% of the National Film Board's sponsored films be systematically contracted-out to private producers.

We are aware, of course, the Board's management is already considering "letting out as much work as it can afford"; but to this date, no significant amounts have been channelled to private industry.

Provincial governments, another potentially valuable source of revenue have contributed, in cash, more toward the establishment of an scène et scénariste de GEORGIE GIRL; Syd Furie, metteur en scène de nombreux films ayant connu le succès, parmi ceux-ci le célèbre IPCRESS FILE; Tim Kotcheff; Harvey Hart; Stan Harris et beaucoup d'autres. La liste d'acteurs et d'actrices qui ont quitté le pays pour chercher fortune et gloire à New York ou Londres est encore plus longue.

Les producteurs de films canadiens, une fois que leurs anciens collaborateurs sont partis pour des herbages plus riches, ne sont pas seulement privés de la participation de leurs talents (qu'ils ne peuvent plus payer), mais ils sont aussi privés de bénéfices de l'expérience acquise par ces gens dans des situations professionnelles plus complexes.

Dans le domaine de la distraction, donc, le film canadien a eu tendance à stagner à un certain niveau d'excellence.

CONCURRENCE ENTRE L'ONF ET LE SECTEUR PRIVÉ—4

Le gouvernement fédéral a contribué de plusieurs façons aux graves limitations actuelles de l'industrie canadienne du film.

La plus importante mesure est d'avoir enlevé du secteur privé la production de quelque 400 films achetés annuellement par les ministères à l'Office national du film. Deuxièmement, il a, par voie légale, limité la taille, le champ et les activités de l'ONF lui-même, de sorte que l'organisation ne peut s'accroître en fonction des besoins nationaux, ou du moins à un rythme qui profiterait à l'industrie dans son ensemble.

Il faut bien comprendre que la section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels ne demande pas la dislocation de l'Office national du film, nous pensons qu'il a largement contribué au prestige du film canadien. Ce que nous mettons en cause, c'est la décision du gouvernement de commander tous ses films à l'Office national du film.

La section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels demande instamment que 50% au moins des films patronnés par l'Office national du film soit systématiquement confié à des producteurs privés.

Nous n'ignorons pas, évidemment, que la direction de l'Office considère déjà la possibilité de «confier à l'extérieur tout ce qu'elle peut payer»; mais à ce jour, peu de chose a été confié à l'industrie privée.

Les gouvernements provinciaux, une autre source importante de revenus, ont contribué davantage, en argent, à l'établissement d'une economically viable film industry. But in some cases, Québec, for example, this situation cannot be expected to continue for long. The Québec government has already a large and adequate film production unit at Hydro-Québec and is in the process of establishing an even larger one at Radio-Québec. In Ontario, the government of that province is in the process of placing in its own hands the instruments of film production, with particular respect to the educational field. In British Columbia, Premier W. A. C. Bennett, has so little faith in the Canadian film industry (despite the proofs of excellence established at EXPO '67) that he has ordered a nearly one million dollar film for his government's Osaka pavillion from a Czechoslovakian film production house.

Premier Bennett, of course, has the right to spend his province's funds where and how he chooses but such moves contribute nothing to the growth of the Canadian film industry. Vancouver is already one of the most depressed film production areas in the country and cannot afford Mr. Bennett's brand of external aid.

In the future it will be the attitudes of the federal government that will be crucial to the growth of the Canadian film industry.

We feel the private sector absolutely MUST have a share of the funds government ministries are prepared to expend on general film requirements. The Montreal branch of the CBC believes that if they do not receive a share, the present bad situation will promptly become a worse one.

THE CBC'S RELATIONS WITH THE PRIVATE SECTOR—5

Since the advent of television broadcasting in 1952, the private sector of the film industry has received a great deal of support from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The CBC's policies toward the private sector, however, can only fairly be described as strange and unusual. This is a general cause for complaint and irritation throughout the industry.

The Corporation's behaviour consists in irrationally contributing toward the sudden and strong advance of a particular film company in a short space of time; then just as suddenly, completely withdrawing all support leaving the private firm with a huge salary overhead brought on by the CBC's industrie cinématographique viable. Mais dans certains cas, au Québec par exemple, la situation ne durera pas longtemps. Le gouvernement du Québec a déjà une unité de production cinématographique importante et adéquate à l'Hydro-Québec et il est en train d'en établir une plus importante encore à Radio-Québec. En Ontario, le gouvernement de la province est en train de mettre la main sur les instruments de la production cinématographique, notamment en ce qui concerne les films éducatifs. En Colombie-Britannique, le premier ministre, M. W. A. C. Bennett, a si peu confiance dans l'industrie canadienne du film (en dépit des preuves de qualité établies lors d'EXPO 67) qu'il a commandé un film de près d'un million de dollars, pour le pavillon de son gouvernement à Osaka, à une maison de production tchécoslovaque.

[Traduction]

Évidemment, M. Bennett a le droit de dépenser les fonds de sa province comme et où il l'entend; mais une décision de ce genre ne contribue en rien à la croissance de l'industrie canadienne du film. Déjà, Vancouver est une des régions du pays où l'industrie cinématographique est la plus menacée et elle aura du mal à supporter la forme d'aide à l'extérieur de M. Bennett.

Dans l'avenir, c'est l'attitude du gouvernement fédéral, qui sera cruciale pour le développement de l'industrie canadienne du film.

Nous pensons que le secteur privé DOIT absolument avoir une part des sommes que les ministères sont disposés à consacrer à leurs besoins cinématographiques. La section montrealaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels pense que si elle ne participe pas à cette contribution des ministères à l'industrie, la délicate situation actuelle ne fera que se détériorer.

LES RELATIONS DE RADIO-CANADA ET DU SECTEUR PRIVÉ—5

Depuis l'avènement de la télévision en 1952, le secteur privé de l'industrie du film a reçu un important soutien de la Société Radio-Canada. Cependant, tout ce que l'on peut dire de la politique de Radio-Canada, c'est qu'elle est étrange et inhabituelle. C'est un sujet de mécontentement et d'irritation dans toute l'industrie.

Le comportement de la Société consiste à contribuer de façon irrationnelle à la croissance importante et rapide d'une compagnie cinématographique particulière, en très peu de temps; et tout aussi soudainement, à cesser toute contribution à la firme privée, la laissant avec des dépenses salariales énormes du patronage, large equipment debts incurred by the sudden expansion and other problems mostly involving reputations.

The CBC has, after withdrawing, then moved on to another private film where the same experience is repeated.

(This accounts for one of the main reasons why small firms don't want to become large and find themselves in the position of having to rely on the CBC for a large share of their incomes).

Not only has the Corporation behaved in such a manner toward production houses, but also toward laboratories.

In Montreal, the CBC has tended to offer its work alternately to each of three labs, Sonolab (formerly Trans-World); Mount Royal Film Laboratories; and David Bier Laboratories. (Curiously, in Montreal, the CBC has consistently denied official patronage to a fourth laboratory—the work of which has always had qualities equivalent to other such firms.)

In Toronto, the CBC's behaviour has been more consistently inconsistent and it has behaved toward film processing labs the same way it has behaved toward private production houses.

There have been two unfortunate results: a larger than average number of sudden bankruptcies (as in the cases of Niagara Films, Delta Films and Artec Films, all Montreal-based firms) and unfair advantage for some, such as Film House, a private firm located in the same building as the CBC's Front Street film department in Toronto.

THE NATIONAL FILM BOARD'S ATTITUDE TOWARD THE PRIVATE SECTOR—6

Film makers working in the private sector complain universally and constantly about the attitude that has grown up over the years at the National Film Board with regard to the competency of firms in the private sector.

To say this attitude has poisoned the air and spoiled relations between the public and private sectors is to say far too little. The attitude of the NFB is that it alone is a kind of hero of Canadian film. It is believed by many that this gospel has been spread not only by foreign-travelling film technicians but by NFB management as well. That the NFB has put Canada on the film map cannot be denied; but that the NFB is the only Canadian film organization capable of competent producfait du travail demandé par Radio-Canada, des dettes d'équipement considérables du fait de l'expansion soudaine et d'autres problèmes relatifs notamment à la réputation de la compagnie.

Après son retrait, la Société se tourne vers une autre compagnie où la même chose se reproduit.

(C'est une des raisons pour laquelle les petites entreprises ne désirent pas augmenter, pour ne pas se trouver dans une situation où elles devraient s'en remettre à Radio-Canada pour une grande partie de leurs revenus.)

Non seulement la Société se conduit ainsi vis-à-vis des maisons de production, mais aussi vis-à-vis des laboratoires.

A Montréal, Radio-Canada a offert son travail alternativement à trois laboratoires, Sonolab (anciennement Trans-World), Mount Royal Film Laboratories et David Bier Laboratories. (Assez curieusement, à Montréal, Radio-Canada ne s'est jamais adressée au quatrième laboratoire dont le travail à tous jours été équivalent aux trois autres.)

A Toronto, Radio-Canada a été encore plus constant dans son inconstance et elle s'est conduite envers les laboratoires de la même façon qu'envers les maisons de production.

Il en est résulté deux phénomènes importants: le nombre supérieur à la moyenne de faillites soudaines (par exemple, Niagara Films, Delta Films et Artec Films, toutes les trois de Montréal); un avantage injuste à d'autres, comme par exemple Film House, une compagnie privée située sur Front Street à Toronto, dans le même immeuble que le service cinématographique de Radio-Canada.

L'ATTITUDE DE L'OFFICE NATIONAL DU FILM FACE AU SECTEUR PRIVÉ—6

Les producteurs du secteur privé se plaignent tous en permanence de l'attitude qui s'est fait jour au cours des années à l'Office national du film en ce qui concerne la compétence des compagnies privées.

Dire que cette attitude a empoisonné l'atmosphère et détérioré les relations entre les secteurs public et privé, c'est rester en deçà de la vérité. L'Office national du film se considère, seul, comme une sorte de héros du film canadien. Beaucoup pensent que cet évangile a non seulement été prêché par des techniciens du film de l'ONF en tournée à l'étranger, mais aussi par la direction. Que l'ONF ait fait connaître le Canada, personne ne le nie; mais que l'ONF soit la seule organisation ciné-tion is a patently false attitude and a slur undeserved by the private sector.

This attitude is also probably the prime reason why the National Film Board has not seen fit to contract-out work even when its facilities were so overloaded it had to delay production on certain films for months.

The private sector of the Canadian film industry is not trusted by the management of the NFB and consequently the degree of exchange of information and mutual aid that might have been possible has been severely stifled, which is the inevitable result of undue snobism.

RESTRAINING DEGREE OF SELF-PROTECTIONISM IN PRIVATE SECTOR—7

The extremely hard conditions of life in the private Canadian film industry have brought about a peculiar manifestation: most private company owners and even individual workers seem to bear an attitude of distrust toward one another and cannot easily be enjoined in organizations dedicated to industry-wide improvements.

In one case, for example, when the Montreal chapter of the CBC was recruiting members, prospective candidates often refused to join for fear of having to reveal the names of their private clients.

This adequately demonstrates the atmosphere of neurotic suspicion which is a condition usually present when mere day-to-day survival is a fight.

DOMINATION OF CANADIAN CINEMA BY FOREIGNERS—8

For years, in fact from the day Bruce Bairnfeather's Trenton, Ontario film studio went into receivership, members of the Canadian film industry have complained, and justifiably, about the prevalence of foreign films in Canadian cinemas and the preference of Canadian audiences for those films.

Finally, in the early sixties, a movement was started to convince the federal government of the need for a national film policy. The act incorporating the Canadian Film Development Corporation was the result of those years of struggle and negotiations.

But since the establishment of the Act and its passage into law on March 10, 1967 the matographique canadienne capable de produire avec compétence est absolument faux et c'est un calomnie que n'a pas méritée le secteur privé.

Cette attitude est sans doute la principale raison pour laquelle l'Office national du film n'a pas jugé bon de confier du travail à l'extérieur, même lorsque sa surcharge de travail l'a obligé à retarder de plusieurs mois la production de certains films.

La direction de l'ONF ne fait pas confiance au secteur privé de l'industrie canadienne du film et par conséquent, l'échange de renseignements et l'aide mutuelle qui auraient pu être possibles ont été sévèrement étouffés, ce qui a conduit à l'inévitable et injustifié snobisme.

CONTRAINANT DEGRÉ D'AUTOPROTECTION DANS LE SECTEUR PRIVÉ—7

Les conditions de vie extrêmement difficile de l'industrie privée du film au Canada ont amené un résultat assez particulier: la plupart des propriétaires de compagnie privée et même les employés ne se font pas confiance et il est très difficile de leur faire admettre des organismes qui seraient au service de l'industrie dans son ensemble.

Par exemple, lorsque la section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels recrutait des membres, certains candidats possibles, refusèrent d'adhérer de peur d'avoir à révéler les noms de leurs clients.

Ceci démontre bien l'atmosphère de suspicion malade qui règne actuellement alors que la survivance à elle seule est déjà une lutte.

DOMINATION DU CINÉMA CANADIEN PAR LES ÉTRANGERS—8

Depuis des années, en fait depuis que les studios de Bruce Bairnfeather à Trenton, Ontario ont commencé à fonctionner, les membres de l'industrie canadienne du film se plaignent, avec raison, de la prédominance des films étrangers dans les cinémas canadiens et de la préférence des Canadiens pour les films étrangers.

Finalement, dans le début des années soixante, il y a eu un mouvement pour convaincre le gouvernement fédéral de la nécessité d'une politique nationale du film. Ces années de lutte et de négociations furent couronnées par la Loi sur la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne.

Mais depuis l'établissement de la Loi et son approbation par le Parlement le 10 mars 1967, depressed condition of the Canadian feature film industry has not changed one iota.

Nearly two years have passed.

The Montreal branch of the CBC has not been able to discover if the Act has ever been utilized in any of its conditions; we have not been able to discover if any single foreign-owned cinema chain has ever even so much as approached the CFDC to even discuss the production of a single feature film; we have never been able to find out if any Canadian distributor has approached the CFDC with the same end in mind or what the outcome of such discussions could have been. We have never heard of one single motion picture having been produced in Canada as the result of the CFDC Act; nor have we, at any time, ever heard of anyone ever having received any beneficial result on account of the existence of the CFDC.

This is all to the best of our knowledge.

We do, however, know of a number of individual cases in which private, competent film makers have approached the CFDC, and its Acting Secretary, Mr. Michael Spenser, and have received treatment that could at best be described as arrogant, cavalier, or downright rude.

The Montreal Branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers does not, in any way, deplore the creating of the CFDC Act; but it does warn the members of the committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to Arts that serious repercussions will result in the private sector of the Canadian film industry unless an investigation is immediately undertaken and steps made to remove from office both the Acting Secretary, Mr. Michael Spenser and the CFDC's chief executive officer, Georges-Emile Lapalme, both of whom, on the basis of information received, we regard as either incompetent or ill-advised.

We believe that, to date, no positive steps have been taken by the government's instrument, the CFDC to relieve the condition of unmitigated depression in the Canadian feature film industry. A look at the motion picture advertisements in the Toronto Telegram for Thursday, January 2, 1969, adequately illustrates the point. Sixty-nine motion picture cinemas advertised a total of sixty-nine foreign-made productions, mainly American with a sprinkling of British and French thrown in for those Canadians whose tastes les déplorables conditions de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne n'ont pas changé d'un iota.

Deux ans ont passé.

La section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels n'a pas pu découvrir si la Loi avait été utilisée ou non nous n'avons pas pu découvrir si une seule chaîne étrangère de cinéma avait quelquefois contacté la Société de développement pour discuter de la production d'un seul long métrage; nous n'avons jamais pu savoir si un distributeur canadien avait approché la Société pour la même raison ou quels avaient été les résultats d'une telle discussion. Nous n'avons jamais entendu parler d'un seul film qui aurait été fait au Canada en application de la Loi sur la Société de développement; nous n'avons pas entendu parler non plus de quiconque ayant reçu un bénéfice quelconque de l'existence de la Société.

Ceci au mieux de notre connaissance.

Nous connaissons, cependant, un certain nombre de cas particuliers où des producteurs de films privés et compétents, se sont adressés à la Société et à son secrétaire provisoire, M. Michael Spenser, et ont été reçus d'une façon que nous pourrions décrire comme arrogante, cavalière ou simplement grossière.

La section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes ne déplore aucunement l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi sur la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, mais elle avertit les membres du comité de la radiodiffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts qu'elle aura de graves répercussions dans le secteur privé de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, à moins qu'on n'effectue immédiatement une enquête et qu'on ne renvoie le secrétaire-adjoint, M. Michael Spenser, et l'administrateur général de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne (SDIC), qui, d'après les renseignements que nous avons reçus, nous semblent incompetents ou mal conseillés.

Nous pensons qu'aucune mesure concrète n'a encore été prise par la SDIC, organisme du gouvernement, pour remédier à la situation gravement critique dans laquelle se trouve l'industrie cinématographique du Canada. Un coup d'œil sur la page des spectacles du Toronto Telegram du jeudi 2 janvier 1969 le montrera clairement. Soixante-neuf cinémas affichaient soixante-neuf productions étrangères, pour la plupart américaines, avec un ou deux films britanniques et français pour les Canadiens qui ont des goûts décidés.

presumably run to the bizarre and the same thing can be seen in the cinema advertisements of every single Canadian daily newspaper.

As the question at the beginning of this preliminary statement tasks, IS CANADA EVER TO HAVE A FILM INDUSTRY OF ITS OWN? To be sure, part of an industry exists; but it is dying the slow and painful death of constriction of its financial arteries, while less and less artistic blood is getting to the heart and brain.

At this point, the Montreal branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers states unequivocally that it believes the only thing that will ultimately save the Canadian film industry is the immediate imposition of a QUOTA SYSTEM to be organized and bankrolled through the offices of a revitalized Canadian Film Development Corporation.

We are aware of the disadvantages of such a system; but it is proof of its value that it alone created the British film industry. Without, the condition of British film would probably not be unlike that of our own.

A QUOTA SYSTEM could conceivably work in the following manner:

Cinema chains would receive federal licence to import and show a number of foreign-made films for every Canadian-made film they would guarantee to exhibit on an equal basis.

The money for production could come from a combination of sources including the CFDC'S Advance Fund and from a special surtax placed upon the profits of foreign-made feature productions shown in Canada without further increase in the already high price of admission tickets.

The details of such a working system would, naturally be more complicated than that. The Montreal branch of the CSC, at this juncture, merely advises the Committee it sees no other possibility than the imposition of a quota system and strongly advises study of this recommendation.

PURCHASE OF FILM PROGRAMS FOR TELEVISION—9

The Montreal branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers supports the Report of the Committee on Broadcasting, adopted by the government in 1965. In its first two chapters, R. M. Fowler generally covered the ment bizarres; on constate la même chose dans tous les autres quotidiens canadiens.

La question qu'on a posée au début de cet exposé préliminaire est la suivante: LE CANADA AURA-T-IL UN JOUR SA PROPRE INDUSTRIE CINÉMATOGRAPHIQUE? Il est sûr qu'elle existe en partie; mais elle meurt de la mort lente et douloureuse de l'angustie de ses artères financières, alors que le sang artistique arrive de plus en plus difficilement au cœur et au cerveau.

Au point où nous en sommes, la section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinématographes est fermement convaincue que la seule chose qui pourrait encore sauver l'industrie cinématographique canadienne serait l'imposition immédiate d'un CONTINGEMENT, qui serait organisé et financé par les bureaux d'une Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne renouvelée.

Nous sommes conscients des désavantages d'un tel système; mais la preuve de sa valeur est qu'il a permis seul la création d'une industrie cinématographique britannique. Sans cela, la situation de l'industrie cinématographique britannique ne serait sans doute pas très différente de la nôtre.

Un CONTINGEMENT peut se concevoir comme suit:

Les chaînes de cinémas recevraient une licence fédérale leur permettant d'importer et de projeter un certain nombre de films étrangers pour chaque film canadien qu'elles s'engageraient à projeter au même titre.

L'argent nécessaire à la réalisation pourrait provenir du fonds pour le progrès de la SDIC et d'une surtaxe spéciale sur les profits des films étrangers projetés au Canada, sans qu'il soit nécessaire d'augmenter le prix déjà élevé des billets.

Ce système serait évidemment beaucoup plus compliqué dans ses détails. La section montréalaise de la SDIC tient à assurer le comité qu'elle ne voit d'autre solution que l'imposition d'un contingentement et recommande vivement l'étude de cette recommandation.

L'ACHAT DES TÉLÉFEUILLETONS—9

La section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinématographes est en faveur du rapport du comité de la radiodiffusion adopté par le gouvernement en 1965. Dans les deux premiers chapitres, R. M. Fowler a traité, en ground in which we are mainly interested: and while it may be tiresome to repeat once more these essential facts, we do so again because we are of the opinion that very few people have ever understood them: (1) programming and program content are the important factors in broadcasting; (2) there is a strong imbalance between the ratio of Canadian to American programs broadcast both on the CBC and private stations, particularly in prime time. This imbalance is altogether in prime time. This imbalance is altogether in favour of television programs made abroad and mostly in the USA; (3) CTV stations and independent TV stations have failed utterly to support the production of Canadian program material and the development of Canadian talent, and are on the whole spending less money years after the amortization of the capital costs of their broadcasting plants than they were even during the initial phase of establishment (4) the CBC has failed, almost completely, to utilize to a degree advantageous to the development of a native Canadian film industry, the facilities and personnel of that industry.

The Montreal Branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers is very well aware of the reasons why Canadian television broadcasting has so under-utilized the talent resources of the country and we feel free here to state that we believe the original BBG "Canadian content" regulation, originally intended to prevent this situation, was administered if not fraudulently, in a manner bordering upon that condition. When TV broadcasting stations were permitted the liberty of classifying commercials, station promos, and other such trivia as Canadian content and were playing free films and other program material as many as 7 or 8 times in a month to make up the 55 per cent the BBG required, then our opinion is not surprising.

The Montreal Branch of the CBC considers reprehensible and irresponsible the administration of the former broadcasting act and the regulations thereof.

Moreover, we see no special reason for supporting the administration of the present broadcasting act under the stewardship of the CRTC. We have thus far not noted any special tightening or toughing up in the Canadian Content rule, which, we assume, still applies nor do we see any action to encourage the CTV network, for example, to actually present a reasonable facsimile of an entertaining drama.

We are ready to admit our bias; but we demand the enforcement, without favoritism gros, des sujets qui nous intéressent plus particulièrement, et même s'il peut paraître fastidieux de répéter ces faits essentiels, nous le ferons tout de même car il nous semble que très peu de gens les aient compris: (1) la programmation et le contenu des émissions sont les facteurs importants en radiodiffusion; (2) Il existe un déséquilibre marqué entre la proportion des émissions canadiennes et celle des émissions américaines diffusées sur les réseaux national et privés, en premier emplacement surtout. Ce déséquilibre est toujours à l'avantage des émissions de télévision réalisées à l'étranger et aux États-Unis en particulier; (3) Les postes de télévision CTV et indépendants n'ont pas encouragé la réalisation d'émissions canadiennes ni les artistes canadiens, et dépensent en général moins d'argent annuellement une fois qu'ils ont amorti le coût des stations émettrices qu'ils n'en dépensaient au stade initial de leur établissement; (4) Radio-Canada a négligé presque totalement d'employer à des fins qui soient favorables à l'établissement d'une industrie cinématographique canadienne les installations et le personnel de cette industrie.

La section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinématographes est pleinement consciente des raisons pour lesquelles la télédiffusion canadienne a ainsi négligé les talents canadiens; nous ne craignons pas de dire ici que le règlement initial du BGR sur la «teneur canadienne», qui avait d'abord pour but d'empêcher cette situation, a été administré, d'une façon sinon frauduleuse, du moins proche de l'être. Quand on permet aux stations canadiennes de télévision de classer comme étant de «teneur canadienne» les annonces commerciales et les annonces du poste et autres bagatelles, et de projeter trois films et autres émissions 7 ou 8 fois par mois pour en arriver aux 55 p. 100 requis par le BGR, notre opinion n'a rien de surprenant.

La section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinématographes considère comme répréhensible et irresponsable d'administration de l'ancienne Loi sur la radiodiffusion et des règlements qui s'y rapportent.

D'autre part, nous n'avons aucune raison d'approuver l'administration de la présente Loi sur la radiodiffusion par le CCRT. Nous n'avons encore noté aucun renforcement ou durcissement en ce qui concerne le règlement de la «teneur canadienne», qui, nous le supposons, est toujours en vigueur; nous constatons également que rien n'a été fait pour encourager le réseau CTV, par exemple, à présenter quelque chose qui ressemble à une pièce intéressante.

Nous sommes disposés à admettre que nous avons des préjugés; mais nous exigeons l'ap-o anyone, the letter of the terms and regulations of the current act.

We have stated elsewhere in this preliminary brief, our belief that the federal government's departmental directive requiring all federal government films (with a few exceptions) to be channelled to the NFB's shop has not improved the financial condition of the private sector of the film industry.

We might now mention that the CBC's policy of producing the large majority of its program requirements within its own facilities has also constituted a great loss for the private Canadian film industry.

When we note a feature item such as one entitled THE WEEK'S TV HIGHLIGHTS Montreal Star, January 4, 1969) that lists Monday through Friday, 6:00 P.M. to sign-off 4 separate "feature highlights" and only 4 to 4 are Canadian, 2 of which are direct hockey telecasts, we are understandably led to wonder what the CRTC is doing.

On Sunday, January 5th alone, CBMT, Channel 6, the CBC station in Montreal, carried only 2 hours of Canadian programming out of a potential 7 hours; and those two hours are made up of one-half hour variety, one hour of public affairs and roughly ½ hour of news and sports reports. The rest of the broadcasting time includes the following: 6:00 P.M.-7:00 P.M., "Walt Disney"; 7:30 P.M. to 8:00 P.M., "Green Acres"; 8:00 P.M. to 9:00 P.M., "Ed Sullivan"; 9:00 P.M. to 10:00 P.M., "Bonanza". This is followed by "The Way It is", and news. The schedule is "rounded out" with a film feature entitled "Charlie Chan At The Circus".

This kind of scheduling may be the CBC network manager's idea about how to spend a great evening relaxing with the TV; but it is most emphatically not the idea of what the members of the Montreal Branch of the CBC would like to see. Especially those ones who have not worked all week, or those who have spent twenty years in the Canadian film industry and who have spent one day working as an assistant cameraman on a CBS public affairs production.

And let not anyone deceive you. Many members of the CBC, which organisation could generally be described as having among its members and associated members the only competent cameramen and directors of photography in the country, do not work every day. Many of them do not work every month plication, sans favoritisme à l'égard de qui que ce soit, des dispositions et règlements de la loi actuelle.

Nous avons déjà déclaré dans cet exposé préliminaire que la directive ministérielle du gouvernement fédéral voulant que tous les films du gouvernement fédéral (à quelques exceptions près) soient confiés à l'ONF n'a pas amélioré la situation financière du secteur privé de l'industrie cinématographique.

Soulignons en passant que la décision de Radio-Canada de réaliser la plupart de ses émissions par ses propres moyens constitue également une grosse perte pour l'industrie cinématographique privée.

Quand nous jetons un coup d'œil sur une rubrique comme «La sélection des spectacles de la semaine», (The Week's TV Highlights, Montreal Star, 4 janvier 1969) qui donne une liste des émissions du lundi au vendredi, 18h., nous constatons que sur 44 «sélections de la semaine», quatre sont canadiennes, dont deux sont des parties de hockey télévisées en direct, et nous sommes en droit de nous demander ce que fait le CCRT.

Le dimanche 5 janvier, CBMT, canal 6, poste de Radio-Canada à Montréal, n'a diffusé que deux heures d'émissions canadiennes sur un total possible de sept heures; ces deux heures consistaient en une demi-heure de variétés, une heure d'affaires publiques et environ une demi-heure de nouvelles et commentaires sportifs. Le reste du temps de radiodiffusion comprenait: de 18 à 19 h., «Walt Disney»; de 19h. 30 à 20h., «Green Acres»; de 20 h à 21h., «Ed Sullivan»; de 21h à 22h., «Bonanza»; venaient ensuite «The Way It is» et les informations. Le programme se termina par un film intitulé «Charlie Chan At The Circus».

Ce genre de programmation peut correspondre à l'idée que se fait le directeur de Radio-Canada de la manière de passer une bonne soirée devant la télévision, mais il ne correspond pas du tout à ce que les membres de la section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinématographes aimeraient avoir. Surtout ceux qui n'ont pas travaillé de la semaine, ou ceux qui ont passé vingt ans dans l'industrie cinématographique canadienne et qui ont travaillé un jour comme aide-caméraman dans une émission d'affaires publiques à Radio-Canada.

Ne vous faites pas d'illusions. De nombreux membres de la SCC, organisme qui possède incontestablement parmi ses membres et membres associés les seuls caméramen et directeurs de la photographie compétents au Canada, ne travaillent pas tous les jours. Beaucoup d'entre eux ne travaillent pas tous and many of them work only during certain seasons because the work is not available from the CBC, the NFB nor can it be found through their own efforts.

Most company-owners who are also members of the CBC state that the largest percentage of their work comes from outside their country or province. For example, in the case of SPEAC, a firm specializing in special cinematographic effects, and owned by a member of the CBC, 80% of all work comes from outside the country, 15% comes from outside the province and only 5% comes from Quebec, in which province the firm is located. In the case of Cinéfilms Inc., a four-year old general film production house, more than 50% comes from the USA and France and the remainder comes from Quebec and the rest of Canada.

Most members of the Montreal Branch of the CBC state that they do not rely upon the CBC because its demands are usually seasonal and its general behaviour toward the private film industry erratic.

But they agree that a tremendous loss to the industry is incurred because of industry idleness, part of which could be taken up if the CBC were to increase the amount of Canadian content in its prime time schedule and contract-out program work to film-makers who are already set-up to carry out such demands.

Such a policy would have an immediate and strongly beneficial effect upon the entire Canadian film industry.

We recommend that the CBC take up a policy of purchasing 30% of its film-program requirements in Canada but from sources outside its own production establishment.

CONCLUSIONS

The foregoing comments are not meant in any way to represent everything of which the Canadian Society of Cinematographers has to say on the subjects outlined; and this brief must be considered only as a stop-gap until a longer and much more detailed document can be prepared, nonetheless, we feel that it gives those outside the industry a fair idea of the type of conditions generally prevailing inside the industry at the moment.

That the conditions exist we deplore. That they cannot be corrected without fast and single-minded aid from the federal government, we stress. There can never be a strong and economically viable film industry in Canada unless the government is prepared to act decisively in its favour and soon. That les mois et d'autres ne travaillent que pendant certaines saisons, car il n'y a pas de travail à Radio-Canada, à l'ONF ou ailleurs.

[Translation]

La plupart des directeurs de sociétés qui sont également membres de la SCC disent que le plus gros pourcentage de leur travail vient de l'extérieur du pays ou de la province. Par exemple, dans le cas de SPEAC, firme qui se spécialise dans les effets cinématographiques spéciaux et qui appartient à un membre de la SCC, 80 p. 100 du travail vient de l'étranger, 15 p. 100 de l'extérieur de la province, et seulement 5 p. 100 du Québec, où se trouve la société. Dans le cas de Cinéfilms Inc., maison de production cinématographique vieille de 4 ans, plus de 50 p. 100 des commandes viennent des États-Unis et de France, tandis que le reste vient du Québec et du Canada.

La plupart des membres de la section montréalaise de la SCC prétendent ne pas compter sur Radio-Canada parce que ses demandes sont habituellement temporaires et ses rapports avec l'industrie cinématographique privée irréguliers.

Ils admettent cependant que l'industrie perd énormément de son immobilisme, qui pourrait quelque peu changer si Radio-Canada augmentait la «teneur canadienne» des émissions de premier emplacement et confiait certaines émissions à des réalisateurs de l'extérieur, qui ont déjà tout ce qu'il faut pour satisfaire ces demandes.

Une telle politique aurait un effet positif immédiat sur l'ensemble de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne.

Nous recommandons que Radio-Canada adopte comme politique d'acheter 30 p. 100 de ses émissions au Canada, mais à l'extérieur de ses propres ateliers de production.

CONCLUSIONS

Ces quelques observations n'ont pas la prétention d'avoir tout exprimé ce que la Société canadienne des cinématographes avait à dire sur les sujets abordés; et ce mémoire doit être considéré comme provisoire en attendant la rédaction d'un document plus long et beaucoup plus détaillé. Nous estimons cependant qu'il donne aux gens de l'extérieur une idée assez bonne de la situation qui règne un peu partout dans l'industrie cinématographique.

Nous déplorons l'existence d'une telle situation. Nous insistons sur le fait qu'on ne pourra remédier à cela sans l'aide rapide et désintéressée du gouvernement fédéral. Il n'y aura jamais d'industrie cinématographique solide et rentable au Canada si le gouvernement n'est pas disposé à agir immédiatement.

there will never be a Canadian identity, a Canadian consciousness until such times as the film industry, the government, the cinema chains and the TV broadcasters are prepared to create it, is undeniable. Every moment wasted means another month of cultural and national insufficiency. Every year wasted means ten years of national tragedy. The Parliament of Canada has at its disposal the means to encompass and create a strong national film industry.

Our fondest hope is that they do so now.

et de façon décisive en sa faveur. Il est indéniable qu'il n'y aura jamais d'identité canadienne, de conscience canadienne, tant que l'industrie cinématographique, le gouvernement, les chaînes de radio et les télédiffuseurs, ne seront pas disposés à la faire. Chaque instant qu'on gaspille signifie un mois de plus d'anémie culturelle et nationale. Chaque année qu'on gaspille signifie dix ans de tragédie nationale. Le Parlement du Canada a les moyens de susciter la création d'une industrie cinématographique nationale puissante.

Notre espoir le plus cher est qu'il le fasse dès maintenant.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PRESENT DOCUMENT

By Mr. W. W. Gentleman, CSC.

We are cognisant of the many briefs, recommendations and manifestos submitted to the government over a period of many years by all of those Associations comprising The Canadian Council of Film Organisations. We respectfully commend again, to the Hon. Members of the Committee and the Hon. Secretary of State, for their renewed attention, these past briefs.

The aim of the present document is directed to considerations from which A National Film Policy can be structured. Its intent is shared by the majority of film organisations in Canada and all of those are able and willing to assist in formulating a National Film Policy that will provide a healthy economic growth for the motion picture industry and the crafts of performing arts. All of this without recourse to perpetual appeals for government hand-outs.

INTRODUCTION

Par M. W. W. Gentleman, CSC.

Nous savons que, depuis plusieurs années, nombre d'associations, notamment la Canadian Council of Film Organisations, ont présenté maints mémoires, recommandations et manifestes au gouvernement. Nous prions donc messieurs les membres du Comité et le secrétaire d'État de bien vouloir prêter de nouveau leur attention à ces mémoires.

Le présent document vise à étudier les structures éventuelles d'une politique cinématographique nationale, objectif partagé par la majorité des organismes cinématographiques canadiens, qui peuvent et veulent participer à l'élaboration d'une politique du film assurant une croissance économique saine à l'industrie cinématographique et aux arts du spectacle. Et ce, sans avoir continuellement recours aux subventions de l'État.

La section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels.

(1) La section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels demande qu'on élabore une POLITIQUE CINÉMATOGRAPHIQUE NATIONALE ayant pour objet de protéger et d'affermir, au that could utilize exclusively the technical, artistic and creative facilities extant in the country at large.

(2)—The Purpose of such a policy would be not only to serve the needs and economic interests of the private sector of the film industry but also to serve the pride and cultural aspirations of talented persons in both the French and English languages. Such a policy would also have the advantage of:

(A) Serving in a general way the economic requirements of a vast group of artists, writers and producers whose creative outlets are presently highly limited by the size and requirements of the CBC, the NFB and the home-markets:

(B) cut short the talent drain that is presently seriously affecting the quality of both television and film production in Canada;

(C) provide the country with an additional source of income through export sales;

(D) encourage investment in the Canadian film industry by foreigners.

(3)—In practical terms such a policy would have the effect of:

(A) creating a genuine feature film industry where none could now be said to exist;

(B) creating a genuine television entertainment film industry where none could now be said to exist;

(C) as well as creating work and permanent jobs for Canadian producers, writers, directors, performing artists, cinematographers, production personnel, composers, musicians, laboratory and associated personnel and distribution, advertising and promotion personnel.

(4)—The Montreal Branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers believes that the government, under a National Film Policy, should seek to establish minimum film production goals, as follows:

(A) Per year—not less than twenty feature films;

(B) Per season—not less than 156 one hour and half hour television entertainment films.

(5)—We believe that the federal government cannot, on its own, be expected to take

[Traduction]

Canada, une industrie cinématographique qui pourrait exploiter exclusivement les ressources techniques, artistiques et créatrices de l'ensemble du pays.

(2) Cette politique aurait pour but de servir non seulement les besoins et les intérêts économiques du secteur privé de l'industrie cinématographique, mais aussi la fierté légitime et les aspirations culturelles de francophones et d'anglophones talentueux. Elle permettrait aussi, entre autres avantages:

(A) de subvenir, d'une façon générale, aux besoins d'un vaste groupe d'artistes, d'auteurs et de réalisateurs dont les facultés créatrices sont actuellement fort limitées, vu l'importance et les besoins de Radio-Canada, de l'ONF et des marchés intérieurs;

(B) de mettre fin à l'exode des talents qui influence profondément, à l'heure actuelle, la qualité de la production canadienne dans les domaines de la télévision et du cinéma;

(C) d'assurer au pays une source additionnelle de revenus grâce aux exportations;

(D) d'encourager les étrangers à investir dans l'industrie cinématographique canadienne.

(3) En pratique, cette politique aurait pour effet:

(A) de créer une véritable industrie du long métrage, actuellement inexistante;

(B) de créer une véritable industrie du film pour la télévision, actuellement inexistante;

(C) de créer aussi des emplois permanents pour les réalisateurs, les auteurs, les metteurs en scène, les artistes, les cinéastes, le personnel de production, les compositeurs, les musiciens, le personnel des laboratoires et les auxiliaires, de même que le personnel des services de distribution et de publicité.

(4) La section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels croit que le gouvernement, en vertu d'une politique cinématographique nationale, doit chercher à fixer un nombre minimum d'objectifs en matière de production cinématographique, comme suit:

(A) Par an: au moins 20 longs métrages;

(B) Par saison: au moins 156 films d'une heure et d'une demi-heure pour la télévision.

(5) Nous croyons qu'on ne peut demander au gouvernement fédéral de prendre seul l'ithe initiative or act independently to create a flow of films annually. We therefore propose, in the following, a method whereby the private sector of the Canadian film industry would join with the federal government in the creation of a general film producers company.

[Text]

For purposes of this brief, that theoretically possible establishment will henceforth be referred to as The General Film Producers Corp. or THE GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP.

(6)—ESTABLISHMENT OF THE GENERAL FILM PRODUCER'S CORP.

In Montreal there are extant approximately 25 independent film production firms, excluding laboratories, optical shops, special effects shops and other such specialized operations. The total amount of their book value (including value of film production equipment, outstanding contracts, property, etc.) is conservatively estimated at about one and a half millions of dollars.

In Toronto, there are approximately thirty-five general film production firms with a total book value of about three millions of dollars.

Because Toronto and Montreal present separate problems, they will be dealt with separately.

(7)—THE MONTREAL ORGANIZATION

It is essential to realize that the Montréal Branch of the CSC has accepted the following propositions:

(1) A general national film establishment is generally inefficient unless protected;

(2) A general national film establishment would be effective only if the government were to put through the house bills to accomplish the following:

(a) The imposition of a quota system through which Canadian made feature films would receive a fair share of screen-time and admissions income in cinemas in Canada;

(b) if, through the Office of the Secretary of State, an office of Film Commissioner were to be established to control the equality of television entertainment film production in Canada, and if there were to be a system whereby sponsored film production, now normally totally allocated to the National Film Board could be shared by the above mentioned GENERAL FILM PRODUCER'S CORP., and if arrangements could be concluded with the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., to initiative de créer une production cinématographique annuelle. Nous proposons donc, dans les pages qui suivent, une méthode qui permettrait au secteur privé de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne de se joindre au gouvernement fédéral pour créer une société générale de production cinématographique. Aux fins du présent mémoire, cette éventuelle société est désigné ci-après: la Société générale de production cinématographique, ou la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION.

(6) CRÉATION DE LA SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION CINÉMATOGRAPHIQUE

A Montréal, il existe environ 25 compagnies de production cinématographique indépendantes, exception faite des laboratoires, des ateliers d'optique et d'effets spéciaux, et autres services spécialisés. Leur valeur comptable (y compris la valeur du matériel de production cinématographique, les contrats en suspens, les accessoires, etc.) est évaluée, au bas mot, à environ un million et demi de dollars. A Toronto, il y a environ 35 compagnies générales de production cinématographique dont la valeur comptable et d'environ trois millions de dollars. Les problèmes n'étant pas les mêmes à Montréal qu'à Toronto, on les étudiera séparément.

(7) L'ORGANISATION MONTRÉLAISE

Il est essentiel de prendre conscience du fait que la section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels a accepté des propositions suivantes:

(1) Une société nationale de production cinématographique est habituellement inefficace si elle n'est pas protégée;

(2) Une société nationale de production cinématographique ne serait efficace que si le roulement adoptait des projets de loi prévoyant:

(a) l'imposition d'un système de contingentement grâce auquel les longs métrages canadiens se verraient accorder une bonne part des heures de projection et des recettes des cinémas canadiens;

(b) si, par l'intermédiaire du secrétariat d'État, on devait établir une commission du cinéma pour contrôler la qualité de la production canadienne de films pour la télévision, qu'il devait y avoir un système grâce auquel la production de films commandités, actuellement confiée uniquement à l'Office national du film, pourrait être confiée en partie à la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION CINÉMATOGRAPHIQUE, et qu'on pouvait conclure des ententes avec Radio-Canada

share with the GENERAL FILM PRODUCER'S CORP. production in a minimum of four series-type filmed entertainment programs per season;

(c) if the Canadian Film Development Corp's establishing Act were to be amended to provide for partnership arrangement in the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP.

(d) if the same act were to be further amended to provide for establishment of a partly public and partly privately owned FILM DISTRIBUTION COMPANY;

(e) and if, with reference to the Canadian feature film quota, a 15% surtax were to be imposed on gross profits received by cinemas from the exhibition of foreign-made feature films;

(f) and further, if a similar surtax of 15% were to be imposed on gross profits realized by television stations on the running of foreign-produced feature films, entertainment and variety programs in the film, live, and VTR classes.

(7A)—In these cases, the following organization of a Montréal-based GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. is recommended to the notice of The Committee on Broadcasting Films and Assistance to the Arts and the Secretary of State:

(A) To match the total estimated book-value of participating Montréal producer's, we recommend that the Canadian Film Development Corp. match each dollar of value invested with a dollar in cash. In practical terms this would mean, if company "A" were to be valued at $50,000 the CFDC would match that sum with another one of $50,000 which would be credited to the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. capital fund.

Stock certificates in the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. Fund equal in value to the amount of the private investment would be transferred to the proprietor of Company "A". The same proprietor would then become an investor-director (or member-proprietor) of the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. For purposes of this brief we will assume that all proprietors in the private sector in Montréal will participate.

pour partager avec LA SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION CINÉMATOGRAPHIQUE la production d'au moins quatre séries filmées, par saison;

(c) si on devait modifier la loi portant création de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne pour prévoir une association au sein de la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION;

(d) si on devait modifier de nouveau cette loi pour prévoir la création d'une COMPAGNIE DE DISTRIBUTION DE FILMS qui serait en partie propriété publique et propriété privée;

(e) et si, par suite du contingentement des longs métrages canadiens, on devait imposer une surtaxe de 15 p. 100 sur les profits bruts réalisés par les cinémas grâce à la projection de films étrangers;

(f) et en outre, si on devait imposer une autre surtaxe de 15 p. 100 sur les profits bruts réalisés par les stations de télévision grâce à la diffusion de longs métrages étrangers, d'émissions de divertissement et de variétés sur film, en direct et sur magnétoscopes.

(7A) En conséquence, nous recommandons au Comité de la radiodiffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts, et au secrétaire d'État, la création, à Montréal, d'une SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION ainsi conçue:

(A) Pour atteindre toute la valeur comptable de la participation des réalisateurs de Montréal, nous recommandons que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne fournisse un dollar en espèces pour chaque dollar investi en valeur. En pratique, cela voudrait dire que, si la compagnie «A» est évaluée à $50,000, la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique fournit alors une somme additionnelle de $50,000 qui serait créditée au capital de la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION.

Des titres du fonds de la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION, la section montréalaise de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels, d'une valeur égale au montant des investissements privés, seraient transférés au propriétaire de la compagnie «A». Ce dernier deviendrait alors actionnaire-directeur (ou membre-propriétaire) de la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION. Aux fins du présent mémoire, nous allons présumer que tous les propriétaires du secteur privé de Montréal vont participer au projet.

[Text]

(B) The result of this then would be the formation of a GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. with a book value in equipment, uncompleted contracts and property of one and a half millions of dollars, as well as an investment fund of one and a half millions in cash.

(C) This total of three millions of dollars of equity would then be used as security to borrow, in normal financial circles, equal amount of three millions of dollars.

(D) The total amount would then be six millions of dollars.

(E) As several large studios are urgently required prior to the development of feature film and television entertainment film production, approximately two millions in cash would necessarily have to be immediately expended to provide not only studios but necessary equipment and a large film production centre.

(7B)—THE IN-PRODUCTION PERIOD

(A) Following the completion of necessary studios, buildings and the film-production centre, these service departments would be set up as a corporate subsidiary to the GENERAL PRODUCERS CORP., and utilized by producers on a rental basis.

(B) Production on television entertainment films could commence as soon as negotiations with the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. and the office of the Secretary of State were completed.

(C) Production on government-sponsored films could begin as soon as negotiations with the National Film Board were completed.

(D) Films being produced on uncompleted contracts brought into the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. by participating proprietor's would, naturally, be in production at the earliest possible date. It is reasonable to assume that the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. would also undertake the speculative production of a few other films immediately, most likely in the categories of trade films, documentary films, industrial films, etc.

(E) Production of films in the feature category could commence only following the enactment of legislation introducing a QUOTA SYSTEM and the completion of federal-provincial negotiations related to this matter.

(F) While we recommend a quota system, we advise the Committee and the

(B) Ce qui aurait pour résultat la formation d'une SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION d'une valeur comptable, en matériel, contrats en suspens et accessoires, d'un million et demi de dollars, et dont le fonds de placement vaudrait un million et demi en espèces.

(C) Cet avoir de trois millions de dollars servirait alors de garantie pour l'emprunt, sur les marchés financiers ordinaires, d'un autre montant de trois millions de dollars.

(D) Le montant total serait alors de six millions de dollars.

(E) Comme il est urgent de construire plusieurs grands studios avant de développer la production des longs métrages et des films pour la télévision, il faudrait d'abord dépenser environ deux millions en espèces pour construire non seulement des studios, mais aussi le matériel nécessaire, et un important centre de production cinématographique.

(7B) LA PÉRIODE DE PRODUCTION

(A) Après la construction des studios et bâtiments nécessaires, et du centre de production cinématographique, ces services seraient rattachés à la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION, et les réalisateurs pourraient les louer.

(B) La production des films pour la télévision pourrait commencer dès la fin des négociations avec Radio-Canada et le secrétariat d'État.

(C) La production des films commandités par l'État pourrait commencer dès la fin des négociations avec l'Office national du film.

(D) Les films dont la production, en suspens, serait confiée à la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION par les propriétaires associés seraient, naturellement, produits le plus tôt possible. Il est juste de penser que LA SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION, éventuellement, entreprendrait aussi la production de quelques autres films, immédiatement, tout probablement dans la catégorie des films commerciaux, documentaires, industriels, etc.

(E) La production des longs métrages ne pourrait commencer qu'après l'adoption d'une loi prévoyant la création d'un SYSTÈME DE CONTINGEMENT, et la conclusion des négociations fédérales-provinciales sur cette question.

(F) Nous recommandons la création d'un système de contingentement, mais

Secretary of State that we do so with a limitation proviso: That is, that we do not feel it would be necessary to continue the surtax after a period of 5 to 8 years, or whenever the national film industry could be considered to be not only self-supporting but in a position to compete on equal terms with American and other film importations.

(7C)—ORGANIZATION OF THE GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. AT THE EXECUTIVE LEVEL

(A) Each of the participating proprietors in the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. would become a member of the board of directors of that corporation, to a total of fifty percent of the board. The government would, we recommend, appoint an equal number of directors to represent its interests.

(B) From the original board, committees of directors would be spun off to form virtually autonomous limited companies representing the following:

1. TELEVISION ENTERTAINMENT FILMS—French, English
2. FEATURE FILMS—French, English
3. TRADE AND DOCUMENTARY FILMS
4. ADVERTISING FILMS
5. STUDIO & EQUIPMENT RENTAL & SERVICES
6. PRODUCTION SERVICES

(C) A seventh category, that of laboratory, optical and special effects services could be added at a later date when such facilities could be obtained and when they could be reasonably afforded.

(NOTE: The price of the establishment of a lab to handle all sorts of normal 35mm colour film requirements would be approximately half a million dollars. To install facilities to handle 65mm colour negative would cost an additional half million dollars. Labs are an expensive-to-install item.)

(D) Each of the six (or seven) separate branches of the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. would elect its own general manager and chief executive officer.

(E) The six (or seven) executive officers would then form 50% of the board of the Canadian Film Development Corp., which nous désirons aviser le Comité et le secrétariat d'État que nous le faisons à condition qu'on reconnaisse qu'il ne sera pas nécessaire de continuer à imposer la surtaxe après une période de 5 à 8 ans, ou dès qu'on pourra considérer l'industrie cinématographique canadienne comme pouvant non seulement se suffire à elle-même, mais aussi comme étant en mesure de concurrencer, à armes égales, la production américaine et étrangère.

(7C) CADRES DE LA DIRECTION DE LA SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION

(A) Chaque propriétaire associé à la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION deviendrait membre du conseil d'administration de ladite Société, jusqu'à concurrence de 50 p. 100 des membres du conseil. Et le gouvernement, selon notre recommandation, nommerait un nombre égal d'administrateurs pour représenter ses intérêts.

(B) Les membres du conseil d'administration se grouperaient en commissions pour former des compagnies à responsabilité limitée quasi autonomes, dans les domaines suivants:

1. FILMS POUR LA TÉLÉVISION, français et anglais;
2. LONGS MÉTRAGES, français et anglais;
3. FILMS COMMERCIAUX ET DOCUMENTAIRES;
4. FILMS PUBLICITAIRES;
5. STUDIOS, LOCATION DE MATÉRIEL ET SERVICES;
6. SERVICES DE PRODUCTION.

(C) Une septième catégorie, les laboratoires et les services d'optique et d'effets spéciaux, pourrait venir s'ajouter plus tard, lorsqu'on pourrait se procurer les installations voulues à un prix raisonnable.

(NOTE: La construction d'un laboratoire pouvant traiter tous les genres de films 35 mm en couleur coûterait environ un demi-million de dollars. La construction d'installations pouvant traiter les négatifs 65 mm en couleur coûterait aussi un demi-million de dollars. L'installation d'un laboratoire est dispendieuse.)

(D) Chacune des six (ou sept) divisions de la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION élirait son directeur général et son administrateur en chef.

(E) les six (ou sept) administrateurs formeraient alors 50 p. 100 du conseil de la Société de développement de l'indus-would, in turn, control the overall pattern of development of the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. (The other 50% would be made up of representatives of the Toronto group. Presumably, about half of the total board members would represent the government's interests).

(7D)—THE MAKING OF FEATURE FILMS

(a) As we stated earlier in this policy statement, we recommend that the government aim at the immediate production of a minimum of twenty feature films per year.

(b) Feature films would be financed through the surtax fund which, if present conditions are expected to continue, would amount to approximately six millions annually.

(c) It is extremely unlikely that this fund would increase significantly before two years of steady production.

(7E)—PRODUCTION OF A TYPICAL FILM—See Appendix "A"

(7F)—THE DISTRIBUTION OF FEATURE FILMS

(a) As stated elsewhere, an additional amendment or amendments to the Canadian Film Development Corp. Act would be required to permit the CFDC to establish a subsidiary distributing corporation.

(b) We envisage this corporation as being capitalized at five millions of dollars. Additional funds, and these would definitely be required, could be obtained from normal lending institutions at a favourable interest rate.

(c) The distributing company's prerogative would be to handle Canadian-produced feature films and television entertainment films on one of the following bases:

1. Purchase of negative rights in perpetuity;
2. Purchase of all negative rights for a period of years;
3. Or, it could function as a normal agent/distributor on a percentage basis, without asking the film producer to relinquish his rights at all.

(d) We recommend that this company be set up and run under normal business trie cinématographique canadienne qui, en retour, orienterait le développement de la SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DE PRODUCTION. (L'autre moitié serait composée de représentants du groupe torontois. Il y a lieu de croire qu'environ la moitié des membres du conseil représenterait les intérêts du gouvernement.)

(7D) LA RÉALISATION DE LONGS MÉTRAGES

(A) Comme nous l'avons déjà dit dans la présente déclaration de principe, nous recommandons que le gouvernement vise à atteindre, immédiatement, une production annuelle d'au moins 20 longs métrages.

(B) Les longs métrages seraient financés par le fonds de la surtaxe qui, si les conditions actuelles se maintiennent, atteindrait environ six millions de dollars par an.

(C) Il est très peu probable que ce fonds augmentera de façon marquée avant deux années de production continue.

(7E)—PRODUCTION D'UN FILM TYPE—voir l'Annexe A

(7F)—LA DISTRIBUTION DES LONGS MÉTRAGES

(A) Comme nous l'avons déjà mentionné, il serait nécessaire d'apporter un ou plusieurs amendements supplémentaires à la Loi sur la Société du développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne afin de permettre à cette Société de mettre sur pied une filiale de distribution.

(B) Dans notre conception, cette filiale aurait un capital social de cinq millions de dollars, et pourrait obtenir d'autres capitaux, ce qui sera certainement nécessaire, des institutions ordinaires de prêts à un taux d'intérêt favorable.

(C) Les prérogatives de cette société de distribution seront d'assurer la distribution des longs métrages de production canadienne et les films de spectacle destinés à la télévision selon une des méthodes suivantes:

1. L'achat des droits sur les négatifs à perpétuité;
2. L'achat des droits sur les négatifs pour un certain nombre d'années;
3. Ou, fonctionner à commission comme une agence de distribution privée, sans demander au producteur d'abandonner ses droits.

(D) Nous recommandons que cette société soit mise sur pied et exploitée conditions; and that it be encouraged to establish foreign branches in the normal way, that is, not under the flag.

(7G)—Generally, we would like to see a film production and distribution situation that is in nature highly competitive.

Quite naturally, we feel it must, from birth, be closely watched and protected in order that, in Canada, the Canadian film industry and its workers become the dominant force.

(7H)—DISPOSITION OF CINEMA CRAFTS PERSONNEL—See Appendix "B"

(7I)—DISPOSITION OF PROFITS FROM GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP.—See Appendix "C"

(8A)—GENERAL FILM PRODUCER'S CORP. IN TORONTO

(a) A GENERAL PRODUCER' CORP. very similar to the Montreal establishment could be founded in Toronto, starting with a total initial capital value of six millions of dollars.

(b) In as much as the Toronto film industry is considered to be richer in value and personnel, the situation would be changed to a certain extent. For example, the TORONTO branch, without requiring any more investment than provided by its own capital fund, could begin operations in all six areas nearly immediately because better facilities presently exist in that city.

And therefore, the amount of initial capital expenditure would be somewhat lower. In addition, its greater wealth and the protection provided by the quota system and the surtax system would make borrowing relatively easy.

(c) Naturally, its work would be entirely in the English language but it is recommended that an equal split of production in only two categories, feature film and television entertainment film be arranged between the two centres.

(d) We anticipate that following the initial two years of production, both centres would be in a position to undertake completely original and dissimilar programs both in quantity and quality. We also recommend that no attempt be made to control or guide the aspirations of the individual centres.

(e) We do, however, recommend that both centres be required to utilize similar comme une entreprise privée; et qu'elle soit encouragée à établir des filiales à l'étranger de la façon normale, c'est-à-dire en dehors des services de l'État.

(7G)—En général, nous aimerions que la production et la distribution de films se fassent de façon très concurrentielle.

Il nous paraît normal qu'elle soit, dès sa naissance, surveillée de près et protégée de sorte que, au Canada, ce soit l'industrie cinématographique canadienne et ses employés qui dominent.

(7I)—RÉPARTITIONS DES BÉNÉFICES DE LA GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP.—voir l'Annexe C.

(8A)—LA GENERAL FILM PRODUCER'S CORP. DE TORONTO.

(A) On pourrait mettre sur pied, à Toronto, une General Producer's Corp. semblable à la société de Montréal avec un capital initial global de six millions de dollars.

(B) Comme on considère que l'industrie cinématographique de Toronto est plus riche en valeur et en personnel, la situation serait différente jusqu'à un certain point. La société de Toronto pourrait, par exemple, sans autres investissements que son propre capital d'apport, se lancer dans les six secteurs d'activité presque immédiatement car cette ville dispose déjà de meilleures installations. Les immobilisations initiales de capital seraient moins considérables. De plus, sa plus grande solvabilité et la protection offerte par le système de contingentement et de surtaxe lui permettraient d'emprunter plus facilement.

(C) Son travail serait naturellement entièrement de langue anglaise mais nous recommandons qu'on s'entende entre les deux centres pour se répartir également la production dans deux catégories, les longs métrages et les films de spectacle destinés à la télévision.

(D) Nous croyons qu'après les deux premières années de production, chaque centre se trouvera dans une situation qui lui permettra d'entreprendre des programmes complètement nouveaux et différents tant en quantité qu'en qualité. Nous recommandons également qu'on ne fasse aucun effort pour contrôler ou orienter les aspirations de chaque centre.

(E) Nous recommandons toutefois qu'on oblige chaque centre à recourir à des ser-facilities where they exist. In the matter of distribution, for example, nothing would be gained by setting up a competing distributing company. In the case of laboratory facilities, however, it is specifically recommended that the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. in Toronto purchase or otherwise acquire suitable 16mm and 35mm colour and black and white laboratory, optical and special effects facilities be expanded to handle all initial work from Montreal. Naturally, Montreal will eventually require a complete laboratory plant of its own. This being an extremely expensive venture, it is recommended that the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. be first in a position to adequately finance such a move without recourse to additional government funds.

(9)—CONCLUSIONS

We advise the government and the committee that, in our opinion, this entire program, as outlined, could be achieved without any more expenditure on the part of the federal government than the present fund of ten millions of dollars already committed to the Canadian Film Development Corp. Naturally, we recommend the imposition of a 15 per cent surtax on profits on foreign-made feature film exhibitions and on those derived from the showing, on television of foreign-made entertainment films, tapes and live broadcasts. We reiterate, however, that this should be a temporary measure, designed to expire in not more than ten years time.

We also point out to the Secretary of State and the Committee that under such a scheme as outlined above, it would be possible for Canada to attract home most of the number of Canadian artists, producers, directors, writers and others who have left because of the sheer lack of opportunity.

The scheme, as presented, is also felt by the Montreal Branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers to have other advantages. They are:

(1) Its institution will not interfere with the basic freedoms of anyone to participate in either centre;

(2) The scheme does not place the onus for success on government grants, nor does it place upon the shoulders of the government the responsibility for success. On the contrary, the plan has been designed to require a maximum of personal commitment under normal business vices et à des installations semblables s'ils existent. Pour la distribution, par exemple, on n'y gagnerait rien à mettre sur pied une société concurrente de distribution. Dans le cas des laboratoires toutefois, nous recommandons précisément que la General Producer's Corp. de Toronto achète ou obtienne le plus possible un laboratoire capable de traiter les films de 16mm. et de 35mm. en couleur et en noir et blanc, ainsi qu'un laboratoire d'effets optiques et d'effets spéciaux, et que ces installations soient agrandies afin d'assurer ces services au centre de Montréal au début. Montréal devra évidemment avoir ses propres laboratoires complets avec le temps. Comme c'est une entreprise très dispendieuse, nous recommandons que la General Producer's Corp. soit la première mesure de financer un tel projet sans avoir à obtenir de capitaux supplémentaires de l'État.

(9) CONCLUSIONS

Nous faisons remarquer au gouvernement et au Comité que, à notre avis, on pourra réaliser tout le programme exposé sans autres dépenses de la part de l'État que les dix millions de dollars déjà affectés à la Société du développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne. Nous recommandons naturellement à l'imposition d'une surtaxe de 15 p. 100 sur les bénéfices des festivals de longs métrages étrangers et des bénéfices tirés de la diffusion à la télévision de film de spectacle, d'enregistrements et d'émissions directes préparés à l'étranger. Nous répétons toutefois que ce ne peut être qu'une mesure temporaire qui serait retirée d'ici dix ans.

Nous faisons également remarquer au Secrétaire d'État et au Comité que ce programme permettrait au Canada de ramener au pays un grand nombre d'artistes, de producteurs, de réalisateurs, d'auteurs et d'autres qui se sont exilés à cause du manque de possibilités ici.

Selon le Local de Montréal de la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels, le programme présenté offre encore d'autres avantages:

(1) Sa mise en œuvre n'entravera aucunement la liberté fondamentale de chacun de travailler à l'un et à l'autre centre;

(2) Le programme ne fait pas dépendre son succès des subventions de l'État et ne place pas la responsabilité de son succès sur les épaules de l'État. Au contraire, le programme a été élaboré de façon à exiger un engagement personnel maximum dans les conditions normales d'une entre-conditions by those choosing to participate and places also directly upon the shoulders of the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. itself responsibility for a product that must have popular and sales appeal, and therefore financial success.

(3) Moreover, it imposes upon cinema chain owners, and television broadcasting station operators only a temporary inconvenience, in as much as a time limitation is planned and provided for.

The Montreal Branch of the CSC recommends in all its parts the establishment of the above plan. We also advise those concerned that this organization is prepared to co-operate with government and parliament in providing experienced film personnel in all categories to advise the government on its implementation; we are also prepared to go out and persuade the industry and others to accept this plan because we feel it is not only workable but requires the least in the way of direct government legislation and continuing supervision of any national film plan yet examined.

Moreover, the sponsors of this plan state unequivocally that they believe it will solve finally all of the outstanding problems presently being faced by the Canadian film industry.

prise de la part de ceux qui décident d'y participer et place également directement sur les épaules de la GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. la responsabilité de mettre au point un produit qui plaît au public et qui se vend, et assure donc son succès financier.

(3) De plus, il n'impose aux propriétaires d'un réseau de salles de cinéma et de stations de télévision qu'un contre-temps temporaire, pour autant qu'on détermine et qu'on prévoie une limite de temps.

Le Local de Montréal de la SCCP recommande dans son ensemble la mise en œuvre de ce programme. Nous informons également les intéressés que notre organisation est prête à coopérer avec le gouvernement et le parlement pour leur fournir des personnes d'expérience dans tous les secteurs cinématographiques qui les conseilleront sur la mise en œuvre du programme; nous sommes également prêts à entreprendre de persuader l'industrie cinématographique et d'autres à accepter ce programme parce que non seulement il nous paraît réalisable mais, de tous les programmes cinématographiques étudiés jusqu'ici, c'est celui qui exige le moins d'intervention directe de l'État sous forme de mesures législatives et de surveillance continue.

De plus, les parrains de ce programme déclarent sans équivoque leur conviction qu'il apporte la solution à tous les problèmes auxquels l'industrie cinématographique canadienne doit présentement faire face.

Appendix 'A'—PRODUCTION OF A TYPICAL FILM

Once an advantageous production situation has been achieved and a reasonably efficient production atmosphere has arisen, it will be possible to produce feature films.

The producer must then take into account the following costs:

- (a) Stock and laboratory costs
- (b) Sound processing costs
- (c) Editing and related costs;
- (d) Personnel and crew costs;
- (e) Contributing artists cost
- (f) Film equipment rental costs;
- (g) Location rental and related costs;
- (h) Studio rental and related costs
- (i) Scenic, design and costume costs;
- (j) Music, voice and recording costs;
- (k) Title production costs;
- (l) Trailer production costs;
- (m) Corporate expenses;
- (n) Taxes.

Once the cost of a script has been ascertained, the producer must then find his investor, or investors. In Canada, at the moment, it is possible to produce a 35mm. colour film of 8,000 feet in length for an adequate minimum of $140,000.

In a situation, however, in which export is a vital factor, it would be advisable to run the talent costs higher than would be ordinarily required for domestic productions, and the film, as in the cast of ISABEL, by Paul Almond, would probably end up at around a figure of $250,000. The additional $110,000 is mostly made up of talent fees paid to "name" stars, directors, and/or writers.

In the case of a production being undertaken by a member-proprietor of the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. in the feature film category, he would need only to submit his project to the chief-executive of his section and the CFDC. (NOTE: It must be understood

Annexe A—PRODUCTION D'UN FILM TYPE

Lorsqu'on aura réussi à préparé une situation avantageuse de production et à créer un atmosphère raisonnablement efficace de production, il sera possible de réaliser des longs métrages.

Le producteur doit alors tenir compte des coûts suivants:

- (a) film vierge et laboratoire;
- (b) sonorisation;
- (c) montage et travaux connexes;
- (d) personnel et techniciens;
- (e) participation des artistes;
- (f) location de matériel cinématographique;
- (g) location de sites et frais connexes;
- (h) location de studios et frais connexes;
- (i) décors et costumes;
- (j) musique de fond, voix et enregistrements;
- (k) préparation du générique;
- (l) préparation des présentations;
- (m) frais généraux;
- (n) impôts et taxes.

Après avoir établi le coût du scénario le producteur doit se mettre à la recherche d'un ou de plusieurs commanditaires. Au Canada, à l'heure actuelle, il est possible de produire un film en couleurs et en 35mm. de 8,000 pieds pour un montant minimum raisonnable de $140,000.

Si, toutefois, l'exportation représente un facteur clé, il serait souhaitable de dépenser davantage pour les artistes qu'on ne le ferait normalement pour un film destiné à la consommation nationale, et le coût du film, comme dans le cas d'ISABEL, de Paul Almond, serait finalement de l'ordre de $250,000. Le montant supplémentaire de $110,000 représenterait surtout les cachets plus élevés versés aux vedettes, aux réalisateurs, ou aux auteurs dont la renommée est établie.

Si un propriétaire-associé de la GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. entreprend de produire un long métrage, il n'aura qu'à soumettre son projet au directeur de sa section et de la Société du développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne. (NOTA: Il faut here that we see the member-proprietor of the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. not as a salary-earning employee but as a percentage-earning independent working in competition with his colleagues. He would receive not a monthly salary but an advance against earnings). Upon approval of the project by the CFDC and granting of a picture-completion bond, the expenses fund would be granted, we visualize, at an extremely low rate of interest—about enough to cover book charges and no more, at least for the first two years of operations. Naturally, as a greater degree of solvency is attained, interest rates would be pushed up and operate in relation to the general level of excellence of suggested projects.

[Texte]

Following completion of the picture, we recommend the negative-rights sale method. This means that the CFDC's distribution arm would purchase the world rights to the film for a stated price—let us say $350,000. The distribution company, because its the only one that can afford it, would then be responsible for the distribution print costs, which at about $6,000 each would run upward of $120,000 for a movie with good export potential. Trailer and advertising costs, book charges, shipping cost and overheads would run the cost up to a total of about $600,000 for the two-year period the film would be in circulation.

To make a profit, the distribution company would then require only a return of $1,300,000 providing its own financing costs were reasonably low.

Of course many films make much more than that and the law of averages will provide a certain number of films that will return 15 to 20 times their purchase price.

Meanwhile, if the situation does not seem fair to the film's producer, arrangements can be worked out to supply him with extra profits once the profits have reached a certain level. Those profits are returned partly to the producer and partly to the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP., the member-proprietor's actual partner.

(NOTE: Remember also that under this type of corporate set-up, the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. has already made fair profits on every level of production through the rental and sale of materials, facilities and services).

établir clairement que nous ne considérons pas le propriétaire-associé de la GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. comme un employé à salaire mais comme une personne qui travaille à commission en concurrence avec ses collègues. Il ne reçoit pas un salaire mensuel mais une avance sur ses bénéfices). Une fois que la SDICC aura approuvé son projet et lui aura accordé un bon à échéance sur réalisation complète du film, on lui verserait, à notre avis, à un taux d'intérêt extrêmement faible, un fond d'exploitation suffisant pour acquitter les droits d'auteur et rien de plus, du moins au cours des deux premières années d'exploitation. Naturellement, au fur et à mesure que la solvabilité de la société se concrétisera, on augmentera les taux d'intérêt qu'on établira par rapport au niveau général d'excellence de chaque projet.

Lorsque le film sera terminé, nous recommandons d'adopter la méthode de la vente des droits sur les négatifs, c'est-à-dire que le service de distribution de la SDICC achèterait les droits de distribution dans le monde entier à un prix fixe comme, par exemple, $350,000. La société de distribution, parce qu'elle est la seule dont le budget le permettrait, assumerait alors la responsabilité des copies de distribution qui, à $6,000 chacune, représenteraient plus de $120,000 pour un film dont le potentiel d'exportation est élevé. Le coût de la préparation des présentations et de la publicité, des droits d'auteur, et de transport ainsi que les frais généraux porteraient le coût du film à environ $600,000 pour la période de deux ans au cours de laquelle le film sera en circulation. Pour réaliser un bénéfice, la société de distribution devra s'assurer des recettes de l'ordre de $1,300,000 seulement, à condition que ses propres dépenses d'exploitation soient raisonnablement faibles.

Il est évident qu'un grand nombre de films rapportent beaucoup plus et selon la loi de la moyenne on peut anticiper qu'un certain nombre de films rapporteront 15 ou 20 fois leur prix d'achat.

En attendant, si la situation semble injuste à l'égard du producteur, on pourrait conclure une entente pour lui verser des bénéfices supplémentaires lorsque les bénéfices tirés du film atteindront un niveau donné. Ces bénéfices seraient versés en partie au producteur et en partie à la GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP., l'associé réel du propriétaire-associé.

(NOTA: Il ne faut pas oublier qu'en vertu de ce genre d'organisation corporative, la GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. a déjà réalisé des bénéfices équitables à chaque niveau de la production grâce à la location et à la vente du matériel, des installations et des services).

Appendix "B"—DISPOSITION OF CINEMA CRAFTS PERSONNEL

Like the member-proprietor, the members of the technical-crafts are visualized as being in a non-employee type of situation. In thinking this through, we were primarily concerned with the need for keeping the technical-crafts talent market free and flexible. And we therefore suggest the following arrangement: that the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. absorb or register such personnel at the commencement of operations, provide them with normal monthly advances against earnings, then deduct from day-to-day production budgets such daily wage sums as the technical-craftsmen are able to negotiate with individual producers.

This arrangement would provide the best and most talented workers with a maximum level of demand-earnings and the least well matriculated with a fair but smaller share of available work and earnings.

Technical craftsmen would not, as at the present, be forced to supply their own equipment in order to get work.

Appendix "C"—DISPOSITION OF PROFITS IN THE GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP.

Following the first two to five years of operations, it would be necessary for the GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. to declare annual dividends payable to the government, as a partner and the member-proprietors.

Dividends earned by the CFDC's distributing company would go naturally to the government.

OPENING ADDRESS TO SPECIAL PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE CONVENING AT WINDSOR HOTEL, MONTREAL ON MONDAY, 10th FEBRUARY 1969, PRESENTED BY WALLY GENTELMAN CSC, CHAIRMAN OF NATIONAL BRIEF COMMITTEE FOR THE CANADIAN SOCIETY OF CINEMATOGRAPHERS

Mr. Chairman, Honourable Members, Ladies and Gentlemen.

As Chairman of the National Brief Committee for the Canadian Society of Cinematographers I am directed to present the following statements for your kind consideration.

The Montreal Chapter of our Society has presented a Brief in two parts to bring attention to the depressed condition in which the private Canadian Film Industry continues to find itself. This circumstance is principally due to the perpetuation of Government

Annexe B—RÉPARTITION DU PERSONNEL DES TECHNIQUES CINÉMATOGRAPHIQUES

Tout comme le propriétaire-associé, nous considérons que les membres des professions techniques ne seraient pas des employés. En étudiant ce problème à fond, nous étions sur tout préoccupés par la nécessité de laisser le marché des techniciens libre et souple. Nous proposons donc que la GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. absorbe ou enregistre ce personnel dès le début de son exploitation, leur verse des avances mensuelles normales sur leurs revenus, et déduise ensuite des budgets quotidiens de production les salaires quotidiens que ces techniciens pourront négocier avec chaque producteur en particulier.

Un tel arrangement permettrait aux meilleurs et aux plus doués de s'assurer le plus de demandes et donc de revenus tandis que les techniciens ayant moins d'expérience ou de talent obtiendraient quand même une part raisonnable bien que plus restreinte du travail et des revenus disponibles. On ne demanderait pas, pour l'instant, aux techniciens de fournir leur propre équipement afin d'obtenir du travail.

Annexe C—RÉPARTITION DES BÉNÉFICES DE LA GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP.

Après deux ou cinq années d'exploitation, la GENERAL PRODUCER'S CORP. devra déclarer les dividendes annuels à verser à l'État, en tant qu'associé, et les propriétaires associés. Les dividendes rapportés par la société de distribution de la SDICC seront naturellement versés à l'État.

DISCOURS INAUGURAL PRONONCÉ PAR M. WALLY GENTLEMAN, CSC PRÉSIDENT DU COMITÉ DE LA SOCIÉTÉ CANADIENNE DES CINÉASTES, À LA RÉUNION SPÉCIALE DU COMITÉ PARLEMENTAIRE TENUE LE LUNDI 10 FÉVRIER 1969 À L'HÔTEL WINDSOR À MONTRÉAL.

Monsieur le président, messieurs les députés, Mesdames et messieurs.

En ma qualité de président du Comité national pour la préparation des mémoires pour la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels, je suis chargé de vous présenter le compte rendu suivant:

La Section montréalaise de notre Société a présenté un mémoire en deux parties pour attirer l'attention sur la crise dans laquelle ne cesse de se débattre le secteur privé de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne. Cette situation est due en grande partie à la perpé-

Monopolies and questionable activities of the CFDC that was set up to alleviate this precise situation.

The problems and conditions within the industry are not generally nor easily correctable and will only be overcome by bold, resolute, unselfish and understanding action.

We submit that Mr. George Lapalme, Chairman, and Acting Secretary Mr. Michael Spencer have not demonstrated these qualities.

We submit that the perilous state of the industry demands more than a part time Chairman inexperienced in film matters; negligent in due attention to Industry personnel and who, with an Acting Secretary obsessed with the conception that the Canadian Film Development Corporation exists purely as a special bank whose transactions need not necessarily be reported, even to the House of Commons.

We further submit that the first duty of the Board of Governors should have led to the recommendation of an Advisory Group from professional Film Industry personnel and that Messrs. Lapalme and Spencer have been grossly negligent in this most important consideration.

Due to their insistence on secrecy they have created an unfavourable climate of suspicion and dissension in the Industry where those who have been favoured or are about to be favoured with loans will extol their virtue and the less favoured will castigate the very framework of the CFDC as interpreted by the incumbent Chairman and Acting Secretary.

We do not believe that an avalanche of dollars will set the Industry on its feet. There are problems at grass roots level of which all societies are mindful and to which the CFDC has given no attention as far as we can be aware.

The CFDC has repeatedly resisted taking any sort of unified consultation with the majority of the experienced membership of professional Film Societies even though under section 14 of the Act such an Advisory Group is specifically advocated.

Because of this, we now find ourselves in the position of rejecting the method of film finance now being practised by the Corporation.

We reject it on the grounds that it is wasteful, open to exploitation to foreigners and non tuation des monopoles gouvernementaux et aux activités douteuses de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne qui a été créée pour alléger cette même situation.

Les problèmes et les conditions au sein de l'industrie ne peuvent, de façon générale, être si aisément résolus et rectifiés, et ne pourront être surmontés que par des mesures énergiques, hardies, désintéressées et raisonnables.

Nous soutenons que M. Georges Lapalme, président, et M. Michael Spencer, secrétaire intérimaire, ne sont pas à la hauteur de la tâche.

Nous croyons que la situation périlleuse dans laquelle se trouve l'industrie exige bien plus qu'un président saisonnier inexpérimenté dans des questions qui touchent l'industrie du film: peu soucieux des aspects qui intéressent le personnel de l'industrie et qui avec un secrétaire intérimaire est obsédé par l'idée que la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne est purement une banque spéciale dont les transactions n'ont même pas besoin d'être nécessairement exposées devant la Chambre.

De plus, nous sommes d'avis que la première tâche du Bureau des gouverneurs aurait dû être celle de proposer la création d'un groupe consultatif formé par des employés professionnels de l'industrie du film et que MM. Lapalme et Spencer ont fait preuve de grosse négligence à cet égard.

Par leur insistance de faire les choses en secret, ils ont créé un climat de méfiance et de discorde, défavorable dans l'industrie où ceux qui ont été ou sont sur le point d'être gratifiés de prêts exalteront leur mérite, et les moins favorisés critiqueront sévèrement la structure même de la CFDC telle que la conçoivent le président et le secrétaire intérimaire actuels.

Nous ne croyons pas qu'une avalanche de dollars remettrait l'industrie sur pied. Il existe des problèmes profondément enracinés et dont toutes les sociétés tiennent compte, mais que la CFDC, à notre connaissance, a complètement ignorés.

A maintes reprises, la CFDC s'est opposée à toute sorte de consultation collective avec la majorité des membres des sociétés cinématographiques professionnelles, bien que l'article 14 de la Loi recommande tout spécialement la création d'un groupe consultatif de ce genre.

C'est la raison pour laquelle nous nous voyons, en ce moment, forcés de rejeter le mode de financement des films tel que la Société le pratique actuellement.

Nous le rejetons parce que nous considérons cela comme étant du gaspillage, ouvrant productive of an overall development of a Canadian Film Industry.

The development of a Canadian Film industry will not be secured by financing individual films of a transient nature. Some continuity in production must be assured by financing a block of films wherein one may offset the losses in others and further demand the creation of permanent studio facilities from which the Industry can grow. Such studios becoming the means of trained aspiring personnel in the sorely needed artisan crafts and perfecting overall technical competency in a secure setting of production continuity.

The method of operation apparently chosen by the CFDC will not produce a Canadian feature film or Television entertainment industry for many years to come due to their insistence that of a firm distribution contract be obtained prior to the opening of negotiations with CFDC.

Imposition of this rule inhibits the production of feature films in Canada since if such distribution contracts were obtainable in the first place there would be no need for an Agency such as the CFDC.

By such regulation the CFDC is pushing Canadian Producers further into the United States production pattern and that Country's sphere of influence not only inhibiting the development of Canadian cultural film but imposing a system of entertainment values on the American pattern that deny truly Canadian formative cultural expression. It must be our purpose to make Canadian films under Canadian circumstances and present a Canadian presence to world cinema.

We further believe that the CFDC's original set-up will ultimately make the Canadian Feature Film Industry dependent on foreign Unions.

At this time I am instructed to table a copy of a letter from the General Secretary of a Film Federation in the U.K. to the President of the Principal Union of the U.S.A. seeking from that American parent of IATSE Canada advice relating to a Canada United Kingdom co-operative film agreement. The international implication of this letter will be obvious.

The Canadian Society of Cinematographers therefore reiterates that opinions of film-makers la voie à l'exploitation étrangère et ne favorisant pas la mise en valeur de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne.

Ce n'est pas en finançant des films partiels, d'intérêt peu durable, que nous réussons à mettre en valeur l'industrie cinématographique. Il s'agit d'assurer une certaine continuité de la production, en finançant une série de films qui nous permettraient de contrebalancer les pertes que l'on pourrait subir dans d'autres, et de faire construire des studios permanents qui faciliteraient le développement de l'industrie. Ces studios formeraient un personnel ambitieux dont le métier a tellement besoin, et amélioreraient la compétence technique générale dans un climat de continuité productive.

Il est évident que la façon de procéder choisie par la CFDC ne permettra pas l'établissement d'une industrie cinématographique ou de télévision présentant des spectacles typiquement canadiens pour bien des années à venir, et cela à cause de leur insistence sur un contrat de distribution bien déterminé avant l'ouverture de négociations avec la CFDC.

L'imposition de cette règle interdit la production de films caractérisant le Canada, puisque avant tout si des contrats de distribution de ce genre pouvaient être obtenus, un organisme comme la CFDC n'aurait pas raison d'être.

Avec des règlements de ce genre, la CFDC est en train de pousser les producteurs canadiens à se modeler encore plus sur la production américaine et être dans la sphère d'influence de ce pays, ce qui non seulement freine l'effort cinématographique culturel du Canada, mais impose aussi un genre de spectacle typiquement américain qui exclut une expression formative culturelle vraiment canadienne dans des conditions canadiennes et de présenter au cinéma mondial une présence canadienne.

Nous croyons, d'autre part, que la structure originale de la CFDC finira par rendre l'industrie canadienne des grands films dépendante des syndicats étrangers.

Je suis en ce moment chargé de vous présenter une copie d'une lettre adressée par le secrétaire général d'une fédération cinématographique du Royaume-Uni au président de la «Principal Union» des États-Unis, essayant d'obtenir de cette filiale américaine de IATSE Canada, des conseils à propos d'un accord de collaboration cinématographique entre le Canada et le Royaume-Uni. La portée internationale de cette lettre est bien claire.

La Société canadienne des cinéastes réitère le fait que les vues des producteurs de film ers were almost entirely disregarded when the criteria for the general operation of the Corporation and parameters for applications were drafted. Thus imposing upon professional film-makers a policy set up by self admittedly inexperienced Government appointees.

The Society views with alarm and despondency the declaration that the CFDC is merely some kind of special bank. Section 10 of the Act clearly and definitely states, as a prime objective, to foster and promote the development of the Feature Film Industry in Canada without limit to the generality of the aim.

We conclude, that in their wisdom, the architects of the Act designated the title of Canadian Film Development Corporation based on the foregoing declaration. Messrs. Lapalme and Spencer would have us believe that the title should read Canadian Film Finance Fund.

We charge that the CFDC have been administering the Corporation without consideration of the aspirations for, and the practicalities of, the grass root structure of the Canadian Film Industry that will lead to the establishment and consolidation of an economically viable industry. The neglect of these considerations and the evident disdain for professional opinion demonstrated by Chairman Lapalme and Acting Secretary Spencer impels this Society to call for their removal from office.

The Secretary of State is requested to appoint an Executive Director only after consultation with professional film organisations and we press for the greater interest of the Film Commissioner in the activities of the CFDC which could conceivably duplicate the activities of the NFB and the Canada Council.

The Canadian Society of Cinematographers respectfully submit that the proposition contained in Part 2 of their Brief are worthy of study since they demonstrate a pattern of thought that would pass the responsibility for success of failure squarely on the shoulders of the Industry. However, the submission of such a Brief is also hoped to provide the catalyst that can activate further consideration and review of all briefs previously submitted by all Societies that comprise the CCFO and opinion of other professional groups chartered since the inception of the CCFO, Union, Exhibition and Distribution interests.

ont été ignorées, lors de l'établissement des critères régissant le fonctionnement général de la Société ainsi que des paramètres pour les demandes, imposant ainsi aux producteurs de films une politique établie par des délégués gouvernementaux qui de leur propre aveu sont inexpérimentés.

La Société envisage avec effroi et découragement la déclaration selon laquelle la CFDC est en quelque sorte une banque spéciale. L'article 10 de la Loi affirme clairement et catégoriquement que le principal objectif est de stimuler le développement de l'industrie des grands films au Canada sans aucune limite quant à la généralité de l'objectif.

Nous tirons la conclusion que, dans leur sagesse, les architectes de la Loi se sont inspirés de la déclaration mentionnée ci-dessus pour trouver le titre de Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne. MM. Lapalme et Spencer voudraient nous faire croire que le titre devrait plutôt se lire comme suit: Fonds de financement des films canadiens.

Nous soutenons que la CFDC a administré la Société sans tenir compte des aspirations de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne et des qualités pratiques de sa profonde structure qui mèneront à l'établissement et à la consolidation d'une industrie économiquement viable. Le fait d'avoir négligé ces considérations et le dédain évident de l'opinion professionnelle manifesté par le président Lapalme ainsi que le secrétaire intérimaire Spencer, nous obligent d'exiger leur révocation.

Nous demandons au secrétaire d'État de ne nommer un directeur exécutif qu'après avoir consulté les organisations cinématographiques professionnelles et nous tenons à ce que le Commissaire du film prenne un plus grand intérêt aux activités de la CFDC qui, on se l'imagine, pourraient être identiques à celles de l'Office national du film et du Conseil des arts du Canada.

La Société canadienne des cinéastes allègue respectueusement que les propositions contenues dans la deuxième partie de leur mémoire valent la peine d'être examinées puisqu'elles illustrent une façon de penser qui rendrait l'industrie responsable de l'échec ou du succès. Toutefois, on espère également que la présentation d'un tel mémoire permettra davantage l'examen et la révision de tous les mémoires soumis jusqu'ici par toutes les sociétés qui forment la CCFO ainsi que l'opinion des autres groupes professionnels institués depuis le début de la CCFO, de l'Union, des intérêts de l'exposition et de la distribution.

An Industry must be consolidated from within and it may well be necessary to create an ombudsman. Such a man or group would be Government financed but loyal to just Private Industry grievances and resolve difficulties that will continue to exist while CBC and NFB continue to monopolise film requirements in Canada and while certain private film producers, having found a niche from where they can operate to their own benefit within the prevailing status quo, have little regard to the National aspirations of cinema. Such problems will involve measures of Government tendering, work opportunity industrial training, Union structure, distribution, exhibition, international and national co-production, professional Society integration and the protection by Government legislation of our Industry.

Specifically the Society is presently aware of Government employees being permitted to take up employment with private industry while retaining their privilege of permanent or extended contract employment. We are also given to understand that some present Government employees have applied for, or are applying for, loans from the CFDC.

We are also aware of equipment proliferation within the Government Agencies to the detriment of private film producers and we weary of competing with monopolies that are subsidised by our taxation.

The Canadian Society of Cinematographers in concluding this opening statement to the Honourable Members are also mindful of the parallel problems that beset Dance, Drama and Musical interests. An infrastructure linking these organisations wherein an aspiring amateur can progress to professional status and demonstrate brilliance at the international level is as essential to the specific discipline as it is to Canadian cinema that will find in their talent, with cinematic interpretation, the means to present Canadian cultural expression to the world.

Une industrie doit être renforcée de l'intérieur et il serait peut-être nécessaire de nommer un ombudsman. Un tel homme ou groupe serait payé par le gouvernement, mais ne serait fidèle qu'envers les griefs de l'industrie privée et devra résoudre les difficultés qui continueront d'exister pendant que la Société Radio-Canada et l'Office national du film continueront de monopoliser les besoins cinématographiques au Canada et que certains producteurs cinématographiques privés, ayant trouvé une niche à partir de laquelle ils peuvent travailler pour leur propre compte au sein du status quo qui prévaut, ne s'inquiètent guère des aspirations nationales du cinéma.

Des problèmes de ce genre nécessiteront l'application de mesures à l'égard des soumissions du gouvernement, de la possibilité d'emploi, de la formation professionnelle, des structures syndicales, de la distribution, de l'exposition, de la coproduction internationale et nationale, l'intégration professionnelle des sociétés ainsi que la protection de notre industrie par des mesures législatives.

La Société sait très bien que les employés du gouvernement sont autorisés d'accepter des postes dans l'industrie privée, tout en retenant les privilèges qui leur sont assurés par leur emploi permanent ou contractuel prolongé. D'autre part, nous croyons savoir que certains employés actuels du gouvernement ont fait la demande ou sont en train de le faire en vue d'obtenir des prêts de la SDICC.

Nous sommes également au courant de l'abondance de l'équipement au sein des organismes gouvernementaux au détriment des producteurs cinématographiques privés et nous sommes dégoûtés de faire la concurrence à des monopoles subventionnés par l'impôt que nous payons.

Pour terminer ce discours inaugural à l'intention de messieurs les députés, la Société canadienne des cinéastes professionnels est également au courant des problèmes analogues qui bouleversent les domaines de la danse, du théâtre et de la musique. Une infrastructure liant ces organismes et au sein desquels un amateur peut atteindre le statut professionnel et faire preuve d'excellence au niveau international est aussi essentielle à un certain domaine qu'elle ne l'est au cinéma canadien, lequel trouvera dans leurs artistes d'interprétation cinématographique, les moyens de présenter à la scène mondiale l'expression culturelle du Canada.

The complex evolution of this eminently desirable state cannot be achieved by placatory Government patronage, pussyfooted dabblers, the faint hearted or ego dominated. It can be realised by dedicated men of vision in Government service in active participation with their fellow citizens in Industry, Arts and Sciences.

I thank you for your kind indulgence.

L'évolution complexe de cette situation si hautement souhaitable ne peut s'accomplir par le patronage conciliatoire du gouvernement, par des gens qui se mêlent de ce qui ne les regarde pas et par des égoïstes. Cela peut s'accomplir par des gens bien éclairés au service du gouvernement en participant activement avec leurs concitoyens à l'industrie, aux arts et aux sciences.

Je vous remercie pour votre attention.
